The Desclergues of la Villa Ducal de Montblanc

A Millennium-long Odyssey with Generations of Declercq & de Silva

Second Edition Omnibus

Nico F. Declercq
Professor at the Georgia Institute of Technology

This book was typeset using LaTeX software.

Copyright © 2024 Nico F. Declercq
License: Creative Commons CC BY-NC-ND 4.0

2nd Edition, published in 2024.

The author, Prof. Dr. Nico F. Declercq, is affiliated with The Georgia Institute of Technology, G. W. Woodruff School of Mechanical Engineering, 801 Ferst Drive, NW, Atlanta, GA 30332-0405, USA. Historical research forms the Humanities part of the author's research and is done outside the realm of his Engineering and Physics Research activities as Georgia Tech Professor.

The family tree covered by this work is presented on MacFamilyTree® (NicoFDeclercq1975, password DesclerguesMontblanc), Geneanet® (ndeclercq3), and Ancestry® (tree 198405565).

ISBN/EAN 9789083176949 (hardcover, omnibus)

This publication is licensed under a CC BY-NC-ND 4.0 licence, Copyright © 2024 Nico F. Declercq. Images with 🄍 in the caption are licenced under CC0, and so are all the shown postcard images. It is registered under the United States Copyright, case 1-11026040351, December 5, 2021, case 1-13969186381, June 22, 2024, and with the United Kingdom Copyright Service under registration number 284744191, December 5, 2021, and under registration number 284755355, June 16, 2024.

This work is best printed on, minimum, 210 mm x 397 mm paper, i.e. A4 format, at least 330 PPI, glossy, color, hardcover. The nature of this work is not for profit. As a result, the author grants permission to any instance to print and distribute this work without changes, i.e. facsimile, gratuitous or at a reasonable cost reflecting the charge for printing, if the product conforms to the indicated quality criterion. As such, the author shall not be held accountable or liable for the printing or shipping of this book and shall not receive any form of financial remuneration for this work. Likewise, the author grants permission to store and distribute unaltered digital versions of this product and restricts file size reduction, either by page extraction or quality reduction, to lower than the indicated resolution, without prior written consent.

The author's multidisciplinary and international journey through history is specially dedicated to the talented student H. R. H. the Princess Leonor of Asturias and Gerona, the Duchess of Montblanc, and is humbly extended to H.M. King Felipe IV and his charming family.

Figure 1: Su Alteza Real Doña Leonor de Todos los Santos de Borbón Ortiz, Princesa de Asturias, Girona y Viana, Duquesa de Montblanc, Condesa de Cervera y Señora de Balaguer. © Casa de S.M. el Rey.

'Il y a quelque chose de plus fort que la mort, c' est la présence des absents, dans la mémoire des vivants,'

Jean d' Ormesson at the Académie française, on June 6, 1974.

’As we look for new answers in the modern age, I for one prefer the tried and tested recipes, like speaking well of each other and respecting different points of view; coming together to seek out the common ground; and never losing sight of the bigger picture’ ,’ Even with the most deeply held differences, treating the other person with respect and as a fellow human being is always a good first step towards greater understanding,’

Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, January 24, 2019, and December 24 2018, respectively.

'Hablo latín con Dios, italiano con los músicos, castellano con las damas, francés en la corte, alemán con los lacayos e inglés con mis caballos,'

Emperor Charles V.

Use of Artificial Intelligence

In the creation of this book, Artificial Intelligence (Chat GPT) was sporadically employed to assist in the reorganization of text portions and to help the author more efficiently articulate certain concepts. While every effort has been made to ensure accuracy and coherence, the use of AI has facilitated the enhancement of clarity and structure in various sections. The author's original voice and intent have been preserved throughout.

Unlike the process of writing stories, this book is the culmination of numerous text entries pertaining to various historical periods, each entry building upon discoveries made sequentially in a random order. Throughout this journey of discovery, it became necessary to revise the text in multiple locations following each new finding. The extensive period over which this work has evolved, combined with the spontaneous nature of note-taking, would typically result in a disparate writing style and occasional typographical errors.

To mitigate these issues, the text has been meticulously reviewed using both typo and grammar checking software to eliminate as many errors as possible and to achieve a consistent writing style throughout the book. Nevertheless, it is possible that these tools may have inadvertently introduced new errors in the process.

Warning

Every individual bears responsibility for their achievements, mistakes, and blessings. While our ancestors deserve respect and understanding, it is crucial to distinguish between their experiences and our own; their accomplishments, errors, and fortunes are theirs alone. However, genetics and ancestry provide insights into our inherited traits, and we may often respond to situations similarly to how our ancestors might have, given similar circumstances.

Each person is unique and valuable, and we share a blood connection with all humanity. Even without specific ancestral knowledge, we are all descendants of the earliest human beings. A person's worth is inherently their own. Life grants us a singular opportunity to discover and become who we are. This book aims to focus on individuals and factual accounts rather than the pursuit of glory.

Descendants of the individuals discussed in this book should seek their achievements rather than rely on their ancestors. Similarly, readers should refrain from attributing blame or glory from any person in this manuscript to their descendants.

Privacy notice

The practice of the highest care has been assumed to protect the privacy of living persons. For this reason, living persons are not listed in this book, apart from exceptions under explicit or assumed consent, innocuously mentioned where appropriate.

Legal notice

All the information provided in this book is solemn, was collected according to the highest possible scientific standards and is accurate to the best of the author's knowledge. Errors, if any, must, therefore, be considered involuntary and may be due to mistakes in the consulted sources or syntax in the programming code used to produce the manuscript. Liability claims regarding damage caused by the use of any information provided, including any incomplete or incorrect information, will, therefore, be rejected by the author or anybody mentioned in this work.

Political notice

The author has attempted to describe history without judgment. Therefore, names have been used to identify and describe territories and peoples, which must neither be interpreted as opinions nor political statements. Examples are Spain, Belgium, France, Flanders, Catalonia, Castile, Aragon, Languedoc, North Catalonia, Wallonia, … and related peoples' names, including Muslims, Catholics, Protestants, Templars, Cathars, Moors, Jews. The author rejects any responsibility for any interpretation or contextual extraction by the reader.

'Der Wahrheit zu Theil ward, der nur ein kurzes Siegesfest beschieden ist, zwischen den beiden langen Zeiträumen, wo sie als paradox verdammt und als trivial geringgeschätzt wird.'

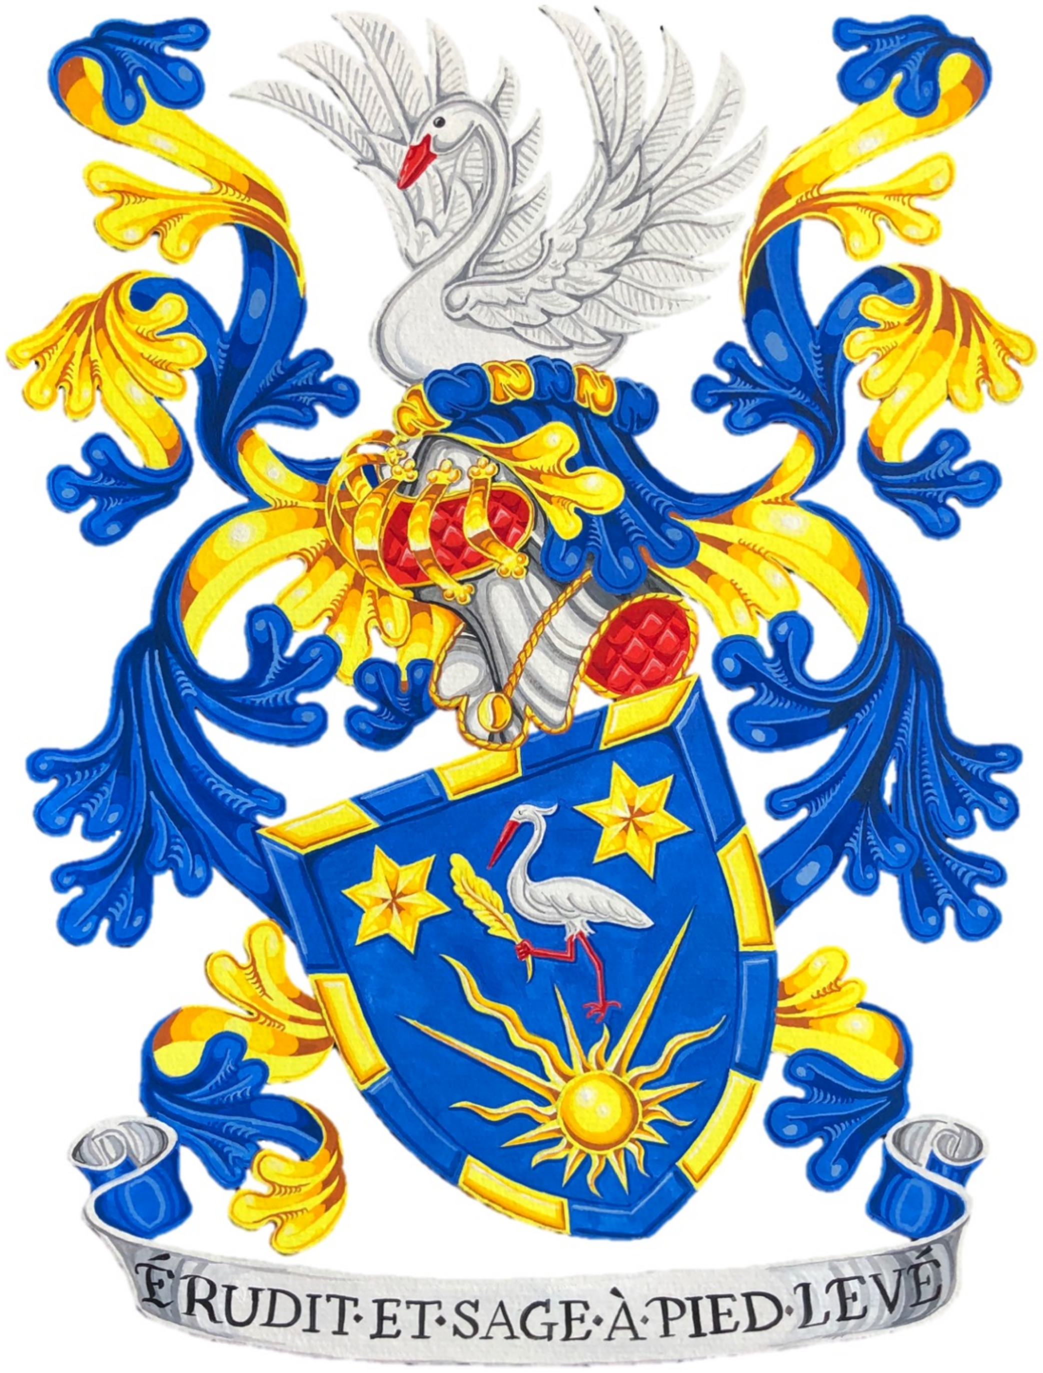
Die Welt als Wille und Vorstellung - Arthur Schopenhauer (Gdansk 1788 - Frankfurt 1860).



ÉRUDIT·ET·SAGE·À·PIED·LEVÉ

Figure 2: The Coat of Arms of Nico F. Declercq and his descendants. Artwork by Björn Fridén, Swedish Heraldic Artist. (Nico F. Declercq, ©2020, all rights reserved)

Figure 3: The Legend of Sant Jordi, by Père Niçard in 1470.

In antiquity, the narrative of Sant Jordi in Montblanc unfolds amidst a landscape characterized by the emergence of a fearsome dragon within the Catalan region, specifically at the periphery of Montblanc. This dragon, possessing the remarkable ability to traverse air, water, and land, posed a dire threat to the inhabitants with its noxious breath and predatory instincts. Despite valiant attempts by knights to vanquish the creature, the dragon consistently emerged victorious, instilling terror and despair throughout the town.

In response to the pervasive fear instigated by the dragon's reign of terror, the monarch convened the populace, culminating in a collective agreement to placate the beast through regular offerings of goods. However, as the supplies dwindled, the sacrifices escalated from livestock to the grim practice of human sacrifice, determined by a lottery among the townsfolk. Poignantly, the king's own daughter found herself selected as the initial offering, a revelation met with anguish and sorrow.

Undeterred by the inevitability of her fate, the princess embarked towards the dragon's lair, resigned to her purported destiny. Yet, amidst the verdant expanse of the forest, she encountered an enigmatic knight named Jordi, resolute in his mission to rescue her from impending doom. Engaging in a fierce battle against the formidable dragon, Jordi ultimately triumphed, dealing a decisive blow to the creature's vulnerable point beneath its left wing. Utilizing the princess's girdle as a binding implement, Jordi subdued the vanquished dragon, offering assurance of its docility. Returning triumphantly to the heart of Montblanc, Jordi's valorous deed was celebrated amidst the town square, culminating in the ceremonial dispatch of the dragon and the emergence of a vibrant garden of crimson roses in the aftermath of its demise. Symbolically, Jordi tenderly presented the most exquisite rose to the princess, heralding a moment of communal jubilation and reverence.

Departing through the enduring monument of Saint George's Gate, Jordi's legacy endures as an emblem of courage, sacrifice, and the triumph of righteousness over adversity within the annals of Montblanc's storied history.

Sant Jordi, also known as Saint George, has left an indelible mark on Christian and Islamic traditions as a revered martyr saint. Born in Kayseri in 275 CE, his life story intertwines with legends of martyrdom and miracles, shaping his enduring legacy. Despite the lack of concrete historical evidence, Sant Jordi's tale continues to captivate believers and scholars alike. This article delves into the enigmatic figure of Sant Jordi, exploring his familial ties, his life as a Roman soldier turned Christian martyr, and the evolution of his cult through the ages.

Sant Jordi's family background is rooted in Catholic tradition, which holds that he was the son of Gerontius, a Roman officer from Cappadocia, and Policronia, a local woman from Diospolis (modern-day Lod, Israel). Raised in a Christian household, Sant Jordi followed his father's footsteps into the Roman army. His upbringing amidst the cultural crossroads of the Roman Empire likely influenced his later actions and beliefs.

At the age of thirty, Sant Jordi served as a tribune in Nicomedia under Emperor Diocletian's reign. During this time, Diocletian initiated a fierce persecution against Christians. Despite the risks, Sant Jordi refused to renounce his faith, resulting in his imprisonment and subsequent martyrdom. His steadfast devotion and defiance in the face of persecution became emblematic of his saintly status.

Accounts of Sant Jordi's martyrdom vary, with legends attributing miraculous events to his trials. From surviving being burned, cut by swords, and poisoned to performing miracles amidst his torment, Sant Jordi's story is steeped in fantastical elements. Though lacking in historical veracity, these narratives underscore the enduring appeal of his martyrdom and the proliferation of his cult.

Over the centuries, Sant Jordi's cult spread far and wide, transcending geographical and religious boundaries. Despite attempts by authorities to discredit his legend, the enthusiasm of his devotees only grew stronger. Pope Gelasi's decree in 496 acknowledging the apocryphal nature of Sant Jordi's martyrdom did little to dampen the excitement surrounding his veneration. The fusion of pre-existing traditions with the cult of Sant Jordi further fueled his widespread appeal, ensuring his place as a beloved saint in the popular imagination.

In conclusion, the legend of Sant Jordi, while steeped in myth and uncertainty, continues to endure as a testament to the power of faith and martyrdom. Though disputed by historians, his story resonates with believers across cultures, inspiring devotion and reverence. As we unravel the layers of myth surrounding Sant Jordi, we uncover not just a historical figure but a symbol of resilience and unwavering faith in the face of adversity.

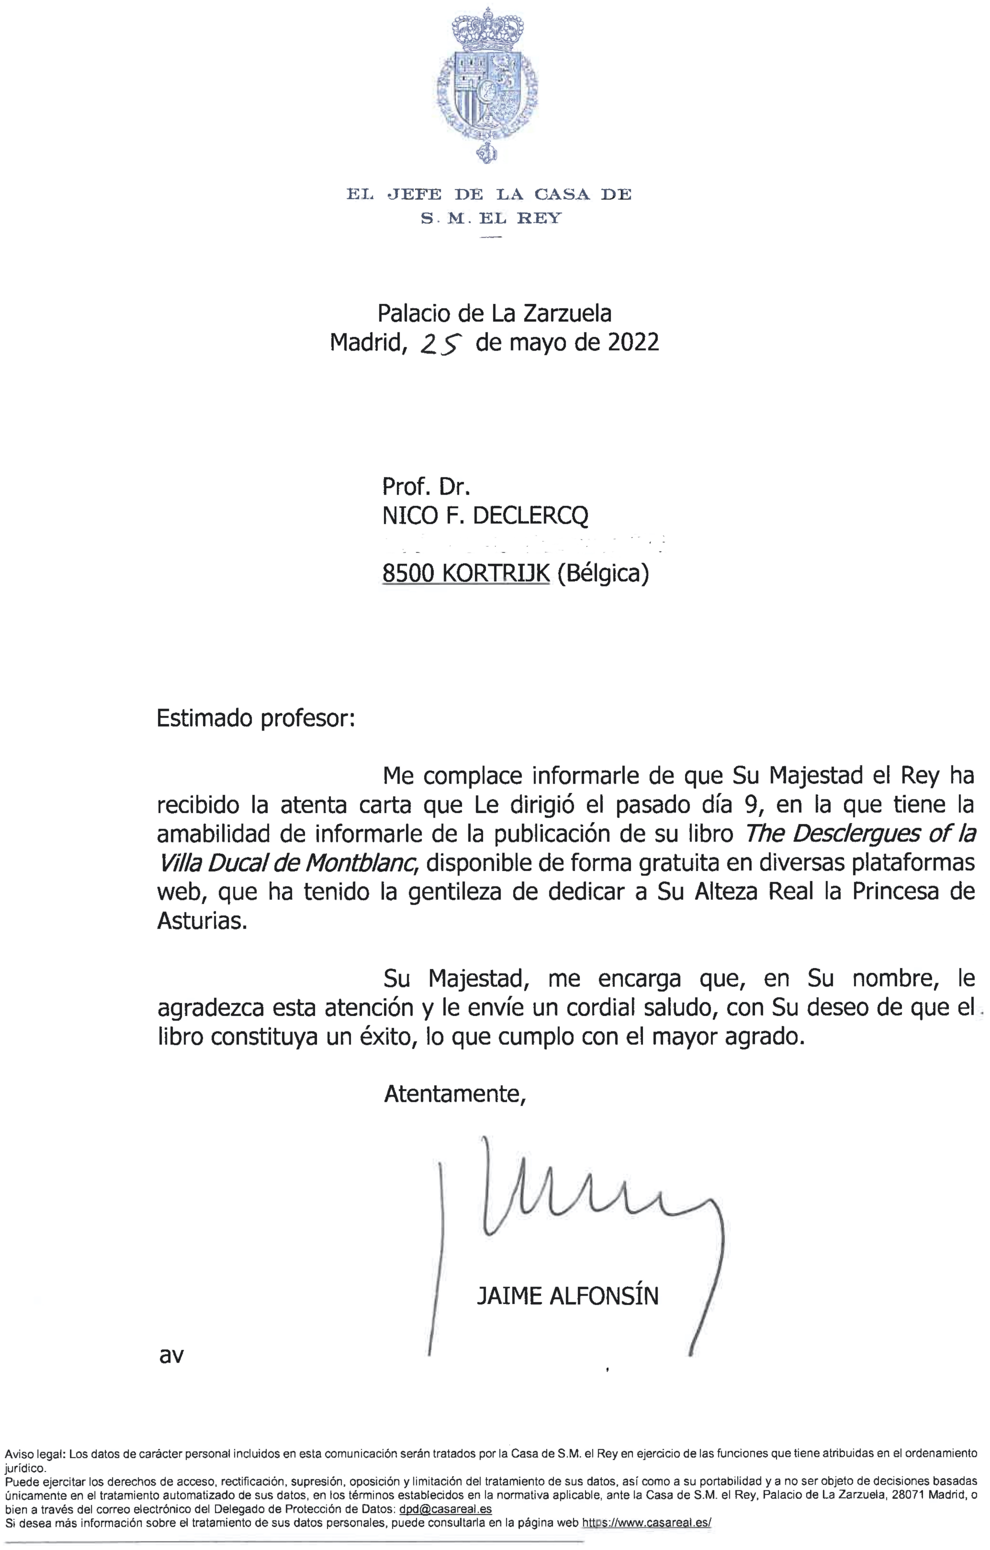
According to the legend, Saint George, also known as Sant Jordi, was born in Kayseri around the year 275 AD. He is said to have died in Nicomedia, present-day İzmit in Turkey, around April 23, 303 CE. Sant Jordi, also known as Saint George or Sint Joris, is celebrated on April 23.

PREFACE & ENDORSEMENTS

Dear Reader,

After years of trying to delve into the history of the land of my ancestors, the past came to meet me.
For centuries, Montblanc has preserved the memory of an ancient family, the Desclergues, who lived among us but disappeared under little-known circumstances.
Well, in fact, they have not disappeared entirely because the most important place in the town, the plaça Major, still houses the imposing Palau Desclergues. It is a noble and haughty building that has hosted some of the most relevant activities of the Montblanc residents in recent centuries.
A few years ago, the Desclergues returned to Montblanc. Professor Nico F. Declercq contacted me, telling the impressive story of how the Desclergues left Montblanc, headed to northern lands, and adapted their name to Declercq. He happened to be a descendant of the Desclergues.
It was a privilege to modestly help Professor Declercq with some local aspects of his research, but the greatest privilege was hosting him and his lovely family on their visit to Montblanc to see the land, the palace, and the context from which their ancestors departed centuries ago.
The story of this migration is the book you have in your hands: an impressive historical review based on a titanic task of research and analysis.
It is an honor for me to have collaborated modestly and to recommend its reading.
It is definitely a reference work.
Thank you, Nico, for counting on me with your proposition to let me write this foreword.

Eduard Contijoch
Telecommunications Engineer and Historical Researcher
Barcelona, Spain.
June 20, 2024.



EL JEFE DE LA CASA DE
S. M. EL REY

Palacio de La Zarzuela
Madrid, 25 de mayo de 2022

Prof. Dr.
NICO F. DECLERCQ
[redacted]
8500 KORTRIJK (Bélgica)

Estimado profesor:

Me complace informarle de que Su Majestad el Rey ha recibido la atenta carta que Le dirigió el pasado día 9, en la que tiene la amabilidad de informarle de la publicación de su libro The Desclergues of la Villa Ducal de Montblanc, disponible de forma gratuita en diversas plataformas web, que ha tenido la gentileza de dedicar a Su Alteza Real la Princesa de Asturias.

Su Majestad, me encarga que, en Su nombre, le agradezca esta atención y le envíe un cordial saludo, con Su deseo de que el libro constituya un éxito, lo que cumplo con el mayor agrado.

Atentamente,

JAIME ALFONSÍN

av

Aviso legal: Los datos de carácter personal incluidos en esta comunicación serán tratados por la Casa de S.M. el Rey en ejercicio de las funciones que tiene atribuidas en el ordenamiento jurídico.
Puede ejercitar los derechos de acceso, rectificación, supresión, oposición y limitación del tratamiento de sus datos, así como a su portabilidad y a no ser objeto de decisiones basadas únicamente en el tratamiento automatizado de sus datos, en los términos establecidos en la normativa aplicable, ante la Casa de S.M. el Rey, Palacio de La Zarzuela, 28071 Madrid, o bien a través del correo electrónico del Delegado de Protección de Datos: dpd@casareal.es
Si desea más información sobre el tratamiento de sus datos personales, puede consultarla en la página web https://www.casareal.es/

Figure 4: Letter from the Royal Palace in Madrid.

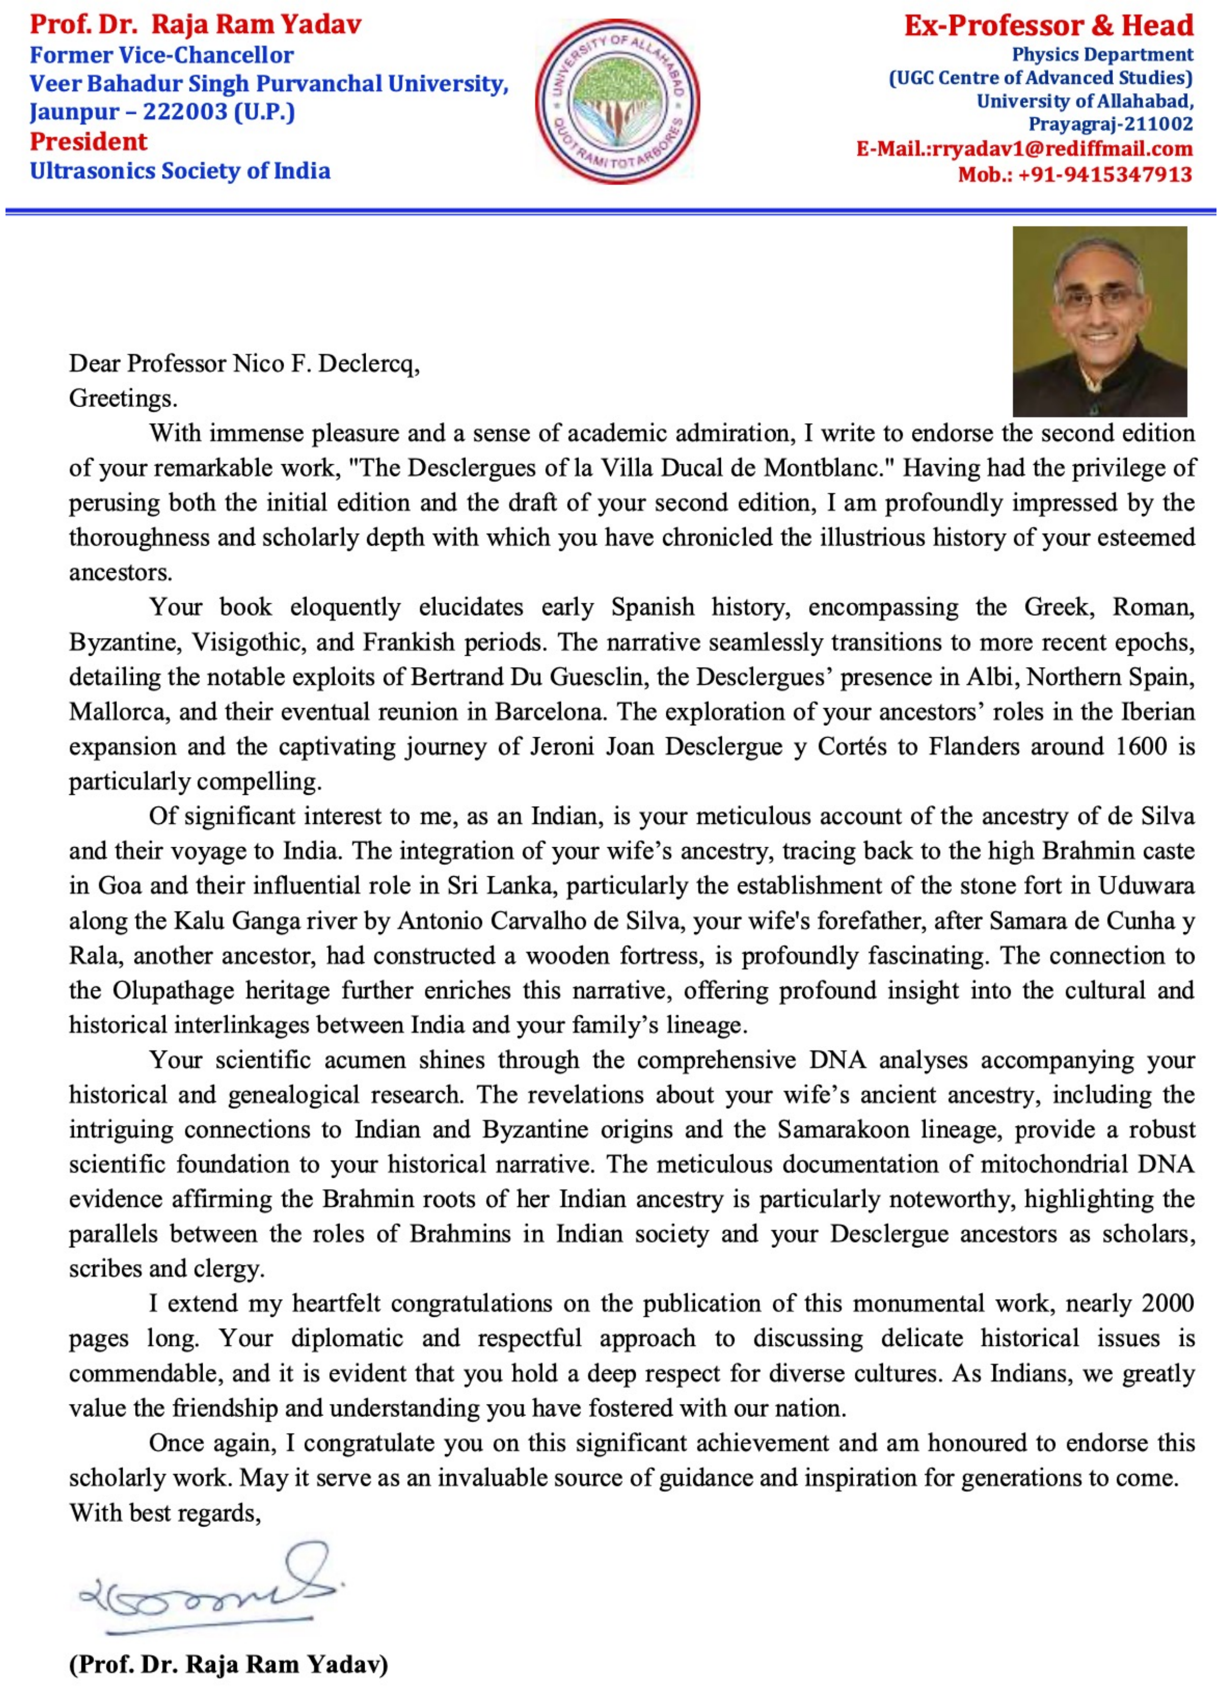
Prof. Nico Declercq,

I enjoyed perusing your book and find that you have not only brought in some new material on Sri Lanka's history but dealt with controversial issues quite well. I have alerted the National Library of Sri Lanka on the existence of your online volume.

Chandra R. de Silva,
June 30, 2023.[1]

---

[1] Endorsement of the passages pertaining to Sri Lanka in the First Edition of this book, by Professor Chandra R. de Silva on July 30, 2023, by email. Professor Chandra R. de Silva, is an esteemed scholar whose work I have much enjoyed. Dr. Chandra Richard de Silva is a distinguished professor renowned for his historical expertise and authorship. Hailing from Sri Lanka, he has significantly contributed to the scholarly community. De Silva, an esteemed academic in the field of history, holds the position of professor at Old Dominion University. His scholarly contributions include a range of works dedicated to exploring Sri Lankan history. Chandra De Silva pursued his secondary education at St. Peter's College, Bambalapitiya, and afterward enrolled at the University of Ceylon, where he completed a Bachelor of Arts degree in history in 1962. In 1968, he completed the Doctor of Philosophy degree requirements at the University of London. In 1963, de Silva started his teaching career at the University of Ceylon, Peradeniya. From 1978 to 1981, he held the position of dean at the Faculty of Arts, University of Peradeniya. In 1984, he assumed the position of professor of history at the institution. From 1989 to 1991, he held the position of visiting professor in the departments of history and Asian studies at Bowdoin College. From 1991 until 1998, he held the position of Chair of History at Indiana State University. In 1998, he assumed the chair of history at Old Dominion University. In June 2003, he assumed the position of dean at the College of Arts and Letters within the institution. Presently, he holds the position of vice provost for faculty and program development at the institution.
The chapters about Sri Lanka received his endorsement.



Prof. Dr. Raja Ram Yadav
Former Vice-Chancellor
Veer Bahadur Singh Purvanchal University,
Jaunpur – 222003 (U.P.)
President
Ultrasonics Society of India

Ex-Professor & Head
Physics Department
(UGC Centre of Advanced Studies)
University of Allahabad,
Prayagraj-211002
E-Mail.:rryadav1@rediffmail.com
Mob.: +91-9415347913

Dear Professor Nico F. Declercq,
Greetings.

With immense pleasure and a sense of academic admiration, I write to endorse the second edition of your remarkable work, "The Desclergues of la Villa Ducal de Montblanc." Having had the privilege of perusing both the initial edition and the draft of your second edition, I am profoundly impressed by the thoroughness and scholarly depth with which you have chronicled the illustrious history of your esteemed ancestors.

Your book eloquently elucidates early Spanish history, encompassing the Greek, Roman, Byzantine, Visigothic, and Frankish periods. The narrative seamlessly transitions to more recent epochs, detailing the notable exploits of Bertrand Du Guesclin, the Desclergues' presence in Albi, Northern Spain, Mallorca, and their eventual reunion in Barcelona. The exploration of your ancestors' roles in the Iberian expansion and the captivating journey of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés to Flanders around 1600 is particularly compelling.

Of significant interest to me, as an Indian, is your meticulous account of the ancestry of de Silva and their voyage to India. The integration of your wife's ancestry, tracing back to the high Brahmin caste in Goa and their influential role in Sri Lanka, particularly the establishment of the stone fort in Uduwara along the Kalu Ganga river by Antonio Carvalho de Silva, your wife's forefather, after Samara de Cunha y Rala, another ancestor, had constructed a wooden fortress, is profoundly fascinating. The connection to the Olupathage heritage further enriches this narrative, offering profound insight into the cultural and historical interlinkages between India and your family's lineage.

Your scientific acumen shines through the comprehensive DNA analyses accompanying your historical and genealogical research. The revelations about your wife's ancient ancestry, including the intriguing connections to Indian and Byzantine origins and the Samarakoon lineage, provide a robust scientific foundation to your historical narrative. The meticulous documentation of mitochondrial DNA evidence affirming the Brahmin roots of her Indian ancestry is particularly noteworthy, highlighting the parallels between the roles of Brahmins in Indian society and your Desclergue ancestors as scholars, scribes and clergy.

I extend my heartfelt congratulations on the publication of this monumental work, nearly 2000 pages long. Your diplomatic and respectful approach to discussing delicate historical issues is commendable, and it is evident that you hold a deep respect for diverse cultures. As Indians, we greatly value the friendship and understanding you have fostered with our nation.

Once again, I congratulate you on this significant achievement and am honoured to endorse this scholarly work. May it serve as an invaluable source of guidance and inspiration for generations to come.

With best regards,

(Prof. Dr. Raja Ram Yadav)

Figure 5: This endorsement has been written by Professor Raja Ram Yadav on June 18, 2024. Professor Yadav is the former head of the Physics Department at the University of Allahabad, often referred to as 'Oxford of the East,' and has also served as the Vice-Chancellor of Veer Bahadur Singh Purvanchal University, Jaunpur. In addition to his knowledge and distinguished contributions to the field of physics, he currently presides over the Ultrasonics Society. His profound knowledge extends beyond the realm of physics to encompass Indian history, society, and culture. Notably, Professor Yadav is also an accomplished musician.

Beste,

langs deze weg wil ik u oprecht feliciteren met uw prachtig boek, ongetwijfeld het werk van vele jaren onderzoek. Als Pattyn-zijnde, vind ik dit een waar historisch meesterwerk met een indrukwekkende hoeveelheid bron- en aktevermeldingen. Ik kon de verwijzingen naar de historische context waarin de diverse personen leefden ook heel erg smaken....Daarnaast wil ik u nog meegeven dat historisch gezien de stamboom van Guyotte De Hames ook leest als een geschiedenisboek, helemaal tot aan de Franken en Merovingers. Misschien een idee voor een vervolg of extra hoofdstuk. Desondanks, ook al is mijn eigen familie van Geluveld (later Zonnebeke en zelf woon ik in Ieper) mijn tak van de familie blijft momenteel nog een raadsel. Veel genealogen geloven (kopiëren zonder onderzoek of controle) dat een zekere Carolus een zoon van Pieter Simon Patin was, en noteren hem als vader van Joannes Patin (gehuwd met Helena Forrest). Ik weiger op dit moment om deze hypothese aan te nemen want duidelijk bewijs kan ik hiervan nergens vinden. De familie Pattyn heeft voor mij dus nog een aantal mysteries achter de hand.

Christophe Pattyn,
genealogist,
December 28, 2022.[2]

---

[2] Endorsement of the First Edition of this work; an appendix has been added in the current edition.

Dear Nico,

I write to you with deep appreciation for the significant contributions your work has made to our understanding of political power throughout history. Your diligent research into the Cortés family's heritage, from which you draw a portion of your ancestry, has undoubtedly enriched our knowledge in this field and demonstrates a commendable dedication to your craft.

It was a pleasure to collaborate with you on your second book edition, providing additional information from a wide range of sources, including ancient codices, historical texts, chronicles, and noble archives across Spain, France, and Italy. The fusion of medieval history and genealogy, as you have demonstrated, is a complex task that requires years of meticulous effort to unravel the intricate puzzle of lineage and historical context.

Moreover, my keen insight into various aspects of medieval history, such as power dynamics, social movements, and the evolution of noble lineages, reflects my deep passion for the subject matter. My expertise extends beyond the genealogy of the Cortés family to encompass a wide array of topics, including the Crusades, Mediterranean trade routes, and the cultural tapestry of medieval Europe.

I am particularly impressed by your discerning analysis of historical records and your comprehension to dispel myths and inaccuracies that have persisted in earlier works. Your second edition, in particular, in which you incorporated much of the data and explanations I provided you with, sheds light on the origins of Hernán Cortés and provides valuable insights into the Christian conquest of Extremadura, offering a clear and logical genealogy of the Rodríguez de las Varillas and Monroy families. In conclusion, I want to express my deep admiration for your scholarly pursuits and the invaluable contributions you have made to our understanding of history.

Regarding the information and clues I have provided to you about your Desclergue ancestors in Mallorca and Occitania, I see myself as akin to a teacher to Professor Desclergue, who is my student. And, like any good teacher, I challenge my students and encourage them to investigate, read, and exercise their brains a little.

With warm regards,

Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal, your genealogical cousin.[3][4][5]
Edinburgh, United Kingdom, October 6, 2023.

---

[3] Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal is a Venezuelan-Spanish historian and professional genealogist who earns all the credit for providing the author with the enormous amount of information about the ancestry of Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega. During an exchange with Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal, he elucidated the requisite skills and methodologies used by historians and genealogists when delving into the investigation of ancestral lineages, namely those delineated throughout the chapters of this literary work, particularly the ancestry of Hernán Cortés, but also the medieval Desclergues.

[4] Cortés Rosal created the Santa Fe de Bogotá Genealogy team, led by Fenita Hollman de Villaveces, in Bogotá. He is a descendant of Don Enrique de Guzmán, the Count of Niebla of the Ducal House of Medina-Sidonia. His grandfather is Juan Flórez de Ocariz, a Royal Notary in the Viceroyalty of New Granada in Santa Fe de Bogotá and was a great genealogist. He wrote the excellent work 'Genealogies of the New Kingdom of Granada.'

[5] Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal provided invaluable insights concerning the Desclergue lineage during the medieval period, thereby playing a seminal role in establishing a connection between the Desclergues of Montblanc and those of Mallorca. Additionally, Cortés Rosal contributed significantly to elucidating the Torró lineage within our genealogy. Despite his dissent regarding the inclusion of Bertrand Du Guesclin in the Torró lineage, the author maintains a conviction supported by a preponderance of the evidence that one of the ancestral lines, particularly the patrilineal descent, is true of Du Guesclin origin. This assertion is comprehensively expounded upon in the present work, notably in Part VI, wherein genetic and historical documentation are synthesized to bolster the argument. Adhering to the principles of scientific inquiry, the author acknowledges that this theory's fortification or potential revision hinges upon the emergence of additional evidential corroboration. The trajectory of scholarly inquiry will ultimately adjudicate the veracity of this proposition.

Cher Professeur Declercq,

C'est un privilège pour moi de vous adresser ce message afin de saluer la soumission que vous avez gracieusement transmise pour mon évaluation critique. Bien que ma recherche doctorale ne porte pas spécifiquement sur Bertrand Du Guesclin, elle couvre la même époque dans une perspective médiévale européenne plus large. Je vous suis reconnaissant de m'avoir permis d'intégrer de manière anonyme mes remarques évaluatives, qui contiennent des opinions personnelles, dans la préface de la seconde édition à venir de votre ouvrage scientifique.

Permettez-moi d'exprimer ma plus grande admiration pour votre œuvre phare, Les Desclergues de la Villa Ducal de Montblanc. C'est avec grand plaisir et satisfaction intellectuelle que j'écris pour exprimer ma profonde appréciation pour la profondeur de la recherche, la rigueur scientifique et l'analyse astucieuse contenues dans ses pages. Votre explication de la lignée de la famille Desclergue, en particulier le lien obscur entre Bertrand Du Guesclin et sa progéniture en Espagne avec une lignée de la Dame de Torró, témoigne de votre dévouement à découvrir des vérités historiques. La manière méticuleuse avec laquelle vous naviguez à travers les sources historiques et contextualisez ces révélations dans le cadre plus large de l'Europe médiévale est louable.

Je suis particulièrement impressionné par votre gestion des questions controversées entourant l'implication de Bertrand Du Guesclin dans la Guerre de Cent Ans et par la complexité de ses engagements en Espagne au cours du tumultueux XIVe siècle. Les enchevêtrements politiques et les sentiments nationalistes qui enveloppent souvent les discussions sur cette époque, tant en France qu'en Espagne, posent des défis considérables aux historiens. Pourtant, votre approche impartiale consistant à disséquer ces débats et à présenter un récit nuancé en dit long sur votre intégrité scientifique et votre perspicacité intellectuelle.

L'intégration de méthodologies modernes telles que l'analyse ADN pour corroborer les découvertes historiques témoigne non seulement de votre approche innovante de l'enquête historique, mais également de votre contribution significative dans ce domaine. En intégrant harmonieusement la recherche archivistique traditionnelle avec des techniques scientifiques de pointe, vous avez fait progresser notre compréhension de la généalogie médiévale et créé un précédent pour les études interdisciplinaires dans le domaine.

Je salue votre courage pour aborder des sujets historiques aussi sensibles et controversés avec rigueur académique et impartialité. Votre travail constitue un phare d'érudition et un témoignage de l'importance d'une enquête historique rigoureuse pour démêler les complexités du passé.

J'attends avec impatience les futures contributions que votre précieuse plume apportera sans aucun doute, enrichissant encore davantage notre compréhension de l'histoire.

Avec mes salutations chaleureuses et mon admiration scientifique,
April 10, 2024.[6]

---

[6] The author solicited an endorsement from a doctoral candidate specializing in French History, following discussions on obtained DNA results and providing excerpts from his 2nd book edition. The author pledged to uphold confidentiality regarding the identity of the graduate student.

Estimado Dr. Declercq„

Me ha parecido muy interesante su investigación y le felicito por la publicación del libro. Respecto a su consulta, debo decirle que a primera vista me parece ver una conexión con las obras de un escultor francés activo en la zona de Tarragona entre el final del siglo XVI y los principios del XVII, llamado Benet Baró.
Creo que hay puntos de contacto en cuanto al tipo de relieve, los fondos arquitectónicos, las figuras, etc. Debo decir que el retablo que usted publica ha sido restaurado de forma abusiva. También que Benet Baró era un escultor de poca calidad, a mi parecer... Espero haberle sido de utilidad.
Saludos.

Sofia Mata De la Cruz,
Història i Història de l'Art,
Universitat Rovira i Virgili,
February 1, 2022.[7]

---

[7] Sofia Mata de la Cruz is a distinguished historian who specializes in art history, particularly the painting and sculpture of the Tarragona diocese during the modern era. She was born on August 4, 1955, in Santa Cruz de Tenerife and earned her degree in Philosophy and Arts, specializing in Art History, in 1977. Her professional career began in 1987 at the Delegation of Artistic and Sacred Heritage of the Archdiocese of Tarragona, and she has been a conservator at the Museu Diocesà de Tarragona since 1989. Dr. Mata de la Cruz completed her doctorate at the Universitat Rovira i Virgili (URV) in 2001 with a thesis on 16th-century painting in the Tarragona diocese. She started teaching at URV in 2004 as an associate professor in the Department of History and Art History. Throughout her career, she has cataloged and inventoried numerous artworks and contributed to various exhibitions and academic publications. In recognition of her contributions to cultural heritage, she has received several accolades, including a Diploma of Cultural Merit from the city of Tarragona. Her published works include detailed studies on religious constructions and notable figures in art from the Tarragona region, such as 'Tarragona y el concilio de Trento' and 'La pintura del cinc-cents a la Diòcesi de Tarragona.'

Contents

PREFACE & ENDORSEMENTS xiv

VOLUME I 1

I Foreword 3
- 0.1 A Reflection on The Dichotomy Between the First and Second Editions 5
- 0.2 About this Manuscript's First Edition, 2021 5
- 0.3 A few words about the author 6
- 0.4 The Author's Academic Background 6

II Research Fundamentals and Synopsis: Methods and Major Discoveries 3

1 Boudewijn I van Vlaanderen & Judith van West-Francië 5

2 Introduction to Historical Research Methodology 9
- 2.1 What is Historical Research? 9
- 2.2 Application of Methods in Historical Research 9
- 2.3 Significance of Abduction in Historical Breakthroughs 9
- 2.4 Achievements in this Work 9

3 Executive Summary 11
  - 3.0.1 Introduction 11
  - 3.0.2 Comprehensive Family Lineage: An Overview 11
  - 3.0.3 Ancient Iberian Roots and Greek Integration 11
  - 3.0.4 Roman Era: Administrative Ascendancy 11
  - 3.0.5 Byzantine Influence and North African Ventures 12
  - 3.0.6 Visigothic Resurgence and Islamic Conquests 12
  - 3.0.7 Frankish Reconquest and Christian Revival 12
  - 3.0.8 Breton Expansion and Du Guesclin Connection 12
  - 3.0.9 Catalonia and the Knights Templar: Reestablishment 13
  - 3.0.10 Conquest of Mallorca: A Family Milestone 13
  - 3.0.11 Establishing the Desclergue Dynasty in Montblanc 13
  - 3.0.12 Strategic Marriages and Noble Alliances: Further Rise in Prominence 13
  - 3.0.13 Migration to Flanders: Military and Notarial Alliances in Kortrijk 14
  - 3.0.14 Genetic Legacy and Analysis 14
  - 3.0.15 Notable Individuals and Their Contributions 14
  - 3.0.16 Maternal Ancestry: Expanding the Family Network 14
  - 3.0.17 The Montblanc Period: A Focused Exploration 14
  - 3.0.18 The De Silva Lineage of Uduwara: A Global Journey 14
  - 3.0.19 Additional Ancestral Lines and Military Service 14
  - 3.0.20 The Chapel in Deerlijk: A Historical Revelation 14
  - 3.0.21 Epilogue: Insights and Reflections 15

III Prelude 17

4 Heraldry and Geography 19
- 4.1 Heraldic Arms of Nico Felicien Declercq 19
  - 4.1.1 Motto 19
  - 4.1.2 Historical Backbones of the Arms: Toulouse 19
  - 4.1.3 Historical Backbones of the Arms: Desclergue 19
  - 4.1.4 Historical Backbones of the Arms: de Patin 20
  - 4.1.5 Presentation of Declercq's Arms 20
  - 4.1.6 The Declercq de Silva Family Tomb 20
  - 4.1.7 Heraldic Registrations 21
- 4.2 Arms of Shirani de Silva 21

5 The Town and the Duchy of Montblanc in Spain. 23

6 A Glimpse on the Desclergues 29

7 Onomastics 31
7.1 Names in a Genealogical Context . . . 31
7.2 Polymorfic Names . . . 32
7.3 Other Foreign Names . . . 34
7.4 First Names . . . 35
7.5 The Name Connected to the Casal dels Desclergue . . . 35

8 A Brief History of Flanders and its Iberian Connections 39
8.1 Rethinking the Middle Ages: A Comprehensive Reevaluation . . . 40
8.2 Francia - The Kingdom of the Franks . . . 40
8.3 The Spanish Reconquista . . . 41
8.4 The Battle of the Golden Spurs in 1302 . . . 42
8.5 The Burgundian Empire Rise . . . 42
  8.5.1 Philip the Bold . . . 43
  8.5.2 John of Burgundy . . . 46
  8.5.3 Philip the Good . . . 46
  8.5.4 Charles the Bold . . . 46
  8.5.5 Mary the Duchess of Burgundy . . . 46
  8.5.6 Philip the Handsome . . . 47
8.6 Iberia as the Crown of the World . . . 47
8.7 Emperor Charles V . . . 47
8.8 The Habsburg Rule of Belgium under the Spanish Crown after Carlos V . . . 51
  8.8.1 H. M. Felipe II as King of Spain and Ruler of the Spanish Netherlands, 1556-1598 . . . 51
  8.8.2 H. M. Felipe III as King of Spain, 1598-1621 . . . 51
  8.8.3 H. M. Isabella of Spain and H. M. Albert of Austria as Rulers of the Spanish Netherlands, 1598-1621 . . . 51
  8.8.4 H. M. Felipe IV as King of Spain and Ruler of the Spanish Netherlands, 1621-1665 . . . 52
  8.8.5 H. M. Carlos II as King of Spain and Ruler of the Spanish Netherlands, 1665-1700 . . . 52
8.9 The Eighty Years War . . . 52
8.10 El Camino Español . . . 53
8.11 The Spanish Army of Flanders . . . 53
  8.11.1 The composition of the Army of Flanders . . . 56
  8.11.2 Timeline of the Eighty Years War . . . 57
8.12 The Spanish Devolution War and the War of Succession . . . 59
  8.12.1 The Devolution War 1667-1668 . . . 59
  8.12.2 The War of Succession 1701-1714 . . . 61
8.13 The Spanish Monarchy from H.M. King Felipe V until the First Republic . . . 61
  8.13.1 H.M. Felipe V of Spain . . . 61
  8.13.2 H.M. Luis I of Spain . . . 61
  8.13.3 H.M. Felipe V of Spain . . . 61
  8.13.4 H.M. Fernando VI of Spain . . . 61
  8.13.5 H.M. Carlos III of Spain . . . 61
  8.13.6 H.M. Carlos IV of Spain . . . 61
  8.13.7 H.M. Fernando VII of Spain . . . 61
  8.13.8 H.M. Isabella II of Spain . . . 61
  8.13.9 H.M. Amadeo I of Spain . . . 62
8.14 The Spanish Monarchy, the Second Republic and the Civil War . . . 62
  8.14.1 H.M. Alfonso XII of Spain . . . 62
  8.14.2 H.M. Alfonso XIII of Spain . . . 62
8.15 The Second Spanish Republic and Francisco Franco . . . 62
8.16 Spanish Monarchy after Francisco Franco . . . 63
  8.16.1 H.M. King Juan Carlos I of Spain . . . 63
  8.16.2 H.M. King Felipe VI of Spain . . . 64
8.17 Belgium Austriacum . . . 65
  8.17.1 H.M. Emperor Charles VI . . . 65
  8.17.2 H.M. Empress Maria Theresia . . . 66
  8.17.3 H.M. Emperor Joseph II . . . 66
  8.17.4 H.M. Emperor Leopold II . . . 66
  8.17.5 H.M. Emperor Francis II . . . 66
8.18 The First Belgian Revolution in 1789 . . . 66
8.19 H.M. Emperor Napoleon Bonaparte . . . 67
8.20 The Dutch Period . . . 69
8.21 Modern Belgium . . . 70
  8.21.1 H.M. King Leopold I . . . 70
  8.21.2 H.M. King Leopold II . . . 70
  8.21.3 H.M. King Albert I . . . 71
  8.21.4 H.M. King Leopold III . . . 71
  8.21.5 H.M. King Boudewijn . . . 71
  8.21.6 H.M. King Albert II . . . 71
  8.21.7 H.M. King Philippe . . . 71

IV More than two thousand years of Desclergues 77

9 The Desclergues during the Greek Era 79
- 9.1 Introduction . . . 79
- 9.2 The Foundation of Empúries and the Desclergues Lineage . . . 79
- 9.3 Phocaea was the Origin of Greek Colonists . . . 80
- 9.4 Empúries was a Greek Foundation in Iberia . . . 80
- 9.5 The Integration of Local and Greek Elites . . . 80
- 9.6 The Legacy of Empúries and the Desclergues . . . 81

10 The Desclergues during the Roman Era 85
- 10.1 The Roman Conquest of Empúries . . . 85
- 10.2 The Role of the Desclergues in Roman Empúries . . . 85
- 10.3 Integration into the Roman Administrative Framework . . . 85
- 10.4 Economic Prosperity and Social Influence . . . 85
- 10.5 Adaptation and Legacy . . . 85

11 Byzantine Era 87
- 11.1 The Desclergues and Their Byzantine Alliance . . . 87
- 11.2 Byzantine Conquest and Administration in Hispania . . . 88
- 11.3 The Desclergues in Hispania and North Africa . . . 88
- 11.4 Byzantine North Africa: Bejaia (Saldae) . . . 89
- 11.5 The Decline of Byzantine Hispania . . . 89
- 11.6 Conclusion . . . 89

12 Visigothic and Islamic Era 91
- 12.1 The Byzantine Reconquest and Visigothic Resurgence . . . 91
- 12.2 The Desclergues and the Visigothic Alliance . . . 91
- 12.3 The Islamic Conquests and the Transformation of the Iberian Peninsula . . . 91
- 12.4 The Byzantine Legacy and Cultural Influence . . . 92
- 12.5 The Onset of the Muslim Conquest . . . 92
- 12.6 Adaptation and Division within the Desclergues Family . . . 92
- 12.7 Catalonia and the Visigothic Resistance . . . 92
- 12.8 Transition from Scribes to Hakim under Muslim Rule . . . 92

13 Brittany, Occitania and Catalonia 93
- 13.1 Introduction . . . 93
- 13.2 The Formation and Development of the Spanish March (778-950) . . . 93
  - 13.2.1 Early Muslim Incursions and Carolingian Response . . . 93
  - 13.2.2 Structure and Governance of the Spanish March . . . 93
  - 13.2.3 Conflicts and Consolidation . . . 94
  - 13.2.4 Towards Autonomy and Independence . . . 94
- 13.3 The Breton March . . . 94
  - 13.3.1 Historical Background and Initial Establishment . . . 94
  - 13.3.2 The Role of Roland and Early Conflicts . . . 94
  - 13.3.3 Administrative and Military Structure . . . 95
  - 13.3.4 Key Figures and Conflicts . . . 95
  - 13.3.5 Decline and Transformation . . . 95
  - 13.3.6 The Second Breton March . . . 95
  - 13.3.7 Stabilization of Borders . . . 95
- 13.4 Consolidated Marches . . . 95
  - 13.4.1 Introduction . . . 95
  - 13.4.2 The Counties of the Spanish March . . . 96
  - 13.4.3 The Counties of the Breton March . . . 96
  - 13.4.4 The Transition to Autonomy . . . 96

14 The Reconquista: A Brief Analysis of Historical and Cultural Dimensions 97
- 14.1 Introduction . . . 97
- 14.2 Historical Context and Phases . . . 97
  - 14.2.1 Early Resistance and Formation of Christian Kingdoms . . . 97
  - 14.2.2 The Role of Christian Kingdoms . . . 97
  - 14.2.3 The Almoravid and Almohad Interventions . . . 97
- 14.3 The Concept of Reconquista: Historiographical Debates . . . 97
- 14.4 Cultural and Religious Dynamics . . . 97
  - 14.4.1 Coexistence and Conflict . . . 97
  - 14.4.2 The Role of Military Orders and Crusading Ideology . . . 98
- 14.5 Socio-Economic Transformations . . . 98
  - 14.5.1 Repopulation (Repoblación) . . . 98
  - 14.5.2 Economic Integration and Urban Development . . . 98
- 14.6 The End of the Reconquista and Its Legacy . . . 98
  - 14.6.1 The Fall of Granada . . . 98
  - 14.6.2 Long-term Impacts . . . 98

15 The Name Desclergue: A Socio-Historical and Genealogical Study 99

16 The Powerful Clergues Clan in Occitania 103
16.1 Introduction . . . 103
16.2 Cathars . . . 103
16.3 Our Roots in Albi and Castres, France . . . 105
16.4 Montaillou . . . 105
16.5 Cortés Rosal's Reflections . . . 109
16.6 Château de Linardié . . . 109
16.7 Béatrice de Planisolles . . . 110
16.8 Lord of Guimerie . . . 110

V The Desclergues' Return to Spain 111

17 Historical Events Marking this Period 113
17.1 Purpura de la Patria . . . 113
17.2 The Catalan Genesis of the Desclergue Family . . . 114
17.3 Toulouse County and La Marca, Aragon and Barcelona . . . 115
17.4 The Knights Templars, Juanista and Mary Magdalene . . . 116
 17.4.1 A general Perspective . . . 116
 17.4.2 The Templar's Chapel of Metz . . . 116
17.5 Templars in Occitania and in Aragón . . . 117
17.6 Ramon Llull was Francesc Desclergues' Acquaintance . . . 118
17.7 The Templars of Mallorca . . . 119
17.8 Mallorca and the Nobility from Occitana . . . 119
17.9 The Desclergues were Pioneers of Mallorcan Banking . . . 120
17.10 The Tradehub of Mallorca in the Late 13th Century . . . 120
17.11 Intertwined Mallorca and Barcelona . . . 121
17.12 The Transition from Mallorca to the Catalan Mainland . . . 121
17.13 Highlighting the Templars in Catalonia . . . 122

18 Our Desclergue Ancestry 129
18.1 The Genesis of Catalunya Nova: Conquest and Colonization . . . 129
18.2 The Role of the Knight's Templar in Catalonia's Expansion . . . 129
18.3 The Brothers Francesc and Arnau Clergue . . . 131
 18.3.1 Pere Clergue, Arnau Clergue's Son . . . 135
18.4 Excile from Albi Langedoc 1209-1229 . . . 135
18.5 The Conquest of the Arab Kingdom of Mallorca . . . 136
18.6 Banking in Mallorca . . . 136
18.7 Trade in Mallorca . . . 136
18.8 The Desclergues embodied the Renaissance Spirit . . . 137
18.9 Countess Joan of Toulouse (1220–1271) . . . 137
18.10 Raymond des Clergue, Father of the Desclergues Clan in Spain . . . 137
 18.10.1 Desbosch, Friend of Desclergue . . . 139
 18.10.2 Ramón Desclergue ceased the Opportunity . . . 139
18.11 Francesc Desclergue, the Son of Raymond des Clergue . . . 139
 18.11.1 Francesc Desclergue and his Freedom of Speech . . . 140
 18.11.2 Francesc Desclergue and the Maria Magdalena Hospital . . . 140
 18.11.3 Guillem Borrell, Father-in-law of Francesc Desclergue . . . 141
 18.11.4 Bernat Desclergue, the Son of Francesc Desclergue . . . 143
18.12 Guillermo Desclergue, the Son of Francesc Desclergue . . . 143
18.13 The Trial of the Templars in 1307 . . . 143
18.14 The Desclergues Emigration from Mallorca to Aragon in 1382 . . . 144
18.15 Pere Desclergue, the Son of Guillermo Desclergue . . . 144
 18.15.1 Berenguer, the Son of Pere Desclergue . . . 144
 18.15.2 N. Desclergue, the Daughter of Pere Desclergue . . . 144
18.16 Geronimo Desclergue, the Grandson of Guillermo Desclergue . . . 144
18.17 Ramon Desclergue, the Son of Geronimo Desclergue . . . 145
18.18 Francesc Desclergue, the Son of Ramon Desclergue . . . 145
18.19 Berenguer Desclergue, the Son of Francesc Desclergue . . . 145
18.20 Clementa Desclergue, the Daughter of Berenguer Desclergue . . . 145
18.21 The Settlement in Montblanc . . . 145
18.22 Desclergues in Barcelona . . . 145
 18.22.1 Benedicto Desclergue in Barcelona . . . 145
18.23 Desclergues in Cervera . . . 145
 18.23.1 Jaume Desclergue in Cervera . . . 145
 18.23.2 Joan Desclergue in Cervera & Barcelona . . . 146
 18.23.3 Geronimo Desclergue in Cervera & Barcelona . . . 146
18.24 Desclergues in Lleida . . . 146
 18.24.1 Antich Desclergue in Lleida . . . 146
18.25 Desclergues in Granvena . . . 146
 18.25.1 Gabriel Desclergue in Granvena & Lleida . . . 146
18.26 Desclergues in Verdú-Tàrrega . . . 147
 18.26.1 Balaguer Desclergue in Verdú . . . 147
18.27 Desclergues in Tarragona . . . 147

18.27.1 Benet Desclergue in Tarragona . . . 147
18.28 Desclergues in Balaguer . . . 147
18.28.1 Bonaventura Desclergue in Balaguer . . . 147
18.29 Desclergues in Manresa . . . 147
18.29.1 Pere Desclergue in Manresa . . . 147
18.29.2 Nicolau Desclergue (I) in Manresa . . . 151
18.29.3 Nicolau Desclergue (II) in Manresa . . . 151
18.30 The Desclergues in Sevilla . . . 151
18.31 Other Desclergues in Montblanc . . . 151
18.32 Other Desclergues . . . 152
18.32.1 Cerdana Desclergue . . . 152
18.32.2 Nicolaus Desclergue . . . 152
18.32.3 Benet Desclergue . . . 152

VI The Patrilineal Ancestry along Bertrand Du Guesclin 153

19 Bertrand Du Guesclin 155
19.1 Introduction . . . 155
19.2 Who was Bertrand Du Guesclin? . . . 157
19.3 Why Bertrand Du Guesclin? . . . 159
19.4 La Marche de Bretagne and Île Du Guesclin . . . 160
19.5 Spanish Patrilineal Roots . . . 160
19.6 Mediterranean Blood at Saint Coulomb . . . 163
19.7 The Legend of King Aquin . . . 163
19.8 Hakin in La Marche de Bretagne, Originating from La Marche d'Espagne . . . 164
19.8.1 General Considerations . . . 164
19.8.2 Specific Notable Figures in La Marche d'Espagne . . . 166
19.9 Consistency with the Official History of Saint Coulomb . . . 168
19.10 Du Guesclin's Strategic Genesis in Bougie (Béjaïa) . . . 169
19.11 Descent from Desclergue through Hakim . . . 170
19.11.1 Du Guesclin's Heraldic Shield points at Muslim Spain . . . 171
19.12 The Reported Patriliniar Ancestors of Du Guesclin . . . 172
19.12.1 Richer de Guarplic (DG01) . . . 172
19.12.2 Clamaroch de Guarplic (DG02) . . . 172
19.12.3 Bertrand I de Guarplic (DG03) . . . 172
19.12.4 Geoffroy de Guarplic (DG04) . . . 172
19.12.5 Bertrand II du Guesclin (DG05) . . . 172
19.12.6 Pierre du Guesclin (DG06) . . . 172
19.12.7 Bertrand III du Guesclin (DG07) . . . 172
19.12.8 Bertrand IV du Guesclin (DG08) . . . 173
19.12.9 Guillaume du Guesclin (DG09) . . . 173
19.12.10 Robert II du Guesclin (DG10) . . . 173
19.13 Autosomal Roots of Bertrand du Guesclin in Occitania . . . 173
19.13.1 Toulouse-Gerona-Barcelona-Empúries . . . 173
19.13.2 Bertrand Du Guesclin's Occitanian Blood . . . 173
19.13.3 Du Guesclin and Borrell, link to Barcelona and Ampurias . . . 174
19.13.4 Du Guesclin was a Blood Relative of Enrique de Trastamara . . . 175
19.14 Was Du Guesclin a Templar? . . . 175
19.14.1 Introduction . . . 175
19.14.2 Bertrand Du Guesclin had Ancestors who were Crusaders . . . 176
19.14.3 Templars in Matignon, Bretagne . . . 178
19.14.4 A templar's Chapel in Pléboule . . . 179
19.14.5 Jacky Minier's thoughts . . . 180
19.14.6 Cuvelier's thoughts . . . 181
19.15 Descendants in Spain . . . 184
19.15.1 Banquet with the King, and Errors in Historical Works . . . 185
19.15.2 'Dame de Soria' was not from Soria . . . 187
19.15.3 Doña Torró - Du Guesclin's Doña de Soria, and their Offspring . . . 188
19.15.4 The Descendants of Beltrán Torró, Son of Bertrand Du Guesclin . . . 189
19.15.5 The Ancestry of Clementa Desclergue . . . 189
19.15.6 The Descendants of Guerau Torró, Son of Bertrand du Guesclin . . . 190
19.15.7 Historians on Du Guesclin's Offspring . . . 192
19.16 Du Guesclin's Brief Biography . . . 199
19.17 Du Guesclin's Appearance in Spain: War of Two Peters . . . 199
19.18 Bertrand du Guesclin's Chivalric and Strategic Motives in the War of the Two Peters . . . 200
19.19 The Logic Behind Aragon's Support of Bertrand Du Guesclin . . . 201
19.20 The Role of the House of Montfort in the Mutual Sympathy Between Bertrand Du Guesclin and the Count of Barcelona 201
19.21 Du Guesclin's role in the Battle of Montiel . . . 202
19.22 Honors Received by Du Guesclin . . . 203
19.23 Du Guesclin's Legacy . . . 203
19.24 Bertrand Du Guesclin's Final Words Revealed his Roots . . . 203
19.25 The Burial Place of Bertrand Du Guesclin . . . 205
19.26 Heraldry and the Appearance of Du Guesclin in Spain . . . 205

19.26.1 Du Guesclin supporting H.M. Enrique de Trastámara of Castile in The Castilian Civil War, and supporting H.M. Peter IV of Aragon in The War of the Two Peters . . . 205
19.26.2 Places visited by Du Guesclin in Spain . . . 208
19.26.3 The Presence and Liberation of Montblanc by Du Guesclin in the Records of 1366-1370 . . . 209
19.26.4 The Spanish format of Du Guesclin's name . . . 209
19.26.5 Heraldry of the Du Guesclin family . . . 209
19.26.6 The seal of Du Guesclin upon his arrival in Spain: The Gryphon . . . 210
19.26.7 The shield of Du Guesclin as Count of Trastamara . . . 210
19.27 DNA Analysis Exposing the Connection with Du Guesclin . . . 210
19.27.1 DNA Evidence of Du Guesclin as the Originator of the Desclergues of Montblanc . . . 210
19.27.2 The Counts of Barcelona and the Royal House of Aragon . . . 211
19.27.3 The Du Guesclin Haplogroup . . . 211
19.27.4 A sample of R. Grouazel-Krauss from Ruca in Brittany, male descendant of Guéhéneuc . . . 211
19.27.5 A sample of Nadine Isabelle Ulrich, descendant of Robert II Du Guesclin . . . 212
19.27.6 A sample of Marguerite Emma De Myttenaere, descendant of Robert II Du Guesclin . . . 213
19.27.7 A sample of Vargas-Kolabukoff, descendant of Pierre III Du Guesclin . . . 213
19.27.8 A sample of F. Guézénnec . . . 213
19.27.9 A sample of B. Chaix . . . 213
19.27.10 A sample of M. Cariou . . . 213
19.27.11 A sample of Cloarec-Le Prunennec-Le Parlouer . . . 214
19.27.12 The Brittanic Grouazel-Krauss family as Descendants of Uuethenoc and Boisguehenneuc . . . 214

20 The Torró Bloodline 215
20.1 Introduction . . . 215
20.2 The Torró came from Occitania . . . 217
20.3 Beltrán Torró (DT01) . . . 217
20.3.1 Guerau Torró (DT01b), Brother of Galceran Torró (DT02) . . . 222
20.3.2 Nicolau Torró . . . 222
20.4 Galceran Torró (DT02) . . . 223
20.5 Pere Torró (DT03) & Eulalia Miquel . . . 223
20.5.1 Pere Torró . . . 223
20.5.2 Eulalia Miquel . . . 223
20.6 Francesc Torró i Miquel (DT04) & Clementa Desclergue . . . 223
20.6.1 Francesc Torró i Miquel (DT04) . . . 223
20.6.2 Clementa Desclergue . . . 224
20.6.3 Galceran Torró y Desclergue (DC01b) . . . 224
20.6.4 Pere Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01) . . . 224
20.7 Other Members of the Torró clan . . . 224
20.7.1 Ramon Torró . . . 225
20.7.2 Aynard Torró . . . 225
20.7.3 Galceran Torró . . . 225
20.7.4 Joan Torró . . . 225
20.7.5 Pere Torró . . . 226
20.7.6 Elionor Torró . . . 228
20.7.7 Galceran Torró (DT03g) . . . 228
20.7.8 Bertran Torró (DT03f) . . . 228
20.7.9 Francesc Torró . . . 229
20.7.10 Francesc de Torró y Desclergue . . . 229
20.7.11 Pere Galceran Torró . . . 229
20.7.12 Dionís Torró (alias Miquel) . . . 229
20.7.13 Sibilla Miquel . . . 230
20.7.14 Galceran Torró . . . 230
20.7.15 Bernat Torró . . . 230
20.7.16 Guillem Torró . . . 230
20.7.17 Jaume and Joan Torró . . . 230
20.8 Members of the Miquel clan . . . 231
20.8.1 Berenguer de Miquel . . . 231
20.8.2 Pere Miquel . . . 231
20.8.3 Anton Miquel . . . 231
20.8.4 Joan Miquel . . . 231
20.8.5 Gabriel de Miquel . . . 232
20.8.6 Guillermo Torró de Miquel . . . 232
20.8.7 Gerónimo de Miquel i Torró . . . 232
20.8.8 Francesc Miquel . . . 232

VII The Desclergues in Montblanc 233

21 Earliest Desclergues in Montblanc - Matrilineal Connection 235

22 Summary of the Desclergue Paternal Ancestry Line 241

23 Coat of Arms: Links to Du Guesclin and Cortés de Monroy 245
- 23.1 The Shield . . . 245
- 23.2 The Helmet . . . 245
- 23.3 The Gryphon on the Helmet . . . 245
- 23.4 Three Military Flags . . . 246
- 23.5 The Fleurs de Lys . . . 246

24 Settlement of our Desclergues at Montblanc 253

25 Don Pere Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01) 257
    - 25.0.1 Ancestry of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01) on his Mother's Side . . . 257
    - 25.0.2 Pere Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01) was a Notary . . . 260
    - 25.0.3 Eleonor Torró y Miquel, the Wife of Don Pere de Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01) . . . 261
- 25.1 Descendants of Pere Desclergue (I) (DC01) . . . 262
    - 25.1.1 Pere Desclergue (DC02b), a Mercador . . . 262
    - 25.1.2 Antich Desclergue (DC02c) . . . 262
    - 25.1.3 Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) & Ana de Villavicencio . . . 262

26 Don Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02) & Doña Prunera y Ferrer 291
    - 26.0.1 Don Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02), General Conservator of the Montblanc Dukedom . . . 291
    - 26.0.2 Doña Prunera y Ferrer, the wife of Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02) . . . 291
    - 26.0.3 Children of Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02) . . . 294

27 Don Bonaventura Desclergue & Maria Anna Cortés de Monroy 295
- 27.1 Don Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03), a Notary and Local Deputy . . . 295
- 27.2 Maria Ana Cortes de Monroy y Vega Bazan, her Lineage and Relatives . . . 301
    - 27.2.1 Don Cristóbal Cortés de Monroy . . . 307
- 27.3 Maria de Vega Bazan . . . 307
- 27.4 Lope Fernandez de Vega . . . 307
- 27.5 Ines de Luna y Rojas . . . 308
- 27.6 Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz . . . 311
- 27.7 Pedro de Paz y Gomez de Anaya . . . 313
- 27.8 Catalina de Boil . . . 314
- 27.9 Pedro de Boil y Foces . . . 314
- 27.10 Ximena Ferrench de Luna . . . 314
- 27.11 Garcia Garces de Boil . . . 314
- 27.12 Ermesenda de Cervellon . . . 315
- 27.13 Juan Rodriguez de las Varillas . . . 315
    - 27.13.1 Garci Sánchez de Badajoz . . . 318
    - 27.13.2 Diego Sánchez de Badajoz . . . 320
- 27.14 Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza . . . 320
- 27.15 Maria Sanchez of Navarra . . . 322
- 27.16 Gil Podavila or Bodavila . . . 322
- 27.17 Maria Fernandez de Monroy . . . 322
- 27.18 Fernan Perez de Monroy . . . 322
- 27.19 Estefania Rodriguez de Varillas . . . 323
- 27.20 Hernán Cortés de Monroy, Ana's Cousin and a Conquistador . . . 324
    - 27.20.1 Introduction . . . 324
    - 27.20.2 Heraldic Shield . . . 324
    - 27.20.3 His Early Life and Arrival in the New World . . . 324
    - 27.20.4 The Deity Quetzal Coatl . . . 325
    - 27.20.5 His Life in Hispañola . . . 326
    - 27.20.6 His First Visit of Tenochtitlan (Mexico City) . . . 326
    - 27.20.7 His Conquista of Tenochtitian (Mexico City) . . . 326
    - 27.20.8 His Involvement in Other Conquistas . . . 326
    - 27.20.9 A Devastating End of His Life . . . 326
    - 27.20.10 The Author's Meso-American and Hellenistic Research . . . 327
    - 27.20.11 Description . . . 327
    - 27.20.12 The Author's Publications on this Matter . . . 328
    - 27.20.13 Articles Published by News Agencies on the Author's Activity, concerning the Quetzal echo at Chichen Itza . 328
    - 27.20.14 Articles Published by News Agencies concerning the Author's Work on the Raindrop Effect . . . 329
    - 27.20.15 Articles Published by News Agencies Concerning the Author's Work in Epidaurus . . . 329
    - 27.20.16 Offspring of Hernán Cortés de Monroy . . . 329
    - 27.20.17 Martín Cortés el Mestizo, Martín El Viejo . . . 329
    - 27.20.18 Don Martín Cortés Zuñiga . . . 330
    - 27.20.19 Other Offspring of Hernán Cortés . . . 331
- 27.21 Descendants . . . 331
    - 27.21.1 Francesc Torró y Desclergue (DC04b) . . . 331
    - 27.21.2 Bonaventura Torró y Desclergue (DC04c) . . . 332
    - 27.21.3 Galceran Torró, son of Bonaventura Torró y Desclergue (DC04c) . . . 332
    - 27.21.4 Luis Desclergue (I) (DC04d) y Cortés, a Mercador . . . 332

28 Bonaventura Desclergue (DC04) and his family 335
- 28.1 Introduction . . . 335
- 28.2 Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04) . . . 335
- 28.3 His Marriage with Anna (II) Ratera and Their Children . . . 336
  - 28.3.1 Don Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) y Ratera . . . 336
  - 28.3.2 Don Antoni Desclergue y Ratera (DC05b) . . . 343
  - 28.3.3 Doña Francisca Desclergue (DC05d) y Ratera . . . 344
  - 28.3.4 Doña Isabel/Elisabeth Desclergue y Tous (DC05ex1) - First Marriage, with Jacinto Francesc Jori . . . 344
  - 28.3.5 Doña Isabel/Elisabeth Desclergue y Tous (DC05ex1) - Second Marriage, with Jacinto Pedrolo . . . 344
- 28.4 Marriage with Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio and Children . . . 345
  - 28.4.1 Don Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) . . . 346
  - 28.4.2 Don Enric Desclergue (DC05c) y Cortés . . . 346
- 28.5 Don Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue, (DC05ex1y2) . . . 346
  - 28.5.1 Introduction . . . 346
  - 28.5.2 Narrative of His Life . . . 348
  - 28.5.3 Descendants : de Pedrolo . . . 349
  - 28.5.4 Manuscripts Authored by Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) . . . 349
  - 28.5.5 Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) is also found in. 350
  - 28.5.6 Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue's Ancestral Highlights . . . 350
  - 28.5.7 His Paternal Uncle, Francesc Onofre de Pedrolo y Desclergue . . . 350
  - 28.5.8 Desclergue Documents in Fons documentals de Montblanc a l' Arxiu comarcal de Tàrrega . . . 350
  - 28.5.9 Antoni de Pedrolo (DC05ex1y2y1) . . . 352
  - 28.5.10 Amadeo Francesc Desclergue y Tous (DC05ey1) . . . 352
- 28.6 Earlier Connection with the de Pedrolo Family . . . 353

VOLUME II 363

VIII The Desclergues in Habsburg Belgium 365

29 Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) & Felipa de Montoya 367
- 29.1 Jeroni's complete Name . . . 367
- 29.2 Introduction . . . 367
- 29.3 His Roots in Montblanc . . . 372
- 29.4 The Impact from the de Queralt Family . . . 373
  - 29.4.1 The Horta Commandery (Tarragona) . . . 373
  - 29.4.2 The Commandery of Gardeny (Lerida) . . . 373
  - 29.4.3 The Barberà Commandery (Tarragona) . . . 376
  - 29.4.4 The Recruitment of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) . . . 376
- 29.5 The Career of Jeroni Desclergue 1587-1604 . . . 377
  - 29.5.1 Introduction . . . 377
  - 29.5.2 The Influence of Carlos Coloma and Luis del Villar . . . 379
  - 29.5.3 The Capture of Geldern 1587 . . . 380
  - 29.5.4 The Invasion of England with the Spanish Armada 1588 . . . 381
  - 29.5.5 The Siege of Bergen op Zoom 1588 . . . 381
  - 29.5.6 The Attempt to sack Ostend in Spring 1589 . . . 381
  - 29.5.7 The Siege of Heusden, Heel and Bommelerwaard, 1589 . . . 382
  - 29.5.8 The Arrival in Harelbeke and Kortrijk, December 1589 . . . 382
  - 29.5.9 Culinary Waffle Traditions in Kortrijk involving Our Family and Antoon Van Dyck . . . 383
  - 29.5.10 Attack on the Fortress of Noordam 1590 near Zevenbergen . . . 383
  - 29.5.11 The Attack on Occupied Oudenburg 1590 . . . 383
  - 29.5.12 The Relief of la Ferté-Milon in 1591 . . . 383
  - 29.5.13 The Liberation of the Westerlo Castle in 1591 . . . 384
  - 29.5.14 Defence of Nijmegen in 1591 . . . 384
  - 29.5.15 The Defense of Steenwijk (1592) . . . 384
  - 29.5.16 The Siege of Coevorden in 1593-1594 . . . 384
  - 29.5.17 The capture of La Capelle and the Loss of Laon in 1594 . . . 384
  - 29.5.18 The Capture of Hoei (Huy) in Spring of 1595 . . . 385
  - 29.5.19 The Siege of Le Catelet, Doullens, and Cambrai - Summer of 1595 . . . 385
  - 29.5.20 The Hospital of Saint-Jean at Citadel of Cambrai . . . 386
  - 29.5.21 The Siege of Calais and Ardres in 1596 . . . 386
  - 29.5.22 The Siege of Hulst in 1596 . . . 387
  - 29.5.23 The Battles of Turnhout, Alphen and Moers in the North-East, in 1597 . . . 387
  - 29.5.24 Surprise Capture of Amiens in the South, 1597 . . . 388
  - 29.5.25 A New Career in Tournai in the Spring of 1598 . . . 388
  - 29.5.26 Short Career in Barcelona and Membership of the Corts 1598-1602 . . . 389
  - 29.5.27 His Stay in Tournai 1602-1604 . . . 390
  - 29.5.28 His Participation in the Siege of Ostend 1602-1604 . . . 390
- 29.6 The Events after Jeroni's Death in 1604 . . . 423
- 29.7 The Spaniard Castle of Ghent . . . 423
- 29.8 The Early Network of Jeroni Desclergue . . . 425
  - 29.8.1 The Friendship between the Desclergue, Du Puich, Masse, Declercq, de Bucqouy, Vosse, Andries and de la Cruz families . . . 427

29.8.2 Jan Declercq (DK03) 427
29.8.3 The du Puich family 427
29.8.4 The Masse family 429
29.8.5 The de Vos Family 429
29.8.6 The de la Cruz Family, related to Jeroni's Wife 430
29.8.7 The Andries Family 430
29.9 Jeroni's children 430
29.9.1 Juana Desclergue (DC06c), the Daughter of Jeroni Joan Desclergue 434
29.9.2 Maria Desclergue (DC06e), the Daughter of Jeroni Joan Desclergue 434
29.9.3 Anna Desclergue (DC06f), the Daughter of Jeroni Desclergue 434
29.9.4 Antoni Desclergue (DC06), the Son of Jeroni Desclergue 436
29.9.5 Jeroni Desclergue (DC06d), the Son of Jeroni Desclergue 436
29.9.6 Miguel Desclergue (DC06b), the Son of Jeroni Desclergue 436
29.10 Felipa de Montoya, the Wife of Jeroni Desclergue, and Her Family. 438
29.10.1 Etymology of de Montoya 438
29.10.2 Her Ancestors 442
29.10.3 Her Marriage with Jeroni Joan Desclergue (DC05) 442
29.10.4 Her Acquaintance with the Declercq family in Kortrijk 442
29.10.5 Her Marriage with Jan Declercq (DK03) 442
29.10.6 The Siblings of Felipa de Montoya and the Ximenes de la Cruz Family 442
29.10.7 Jeronimo de Montoya, senior 443
29.10.8 Jeronimo de Montoya, junior 443
29.10.9 Antonio de Montoya 444
29.10.10 Maria de Montoya, junior 444
29.10.11 Felipa de Montoya was related to Carlos Coloma de Saa 444
29.10.12 Other Montoyas in Belgium 444
29.11 The Orphans of Jeroni Desclergue, Ius Inter Gentes, their Inheritance, and the Destiny of Felipa de Montoya 445
29.11.1 Ius Inter Gentes and Citizen Rights 445
29.11.2 Unio Prolium, civil and Inheritance Rights 451
29.11.3 Ius Inter Gentes, Civil and Inheritance Rights 452
29.12 The Spanish Military Barracks of Harelbeke, adjacent to Deerlijk 454
29.12.1 The Historical Perspective 454
29.12.2 Archaeological Evidence of the Spanish Barracks 458

30 Whereabouts of Jeroni Desclergue and his family in Flanders 461
30.1 Introduction 461
30.2 The Spaniard Castle of Ghent 461
30.3 Kortrijk 461
30.4 Cambrai 461
30.5 Tournai 463
30.6 Ostend 463
30.7 Overacker in Deerlijk-Harelbeke 463

31 The Siege of Ostend 469
31.1 Introduction 469
31.2 The Early Stage of the Battle 469
31.3 The Late and Final Stages of the Battle and the Death of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) 470
31.4 Sandhill in Ostend, where Jeroni was Killed 471
31.5 Colombye, San Miguel and the Pregnant Widow 472
31.6 Legacy of the Siege of Ostend 472

32 Antoni Desclergue y Ratera (DC05b) 491
32.1 Introduction 491
32.2 His Career 491
32.2.1 Recruitment and service in Milan 491
32.2.2 Ostend 491
32.2.3 Damme 491
32.2.4 Barcelona and Gerona 494
32.2.5 Antwerp, with his brother Enrique (DC05c) and the onset of the 30-year War 495
32.3 Spouse 497
32.4 His Death at Ghent 497
32.5 His Offspring 497
32.5.1 Pere Desclergue 499
32.5.2 Joan Desclergue 499
32.5.3 Francisca Desclergue 499
32.5.4 Jose Desclergue 499
32.5.5 Maria Desclergue 499
32.6 The appearance of Maria Juana Pollet 499

33 Enric Desclergue y Cortés (DC05c) 501
33.1 Introduction . . . 501
33.2 His Recruitment . . . 501
33.3 His Career . . . 501
33.3.1 Handwritten reference 1 . . . 501
33.3.2 Handwritten reference 2 . . . 501
33.3.3 Handwritten reference 3 . . . 512
33.3.4 Íñigo de Borja y Velasco . . . 512
33.3.5 The defence of 's Hertogenbosch in 1603 . . . 513
33.3.6 His involvements in Ostend and Sluis . . . 513
33.3.7 The battles with Ambrogio Spinola 1606-1609 . . . 513
33.3.8 His Mediterranean Career in the Period 1610-1613 . . . 514
33.3.9 His Involvement in Eastern Provinces and Residence of Enric Desclergue in Antwerp with his Brother Antoni, and the Onset of the 30-year War, 1614-1618 . . . 515
33.3.10 Enric Desclergue was Awarded in 1623 . . . 516
33.3.11 His Residence in Wingene . . . 516
33.4 His Spouses . . . 516
33.4.1 Maria, the First Wife of Enric Desclergue . . . 516
33.4.2 Ana Fabiana Pacheco, the Second Wife of Enric Desclergue . . . 516
33.5 The Death of Enric Desclergue . . . 517
33.6 His Offspring . . . 518

34 Antoni Desclergue y de Montoya (DC06) 519
34.1 Introduction . . . 519
34.2 The Discovery of Antoni Desclergue (DC06) by Jose Sanchez Real . . . 519
34.3 Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06) in the Literature . . . 520
34.4 The Birth of Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06) . . . 521
34.5 The Life and Military Career of Antoni Desclergue until 1640 . . . 525
34.5.1 The Siege of Ostend and the Death of his Father Jeroni and Uncle Jeronimo de Montoya . . . 525
34.5.2 The Truce Between the Northern and Spanish Netherlands 1609-1621 and How it Ended . . . 525
34.5.3 An Event which may have Triggered Antoni to Join the Armed Forces: the Comet on Christmas 1618 . . . 528
34.5.4 The Siege of Gulik, 1621-1622 . . . 528
34.5.5 The Siege of Bergen Op Zoom and Steenbergen, 1622 . . . 529
34.5.6 The Siege of Breda, 1624-1625 . . . 530
34.5.7 The French-Dutch Alliance against the Habsburgs . . . 531
34.5.8 The defence of 's Hertogenbosch in 1629 and Bruges in 1631 . . . 540
34.5.9 The Siege of Leuven, 1635 . . . 541
34.5.10 Meanwhile in the World . . . 542
34.5.11 1639-1641, the Period when Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06) was in Spain . . . 542
34.5.12 Particular Case of a Soldier Recruited in Flanders who Remained near Montblanc . . . 543
34.5.13 Specific Appearances of and Links to Antoni Desclergue in the area of Deerlijk . . . 549
34.5.14 Troops and their Families in the Area Deerlijk-Harelbeke-Kortrijk and their Impact on the Inhabitants During the Lifetime of Antoni Desclergue - Until his Departure for Spain in 1639 . . . 550
34.5.15 The Role of Carlos Coloma de Saa in the Life of Antoni Desclergue . . . 550
34.5.16 The Construction of the Chapel at Deerlijk in 1639-1641 and Possible Involvement in Another One in 1666 . 551
34.5.17 A Donation to the Hospital of Saint-Jean at the Citadel of Cambrai in 1641 . . . 551
34.6 Military Career of Antoni Desclergue after 1641 . . . 551
34.6.1 The Battle of Honnecourt-sur-Escaut (1642) . . . 551
34.6.2 The Spanish Defeat at Rocroi (1643) . . . 552
34.6.3 Troops and their Families in the Area Deerlijk-Harelbeke-Kortrijk and their Impact on the Inhabitants during the Lifetime of Antoni Desclergue - after 1641 . . . 566
34.7 Antoni Desclergue as Alderman's Clerk . . . 575
34.8 The Siege of Barcelona in 1651 . . . 577
34.8.1 Antoni Desclergue's Context . . . 577
34.8.2 Antoni Desclergue's Involvement in the Siege of Barcelona . . . 579
34.8.3 Antoni Desclergue's Life After the Siege of Barcelona . . . 581
34.9 Tratado de los Pirineos - Visit of Antoni to Montblanc in 1659 . . . 582
34.10 Devolution War (1667-1669) and Residence in Ghent (1672-1678) . . . 582
34.10.1 Antoni Desclergue as a Military Recruiter for the Devolution War (1667-1669) . . . 583
34.10.2 French King Louis XIV and Spanish Maria Theresia of Austria . . . 584
34.10.3 Residence at Ghent . . . 584
34.10.4 Other indications of Regional Instability . . . 585
34.11 A Visit to Spain in 1679 for a Wedding after the Peace of Nijmegen . . . 585
34.12 Antoni Desclergue's Marriage and Whereabouts . . . 585
34.12.1 Beatrice Declercq (DK02byx), Antoni Desclergue's (II) (DC06) wife . . . 586
34.12.2 Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06) on the List of 'la Bourgeoisie Foraine' of Kortrijk at Deerlijk . . . 586
34.12.3 The Orphan's Deed when Antoni's Wife Beatrice Declercq (DK02byx) Died in 1651 . . . 587
34.13 Clan of Beatrice Declercq (DK02byx) Antoni Desclergue's wife . . . 597
34.13.1 Introduction . . . 597
34.13.2 Jan Declercq (DK00) . . . 597
34.13.3 Nicolas Declercq (DK01) . . . 597
34.13.4 Nicolas Declercq (DK02) . . . 597
34.13.5 Jan Declercq (DK02a) . . . 598

34.13.6 Tomas Declercq (DK03d) . . . 598
34.13.7 Jan Declercq (DK03) & Isabeau Braye . . . 600
34.13.8 The Lives of the Biological Descendants of Nicolas Declercq (DK02) . . . 601

35 Pedro de Clerque (DK02by2), the Brother-in-law of Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06) 637
35.1 Introduction . . . 637
35.2 His Bloodline . . . 637
35.3 His Military Career . . . 637

36 Children of Antoni Desclergue (DC06) 639
36.1 Introduction . . . 639
36.2 Antoni Declerque (DC07), the Son of Antoni Desclergue (DC06) . . . 639
36.3 Anna Declerque (DC07e), the Daughter of Antoni Desclergue (DC06) . . . 639
36.4 Juan Declerque (DC07c), the Son of Antoni Desclergue (DC06) . . . 639
36.4.1 Introduction . . . 639
36.4.2 His Military Career . . . 639
36.4.3 Beatrice Maria Vandeputte, the wife of Juan Declerque (DC07c) . . . 641
36.5 Maria Declerque (DC07b) the Daughter of Antoni Desclergue (DC06) . . . 641
36.6 Joan Declerque (DC07g), the Son of Antoni Desclergue (DC06) . . . 641
36.7 Pere Declerque (DC07d), the Son of Antoni Desclergue (DC06) and Soldier . . . 643
36.8 Michiel Declerque (DC07f), Merchant Son of Antoni Desclergue (DC06) . . . 643

37 Antoni Declerque (DC07) & Martina de la Cruz 647
37.1 Introduction . . . 647
37.2 Antoni Declerque (III) (DC07), the Son of Don Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06) and Beatrice Declercq (DK02byx) . . . 647
37.3 Antoni Declerque (III) (DC07) on the List of 'la Bourgeoisie Foraine' of Kortrijk at Deerlijk . . . 647
37.3.1 Etymology of de la Cruz . . . 649
37.4 The Ancestry of Martine Vercruyce or Martina de la Cruz, with Roots in Spain . . . 649
37.4.1 Father and son Carlos Ximenes de la Cruz at Sint Eloois Vijve . . . 649
37.4.2 On Martina's Ancestors . . . 650
37.4.3 On Martina's Siblings . . . 661
37.4.4 An Early Connections Between the de la Cruz and Desclergue Families . . . 663
37.4.5 Other Relatives of Martina . . . 663
37.5 Marriage of Antoni Desclergue (DC07) and Martina de la Cruz . . . 663
37.6 Their Residence in Ghent during the French Occupation of the Castellany of Kortrijk and the Dutch War (1672-1679) 664
37.7 The French Raid of 1681-1685 . . . 665
37.8 The Nine Year War of 1688-1697 . . . 666
37.9 Their Offspring . . . 666
37.9.1 Maria Catarina Declercgz (DC08e) . . . 671
37.9.2 Maria Declercgz (DC08d) . . . 671
37.9.3 Joanna Catharina Declercgz (DC08b) . . . 671
37.9.4 Joan Declercgz (DC08c) . . . 672
37.9.5 Pere Declercgz (DC08) . . . 672

38 Pere Declercgz (II) (DC08) & Marie Prienne 675
38.1 Introduction . . . 675
38.2 Don Pere Declercgz (II) (DC08) . . . 675
38.3 Marie Prienne . . . 675
38.4 Their Marriage . . . 676
38.5 Spanish Succession War (1701-1713) . . . 676
38.6 Their Offspring . . . 677

39 Joan Declercq (II) (DC09) & Marie Montaigne 681
39.1 Introduction . . . 681
39.2 Don Joan Declercq (II) (DC09) . . . 681
39.3 Marie Montaigne . . . 681
39.4 Their Marriage . . . 681
39.5 Their Offspring . . . 681
39.6 The Total Destruction of 'Hof van Brussel' in 1731 . . . 684

40 Renier Declercq (DC10) & Marie Anne Thérèse Lombaerde 685
40.1 Introduction . . . 685
40.2 Renier Declercq (DC10), Sometimes also Referred to as René Declercq . . . 685
40.3 Marie Anne Thérèse Lombaerde . . . 685
40.4 Their Marriage . . . 688
40.5 Their Offspring . . . 688

VOLUME III 690

IX The Desclergues in Modern Belgium 693

41 Pierre Joseph Declercq (DC11) & Barbara Thérèse d' Hont 695
41.1 Introduction . . . 695

41.2 Pierre Joseph Declercq (DC11) . . . 695
41.3 Barbara Thérèse d' Hont . . . 695
41.4 Their Marriage . . . 695
41.5 Their Offspring . . . 695

42 Leo Bernard Declercq (DC12) & Thérèse Loncke 703
42.1 Introduction . . . 703
42.2 Leo Bernard Declercq (DC12) . . . 703
  42.2.1 His Birth, Military Service and Death . . . 706
42.3 Flax and linen . . . 706
42.4 Thérèse Loncke . . . 707
42.5 Their Marriage and Child . . . 707
42.6 Thérèse's Grandfather 'Dominus' Jacobus Loncke . . . 707
42.7 Link with the Renier and an Exciting Example of Name Evolution . . . 709
42.8 Their Link with the Verriest Family . . . 716
42.9 Other Acquaintances . . . 717

43 Ivo Declercq (DC13) & Mathilde Van den Broucke 719
43.1 Introduction . . . 719
43.2 Ivo Declercq (DC13) . . . 719
  43.2.1 His Birth, Military Service and Death . . . 719
43.3 Mathilde Van den Broucke . . . 719
  43.3.1 Her Life . . . 719
  43.3.2 Her Relatives . . . 721
43.4 Their Marriage . . . 721
43.5 Their Offspring . . . 721
43.6 The Mansion Ten Broucke in Wielsbeke . . . 723
43.7 The Verriest Family . . . 723
43.8 Other Acquaintances . . . 724
43.9 Ivo Declercq (DC13) was Well Established . . . 724
43.10 Were there Spanish Descendants Already in Wielsbeke? . . . 724

44 Ernest Constant Declercq (DC14) & Marie Elodie Devenyn 737
44.1 Introduction . . . 737
44.2 Ernest Constant Declercq (DC14) . . . 737
  44.2.1 His Birth, Military Service and Death . . . 737
  44.2.2 The Ancestry of Ernest Constant Declercq . . . 737
  44.2.3 Blood-Relatives of Ernest Constant Declercq . . . 737
44.3 Marie Elodie Devenyn . . . 741
  44.3.1 Introduction . . . 741
  44.3.2 Her Birth and Death . . . 741
  44.3.3 Life and Blood-Relatives of Marie Elodie Devenyn . . . 742
44.4 Their Marriage . . . 747
44.5 Their Family Life and Offspring . . . 749
  44.5.1 Joseph Antonius Gerardus Declercq . . . 750
  44.5.2 Maria Antoinette Gerarda Declercq . . . 751
  44.5.3 Michel Declercq (DC15) . . . 751
  44.5.4 Alida Maria Juliana Declercq . . . 751
  44.5.5 Valentine Declercq . . . 758
  44.5.6 Rachelle Gabrielle Declercq . . . 764
  44.5.7 Esther Ernestina Godeliva Declercq . . . 764
  44.5.8 Judith Flavia Maria Declercq . . . 766
44.6 Their Life as Farmers and Flax Merchants . . . 772
  44.6.1 Introduction . . . 772
  44.6.2 Plowing, Harrowing and Sowing Flax ('Ploegen, 'Eggen' or 'Rakelen' and 'Zaaien') . . . 774
  44.6.3 Weeding the Field . . . 775
  44.6.4 The Bloom of Flax . . . 776
  44.6.5 'De Mei steken' . . . 776
  44.6.6 Harvesting after 100 days : 'Slijten' . . . 776
  44.6.7 Stacking . . . 777
  44.6.8 Threshing ('Boten' or 'Dorsen') . . . 777
  44.6.9 Rippling ('Repelen') . . . 777
  44.6.10 Retting ('Roten') . . . 777
44.7 He was an Investor . . . 778
44.8 Stewards of Virtue, Knowledge, Literature, and Christianity . . . 778
  44.8.1 Ernest Constant Declercq . . . 778
  44.8.2 Edward Vermeulen and Elisa Vermeulen . . . 779
  44.8.3 Paul Ireneus Lesage . . . 783
  44.8.4 Joseph Ziller . . . 784
  44.8.5 Maurits Demedts . . . 785
  44.8.6 Georges Ista . . . 785
  44.8.7 Willem Elsschot . . . 785
  44.8.8 Karel Lateur . . . 785
  44.8.9 Marcel Matthijs . . . 785

44.8.10 Henriette Roland Holst . . . 786
44.8.11 Marnix Gijsen . . . 787
44.8.12 Anton van Duinkerken . . . 787
44.8.13 Stijn Streuvels . . . 787
44.8.14 Jan Greshoff . . . 788
44.8.15 Arthur van Schendel . . . 788
44.8.16 Count Maurice Lippens . . . 788
44.8.17 Anna Charlotte Ruys . . . 788
44.8.18 August Defresne . . . 789
44.8.19 Pierre Henri Ritter . . . 789
44.8.20 Baron Leon Leander Bekaert . . . 789
44.8.21 Baron Leon Antoine Bekaert . . . 790
44.8.22 Other persons and some concluding remarks about the banquet picture of 1933 . . . 790
44.9 Friendship with the Family of André and Gabrielle Demedts . . . 790
44.10 The Bekaert Family . . . 793
44.11 The Influence of Hugo Verriest . . . 793
44.12 The family of Van der Bruggen & de Nieulant et de Pottelsberghe . . . 794
44.13 The De Clerck & Lauwers Family . . . 794
44.14 The Lambrecht Family . . . 797
44.15 The Van den Broucke Family . . . 797
44.16 Other acquaintances in Wielsbeke and Meulebeke . . . 801

45 Michel Achiel Renatus Declercq (DC15) & Irma Helena Lesage 803
45.1 Michel Achiel Renatus Declercq (DC15) . . . 803
45.1.1 Introduction, his Birth and Death . . . 803
45.1.2 His Early Youth . . . 815
45.1.3 His Education . . . 815
45.1.4 His Friendship with André and Gabrielle Demedts . . . 815
45.1.5 His Career as a Flax Merchant . . . 816
45.1.6 His Acquaintance with the Bekaert Family . . . 818
45.1.7 Other acquaintances of Michel Declercq . . . 819
45.2 Irma Helena Lesage . . . 819
45.2.1 Introduction, Birth and Death . . . 819
45.2.2 The early days in Moorslede . . . 820
45.2.3 Her stay at Oudezeele during WWI . . . 825
45.2.4 Her Post-WWI Life in the Devastated Front Zone . . . 825
45.2.5 Acquaintances of Irma Lesage . . . 825
45.3 The Marriage of Michel Declercq & Irma Lesage . . . 833
45.4 The Honeymoon Years in Wielsbeke . . . 833
45.5 The Rugged WWII Years in Deerlijk . . . 833
45.6 A new life at Sint Lodewijk in Deerlijk . . . 834
45.7 Michel Declercq the Widower . . . 834
45.8 The Family Tomb . . . 835
45.9 Additional Acquaintances of the Family . . . 835
45.10 Some Memorabilia . . . 835
45.11 Their Offspring . . . 847

46 Maurice Alois Declercq (DC16) & Nelly Maria Vangheluwe 849
46.1 Introduction . . . 849
46.2 Maurice Alois Declercq (DC16) . . . 849
46.2.1 Introduction, his Birth and Death . . . 850
46.2.2 Spring: his Early life . . . 858
46.2.3 The Death of his Mother . . . 859
46.2.4 A Period when he was Temporary Bedridden . . . 860
46.2.5 His Military Service . . . 860
46.2.6 His Nearly Deadly Accident in 1961 . . . 865
46.2.7 Summer: his Marriage . . . 865
46.2.8 His Passion for Sports and Fast Cars . . . 866
46.2.9 His Passion for Baking Waffles . . . 866
46.2.10 Acquaintances . . . 868
46.2.11 His Career . . . 868
46.2.12 His godfather Daniel Lesage . . . 870
46.2.13 His Son and Grandchildren . . . 870
46.2.14 Autumn: Happiness . . . 870
46.3 Nelly Maria Vangheluwe . . . 871
46.3.1 Introduction . . . 871
46.3.2 Her Childhood . . . 871
46.3.3 Her Youth . . . 871
46.3.4 Her Marriage and Family . . . 871
46.3.5 Her Career . . . 871

47 Nico Felicien Declercq (DC17) & Shirani de Silva 881
47.1 Introduction . . . 881
47.2 Nico Declercq (DC17) . . . 881
47.3 Shirani de Silva . . . 881
47.4 Youngest Declercq Generation . . . 881

VOLUME IV 886

X The Maternal Desclergue Ancestry Branch 889

48 The Maternal Desclergue Ancestry Branch beginning with Joana Catharina Declercgz (DC08b) & Joannes De Vos 891
48.1 Introduction . . . 891
48.2 A DNA Investigation . . . 891
48.3 Joana Catharina Declercgz (DC08b) . . . 891
  48.3.1 Early Link Between Desclergue and de Vos . . . 897
  48.3.2 Link Between Desclergue, De Vos and Maes (Mas / de la Maza) . . . 897
  48.3.3 The Vercruyce and Van der Gracht Families in a Document of King Felipe IV of Spain . . . 898
48.4 Joannes De Vos, or Joan de Poch . . . 898
  48.4.1 The First Marriage of Joannes De Vos in Spain, to Maria Anna (de Portea y) Roure . . . 901
  48.4.2 The Second Marriage of Joannes De Vos in Harelbeke (Flanders - Belgium), to Joana Declercgz (DC08b) . . 902
  48.4.3 The Children of Joannes De Vos and Catharina Declercgz (DC08b) . . . 902
48.5 Petrus De Vos (DC08by2) . . . 903
  48.5.1 His Birth, Life and Death . . . 903
  48.5.2 Elizabeth De Mets, the First Wife of Petrus De Vos (DC08by2), and their Children . . . 903
  48.5.3 Hendrica Theresia Depoorter, the Second Wife of Petrus De Vos (DC08by2), and their Children . . . 907
48.6 Petrus Franciscus Josephus De Vos (DC08by2y1) . . . 907
48.7 Petrus Franciscus De Vos (DC08by2y1y1) & Marie Agnes Vanhaezebrouck . . . 907
  48.7.1 Petrus Franciscus De Vos . . . 907
  48.7.2 Marie Agnes Vanhaezebrouck . . . 911
  48.7.3 Their Marriage . . . 911
48.8 Louis De Vos (DC08by2y1y1y1) & Eugenie Libbrecht . . . 911
  48.8.1 Louis De Vos . . . 911
  48.8.2 Eugenie Libbrecht . . . 911
  48.8.3 Their Marriage . . . 911
  48.8.4 Their Offspring . . . 914
48.9 Marie Louise De Vos (DC08by2y1y1y1x1) & Theophile Verhaeghe . . . 914
  48.9.1 Marie Louise De Vos . . . 914
  48.9.2 Theophile Verhaeghe . . . 914
  48.9.3 The Marriage of Theophile Verhaeghe & Marie Louise De Vos . . . 935
  48.9.4 Their Offspring, Entrepreneurship and the France and Brussels link. . . . 935
  48.9.5 Offspring, Entrepreneurship and the Link to France and Brussels. . . . 935
48.10 Verhaeghe: Pioneering Liberalism, Socialism, Resistance, and Education . . . 948
  48.10.1 The Importance of Deerlijk . . . 949
  48.10.2 The Personages in the Verhaeghe Network . . . 949
  48.10.3 Espionage During WWI . . . 954
  48.10.4 The Network During WWII . . . 954
  48.10.5 The WWII Resistance of the Last Semester . . . 957
  48.10.6 André Verhaeghe Before and After WWII . . . 958
48.11 Zozyma Zulma Verhaeghe . . . 961
  48.11.1 Zozyma Zulma Verhaeghe . . . 961
  48.11.2 Gerard Vangheluwe . . . 965
48.12 René Vangheluwe & Anna Den Dauw . . . 965
  48.12.1 René Vangheluwe . . . 965
  48.12.2 Anna Den Dauw . . . 970
48.13 Nelly Maria Vangheluwe . . . 972
  48.13.1 Nelly Maria Vangheluwe . . . 972
  48.13.2 Maurice Alois Declercq . . . 972
48.14 Nico Felicien Declercq . . . 972

XI Solo la gloria a Dios 975

49 The Chapel of Nuestra Señora del Reposo or De Kapel van Onze Lieve Vrouw Ter Ruste, in Deerlijk 977
49.1 El Suelo del Reposo - Introduction . . . 978
49.2 Historical Evidence . . . 981
  49.2.1 Antique Images of the Chapel's Original Spanish Architecture Reveal Antoni Desclergues' Initials . . . 981
  49.2.2 Antoni Desclergue's (DC06) Personal Connections involved in the 1634 Miracle and its Recognition . . . 982
49.3 Other Evidence of Antoni Desclergue's Persuasive Role . . . 985
  49.3.1 Éminence Grise . . . 985
  49.3.2 Artwork Observed in Visible Light and Signs of Influence by Andreu Ramírez . . . 985
  49.3.3 Observations with Ultraviolet Luminescence and the Discovery of Antoni Desclergue's Signature . . . 986

49.4 Spanish Artwork Imported by Antoni Desclergue (DC06) . . . 987
  49.4.1 Cano's Miraculous Sculpture of Mary with Jesus . . . 987
  49.4.2 The Plaza Mayor of Montblanc on a Panel of the Chapel's Original Retable . . . 988
  49.4.3 An Infrared Study of the Polychromes, including the Montblanc Panel . . . 989
49.5 Narrative of the Miracle and Antoni Desclergue's Role in 1634 . . . 991
  49.5.1 Introduction . . . 991
  49.5.2 Antoni Desclergue (DC06) in 1634 . . . 992
  49.5.3 The Miracle Pointed at la Mare de Déu de la Serra . . . 992
  49.5.4 Details of the 1634 Miracle . . . 992
49.6 Similarities with the Legend of la Mare de Déu de la Serra de Montblanc . . . 995
49.7 Children Concerned in Montblanc and Deerlijk . . . 995
49.8 Paranormal Events in Deerlijk and Montblanc . . . 995
49.9 Marguerite Kelduwier as the chapel's proprietary . . . 996
  49.9.1 Â propos on Marguerite Kelduwier . . . 996
  49.9.2 Â propos on Marguerite Kelduwier's Husband Jean Du Bois . . . 1019
  49.9.3 Narrative of the Chapel's Foundation . . . 1019
49.10 On Antoni Desclergue's Motives to Honor his Parents Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) and Felipa de Montoya 1020
  49.10.1 Introduction . . . 1020
  49.10.2 Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) is Visible in the Montblanc Panel (nr 3) inside the Chapel . . . 1020
  49.10.3 Felipa de Montoya is Visible on the Montblanc Panel (nr 3) inside the Chapel . . . 1021
  49.10.4 Sancti Eusebii Hieronymi Stridonensis Presbyteri Opera Omnia . . . 1023
49.11 Noteworthy Curiosities . . . 1024
  49.11.1 Numerology, Size and Orientation . . . 1024
49.12 Â Propos about the Legend . . . 1026
49.13 The Chapel's History After the Spanish Period, Further Connections with the Desclergues and a Miracle in 1884 . . . 1028
  49.13.1 The Chapel's Earthly Service and Renovations . . . 1028
  49.13.2 The Original Architecture Revealed with the Naked Eye . . . 1031
  49.13.3 The Original Architecture Revealed with Infrared Imaging . . . 1032
  49.13.4 Restoration and Colors . . . 1032
  49.13.5 Later Desclergue Connections . . . 1032
  49.13.6 The Chapel's Second Miracle in 1884 . . . 1033

50 The Church of Saint Louis or Sint Lodewijk in Deerlijk 1035
50.1 Introduction . . . 1035
50.2 The Origins of Saint Louis . . . 1035
50.3 Connections with the Desclergues . . . 1037

XII de Silva ancestry 1039

51 The Island of Sri Lanka, Pearl of the Indian Ocean 1041

52 Greeks in Sri Lanka 1045

53 Fortresses and Settlements in Goa and Sri Lanka and the Appearance of Iberian Names 1047
53.1 Introduction . . . 1047

54 Recent Family History of Shirani de Silva 1053
54.1 Introduction . . . 1053
54.2 The Appearance of Lambda and Delta in Tombstones, Buildings and Churches at Goa . . . 1061
54.3 Alvaro de Carvalho, the Son of Alvar Garcia Bejarano and Mencia Gonzalez de Carvalho, the Eldest Known Paternal Ancestor of Shirani de Silva . . . 1061
  54.3.1 Alvaro de Carvalho & Leonor de la Torre . . . 1064
  54.3.2 Diego de Carvalho & Elvira de Toledo . . . 1064
  54.3.3 Antonio de Carvalho & Teresa de Mendoza . . . 1065
  54.3.4 Honorato de Carvalho & Maria de Silva . . . 1065
54.4 Concerning the Carvalho family in the Extremadura and Goa . . . 1065
54.5 The Ancestors of Maria de Silva and her Family Connection in Portuguese India . . . 1066
  54.5.1 Maria de Silva & Honorato de Carvalho . . . 1066
  54.5.2 Pere de Cantabria . . . 1068
  54.5.3 Fruela Pérez de Cantabria & Ozenda . . . 1068
  54.5.4 Bermudo I de Asturias & Uzenda Nunilona . . . 1068
  54.5.5 Ramiro I of Asturias & Urraca . . . 1068
  54.5.6 Ordoño I de Asturias & Nuña . . . 1068
  54.5.7 Alfonso III de Asturias & Jimena de Asturias . . . 1068
  54.5.8 Fruela II de Leon . . . 1069
  54.5.9 Anznar Fruela . . . 1069
  54.5.10 Ximeno Fruela . . . 1069
  54.5.11 Pelayo Pelaez . . . 1069
  54.5.12 Gutierre Pelaez, the Lord of Alderete y de Silva . . . 1069
  54.5.13 Pelayo Gutierrez de Silva . . . 1069
  54.5.14 Gomez Paez de Silva . . . 1069
  54.5.15 Pelayo Gomez de Silva & Maria Fernandes de Novoa . . . 1069
  54.5.16 Gomez Paez de Silva (II) & Maria Ruiz de Caldelas . . . 1069

    54.5.17 Martin Gomez de Silva & Teresa Garcia de Seabra 1069
    54.5.18 Aires Gomez de Silva & Urraca Tenorio 1070
    54.5.19 Alfonso Tenoria de Silva & Guiomar de Meneses 1070
    54.5.20 Don Juan (I) de Silva & Leonor de Acuña 1070
    54.5.21 Juan de Rivera y Silva 1071
    54.5.22 Fernando de Silva y Rivera & Maria de Zuñiga 1071
    54.5.23 Maria de Silva & Honorato de Carvalho 1072
    54.5.24 Juan Carvalho de Silva 1072
    54.5.25 The two sons of Juan Carvalho de Silva 1072
  54.6 Further evidence of the Carvalho family at Goa 1073
  54.7 Zameer Khan's Insights on Portuguese Burghers 1073
  54.8 Luso Indians and Evidence in Uduwara, Sri Lanka 1074
  54.9 Link with Goa in India 1078
    54.9.1 de Silva Governors of Goa 1078
    54.9.2 Other de Silvas in Goa 1078
    54.9.3 Other de Silvas in Sri Lanka 1081
  54.10 The Particular Connection between Shirani de Silva, Francisco de Almeida and Lorenzo de Almeida 1081
  54.11 Early Presence of de Silvas in Sri Lanka 1082

55 The Appearance of the Portuguese and the Establishment of the Portuguese Kingdom of Kotte 1085
  55.1 Introduction 1085
  55.2 The Rulers of Kotte and Successors of Interest 1085
    55.2.1 Dharma Parakramabahu IX of Kotte 1087
    55.2.2 Vijayabahu of Kotte 1087
    55.2.3 Bhuvanaikabahu VII of Kotte 1087
    55.2.4 Dom Joao Dharmapala Peria Bandara of Kotte 1088
    55.2.5 Mayadunne of Sitawaka 1088
    55.2.6 Tikiri Bandara or Rajasingha I of Sitawaka 1088
    55.2.7 Vimaladharmasuriya I of Kandy and Dom Felipe 1089
    55.2.8 Senarat of Kandy 1089
    55.2.9 Rajasinha II of Kandy 1090

56 Strategic Strongholds of Balana, Thumpana, and Deewalkanda 1091
  56.1 Introduction 1091
  56.2 Balana: A Strategic Outpost in the Alagalla Mountains 1091
    56.2.1 The Strategic Importance of Balana Fort 1091
    56.2.2 The Kadugannawa Pass: Gateway to the Kandyan Kingdom 1091
    56.2.3 Portuguese Incursions and Battles at Balana 1092
    56.2.4 The British Era and the Kadugannawa Pass 1092
  56.3 Thumpana: A Battlefield of Portuguese Conflict in Sri Lanka 1092
    56.3.1 Strategic Location of Thumpana 1092
    56.3.2 Portuguese Expansion and the Battle of Thumpana 1092
    56.3.3 The Dynamics of Warfare at Thumpana 1093
    56.3.4 Historical Impact and Legacy 1093
  56.4 Deewalkanda: The Rocky Stronghold of Uduwara and the Battles of Fernando Samara de Cunha y Rala (Samarakoon) 1093
    56.4.1 Strategic Importance of Deewalkanda 1093
    56.4.2 The Battles of Deewalkanda and the Role of Samarakoon 1093
    56.4.3 Guerrilla Warfare and Defensive Strategies 1093
    56.4.4 Historical Impact and Legacy 1093
  56.5 Conclusion 1093
  56.6 The Approach and Arrival of Portuguese until Establishment of the Portuguese Kingdom of Kotte 1094
    56.6.1 Explorations and Navigation that Paved the Road to Sri Lanka 1096
    56.6.2 The Blood-Relatives of de Silva who became involved in the Quest for India and Sri Lanka 1108
    56.6.3 The Arrival of the de Silva Family in Goa 1108
    56.6.4 The Arrival of the de Silva Family in Sri Lanka 1109
    56.6.5 The Portuguese Settling in Sri Lanka 1110
    56.6.6 The First Portuguese arrival in Sri Lanka in 1506 1110
    56.6.7 The First 'Feitoria' in Colombo 1111
    56.6.8 The First Troubles between the Portuguese and the Locals 1112
    56.6.9 The Construction of the First Fortress in Colombo in 1518 1112
    56.6.10 The Construction of a Stronger Fortress in Colombo in 1519 1113
    56.6.11 The Portuguese and their Involvements in the Kingdom of Kotte 1113
    56.6.12 The Dismantling of the Fortress in 1524 to Preserve the Peace with Kotte 1113
    56.6.13 The Weakened Colombo was under Attack by Muslims from 1525 onwards 1114
    56.6.14 Rescue of Kotte by the Portuguese from Goa in 1538 1114
    56.6.15 The Crown of Portugal steadily became the heir of the Throne of Kotte 1114
  56.7 About Samara de Cunha y Rala ('Samarakoon') 1115
  56.8 Portuguese Ceylon 1115

57 The Establishment of Uduwara in the Kingdom of Kotte by Antonio Carvalho de Silva 1117
57.1 Uduwara: Echoes of the Douro and the Kalu Ganga 1117
57.2 Uduwara: A Confluence of Cultures 1121
57.3 Honors, Hierarchies, and Social Dynamics in Sinhalese Society During the Kotte Period 1121
57.4 Military Campaigns and Political Intrigue: Portuguese Strategies in Kotte and Beyond 1124
57.5 King Dharmapala's Strategic Alliance and the Donation of Kotte to Portugal 1125
57.6 From Conquest to Control: Portuguese Expansion in Ceilao 1125
57.7 Conflict and Diplomacy: The Portuguese and the Kingdom of Kotte 1126
57.8 Dominion and Dissent: Dom Jerónimo de Azevedo's Governance in Sri Lanka 1126
57.9 From Invasion to Resistance: The Portuguese Campaigns in Sri Lanka 1127
57.10The Rise and Fall of Domingos Correa: Political Intrigue and Military Struggle in Late 16th Century Sri Lanka . . . 1127
57.11Dom Jerónimo de Azevedo's Governance: Exploitation, Rebellion, and Retreat 1128
57.12Pacification and Power: The Portuguese Military Strategy in Sri Lanka's Turbulent Era 1129
57.13Portuguese Ascendancy and the Restoration of Buddhism in Kotte 1129
57.14Conquest and Consolidation: Portuguese Fortifications and Battles in Kotte (1597-1600) 1129
57.15Betrayal and Fortification: The Tumultuous Decline of Portuguese Control in Sri Lanka 1130
57.16Administrative Corruption and Strategic Challenges: The Portuguese Rule in Ceilao (1594-1598) 1131
57.17The Formation and Impact of Portuguese Provinces in Sri Lanka (1597-1612) 1131
57.18The Fall of Kotte: Portuguese Consolidation and Local Resistance in 1597 1132
57.19Conflict, Alliance, and Strategic Dynamics in Early 17th Century Sri Lanka 1132
57.20Colonial Ambitions and Local Resistance: The Portuguese Influence in Early 17th Century Sri Lanka 1133
57.21Resistance and Retribution: The Seven Korales Uprising and Portuguese Struggles in Kotte 1133
57.22Colonial Encounters and Indigenous Resistance: Portuguese-Sinhalese Relations in the 16th Century 1134
57.23Transformations and Turmoil: The Portuguese Legacy in Sri Lanka 1134
57.24Turbulent Alliances and Power Struggles: Portuguese and Dutch Interactions in Early 17th Century Sri Lanka . . . 1135
57.25Strategic Fortifications and Military Campaigns: Portuguese Efforts to Consolidate Control in Kotte (1607-1613) . . 1138
57.26The Portuguese Influence on Sri Lankan Socio-Political Dynamics 1138
57.27Diplomacy and Conflict: The Struggle for Dominance in Sri Lanka (1610-1617) 1139
57.28The Struggle for Sovereignty: Portuguese Aggression and the Battle for Control (1638-1654) 1139
57.29The Transition of Power: From Portuguese to Dutch Dominance in Sri Lanka 1140
57.30Enduring Imprints: The Portuguese Legacy in Sri Lanka 1140

58 The Critical Voice 1143
58.1 Portuguese propaganda 1143
58.2 McGilvray on the Portuguese in Sri Lanka 1143

59 Encyclopedic Overview of the Caste Systems in India and Sri Lanka: Historical Context, Structure, and Contemporary Dynamics 1145
59.1 Introduction 1145
59.2 The Indian Caste System 1145
  59.2.1 Historical Origins 1145
  59.2.2 Varna System 1145
  59.2.3 Jati System 1145
  59.2.4 Social Mobility and Rigidity 1146
  59.2.5 Colonial and Post-Colonial Impact 1146
  59.2.6 Contemporary Caste Dynamics 1146
  59.2.7 Conclusion 1146
59.3 The Sri Lankan Caste System 1146
  59.3.1 Historical Context 1146
  59.3.2 Major Ethnic Groups and Caste Systems 1146
  59.3.3 Colonial and Post-Colonial Impact 1147
  59.3.4 Contemporary Dynamics 1147
  59.3.5 Conclusion 1147
59.4 Comparative Analysis of the Caste Systems in India and Sri Lanka 1147
  59.4.1 Historical Origins and Development 1147
  59.4.2 Structure and Hierarchy 1147
  59.4.3 Social Mobility and Rigidity 1148
  59.4.4 Cultural and Religious Influences 1148
  59.4.5 Colonial and Post-Colonial Policies 1148
  59.4.6 Contemporary Dynamics 1148
59.5 Overlaps and Differences 1149
  59.5.1 Overlaps 1149
  59.5.2 Differences 1149
59.6 Conclusion 1149

60 The Karava and Salagama Caste and the Origins of the Olupathage Family 1151
60.1 Introduction 1151
60.2 The House of the Heads 1151
60.3 The Sri Lankan Caste System 1152
60.4 The Karava and Salagama Castes 1152
  60.4.1 Historical Origins and Migration 1152
  60.4.2 Social and Economic Factors 1153
  60.4.3 Family and Caste Dynamics 1153
  60.4.4 Migration and Cultural Integration 1153

60.4.5 Salagama Caste and Economic Contributions . . . 1153
60.4.6 Colonial Policies and Social Structures . . . 1156
60.4.7 Economic Incentives and Social Mobility . . . 1156
60.4.8 Social Integration and Cultural Exchange . . . 1157
60.4.9 Ancestral Names of Karava . . . 1157
60.4.10 Karava and Salagama Customs . . . 1157

61 Uduwara: the Ancestral Village of Shirani de Silva in Sri Lanka 1159
61.1 Introduction . . . 1159
61.2 The Geographic Situation . . . 1159
61.3 A Brief Recapitulation of Local History and Construction of a Fortress at Uduwara by Antonio Carvalho de Silva . . 1160
61.4 An Archeological investigation of the Fortress of Uduwara . . . 1161
61.4.1 Similarities with Other Portuguese Colonial Mansions and Homes . . . 1161
61.4.2 Its Strategic Location along the Kalu Ganga River . . . 1161
61.4.3 Fortress Wall Remains and Access to Kalu Ganga River . . . 1161
61.4.4 The House of the Heads: a Polyvalent Building for Governance, Trade and a Gunpowder Factory . . . 1161
61.5 Style of the Sculptures on the House of the Heads . . . 1164
61.6 Other Remaining Constructions on the Site . . . 1164
61.6.1 The Gate at Uduwara to resemble Goa . . . 1167
61.6.2 Other Noteworthy items . . . 1167
61.7 Remaining Portuguese houses nearby . . . 1167

62 Richmond Castle 1179
62.1 Introduction . . . 1179
62.2 Appuhamilage Arthur de Silva Constructed It . . . 1179
62.3 The British Presence in India and Sri Lanka . . . 1181
62.3.1 The East India Company and Its Rule . . . 1181
62.3.2 Transition to Crown Rule . . . 1181
62.3.3 British Rule in Sri Lanka: A Separate Entity . . . 1181
62.3.4 Richmond Castle Expressed Harmony . . . 1182

63 More Literature on the Portuguese and Sri Lanka 1185

VOLUME V 1189

XIII Other ancestry lines I 1191

64 The Lesage Ancestry line 1193
64.1 Introduction . . . 1193
64.2 Joannes Lesage (LS02) & Petronella Magerman . . . 1193
64.2.1 Joannes Lesage (LS02) . . . 1193
64.2.2 Petronella Magerman . . . 1193
64.2.3 Their Marriage . . . 1193
64.2.4 Their Children . . . 1193
64.3 Jean Baptiste Joseph Lesage (LS03) & Jeanne Claire Van Oost . . . 1193
64.3.1 Jean Lesage . . . 1193
64.3.2 Jeanne Claire Van Oost . . . 1193
64.3.3 Their Marriage . . . 1193
64.4 Jean Lesage (LS04) & Barbe Thérèse Reynaert . . . 1193
64.4.1 Jean Lesage . . . 1197
64.4.2 Barbara Thérèse Reynaert . . . 1197
64.4.3 Their Marriage . . . 1197
64.5 Louis François Lesage (LS05) & Rosalie Dewanckele . . . 1197
64.5.1 Louis François Lesage . . . 1197
64.5.2 Rosalie Dewanckele . . . 1197
64.5.3 Their Marriage . . . 1200
64.5.4 Their Acquaintances and some Memorabilia . . . 1200
64.6 Emile Theophile Lesage & Eudoxie Romanie Lammens . . . 1202
64.6.1 Emile Theophile Lesage . . . 1202
64.6.2 Eudoxie Romanie Lammens . . . 1208
64.6.3 The Marriage of Emile Theophile Lesage and Eudoxie Romanie Lammens . . . 1213
64.6.4 Acquaintances of Emile Theophile Lesage and Eudoxie Romanie Lammens . . . 1221
64.7 The Offspring of Emile Lesage and Eudoxie Lammens . . . 1227
64.7.1 Cyrille Camille Lesage . . . 1227
64.7.2 Alida Lesage . . . 1251
64.7.3 Martha Lesage . . . 1254
64.7.4 Amandine Lesage . . . 1256
64.7.5 Gerard Medard Lesage . . . 1256
64.7.6 Hector Lesage . . . 1263
64.7.7 Maria Magdalena Lesage . . . 1265
64.7.8 Paul Lesage . . . 1273
64.7.9 Godelieve Angela Lesage . . . 1275

64.7.10 Irma Helena Lesage . . . 1275
64.7.11 Oscar Petrus Lesage . . . 1279
64.7.12 Daniel Abel Lesage . . . 1280
64.8 Irma Helena Lesage & Michel Achiel Renatus Declercq . . . 1296
64.8.1 Irma Helena Lesage . . . 1296
64.8.2 Michel Achiel Renatus Declercq (DC15) . . . 1296
64.8.3 Their Marriage . . . 1296
64.9 Maurice Alois Declercq (DC16) & Nelly Maria Vangheluwe . . . 1296
64.9.1 Maurice Declercq (DC16) . . . 1296
64.9.2 Nelly Maria Vangheluwe . . . 1296
64.10 Nico Felicien Declercq (DC17) & Shirani Olupathage de Silva . . . 1296
64.10.1 Nico Felicien Declercq (DC17) . . . 1296
64.10.2 Shirani Olupathage de Silva . . . 1297

65 Ancestry line de Patin 1299

65.1 Introduction . . . 1299
65.2 Raoul de Patin (DP01) & Guyotte de Hames . . . 1301
65.2.1 Raoul de Patin . . . 1301
65.2.2 Guyotte de Hames . . . 1301
65.2.3 Their descendants . . . 1301
65.2.4 Catherine de Patin & Jan van Dadizeele . . . 1301
65.2.5 Jan van Dadizele & Catherine Breydel . . . 1301
65.3 Richard de Patin (DP02) . . . 1301
65.3.1 Wautier de Patin or Gauthier de Patin (DP03b) . . . 1301
65.4 Pierre de Patin (DP03) & Mathilde . . . 1303
65.4.1 Pierre de Patin . . . 1303
65.4.2 Mathilde . . . 1303
65.4.3 Their Children . . . 1303
65.5 Martin or Wautier de Patin (DP04) & Attente Peronne . . . 1303
65.5.1 Wautier de Patin (DP05b) & Maria van der Gracht . . . 1303
65.5.2 Josine de Patin (DP05c) & Heylaert van Moorslede . . . 1304
65.6 Jean de Patin (DP05) & Jeanne van Lauwe de Lede . . . 1304
65.6.1 Jean de Patin . . . 1304
65.6.2 Jeanne van Lauwe de Lede . . . 1304
65.6.3 Jean de Patin (DP06c) & Willemina de Keyzer . . . 1308
65.6.4 Simon de Patin (DP06d) . . . 1308
65.7 Cornil de Patin (DP06) & N. Pype . . . 1308
65.7.1 Cornil de Patin . . . 1308
65.7.2 N. Pype . . . 1308
65.7.3 Their Children . . . 1308
65.8 Michel de Patin (DP07) & Proese Ambrosine vanden Berghe . . . 1309
65.9 Josse de Patin (DP08) & N. van de Casteele . . . 1309
65.10 Denis de Patin (DP09) & Katrien van Pamele . . . 1309
65.11 Pierre de Patin (DP10) & Catherine Bossette . . . 1309
65.11.1 Pierre de Patin (DP10) . . . 1309
65.11.2 Catherine Bossette . . . 1309
65.11.3 Their Children . . . 1309
65.12 Pierre de Patin (DP11) & Marie Douchy . . . 1310
65.12.1 Pierre de Patin (DP11) . . . 1310
65.12.2 Marie Douchy . . . 1310
65.12.3 Their Children . . . 1310
65.13 Marinus Vermeersch & Adrienne de Patin (DP12) . . . 1316
65.13.1 Adrienne de Patin . . . 1316
65.13.2 Marinus Vermeersch . . . 1316
65.14 Nathalis Vermeersch (DP12V01) & Marie Jeanne Dael . . . 1318
65.14.1 Nathalis Vermeersch . . . 1318
65.14.2 Marie Jeanne Dael . . . 1318
65.14.3 Their Marriage . . . 1318
65.15 Joseph Vermeersch (DP12V02) & Marie Anne Claire Pennet . . . 1318
65.15.1 Joseph Vermeersch . . . 1318
65.15.2 Marie Claire Pennet . . . 1318
65.15.3 Their Marriage . . . 1320
65.16 Marie Jeanne Claire Vermeersch (DP12V03) & Charles Ignace Dewanckele . . . 1320
65.16.1 Marie Jeanne Claire Vermeersch . . . 1320
65.16.2 Charles Ignace Dewanckele . . . 1320
65.16.3 Their Marriage . . . 1320
65.16.4 Their Offspring . . . 1320
65.17 Pierre Charles Dewanckele & Barbara Goddyn . . . 1321
65.17.1 Pierre Charles Dewanckele . . . 1321
65.17.2 Barbara Goddyn . . . 1321
65.17.3 Their Marriage . . . 1323
65.18 Rosalie Dewanckele & Louis François Lesage (LS05) . . . 1323
65.18.1 Rosalie Dewanckele . . . 1323

65.18.2 Louis François Lesage . . . 1323
65.18.3 Their Marriage . . . 1325
65.19 Emile Theophile Lesage & Eudoxie Romanie Lammens . . . 1325
65.19.1 Emile Theophile Lesage (LS05) . . . 1325
65.19.2 Eudoxie Romanie Lammens . . . 1325
65.19.3 Their Marriage . . . 1325
65.19.4 Their Children . . . 1325
65.20 Irma Helena Lesage (LS06) & Michel Achiel Renatus Declercq (DC15) . . . 1325
65.20.1 Irma Helena Lesage . . . 1328
65.20.2 Michel Achiel Renatus Declercq (DC15) . . . 1328
65.20.3 Their Marriage . . . 1328
65.21 Maurice Alois Declercq (DC16) & Nelly Maria Vangheluwe . . . 1328
65.21.1 Maurice Alois Declercq (DC16) . . . 1328
65.21.2 Nelly Maria Vangheluwe . . . 1328
65.22 Nico Felicien Declercq (DC17) & Shirani Olupathage de Silva . . . 1329
65.22.1 Nico Declercq (DC17) . . . 1329
65.22.2 Shirani de Silva . . . 1329

66 The Benoit Ancestry lines 1331
66.1 The Benoit Ancestry line , Declercq Branch . . . 1331
66.1.1 Introduction . . . 1331
66.1.2 Peter Benoit: The Life and Legacy of a Flemish Musical Pioneer . . . 1331
66.1.3 Gilles Benoit & ega Gilles Benoit . . . 1336
66.1.4 Olivier Benoit & Jane Waeye . . . 1336
66.1.5 Jean Benoit & Vandewalle . . . 1337
66.1.6 Olivier Benoit & Tack . . . 1337
66.1.7 Pierre Benoit & Jeanne Waelkens . . . 1337
66.1.8 Jean Benoit & Catheline Deschietere . . . 1337
66.1.9 Joos Benoit & Jeanne Debackere . . . 1338
66.1.10 Pierre Benoit & Josine Calmeyn . . . 1338
66.1.11 Judocus Benoit & Jeanne Vancaesele . . . 1338
66.1.12 Charles Benoit & Marie Lammertyn . . . 1338
66.1.13 Christiaen Benoit & Judoca Coopman . . . 1339
66.1.14 Livinus Desplenter & Barbara Benoit . . . 1339
66.1.15 Marie Magdalena Desplenter & Jean François Loncke . . . 1339
66.1.16 Thérèse Loncke & Leo Bernard Declercq (DC12) . . . 1339
66.1.17 Ivo Declercq (DC13) & Mathilde Van den Broucke . . . 1340
66.1.18 Ernest Constant Declercq (DC14) & Marie Elodie Devenyn . . . 1340
66.1.19 Michel Achiel Renatus Declercq (DC15) & Irma Helena Lesage . . . 1340
66.1.20 Maurice Alois Declercq (DC16) & Nelly Maria Vangheluwe . . . 1341
66.1.21 Nico Felicien Declercq (DC17) & Shirani Olupathage de Silva . . . 1341
66.2 The Benoit Ancestry line, Lesage Branch . . . 1341
66.2.1 Introduction . . . 1341
66.2.2 Gilles Benoit & ega Gilles Benoit . . . 1341
66.2.3 Olivier Benoit & Jane Waeye . . . 1342
66.2.4 Jean Benoit & Vandewalle . . . 1342
66.2.5 Antheunis Benoit & ega Antheunis Benoit . . . 1342
66.2.6 Jacques Benoit & ega Jacques Benoit . . . 1342
66.2.7 Jean Benoit & ega Jean Benoit . . . 1345
66.2.8 Jacques Benoit & ega Jacques Benoit . . . 1345
66.2.9 Jean Benoit & ega Jean Benoit . . . 1345
66.2.10 Livinus Benoit & Petronella . . . 1345
66.2.11 Livinus Benoit & Marie Duyck . . . 1346
66.2.12 Louis Benoit & Claire Legaet . . . 1346
66.2.13 Pierre Camerteyn & Marie Jeanne Benoit . . . 1346
66.2.14 Marie Jeanne Camerteyn & Pierre Dewanckele . . . 1346
66.2.15 Charles Ignace Dewanckele & Marie Jeanne Claire Vermeersch . . . 1346
66.2.16 Pierre Charles Dewanckele & Barbara Goddyn . . . 1347
66.2.17 Rosalie Dewanckele & Louis François Lesage . . . 1347
66.2.18 Emile Theophile Lesage & Eudoxie Romanie Lammens . . . 1347
66.2.19 Irma Helena Lesage & Michel Achiel Renatus Declercq (DC15) . . . 1348
66.2.20 Maurice Alois Declercq (DC16) & Nelly Maria Vangheluwe . . . 1348
66.2.21 Nico Felicien Declercq (DC17) & Shirani Olupathage de Silva . . . 1348

67 The Den Dauw Ancestry line 1351
67.1 Introduction . . . 1351
67.2 Judocus Den Dauw & Elisabeth Vinck . . . 1351
67.2.1 Judocus Den Dauw . . . 1351
67.2.2 Elisabeth Vinck . . . 1351
67.2.3 Their Marriage . . . 1351
67.3 Jean Den Dauw & Françoise Depraetere . . . 1351
67.3.1 Jean Den Dauw . . . 1351
67.3.2 Françoise Depraetere . . . 1351
67.3.3 Their Marriage . . . 1351

67.4 Pierre Joseph Den Dauw & Marie Thérèse Houttequiet 1353
67.4.1 Pierre Joseph Den Dauw 1353
67.4.2 Marie Thérèse Houttequiet 1353
67.4.3 Their Marriage 1353
67.5 Jean Baptiste Den Dauw & Colette Regine Vereecke 1353
67.5.1 Jean Baptiste Den Dauw 1353
67.5.2 Colette Regine Vereecke 1353
67.5.3 Their Marriage 1353
67.6 Jacques Joseph Den Dauw & Constance van Tieghem 1353
67.6.1 Jacques Joseph Den Dauw 1353
67.6.2 Marie Constance van Tieghem 1353
67.6.3 Their Marriage 1354
67.7 Charles Louis Den Dauw & Julie de Meurie 1354
67.7.1 Charles Louis Den Dauw 1354
67.7.2 Julie de Meurie 1354
67.7.3 Their Marriage 1354
67.7.4 Their Offspring 1354
67.7.5 Acquaintances 1356
67.8 Richard Den Dauw & Irma Clemence de Meire 1366
67.8.1 Richard Den Dauw 1366
67.8.2 Irma Clemence de Meire 1366
67.8.3 Their Marriage 1366
67.8.4 Their Offspring 1366
67.8.5 Some Acquaintances 1367
67.9 Alfred Den Dauw & Augusta Waelkens 1368
67.9.1 Alfred Den Dauw 1368
67.9.2 Augusta Waelkens 1368
67.9.3 Their Marriage 1370
67.9.4 Their Offspring 1374
67.9.5 Marc Waelkens, a Distant Blood-relative 1388
67.9.6 Ferdinand Waelkens 1389
67.9.7 Their Acquaintances 1389
67.10 Anna Den Dauw & René Vangheluwe 1389
67.10.1 Anna Den Dauw 1389
67.10.2 René Vangheluwe 1389
67.11 Nelly Maria Vangheluwe & Maurice Alois Declercq 1389
67.11.1 Nelly Maria Vangheluwe 1389
67.11.2 Maurice Alois Declercq 1390
67.12 Nico Felicien Declercq & Shirani Olupathage de Silva 1390
67.12.1 Nico Felicien Declercq 1390
67.12.2 Shirani Olupathage de Silva 1390

68 The 't Kint Ancestry line 1391
68.1 Introduction 1391
68.2 Catherine 't Kint & François Camerteyn 1391
68.2.1 Catherine 't Kint 1391
68.2.2 François Camerteyn 1391
68.3 Jean Camerteyn & Judoca Geldof 1391
68.3.1 Jean Camerteyn 1391
68.3.2 Judoca Geldof 1391
68.3.3 Their Marriage 1391
68.4 Pierre Camerteyn & Marie Jeanne Christine Benoit 1391
68.4.1 Pierre Camerteyn 1391
68.4.2 Marie Jeanne Christine Benoit 1391
68.4.3 Their Marriage 1391
68.5 Marie Jeanne Camerteyn & Pierre Dewanckele 1394
68.5.1 Marie Jeanne Camerteyn 1394
68.5.2 Pierre Dewanckele 1394
68.5.3 Their Marriage 1394
68.6 Charles Ignace Dewanckele & Marie Jeanne Claire Vermeersch 1394
68.6.1 Charles Ignace Dewanckele 1394
68.6.2 Marie Jeanne Claire Vermeersch 1394
68.6.3 Their Marriage 1394
68.7 Pierre Charles Dewanckele & Barbara Goddyn 1394
68.7.1 Pierre Charles Dewanckele 1394
68.7.2 Barbara Goddyn 1394
68.7.3 Their Marriage 1394
68.8 Rosalie Dewanckele & Louis François Lesage 1395
68.8.1 Rosalie Dewanckele 1395
68.8.2 Louis François Lesage 1395
68.8.3 Their Marriage 1395
68.9 Emile Theophile Lesage & Eudoxie Romanie Lammens 1395
68.9.1 Emile Theophile Lesage 1395

- 68.9.2 Eudoxie Romanie Lammens . . . 1395
- 68.9.3 Their Marriage . . . 1395
- 68.10 Irma Helena Lesage & Michel Achiel Renatus Declercq (DC15) . . . 1395
  - 68.10.1 Irma Helena Lesage . . . 1395
  - 68.10.2 Michel Achiel Renatus Declercq (DC15) . . . 1395
  - 68.10.3 Their Marriage . . . 1396
- 68.11 Maurice Alois Declercq (DC16) & Nelly Maria Vangheluwe . . . 1396
  - 68.11.1 Maurice Alois Declercq (DC16) . . . 1396
  - 68.11.2 Nelly Maria Vangheluwe . . . 1396
- 68.12 Nico Felicien Declercq (DC17) & Shirani Olupathage de Silva . . . 1396
  - 68.12.1 Nico Felicien Declercq (DC17) . . . 1396
  - 68.12.2 Shirani Olupathage de Silva . . . 1396

VOLUME VI 1397

XIV Other ancestry lines II 1399

69 The Surmont - de Croock Ancestry line 1401
- 69.1 Introduction . . . 1401
- 69.2 François Surmont & Joanna Veys . . . 1401
- 69.3 Judocus Surmont & Catharina Notebaert . . . 1402
  - 69.3.1 Judocus Surmont . . . 1402
  - 69.3.2 Catharina Notebaert . . . 1402
  - 69.3.3 Their Marriage . . . 1402
- 69.4 Louis Joseph Surmont & Petronilla Verhaeghen . . . 1402
  - 69.4.1 Joseph Louis Surmont . . . 1402
  - 69.4.2 Petronilla Verhaeghen . . . 1402
  - 69.4.3 Their Marriage . . . 1402
- 69.5 Pierre Amand Surmont & Marie-Jeanne De Meulemeester . . . 1402
  - 69.5.1 Pierre Amand Surmont . . . 1402
  - 69.5.2 Marie-Anne De Meulemeester . . . 1402
  - 69.5.3 Their Marriage . . . 1406
- 69.6 Pierre François Surmont & Marie Thérèse de Croock . . . 1406
  - 69.6.1 Pierre François Surmont . . . 1406
  - 69.6.2 Marie Thérèse de Croock . . . 1406
  - 69.6.3 Their Marriage . . . 1410
- 69.7 Jean Baptiste Surmont & Susanne d' Huyvetter . . . 1413
  - 69.7.1 Jean Baptiste Surmont . . . 1413
  - 69.7.2 Susanne d' Huyvetter . . . 1413
  - 69.7.3 Their Marriage . . . 1413
- 69.8 Marie Nathalie Surmont & V. François Vangheluwe . . . 1420
  - 69.8.1 Marie Nathalie Surmont . . . 1420
  - 69.8.2 V. François Vangheluwe . . . 1420
  - 69.8.3 Marriage and Family . . . 1423
- 69.9 Gerard Vangheluwe & Zozyma Zulma Verhaeghe . . . 1429
  - 69.9.1 Gerard Vangheluwe . . . 1429
  - 69.9.2 Zozyma Zulma Verhaeghe . . . 1440
  - 69.9.3 Their Offspring . . . 1440
- 69.10 René Vangheluwe & Anna Den Dauw . . . 1440
  - 69.10.1 René Vangheluwe . . . 1440
  - 69.10.2 Anna Den Dauw . . . 1440
- 69.11 Pierre Frans Vangheluwe & Jeanette Leona Verbrugghe . . . 1440
  - 69.11.1 Pierre Frans Vangheluwe . . . 1440
  - 69.11.2 Jeanette Leona Verbrugghe . . . 1445
- 69.12 Maurice Alois Declercq & Nelly Maria Vangheluwe . . . 1446
  - 69.12.1 Maurice Alois Declercq . . . 1446
  - 69.12.2 Nelly Maria Vangheluwe . . . 1446
- 69.13 Nico Felicien Declercq & Shirani Olupathage de Silva . . . 1446
  - 69.13.1 Nico Felicien Declercq . . . 1446
  - 69.13.2 Shirani Olupathage de Silva . . . 1446

70 The Side-Branch of de Patin de Langemarck 1447
- 70.1 Introduction . . . 1447
- 70.2 Philippe de Patin . . . 1447
  - 70.2.1 Philippe de Patin . . . 1447
  - 70.2.2 Monique de Patin . . . 1447
  - 70.2.3 Marie Catherine de Patin . . . 1447
  - 70.2.4 Anne de Patin . . . 1449
  - 70.2.5 Philippine de Patin . . . 1449
  - 70.2.6 Josephine de Patin . . . 1449
  - 70.2.7 Jean de Patin . . . 1449
- 70.3 Pierre de Patin & Catherine-Thérèse de Smet . . . 1449

70.3.1 Charles Joseph de Patin & Marie-Jacqueline de Voldere . . . 1452
70.3.2 Caroline Joséphine de Patin . . . 1454
70.4 Joseph de Patin & Catherine Thérèse Françoise de Ghelcke . . . 1454
70.4.1 Marie Thérèse Charlotte de Patin . . . 1459
70.4.2 Charles Eugène Joseph de Patin . . . 1459
70.4.3 Géneviève Antoinette Constance de Patin . . . 1459
70.4.4 Thérèse-Joséphine de Patin . . . 1459
70.4.5 Joseph Jacques Benoît de Patin & Susanne-Charlotte Letten . . . 1459
70.5 Charles Joseph François de Patin & Lucie Fidèle Thérèse de Hem . . . 1459
70.5.1 Aline Caroline Joséphine de Patin . . . 1464
70.5.2 Jules Philippe de Patin . . . 1464
70.5.3 Hélène Emélie Joséphine de Patin . . . 1464
70.6 Charles Philippe de Patin & Thérèse Waltrude du Bois . . . 1464
70.6.1 Introduction . . . 1464
70.6.2 Parents and Ancestors . . . 1467
70.6.3 Early Years and Education . . . 1470
70.6.4 Career in Austrian Belgium During the Reign of Charles VI and Before Becoming a Viscount . . . 1471
70.6.5 Career as a Viscount in Austrian Belgium during the reign of Charles VI . . . 1477
70.6.6 Career in Austrian Belgium during the reign of Maria Theresa . . . 1477
70.6.7 Official Reports . . . 1479
70.6.8 Handwritings Lost During the Destruction of Langemark in WWI . . . 1479
70.6.9 Preserved Handwritings . . . 1480
70.6.10 Mare Liberum . . . 1480
70.6.11 Poem in Honor of Charles Philippe de Patin . . . 1480
70.6.12 Additional works on Charles Philippe de Patin . . . 1481
70.6.13 Offspring of Charles Philippe de Patin and Thérèse du Bois . . . 1481
70.6.14 Other Offspring of Charles Philippe de Patin . . . 1483
70.7 François Guillaume de Patin de Langemarck & Joanna Antoinette Monica de Grou . . . 1483
70.7.1 Jean Baptiste Guillaume de Patin . . . 1483
70.7.2 Caroline de Patin . . . 1489
70.8 Joseph Charles de Patin . . . 1489
70.8.1 Joseph Charles Jean Antoine de Patin . . . 1489
70.9 Joseph Felix Marie Charles François de Patin de Langemarck . . . 1503
70.10 Charles Philippe Jean Marie Joseph de Patin de Langemarck . . . 1503

71 The Ardan-Rouye-Lammens-Decaestecker Ancestry line 1531
71.1 Introduction . . . 1531
71.2 Jean François Ardan (ARLD01) & Marie Josephe Rouye . . . 1531
71.2.1 Jean François Harden . . . 1531
71.2.2 Marie Josephe Rouye . . . 1534
71.2.3 Marriage and offspring . . . 1534
71.3 Charles Caestecker & Joana Francisca Ardan (ARLD02) . . . 1534
71.3.1 Charles Caestecker . . . 1534
71.3.2 Jeanne Françoise Ardan (ARLD02) . . . 1534
71.3.3 Marriage and offspring . . . 1534
71.4 Ivo Benedictus Pareyn & Anna Marie Françoise Caestecker (ARLD03) . . . 1534
71.4.1 Ivo Benedictus François Pareyn . . . 1534
71.4.2 Anne Marie Françoise Caestecker (ARLD03) . . . 1534
71.4.3 Marriage and Offspring . . . 1535
71.5 Charles Benoit Pareyn (ARLD04) & Anne Thérèse Devisschere . . . 1535
71.5.1 Charles Benoit Pareyn (ARLD04) . . . 1535
71.5.2 Anne Thérèse Devisschere . . . 1535
71.5.3 Marriage and Offspring . . . 1535
71.6 Joseph Leopold Lammens & Anne Thérèse Pareyn (ARLD05) . . . 1537
71.6.1 Joseph Leopold Lammens . . . 1537
71.6.2 Anne Thérèse Pareyn (ARLD05) . . . 1537
71.6.3 Marriage and Offspring . . . 1537
71.6.4 Relatives . . . 1537
71.6.5 Charles Lammens, a chasseur à pied with Hendrik Conscience . . . 1539
71.7 Clemens Lammens (ARLD06) & Natalia Juliana Decaestecker (C02) . . . 1545
71.7.1 Clemens Lammens (ARLD06) . . . 1545
71.7.2 Natalia Juliana Decaestecker (C02) . . . 1547
71.7.3 Pierre Joseph Decaestecker (C01), the Father of Natalia Juliana Decaestecker . . . 1547
71.7.4 Marriage and Offspring . . . 1559
71.7.5 Their Acquaintances . . . 1559
71.8 Eudoxie Romanie Lammens (ARLD07-C03) & Emile Theophile Lesage . . . 1559
71.8.1 Eudoxie Romanie Lammens . . . 1559
71.8.2 Emile Theophile Lesage . . . 1560
71.9 Irma Helena Lesage & Michel Achiel Renatus Declercq (DC15) . . . 1560
71.9.1 Michel Achiel Renatus Declercq (DC15) . . . 1560
71.9.2 Irma Helena Lesage . . . 1560
71.10 Maurice Alois Declercq (DC16) & Nelly Maria Vangheluwe . . . 1560
71.10.1 Maurice Alois Declercq (DC16) . . . 1560

71.10.2 Nelly Maria Vangheluwe . . . 1560
71.11 Nico Felicien Declercq (DC17) & Shirani O. de Silva . . . 1560
71.11.1 Shirani Olupathage de Silva . . . 1561

72 The Maternal (mt-DNA) Ancestry Line of N F Declercq 1563
72.1 Introduction . . . 1563
72.2 Mitochondrial DNA Analysis . . . 1563
72.3 Autosomal DNA analysis . . . 1563
72.4 Genealogy . . . 1564
72.4.1 The Hypothesis of Margareth Driscoll, the Wife of Peter McParland . . . 1564
72.4.2 Petronilla McParland, the Wife of Gabrielus Depraetere . . . 1564
72.4.3 Maria Depraetere, the Wife of Antonius Isebaert . . . 1564
72.4.4 Maria Isebaert, the Wife of Petrus Soete . . . 1568
72.4.5 Joanna Soete, the Wife of Antonius Vandriesche . . . 1568
72.4.6 Isabelle Fernandine Vandriesche, the Wife of Pierre Joseph Buysschaert . . . 1568
72.4.7 Barbara Theresa Buysschaert, the Wife of Pierre Joseph Houttequiet . . . 1569
72.4.8 Amelie Francisca Houttequiet, the Wife of Frederic Verbeke . . . 1569
72.4.9 Sidonie Verbeke, the Wife of Camillus Waelkens . . . 1571
72.4.10 Augusta Emma Waelkens, the Wife of Alfred Den Dauw . . . 1571
72.4.11 Anna Den Dauw, the Wife of René Vangheluwe . . . 1571
72.4.12 Nelly Maria Vangheluwe, the Wife of Maurice Alois Declercq . . . 1577

VOLUME VII 1579

XV Genetics 1581

73 DNA Analysis of N. F. Declercq 1583
73.1 Introduction . . . 1583
73.2 Y-DNA and mt-DNA . . . 1583
73.3 Nearest Y-DNA Haplogroup Matches . . . 1586
73.4 DNA and Family Names in Catalonia, with Strong Evidence of Tarragona as the Ancient Origin . . . 1586
73.5 Genetic Connection with the Counts of Barcelona and the Royal House of Aragon . . . 1586
73.6 Y-STR Closest Connections within the R-M269 Y-DNA-Haplogroup (FamilyTreeDNA®) . . . 1587
73.6.1 Y-12 Tested Samples . . . 1587
73.6.2 Y-25 Tested Samples . . . 1587
73.6.3 Y-37 Tested Samples . . . 1587
73.6.4 Y-67 Tested Samples . . . 1587
73.6.5 Y-111 Tested Samples . . . 1587
73.6.6 R Haplogroup Samples . . . 1588
73.7 Autosomal DNA (FamilyTreeDNA®) - The Spanish connection . . . 1588
73.8 Autosomal DNA (FamilyTreeDNA®) - The North Sea basin and the Flemish connection . . . 1590
73.9 Autosomal DNA (FamilyTreeDNA®) - The Irish connection . . . 1590
73.10 GEDmatch® Results . . . 1590
73.10.1 Population matches . . . 1590
73.10.2 Spanish Matches . . . 1591
73.10.3 Detailed Autosomal Analysis . . . 1592
73.10.4 A Focus on the Regions . . . 1594
73.11 Genetic Analysis based on MyTrueAncestry® . . . 1597
73.12 Genetic Analysis based on MyHeritage® . . . 1600
73.12.1 Spanish Rooted . . . 1600
73.12.2 Spanish Residents . . . 1600
73.12.3 Portuguese Residents . . . 1601
73.12.4 Other . . . 1601
73.13 Genetic Analysis based on Geneanet® . . . 1602
73.13.1 Spanish Links . . . 1602
73.13.2 Links with Brittany . . . 1602
73.13.3 Other . . . 1602
73.14 Comparison with Ancient Skeletons by GEDmatch® . . . 1602
73.14.1 Alps (13700 year old skeletons) . . . 1602
73.14.2 Byzantine area (8300-9700 year old skeletons) . . . 1603
73.14.3 Iberia (4700-7200 year old skeletons) . . . 1603
73.14.4 Celtic British Isles (4000-5200-year-old skeletons) . . . 1603
73.14.5 Germanic-Hungarian (3100-7000-year-old skeletons) . . . 1603
73.14.6 Roman and Anglo Saxon British Isles (1500-1800-year-old skeletons) . . . 1604

74 DNA de Silva 1605
74.1 Introduction . . . 1605
74.2 Iberia and the Ancestors Before Genealogical Records: The Byzantine Migration Path 224-1300 . . . 1605
74.3 Mixed Byzantine and Iberian Genes . . . 1606
74.4 An Interesting Observation . . . 1608
74.5 DNA analysis by FamilyTreeDNA® . . . 1608
74.6 The Iberian Byzantine Haplogroup . . . 1610

74.7 YFullⓇ DNA analysis 1611
74.8 The Y-STR values indicate Iberian Roots from a Byzantine Origin 1611
74.9 The Autosomal DNA Analysis Reveals Sri Lankan, Indian, Byzantine and Iberian Origins (FamilyTreeDNAⓇ) 1612
74.10 The mt-DNA Haplogroup reveals the Kuru Kingdom as the Maternal-line Origin (FamilyTreeDNAⓇ) 1614
74.11 Old DNA analysis by ConsanguinitasⓇ Agrees with New Results 1614
74.12 GEDmatchⓇ Results for De Silva 1615
  74.12.1 Population Matches with de Silva (GEDmatchⓇ) 1615
  74.12.2 Individual Matches with de Silva (GEDmatchⓇ) 1616
  74.12.3 Match between de Silva and Declercq 1618
  74.12.4 Old Ancestry Matches between de Silva and de Rivera 1618
  74.12.5 De Silva - Carvalho - de Almeida DNA (GEDmatchⓇ) 1618
74.13 Genetic Analysis based on MyTrueAncestryⓇ 1619
74.14 GeneanetⓇ DNA Results for De Silva 1621
74.15 MyHeritageⓇ DNA Results for De Silva 1624
  74.15.1 Portugal 1624
  74.15.2 Far-East Portuguese Settlements 1624
74.16 Comparison with ancient Skeletons 1624
  74.16.1 Byzantine and Georgia (8300-9700 year old skeletons; weights 1-31) 1628
  74.16.2 Ireland (3900-5200 year old skeletons; weights 1-30) 1628
  74.16.3 Switzerland (13700 year old skeletons; weight 16) 1628
  74.16.4 England (1450-1800 year old skeletons); weights 2-11) 1630
  74.16.5 Iberia (5800-7200 year old skeletons; weights 2-9) 1630
  74.16.6 Germany (4200-9100 year old skeletons; weights 1-9) 1630
  74.16.7 Russia (2300-7300 year old skeletons) (weights 1-3) 1630
  74.16.8 Sweden (5700-7700 year old skeletons; weights 1-2) 1630
  74.16.9 Hungary (4200-4900 year old skeletons; weight 1) 1630

VOLUME VIII 1631

XVI Appendix 1633

75 Faucon's Study of the Onomastics of Du Guesclin 1635

76 The Merovingian Ancestry of Guyotte de Hames 1673
76.1 Introduction 1673
76.2 DNA and Genealogy 1673

77 Gerard Verbrugghe & Maria Vandenabeele 1683
77.1 Introduction 1683
77.2 The French Military Adventure during WWII 1683
  77.2.1 The Train Journey into the Unknown 1683
  77.2.2 The journey on foot and the near-death experiences 1688
  77.2.3 The Border Crossing between Vichy-France and German-France and the Return Home. 1690
77.3 Their life in Photos 1690

78 Genealogy Reports 1691
78.1 Introduction 1691
78.2 The Author's Kinship Report 1691
78.3 The Author's Ahnentafel Report 1877
78.4 Persons in the Author's Ancestry Tree 1911
78.5 Events in the Author's Ancestry Tree 1959

79 The 1661 Report by Francesc de Pedrolo 1979

80 The Author's Academic Ancestry and Curriculum 1995
80.1 Short Biography - 2024 1997

XVII Acknowlegements 2005

XVIII Final Contemplation 2013

VOLUME I

Part I

Foreword

Reyst heel de wereld door en soeckt: waer dat ghij meught
u Loopen oock; vindt ghij die wel thuys wilt Loopen soo met minne al wisselt ghij van Locht. Ghij houdt u eyghen zinne Leert 1686

Figure 6: From the files of notary Passchier Pissens at Vilvoorde, between records 6 and 7 September 1687. The transcription is 'Reyst heel de wereld door en soeckt: waer dat ghij meught u Loopen oock; vindt ghij die wel thuys wilt Loopen soo met minne, al wisselt ghij van Locht. Ghij houdt u eyghen zinne Leert. 1686' . It implies that, despite an exhaustive search across the globe, true happiness can only be discovered within the confines of one's own home. Furthermore, regardless of one's geographical relocations, the essence of one's identity remains fundamentally unchanged. This notion resonates with the philosophical idea that contentment and self-identity are intrinsically tied to our inner being rather than external circumstances.1686. In modern Dutch: 'Waar je ook zoekt, het geluk vind je thuis; en zelfs als je verhuist, je blijft altijd wie je bent'

0.1 A Reflection on The Dichotomy Between the First and Second Editions

Within the realm of genealogy, the author frequently encounters individuals who seek not only to uncover historical truths but also to attain recognition for their findings. These individuals often become disheartened when third parties appropriate their research without proper attribution. However, the author's unwavering dedication to the pursuit of truth, without any aspirations for personal acclaim, sets them apart. As both an author and a descendant of the individuals whose histories are explored, the author recognizes that they do not own or seek to profit from their ancestors' data. Hence, this second edition remains accessible online, free of charge, and is exclusively available in printed form at the production cost.

In addition, genealogists frequently grapple with apprehension when contemplating the publication of their research due to the inherent uncertainty that pervades this field. They are acutely aware of the tenuousness of their conclusions, often stemming from incomplete or ambiguous historical records. This fear of potential errors and the prospect of encountering critiques from peers can deter many from sharing their findings.

However, the author approaches genealogy from a scientific standpoint, using a methodological approach that draws conclusions based on the available data. They acknowledge that their findings may require revision as additional data surfaces. As a scientist, the author understands the necessity of publishing conclusions, inviting scrutiny and critique, as this crucible of inquiry is an indispensable part of the scientific process.

The primary impetus behind the release of the initial edition of the author's book in late 2021, even before thorough proofreading, stemmed from their commitment to this scientific ethos. The first edition contained some audacious assumptions and conclusions, subsequently met with praise and criticism.

Other genealogists incorporated many of the author's findings into their work. For instance, Miguel Royano Cabrera, in his 2023 publication "La comunidad mercantil de la corona de Aragón en la Baja Andalucía (1516-1556)," cited the author's research to assert that Galcerán Desclergue hailed from their family in Barcelona and Montblanc. Miguel Royano Cabrera's 2023 article also offered supplementary insights into Galceran Desclergue. It prompted a reevaluation of the author's research, alongside data from their first book, concerning Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio, who married Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés.

While praise is undoubtedly welcome, it is often through criticism that deeper insights are gained. An illustrative example pertains to the challenging reception of the author's assertion that Antoni Desclergue (DC06), a Spaniard, played a role in establishing a chapel in Deerlijk in 1639. In response to this claim, the author encountered unsportsmanlike criticism in early 2023, disregarding multiple supporting indications and the scientific experiments conducted within the chapel. Some critiques even took a derogatory tone towards Antoni Desclergue, who happens to be the author's ancestor. Nevertheless, the author has extended forgiveness to those individuals, recognizing the significance of their roles as local historians, albeit without extensive academic training. These critics need to appreciate the limitations of their insights and acknowledge that their findings should instead be placed within the broader context and traditions understood more comprehensively by academic historians and professional genealogists specializing in the Spanish empire. The Spanish art historians and medievalists the author has engaged in extensive discussions are better equipped to navigate the nuances of interpreting ancient documents. Furthermore, naming conventions and traditions have evolved since the 1600s, adding complexity to genealogical research.

It is worth noting that the criticism, though at times challenging, served as a catalyst for the author's deeper exploration and yielded additional evidence, often without the critics' awareness. The author's resilience in the face of adversity, turning stones thrown at them into building blocks that fortified their work, is a testament to their commitment to the truth.

The published first edition also facilitated meaningful connections with experienced colleagues who offered valuable insights and aided in the rectification of errors in the manuscript.

The author is particularly indebted to Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal for his numerous discussions and constructive contributions. The author's consistent prioritization of humility and setting aside ego to accept criticism is a testament to their respect for the potential contributions of others in uncovering the truth about their ancestors.

Over the years, the author continued to amass evidence and meticulously refined the book, resulting in this second edition surpassing its predecessor in completeness, accuracy, and illustration. To enhance the reader's experience, the author transitioned from a 'double-column' to a 'single-column' text format and included many illustrations. The expanded content necessitated the book's presentation as multiple volumes rather than a single volume.

The author anticipates a third edition in the coming years, should time and energy permit. This prospective edition could focus on data from the past three centuries, including details about subsequent generations' professional pursuits and assets. The author will exercise patience to approach this endeavor efficiently until a more extensive corpus of notarial deeds becomes accessible online.

0.2 About this Manuscript's First Edition, 2021

The genesis of this book can be traced back to an insatiable curiosity that has spanned many years. While genealogy is often categorized as a mere pastime, for the author, it transcends that definition, becoming an ardent quest for truth and a profound understanding of our reality—a way of life in its own right. This relentless pursuit continued until insight was attained, allowing space for engagement in other leisurely pursuits.

Figure 7: The author. The picture was taken at the Travellers Club, 25 Av. des Champs-Élysées, Paris, France, in 2016.

The author's fervent exploration into the authenticity of the past, unraveling the connections between diverse ancestral lineages culminating in the author's existence, was profoundly ignited with the arrival of his children. The knowledge of one's forebears is a vital legacy to bequeath, for it imparts a sense of identity and belonging. Just as magnificent trees draw their sustenance from deep roots, this book aspires to contribute to nurturing remarkable individuals.

However, knowledge of one's lineage is but a preliminary step. In life's journey, one must diligently labor to fulfill one's latent potential. The growth of a tree into magnificence demands years of nurturing and development. Therefore, it is paramount to retain a sense of humility, recognizing that, regardless of the path's uniqueness, the path ahead remains consistently steep and challenging.

The realization of this book necessitated the temporary set-aside of cherished pastimes and other personal activities dear to the author's heart. It was a necessary sacrifice to complete this monumental work. Through this endeavor, the author aspires to provide his children and the generations that follow with invaluable support in their quest for self-discovery. The time they will engage with this work will be contingent upon their circumstances and interests. Yet, whether in youth or old age, its worth will be genuinely appreciated one day.

The author extends a warm welcome to all readers embarking on this extensive voyage through time. It is crucial to remember that, at its core, this book is a narrative of human lives. Every ancestor, irrespective of their station, is of equal significance, for the absence of even one among them would render our existence impossible.

Genealogy often offers a seemingly limited perspective, focusing on birth, marriage, procreation, and death, primarily due to resource constraints when reconstructing their lives. It is, however, incumbent upon us to acknowledge that each individual within these pages has traversed a unique path—a life marked by moments of happiness and misfortune, achievements and setbacks, joys and sorrows in both somber and exultant epochs of human history.

0.3 A few words about the author

The author's professional achievements are summarized in Chapter 80, at the end of this book. He is married with three children, born between 1999 and 2011.

His roots are primarily Belgian, from the Flemish region, with a paternal bloodline originating in Spain, mainly in the Catalonia region, with ancient roots passing by France's Brittany region and Occitania. His wife's roots are Sri Lankan, with partial origins in Goa in India and Iberia.

The author is convinced that profiting from the narratives of ancestors who embarked on their eternal journey long ago would be ethically unsuitable. These ancestral life stories are inherently theirs, and any form of acknowledgment or tribute we can offer is rooted solely in honoring their memory.

0.4 The Author's Academic Background

This work is neither sponsored nor patentable and contains no material subject to export control. It draws upon openly available knowledge, primarily within the public domain. Consequently, the contents are made freely available, although the manuscript is protected by copyright and author rights. The research was conducted in the author's free time, predominantly during weekends and late evenings, as an engaging pursuit following rigorous professional duties in science.

The author is a full professor of mechanical engineering, tenured at the Georgia Institute of Technology, and has an academic background in engineering physics, general physics, and astrophysics. His education began in Belgium, where he received a broad foundational education, including history. This formal education was supplemented by years of self-directed learning, which continues today. His master's thesis in astrophysics at the Catholic University of Leuven incorporated historical analysis. This trend persisted throughout his PhD at Ghent University, where he investigated ultrasonics for nondestructive testing of fiber-reinforced composite materials and explored archaeo-acoustics. He resolved the acoustic phenomena associated with the El Castillo pyramid's staircase at Chichen Itza in Mexico. Later, at Georgia Tech, he combined his interest in Greek history with the Theater of Epidaurus's acoustics, elucidating the seating arrangement's role in its exemplary acoustics.

The author delved into European history as a hobbyist, particularly his family's genealogy. This personal project led him to integrate scientific methods, such as ultraviolet fluorescence and infrared thermography, revealing signatures of his ancestor Antoni Desclergue (DC06) on art from around 1639 AD, detailed in Chapter 49. His interdisciplinary interests span art, religion, history, philosophy, and science, which he chose to share in this publication. The manuscript aims to benefit scientists, students, friends, family, and anyone interested in these topics while also expressing gratitude towards his outstanding students, who are always a source of a positive mindset.

The ideals of the Georgia Institute of Technology and the United Nations align with the scope of this book. Sustainability begins with appreciating both our present and our history. We must also value our historical, cultural, and intellectual diversity to safeguard our planet. Georgia Tech's commitment to creating a global community of well-rounded scientists and engineers is reflected in its technical education and international programs integrating engineering with culture, language, history, and geography.

The author's students frequently appreciate historical anecdotes shared during classes on acoustics, thermodynamics, fluid mechanics, signal analysis, and more. This book, therefore, offers scientific content and micro-historical narratives about the author's ancestors, which readers can use to gain a broader historical perspective.

Few scholars work simultaneously on science as a profession and history as a hobby, and even fewer combine both. An exception is Prof. José Sánchez Real, a chemist turned archaeologist whose work the author discovered in 2020. This affirms that he is not alone in this interdisciplinary endeavor.

Publishing this work aligns with Georgia Tech's 2040 goals for deliberate innovation and lifetime education, including Whole-Person Education, A Distributed Worldwide Presence, and Bridging Organizational Silos. The content also supports Georgia Tech's core values, such as celebrating an inclusive, diverse community and culture and its commitment to lifelong education and a global presence. This interdisciplinary work is a testament to the whole person education qualities identified by Georgia Tech, including critical thinking, reasoning, interpretation, integrity, diversity appreciation, intellectual curiosity, continuous learning, cultural appreciation, self-direction, communication, citizenship, collaboration, and teamwork.

Regarding Georgia Tech's Strategic Plan 2020-2030, this multidisciplinary work aligns with the Impact Amplification section, particularly in integrating STEM disciplines with the arts, humanities, and social sciences and strengthening curricula to support the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals. It also fits within the Global Connection strategy, aiming to foster worldwide collaboration and build a global learning network, preparing students to be cross-culturally competent and globally minded leaders.

This book is not a conventional textbook but a unique amalgamation of insights from diverse disciplines. It attempts to provide a comprehensive history of the Desclergues of Montblanc and the de Silva family of Uduwara in Sri Lanka, combining engineering, paleography, genealogy, history, metallurgy, agriculture, textiles, acoustics, optics, thermodynamics, military history, astronomy, chemistry, archival research, literature, colonialism, genetics, medicine, and various languages, among others. The multidisciplinary approach enriches the narrative, offering a holistic understanding of history and its intersections with science and engineering.

Figure 8: The author's investigation of the 'Estado da India' and the 'V.O.C.' presence in Sri Lanka, a hobby which has accompanied his weekend evenings for many years, actually started in 1997. Three images are shown, taken at Galle (Sri Lanka) in 1997 and 2007, and Goa (India) in 2019. The V.O.C. tombstones in Galle are found in the Dutch Reformed Church, established in 1755 (Nederlandse Hervormde Kerk, Galle). (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Part II

Research Fundamentals and Synopsis: Methods and Major Discoveries

Chapter 1

Boudewijn I van Vlaanderen & Judith van West-Francië

Waar en wanneer begint een boek over familiegeschiedenis? Misschien is het, gezien de Engelse taal van dit boek, gepast om de lezer een voorwoord in het Nederlands te bieden, de moedertaal van de auteur.[1]

Dit boek richt zich op de mannelijke lijn omdat deze onze familienaam en genetische haplogroep op het Y-chromosoom doorgeeft. Er werd ook geprobeerd de vrouwelijke lijn te traceren, aangezien mitochondriaal DNA die lijn volgt. Deze zoektocht strekt zich uit tot het begin van de 17e eeuw, met aanwijzingen van een mogelijke migratie uit Ierland rond 1600, wellicht als soldaten in het Spaanse leger. Ditzelfde leger bracht onze mannelijke familielijn vanuit Catalonië naar Vlaanderen. De geschiedenis van deze voorouders in Montblanc, nabij Tarragona, wordt in dit boek uitvoerig besproken.

De auteur wijst de aandachtige lezer erop dat de meeste van onze voorouders diepgeworteld waren in Vlaanderen, in ons mooie België. Na het lezen van dit boek zal het de lezer niet verbazen dat Gabrielle en André Demedt's kind thuis waren bij de Declercqs, waar zij cultuur en inspiratie opdeden voor sommige van hun werken. Stijn Streuvels, Edward Vermeulen en Hugo Verriest waren ook geen vreemden in het huishouden van de Declercqs. Onze Declercqs stammen af van de samensmelting van de Kortrijkse notarissenfamilie Declercq en de familie Desclergue uit Montblanc. Het Spaanse leger bracht niet alleen Carlos Coloma de Saa naar Harelbeke en Kortrijk, maar ook Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés, onze voorouder, die in 1604 het leven liet bij het ontzetten van Oostende van bezetting door protestantse Nederlanders en Engelsen. Harelbeke had destijds meer prestige dan nu, zoals blijkt uit Spaanse literatuur uit de 1500s, die de stad vanwege haar historische belang niet onbenoemd laat.

Wanneer men Harelbeke te berde brengt, denkt men aan de potentiële voorouders van de eerste Graaf van Vlaanderen, Boudewijn I, die als men oude kronieken mag geloven, de naam 'Van Harelbeke' droegen.

Deze eerste graaf is onze voorouder. Het was het paar Boudewijn I en Judith van West-Francië, getoond in Figuur 1.1, die de oorsprong vormden van het Graafschap Vlaanderen. Hen tot onze voorouders rekenen, 34 generaties terug (zie Hoofdstuk 76), verankert dit boek in de woelige wateren van onze regio en stelt ons in staat vele expedities te ondernemen doorheen de hoofdstukken van dit boek, naar Spanje, Occitanië, Bretagne, Amerika en Azië.

Harelbeke, toen de Oude Leie er nog stroomde en er nog geen sluis was gebouwd, was een relais aan de rivier, waar soldaten in alle rust konden ontschepen of inschepen. Rust was ook het motto van de kapel gebouwd in Deerlijk in 1639.

Sommige van onze voorouders waren soldaten, zoals Bertrand Du Guesclin, of Raymond Clergue die Mallorca veroverde met de Koning van Aragón, of de Desclergue-broers die naar Vlaanderen kwamen, waaronder onze voorouder Jeroni die in 1604 stierf, of in recentere tijden, voorouders in het leger van Napoleon of als verdedigers van België in WOI, of in het verzet in WOII.

Echter, soldaat zijn was niet het kenmerk van onze voorouders. Om onze voorouders langs de lijn van Declercq te begrijpen, moet men zich verdiepen in de wereld van de schrijvers. Dit boek bespreekt de klasse waartoe onze voorouders behoorden: de schrijvers, die in Empuries en later elders verantwoordelijk waren voor het opstellen van wat wij vandaag zouden classificeren als notariële akten, overeenkomsten en wetten. Het boek behandelt in detail de Griekse, Romeinse, Visigotische, Byzantijnse, Arabische en Frankische periodes, maar ook de Bretoense periode, de wederwaardigheden in Albi, de tijd in Mallorca, in Barcelona, in Montblanc, in Doornik en in de regio aan de Leie, in Kortrijk, Harelbeke, Deerlijk en later ook dorpen aan de andere kant van de Leie.

In de Byzantijnse periode werd de familie voor het eerst opgenomen in de klasse van het purperen bloed, Purpura de la Patria zoals men later behelsde. Het is ook deze periode waaruit de voorouders van Bertrand Du Guesclin inspiratie vonden voor hun wapenschild. In de Arabische tijd werden onze voorouders ofwel Clergue of Aquin[2] genoemd, afhankelijk van hun locatie. Hun taak als schrijvers vereiste immers een stevig verankerde neutraliteit, wat betekende dat zij werden geraadpleegd door elk heersend regime.

Tijdens de tijd van de Tempeliers speelden zij een prominente rol in het gebied dat nu Languedoc en Catalonië heet. Onze voorouders waren niet alleen Tempeliers maar ook Kruisvaarders.

Met een focus op Vlaanderen mogen we zeker de familie de Patin niet vergeten. Deze voorouders, stevig verankerd in het gebied van

Figure 1.1: Baldwin I of Flanders (c. 837–879) & Judith of West Francia (843–870) are our ancestors. Baldwin I, born in Arras, possibly Laon, and Judith of West Francia, born in October 843 in the Carolingian Empire, married in 862 after a dramatic elopement. Their love story defied royal opposition, leading to Baldwin's establishment as the first Count of Flanders. Baldwin died in 879 in Ghent, while Judith passed in 870 in the same city. Their union laid the foundations for the County of Flanders, significantly shaping the region's medieval history.

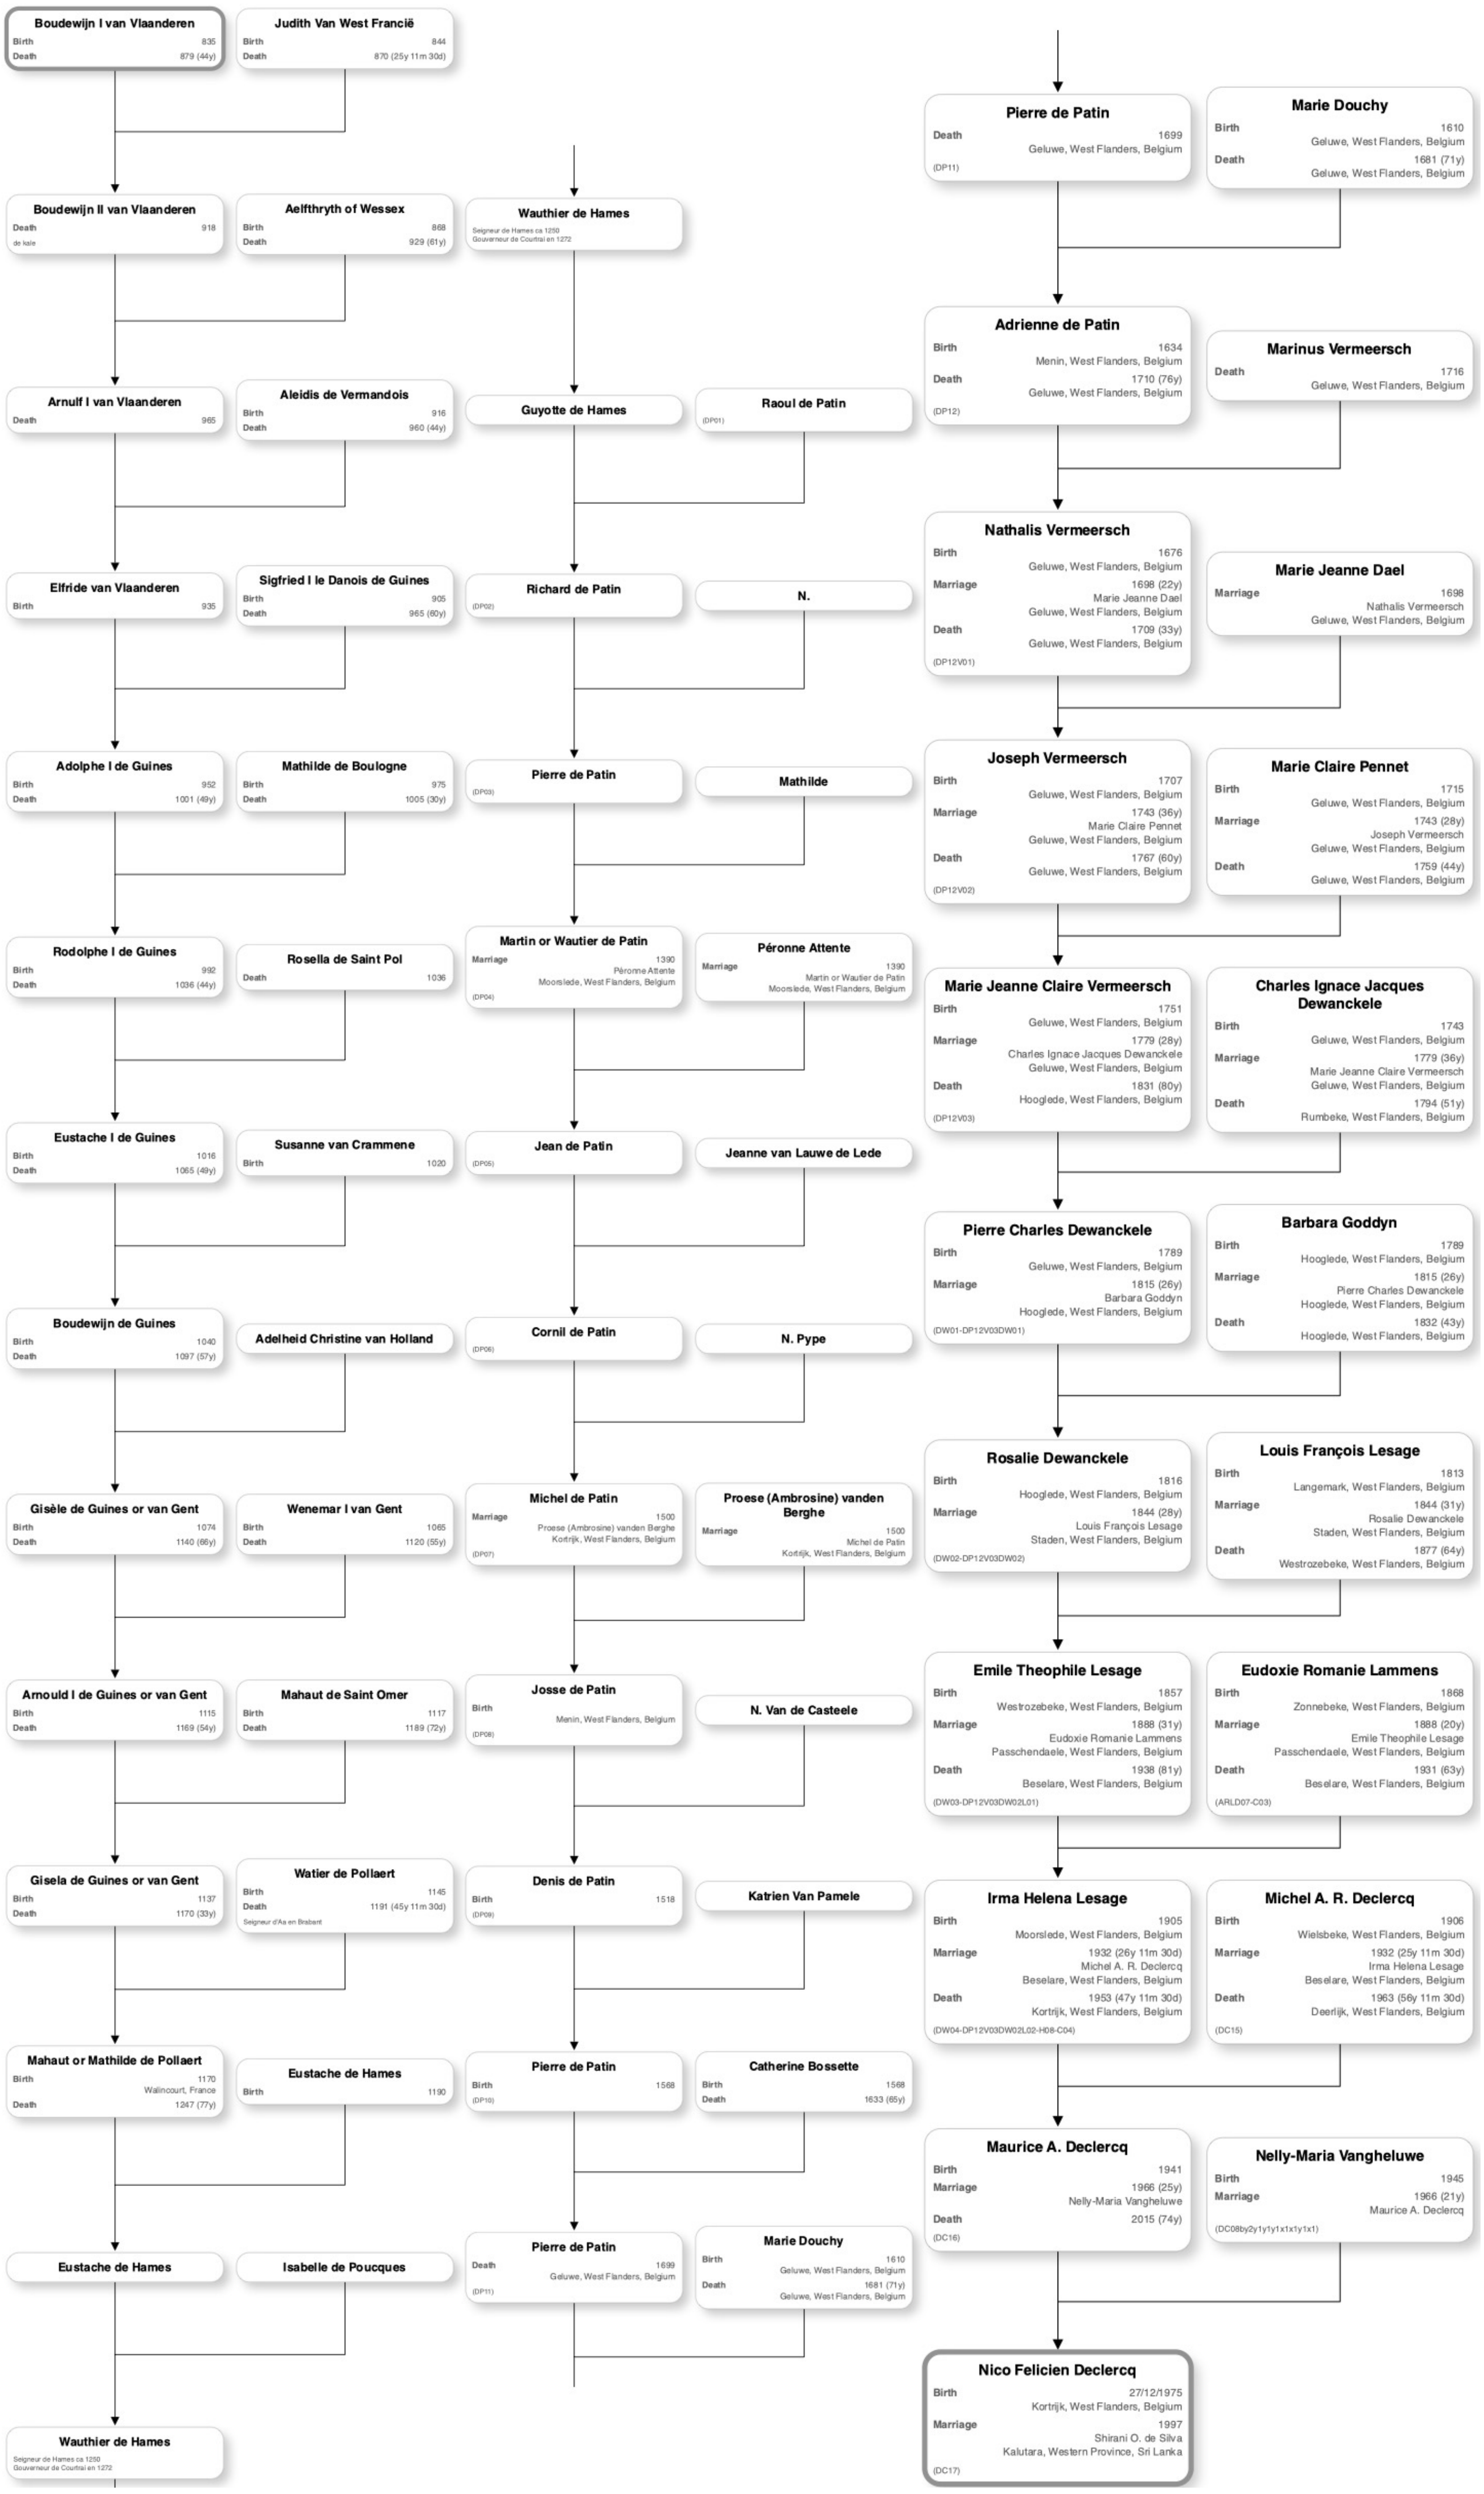
---

[1] This chapter is written in Dutch.

[2] Aquin is een verbastering van Hakin en Hakim, wat Arabisch is voor Clergue.



Boudewijn I van Vlaanderen
Birth 835
Death 879 (44y)
Judith Van West Francië
Birth 844
Death 870 (25y 11m 30d)
Boudewijn II van Vlaanderen
Death 918
de kale
Aelfthryth of Wessex
Birth 868
Death 929 (61y)
Arnulf I van Vlaanderen
Death 965
Aleidis de Vermandois
Birth 916
Death 960 (44y)
Elfride van Vlaanderen
Birth 935
Sigfried I le Danois de Guines
Birth 905
Death 965 (60y)
Adolphe I de Guines
Birth 952
Death 1001 (49y)
Mathilde de Boulogne
Birth 975
Death 1005 (30y)
Rodolphe I de Guines
Birth 992
Death 1036 (44y)
Rosella de Saint Pol
Death 1036
Eustache I de Guines
Birth 1016
Death 1065 (49y)
Susanne van Crammene
Birth 1020
Boudewijn de Guines
Birth 1040
Death 1097 (57y)
Adelheid Christine van Holland
Gisèle de Guines or van Gent
Birth 1074
Death 1140 (66y)
Wenemar I van Gent
Birth 1065
Death 1120 (55y)
Arnould I de Guines or van Gent
Birth 1115
Death 1169 (54y)
Mahaut de Saint Omer
Birth 1117
Death 1189 (72y)
Gisela de Guines or van Gent
Birth 1137
Death 1170 (33y)
Watier de Pollaert
Birth 1145
Death 1191 (45y 11m 30d)
Seigneur d'Aa en Brabant
Mahaut or Mathilde de Pollaert
Birth 1170
Walincourt, France
Death 1247 (77y)
Eustache de Hames
Birth 1190
Eustache de Hames
Isabelle de Poucques
Wauthier de Hames
Seigneur de Hames ca 1250
Gouverneur de Courtrai en 1272
Wauthier de Hames
Seigneur de Hames ca 1250
Gouverneur de Courtrai en 1272
Guyotte de Hames
Raoul de Patin
(DP01)
Richard de Patin
(DP02)
N.
Pierre de Patin
(DP03)
Mathilde
Martin or Wautier de Patin
Marriage 1390
Péronne Attente
Moorslede, West Flanders, Belgium
(DP04)
Péronne Attente
Marriage 1390
Martin or Wautier de Patin
Moorslede, West Flanders, Belgium
Jean de Patin
(DP05)
Jeanne van Lauwe de Lede
Cornil de Patin
(DP06)
N. Pype
Michel de Patin
Marriage 1500
Proese (Ambrosine) vanden Berghe
Kortrijk, West Flanders, Belgium
(DP07)
Proese (Ambrosine) vanden Berghe
Marriage 1500
Michel de Patin
Kortrijk, West Flanders, Belgium
Josse de Patin
Birth
Menin, West Flanders, Belgium
(DP08)
N. Van de Casteele
Denis de Patin
Birth 1518
(DP09)
Katrien Van Pamele
Pierre de Patin
Birth 1568
(DP10)
Catherine Bossette
Birth 1568
Death 1633 (65y)
Pierre de Patin
Death 1699
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
(DP11)
Marie Douchy
Birth 1610
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1681 (71y)
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Pierre de Patin
Death 1699
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
(DP11)
Marie Douchy
Birth 1610
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1681 (71y)
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Adrienne de Patin
Birth 1634
Menin, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1710 (76y)
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
(DP12)
Marinus Vermeersch
Death 1716
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Nathalis Vermeersch
Birth 1676
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1698 (22y)
Marie Jeanne Dael
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1709 (33y)
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
(DP12V01)
Marie Jeanne Dael
Marriage 1698
Nathalis Vermeersch
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Joseph Vermeersch
Birth 1707
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1743 (36y)
Marie Claire Pennet
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1767 (60y)
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
(DP12V02)
Marie Claire Pennet
Birth 1715
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1743 (28y)
Joseph Vermeersch
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1759 (44y)
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Marie Jeanne Claire Vermeersch
Birth 1751
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1779 (28y)
Charles Ignace Jacques Dewanckele
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1831 (80y)
Hooglede, West Flanders, Belgium
(DP12V03)
Charles Ignace Jacques Dewanckele
Birth 1743
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1779 (36y)
Marie Jeanne Claire Vermeersch
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1794 (51y)
Rumbeke, West Flanders, Belgium
Pierre Charles Dewanckele
Birth 1789
Geluwe, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1815 (26y)
Barbara Goddyn
Hooglede, West Flanders, Belgium
(DW01-DP12V03DW01)
Barbara Goddyn
Birth 1789
Hooglede, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1815 (26y)
Pierre Charles Dewanckele
Hooglede, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1832 (43y)
Hooglede, West Flanders, Belgium
Rosalie Dewanckele
Birth 1816
Hooglede, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1844 (28y)
Louis François Lesage
Staden, West Flanders, Belgium
(DW02-DP12V03DW02)
Louis François Lesage
Birth 1813
Langemark, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1844 (31y)
Rosalie Dewanckele
Staden, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1877 (64y)
Westrozebeke, West Flanders, Belgium
Emile Theophile Lesage
Birth 1857
Westrozebeke, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1888 (31y)
Eudoxie Romanie Lammens
Passchendaele, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1938 (81y)
Beselare, West Flanders, Belgium
(DW03-DP12V03DW02L01)
Eudoxie Romanie Lammens
Birth 1868
Zonnebeke, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1888 (20y)
Emile Theophile Lesage
Passchendaele, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1931 (63y)
Beselare, West Flanders, Belgium
(ARLD07-C03)
Irma Helena Lesage
Birth 1905
Moorslede, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1932 (26y 11m 30d)
Michel A. R. Declercq
Beselare, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1953 (47y 11m 30d)
Kortrijk, West Flanders, Belgium
(DW04-DP12V03DW02L02-H08-C04)
Michel A. R. Declercq
Birth 1906
Wielsbeke, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1932 (25y 11m 30d)
Irma Helena Lesage
Beselare, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1963 (56y 11m 30d)
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC15)
Maurice A. Declercq
Birth 1941
Marriage 1966 (25y)
Nelly-Maria Vangheluwe
Death 2015 (74y)
(DC16)
Nelly-Maria Vangheluwe
Birth 1945
Marriage 1966 (21y)
Maurice A. Declercq
(DC08by2y1y1y1x1x1y1x1)
Nico Felicien Declercq
Birth 27/12/1975
Kortrijk, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1997
Shirani O. de Silva
Kalutara, Western Province, Sri Lanka
(DC17)

Figure 1.2: The link between Baldwin I of Flanders and the author. They are separated by 34 generations.

Ieper tot Menen, brachten een van de grootste diplomaten voort die ons land ooit heeft gekend: Charles Philippe de Patin. Bekend om zijn werk 'Mare Liberum', leidde hij ons land, België, naar een onafhankelijker koers binnen het Oostenrijkse Habsburgse Rijk. Hij vond zelfs internationale steun om de oprichting van de Oostendse Compagnie mogelijk te maken, waardoor wij handel konden drijven met India, iets wat ons sinds het einde van het Spaanse tijdperk was ontzegd.

Indien men belangstelling heeft voor muziek, zal men Peter Benoit als verre bloedverwant terugvinden in onze stamboom.

Terugkerend naar onze voorouder Boudewijn I van Vlaanderen, is de oorsprong van het Graafschap Vlaanderen geworteld in een opmerkelijke en romantische geschiedenis, verweven met de levens van Boudewijn I, bijgenaamd 'met de IJzeren Arm,' en Judith van West-Francië, dochter van de Karolingische Koning Karel de Kale. Hun verhaal is niet alleen een epische liefdesgeschiedenis maar ook de basis van een dynastie die Vlaanderen zou vormen tot een van de meest invloedrijke regio's van middeleeuws Europa.

Boudewijn I werd geboren rond 840, mogelijk in Laon, als zoon van Odakar III, een edelman aan het Karolingische hof. Hij groeide op in een tijd van politieke onrust en Vikingaanvallen in West-Europa. Zijn bijnaam, 'met de IJzeren Arm,' werd hem later gegeven vanwege zijn moed en militaire bedrevenheden.

Judith van West-Francië, geboren rond 844, was de dochter van Karel de Kale en Ermentrude van Orléans. Als lid van de Karolingische dynastie was haar leven diep beïnvloed door de politieke intriges en machtsstrijd van haar tijd. Ze was tweemaal Koningin van Wessex geweest, getrouwd met Æthelwulf en daarna met zijn zoon Æthelbald, voordat ze Boudewijn ontmoette.

In 861 ontmoette Boudewijn Judith toen zij door haar vader naar het klooster van Senlis was gestuurd na de dood van haar tweede echtgenoot. Het was liefde op het eerste gezicht. Rond Kerstmis 861 slaagde Boudewijn erin Judith uit het klooster te ontvoeren met de hulp van haar broer, Lodewijk de Stamelaar. Ze vluchtten naar het noorden en zochten bescherming bij Lotharius II van Lotharingen.

Hun vlucht en geheime huwelijk maakten Karel de Kale woedend, die zijn dochter terug wilde en Boudewijn door de kerk liet excommuniceren. Dit dwong het paar naar Rome te reizen en hun zaak voor te leggen aan Paus Nicolaas I. De paus, ontroerd door hun verhaal, zette Karel onder druk om het huwelijk te erkennen. Na twee jaar correspondentie en bemiddeling stemde Karel uiteindelijk in, en op 13 december 862 werd hun huwelijk officieel bekrachtigd in Auxerre.

Als gebaar van verzoening schonk Karel de Kale Boudewijn het gebied van de Vlaamse Gouw en de Waasgouw als leen, met de opdracht het te verdedigen tegen de Vikingen. Boudewijn bleek een bekwame militaire en politieke leider. Hij bouwde versterkingen in steden als Gent en Brugge en slaagde erin de Vikingaanvallen effectief af te slaan. Deze successen versterkten zijn positie en legden de basis voor het graafschap Vlaanderen.

Judith speelde ook een cruciale rol in de opbouw van Vlaanderen. Ze bracht prestige en koninklijke connecties mee, die hielpen allianties te smeden en de positie van het graafschap te versterken. Samen stichtten ze kerken en kloosters, zoals de kerk gewijd aan Donatianus van Reims in Brugge en een Benedictijns klooster in Veurne, die bijdroegen aan de culturele en spirituele ontwikkeling van de regio.

Boudewijn en Judith hadden vier kinderen: Karel, die jong stierf; Boudewijn II, die zijn vader opvolgde als Graaf van Vlaanderen; Rudolf, die Graaf van Kamerijk werd; en mogelijk een dochter die trouwde met Wifried I van Urgell. Hun nakomelingen zouden een grote invloed hebben op de verdere geschiedenis van Vlaanderen en Europa.

Boudewijn stierf op 2 januari 879 en werd begraven in de Abdij van Sint-Bertinus in Sint-Omaars. Judith overleefde hem, en haar exacte sterfdatum is onbekend, maar ze leefde waarschijnlijk nog enige tijd na zijn dood.

Het liefdesepos van Boudewijn I en Judith van West-Francië is een saga van moed, romantiek en politieke intrige. Hun gedurfde ontsnapping en huwelijk smeedden niet alleen de fundamenten van het Graafschap Vlaanderen, maar verwekten ook een dynastie die een blijvende invloed op de Europese geschiedenis zou hebben. Met hun gezamenlijke inspanningen en visie herschiep dit koppel Vlaanderen tot een welvarende en invloedrijke regio, een erfenis die voortleeft tot op de dag van vandaag. Het familieverband wordt getoond in Figuur 1.2

Genealogen delven vaak in de oorsprong van hun voorouders op zoek naar betekenis en identiteit. Hoewel dit waardevol is, is het van vitaal belang niet enkel te vertrouwen op de glorie of rijkdom van voorbije generaties.

Iedere ziel draagt namelijk de verantwoordelijkheid voor zijn eigen daden en verwezenlijkingen.

Het lijkt de auteur echter nuttig om dit hoofdstuk nog niet af te sluiten. Een van de kinderen van Boudewijn en Judith was mogelijk een dochter die trouwde met Wifried I van Urgell. Deze bewering kan echter niet definitief worden bevestigd. Wat wel met zekerheid kan worden gesteld, is dat Wifried I van Urgell, beter bekend als Guifré I de Barcelona of Guifred le Velu, een voorouder is van de auteur. De auteur stamt namelijk af van de Graven van Barcelona en de Dynastie van Aragon, via verschillende takken waaruit de Desclergues van Montblanc door huwelijken zijn voortgekomen.

Chapter 2

Introduction to Historical Research Methodology

2.1 What is Historical Research?

Historical research systematically investigates past events to derive accurate and comprehensive understandings of historical phenomena. The methods employed in historical research are critical to the validity and reliability of the conclusions drawn. Three principal approaches stand out among these methods: deduction, induction, and abduction. Each method has its distinct process and application, and understanding their roles is essential to grasping the complexities of historical inquiry.

Deductive Reasoning in historical research begins with a general theory or hypothesis, which is then tested by examining specific instances. This approach starts from a broad perspective and narrows to particular evidence, allowing historians to see if the evidence supports or refutes the preconceived theory. For instance, a historian might start with the theory that economic factors were the primary cause of the fall of the Roman Empire and then examine specific economic data from that period to test this theory.

*Inductive Reasoning*works in the opposite direction. It involves drawing general conclusions from specific observations. Historians using inductive reasoning collect particular pieces of evidence and then formulate broader theories based on these observations. For example, after observing the conditions of peasant life in various medieval European regions, a historian might inductively conclude general trends about the socioeconomic structures of medieval Europe.

Abductive Reasoning, or inference to the best explanation, is a method where historians formulate the most likely explanation based on the evidence, especially when the evidence is incomplete or ambiguous. This method is handy in historical research, as historical records often need to be completed and made more cohesive and consistent. Abductive reasoning allows historians to hypothesize plausible scenarios that best fit the available evidence, even if those scenarios cannot be definitively proven. For example, when determining the cause of a sudden population decline in ancient societies, a historian might abduce the most likely cause based on environmental, archaeological, and textual evidence.

2.2 Application of Methods in Historical Research

In this work, all three historical research methods—deduction, induction, and abduction—have been meticulously applied. It is essential to acknowledge that, in practice, historians often integrate these methods, even if some claim to exclusively use induction due to its perceived rigor and lesser vulnerability to refutation by peers. The author, with a background in physics, brings a unique perspective, naturally blending abduction and deduction with inductive reasoning.

Throughout this book, readers will encounter an extensive array of sources and original documents in instances where inductive reasoning was utilized. The evidence collected forms the basis for broader historical theories. Conversely, in cases requiring greater reliance on deductive reasoning, the focus shifts to understanding the historical context, thereby elucidating the framework within which conclusions were drawn.

In instances where evidence is scarce, abductive reasoning plays a crucial role. For example, when examining periods with limited documentation, the author employs DNA analysis alongside social, political, cultural, and structural likelihood analyses. This methodological approach allows for plausible reconstructions of historical events. If applied to the enigma of Christopher Columbus, the author would likely challenge the notion of a talented individual from a poor wool weaver family in Genoa gaining royal favor in Portugal and Spain, positing instead a theory rooted in the likelihood of noble lineage or illegitimate birth within noble or wealthy merchant families, given the social immobility of that era.

2.3 Significance of Abduction in Historical Breakthroughs

The most significant breakthroughs in historical research often stem from abductive reasoning rather than mere induction or deduction. For instance, understanding the decline of the Roman Empire or Easter Island's societal collapse required recognizing the role of environmental factors, an insight born from abductive reasoning. Similarly, the origins of the Black Death were elucidated through the hypothesis of human lice and fleas as vectors. Heinrich Schliemann's discovery of Troy, shown in Figure 2.1 was guided by abductive reasoning, transforming it from myth to historical reality. Other historians known for their breakthroughs by abductive reasoning are Carlo Ginzburg, Marc Bloch, Fernand Braudel, Natalie Zemon Davis, E. H. Carr, and Barbara Tuchman. The list of scientists using this approach is much longer. A few famous examples are Albert Einstein, Charles Darwin, Marie Curie, Niels Bohr, Rosalind Franklin, Richard Feynman, Barbara McClintock, and Stephen Hawking. Discovering new particles through symmetries in mathematical group descriptions in particle physics further exemplifies the power of abduction.

2.4 Achievements in this Work

By integrating abduction, deduction, and induction, the author took initial risks but fortified his hypotheses with extensive support. He traced the history of the Desclergues of Montblanc back to around 500 BC, and that of the de Silva family of Uduwara to Goa and Portugal. This abductive approach, where deductions and inductions were impossible, acknowledges that new evidence could necessitate adjustments to the theory, embodying the scientific spirit of research.

Figure 2.1: From left to right: Heinrich Schliemann at the site of Troy, a portrait of Schliemann and his excavations at the Acropolis of Mycenae. Heinrich Schliemann, born on January 6, 1822, in Neubukow, Germany, was a self-made businessman whose enduring passion for ancient history and archaeology revolutionized the study of classical antiquity. Despite his lack of formal training in the field, Schliemann's entrepreneurial success afforded him the resources to pursue his archaeological interests. From a young age, Schliemann was captivated by the epic tales of Homer, particularly the "Iliad" and the "Odyssey." This fascination propelled him towards one of his most notable achievements: the excavation of Troy. Beginning his work at Hisarlik in modern-day Turkey during the 1870s, Schliemann was determined to prove that the legendary city of Troy was more than just a myth. His excavations unearthed multiple layers of ruins, which he interpreted as evidence of the city's historical existence. Among his significant finds was "Priam's Treasure," a collection of gold and artifacts that, although later reassessed as belonging to a different period, brought substantial attention to his work. Schliemann's contributions did not end with Troy. He also conducted groundbreaking excavations at Mycenae in Greece. In 1876, he discovered the Shaft Graves, which contained an array of gold objects, including the renowned "Mask of Agamemnon." While the precise identification of this mask remains debated, the discovery itself underscored the richness of Mycenaean civilization and its connections to Homeric epics. However, Schliemann's methods were often controversial. His aggressive excavation techniques, including dynamite, were criticized for their destructiveness and lack of scientific rigor. These methods sometimes caused irreparable damage to the sites, complicating the task of subsequent archaeologists. Despite these criticisms, Schliemann's legacy is substantial. His passionate pursuit of archaeological truth brought significant attention to the field and helped transform the study of ancient civilizations into a scientific discipline. His work at Troy and Mycenae laid the foundation for modern archaeological practices and expanded our understanding of the ancient world. Heinrich Schliemann died in Naples, Italy, on December 26, 1890. His pioneering efforts and discoveries continue to influence the field of archaeology, marking him as a pivotal figure in the history of historical research.

Chapter 3

Executive Summary

3.0.1 Introduction

This book meticulously examines the Desclergues family, tracing their lineage over two millennia and unraveling the complex web of cultural, political, and social connections that have shaped their legacy. The narrative commences in the ancient world, charting the family's origins among the Indigetes in Iberia and their interactions with Greek colonists in Empúries. As the family integrated into the broader currents of Hellenic civilization, they adopted the administrative and mercantile practices of the Greeks and, later, the Romans, solidifying their position within the local nobility.

The Desclergues exhibited remarkable adaptability throughout the centuries, aligning with various ruling powers, from the Visigoths and Byzantines to Islamic rulers and later the Christian reconquest led by the Franks. This adaptability is a recurring theme, with the family continually leveraging their administrative and diplomatic skills to maintain and enhance their status. The book delves into critical periods such as their involvement with the Knights Templar during the Reconquista, their strategic alliances through marriage with other noble families, and their eventual migration to Flanders during the Habsburg era. Additionally, it explores the genetic and genealogical research that corroborates the family's historical records, offering a detailed account of their cultural and intellectual contributions across different eras and regions.

Overall, the book presents a rich tapestry of the Desclergues' history, highlighting their resilience and influence from ancient to modern times. It underscores their role as pivotal figures in the socio-political landscapes they inhabited, driven by a commitment to public service, intellectual pursuits, and cultural exchange rather than political power. The narrative is complemented by meticulous research and vivid depictions of their lineage's pivotal moments, providing readers with a comprehensive understanding of the Desclergues' enduring legacy.

3.0.2 Comprehensive Family Lineage: An Overview

This comprehensive eight-volume investigation into the Desclergues family lineage reveals a remarkable diversity within their ancestral origins. The monograph delineates various intriguing familial lineages, particularly on patrilineal descent. This focus stems from an interest in the etymology and historical trajectory of the family name, further motivated by the possibility of tracing this lineage through the Y-DNA chromosome.

The patrilineal line, charting a migratory path from Spain, Occitania, and Brittany to Flanders by the Spanish military at the end of the sixteenth century, frequently exhibited matrimonial alliances within specific familial clusters. These unions were strategically advantageous, serving noble and economic interests, thus suggesting a constrained genealogical expansion rather than a divergent one. This notion of restricted lineage proliferation is visually represented in Figure 3.1, underscoring the limited yet distinct familial interconnections characteristic of our ancestors.

The Desclergues family's lineage presents a rich cultural, historical, and genealogical chronology from ancient tribes to medieval nobility. To adequately narrate their journey, we explore their roots in the ancient world, their adaptations through major historical transitions, and their influence across various regions, underscoring their role as key players in the socio-political landscapes they inhabited.

The book commences with an introductory section in Part III, with foundational information intended for readers who may lack familiarity with heraldry, onomastics, the town of Montblanc, or the historical context and timeline relevant to the presence of Spanish individuals in Belgium during the Habsburg era. Subsequently, Part IV offers a comprehensive account of over two thousand years of our family's history, with a particular emphasis on antiquity, followed by later eras in Part V, Part VI, and Part VII.

3.0.3 Ancient Iberian Roots and Greek Integration

The story of the Desclergues begins in the rugged landscapes of ancient Iberia, where the local tribe of the Indigetes settled in what would become Empúries. This coastal region, primed for agriculture and trade, nurtured a class of local elites, among whom were the earliest ancestors of the Desclergues. The arrival of Greek colonists from Phocaea around 575 BC marked a pivotal moment. These settlers introduced Empúries to the broader currents of Hellenic civilization, bringing sophisticated governance systems, trade, and cultural exchange.

As Empúries flourished under Greek influence, it was inevitable that the Desclergues' ancestors, positioned within the local nobility, forged strategic marital alliances with the Greeks, thus cementing their social ascent. They adapted to the new cultural landscape, blending their local traditions with the administrative and mercantile practices introduced by the Greeks and, later, the Romans.

3.0.4 Roman Era: Administrative Ascendancy

The Roman conquest introduced another layer of complexity. As Empúries was absorbed into the Roman Republic and later the Empire, the Desclergues' forebears transitioned into crucial roles in the new administrative framework. Their expertise as scribes and bankers became invaluable, facilitating their survival and prosperity in the Roman hierarchy. During this period, they solidified their reputation as essential administrative figures, a legacy that would carry forward into the Visigothic era.

Figure 3.1: Depiction of the constrained genealogical expansion within specific familial clusters, illustrating strategic matrimonial alliances along the patrilineal line from Spain to Flanders.

3.0.5 Byzantine Influence and North African Ventures

With the shifting sands of power, the Byzantine Empire extended its influence into Hispania during the 6th century, following internal strife within the Visigothic kingdom. The Desclergues, leveraging their well-established roles as scribes and administrators, aligned with the Byzantines, who were keen on restoring some semblance of Roman order in the region. This association with the Byzantine administration notably marked the Desclergues with the epithet of having 'purple blood,' reflecting their imperial administrative roles and echoing the Byzantine penchant for purple as a color of imperial authority.

The alliance with Byzantium opened new avenues for the Desclergues. Some family members were stationed in Bejaia (ancient Bougie) in present-day Algeria, a strategic port then under Byzantine control. Their time in North Africa expanded their geographical reach and enriched their cultural and administrative repertoire, integrating Islamic and North African influences. This period, though brief, is crucial in understanding Bertrand Du Guesclin's later claims of ancestral connections to Bougie, highlighting a legacy that spanned continents.

3.0.6 Visigothic Resurgence and Islamic Conquests

As Byzantine influence waned, the Desclergues realigned themselves with the Visigothic rulers once more, navigating through the complex political landscape of the Iberian Peninsula. However, the Islamic conquests of the 8th century introduced a new era. The swift expansion of Islamic rule under the Moors transformed the political and cultural life of the region. The Desclergues, known for their adaptability, transitioned to serving the new Islamic rulers. Renamed Hakim or Hakin, they continued their work in administration and banking, positions they held with high esteem due to their 'purple blood' legacy. Their ability to serve under varied rulers—Visigothic, Byzantine, and now Islamic—underscored their diplomatic and administrative acumen.

3.0.7 Frankish Reconquest and Christian Revival

The tides again turned with the Frankish conquests, gradually pushing Islamic forces back. The Battle of Tours in 732, led by Charles Martel, marked a decisive turning point. By the late 8th century, the Franks had regained control over much of the territory, including Septimania. During this period, the Desclergues returned to their roots, shedding the Islamic monikers of Hakim and Hakin and resuming their original Roman family identity as Clergue. Under Frankish rule, they continued to thrive, capitalizing on their historical reputation as trusted administrators.

3.0.8 Breton Expansion and Du Guesclin Connection

The fluid geopolitical boundaries during the Christian Reconquista necessitated the northward migration of a branch of the Desclergues family to Brittany, part of Charlemagne's strategy. This relocation was not merely geographical but also carried profound cultural and historical implications, as evidenced by the adoption of the Byzantine double-headed eagle and the ancient gryphon in their heraldic symbols. These emblems, along with the memory of their Islamic heritage—specifically, the profession of their ancestor Aquin (derived from the Arabic Hakim or Hakin, synonymous with Clericus or Clergue)—illustrate a profound cultural syncretism.

The Desclergues family's relocation to Brittany was not just a change of location. It marked a significant shift in their identity. The family's name, Hakin in Moorish Spain, became the foundation for the Aquin progenitor of Du Guesclin, illustrating a complex evolution of identity shaped by diverse cultural and historical influences.

The re-establishment of this lineage in Catalonia led to the reintegration of the family's traditional roles and identities, specifically those of scribes, scholars, merchants, and bankers.

The Desclergues lineage, based in Montblanc, was again drawn into warfare during the Habsburg period. This involvement included deploying soldiers to Flanders, including our ancestor Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés. He perished in Ostend in 1604 during the military campaigns in Flanders.

3.0.9 Catalonia and the Knights Templar: Reestablishment

As the Christian Reconquista gradually reclaimed Iberian territories from Islamic rule, the Desclergues family was at the forefront of these transformative changes, particularly during the pivotal late 12th and 13th centuries. With significant military gains during the Reconquista, such as the capture of Toledo in 1085 and the fall of Seville in 1248, the Desclergues leveraged their historical expertise in governance to reestablish themselves in the heart of Catalonia. Barcelona, burgeoning as a commercial and administrative hub by the 13th century, became their new base of influence.

During this period, Catalonia was often at the center of conflict and expansion, especially under the reign of King James I of Aragon. The Desclergues, with their deep roots in administration and governance, played a crucial role in establishing the administrative frameworks needed in these newly conquered lands.

Their strong Catholic faith aligned them with the influential Knights Templar, prominent in Spain during this time. The Templars were warriors, key financial brokers, and administrators in the reconquered territories.

The Desclergues' association with the Templars began around the early 13th century, coinciding with the Templars' rise in power and influence across Europe. This alliance bolstered the Desclergues' political and economic status, giving them a pivotal role in shaping the post-Reconquista landscape of Catalonia and beyond.

This renewed influence in a rapidly changing Catalonia positioned the Desclergues as essential figures in the socio-political fabric of medieval Spain. Their ability to adapt and thrive in varying political climates, from Roman to Islamic to Christian rule, showcases a lineage defined by resilience, adaptability, and an enduring legacy of leadership.

3.0.10 Conquest of Mallorca: A Family Milestone

A pivotal chapter in the history of the Desclergues family unfolds with the conquest of Mallorca, led by King James I of Aragon, known as James the Conqueror. Between 1229 and 1231, this significant historical event marked a major expansion of Christian realms during the Reconquista.

Among those who played a crucial role in this campaign was Ramon Desclergue, a descendant of the Desclergue lineage that had stayed in Albi during a tumultuous period marked by religious strife between the Cathars and orthodox Catholics.

Ramon, a staunch Catholic, and a Knight Templar became increasingly alienated in Albi's heated environment amidst the Albigensian Crusade, which began in 1209 to root out Catharism. His status as a Templar highlighted his martial prowess and underscored his deep commitment to the Catholic Church. This background made him particularly eager to join forces with King James I, seeking religious redemption and a new beginning far from the religious conflicts of Albi.

The campaign to conquer Mallorca began on September 8, 1229, when King James I's forces, including Ramon Desclergue, landed on the island. Over the next few months, they waged a series of battles against the Muslim defenders, culminating in the capture of Palma, the island's capital, on December 31, 1229. The conquest was completed by 1231, with the island under Christian control.

Ramon Desclergue's involvement in the conquest of Mallorca was multifaceted. As a Knight Templar, he brought not only his combat skills but also his experience in administration to the forefront. He was vital in establishing the governance structures necessary for integrating Mallorca into the Kingdom of Aragon. His expertise as a scribe and his administrative acumen, honed through generations of his family's involvement in such roles, was instrumental in the smooth transition of Mallorca from Islamic to Christian rule.

The successful conquest of Mallorca opened new avenues for the Desclergues. Ramon and his descendants established themselves as influential figures in the island's governance, helping to shape its development during a critical period in its history.

3.0.11 Establishing the Desclergue Dynasty in Montblanc

Following Mallorca's successful conquest and stabilization, a significant development unfolded within the Desclergue family. Ramon Desclergue, having established his legacy on the island, saw some of his descendants return to the mainland during the latter phases of Mallorca's integration into the Crown of Aragon.

These descendants of Ramon Desclergue settled in Barcelona, where they founded a formidable dynasty known for their expertise in notary work, banking, and commerce. Leveraging the administrative and financial acumen inherited from their forebears, they rapidly established themselves as a prominent family in the bustling economic environment of Barcelona. Their influence soon spread to towns such as Santa Coloma de Queralt and Montblanc, where they continued to thrive as law, academia, and trade professionals.

This period marked a golden era for the Desclergues as they diversified their engagements, holding positions as professors, lawyers, notaries, clergy, and merchants. Their reputation for reliability and skill in these fields made them indispensable in the communities they served. The Desclergues' success was a testament to their capabilities and the enduring legacy of their family's adaptability and commitment to public service.

A notable matrimonial alliance further solidified the Desclergues' standing when they merged with descendants of Bertrand Du Guesclin, the famed Breton knight, who equally descended from the Desclergues through a branch that served under the Moors as Hakin. This union blended Du Guesclin's martial legacy with the Desclergues' administrative prowess, enriching the family's heritage and expanding their social network across Europe's nobility.

Pere Torró y Desclergue epitomized the culmination of this prosperous era in the late 15th century. Heir to his uncle, the esteemed notary Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, Pere Torro y Desclergue became the progenitor of the Desclergue lineage in Montblanc. Their accomplishments were numerous, including opening trade between Catalonia and the Americas, but they are perhaps best remembered for constructing the famous Desclergue home on the Main Square of Montblanc. Almost stately in its design and grandeur, this building symbolized the Desclergue family's success and significant role in the region's social and economic life.

3.0.12 Strategic Marriages and Noble Alliances: Further Rise in Prominence

As the Desclergues family continued establishing themselves as a cornerstone of Catalan society, their strategic matrimonial alliances were pivotal in their ascent to higher social and economic prominence. By allying with some of the most notable and deeply noble families of their time, the Desclergues significantly enhanced their influence. They reinforced their status within the aristocratic circles of Europe. Among the illustrious marriages, Doña Maria Anna Desclergue y Vilavicencio was a noteworthy union that linked the Desclergues with an ancient noble lineage, bringing wealth and additional social prestige. Similarly, the marriage to Doña Eleonor Torró y Miquel connected them with a family known for its significant holdings and political connections in Catalonia.

Another prominent alliance was formed with Doña Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán, whose family ties extended to Castile and the Spanish American nobility. This alliance reflected the Spanish Empire's and its colonies' expansive reach, bringing international connections and opening trade and economic opportunities across the Atlantic.

Doña Prunera y Ferrer and Doña Eulalia Miquel also brought substantial alliances, linking the Desclergues to influential families known for their historical roles in regional governance and commerce. These marriages were not merely social contracts but strategic partnerships that enhanced the Desclergues' trade, governance, and diplomacy capabilities. The alliances even incorporated the papal family of de Luna.

Through these connections, the Desclergues also found themselves related by marriage to descendants of the Counts of Toulouse, the Counts of Barcelona, the Counts of Provence, the House of Anjou, and even the Kings of Navarre and the Kings of Aragon. Through de Luna, the Desclergues even have the last Islamic ruler of Mallorca among their ancestors and one of the most prominent Portuguese families, Godinho. These relationships afforded them a remarkable network that included some of the most influential figures of medieval and Renaissance Europe.

3.0.13 Migration to Flanders: Military and Notarial Alliances in Kortrijk

This epoch in the history of the Desclergues aligns with the periods of Habsburg rule in Belgium and Spain, as detailed in Part VIII. Initially, the focus is on the era under the Spanish Habsburgs, followed by the Austrian Habsburgs.

3.0.14 Genetic Legacy and Analysis

Part XV presents an in-depth examination of the DNA analyses conducted by various commercial entities on the genetic material of the author and his brother-in-law. These investigations juxtapose the genetic data with the genealogical information provided in this work, demonstrating high consistency. For example, the results confirm that the author is a direct male descendant of the Desclergues of Montblanc and possesses maternal lineage connections to this family, corroborating the historical records. Additionally, autosomal DNA analysis reveals a proportionate presence of genetic markers corresponding to Spain's regions, the Desclergues' origin, and Brittany, their ancient paternal homeland, aligning with documented ancestral origins. Regarding the brother-in-law's DNA, which indicates the genetic history of the author's wife, the findings are consistent with her documented ancestral background.

3.0.15 Notable Individuals and Their Contributions

The book provides a detailed account of various individuals, each characterized by unique attributes. Notably, in Part VI, we offer an in-depth portrayal of Bertrand Du Guesclin. Furthermore, we meticulously trace the lineage of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés, focusing on his maternal ancestors and elucidating their connections to eminent historical figures such as Hernán Cortés, the Counts of Barcelona, and the Kings of Aragon. We also examine their affiliations with notable families in other regions of Spain, including Castile and Extremadura. This genealogical analysis is primarily presented in Chapter 27.2 and comprehensively explored throughout Chapter 27.

Moreover, the de Patin family's significant involvement in Austrian Habsburg Belgium is thoroughly examined in Chapter 65 of Part XIII and Chapter 70 of Part XIV.

3.0.16 Maternal Ancestry: Expanding the Family Network

In addition to the patrilineal lineage of the Desclergues of Montblanc, the author's maternal ancestry also traces back to the Desclergues through a branch emerging in the latter half of the 17th century. The examination of this lineage, detailed in Chapter X, offers significant insights as it expands the understanding of the Desclergues' influence and networks within Belgium.

3.0.17 The Montblanc Period: A Focused Exploration

For those readers whose primary interest lies in the Desclergues during their residence in Montblanc, comprehensive details can be found in Part VII. Conversely, for an in-depth exploration of the period preceding their arrival in Montblanc, Parts V and VI are especially pertinent.

3.0.18 The De Silva Lineage of Uduwara: A Global Journey

Chapter XII presents a compelling narrative for globetrotters, detailing the extensive paternal lineage of the author's wife, Shirani de Silva. This patrilineal heritage originates from North West India and traces a migratory path through Persia to Byzantine. The lineage subsequently extended to Iberia, where the family integrated with the local population. The Carvalho family line, established in this manner, later merged with the de Silva lineage and migrated to Goa during the Iberian expansion into India. From Goa, the family eventually relocated to Uduwara in Sri Lanka to fortify a stronghold on the Kalu Ganga River. Documents, DNA analysis, and recent archaeological discoveries in Uduwara and Goa support the substantiation of this historical journey.

3.0.19 Additional Ancestral Lines and Military Service

Chapters XIII and XIV present additional genealogical lines of the author. This section notably includes records of military service for various individuals, offering valuable insights for researchers interested in the Napoleonic Wars.

3.0.20 The Chapel in Deerlijk: A Historical Revelation

Unexpectedly discovered during this research was Antoni Desclergue's (DC06) role in founding a chapel in Deerlijk, Belgium. This finding is substantiated by archaeological discoveries and historical records, as thoroughly detailed in Chapter XI. These facts are crucial for comprehending the Monblanquians' influence in Flanders and provide significant insights for the residents of Deerlijk. The village's ancient legend of a miracle in 1634, once dismissed as a mere fairy tale in previous decades, is now recognized as having a factual basis. The nobleman in the legend was Antoni Desclergue, and the events narrated closely mirror those of the Mare de Deu de la Serra legend in Montblanc, with the primary distinction being the involvement of oxen in Montblanc and horses in Deerlijk. The earliest known depiction of this miracle features an image of Montblanc's Mare de Deu de la Serra and includes Antoni Desclergue's initials. Antoni Desclergue later adorned the chapel with various artworks, such as a polychrome panel illustrating Montblanc's Main Square, including the House of Desclergue, and a finely crafted statuette by Cano.

3.0.21 Epilogue: Insights and Reflections

Throughout their extensive history, from the classical Greek period to the contemporary era, the Desclergues family has consistently embodied noble principles and maintained an esteemed position in both academic and social spheres. Renowned for their noble lineage, often referred to metaphorically as having purple blood, they have transcended the confines of nationalism and conflict. Historical evidence illustrates their alliances with a diverse array of groups, including Roman Catholics, Cathars, the Knights Templar, Crusaders, Muslims, and Jews. They have also established good relations with atheists, Buddhists, and Hindus. This eclectic network underscores their enduring international presence.

Remarkably, the Desclergues have adeptly navigated the vicissitudes of history without ever aspiring to political power, instead fostering a legacy of intellectual and social prominence.

Further research into the Desclergues lineage reveals a profound commitment to scholarly pursuits and cultural exchange. Their alliances with various religious and cultural groups highlight their diplomatic acumen and role as intermediaries in fostering intercultural dialogue. The Desclergues' historical narrative is a testament to their ability to adapt and thrive amidst the dynamic shifts in geopolitical landscapes, ensuring their influence remained through intellectual and social contributions rather than political dominance.

Part III

Prelude

Chapter 4

Heraldry and Geography

4.1 Arms of Nico Felicien Declercq

4.1.1 Motto

The term "Érudit et Sage à Pied Levé" denotes the ancestral Clergues, from whom our lineage originates. These individuals served as scribes and magistrates within a noble lineage tracing back to Roman antiquity in the region of Occitania. They were characterized by their readiness to relocate as circumstances demanded and their role as custodians of knowledge and written records.

4.1.2 Historical Backbones of the Arms: Toulouse

The heraldic emblems denoting celestial bodies, such as stars and the sun, were emblematically adopted by the Counts of Toulouse. These symbols recurrently manifest within the heraldic shields of ancient noble lineages originating from the regions of Toulouse and Languedoc.

4.1.3 Historical Backbones of the Arms: Desclergue

The Desclergue lineage boasts a venerable antiquity within the echelons of nobility, ostensibly predating the adoption of heraldic shields. It is posited that the progenitors of this lineage only embraced the heraldic tradition once it gained traction within societal conventions. The shield displayed prominently on the façade of the renowned Desclergue residence situated in the Main Square of Montblanc bears significance and was utilized by the family subsequent to their migration to Catalonia after their departure from Mallorca.

The arms of the Desclergue family had already been in use when H.M. Emperor Charles confirmed them, 'Keizer Karel' or 'Carlos V' (Ghent 1500 - Cuacos de Yuste 1558) on December 19, 1539, on the request of Galceran Desclergue.

The arms are shown for instance on page 'Lamina 11' of Tomo II (shield 37)[1]. It is also described on page 90 of the same book as 'De Barcelona. Son sus Armas: Escudo ajedrezado de oro y azur; medio cortado de azur, con dos palos de oro. Bibliografia: Adarga Catalana, de Garma y Durán, impresso, tomo II, pág. 224, Nobiliari general Català, de Félix Domenech y Roura, impreso, cuaderno VIII.'

On page 83 of the book 'La Casa Desclergue de Montblanc' [2], we find a chapter on 'El Titulo Nobiliario de los Desclergue' , that states 'The shield that in stone stands out in the center of the facade of the Casal dels Desclergue in Montblanc, responds to the description that in the books of Heraldry is presented as belonging to the surname Desclergue: Checked shield of gold and azure, half cut of azur, with two gold sticks'[3]

The oldest found shield of Desclergue is described in Spanish as : 'trae ajedrezado de oro y azur, medio cortado de azur y dos medios palos de oro' ; or also 'Escudo ajedrezado de oro y azul: cortado de azur, con dos palos de oro'.

ÉRUDIT & SAGE À PIED LEVÉ

Figure 4.1: The Coat of Arms of Nico F. Declercq and his descendants. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

---

[1] found in the book series 'El Solar Catalan, Valenciano y Balear' , by A. Y. A. Garcia Carraffa, 'con la colaboracion de D. Armando de Fluviá y Escorsa, de la Societat Catalana d' Estudies Historics' , Libreria Internacional (Colección Heraldica), Churruca, 6, San Sebastian, 1968

[2] authored by Jose Sanchez Real, published in 1974 by Caja de Ahorros Provincial, Tarragona, deposito legal B 19.565 - 1974 and printed by Graficas Lorente, Ciudad 13, Barcelona 2, Spain

[3] G. Tarafa. Enciclopedia Heràldica y Genealògica Hispano-Americana. Vol. 28; and Garma and Durán. Adargo Catalana. Vol. II. Pág. 224.

Figure 4.2: When the author visited the Taj Mahal at the end of November 2008, shown in Figure 53.1 on page 1047, his mindset needed to be more open to fully appreciate the grandeur and intricate beauty of this UNESCO World Heritage Site. Determined to rectify this, he returned on December 1, 2023, and finally immersed himself in the monument's splendor.
A fascinating detail about the Taj Mahal is the use of Noir de Golzinne from Belgium in its ornamental inlays. This expensive stone, known for its deep black color, contrasts beautifully with the white Makrana marble from Rajasthan, India, which constitutes the mausoleum's main structure. The construction of the Taj Mahal began in 1632 and was completed in 1653 under the commission of the Mughal Emperor Shah Jahan in memory of his beloved wife, Mumtaz Mahal. This period also coincides with the construction of other notable architectures in this book, such as the Chapel in Deerlijk.
The Taj Mahal is not merely a symbol of architectural excellence but also an epitome of the Mughal era's cultural and artistic zenith. It combines elements of Islamic, Persian, Ottoman Turkish, and Indian architectural styles. Using pietra dura, a technique of inlaying precious and semi-precious stones into marble, adds to its aesthetic and historical value. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

4.1.4 Historical Backbones of the Arms: de Patin

The earliest version of the weapon shield of de Patin is essentially described as 'un écusson' d' azur à une grue d' argent, sur pied, accompagnée de trois coquilles de même, deux en chef et une en pointe.' It can, for instance, be found on the Shield on the 'de Patin family grave' at Ypres. That of de Patin inspired the heraldic composition of the modern Shield to express our blood relation with the family. It is, however, sufficiently different as to avoid assuming paternal descendence. Also, the celestial symbols refer to the Occitanian roots of Desclergue, not de Patin. One may also look at Figure 70.126 on page 1510 concerning Cotteau de Pain.

4.1.5 Presentation of Declercq's Arms

First of all, the border of the Shield is the old Desclergue Shield in Barcelona and Montblanc, which originates in Medieval Catalonia, Spain with indications to ancestral knowledge, explained in Chapter 23. It discretely exposes the old Shield, which had two gold pillars on a blue field, forming five palos. This background Shield is placed behind a novel shield, leaving the border visible. The novel shield resembles that of Desclercq's de Patin ancestors (originating in the 14th century in Cambrai, France, as described in Chapter 65.2) and explained above, with symbols of particular importance to the ancestry tree and particularly the Occitanian roots. The most important symbol is the feather, held by a crane. It refers to the Desclergue dynasty of scribes from which we stem.

The coat of arms is described in French as : A la bordure componnée de quatorze pièces d' or et d' azur dont cinq au chef, un écusson d' azur, a une grue d' argent sur pied, membrée et becquée de gueules, tenant de la patte dextre une plume d' oie taillée d' or posée en pal, accompagnée en chef de deux étoiles radiée de 6 pointes d' or et en ponte un soleil d' or. Devise: 'Érudit et Sage à Pied Levé' . Cimier: un cygne éployé d' argent et becquée de gueules.

The coat of arms is described in English as: On the bordure a compone of 14 pieces gold and azure of which five at the top, an azure shield, having a silver crane with a raised foot, membered and beaked in red, holding in the right foot an upright feather in gold, accompanied in chief by two six-pointed stars and at the bottom a sun in gold. Motto: 'Érudit et Sage à Pied Levé' . Crest: A rising silver swan with a red beak.

The family crest emblazoned on the heraldic helmet symbolizes Zeus, the paramount deity of ancient Greek mythology. Zeus was the king of the Olympian gods, ruling over Mount Olympus as the god of the sky, thunder, and justice. He was a central figure in Greek mythology, known for his numerous affairs with goddesses and mortal women, resulting in many divine and heroic offspring. The legend of Zeus and Leda is among the most renowned myths involving a swan. In this myth, Zeus metamorphosed into a swan to seduce Leda, the queen of Sparta. The Swan connects us not only to our de Patin ancestry but also to the distant origins of the Desclergues in Empúries, where a local nobleman has married the daughter of a Greek merchant.

4.1.6 The Declercq de Silva Family Tomb

An artisan from Ypres meticulously crafted the tombstone. It is made of granite sourced from a quarry near Madras, India, and imported specifically for this purpose. This region is historically significant for the Ostend Company's trade along the Coromandel Coast, associated with Charles Philippe de Patin. The granite blocks were transported by ship, circumnavigating the island of Sri Lanka—a connection to our family heritage that is unmistakably evident.

Remarkably, similar to the near-perfect symmetry of the Taj Mahal in India, shown in Figure 4.2, which exhibits a deliberate asymmetry in the placement of the tombs and cenotaphs of Shah Jahan, the tomb of Declercq de Silva is designed to be almost perfectly symmetric, save for an intentional asymmetry. This design choice reflects the belief that only God is perfect; therefore, a monument should never achieve ideal symmetry.

A slight asymmetry for aesthetic reasons is, in fact, not uncommon. Indeed, for instance, Branislav Cvetkovic[4] describes that although a lot of artistic works, even church programs, may be perceived as symmetric, there are elements of asymmetry introduced mainly to induce a perception of beauty. From Ian Christopher Mcmanus [5], we can cite the following quote: 'However philosophers and art historians seem generally agreed that although symmetry is indeed attractive, there is also a somewhat sterile rigidity about it, which can make it less attractive than the more dynamic, less predictable beauty associated with asymmetry. Although a little asymmetry can be beautiful, an excess merely results in chaos.' Also, in the Rococo style, which appeared late in Baroque architecture, we find intentional asymmetry in its structure and decorations to make everything more organic, sometimes to the extent of organized chaos.

The red 'romantica' granite slab as part of the tomb, refers, just like the three flags in the coat of arms on the house of Desclergue in Montblanc, to the first generations of paternal ancestors who lived in Belgium. They were military in the Spanish army of Flanders and, 'La prenda distintiva de los soldados españoles solía ser una banda roja, y la de los capitanes, una faja roja ceñida a la cintura, muy ancha en al caso de los maestres de campo y maestres generales.'[6]

The Cross on the grave stands for the Catholic religion. Equally, it continues the tradition of the oldest known shields used by the Spanish and French Nobility, as exposed in the description of the arms of de Silva in Chapter 4.2. A cross on the ground was also crucial during the sowing of linseed by flax cultivators, described in Chapter 44.6.2.

4.1.7 Heraldic Registrations

The shield and blazon of Nico F. Declercq are recognised and protected for himself and his descendants according to heraldic rules and tradition. Additional registrations for protection have been made as well.

The coat of arms and motto of Declercq is legally protected under heraldic rules and international copyright:

Confirmed by the Heraldic College of Flemish Genealogy on April 21, 2017, as number 473;

Deposited at the Benelux Bureau for Intellectual Property on September 05, 2017, as design number 87188-01;

Registered with United Kingdom Copyright Service (UKCS) Reg. Ro.: 284716520 deposited on September 5, 2017;

Filed at the United States Copyright Office under case 1-5790198271; Published in 'Vlaamse Stam, tijdschrift voor familiegeschiedenis' , by Familiekunde Vlaanderen vzw, Kennisknooppunt voor familiegeschiedenis' 53(4), p 432, oktober-december 2017 (ISSN 0774-5486);

Approved and published in the Old Armory of the Schweizerischen Heraldischen Gesellschaft / Société Suisse d' Héraldique 2018;

Published in 'Cinc segles després els Desclergues tornen a Montblanc', El Foradot, Revista bimestral de Montblanc, 108, October 2018.

The coat of arms is exposed in granite on the family grave of Declercq de Silva.

Confirmed by the 'Nederlands College Heraldiek' , Utrecht, June 2020, with the following statement: Registratie van het familiewapen van Nico F. Declercq na onderzoek van de geleverde stamreeks: 'Hij stamt af van Don Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés, geboren in Montblanc in Spanje en overleden te Oostende in 1604, zoon van Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés. Hij kwam als militair naar de Nederlanden in 1587. Hij huwde Doña Felipa de Montoya die stierf in Deerlijk in 1628.'

Published in the Netherlands, in 'Heraldisch Tijdschrift, Periodiek voor wapen- zegel- en vlaggenkunde', jaargang 26, nummer 6, november-december, 2020, page 19.

The current manuscript and its contents are also subject to copyright.

4.2 Arms of Shirani de Silva: The Crowned Rampant Lion of Leon

The information below can be found, almost literally, in 'Historia Genealogica de la casa de Silva', by Don Luis de Salazar y Castro, in 12 volumes, 1685, namely in chapter V, 'Armas de la Casa de Silva'.

Noble families historically employed mottos and distinctive armaments to differentiate themselves from one another and separate themselves from the ordinary people, as noted by de Salazar y Castro. These symbols served as enduring reminders of the achievements of their originators and encouraged their descendants to uphold the responsibilities imposed by noble birth. This practice dates back to ancient civilizations such as the Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans, where mottos and insignias were used at the discretion of individuals or sometimes entire families. This tradition persisted in Europe until the late eleventh century when Catholic Princes involved in the Conquest of Jerusalem granted their descendants the right to use specific mottos and insignias on their coats of arms. Experts in historical matters affirm the accuracy of this claim, challenging the erroneous belief that emperors have used the eagle symbol since the deity Jupiter and that Julius Caesar, identifying with this deity, passed it on to his heirs. Notable historians, including Enrique Spelmano and Juan Jacobo Chiflecio, confirm that hereditary family symbols only became widespread after the Conquest of Jerusalem. Don Lorenzo de Padilla, Archdeacon of Ronda, provides evidence that Spanish kings exclusively used the Cross as their symbol out of respect for their faith until King Alfonso VII of Castile, Emperor of Spain, divided his kingdom among his children, who then adopted distinct symbols: a gold castle on a red field for Castile and a red lion on a silver field for León.

Scholars like Gonzalo Argote de Molina and Dr. Pere de Salazar de Mendoza support this historical narrative. Historian Geronimo de Zurita notes that the kings of Aragon used a red cross with four Moorish kings' heads after their victory at the Battle of Acores under King Pedro I in 1096 AD. Father Pere Abarca, chronicler of the kings of Aragon, confirmed that these monarchs and their immediate successors used no other symbol than the Cross.

Until the late eleventh century, familial symbols were not hereditary but personal seals or mottos lasting only the creator's lifetime. Subsequently, coats of arms became permanent, often reflecting the family's name, residence, or estate. For example, the Lords of [4] Intentional asymmetry in Byzantine Imagery: The communion of the apostles in St Sophia of Ohrid and later instances, Byzantion, Vol 76 (2006), pp. 74-96, Peeters Publishers.

---

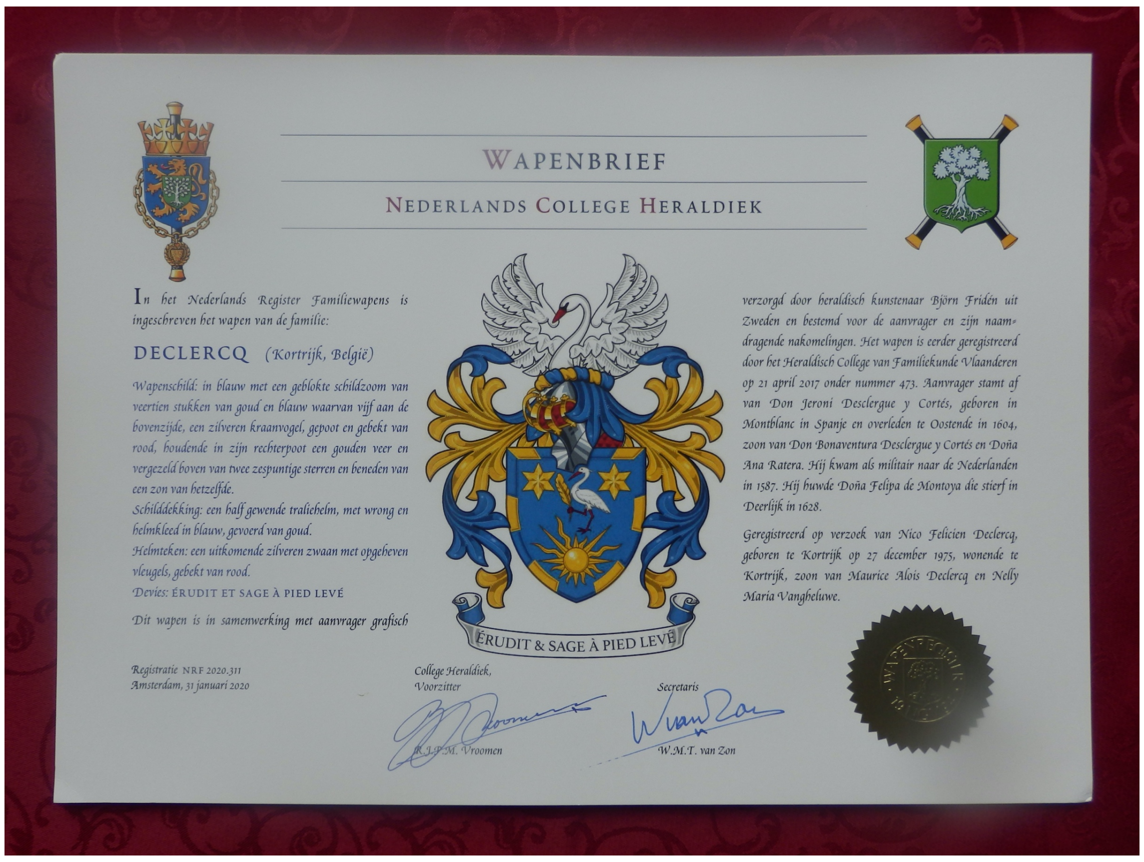
[5] 'Symmetry and asymmetry in aesthetics and the arts' , in European Review 13(S2):157-180 · October 2005

[6] citation from 'la vida del soldado' , by Ayuntamiento de Medina del Campo; contents also available in M. Martinez Laínez and J. M. Sánchez de Toc, 'Tercios de España, la infantería legendaria' , EDAF. 2006.



WAPENBRIEF

NEDERLANDS COLLEGE HERALDIEK

In het Nederlands Register Familiewapens is ingeschreven het wapen van de familie:

DECLERCQ (Kortrijk, België)

Wapenschild: in blauw met een geblokte schildzoom van veertien stukken van goud en blauw waarvan vijf aan de bovenzijde, een zilveren kraanvogel, gepoot en gebekt van rood, houdende in zijn rechterpoot een gouden veer en vergezeld boven van twee zespuntige sterren en beneden van een zon van hetzelfde.

Schilddekking: een half gewende traliehelm, met wrong en helmkleed in blauw, gevoerd van goud.

Helmteken: een uitkomende zilveren zwaan met opgeheven vleugels, gebekt van rood.

Devies: ÉRUDIT ET SAGE À PIED LEVÉ

Dit wapen is in samenwerking met aanvrager grafisch verzorgd door heraldisch kunstenaar Björn Fridén uit Zweden en bestemd voor de aanvrager en zijn naamdragende nakomelingen. Het wapen is eerder geregistreerd door het Heraldisch College van Familiekunde Vlaanderen op 21 april 2017 onder nummer 473. Aanvrager stamt af van Don Jeroni Desclergue y Cortés, geboren in Montblanc in Spanje en overleden te Oostende in 1604, zoon van Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés en Doña Ana Ratera. Hij kwam als militair naar de Nederlanden in 1587. Hij huwde Doña Felipa de Montoya die stierf in Deerlijk in 1628.

Geregistreerd op verzoek van Nico Felicien Declercq, geboren te Kortrijk op 27 december 1975, wonende te Kortrijk, zoon van Maurice Alois Declercq en Nelly Maria Vangheluwe.

ÉRUDIT & SAGE À PIED LEVÉ

Registratie NRF 2020.311
Amsterdam, 31 januari 2020

College Heraldiek,
Voorzitter
R.J.P.M. Vroomen

Secretaris
W.M.T. van Zon

Figure 4.3: Patent Letter, 'Wapenbrief Nederlands College Heraldiek' (NRF 2020-311), Amsterdam, 31 januari 2020. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

La Caſa de SILVA, como otras muchas de Eſpaña, vsò Armas muy diferentes del apellido con que yà era conocida; pues en ſepulcros antiguos ſuyos, dize Don Melchor de Teves, que ſe vè vn Leon rapante coronado. Parece q̃ el primero que le puſo en ſu Eſcudo, fue el Conde DON GOMEZ PAEZ DE SILVA, que viviò en el duodezimo ſiglo; y que teniendo pre

En el libro de la Caſa de Lerma

Figure 4.4: Ancient literature states that 'de Silva' uses as heraldic shield 'un Leon rapante coronado.' An example is shown of the use of the rampant lion in a heraldic coat of arms of the specific branch of de Silva from whom Shirani de Silva descends.

Vizcaya, usually named Lopes (from the Latin "lupus"), adopted two wolves as their arms. Similarly, the Cabreras of Galicia used a goat, and the Viscounts of Cardona adopted thistles. The Acunas, Padillas, and Ríos chose symbols reflecting their names.

The House of Silva, unlike others, employed arms unrelated to their surname. According to Don Melchor de Tevés, old tombs display a crowned rampant lion, first used by Count Don Gómez Páez de Silva in the twelfth century to honor his lineage from the Royal House of León. This symbol persisted in the Silva family, mirroring the arms of the Kings of León.

The adoption of the crowned lion by Count Don Gómez Páez de Silva is not definitive proof of royal descent but rather a personal choice. Nonetheless, other documented evidence supports the Silva family's royal ancestry. The similarity in colors and metals between the Silva and Royal León arms has long been indicative of shared bloodlines. The Ponce family, descendants of Aldonza Alonso and Aldonza Martinez de Silva, both daughters of King Alonso IX of León, and the Benavides and Tenorios, descendants of the same prince, also use the lion symbol.

The Silva family's continued use of this symbol, corroborated by various scholars and displayed in prestigious locations like the Sala de Los Linajes in the Palace of the Duke of the Infantado in Guadalajara, underscores their noble heritage. Despite some variations in depiction, the lion remains a central element of the Silva's arms, signifying nobility and virtue.

In conclusion, noble families did not possess hereditary arms but personal symbols until the late eleventh century. Adopting permanent coats of arms began later, often reflecting the family's heritage and achievements. The House of Silva, using the crowned lion, exemplifies this tradition, linking its symbol to its royal ancestry and noble status.

Chapter 5

The Town and the Duchy of Montblanc in Spain.

Figure 5.1: Iglesia de Santa Maria Mayor of Montblanc (2018). In this church were the Desclergues baptized, while their burials took place in the nearby San Francesc Convent. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

The ducal town of Montblanc, a medieval settlement, is 45 km from Tarragona, towards Lleida. Montblanc was established in the 12th century and has retained its historic appearance, mainly due to recent restorations. The town's romantic streets and alleyways, along with the picturesque Plaça Major at its center, which houses the Casal dels Desclergue and the Townhall, are notable features. Impressive walls with well-preserved towers encircle the city.

In the early 11th century, a settlement called Duesaigües was founded at the confluence of the Anguera and Francolí rivers. Count Ramón Berenguer IV granted tax-free licenses to specific villages, including Duesaigües, to encourage repopulation in New Catalonia. 1155, the town was renamed Vilasalva (villa salvada = tax-free city). Due to frequent floods and the need for fortification on the road from Lleida to Tarragona, King Alfonso II decided to relocate the population to a small mountain near Vilasalva, resulting in the founding of Montblanc in February 1163 by Ramon Berenguer IV, with its municipal charter granted by King Peter II. During the 14th and 15th centuries, Montblanc frequently hosted the kings and the Parliament (the Corts), meeting there five times.

Following the Treaty of Olorón in 1287, Montblanc and Barcelona, Huesca, Lérida, and Cervera were granted jurisdictional privileges. On several occasions between 1307 and 1414, the Crown of Aragon court sessions were held in Montblanc. In 1392, King Joan I established the Duchy of Montblanc, a title for his successors. The city was a significant trading center in the Middle Ages, with the creation of the Duchy in 1387 marking its peak. However, Montblanc was sacked and burned during the Catalan uprising in the 17th century, culminating in the War of the Segadors in 1640, leading to its loss of economic and political influence. The Spanish Succession War (1701-1714) saw the town lose all privileges, and the Carlist Wars (1833-1849) marked its final decline.

The Gothic church of Santa Maria, known as the Cathedral of the Mountain due to its size and location atop a promontory, testifies to Montblanc's medieval power. It houses the 14th-century altarpiece of Sant Bernat and Sant Bernabé, featuring intricately carved scenes of the saints' lives. The church-hospital of Sant Marçal is notable for its 15th-century mural of Sant Cristòfol and a Gothic sculpted window. The Alenyà Palace, reflecting Montblanc's prosperous past, is a Gothic building with a large central, round-arched portal and slender windows. Though much altered over the years, it now serves as the headquarters of the Consell Comarcal de la Conca de Barberà (the County Council of Conca de Barberà).

Montblanc derives, as is said, its name not from a snowy mountain but the barren hill above the old town, Pla de Santa Bárbara, where the soil was infertile ('blanc' in ancient Catalan). The medieval town is encircled by massive fortified walls constructed during the reign of Peter III of Aragon (1239-1285), with 17 of the original 28 towers still in good condition. One of the most renowned buildings in Montblanc is the Casal dels Desclergue on the Plaça Major, constructed by our ancestors. The blazon of Montblanc includes a flory 'mont blanc' (Catalan for 'white mountain') and the royal arms of Catalonia-Aragon (four red pales on gold). In 1387, King John I gave his brother, the infant Martin (later King Martin I), the Duchy of Montblanc. Consequently, the crown atop the arms became a duke's crown, used by the local council since at least 1320.

The burial site of the Desclergues of Montblanc remains unknown, though it is likely the 'San Francesc Convent,' as inferred from information related to Francesc Desclergue of Montblanc. However, all graves were removed in the 19th century during the installation of an alcohol factory, which destroyed the old pavement and tombs. Today, only fragments of old tombstones have been preserved[1][2].

---

[1] Eduard Contijoch i Miquel, 'L'empresa Alcohols Contijoch de Montblanc: una fàbrica installada en un antic convent. (1882-1951),' podall, 38-65, 2015)

[2] personal communication with Josep Maria Grau

Figure 5.2: View, in May 2023, by local inhabitants, from the Iglesia de Santa Maria Mayor of Montblanc, shown in Figure 5.1, on the town. In the middle, the Casal dels Desclergue is seen. On the left is the Sant Miquel church. Far in the back is the San Francesc Convent where the burials of the Desclergues took place. Courtesy of Jesus Mart Casan and Montblanc Medieval.

It is important to note that many documents have been lost in fires and other disasters, as in many European places. Most information about our family in Montblanc comes from other researchers who have published their knowledge. We refer to these works whenever applicable rather than showing the original documents, except those found in the Pedrolo archives. Further details, for instance, can be found in Josep M. T. Grau Pujol i Manel Güell, 'La crònica negra de la destrucció d'arxius a la demarcació de Tarragona,' Revista Catalana d'Arxivística, Llegal 18, 2001. This work describes how much of the archives of Montblanc were destroyed during events associated with 'segadors,' 'filipistes,' 'napoleònides,' 'revolucionaris,' 'carlins' and 'nacionals,' but also due to 'robatoris' and 'furts' and even 'confiscacions,' 'ocultació' and above all 'incendis,' 'humitats,' and 'inundacions.' Approximately a quarter of the Montblanc archives were destroyed, with higher losses in certain periods.

The historical narrative surrounding the Cathars of Albi in France, a Christian sect deemed heterodox by the Catholic Church, unfolds a compelling saga of religious conflict and societal upheaval. The Albigensian Crusade, commencing in 1209, was a concerted effort by the Catholic Church and secular powers, notably the French monarchy, to suppress the Cathars and other dissenting factions in the Languedoc region of southern France. The Cathars faced persecution tactics ranging from military assaults to ecclesiastical inquisitions and coerced conversions, culminating in a protracted campaign of subjugation that lasted until the early 14th century. In the aftermath, a diaspora of Cathars sought refuge in various enclaves, notably Gerona, Barcelona, and Tarragona, alongside settlements along the Francoli riverbanks. Montblanc, a municipality near Tarragona, traces its origins to an era known as 'Campo Barberano' and 'Castrum Barbara,' initially marked by scant human habitation. Its demographic landscape transformed in the 12th century when it was granted to the Knights of the Order of the Temple, heralding increased settlement activity. By the early 13th century, the name 'Montisalbi' was bestowed upon the locale, denoting the 'white hill' due to its barren terrain.

This toponym has a deeper connection with Albi in France, reflecting a migratory influx of settlers from Albi during the height of the Cathar movement. Montblanc's proximity to the town of Albi underscores a shared lineage influenced by Albi and the spread of Catharism in the 12th and 13th centuries. Although our ancestors, the Desclergue lineage, had not yet established roots in Montblanc during this period, tracing their domicile to Barcelona further north, it is plausible that early settlers of Montblanc and the Desclergue name could have originated from Albi or Castres in Languedoc and Occitania.

Thus, the Desclergue progenitors who later settled in Montblanc were likely aware of their ties to Albi in France, intertwined with the etymological origins of Montisalbi, perpetuating an ancestral legacy steeped in historical resonance[3][4][5]. We can cite "El 1322, la declaració de Bernat Laufret de Tinhacdavant de Jacme Fournier a Pàmies relatava la seva trobada amb heretges a Puigcerdà, Montblanc, Tarragona i Cervera, localitats on es va trobar amb diversos creients càtars"[6].

---

[3] Jorge Ventura i Subirats, "El catarismo en Cataluña," Boletín de la Real Academia de las Buenas. Letras de Barcelona, XXVIII, 1959-1960, pp. 75-168.

[4] Grau Torras, Sergi. "Historiografía del catarismo en Cataluña: estudios y documentos (Siglo XIII)," Acta historica et archaeologica mediaevalia, 2010, Núm. 30, p. 375-408.

[5] Grau Torras, S. (2018). Els càtars a la provincia eclesiàstica de Tarragona. In Les minories socials i la justicia: Època medieval i moderna (pp. 71-104)

[6] Sergi Grau Torras, Universitat Autònoma de Barcelona, "Els càtars a la província eclesiàstica de Tarragona", 2018, AAVV, Les minories socials i la justícia. Època medieval i moderna, Tarragona: Arxiu Arxidiocesà de Tarragona, 2018, pp. 71-104.

Figure 5.3: Left, we find a close-up of a map of 1608 of Catalonia, with a beautiful depiction of the Francoli River passing by Montblanc (top) and flowing in the Mediterranean sea in Tarragona. The entire map, drawn in Antwerp, is shown in Figure 5.6. On November 1, 2018, shown in the middle, the author signed the Golden Book of the town of Montblanc, invited by the mayor of the town Mr Josep Andreu Domingo and in the presence of historian Eduard Contijoch. Right, we observe the Carrer Desclergue, behind the Casal dels Desclergue of Montblanc and also the San Francesc Church. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 5.4: The author's children in front of the Casal dels Desclergue (right) and at El Foradot of Montblanc (left)

Figure 5.5: Left are two images of 1978, of the Francoli River (snapshots from a moving image), one of which shows the author with his mother bathing in the fresh water in summer. The two images are followed by a 1979 image, of the author and his father, near Tarragona. Right is a view through the old bridge on the Francoli River at Montblanc (2018). (Declercq de Silva Archive)

CATALONIÆ
PRINCIPATVS
NOVISSIMA
ET ACCVRATA
DESCRIPTIO.
Antverpiæ excudebat Ioannes Baptista Vrints.

Figure 5.6: Map of the Principality of Catalonia, 1608. A close-up of the Francoli River was shown in Figure 5.3. The map was drawn in Antwerp, in the Spanish Netherlands. Note that all the documents in the Pedrolo archives, dating from the 17th century, that mention the Desclergues refer to, in order of size of the administrative powers of Montblanc, the 'Principado de Cathaluña' , 'Aragon' and 'España' . Montblanc is referred to as 'Mont Blanch' or 'Montesalbi' and 'Montisalbi,' as the 'cabeça de vegueria y de ducado' . The entity in charge of Catalonia, on behalf of the King, is referred to as the 'Virrey de Cathaluña' . The areas where the Desclergues have been military active outside Spain are, according to the same documents, 'Francia' , 'Flandes' and 'Países Bajos' .

Figure 5.7: Contemporary paintings of the Plaza Mayor of Montblanc and the House of Desclergue. The original paintings can be found at the Museum of La Conca de Barbera in Montblanc. Work is seen of Joan Fuguet (1953), Juli Garola (1956) and A. Potan.

Chapter 6

A Glimpse on the Desclergues

Regarding the ancestors bearing the name Desclergue, it is documented [1] that the family was "noble and very powerful, possessing extensive properties and owning mills and orchards along the banks of the Francolí. They constructed the splendid mansion at the Plaça Major, which still stands today despite numerous internal and external renovations. An eminent figure from this family, Francesc des Clergue, a royal and legal notary of Montblanc who held a significant role in local politics, was instrumental in saving his manor from the devastating fire of 1652 and other subsequent calamities that befell the city." This resilience in the face of adversity is a testament to the strength and character of the Desclergue family. The Desclergue family, with its noble blood (Hiraldo de Sangre), and several members knighted, has a long-standing and respected lineage. Historical chronicles often describe them as having purple blood, a testament to their noble heritage and significant contributions to Spanish history.

Our research on the Spanish lineage of the Desclergue family was conducted with utmost care and thoroughness. It initially relied on José Sanchez Real's La Casa Desclergue de Montblanc[2], supplemented by various online sources and archives. Subsequently, we also consulted Salvador J. Rovira i Gómez's La baixa noblesa de la Conca de Barberà a l'edat moderna[3]. This meticulous research process ensures the accuracy and reliability of the information presented.

A specific reference to Jeroni (Geronimo) Desclergue notes that the Desclergue were Cavalleros Donzeles, or Knights.

Several sources posit that the Desclergue family was already recognized as nobility during Jaime II de Aragón, el Justo (Valencia 1267–Barcelona 1327). According to contemporary records, this suggests that the maternal line, through which the Desclergue name was passed following marriage with a 'Torró' (descendant of Du Guesclin, himself also a descendant of the Desclergues), played a significant role even before Du Guesclin's presence in Spain. Numerous sources corroborate this, and it is also extensively outlined in this book in the chapters concerning the Desclergues in Occitania and Mallorca. For instance, on page 235 of Pablo Piferrer y Fábregas's Mallorca, Recuerdos y Bellezas de España, it is noted that "In the year 1237, Señor Infante D. Pere ruled Mallorca, who, on June 8th, confirmed the consuls of Mallorca to save and defend the island with an order to Pere Urtiz, Roberto de Tarragona, Bernardo Español, Guillermo Hugo, Ferrer de Olceto, Valentin de Torres, Ramón Desclerga, Ramón Cortés, Rollan Sabater, and Arnaido Vidal". This assertion is further supported by Álvaro Campaner y Fuertes in Cronicon Mayoricense. Noticias y relaciones históricas de Mallorca desde 1229 á 1800 extraidas de las apuntaciones, diarios, misceláneas y obras manuscritas de D. Guillermo Terrassa (etc.)[4]:

On page 127: "In the year 1276, Berenguer Arnaldo de Illa was governor of Mallorca, and the jurors of this city and kingdom were: Pere Savardera, knight, Bernardo de Zaragoza, Francesc Desclerga, Guillermo Valentí, Bernardo de Vich, and Martin de Mayol."

In the introduction: "The agreement made between the two brothers, the King of Aragon and the King of Mallorca, in the previous year is well-known; and it was agreed to swear to the said concordat the universities and trustees of the states of the King of Mallorca. Consequently, King Jaime of Mallorca, on December 10, 1279, summoned at the Church of Santa Eulalia the principal subjects and, in the presence of the King, granted authority to those subjects, constituting, ordering, and appointing Guillermo de Torrella, Fernando Rodríguez, Jaime San Martí, knights; Roberto de Bellvey, Benito Valentí, Francesc Desclerga, Francesc Burgués, Benito de Zaragoza, and Arnaldo Burgués, as syndics and attorneys of the University of Mallorca, to swear and commit themselves on behalf of the said university to uphold the composition made between the said brother kings."

"In the year 1281, during the lieutenancy of D. Berenguer in Mallorca, the jurors of the city and kingdom were: Pere de Verdera, knight, Bernardo de Zaragoza, Francesc Desclerga, Guillermo Valentí, Bernardo de Vich, and Martin de Mayol."

The Desclergue family name appears in the list of Catalonian nobility, specifically in Cataluña (255), dos (48), page 71[5].

---

[1] L. Vives y Poblet, Fills illustres del segle XII al XX. (extraído del manuscrito Notes históriques de Montblanch) Vives y Poblet, Fills illustres del segle XII al XX. (extraído del manuscrito Notes históriques de Montblanch) 'Quintos 1970' (Montblanc: 1970).

[2] Jose Sanchez Real, La Casa Desclergue de Montblanc (Tarragona: Caja de Ahorros Provincial, 1974), depósito legal B 19.565 - 1974, printed by Graficas Lorente, Ciudad 13, Barcelona 2, Spain.

[3] Salvador J. Rovira i Gómez, La baixa noblesa de la Conca de Barberà a l'edat moderna (Montblanc: Centre d'Estudis de la Conca de Barberà, 2005), series: Monografies, Montblanc, Spain, Volume 12.

[4] Álvaro Campaner y Fuertes, Cronicon Mayoricense. Noticias y relaciones históricas de Mallorca desde 1229 á 1800 extraidas de las apuntaciones, diarios, misceláneas y obras manuscritas de D. Guillermo Terrassa (etc.) (Palma de Mallorca: Establecimiento tipografico de Juan Colomar y Salas, Editor, 1881).

[5] Luis Valero de Bernabé y Martín de Eugenio, Análisis de las características generales de la Heráldica Gentilicia Española y de las singularidades heráldicas existentes entre los diversos territorios históricos hispanos (Madrid: Universidad Complutense de Madrid, Facultad de Geografía e Historia, 2007), ISBN: 978-84-669-3028-4.

Chapter 7

Onomastics

7.1 Names in a Genealogical Context

Napoleon Bonaparte standardized family names in Belgium. Prior to this, family names existed but were not fixed; they evolved based on convenience, local traditions, and variations. In France, family names were standardized in 1539 by King François I through the ordinance of Villers-Cotterêts.

Our Declercq ancestors in Spain spelled their name in various ways. It is generally accepted that their name was Desclergue or Desclergues, pronounced as Declercg, with an ending sound between 'g' and 'k.' Historian Eduard Contijoch explains that in Catalan, words tend to shorten by ignoring the final vowel and hardening the last consonant, e.g., Francisco becomes Francesc, and Madrid becomes Madrit. This specific 'g' does not exist in Flanders, where the Desclergues arrived in the late 16th century. The Flemish 'g' is pronounced like the 'J' in 'Jimenez,' whereas the French would prefer '-gue' to express a softer ending. Consequently, our ancestors' family name often appeared with different endings, such as '-qz,' '-cqz,' '-qç,' '-cqç,' and sometimes '-gh' or 'qh,' '-gue,' or '-que.' This variation in spelling was identified through Georges Picavet's research at the Plantin-Moretus museum, where he found a 1556 text (see Figure 7.1 on page 34).

Upon arriving in Belgium in the late 16th century, our ancestors bore a Spanish name with a Flemish and French counterpart, Declercq (spelled as Declercq, De Clerc, Declerc, Declerck, De Clerck, etc.). As they settled in Flanders, subsequent generations adapted their name to the local version we use today: Declercq. This natural process was even accelerated by marrying with a Declercq lineage in Kortrijk. For example, a 1624 Spanish book mentions the Flemish family name Declercq/De Clerck in relation to historical figures, indicating no resistance to using the Flemish version of Desclergue by our Spanish family. Historical figures include Gil de Clerck (1437) and Clerck (1452) in present-day Belgium, and chancellor Juan le Clerc (Jean le Clerc, 1418-1430) and Pere Declercq (Pierre Declercq, 1435) in present-day France[1]. Initially, the name was often Declercqh, Declercz, or Declercqs, with the 'q' sometimes replaced by a 'g.' As mentioned earlier, this 'z' might also have been an 'h,' hence '-qh' or '-gh' endings were common. They likely retained the Spanish pronunciation in the first century and insisted on spelling it differently from the local version. Notably, 16th-century Castilian printed books used the character ç for z. As outlined in this book, the Desclergues in Catalonia came from Occitanie. Their name was Clergue or Des Clergue in Occitanie, and this transformed into Desclergue in Catalonia.

The ancient origin of the name, whether in Belgium, France, or Spain, is likely 'Clericus,' derived from the profession 'Clericus Romanum.' Certainly, in our case, this stems from the fact that they were scribers.

Thus, two individuals named Declercq or any of its variants are not necessarily more closely related than any other randomly chosen persons. Establishing a blood relationship requires specific genealogical research combined with DNA analysis. For this book, the author has researched the paternal ancestors of various Declercqs, finding no blood relations, including Flemish writer René Declercq, several Belgian politicians, and the Clerque de Wissocq and Clerque de Wissocq de Sousberghe families, none of whom are included in this book.

In contemporary discussions about our family name, one might question whether it should be written as one word or two, and whether it should end in -cq or -ck. Investigating our ancestors reveals that spelling in official documents depended on the village and the official (priest, notary, civil servant). However, over the past four centuries, our ancestors consistently wrote their name as Declercq, and before that, in Spanish Castilian or Catalan, and even in Latin. In old Spanish documents, the name appears in various forms: Clerga, Clergua, Clergue, Clergues, des Clergue, des Clergues, dez Clergue, dez Clergues, Dezclergue, Desclergue, Declergue, Dezclerga, Dezclergua, Dezclergues, and Desclergue.

Genealogical research on common names like Declercq requires reconstructing family clusters, historical context, and acquaintances rather than relying on single documents. Our family's mobility regarding marriages and residences further complicates research, which is reflected in the extensive efforts behind this book.

Experienced genealogists might find the following information redundant, but for novices, there is much to learn about names. Historically, the exact spelling of a name was less important than the individual's identity. In modern society, each character is crucial for identification. In the past, priests often identified first names by corresponding Saints and used synonyms or variations. For example, a person named 'Mayke' could appear as Maria, Maria Anna, etc., and a person named Anna could also be Ana, Joanna, or Anna-Maria. Willem could be Wilhelmus, William, or Guillaume. Experienced genealogists can identify individuals behind local names, but foreign names pose additional challenges. Numerous examples in this book demonstrate priests' difficulties with foreign names, and family names present even more significant challenges. Modern readers might not associate Verelst with Vanderelst, but historically, both were considered equivalent. Thus, within the same family, names might vary: Xelst, Verelst, Vanderelst, Verhelst, or Verstraete, Vierstrate, Verstraeten, Vanderstraeten. Family names were often regionalized, and switching between French and Flemish versions was common (e.g., Verhaeghe / La Hague; Patin / Pattijn; De Clerq / Le Clercq). Foreign names were either adapted to local versions or spelled phonetically. Examples include Irish names like 'O' Daly' becoming 'Dale' in Waregem in 1653.

Genealogists' choices often reflect their national, political, or traditional backgrounds. Some transform every name into Flemish or French, while others adhere to the baptism certificate's spelling. This book attempts to maintain continuity without following any particular tradition.

Chapter 42 presents a case study of Pieter Jan Renier's wife from Deerlijk, where social pressure transformed a family name from

---

[1] Anales de Flandes, y provincias Belgicas, Copuestos por Emanuel Sueyro, Cavallero del Habito de Christo & caet. Repartidos en dos cuerpos. Con sus tablas copiosissimas. Dirigidos al Rey Don Felipe Quarto Nuestro Sennor. Tomo Segundo. En Amberes en casa de Pere Juan Bellero, son privilegio. MDCXXIV.

Pes and Peis to Peers over 2-3 generations. The original name might have been Spanish Peset, German Peiss, or Italian Pesce. Chapter 49 discusses the construction of a Chapel at Deerlijk and the French name ’de le Quellerie,’ originating from ’La Flandre.’ In Flemish-speaking Flanders, this name is rare, while Caluwier/Callewier is common. There was a tendency to transform names to their Flemish versions in the 17th century. Examples include Jose Quellerie and Elisabeth Stalins (granddaughter of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05)), whose names appeared in various formats: Calluier (daughter Elisabeth’s baptism in Deerlijk, 1643), Kelduier (son Jean’s baptism in Deerlijk, 1644), and Kellewier (Elisabeth’s marriage in Ooigem, 1682). Other forms include Qaullierie (Ypres, 1663), Calluyer (Kain, 1689), and Quelleryе (Hollebeke). Moisés Selfa from the Universitat de Lleida classifies Desclergue as a typological surname derived from an ecclesiastical post[2]. Note, however, that the profession of clericus predated the ecclesiastic and was the Latin name for scribers.

7.2 Polymorfic Names

Above, we already mentioned the names Declercq and Patin as polymorphic names in different countries under different forms: Declercq - Desclergue, Patyn - Patin - Patiño.

For reasons of general interest, we have investigated the literature to discover specific examples of names that are either susceptible to polymorphic use or which have, in particular instances for individual persons and their descendants, been transformed from one language to another. The list is shown to open the minds of anyone doing genealogy in an international arena. One of the fascinating aspects of genealogical research is observing the evolution of names in ancestry trees. Take, for instance, the name ’Mariasi,’ which transforms into ’Mariage’ and eventually ’Hauwelyck’ ; or ’Valzolio,’ which changes to ’Vausseul’ and then ’Van Solo’ and ’Van Soldij’ ; or ’Portillo,’ which becomes ’Portielje.’

In Flanders, well-known Spanish names are Balduc(k) or Balduyck (from Balduque, which is Spanish for Hertogenbosch). Hurtado, Furtado, Legon (from the Spanish Leon); Pais/Paix/Pays/Paiis/Peijs/Peis (from the Spanish Paix), Real, Tavares, Varga/Vargas/Vargaz, Prat.

In the Spanish Archivo General de Indias, we have found numerous names of people who left Spain for the Americas. From that list, we have extracted many names that were either indeed from Belgium or that could and may have easily been exchanged with Flemish names and vice versa. We list them below. However, if a person has such a name, it does not automatically mean that his name was once exchanged for a Spanish or Flemish name by one of his ancestors. Still, it shows that it is possible, and in several cases, we have noted such an exchange either when a Flemish person settled in Spain or when a Spanish person dwelled in Flanders. Some names have changed so little that families in Spain might still have a real Flemish name or Flemish families may always be around who have an official Spanish name. We also refer here to cases from the 16th and 17th centuries. In the past centuries, there has also been an exodus linked to the Spanish Civil War and tourism in the other. During the Spanish Netherlands, the authorities typically transformed Flemish names into Spanish, and bodies in the Spanish Netherlands turned them into local versions. Sometimes, this was done either on the semantics grounds (Del Ponte - Verbrugghe, Cortillo - Lindenhove) or based on homonyms or homophones (De Souza - Lesage or Amaya - Ameye). Sometimes, names are so close in both languages that it is natural to transform (Declercq - Desclergue, Maas - de la Maza, de Vos - de Poch).

Below is a list of names, either of Belgian inhabitants who appear in Spain on the list of the Spanish Archivo General de Indias or some other sources, or of people, on that list, carrying a name which is clearly originating from Belgium, or would very easily be transferred from the Spanish version to the Belgian version or vice versa and would hardly be identifiable as foreign. The linguistic intricacies of genealogical research are evident in these names, where similarities are either semantic, phonetic, or both, often rendering the original name unrecognizable.

Esqueldes (’Verschelde’), Del Haya (’Verhaeghe’), Somera (’Somers’), Catoira (’Catoir’), De Pau (may be ’De Pauw’), De Mora del Saz (’De Moor - ’Saxe’ or ’Van ’t Sas’), Fuentes (often used for ’Fonteyne’ or ’La Fontaine’), De la Rosa (may be ’Roose’ , ’Van Roost’), De Molina (may be ’Vermeulen’), Casanuevas (’Nieuwenhuyse’), De la Mota (’Vermote’ , ’Vermaut’), Franco (may in some cases be ’Francken’), De Henaeo (’De Hainaut’ , ’Van Henegouwen’), Bamboren (’Vanvooren’), Roman (widespread in both countries), De Licht, Lanbermay (’Lambermont’), De Paris (’Van Parijs’), Del Campo (’Vercaemst, Deschamps, Vandevelde’), Del Olmo (’Vanolmen’), Mestre (’Meesters’ , ’Demeester’), Blanco (may in some cases be ’De Witte’), Bonifaz (’Boniface’), De Cordoba y Sande / de Sola y Sande (’Vandesande’), De la Cruz (’Vercruyse’), De Landeche (’De Lander’ , ’Van Lander’), De Valverde (’Groenendael’), Dufosse, Potflis (perhaps ’Powis’ or ’Peutevin’ or ’Pothuis’), Rosel (’Rosseel’), Van Hoenacquer (’Vanhoenacker’), Caballero /Cavallero (perhaps ’de ridder’), De Lepe (’Van Lepe’), De Yepes (’Ypes’ , ’IJpes’), Adame (may be ’Adams’), Loaysa / De losa (’De Loos’ , ’Loyson’ , ’Louage’), Campana (may be ’Van Buiten’ , ’Van de Velde’), De Leiza (may be ’Delhaize’ , ’Deleye’), De Roo, De Roa (’De Roo’), De Viana (’Viane’ , ’De Viane’ , ’Viaene’ , . . .), de Lamparte (’Lampaert’), Cornehjo (’Cornelius’), Pelgrom, de Sousa / de Sosaya / de Sosa / De Suazo (may in some cases be ’Le Sage’), de Amaya (’Ameye’), Carlier, Paz (’Pas’), De Corta (’De Corte’), De los Cameros (’Vercameren’), Haeneke (’Hinneken’), Notere (’De Notere’), De Lara (’Delaere’), De Lea (’De Leye’), De Lira (’Van Lier’), Overlante (’Overlant’ , ’Van Overland’), Herck, Van Covenbergh, De Molina (’Vermeulen’), De Montaña (’Van den Berghe’), Lainez, Betancur, De Baeza (’Buyse’), Del Hoyo / Loya (’Van Looij’), Rico (’Derijcke’), Luque (’Luyckx’), Celis, Vanresvique (’Van Rijswijk’), Vandeval (’Vandewalle’), Bosque / De Bosch (’Bos’ , ’Bossche’ , Vandenbossche’), De Miguelena (’Vanmechelen’), del Puerto (’Vanderpoorten’ , ’Verhaven’), Freyra (’Frère’), De la O / De la Hoz (’De Lahaut’), Duarte (’d’ Huart’), Van diepenbrock (’Vandiepenbrouck’), Ferrer, De Tove (’Detobbe’), De la Guelga (’De Gelcke’), Federigue (’Federicq / Federique’), Tabares/Tavares, Del Duque (’Duc’ , ’Duque’ , ’Den Hertog’ , ’Den Hartog’), Luchit (’de Luchy’), De Mir (’Mirre’ , ’Le Myre’), Dubois y Casanova (’Dubois/Van den Bosche/Vanhoutte - Van Nieuwenhuyze’), Leigrave (’De Grave’), Gata (Spanish immigrants in Belgium, 16-17th century), Noeli / De la Natividad (’De Noyelle’ , ’De Noel’ , ’Denoelle’), Leon (may be ’De Leeuw’), De Olivares (’Olivier’ , ’Ollevier’), De Lovera (’Desloovere’), Bruin (’De Bruine’), Hermans, Fresco (’Devries’), Lopez (’De Wolf’), Lambertengo (’Lambert’), Falcon (’De Valk’), Fortun (’Fortuyn’), Negrón (’De Swarte’), Estebanez (’Stevens’), Claros (’Declare’), De Lili (’Vanrijsel’ , ’De Lille’), Perez (’Peers’), De la Plaza (’Verplaatse’ , ’Vandeplas’ , ’de la Place’), Van Hemert, Lison (’Lyson’), De Verjuste (’Verhoust’), De via (’Vandeweghe’), Del saz (’D’ alsace’ / ’van ’t sas’), Bequer (’Becker’), De Mestas (’Mestdagh’), De Portes (may be ’Depoorter’), Brandes (’Vandenbrande’), De Monsalve (’Van Wittenberghe’), Gough (’Hoghe’), De Sayas (’Saey’), De Nis (’Denis’ , ’Denijs’ , ’Denys’), De Zelaeta (’Van Zelzate’), Colarte (’Colart’), De Mon (’Demon’), Grande (’De Groote’), De Camino (’Vandeweghe’), De Conique (’De Coninck’), Peri, Patiño (’Pattyn’ , ’Patin’), Van der Becquen (’Verbeke’ , ’Vanderbeken’), De la Maza (’Maas’ , ’Maes’ , ’Maessen’ , ’Vermassen’), De Bel (’Debels’), De Echauz (’De l’ Escaut’ , ’Verschelde’ , ’Vanderschelden’), De la Calle (’Calle’), De Mena / De Menesis (’Van Menen’ , ’Demenin’), De Mesa / De Mesain (’Vermeersch’ , ’Vandermeersch’ , ’Tafel’ , ’Table’ , ’Demees’), De Monesterio (’Van Klooster’), Enriquez (’Hendricks’ , ’Heyndericks’), Gil (’Gilis’), Croquer (’De Croock’), Pinquet (’Piquet’ , ’Pincet’), Martinez (’Martens’), Miciano (’Messiaen’ , ’Missiaens’), De Lago (’Vermeer’ , ’Vermeers’ , ’Vandermeersch’ , ’Vandevyver’), De Ostos (’Hoste’ , ’Vanoost’), Van Hoecnaquer (’Van Honacker’), Vergara (’Verhaert’), Pardo, Mariscal (’Marechal’), Vandenbrouch (’Van den Broucke’), Marchan (’Marchand’), De los Reyes (’Coninckx’), De los Rios (’Rivière’), De Coen y Campos (’Decoene / Cohen - Vandevelde / Vancamp’), Betens (’Bettens’), Beyens, Camps,

---

[2] ’About the concept of onomastic identity: the privileges’ parchments of the city of Balaguer (1211-1352), Imago Temporis. Medium Aevum, VIII (2014) 135-149, ISSN 1888-3931

De Garate ('Degroote' , 'Degras'), De Vilde ('Dewilde'), De Leira ('Vanleer' , 'Vanlier'), Rigolene ('Rigole'), De Velreder ('Develder'), Huet, Adriansen ('Adriaensen'), Barte ('Baert'), Mariscal ('Marechal'), Groenenberg (became Monteverde in Spain) , Van Damme (became BANDAMA), Grimont (became Grimón), Lefevre (became Febles / Febres), Fonteyne (becames Fuentes), Severeyn, Kleywegt, Van Scoit, Jambooz, Zweedyk, Van Pamelen, Houtman, Geizzelez, Höffken, Wijnen, Maas, Van Putten, Van Houten, Van Dalle, Westerling (Westerlin, Heusterlin, Hesterlin, Esterlin).

We found an interesting Master thesis by Janna Everaert[3] concerning Spanish who lived in Flanders in the 16th century, before the religious conflicts.

Some persons were indicated as 'flamencos' , while others were probably Flemish or Dutch but without complete certainty. Examples are: de la Bala, Claveson, Criter, Equilfe, Fermaute, Firens, Hermis, Hermosen, de Latre, de Morin, de Olanda, de Proudhome, Rrubin, Tulaime, de Urio, Mayeu, de la Corte, Flamenco, Gastebanove, de Flandes, de Amberes, de Bruselas, de Cambray, de la Haya, de Bucq.

Similar work, written by Raymon Fagel[4], mentions some interesting facts. The author found 38 presumable Spanish family names at Middelburg during the periods of 'Filips de Schone' and 'Karel V' : Abrio, Aguirre, Aleman, Amedo, Burgos, Cachopin, las Casas, Castro, Cavallero, Cenoese, Gaypense, Garcia, Gerbier, Henriquez, Hiniosa, Jaimes, Lario, Lescaltes, Libano, la Loo, Lopez; Ortiz, Palma, Payz, Perez, Pinto, Posque, Poza, Rodrigues, Salinas, Segura, Sevilla, Ugarte, Unibasso, Valladolid, Villamonte, Ximenes, to name a few.

Raymond Fagel also writes that, for instance, the Spanish family name 'De Valladolid' was sometimes registered in the Netherlands (prior to the Dutch revolt), as 'Van der Lyt' . He also stated, what is described in Chapter 8.5.6, that a political bond was established between Castile and the Northern and Southern Netherlands through the marriage between 'Johanna de Waanzinnige' with 'Filips de Schone' , in 1496.

Economic connections between the two 'countries' predate the specified period. From the mid-15th century, Spain's economy experienced significant growth, establishing robust relations and representations in major cities such as London, Bordeaux, Nantes, Florence, Lisbon, Bruges, and even Middelburg. Although the Genoese network was more extensive, the Spanish network was also considerable. Moreover, post-1492, the New World played a pivotal role in the Spanish economy. Cities in Flanders, Brabant, Zeeland, and Holland competed to host Spanish merchants. This paper highlights intriguing aspects concerning Burghers ('bourgeois foraines' or 'poorters'). Spanish traders were often well-protected by their trading nations within local cities, which granted them specific duties, rights, and privileges. In other instances, it was advantageous for Spaniards to become Burghers.

There were several pathways to acquiring Burgher status. The simplest method was marriage to a female Burgher, which typically resulted in losing privileges as 'Spanish foreigners,' conferring local status instead. This was beneficial in regions where locals enjoyed better treatment than foreigners. Offspring of mixed marriages were also considered locals, inheriting the status of Bourgeoisie or 'poorterschap,' as well as their parents' businesses. Thus, while maintaining their Spanish identity and citizenship, they were subject to local laws like other residents. This necessitated maximum integration into the local district to obtain the best advantages. During the period discussed, most Spanish city inhabitants were involved in overseas trade. The paper notes that the Spanish remained mobile, relocating to cities offering better treatment or visiting trade and family contacts in other regions, even across different counties. Furthermore, Spanish integration was not unidirectional; within the same generation, some family members married Dutch individuals, while others married Spaniards.

The most common Spanish family names found at Middelburg appear to be De Sevilla, Deque, De Valladolid, Da la Palma, Hiniosa, De la Loo, Poza, Ximenez, Ximenes, Pinto, Ortiz, Arnedo, Abrio, Aguirre, Aleman, Burgos, Cachopin, las Casas, Castro, Cavallero, Certoese, Dies, Gaypense, Garcia, Gerbier, Henriquez, Jaimes, Lario, Lescalles, Libano, la Loo, Lopez, Payz, Perez, Posque, Rodrigues, Salinas, Segura, Sevilla, Ugarte, Unibasso, Valladolid, Villamonte.

The paper provides a comprehensive account of how the Spanish maintained significant intra-community contacts, specifically among their respective regional groups (e.g., Aragonese with Aragonese, Castilians with Castilians, Andalusians with Andalusians, etc.). Notably, over a century later, similar patterns are observed among our ancestors, who primarily formed connections through marriages and served as witnesses for each other.

The Belgian archives have meticulously transcribed numerous church records, ensuring the accuracy and reliability of the data. For Bruges, all 465 transcripts pertaining to the Spanish community between 1649 and 1706 have been categorized under the 'Spaans Register' (Spanish register). While some entries are unique, others are duplicates also found in various Bruges churches' regular baptism and marriage records. The criteria for these duplicate entries are unclear, but it is presumed that the transcribers consulted additional lists to identify Spanish families. Most entries are derived from specific church books written in Castilian. Spanish marriages predominantly took place in Spanish chapels affiliated with the army, with their documents recorded accordingly. However, records have sometimes been preserved, especially if the Spanish chapel was situated in a fixed chapel or church within a city, such as Bruges, Ghent, or Antwerp. Spanish military personnel, particularly those with necessary connections or in the absence of their chapel, occasionally used local churches for baptisms or marriages. Therefore, the reconstruction of Spanish families relies on the surviving records of their life events, which remain accessible for consultation.

Given the limitations of the available records, it is impossible to document the entire Spanish community in Belgium during the 17th century comprehensively. However, we have made the most of the available resources. Below, we list all the family names that appear under the 'Spaans Register' in Bruges. We have selected all the records, extracted the family names, and removed duplicates. The names are presented as they appear, despite administrative errors from priests who may have misspelled names and transcribers who might have made mistakes. We have preserved the original spellings to maintain their historical charm and illustrate the evolution or phonetic miswriting of names. It is evident that some names have been almost entirely assimilated into Flemish, while others have been adapted into a Spanish version suitable for the Spanish community in the city. Readers are encouraged to explore this list to appreciate its charm. For instance, names like Devos, Depuis, Monroy, and Dela Cruz, which are significant in our ancestry as discussed in this book, are notable. Additionally, prominent Spanish names such as Fernandes and Gonzalez appear in the regular records of Bruges, not listed under the 'Spanish registers.' Thus, the list below is constrained to the Spanish registers and is not exhaustive for the entire city.

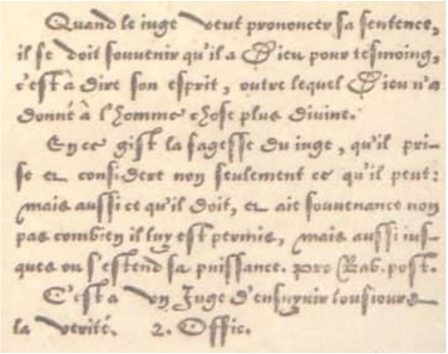
The list of family names appearing in the Spanish registers of Bruges between 1649 and 1706:

Aba, Abad, Abbad, Acosta, Alenardi, Alfonso, Alfonzo, Alia, Almarez, Alonso, Alonzé, Aluares, Alvares, Alvarez, Anar, Andrea, Andreas, Ansia, Ansiau, Anthony, Antoni, Aranjo, Arion, Arrauxo, Auberto, Avalle, Bacquero, Bagantell, Bais, Balangur, Baluque, Baptista, Barbiers, Barca, Barela, Barelaet, Batalla, Beatricis, Bedado, Belo, Beltram, Beltroy, Benites, Benitto, Benyte, Berge, Berlimont, Bernabella, Bernal, Bernet, Bernett, Bernette, Berselle, Bertran, Betres, Bettaumur, Beyre, Beyre De Ayangurem, De Ayangurem, Bieites, Bienfait, Billalobos, Bilones, Binkens, Bique, Blanchar, Blanco, Blundo, Bogallo, Borhemmans, Bouco, Bourgeois, Breton, Brignon, Brinon, Briscra, Bronon, Bruial, Brulane, Bruno, Bruyn, Budelon, Budin, Bun-

---

[3] Janna Everaert, 'de Flandes - De Nederlandse aanwezigheid in Valladolid en omstreken tijdens de zestiende eeuw', Faculteit Letteren en Wijsbegeerte - Geschiedenis, 2011-2012, Universiteit Gent, Promotor René Vermeir

[4] Raymon Fagel, 'De Spaanse kooplieden in Middelburg voor de Opstand: succesvolle integratie met behoud van eigen identiteit', Nieuwe Nederlanders, Vestiging van migranten door de eeuwen heen, Amsterdam, 21-33, 1996



Quand le iuge veut prononcer ſa ſentence, il ſe doit ſouuenir qu'il a Dieu pour teſmoing, c'eſt à dire ſon eſprit, outre lequel Dieu n'a donné à l'homme choſe plus diuine.
En ce giſt la ſageſſe du iuge, qu'il priſe et conſidere non ſeulement ce qu'il peut:
mais auſſi ce qu'il doit, et ait ſouuenance non pas combien il luy eſt permis, mais auſſi iuſ-ques ou ſ'eſtend ſa puiſſance. pro Rab. poſt.
C'eſt a vn Iuge d'enſuyuir touſiours la verité. 2. Offic.

Figure 7.1: Robert Granjon, Civilité, Médiane Lettre Françoise, 1556, found at the Plantin-Moretus museum. The image is referred to in Chapter 7.1. The 'h' found in this text is very similar to the character used in certificates of the 16th and 17th century to let the name Declercq of our ancestors end and denote a soft 'q' (-qh) or 'g' (-gh) rather than a hard 'k' . (Courtesy of Georges Picavet)

Junius
25 de Cereso gezegd Bryche
Anna coucke

Figure 7.2: Bruges, 1620, Saint Salvator Church, the baptism of Anna De Cerezo y Burke (written as 'Joannes de Cerezo gezegd Bryche'), the daughter of Juan De Cerezo y Burke, godfather was Juan De Cerezo y Burke ('Joannes de Cerezo'), godmother was Anna Coucke.

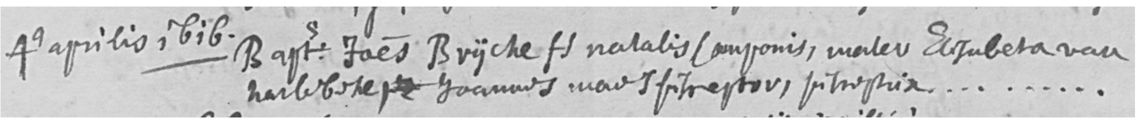
quez, Buse, Busett, Buzullo, Cade, Calderon, Calro, Cambois, Camu, Cano, Carballo, Cardon, Carneer, Carrasal, Carrion, Carton, Carvillo, Cassek, Cassell, Catalan, Cayart, Cegart, Charlori, Charpentier, Charpintier, Chimenez, Chori, Claré, Clavet, Clenpuit, Cler, Cogesus, Col, Colmans, Comas, Congé, Crao, Creps, Criado, Cries, Cuhera, Dacosta, Danguit, Danzin, Dardo, Daveiga, Davina, Davisson, De Ansene, De Armas, De Ayangurem, De Baquerino, De Caroallo, De Castro, De Contreras, De Dies, De Efwada, De Elforge, De Ferr, De L' ane, De Lizaura, De Lopez, De Loy, De Lueard, De Menna, De Neppe, De Ohaigo, De Osorio, De Preter, De Viezma, De Vil, De Viles, Dea Campo, Deacosta, Deaguere, Deaguilar, Deaguirre, Dealbos, Dealdao, Dealdrey, Deangila, Deansias, Deaport, Deaquirre, Dearaella, Dearanxo, Dearauxo, Dearmada, Dearmas, Deayala, Debaleneuela, Debarcelo, Debeade, Debillalobos, Debillarele, Debinch, Debruno, Debryen, Decabrera, Decanbra, Decancelas, Decarmona, Decarros, Decastaneda, Decastro, Declois, Decoiras, Decontreras, Decorias, Decorte, Decou, Decovello, Decurbas, Dedie, Defiguerca, Defornoz, Degarefa Uul, Degroedos, Deguzmon, Dehejo, Dejajo, Dejasso, Del, Del Bourgo, Del Forge, Del Oro, Dela Barra, Dela Cruz, Delacalle, Delacrus, Deladrier, Delafuente, Delajon, Delama, Delamott, Delarea, Delavega, Delcastilio, Delcollado, Deleasur, Delenares, Deleon, Deleu, Delferier, Delgadillo, Delgado, Delivares, Delmonte, Deloncheval, Delos, Delosrios, Delpoyo, Delrio, Deltoral, Deltumbe, Dembonne, Demena, Demendoca, Demeneses, Demerts, Demesens, Demettere, Demir, Demoja, Demolina, Demoraly, Demunos, Demuruas, Demusica, Dentino, Deocampo, Deohaigo, Deosin, Deotero, Deouiedx, Deparedes, Depaz, Depindas, Deplaca, Depomar, Deprost, Depuis, Derlano, Derobles, Derojos, Derosa, Derouar, Deroxas, Desalas, Desantaballa, Desantiago, Desantillana, Descouar, Desidro, Desomonrostro, Desoto, Despinal, Detexeda, Detorre, Detrieu, Deulloa, Deveis, Devias, Deviezma, Devigo, Devill, Devillaplana, Devillar, Devoque, Devos, Devries, Diaez, Dias, Diazdelamota, Disacqs, Disca, Djacqs, Domingos, Dominguez, Domminguez, Douden, Doymia, Drogenbrocq, Drumond, Du Foy, Dubeu, Dujardin, Dumont, Duro, El Brinas, Eneleck, Esnockx, Espring, Estevan, Etien, Faibo, Fanego, Feirfron, Felix, Ferdrandes, Ferera, Ferjo, Fernande, Fernandes, Fernandez, Fernandoz, Fernille, Ferre, Ferreiro, Ferrer, Ferrera, Ferreropinto, Ferreti, Feveda, Figez, Figne, Fonten, Franco, Francodemedina, Francois, Francq, Francx, Friclo, Frizano, Fuxardo, Gabre, Gallane, Garcia, Garcia Desantiago, Garcia Saleles, Garzia, Garzia Jaborda, Gazo, Geets, Gemmy, Gerard, Ghienca, Ghimenez, Gigo, Gillet, Ginart, Giro, Gno, Godina, Goecke, Goele, Gomes, Gomez, Gomze, Goncales, Goncalez, Gonsales, Gonsaly, Gonzales, Gorgis, Granier, Gribas, Groyo, Grry, Guinart, Guzmáne, Haber, Haermes, Hanes, Hannel, Hassel, Hejo, Hemmi, Hernándes, Hernández, Herrera, Hersenckin, Hey, Hinilto, Hollin, Hopez, Hubin, Hugo, Isidro, Janson, Jerlo, Jerosse, Jocob, Joge, Joli, Jop, Joquet, Juares, Jupeu, Kolins, L' sage, Lagar, Lambert, Lamberti, Lancro, Langhe, Lansre, Lapesa Belarde, Lapse, Lardo, Latorre, Lazarini, Le Leu, Le Roy, Leboi, Leger, Legere, Lelup, Lemer, Leon, Leones, Leroy, Lesage, Letonis, Lirente, Liveres, Lobel, Loi, Lonfi, Loopes, Loorencia, Lopez, Lopez , Lorent, Lorenzo, Loro, Lowis, Lubio, Luiz, Lybaert, Malfroy, Malo, Mangeler, Manglos, Manoel, Marchand, Marchier, Margarita, Marin, Marques, Martin, Martinez, Masilles, Mason, Massin, Masson, Maulin, Maybos, Melos, Mena, Mendes, Metlis, Michié, Mideler, Miguel, Mine, Minga, Mires, Monick, Monroy, Montellano, Montes, Morales, Moreno, Morio, Moyan, Munie, Munoz, Murcia, Mys, Nelet, Netos, Nunes, Nunez, Oherchion, Ondail, Opinot, Ôquiere, Ortega, Ortenes, Ortis, Osdines, Otero, Ouli, Oyers, Ozen, Padilla, Pan, Paniso, Pardo, Paren, Parmestul, Parra, Patou, Payon, Pedrosa, Pelerin, Penites, Perdido, Perdomo, Pereira, Peres, Perez, Permisel, Pez, Phillipeant, Pier, Pierson, Piney, Pique, Piquett, Piquz, Planille, Pol, Polida, Polin, Pomez, Pon, Ponce, Porbu, Portel, Portillo, Possion, Pymi, Quines, Quinones, Quiñones, Quiquinpea, Radis, Ramires, Ramirez, Ramiroz, Ramos, Rasette, Rayoo, Recio, Reis, Requedo, Requesr, Retine, Robilliart, Rodriguez, Rodroquez, Roge, Roguet, Roj, Romero, Romerset, Rondar, Rubic, Ruis, Rumero, Rus, Sabedra, Salasar, Salazar, Salazor, Saleles, Salgado, Sanches, Sanchez, Sandie, Santibanes, Schellambrough, Serrano, Servais, Seteri, Sevillia, Shilet, Signales, Signiferi, Silvain, Silvania, Sinchi, Sitimbruck, Sloutmaker, Snucq, Soriano, Spiring, Spltemix, Suarez, Taelboom, Terneri, Ternero, Ternes, Thartaro, Thomas, Titiliano, Tochbs, Torizes, Trejocte, Trico, Trigo, Tripet, Tufar, Uaneras, Valis, Valleslro, Van Hoof, Van Randink, Vanbygard, Vandam, Vandamme, Vandenburg, Vandersaint, Vandersmiser, Vanmaldre, Vanneya, Vanosse, Vansiter, Vanstell, Vasquez, Vautier, Vee, Veladetorres, Vellarde, Vennejo, Vesell, Vevers, Vilioso, Villanneba, Villenis, Villido, Vilondres, Vin, Vinal, Vincent, Vinon, Voin, Vola, Vondal, Voy, Vunes, Wanthy, Ximenes, Ximenez, Ximenez De Lizaura, Yanes, Yhanens, Zutiers.

7.3 Other Foreign Names

This book shows the appearance of soldiers and their families in the 16th and 17th centuries in church certificates, where, for instance, Irish names have been spelled in a Flemish manner. This was done so that the name still sounded like the original or was significantly transformed. Examples appear where appropriate. The following discoveries can be read as an illustration.

An excellent example is the family de Cerezo y Burke, linked to our Declercq (Desclergue) family and the Maes family (de la Maza). Cerezo y Burke was likely a mixed marriage of a Spanish soldier, 'de Cerezo,' and an Irish daughter, 'Burke.' There is no local variant of this name in Flanders; above all, the name sounds very foreign. It must have been tough to even spell by a priest in the 1600s in Flanders.



4a aprilis 1616 Bapt. Joes Bryche fs natalis cauponis, mater Elizabeta van harlebeke ~~ps~~ Joannes maes susceptor, susceptrix. ... .

Figure 7.3: Harelbeke, 1616, the baptism of Juan De Cerezo y Burke ('Joannes Bryche'), the son of Natalis who had a restaurant or was an inn-keeper ('cauponis') and of Elisabeta van Harlebeke. The Godfather was Juan de la Maza ('Joannes Maes').

1^{a} Julij 1629 Bapt^{a} anna bucquet f^{a} natalis et Elisabeth van hollebeke Suscept. arnoldus andries [illegible] in arbor aurea et maria van hollebeke noie Elisabeth ex Rumbeke.

Figure 7.4: Harelbeke, 1629, baptism certificate of Anna Bucquet, daughter of Natalis and of Elisabeth van Hollebeke, the godfather was Arnoldus Andries, godmother was Maria van Hollebeke, family of Elizabeth, from Rumbeke.

We will show a few examples of the appearance of this family.
In 1588, we found a wedding of Maria Bruwyc and Jacobus Feys in Bruges (St Gillis, January 31). (Note that the priest first wrote Bruwykhar but crossed it and replaced it with Bruwyc.)
In 1592, we found at Bruges a baptism of a child NN Breyke (Sint Anna, August 16, 1592).
In 1597, we found a wedding of Anna Bruyck and Judocus Brocquet in Bruges.
In 1604, we found a baptism of Antonius Brike, son of Carolus Brike and Joanna Medlen ('Midble'), in Bruges.
In 1609, we found a mother, Maria Buerick (the father is Jacobus Vercuut, the child is Anna), in Bruges.
In Ghent, we found in 1610 a wedding witness, Jacques Burrick. In 1614, we found the marriages of Adriana Bryck and Jean De Castian ('Joannes Dekestian') and Adriana Brycque and Jean Du Cauteleu ('Joannes Ducathuliau') in Bruges.
To provide some context, we know that Irish troops were part of Spain's Army of Flanders throughout the seventeenth century and fought first against the Dutch and then against the French. Between 1587 and 1661, this force included, on average, 1000 Irishmen. The literature found that ten thousand Irish immigrants reached the Spanish Netherlands during this period, of whom 6300 joined the army.
In Bruges, in 1620 again, shown in Figure 7.2, we found a member of this family, and the priest had great difficulties writing down his name. He wrote 'Cerezo gezegd Bryche' . Very likely, this was de Cerezo y Burke. In Harelbeke, this family is also linked to the de la Maza family (Maes) in 1616, shown in Figure 7.3. Now, interestingly, the names evolve in future documents. 'Van Harlebeke' becomes 'Van Hollebeke,' and 'Bryche' becomes 'Bucquet' in later records to the extent we investigated. Probably 'Van Harlebeke' changed because the mother lived in Harelbeke, and therefore, it was weird to carry that name; definitely 'Bryche' as it was first written in Harelbeke, and Bruges was a non-existing name, and 'De Cerezo y Burke' was too, difficult. Therefore, it evolved to an existing name in the 1620s that was perhaps more comfortable living within Harelbeke, namely 'Bucquet.' The name 'Van Harlebeke,' or 'Van Horlebeke' or 'Van Harelbeke,' existed but was uncommon; we found it in Rumbeke, Roeselare, and Kortrijk in the 17th and 16th centuries.
Several certificates on which either the couple Natalis De Cerezo y Burke ('Natalis Bucquet') and Elisabeta van Harlebeke ('Elisabetha van Hollebeke') as parents or else separately as godfather or godmother have been found in Harelbeke. An example of 1629 at Harelbeke is shown in 7.4. The couple Natalis De Cerezo y Burke (a.k.a. 'Natalis Buquet') and his wife Elisabete van Harlebeke (a.k.a. 'Elisabeth van Hollebeke') is referred to by André Woestijn[5], as 'Noël Bucquet' and his wife 'Elisabeth van Hollebeke.' It appears that across from the hospital of Harelbeke was an inn called 'den Grooten en Kleinen Hert,' which belonged to Judocus Deconinck in 1580. On January 28, 1581, the inn was rented to Jan van Stoppelgat. The owner in 1584 was Karel Deconinick. The inn was bought by 'Noël Bucquet' and his wife 'Elisabeth Van Hollebeke' on March 16, 1621 from Thomaes de Cocle and Isabau van Rike, daughter of Olivier. In 1667, the share of Noël Bucquet was purchased by the widow of Simoen Vandenbulke. One year later, the inn's owner was Elisabeth Bucquet, probably a daughter of Noël Bucquet and wife of Vincent Bressou. Yet another example is where the Irish name O'Brien becomes 'Breine' on church certificates in Harelbeke. Indeed, Breine, or Breyne, is a locally existing name. Therefore, one used the local version rather than the exotic O'Brien.

7.4 First Names

The landscape of first or given names in the world is even more complex than that of family names. Without presenting a profound study, we can mention synonyms such as Maria, Mayke, or Maaiken; Pere, Pero, Pedro, Petrus, Pierre, Pieter, Peter; Fernandes, Hernandes; Hieronymus, Jeroni, Jeroom, Jerome; Antoine, Antheunis, Antoni, Antonio, Antonius; Isabel, Elisabeth; ...

7.5 The Name Connected to the Casal dels Desclergue

Figure 7.5: Montblanc, panoramic view of the church of Santa Maria la Major. (2018) (Declercq de Silva Archive)

The House, a physical remnant of the Desclergue family of Montblanc, is commonly referred to as Casa Desclergues, Casal dels Desclergue, or Palau dels Desclergue. This edifice is situated in the Plaça Major of Montblanc, near Tarragona. In this context, it is imperative to acknowledge the author José Sánchez Real for his work on this family, particularly in relation to the conservation of Casa Desclergue. Prior to the 1970s, contemporary knowledge about this family was limited. A 1970 local brochure[6] reveals that the Desclergue family was described as "Noble and very powerful, with extensive properties, owning mills and orchards on the banks of the Francolí. The family erected the splendid mansion in the Plaça Major, which, despite internal and external alterations, still stands today. Francesc des Clergue (DC05e), a royal and legal notary of the town who held a prominent position in local politics,

---

[5] André Woestijn, 'Harelbeke in de Spaanse tijd, 1585-1713,' De Roede van Harelbeke (De Leiegouw), nr 14, 1994

[6] L. Vives y Poblet. Fills illustres del segle XII al XX. (extraído del manuscrito Notes históriques de Montblanch) 'Quintos 1970.' Montblanc, 1970.

Figure 7.6: The house of Desclergue on the Main Square of Montblanc. (2018) (Declercq de Silva Archive)

managed to save his Casal from the massive fire of 1652 and other destructions that plagued the city."

José Sánchez Real asserts that those with a deeper historical understanding knew that Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) had likely already died by 1652, having signed his testament in 1646. Consequently, his House was not damaged in 1652, and by that time, the Desclergue family name had vanished from Montblanc. The population decline in Montblanc should not be attributed solely to the events of 1652. The town's dilapidated state began much earlier. As Sánchez Real notes, in 1585, the traveler Enrique Cock remarked that "... many of their houses are fallen, or they want to fall."

All available data (documents, architectural style, decorative details) indicate that the House built by the Desclergue family in the Plaça Major was originally constructed around 1575, with the coat of arms likely added later during a renovation by Francesc Desclergue (DC05e). This building, albeit modified, has preserved its noble façade. As Sánchez Real states, the Provincial Savings Bank of Tarragona has preserved this structure for the town, and according to current local rumors, it is soon to become the property of the People of Montblanc to be used for official ceremonies.

Figure 7.7: On the left, there are two historical photographs of the House of Desclergue located in the Main Square of Montblanc, provided courtesy of Eduard Contijoch. In the upper central section, a 1978 photograph depicts Maurice A. Declercq purchasing fruits somewhere in Spain. Adjacent to it is a 1979 image showing Nico F. Declercq and Maurice A. Declercq, captured at an unspecified location in Spain; the nostalgic Mercedes car used during their summer travels across Spain is also visible. On the right, the 'Casal dels Desclergue' name sign on the family house in Montblanc is shown (2018). Below this, there is an informational sign for Montblanc's Casal dels Desclergue, stating, "Casa Desclergue, Construïda al voltant de 1575 per la Família Desclergue. Benefici amb notables modificacions, del que es conserva la noble façana, ha estat recuperat per a la vila de Montblanc per Caixa Tarragona (Caixa Tarragona Oficina Montblanc)." The two lower central images display the Portal de Sant Antoni and the renowned city walls of Montblanc (2018). (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Chapter 8

A Brief History of Flanders and its Iberian Connections

Etymologically, the terms Flanders (Vlaanderen) and Belgium (België or Belgique) derive from the Germanic word Flaum and the Celtic word Belc'h, meaning wetland and flax, respectively—two characteristics historically associated with the region. European history, often referred to as Cap d'Asie, reveals a continent intertwined by dynasties that facilitated cultural, religious, and commercial exchanges under the Vatican's aegis. These exchanges frequently involved the movement of individuals through trade, warfare, or strategic marriages, as evidenced by the foreign origins of many family names in Flanders. Historically, the Low Countries, characterized by forests, rivers, lakes, and wetlands, experienced significant demographic shifts due to challenging periods such as the Little Ice Ages, diseases, and invasions. Consequently, it is reasonable to surmise that every individual in Flanders, Belgium, or the Netherlands has at least one ancestor from elsewhere over the past 600 years, and likely 75% to 100% of their ancestors from abroad over the past 2000 years.

Studies have shown that nearly everyone in Europe is, in some way, a descendant of Charlemagne (742 AD - 814 AD). The people of Flanders and Belgium are often humble and sensitive to foreign influences on their Culture and language, which suggests an introverted nationalism. Conversely, extroverted nationalism acknowledges the historical migration of Belgians throughout Europe, contributing to linguistic cross-fertilization. Trade, a pivotal force throughout history, has not only shaped economies but also influenced cultures and languages. For instance, numerous tradespeople from South-West Flanders settled in places like Cadiz in Spain or the Azores, leaving a lasting impact on the local Culture and language. This dynamic interplay between trade, migration, and cultural exchange is a key aspect of the region's history.

Culture, art, and science have historically flourished in geographical hubs of trade and during periods of economic activity. Examining the historical connections between Belgium and Spain, particularly through trade, would be fascinating but requires an investigation beyond the scope of this work. Thus, this study focuses on dynastic links, guiding the reader through a historical journey to uncover the history of Flanders and Belgium in the context of their association with Iberia. Additionally, aspects of Spain, particularly Catalonia, will be highlighted. While the information presented is neither perfect nor exhaustive, it aims to encourage further reading and deeper exploration of these topics. The historian's most challenging task is writing about history without judgment and without reference to future events. One can only describe history accurately within its own context, which is not easy. In discussing Catalonia and Flanders, Spain and Belgium, the expectation might be to frame the past within modern history, but that would be misleading. History is immutable, and any current context surrounding the author's desire to present a historical setting to his ancestry involves the beautiful people of Spain and Belgium, particularly those in Montblanc in Catalonia and Deerlijk in Flanders. The call for further exploration of these historical connections and influences is a testament to the richness and complexity of the subject.

Before the formation of nations, language did not constitute national identity. Many legal entities, such as dukedoms, principalities, counties, and kingdoms, encompassed multiple languages and diverse juridic practices. It is crucial to remind the reader that time and history only make sense when everything is correlated, like a river flowing from source to mouth. Multiple brooks form a stream's foundation, yet a hierarchy exists. When two rivers merge, the larger one takes precedence, even if the smaller one holds greater economic significance. This principle applies to European history, particularly in the context of Iberia and Flanders. Hierarchically, a kingdom is the primary entity, and a dukedom joins as a subordinate. The same applies to principalities, which rank higher than dukedoms but lower than kingdoms. Therefore, the dukedom took precedence when the County of Flanders joined the Dukedom of Burgundy. Similarly, when Castile and Burgundy merged, Castile was the primary entity. Thus, sentimentally, we might say Spain was part of Flanders, but traditionally, Flanders was part of Spain, hence the term "Spanish Netherlands" rather than "Flemish Iberia" or "Flemish Spain."

Similar processes have occurred within Iberia's history. The preceding historical context of this work has undoubtedly influenced our ancestors' lives, yet we lack records to detail the Greeks, Romans, and preceding great cultures. Consequently, these eras are omitted from this discussion.

Figure 8.1: Benjamin, the author's eldest son, is pictured at the Colosseum in Rome, September 2001. Following this, there is an image of him at Circus Maximus. On the right, he is seen at Pompeii, also in September 2001. This theatre is considerably smaller than the Hellenistic one in Epidaurus, as described in Chapter 27.20.10. Nonetheless, it is magnificent. Pompeii appears as an abandoned city where time has been frozen since the eruption in 79 AD, as described by Gaius Plinius Caecilius Secundus, known as Pliny the Younger (62-113). (Declercq de Silva Archive)

b.
EUROPE
c. 650 A.D.
Scale 1:25,000,000 (400 miles-1 inch)
English Miles
0 100 200 300 400
FRANKISH KINGDOMS
VISIGOTHIC KINGDOM
AVAR KINGDOM
EXARCHATE
S A R A C E N S
Uitbreiding van het Frankische Rijk
Frankisch gebied, 481
Veroveringen door Clovis, 481–511
Veroveringen 531–614
Veroveringen 714–768
Veroveringen door Karel de Grote, 768–814
Afhankelijke gebieden
Bretons Schatplichtige volkeren
Koninkrijk van Syagrius
Visigotisch koninkrijk
Grenzen van het Rijk 814
NEUSTRIË
AUSTRASIË
AQUITANIË
BOURGONDIË
GASCOGNE
SEPTIMANIË
PROVENCE
SPAANSE MARK
FRIESLAND
SAKSEN
THÜRINGEN
SCHWABEN
BEIEREN
KARINTHIË
KONINKRIJK LOMBARDIJE
Bretons
Corsicanen
Abodrieten
Wilzen
Sorben
Tsjechen
Moraven
Avaren
Kroaten
Serven

Figure 8.2: Left is a map of Europe of 650 €. Right, the expansion of the Frankish empire is shown. (Wikipedia®, GNU Free Documentation License, version I.J.2.)

8.1 Rethinking the Middle Ages: A Comprehensive Reevaluation

The Middle Ages, a period often shrouded in misconceptions, invites us to revisit its multifaceted reality. It has endured an enduring image of darkness, violence, and primitiveness, largely due to the way historical narratives have been constructed over time. In this article, we embark on a journey to dispel five pervasive myths about the Middle Ages, offering a more nuanced understanding rooted in meticulous historical research. While acknowledging the challenges of the era, we will also shed light on the unexplored positive facets of medieval life.

One enduring stereotype about the Middle Ages portrays it as a time of abject filth and unsanitary conditions. Contrary to this belief, medieval cities possessed rudimentary yet effective sewage systems. Rather than haphazardly discarding waste, people collected it in buckets, which were then emptied into cesspools. While not on par with modern sanitation, this practice attests to a level of hygiene awareness.

The popular notion that medieval life was dominated by incessant violence and torture is far from the truth. Historical records reveal a different reality. The death penalty was a rare occurrence, with torture even rarer. Torture was employed only in cases of extreme significance and when guilt was almost beyond doubt. Instruments designed to minimize physical suffering were used, in consideration of public sentiment.

The Middle Ages are often mischaracterized as a time of misogyny and prudishness, where women had limited rights and influence. However, a closer examination of history uncovers a more nuanced narrative. Women in medieval society had opportunities to participate in various spheres, including business, culture, and education. Notably, the era acknowledged female sexual pleasure and even provided advice to enhance it, challenging the notion of prudishness.

It is commonly believed that non-binary and intersex identities are recent phenomena, yet they had a place in medieval society. Grounded in the "theory of humor," medieval thinkers understood that variations in gender and sexuality were natural. This demonstrates a surprising level of comprehension and acceptance of diversity in a supposedly rigid era.

While the Middle Ages are often portrayed as a grim and austere period, they also encompassed elements of romance, including the iconic figures of knights, damsels, and picturesque castles. This romanticized view emerged during the era of industrialization when people yearned for an escape from the rapid transformations of their time. The Middle Ages were a complex epoch that embraced both the positive and challenging aspects of human existence.

The Middle Ages, often viewed through a distorted lens, deserve a comprehensive reappraisal. By challenging conventional wisdom, we have uncovered a more nuanced reality regarding sanitation, violence, gender roles, sexual diversity, and romanticism during this era. This endeavor encourages us to reimagine our medieval predecessors with a greater appreciation for the intricate tapestry of their lives. The understand the Middle ages, the reader should read good books and continue to unravel the intricacies of the Middle Ages, dispelling further misconceptions and explore the captivating truths of this often-misunderstood epoch.

8.2 Francia - The Kingdom of the Franks

Upon the collapse of the Roman Empire, Europe became a mosaic of territories governed by various entities, including the Frankish Empire (Francia) and the Visigothic Kingdom, as depicted in Figure 8.2. This decline should not be misconstrued as a withdrawal of the Romans to Italy; instead, it represented a governmental shift that minimally impacted the general populace. The Visigoths ruled the Iberian Peninsula, encompassing present-day Spain, but this region had a rich and ancient history predating their control. This history was characterized not by fixed states or countries but by significant settlements, such as those established by the Phoenicians. Tarragona, for example, was a major Roman city from the 2nd century AD, known as Colonia Iulia Urbfdses Triumphalis Tarraco, or simply 'Tarraco.' The name 'Iberia' is derived from the Ebro River, reflecting the prominence of settlements in the Ebro Valley.

The early history of Catalonia mirrors that of Roussillon in southern France and areas extending eastward to Marseille and Monaco. Evidence of human presence in Iberia dates back to prehistoric times. From a Catalonian perspective, it could be argued that Spain's origins lie in Catalonia, though this perspective must be balanced with the distinct histories of other regions. Spain's complexity is underscored by such areas as Tarraconensis, Cartaginensis, Baetica, Lusitania, and Gallaecia, each with unique historical narratives. The quest for identity in the modern era is nuanced and multifaceted.

Figure 8.2 illustrates the European continent in 650 AD, showing the established Frankish and Visigothic Kingdoms. At that time, Catalonia and Roussillon were part of the Visigothic Kingdom, which spanned the Iberian Peninsula, except for some northern provinces. The Frankish Kingdom encompassed much of France, Belgium, and parts of present-day Germany. Notably, regions now known as the Netherlands and Belgium were then essentially waterlogged, forested, and sparsely populated.

Another map in Figure 8.2 displays the expansion of the Frankish Kingdom up to Charlemagne's reign (768-814). Under Charlemagne, regions such as Catalonia, Saxony, and Lombardy were incorporated into the Frankish realm. The Francoli River historically marked the border between the Frankish Kingdom and the southern Caliphate of Córdoba.

It is also noteworthy that Metz once served as the capital of Belgium and the eastern Netherlands, falling under Austrasian rule. Due to its antiquity, the era discussed here holds little significance for our direct ancestry. However, it might explain the migration of Bertrand Du Guesclin's ancestors to Brittany, as elaborated in Chapter 19.5. While substantial human movement between these territories at that time is not well-documented, the Frankish Kingdom politically connected Montblanc and Deerlijk for the first time since the Roman Empire, with a subsequent connection during the Spanish Habsburg reign, detailed from Chapter 8.5.1 onwards.

Regarding Deerlijk, P. Lansens notes in his book[1] that Deerlijk, adjacent to Harelbeke, has been historically referred to as Deerlike, Derlikken, Trellighem, and in a 1120 diploma of 'Karel de Goede,' as 'Therslinghem.' Likely named after a Gothic military figure, the first church in Deerlijk was established in 654 AD by Saint Amandus. Lansens also mentions a place of worship in 'Bottenhoek,' now known as the parish of 'Sint Lodewijk.' The modern name of Deerlijk's church is 'Sint Columba,' named after a Saint from Sens in France, equivalent to 'Coloma' in Iberia. While the Desclergues family, after arriving in Flanders, might not have influenced the church's name, the rarity of 'Saint Columba' suggests a more profound historical significance. Montblanc features a street called Carrer Santa Coloma de Queralt, leading to the village of Santa Coloma de Queralt, named after the same Saint as in Deerlijk. Santa Coloma de Queralt is discussed in Chapter 29.4, suggesting the Desclergues felt a connection to Deerlijk due to the church's name. Adjacent to the church, a Saint Columba chapel once housed the 'Retabel van de Heilige Columba,' commissioned by the de Costere family, who owned the Deerlijk manor until 1628. Historians estimate the retable's creation around 1535. The chapel's name, rather than the church's, likely honored Santa Coloma, which locals used in the 17th century[2].

Whether the church was initially named after Saint Amandus or Santa Coloma remains unclear. In 1119, documents referred to it as 'altara de trelleke,' and the first visual representation dates to 1609, necessitating further research for clarity. Deerlijk's baptism registers from 1629 mention 'Derlicke anno 1629,' without referencing Columba, indicating the chapel's name might not extend to the church. Saint Columba was venerated across Europe, particularly under Frankish ruler Charlemagne, symbolizing the dynasty's unity. Her life is primarily recorded in Arabic manuscripts, but her worship was widespread in Charlemagne's territories, including Deerlijk. In La Conca de Barberá, where Montblanc and Santa Coloma de Queralt are located, the Francoli River marked the border between Frankish-Christian and Hispano-Islamic territories. Several villages in this region bear names reminiscent of French towns, reflecting the historical Frankish influence during Charlemagne's reign and the early West Frankish Empire. Deerlijk and Santa Coloma de Queralt are among the few places in Europe where Saint Columba continues to be revered despite her diminished presence during the Gothic period. Readers interested in Deerlijk's church will find several intriguing references[3][4][5][6][7][8][9][10].

8.3 The Spanish Reconquista

Various scholarly works delve into the intricate conquest of the Iberian Peninsula by the northern states of Spain. This historical period, often referred to as the "Reconquista," hints at a recapture of the peninsula to restore it to a state reminiscent of Visigothic Spain. However, some historians argue that "Conquista" is a more fitting term, as the events had little connection to Visigothic Spain. This epoch is widely regarded as the bedrock of modern Spain, with each region boasting its unique history and timeline of recapture from the Moors. For instance, Catalonia was conquered from the Umayyad Caliphate, a part of Al-Andalus, in 801 AD after being under Umayyad control since 718. The northern regions of Spain became part of the Marca Hispanica, a buffer zone between the Muslim-ruled part of Spain and the Frankish Kingdom.

In an attempt to erase Arab and Jewish heritage in Spain, a narrative emerged claiming that all noblemen were descended from Visigoths, originating from the very north of Spain, from where the rest of Spain was subsequently reconquered from the Arabs. However, modern DNA analysis challenges this narrative, revealing a more accurate picture of noble and non-noble lineages in Spain. These lineages are a rich tapestry of Arab, Jewish, and French roots, and in some cases, North-Indian, Byzantine, or Gitano roots. This diversity is not a point of insult but a reflection of the fascinating historical reality of Spain.

Spain's complexity is not unique. For instance, France is also a diverse country, with regions like Languedoc and Brittany each having distinct histories that do not represent the entire country. Similarly, Wallonia in southern Belgium differs significantly from France despite sharing the French language. The Flemish in northern Belgium have a different mentality from people in Germany, even though both speak a Germanic language. Significant differences also exist between Flanders and the modern Netherlands. This regional diversity is not limited to Europe. For example, Sri Lanka has experienced a long civil war between the Tamil Tigers in the north and the Sri Lankan state in the south. Although the Tamil Tigers may have identified more with the Tamil population of South India, modern genetic studies reveal that Sri Lankan Tamils are closer to the Sinhalese than to Indian Tamils, except for families that migrated under British rule around 1900 AD. Recognizing and celebrating similarities rather than differences is an enlightening exercise, revealing agreements among regions, peoples, and nations.

Y-DNA analysis has shown that the SRY2627 Haplogroup is most prevalent in the northeast of Spain and is sometimes referred to as "Catalan," although it originates from prehistoric Iberia. Catalans also possess various other Haplogroups. The SRY2627 Haplogroup likely stems from an ancestor who lived in a valley in the southeastern Pyrenees. Like other Spaniards, Catalans have diverse roots, including Celtic (the SRY2627 Haplogroup), Phoenician, Greek, Italian, Visigoth, Berber, among others. Autosomal DNA studies indicate that Catalans have mixed autosomal DNA. After the Reconquista, many Jews and Muslims fled Iberia, while others converted to Christianity and sought mixed marriages for better safety and integration. Sephardic immigrants with North African roots arrived in the Netherlands and other European regions during the Reconquista; thus, their DNA is found in significant portions of these populations. Additionally, historical trade between Spain and other European regions involved merchants who

---

[1] P. Lansens, 'Alouden Staet van Vlaenderen, voor en gedurende het leenroerig bestier, gevolgd van eene beknopte etymologische en geschiedkundige beschryving der steden, en van een groot deel der parochien, gelegen in het oud Graefschap van dien naem' , Bruges, Drukkerij van C. De Moor, Philipstockstraet, 1841

[2] private communication with historians Filip Benoit and Karl Uyttenhove

[3] A. Bruggeman, Kerkinterieur, Derlike nummer 2, 1991, p. 44-49; nummer 3, 1992, p. 86-90; nummer 4, 1992, p. 99-102; nummer 1, 1992, p. 16-21

[4] F. Byttebier, Toren Sint-Columbakerk gerestaureerd, Derlike, nummer 3, 1988, p. 92-94

[5] H. De Backer, Het Delmotte-orgel van de Sint-Columbakerk te Deerlijk, deel 1, Derlike, nummer 1, 2000, p. 10

[6] P. Despriet, De Sint-Columbakerk in Deerlijk, Gaverstreke, jaarboek 1977, p. 23-42

[7] P. Despriet, De Zuidwestvlaamse parochiekerken, deel 1, Kortrijk, 1982, p. 96-104

[8] Bernadette Roose-Meier en Hugonne Vanderschraegen, Fotorepertorium van het meubilair van de Belgische bedehuizen, Provincie West-Vlaanderen, Kanton Harelbeke, Brussel, 1979, p. 19-23

[9] P. Roose, Een primeur in Vlaanderen: de restauratie van een Delmotte-orgel uit 1907 in Deerlijk, in Orgelkunst, XXV, 2002, nummer 3, p. 170

[10] J. Stroobants, De restauratie van het retabel van Deerlijk, in Monumenten en landschappen, 1988, nummers 6/7, p. 33, 34, 38

Figure 8.3: Left is a miniature from the Grandes Chroniques de France (Paris, BnF, MS Français 2608, fol 377v). It represents the battle of the golden spurs of 1302. (around 1395) 🅮. Right is the author in September, 2010. The photo shows Ghent's famous castle, called 'Gravensteen'. The first construction dates from the 9th century. Philippe d' Alsace constructed the version still seen today, in the 12th century. Lodewijk van Male moved the residence to 'Hof ten Walle' which later became 'Prinsenhof', where Charles V would be born and where Charles Philippe de Patin, described in Chapter 70.6 later resided. (Declercq de Silva Archive) often married and had children in foreign lands. Regions significantly influenced politically or economically by Spain, such as Burgundy, Brittany in France, and the Low Countries, also reflect this genetic diversity.

Figure 8.4: In the middle, a map of Flanders in the 14th century is shown (by Sir Iain, 🅮). Left, the Burgundian Castle of Kortrijk is depicted, which existed in the period 1394-1684. Members of the de Patin family were involved in financing the project at the beginning. It was destroyed by the French when they had to leave Kortrijk at the end of the Spanish-French conflict. The castle was located on the area from the corner of Heilige Geeststraat and Oude Kasteelstraat, and the corner of Vismarkt and Kasteelkaai, which was on the opposite side of the Leie River of Reepkaai, where the old hospital used to be and where the author's two eldest children were born 🅮. Right is a view of the location where the Burgundian castle of Kortrijk was located (a row of homes have replaced the fortification) 🅮.

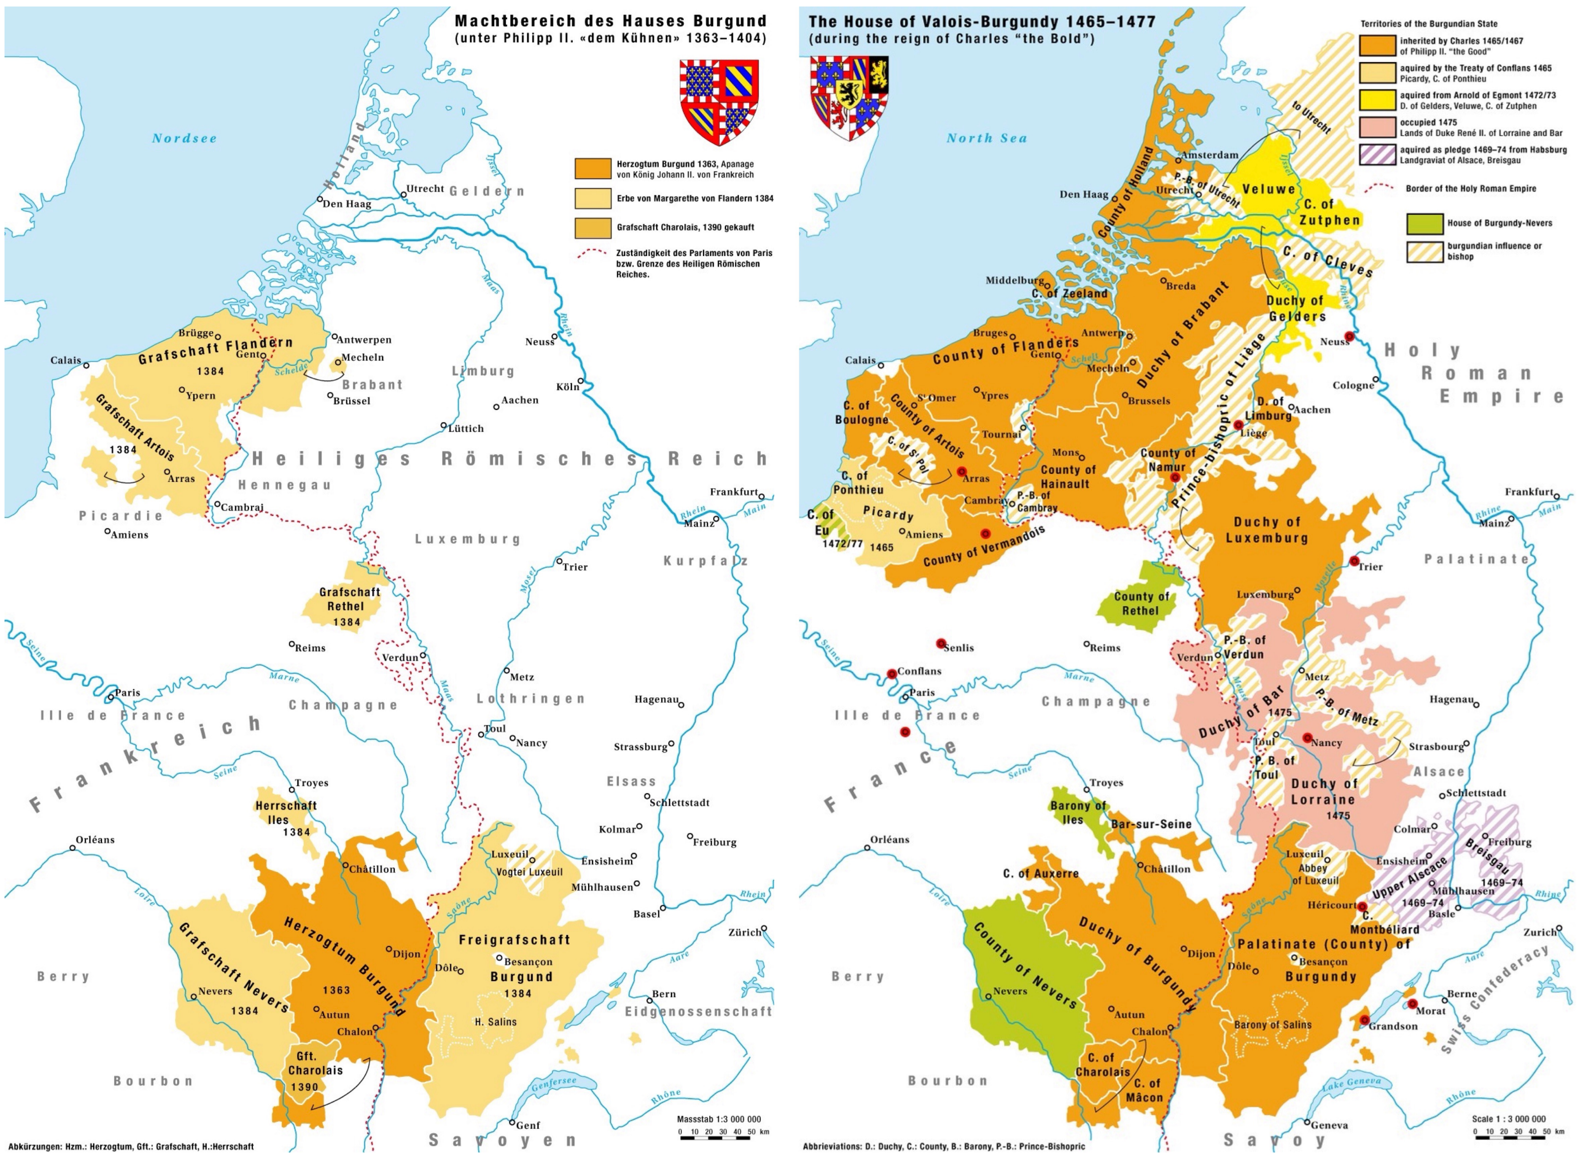
8.4 The Battle of the Golden Spurs in 1302.

The event in 1302, depicted in Figure 8.3, was not initially considered significant but has been exaggerated since Hendrik Conscience wrote about it in the 19th century. Given that it took place in Kortrijk, the birthplace of Conscience, and where Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) would first settle at the end of the 16th century, this event should not be overlooked in Belgian history. Essentially, the battle was inevitable between those defending the feudal liberties gained by the cities in the County of Flanders and those supporting feudal loyalty to France. In Flanders, linguistic diversity was evident, with French and Flemish spoken in different regions. Territories outside Flanders, such as Zeeland, Brabant, and Namur, were also involved in the conflict and had populations speaking either French or Flemish. Thus, the battle had no basis in linguistic or ethnic divisions, contrary to modern-day populist narratives that frame it as a conflict between Flemish-speaking and French-speaking people, which is unfounded. It is also important to note that a significant part of the County of Flanders is now within modern-day France (since the reign of King Louis XIV). In that area, Flemish was spoken in the North, and French was spoken in the rest. Speaking French did not equate to loyalty to France, nor did speaking Flemish imply hostility towards France. In feudal Europe, depicted by the castle in Figure 8.3, language was not the primary issue before the formation of modern nation-states. The central question was feudal loyalty: "To which king or count am I loyal?" or "Who do I choose to protect me, and to whom do I pay taxes?" A crucial but often overlooked detail in 20th and 21st-century rhetoric is that the armies of Namur joined the Flemish troops against the French. This truth is usually ignored because Namur is a French-speaking province in Belgium, outside the region now called Flanders, which once included parts of Brabant and Limburg. The Flemish suffered similar defeats in subsequent battles: in 1328 at Cassel and in 1382 at Westrozebeke, when Flanders, then under Burgundian control, faced the combined forces of the Burgundian and French armies against the armies of Ghent. Despite these defeats, the Battle of the Golden Spurs is celebrated as a national day in Flanders. The author's primary concern is the date of this celebration, July 11. The switch from the Julian Calendar to the Gregorian Calendar in 1582 AD means that, astronomically, the correct date should be July 19. It would be beneficial if more astronomers were involved in politics to address such discrepancies.

8.5 The Burgundian Empire Rise

Most individuals and their histories discussed in this book are in the South of West Flanders, Belgium, as illustrated in Figure 8.4. To fully appreciate the context, it is imperative to understand the origins of Belgium. Contrary to some misconceptions, Belgium is often mischaracterized as an artificial state established by other nations in 1830, having previously been part of the Netherlands.



Machtbereich des Hauses Burgund
(unter Philipp II. «dem Kühnen» 1363–1404)
Herzogtum Burgund 1363, Apanage von König Johann II. von Frankreich
Erbe von Margarethe von Flandern 1384
Grafschaft Charolais, 1390 gekauft
Zuständigkeit des Parlaments von Paris bzw. Grenze des Heiligen Römischen Reiches.
Nordsee
Grafschaft Flandern
Grafschaft Artois
Brabant
Hennegau
Picardie
Heiliges Römisches Reich
Luxemburg
Grafschaft Rethel 1384
Champagne
Lothringen
Frankreich
Ille de France
Herrschaft Iles 1384
Herzogtum Burgund 1363
Grafschaft Nevers 1384
Gft. Charolais 1390
Freigrafschaft Burgund 1384
Berry
Bourbon
Savoyen
Eidgenossenschaft
Massstab 1:3 000 000
Abkürzungen: Hzm.: Herzogtum, Gft.: Grafschaft, H.:Herrschaft
The House of Valois-Burgundy 1465–1477
(during the reign of Charles "the Bold")
Territories of the Burgundian State inherited by Charles 1465/1467 of Philipp II. "the Good" aquired by the Treaty of Conflans 1465 Picardy, C. of Ponthieu aquired from Arnold of Egmont 1472/73 D. of Gelders, Veluwe, C. of Zutphen occupied 1475 Lands of Duke René II. of Lorraine and Bar aquired as pledge 1469–74 from Habsburg Landgraviat of Alsace, Breisgau Border of the Holy Roman Empire
House of Burgundy-Nevers burgundian influence or bishop
North Sea
County of Holland
C. of Zeeland
County of Flanders
Duchy of Brabant
Prince-Bishopric of Liège
Duchy of Gelders
Veluwe
C. of Zutphen
C. of Cleves
Holy Roman Empire
County of Artois
County of Hainault
County of Namur
Duchy of Luxemburg
Picardy
County of Vermandois
Duchy of Bar 1475
Duchy of Lorraine 1475
France
Duchy of Burgundy
County of Nevers
Palatinate (County) of Burgundy
Upper Alsace 1469–74
Breisgau 1469–74
Swiss Confederacy
Savoy
Scale 1 : 3 000 000
Abbreviations: D.: Duchy, C.: County, B.: Barony, P.-B.: Prince-Bishopric

Figure 8.5: Left is a map of the territories of Philip de Bold who united Burgundy with Flanders (by Marco Zanoli, Wikipedia® Creative Commons Attribution-Share Alike 4.0 International license). Right are the territories of the House of Valois-Burgundy during the reign of Charles the Bold, 1465/67-1477 (by Marco Zanoli, Wikipedia® Creative Commons Attribution-Share Alike 4.0 International license).

While this holds true for the modern state of Belgium, the historical narrative is more complex. For instance, France has undergone five republics since 1792, with the fifth established in 1958; however, this does not imply that France was founded in 1958. The consensus places the founding of France in 843 AD, following the Treaty of Verdun, which divided the Carolingian Empire.

Belgium's history is not confined to its post-independence era. It was a geographical entity long before it achieved independence, formed by the unification of various subregions under larger political structures. The Belgian identity and the status of Belgians were firmly established before the country's independence. From the reign of Philip the Good until Charles the Bold, the capital was located on Belgian soil—first in Brussels and later in Mechelen. The Low Countries, before being integrated into the Burgundian regime, were a diverse mix of small counties, duchies, principalities, and other entities, each contributing to the rich tapestry of Belgian history.

The unification of the regions that now form Belgium was not a straightforward process. These regions were not unified by language, race, governance, currency, measurement standards, or laws. However, they shared commonalities in their management of water and their prosperity and appeal for trade, migration, and governance. The Burgundian period saw a gradual unification, which was later disrupted by religious conflicts during the Reformation. This led to a shifting border between predominantly Protestant and Catholic areas. The Catholic region, which changed shape and size during the Spanish era, gradually formed the territory of modern Belgium. This region was internationally recognized by terms such as 'Spanish Netherlands,' 'Austrian Netherlands,' 'Belgium,' 'la Belgique,' and 'Belgien.' The significance of this region should not be underestimated; for instance, Napoleon's conflicts with the Austrians were aimed at acquiring Belgium rather than Austria itself. To comprehend the origins of Belgium as a nation, it is essential to examine the Burgundian period briefly.

Many scholarly works have explored the Burgundians, and a particularly engaging recent contribution is Bart van Loo's book, De Bourgondiërs, aartsvaders van de Lage Landen (2018), published by De Bezige Bij[11]. This highly recommended work provides valuable insights into the Burgundian influence on the Low Countries.

8.5.1 Filips de Stoute - Philip the Bold - Philippe II le Hardy - Felipe II de Borgoña

Scholars, including Bart Van Loo, regard Philip the Bold as the founder of the Low Countries, and their assertion carries significant merit. While Philip did not achieve the unification of the territory himself, he initiated the process that would later be completed by his descendant, Philip the Good.

In 1356, near Poitiers, a pivotal battle occurred between the French and English armies. At fourteen, Philip the Bold demonstrated remarkable resolve by assisting his father, King John II of France. As a reward for his bravery, Philip was granted the Duchy of Burgundy. During this period, Flanders—which encompasses modern-day East Flanders, West Flanders, Southern Zeeland, and part of Northern France—was likely the wealthiest region in Europe. Through astute political maneuvering, Philip the Bold married Margaret of Flanders in 1369. Margaret, the only child of Lodewijk van Maele, Count of Flanders, brought substantial inheritances to the union. The couple is depicted in Figure 8.7. Upon Lodewijk van Maele's death, Philip the Bold succeeded him as Count of Flanders, effectively merging Burgundy with Flanders.

Flanders' political situation was complex due to its allegiance to France while engaging in trade with England and the Iberian

---

[11] Bart van Loo, 'De Bourgondiërs, aartsvaders van de Lage Landen,' published by De Bezige Bij, in 2018

Figure 8.6: Left is the Battle of Westrozebeke of 1382 AD, from the chronicle of Jean Froissart (1405 AD) 🅮. In the middle, we see figures of 'Manten' and 'Kalle' in the tower of the cloth hall of Kortrijk, shown right, and built in the 15th century. Kalle refers to the old name for the river that became Leie. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

MARGARETA TERTIA. PHILIPPO VALESIO AVDACI
BVRGVNDIÆ DVCI NVPTA. 25 Comitißa.

Figure 8.7: Left to right, top to bottom, we see Philip the Bold and Margareta Van Maele in Flandria Illustrada, 1641; Philip the Good and Isabella of Portugal; Charles the Bold (Dijon 1433 - Nancy 1477, buried at Bruges); Maria van Bourgondië; and Felipe I de Castilla, around 1500.🅮.

Figure 8.8: Left is the tomb of John of Burgundy and Margaret of Bayern found at Dijon (Musée des beaux-arts) (Declercq de Silva Archive). Right is the grave of Maria van Bourgondië at Bruges. (Image by 'Napoleon Vier', Creative Commons Atribution - Share Alike 3.0 Unported)

Figure 8.9: From left to right, we see Juana la Loca, ruler of Castilla and Leon, mother of Carlos V and Ferdinand I. She was born in Toledo in 1479 and died in Tordesillas in 1555. She was married to Felipe I de Castilla (Filips de Schone / Philip de Handsome). We then find Margareta of Austria, sister of Philip the Handsome; The young Carlos V; and finally Emperor Carlos V.

Figure 8.10: The grave of Felipe I and of Juana de Castilla at the Capilla Real of Granada. (Creative Commons Attribution-Share-Alike 4.0 International Licence, photo taken and shared by Javi Guerra Hernando)

states, particularly for importing wool and exporting linen. Philip's ascendancy as Count gave Flanders a more distinct identity in European commerce and politics.

Lodewijk van Maele's ancestry was notably international, including figures such as Lodewijk van Nevers, Johanna van Rethel, Robrecht van Vlaanderen, Yolande van Bourgondië, Isabella van Grandpré, Filips van Frankrijk, Otto van Bourgondië, Johanna van Navarra, and Mathilde van Artesië.

While Burgundy remained a separate political entity under Philip the Bold, the duchy faced financial difficulties despite its military stability. To bolster his finances, Philip the Bold played a critical role as regent of France after his brother's death, granting him access to the French treasury. This financial support facilitated Burgundy and Flanders' continued growth.

Philip's control over the French army and Burgundy enabled him to quash a rebellion in Ghent, which had become an independent city-state under Philippe d'Alsace. A significant battle occurred at Westrozebeke in 1382, illustrated in Figure 8.6. As detailed in Chapter 64.6, Emile Lesage was born in recent history. The battle ended disastrously for the Flemish forces and is often viewed as retribution for the French defeat in 1302. Following this, Flanders came under Burgundian control, with Philip the Bold as Count of Flanders.

Notably, the Burgundians took two statues, 'Manten' and 'Kalle,' from Kortrijk to Dijon after the battle of Westrozebeke, as shown in Figure 8.6.

Within the Burgundian-Flemish alliance, Flanders was not a nation defined by a common language but rather a geographical region governed by a Count. The name "Flanders" derives from the Latin "Flumen" (river) or the Germanic "Flaum" (wetland), known for its flax cultivation. "Flax" in Celtic is "Belc'h," giving rise to the name "Belgica" or "Belgium." The people of Flanders spoke diverse dialects that evolved into modern Flemish, Dutch, and French, influenced by Scandinavian, Germanic, Celtic, and Indo-European languages. Globalization post-1500 introduced numerous new words.

The alliance between Burgundy and Flanders marked the first step towards establishing the Spanish Road, a crucial land route circumventing France from Spain to Flanders. The subsequent addition of Castile to the coalition would later unite Spain with the Spanish Netherlands.

After the 1382 battle of Westrozebeke, Philip the Bold decided not to retaliate against the people of Ghent. He listened to their grievances and granted them privileges, setting a precedent for diplomatic governance. This foresight benefited his descendants, such as Emperor Charles V, who was born in Ghent and later became King of Castile.

Belgium is renowned for its exquisite cuisine and high-standard restaurants, a legacy of the Burgundians. Philip the Bold's extravagant banquets, featuring elaborate meals, special effects, and the finest Burgundian wines, showcased Burgundy's opulence and propagated the image of a realm of unparalleled quality and resources.

Figure 8.11: Left is the Marital Settlement for the marriage of Joanna of Castile and Archduke Philippe the Handsome. The document of 1493, stored in the Simancas archive, is exposed at the Palace of Liria (Courtesy of Palacio de Liria). Right is the Coat of Arms of Philip the Handsome in his role as Felipe I de Castilla (Image drawn by 'Heralder' , licensed under the Creative Commons Attribution-Share-Alike 3.0).

8.5.2 Jan Zonder Vrees - John of Burgundy - Jean sans Peur - Juan I de Borgoña

Jan Zonder Vrees, known as John the Fearless, was a son of Philip the Bold. He married a bride from the House of Bavaria, and their tomb is depicted in Figure 8.8. The House of Bavaria was the ruling family of Holland (now part of the Northern Netherlands), Zeeland (currently just north of the border between Belgium and the Netherlands), and Hainaut (now in Wallonia, Belgium). This marriage thereby facilitated the unification of these territories with Flanders and Burgundy. Johanna van Brabant favored this alliance, preferring the proximity of the Burgundians over the English.

It is crucial to note that the de Patin family resided in Cambrai during this period, as detailed in Chapter 65.2. It was in Cambrai in 1385 that negotiations took place to enable the Burgundians to consolidate the Low Countries[12] by incorporating territories such as Limburg. This process would later be fully realized under Philip the Good.

Philip the Bold and Margaret of Flanders, deeply devoted to the Catholic faith, commissioned the construction of numerous exquisite cloisters. Their fervent support for the faith is a testament to their devotion. Burgundy, still celebrated for its architectural masterpieces, such as those in Cluny and Dijon, was a hub of artistic and architectural excellence. Notably, artists and architects from the Burgundian Netherlands, including Ypres, Liège, Brussels, Haarlem, and Nijmegen, were employed to create these wonders.

In 1404, while dining in Brussels with Johanna van Brabant, Jan Zonder Vrees, and Philip the Good, Philip the Bold suddenly fell critically ill and had to be transported to Dijon. Unfortunately, he passed away in Halle, near Brussels, in 'Het Hert' inn. His remains were then ceremoniously transported from Halle to Dijon.

In the context of the later Spanish Empire, it is noteworthy that when Philip the Good died, the empire encompassed Franche-Comté, Artois, Nevers, Antwerp, and Mechelen. Brabant was integrated into the larger Burgundian cluster through the marriage of Anthony, the brother of Jan Zonder Vrees. During the reign of Philip the Good, the center of power in the united Burgundian empire shifted from Burgundy to Flanders.

8.5.3 Filips de Goede - Philip the Good - Philippe le Bon - Felipe el Bueno

Philip the Good was born during his father Jan Zonder Vrees' crusade. He is considered the unifier of the Netherlands[13]. In 1419, Jan Zonder Vrees was assassinated at Yonne. This event severed the ties between Philip and France, as he blamed the French for his father's death. Subsequently, in 1420, through the Treaty of Troyes, Philip the Good ceded the French crown to England, designating the King of England as the successor to Charles VI of France.

Philip the Good inherited significant territories encompassing much of modern-day Belgium and the Netherlands. However, this did not equate to a unified region; each territory retained its distinct fiscal and legal systems, and Philip held various titles across these regions. True unification only materialized with the formation of nation-states in the 19th and 20th centuries. Nevertheless, Philip endeavored to foster unity by forcefully acquiring Brabant, Henegouwen, and Holland and purchasing Namur.

In 1464, a significant step towards political unity was taken with the establishment of the 'Staten Generaal' in Bruges' 'Gotische Zaal.' This assembly, akin to the 'Las Cortés Catalanas' in Spain, brought together representatives from different territorial entities. Philip the Good sought legal unity and a unified tax system. The rationale behind this centralization mirrors the Roman Empire's establishment, which aimed to simplify governance across numerous separate entities in Europe and the Mediterranean.

Philip the Good fathered numerous illegitimate children and one legitimate son, Charles the Bold, with his third wife, Isabella of Portugal, as shown in Figure 8.7. Exploiting the financial difficulties of various states in the Low Countries, Philip purchased many territories and strategically placed his illegitimate children in positions of power in Utrecht, Cambrai, and Tournai.

Following a series of conflicts with his cousin Jacoba of Bayern, who controlled Holland, Zeeland, and Henegouwen, her death led to Philip inheriting her territories. Through these acquisitions, Philip endeavored to unite the Low Countries by implementing a universal legal system and a common currency. This common currency fostered economic integration, reminiscent of the modern Euro and the Eurozone, and facilitated commercial prosperity, making peaceful unification more feasible.

Philip the Good established the 'Staten Generaal' as part of his preparations for a crusade against the Muslims who had occupied Constantinople, fulfilling his knightly duty and political responsibilities.

From an intellectual standpoint, Philip the Good is notable for recognizing the importance of knowledge and expertise in governance. He relied on advisors and established educational institutions such as universities in Burgundy and Leuven. Judges were required to hold diplomas, moving away from the previous practice where noble descent sufficed.

Philip the Good passed away in Bruges at the Prinsenhof in 1467.

8.5.4 Karel de Stoute - Charles the Bold - Charles de Bourgogne / Charles le Hardy - Carlos el Temerario

Charles the Bold, depicted in Figure 8.7, was the son of Philip the Good. He was present with his father at the time of Philip's death. Initially, the Low Countries were reluctant to accept Charles as the rightful successor to Philip the Good. However, by the time of Philip's passing, this issue had been resolved, and Charles had been recognized as the heir. Charles the Bold was pivotal in expanding the Burgundian Empire through military campaigns. The territorial extent of his conquests is illustrated in Figure 8.5. Although he achieved significant success, his ambitions were ultimately curtailed. Charles met his demise in 1477 at the Battle of Nancy, a considerable defeat that marked the end of his expansionist efforts.

8.5.5 Maria van Bourgondië - Marie de Bourgogne - Mary the Duchess of Burgundy - Maria de Borgoña

Following the sudden death of her father, Charles the Bold, and being left in command of a debilitated army, Maria of Burgundy, born in Brussels in 1457 and depicted in Figure 8.7, faced a precarious situation. His Majesty King Louis XI of France sought to exploit her vulnerability by seizing several of her territories and attempting to coerce her into a marriage with his son. In response to these pressures, Maria ultimately chose to marry Maximilian of Habsburg, the son of Emperor Frederick III. This union marked the transition of the Burgundian Netherlands into the Habsburg Netherlands, thereby integrating the territory into the expansive Habsburg Empire.

Maria van Bourgondië, who met her untimely demise following a hunting accident in 1482, is interred in the Church of Our Lady

---

[12] nowadays Belgium and the Netherlands

[13] Modern Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg, and Flanders in the North of France

(Onze-Lieve-Vrouwekerk) in Bruges, as illustrated in Figure 8.8. She left behind two children: Margaret of Austria and Philip the Handsome.

8.5.6 Filips de Schone - Philip the Handsome - Philippe le Beau - Felipe el Hermoso / Felipe I de Castilla

Philip the Handsome, depicted in Figure 8.7, was born in Bruges in 1478 and died in Burgos, Spain, in 1506. He was the son of Maximilian of Austria, a member of the Habsburg dynasty, and Maria of Burgundy. In the context of the 17th-century events that led to the establishment of Saint Louis (Sint Lodewijk) in Deerlijk, as elaborated in Chapters 50 and 34.10, it is crucial to highlight that Philip the Handsome was a grandson of King Louis IX of France, who was canonized by the Pope, likely due to Philip's influence. This connection to the French Holy King significantly contributed to the early unity of the Low Countries.

Philip played a pivotal role in uniting Spain with Burgundy, including present-day Belgium. The heraldic hierarchy, which ranks kingdoms above duchies, implies that Spain assumed administrative precedence through its union with Burgundy and the Netherlands. For modern observers, it is essential to note that Spain did not conquer Burgundy or the Netherlands but joined through marriage, leading to Spain's administrative dominance.

At the age of four, following the death of his mother, Maria of Burgundy, in 1482, Philip the Handsome succeeded her as the ruler of the Netherlands and Burgundy. Figure 8.9 shows his sister, Margaret of Austria. Due to Philip's young age, actual governance was handled by his father, Maximilian. Philip was raised in Mechelen by his grandmother, Margaret of York. He later became the Archduke of Austria by inheritance, but his marriage to a Spanish princess was a strategic choice he made independently.

On October 20, 1496, Philip the Handsome married Juana of Castile in Lier, Belgium. The marriage document is illustrated in Figure 8.11. Juana was the daughter of Ferdinand of Aragon and Isabella I of Castile. Although initially arranged, the marriage reportedly blossomed into genuine affection upon the couple's first meeting. This union did not immediately unify Spain and Belgium because Juana was not the heir to the throne; her brother Juan of Aragon was the heir until his untimely death in 1497. This event set the stage for Philip to rule over the Netherlands, Austria, Burgundy, and Spain, among other territories.

Philip became Philip I of Castile following Isabella of Castile's death in 1504. However, his reign was brief, as he died three months later, with many historians suspecting foul play. His widow, Juana, mourned him deeply, to the extent of sometimes carrying his body with her, earning her the moniker "Juana la Loca" or "Johanna the Mad," depicted in Figure 8.9. Historians suggest her alleged insanity was declared to remove her from political power. The couple had a son, Charles (Karel or Carlos), who would become a more accepted ruler than his father, as discussed in Chapter 8.7.

Philip's coat of arms, shown in Figure 8.11, is described as follows: El matrimonio de doña Juana con Felipe el Hermoso trajo otro cuartelado más: (..) las mismas que usaron los Reyes Católicos (..) se cuartelaron con las de Felipe: cuartelado de Austria, Borgoña moderno, Borgoña antiguo y Brabante; sobre el todo partido de Flandes y Tirol. Rey 'Jure Uxoris' de Castilla, Felipe el Hermoso usó sus armas simplificadas, (sin Tirol) fuera de España, solas sin combinarlas con las de Juana.

Despite being considered a foreigner and thus less acceptable for the throne compared to his son Charles, Philip's lineage included notable figures such as Eleonora of Portugal, Eleonora of Trastámara, Isabella of Portugal, Charles I de Bourbon, and Isabelle de Bourbon. His tomb is depicted in Figure 8.10.

Juana of Castile and Philip the Handsome's son, Charles (Karel or Carlos), would later become Emperor Charles V, ruling over much of Europe and the world, as detailed in Chapter 8.6.

8.6 Iberia as the Crown of the World

This book does not delve deeply into the global expansions of Spain and Portugal. References to these expansions are scattered throughout the text. Notably, significant descriptions are found in Part XII, which discusses the de Silva family and their arrival in Sri Lanka.

The courage of the Iberians is commendable, especially considering the feats described in Chapter 56.6. Vasco da Gama's discovery of the sea route to India via Africa in 1497-1498 followed earlier explorations of Africa's west coast by other brave men. Similarly, Christopher Columbus' first voyage to the Americas in 1492 marked a pivotal historical moment. These discoveries paved the way for the numerous subsequent endeavors undertaken by the Crowns of Portugal and Castile and by Iberia as a whole in their global expansion.

Shortly after these initial Iberian discoveries, Philip the Handsome married Isabella of Castile in 1496, an event occurring between Columbus' discovery of America and Vasco da Gama's route to India. This marriage highlighted the involvement of the Low Countries[14] in early Iberian endeavors due to their political alliance with Iberia. In contrast, Aragon and the Italian states focused primarily on Mediterranean affairs. The origins of Christopher Columbus remain a subject of investigation, as shown in Figure 8.12, even in 2023.

For further reading on Spain's position and global power during the period of the Spanish Netherlands, Robert Goodwin's work is highly recommended[15]. Additional information can be found in Chapter 56.6.

8.7 Emperor Charles V and the brotherhood of Spain and Flanders

Karel van Habsburg[16], depicted in Figure 8.9, was born in Ghent in 1500. Chapter 25.1.3 reveals that our ancestors lent money to him, which was earned in the Americas. He passed away in Yuste in 1558. In 1556, he abdicated for reasons that remain unclear. Some attribute his abdication to health issues, while others believe he sought to return to a life of modesty and genuine Christian piety. His abdication ceremony took place at Hof van Brussel[17] (the Palace on Koudenberg), where he transferred power to his son, Felipe II of Spain[18], and his brother, Ferdinand I[19].

After his abdication, Charles Quint chose to reside in the Monastery of Yuste, awaiting his death in humility, simplicity, and devout

---

[14] Belgium and the Netherlands

[15] Robert Goodwin, 'Spain, the Centre of the World 1519-1682,' Bloomsbury, 2015

[16] Karel van Habsburg was also known as Charles Quint, Carlos V, H.M. Carlos I of Spain, Duke of Burgundy, Count of Flanders, and Carlos II of Sicily.

[17] Hof van Brussel has always been associated with Spanish rule in Belgium and was also the name of the Desclergues' farm in Wielsbeke, reflecting their Spanish heritage, as highlighted in Chapter 43, Chapter 29.5.25, Chapter 33.6, Chapter 38, and Chapter 39.6

[18] He received Spain, Burgundy, the Netherlands, etc.

[19] He received the Holy Roman Empire

Figure 8.12: 'Virgen de Los Navegantes' at the Alcazar of Sevilla, depicting Colom in the front left of the painting, partially bald and having white remaining hair. 🅮

Figure 8.13: Carlos V and Isabella of Portugal were wed in 1526. Numerous historical records recount that their union quickly blossomed into a vibrant and passionate relationship following their nuptials, which took place at the Alcázar of Seville. Their honeymoon was celebrated at the Alhambra in Granada, further solidifying their bond. This marriage was not only a personal union but also a politically strategic alliance, reinforcing the ties between the Spanish and Portuguese crowns. The Alcázar of Seville, a royal palace renowned for its Mudejar architecture, and the Alhambra, an iconic example of Moorish architecture, both were fitting backdrops for the beginning of their storied marriage.🅮

Figure 8.14: Kortrijk, Onze-Lieve-Vrouwe Kerk. Left to right: Carlos V (Ghent 1500 - Yuste 1558), Felipe II (Valladolid 1527 - Escorial 1598), Felipe IV (Valladolid 1605 - Madrid 1665), Carlos II (Madrid 1661 - Madrid 1700), Felipe V (Versailles 1683 - Madrid 1746). The frescoes depict the rulers of Flanders. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

DOMINIONS OF THE
HOUSE OF HABSBURG
IN EUROPE AT THE
ABDICATION OF CHARLES V
Scale of Statute Miles
Habsburg lands are tinted green.
NOTE- The greater part of Hungary including Transylvania was in continual dispute with the Turks. The relation of the Habsburg and Ottoman Powers is here shown as it stood at the truce of 1547.
FRANCE
SPAIN
PORTUGAL
ARAGON
NAPLES
SICILY
SARDINIA
CORSICA
BOHEMIA
MORAVIA
AUSTRIA
HUNGARY
TRANSYLVANIA
POLAND
OTTOMAN EMPIRE
SWISS CONFEDERATION
VENICE
PAPAL STATES
Map 10
Cambridge University Press.
Stanford's Geog! Estab!, London.

Figure 8.15: A map of the dominions (in green) of emperor Charles V (1556) ('The Cambridge Modern History Atlas' edited by Sir Adolphus William Ward, G.W. Prothero, Sir Stanley Mordaunt Leathes, and E.A. Benians. Cambridge University Press; London. 1912) 🄯

Memoire coucher doresnavant es lettres en lieu de l'empereur nre sire le Roy nre sire comme aiant cede ledit empereur son droit au prouffit dudit Roy son filz

Figure 8.16: On October 25, 1555, Emperor Charles V abdicated in Brussels, Belgium. The Burgundian Netherlands came under the rule of his son Philip II, King of Spain. This was reported almost immediately throughout the territory, as can be seen from this note drawn up on October 26, 1555, by the Registrar of the Supreme Court of Namur. It states: 'Memoire coucher doresnavant es lettres en lieu de l' empereur nostre sire le roy nostre sire comme aiant cedé ledit empereur son droit au prouffit dudit roy son filz' , found in Hooggerechtshof van Namen, nr. 57: Register Transport en Schepenakten, 1555-1556, folio 80 verso.

Figure 8.17: At 'Cripta Real del Monasterio de El Escorial,' shown left, where the Spanish Kings, beginning with Charles Quint (Charles V, Carlos I of Spain, Keizer Karel Heer der Nederlanden), are granted their final resting place, we see, in the right photo, from top to bottom, the graves of Carlos I (a.k.a. Charles Quint or Carlos V), Felipe II, Felipe III and Felipe IV of Spain. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 8.18: The heraldic shield of Felipe II of Spain, whose tomb is shown in Figure 8.17, in the facade of the Town Hall of Antwerp, 2023. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 8.19: A ducatón coin of 1618, exposing Isabella of Spain and Albert of Austria.

Christianity, while enjoying fine food. On October 25, 1555, Emperor Charles V announced his abdication. He celebrated his farewell at the 'Staten Generaal' of the Low Countries in the presence of his son, Philip, underscoring the importance he placed on his Belgian roots. Philip ascended as Philip II, Lord of the Netherlands. It is also noteworthy that Emperor Charles V held William of Orange in high regard, considering him his favorite military commander. However, William would later betray the Spanish Habsburgs by advocating for separation. Carlos V is perhaps the most formidable working monarch Europe has ever seen. His vast European Empire, depicted in Figure 8.15, stands as a testament to his influence. Kortrijk proudly displays his fresco in the Notre Dame Church, as shown in Figure 8.14. Unlike his son Felipe II, Charles Quint was a monarch who spent much of his career traveling throughout Europe to forge alliances, lead military campaigns, and rule as emperor. During his absences from the Iberian Peninsula, his wife, Isabella of Portugal, served as Governor. Numerous books have chronicled the life of Carlos V, noting his slightly deformed chin and awkward youth. It is plausible that he viewed his life and career as an emperor, a divine gift, and a duty to be fulfilled. This belief likely contributed to his delay in marriage. In Isabella of Portugal, he found his soulmate; the couple is shown in Figure 8.13. Sadly, she passed away in 1539. Carlos V's personal life was as intriguing as his political career. He fathered children both before his marriage and after his wife's death, a fact that adds depth to his character. In the context of this book, it is significant that Carlos V presided over the Catalan Courts in 1519 and was recognized as Count of Barcelona.

8.8 The Habsburg Rule of Belgium under the Spanish Crown after Carlos V

Emperor Carlos V is also known as King Carlos I of Spain and is described in Chapter 8.7. Here we present the further list of Habsburg Kings who ruled over Spain during the Spanish Netherlands.

8.8.1 H. M. Felipe II as King of Spain and Ruler of the Spanish Netherlands, 1556-1598

H.M. Felipe II (Valladolid 1527 - Escorial 1598), depicted in Figure 8.14 at Kortrijk, reigned as the King of Spain from January 16, 1556, until December 13, 1598. He was the son of Emperor Charles V and Isabella of Portugal. Unlike his father, who was born in Ghent and raised in the Low Countries, Felipe II had no personal ties to these regions beyond his inherited authority. His reliance on Fernando Álvarez de Toledo, Duke of Alba, known for his harsh rule in the Spanish Netherlands, waned as Felipe II eventually preferred a less severe approach. Felipe II did not speak Flemish or French, distancing him from the local populace.

In contemporary Belgium and the Netherlands, Felipe II is closely associated with the religious civil war between Catholics and Protestants. However, his reign was also marked by significant challenges, including ongoing conflicts with the Ottoman Empire, the administration of the vast Spanish and Portuguese global empires, and numerous financial issues such as managing the silver fleet, handling loans, and facing bankruptcy.

Felipe II was married four times: to Maria of Portugal, Mary Tudor of England, Elisabeth de Valois, and Anna of Austria. Mary Tudor, Queen of England from 1553 to 1558, was the daughter of Henry VIII and his first wife, Catherine of Aragon. She earned the nicknames "the Catholic" and "Bloody Mary" for her zealous persecution of Protestants. Near the end of his life, Felipe II endowed the Spanish Netherlands to his daughter, Isabella Clara Eugenia, as a dowry for her marriage to Albert VII, Archduke of Austria. Their story is detailed in Chapter 8.8.3.

It is noteworthy that King Felipe II was descended from several notable historical figures, which might surprise those from Belgium and the Netherlands unfamiliar with their shared history. His ancestry included William II of Holland and Hainaut (1286-1337), Jean de Avesnes (1218-1257), Aleida of Holland, Floris IV, Count of Holland, Machteld of Brabant, William I, Count of Hainaut, Dirk V, Count of Holland, among others. Thus, King Felipe II was intricately linked to the history of the Northern Netherlands and Belgium, Burgundy, and Spain.

8.8.2 H. M. Felipe III as King of Spain, 1598-1621

H.M. Felipe III (Madrid 1578 - Madrid 1621), King of Spain from September 13, 1598, until March 31 1621, was the son of H.M. Felipe II of Spain and Anna of Austria.

He is shown in Figure 29.100 on page 415, and his will is shared in Figures 34.26, 34.27 and 34.28, on page 533.

8.8.3 H. M. Isabella of Spain and H. M. Albert of Austria as Rulers of the Spanish Netherlands, 1598-1621

As described in Chapter 8.8.1, Isabella of Spain received the Spanish Netherlands as a wedding gift from her father, H. M. Felipe II of Spain, just before he died in 1598, for her marriage with Albert of Austria. The couple is shown in Figure 29.82 on page 409 and Figure 33.4 on page 503, and also on a coin in Figure 8.19. The doble soberano (double sovereign), the soberano (sovereign), '2/3 de soberano' (2/3 of a sovereign), a medio soberano (half sovereign), a patagón (Patagonian), a medio patagón (half Patagonian), and a cuarto patagón (Patagonian quarter), were the new coins in the Duchy of Brabant and the county of Flanders. Later a new silver coin of '11 dineros y 8 granos', better known as the ducatón, was minted for the first time in 1618 and is shown in Figure 8.19. This coin was the basis of the monetary system until the middle of the 18th century. Isabella of Spain and Albert of Austria, despite their piety, were the first sovereigns who suppressed all religious inscriptions from their coins, replacing them with their names and titles.

After the death of Albert of Austria in 1621, there were regents or governors of the Netherlands, just like before and during their rule, shown on page 52, including the widow Isabella of Spain (1621-1633). Still, they fell under the power of the Spanish King, who, therefore, effectively ruled the Spanish Netherlands. H. M. Felipe IV is briefly described in Chapter 8.8.4

Figure 8.20: Wall Street, Manhattan, July 2006. The Dutch East India Company (VOC), established in 1602, is often seen as the first multinational corporation and a pioneer of global trade. Early stock exchanges, like the Bruges Bourse in 1409, laid the groundwork for Wall Street and free enterprise. The VOC's historical trade challenges are vastly different from modern digital trading. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

8.8.4 H. M. Felipe IV as King of Spain and Ruler of the Spanish Netherlands, 1621-1665

H.M. Felipe IV (Valladolid 1605 - Madrid 1665), King of Spain from March 31, 1621 until September 17, 1665, can be seen in Figure 8.14 on page 49 on a fresco in Kortrijk, but also in Figure 34.163 on page 582, Figure 49.43 on page 1005, and his signature is shown in Figure 49.42 on page 1005.

8.8.5 H. M. Carlos II as King of Spain and Ruler of the Spanish Netherlands, 1665-1700

H.M. Carlos II (Madrid 1661 - Madrid 1700), King of Spain from September 17, 1665 until November 1, 1700, is shown in Figure 8.14 on page 49, Figure 8.25 on page 60, and Figure 34.167 on page 585.

His successor as King of Spain was H. M. King Felipe V and is described in Chapter 8.13.1. The Spanish Netherlands, however, became Austrian in 1700 and are further described in Chapter 8.17.

Indeed, following Carlos II's death, the reign of the House of Bourbon-Anjou commenced in Spain, while the Austrian Habsburgs assumed control over the Spanish Netherlands. Complex political dynamics in Europe marked this transition, the details of which will be elaborated upon in subsequent sections of this book. Upon restoring stability in Spain and the Spanish Netherlands, it can be asserted that the governance of the House of Bourbon-Anjou and the House of the Austrian Habsburgs was exemplary.

8.9 The disaster of the Eighty Years War and the game of thrones between H.M. King Felipe II, William of Orange, H.M. the King of France and H.M. the Queen of England

King Felipe II of Spain was a devout Catholic sovereign, characterized by a profound sincerity and strict adherence to high moral standards[20]. He was an idealist who governed during a period fraught with challenges: he ruled over a vast empire perpetually besieged by external threats and composed of a mosaic of quasi-independent territories, each with its own laws, tax systems, languages, and distinct histories. Due to his inability to travel extensively, Felipe II relied heavily on his representatives to inform and act on his behalf. Despite his genuine piety and fear of anti-Catholic sentiment, he often failed to fully grasp the motivations and principles of his subjects, particularly those in the Netherlands[21].

His advisors and representatives were caught between the idealistic and perfectionist demands from the Spanish crown and the Netherlands' desire for religious freedom, a self-managed tax system, and significant self-governance. Following the Protestant Reformation in the German territories of Charles V, Spain imposed a draconian policy in the Netherlands, which ultimately sparked the Dutch Revolt and the Eighty Years' War. The situation's complexity was exacerbated by anti-Spanish propaganda and military interventions from the House of Nassau, the English, and the French Huguenots, turning the Low Countries into a volatile battleground. Both sides committed atrocities, and the conflict evolved into a protracted war between the States of the Netherlands and the Spanish Netherlands, or Flanders.

Numerous works have documented the early years of the conflict, beginning with the Iconoclasm of 1566, or 'Beeldenstorm' as it is known in Dutch. It is important to note that these brutal events predated the arrival of the Desclergues in Flanders, and thus, our Spanish ancestors were not implicated in them.

Fernando Álvarez de Toledo y Pimentel, the Duke of Alva, son of García Álvarez de Toledo y Zúñiga and Beatriz Pimentel y Pacheco, governed the Netherlands from 1567 to 1573. His grandmother, Maria Pacheco, may have been distantly related to Enric Desclergue's wife, Ana Fabiana Pacheco, as discussed in Chapter 33.4.2 on page 516, or possibly through a different lineage outlined in Chapter 27.2 on page 301. Felipe II appointed the Duke of Alva to suppress the Protestant uprising due to his close connections with Felipe's father, Charles V. However, his tenure was marked by brutality and bloodshed. The Dutch Orange dynasty has perpetuated the memory of this period to maintain ongoing hostility towards the Spanish and the Spanish Netherlands throughout the Eighty Years' War.

During this time, the Dutch also competed with the Spanish and Portuguese in Asia[22] and the Americas[23]. The world's trade epicenter, Manhattan, depicted in Figure 8.20, originates in this era. After the reign of Alva, rulers of higher moral standards governed over the Spanish Netherlands. The list is as follows:

Luis de Zúñiga y Requesens (1573-1576),
Juan of Austria (1576-1578),
Alexander Farnese duke of Parma (1578-1592), shown in Figure 29.23 on page 393,
Peter Ernst I von Mansfeld (1592-1594), als shown in Figure 29.23 on page 393,
Ernst of Austria (1594 - 1595),
Pedro Henriquez de Acevedo (1595-1596),

---

[20] Geoffrey Parker, 'Imprudent King - a new life of Philip II,' 2014

[21] Flanders, Holland, Brabant, Friesland

[22] through their VOC

[23] through their VWIC

Albrecht of Austria (1596-1598),
Archduke and Archduchess Albrecht and Isabella who ruled as sovereigns (1598-1621),
Isabella of Spain (1621-1633),
Francisco de Moncada (1633-1634),
Ferdinand of Austria (1634-1641),
Francisco de Melo (1641-1644), shown in Figure 34.78 on page 552,
Manuel de Castel Rodrigo (1644-1647),
Leopold Willhelm of Austria (1647-1656),
Juan II of Austria (1656-1659),
Luis de Benavides Carillo (1659-1664),
Francisco de Castel Rodrigo (1664-1668),
Íñigo Fernández de Velasco (1668-1670),
Juan Domingo Mendez de Haro y Fernández de Córdoba (1670-1675), Carlos de Gurrea (1675-1678),
Alexander Farnese (1678-1682),
Ottone Enrico del Carretto (1682-1685),
Francisco Antonio de Agurto (1685-1691),
Maximilian II Emanuel von Bayern (1691-1706).

Interestingly, one of the prominent leaders of the 'Malcontenten' who played a crucial role in overthrowing the Calvinist governments in the Southern Spanish Netherlands, particularly in regions such as Flanders, was Valentin de Pardieu. Born in 1535 and deceased in 1595 in Doullens, Valentin was the seigneur de la Motte, the son of Jean de Pardieu and Catherine du Pret. His family, the de la Motte (de Baraffes), had significant involvement in the early history of the Chapel in Deerlijk, as detailed in Chapter 49. The resurgence of Catholicism, supported by the Spanish, began in earnest in 1578. The 'Malcontenten,' also known as 'Paternosterknechten,' were not always known for their decorum, but the Calvinists were equally infamous for their conduct. The populace of Flanders generally supported the restoration of Catholicism and the expulsion of the Protestant Calvinists.

During the decline of Calvinist rule in the region, Casimirus, in 1578, infamously plundered churches and destroyed crops. His force of 100 soldiers, including 100 cavaliers, wreaked havoc on the local populace, their homes, and their produce. Starting in October 1578, the 'Malcontenten' progressively liberated village and town after town. Notably, Kortrijk was liberated on February 28, 1580. Following this, Alexander Farnese stationed Spanish troops in Harelbeke. As analyzed in this book in Chapters 29.5.8, 29.12, and 30, the military presence remained in the area east of Harelbeke, particularly in the Manor of Overacker, well into the 17th century. The number of troops fluctuated, but they were a constant presence. Additionally, Irish troops also resided in the area, as documented in Chapter 73.10.3.7.

The 'Malcontenten,' with Spanish backing, effectively repelled the dissident governments to the North while liberating the south. Nonetheless, the conflict with the North persisted, culminating in the prolonged Eighty Years' War.

8.10 El Camino Español

The Spanish Road, also known as El Camino Español, is depicted and described in Figure 8.21. The Road's development was contingent on the fluctuating political landscape of Europe. Initially established in 1567, it reached its final form in 1634. The Spanish Road represented a significant technical and logistical achievement of approximately 1500 kilometers, enabling travel from Spain to Brussels in around 45 days. Its primary function was to facilitate the transportation of essential materials, such as weaponry, personnel, and provisions, to the soldiers of the Tercios and the forces serving the Hispanic Monarchy.

The Spanish Empire faced considerable challenges due to its extensive territories and the limited availability of human resources. Consequently, the Spanish Road emerged as a crucial land route for maintaining imperial control, stretching from Italy to Belgium. It served as a strategic pathway for the Empire and its adversaries. Persistent maritime threats from Barbary and Ottoman pirates in the Mediterranean and English and Dutch forces in the Atlantic necessitated the creation of a secure overland route for transporting essential goods. The travel methods of the armies reflected a balance between safety and speed, with the Spanish Road being safe but relatively slow.

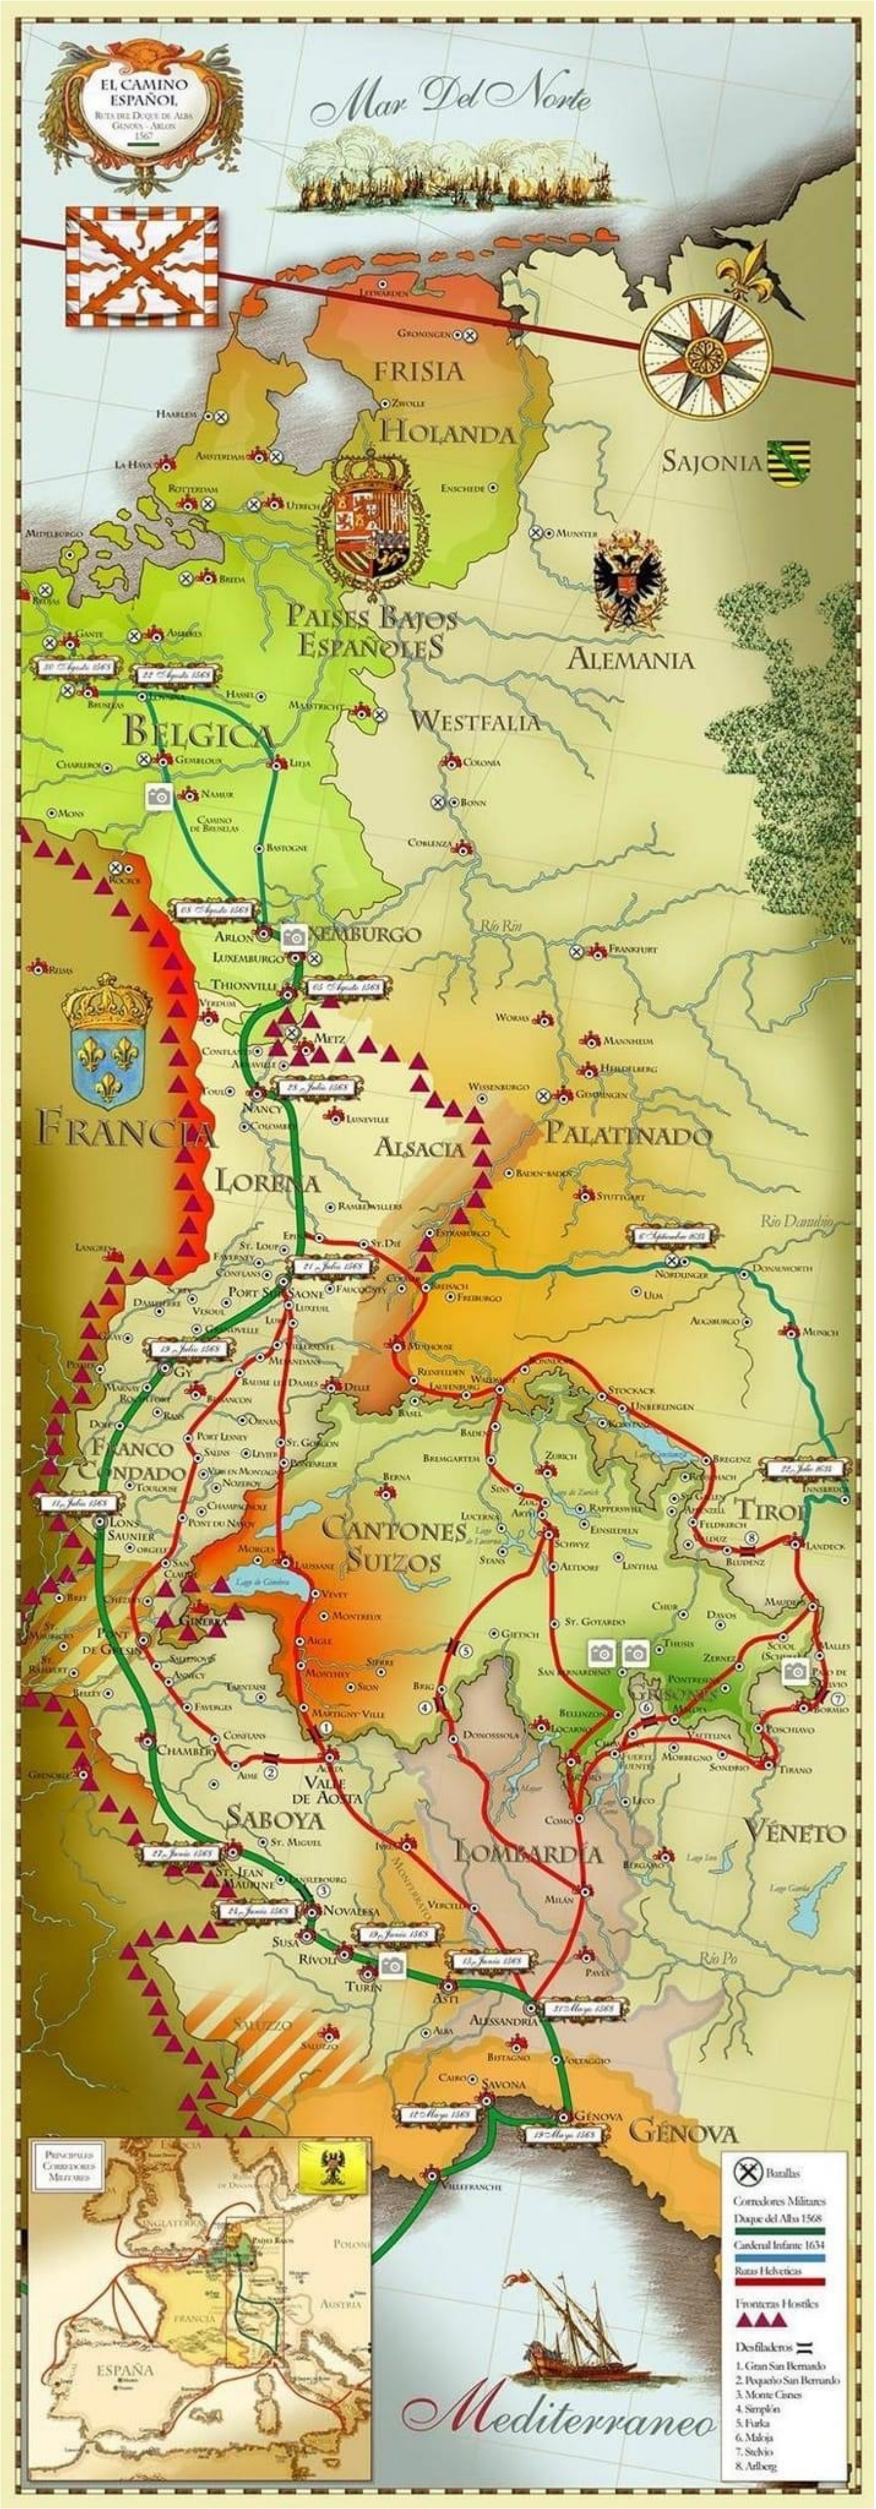
The Spanish Road was a historical path that linked Milan to Brussels, frequently traversed by the Tercios during the 16th and 17th centuries. This initiative sought to maintain the connection between the Spanish Netherlands and the central hub of the Hispanic Monarchy in Milan. The Spanish Tercios, originating from Castile and Aragon, established their presence in various Italian territories, including Sicily, Naples, and Milan. These Tercios played a crucial role in defending the Mediterranean region from Muslim incursions. The Spanish Road passed through regions controlled by allied powers, such as Savoy and Lorraine, and territories under the Spanish crown, including the Duchy of Milan, the Franche-Comté, and the Spanish Netherlands. The route ran east of France, primarily aiming to maintain the territorial continuity of the Spanish Crown. For Lorraine and Savoy, the Road and their strong alliance with Spain provided security against French expansionist ambitions. The Swiss cantons and the Habsburg Empire also played vital roles in the Road's trajectory.

Spanish forces, often exceeding 1000 personnel at a time, were accompanied by various elements, including luggage, chariots, artillery, wives, children, prostitutes, priests, bankers, food, and livestock. Initially, the routes the Duke of Alba used during the first stage of the Camino comprised preexisting trade routes without prior military presence. Along the Camino, an average daily distance of 23 kilometers was achieved. A year before Alba's departure, Francisco de Ibarra dispatched an engineer with a contingent of 300 sappers to widen the pathway to facilitate the movement of soldiers. Military personnel required cartographic resources, and guidance from local inhabitants proved indispensable on several occasions.

After 1634, the Spanish Road ceased to function as a direct highway from Spain to Flanders. Although land travel continued, potentially along the last established but more perilous route, journeys became more individualized and occasionally substituted with sea routes when overland travel became too challenging.

8.11 The Spanish Army of Flanders during the Eighty Years War

It is well-known that the historical memory of the Belgians has long been shaped by literature from the 16th and 17th centuries, which functioned as Dutch propaganda to perpetuate animosity towards the Spanish rulers of Flanders. The Dutch aimed to dominate global trade and rival the Spanish, a goal epitomized by establishing the Dutch East India Company (VOC). Consequently, a



EL CAMINO ESPAÑOL
RUTA DEL DUQUE DE ALBA
GENOVA - ARLON
1567
Mar Del Norte
FRISIA
HOLANDA
SAJONIA
PAISES BAJOS ESPAÑOLES
ALEMANIA
BELGICA
WESTFALIA
LUXEMBURGO
FRANCIA
LORENA
ALSACIA
PALATINADO
FRANCO CONDADO
CANTONES SUIZOS
TIROL
SABOYA
VALLE DE AOSTA
LOMBARDÍA
VÉNETO
GÉNOVA
GRISONES
Río Rin
Río Danubio
Río Po
Lago de Ginebra
30 Agosto 1568
22 Agosto 1568
08 Agosto 1568
05 Agosto 1568
28 Julio 1568
21 Julio 1568
19 Julio 1568
11 Julio 1568
27 Junio 1568
24 Junio 1568
19 Junio 1568
13 Junio 1568
31 Mayo 1568
12 Mayo 1568
19 Mayo 1568
6 Septiembre 1634
22 Julio 1634
Bruselas
Lovaina
Namur
Camino de Bruselas
Bastogne
Arlon
Luxemburgo
Thionville
Metz
Nancy
Port Sur Saone
Gy
Lons Saunier
Chambery
St. Jean Maurine
Novalesa
Susa
Rivoli
Turin
Asti
Alessandria
Savona
Génova
Villefranche
Milan
Como
Mediterraneo
Principales Corredores Militares
ESPAÑA
FRANCIA
INGLATERRA
PAISES BAJOS
POLONIA
AUSTRIA
Batallas
Corredores Militares
Duque del Alba 1568
Cardenal Infante 1634
Rutas Helveticas
Fronteras Hostiles
Desfiladeros
1. Gran San Bernardo
2. Pequeño San Bernardo
3. Monte Cenis
4. Simplón
5. Furka
6. Maloja
7. Stelvio
8. Arlberg

Figure 8.21: Miguel de Cervantes[a] wrote, "Now, I will briefly recount what has happened to me since then. I embarked at Alicante, arrived in Genoa after a smooth crossing, then traveled to Milan. There, I bought weapons and soldier's equipment, intending to enlist in the Piedmont troops. On my way to Alexandria, I learned the Grand Duke of Alba was passing through Flanders. Changing my mind, I followed him, served in his battles, witnessed the deaths of Counts Horn and Egmont, and was appointed ensign to a famous captain from Guadalajara named Diego de Urbina." The Spanish Road was a crucial 1000-kilometer military route, connecting Northern Italy to the North Sea, facilitating troop movements for the Habsburg Spanish monarchs between their territories. It included the Duchy of Milan and the Netherlands, where the War of Flanders began following a revolt in 1566. This uprising posed a significant challenge to the Spanish Monarchy, which relied on regiments and additional soldiers relocated to Flanders to combat the rebels. In 1567, after a 50-day journey from Milan, the first tercios led by the Duke of Alba arrived in Brussels. The route became known as El Camino Español. In 1567, the Duque of Alba traveled from Genoa to Brussels via Genoa, Milan, Turin, Aiguebelle, Chambery, Lons-le-Saunier, Besançon, Nancy, Metz, Luxemburg, Leuven, and Brussels. In 1595, Archduke Albert took a similar route, adding Albertville, Annecy, Arinthod, Baume-les-Dames, Epinal, Thionville, and Namur. In 1601, the route ran from Milan to Mea, Aoste, Bourg-St-Maurice, Pont de Gressin, St Claude, Champagnole, Baume-les-Dames, Epinal, Luxemburg, Namur, and Brussels. By 1604, it went from Milan to Lugano, Bedinzona, St Gottard, Luzern, Baden, Rupt-Sur-Moselle, Epinal, Nancy, Luxemburg, Namur, and Brussels. In 1620, the route included Milan, Gravedona, Col du Simplon, Briga, Furkapass, Schyz, Baden, Breysach, Colmar, St-Die-des-Vosgues, Baccarat, Luxemburg, Namur, and Brussels. In 1623, it extended from Milan to Como, Forte di Fuentes, Col du Grand-Saint-Bernard, Thusis, Konstantz, Strasbourg, Saverne, Sarrebourg, Lagrade, Metz, Thionville, Luxemburg, Namur, and Brussels. By 1634, the route from Milan to Brussels included Como, Forte di Fuentes, Sondrio, Innsbruck, München, Nordlingen, Bonn, Köln, Lummen, and Leuven. The figure shows the original Spanish Road used by Alba. (Courtesy of elcaminoespanol.com)

---

[a] Miguel de Cervantes, 'El ingenioso hidalgo don Quijote de la Mancha,' 1605.

Figure 8.22: In 1600, on April 19, the VOC ship 'De Liefde' arrived in Japan. It was one of 5 VOC vessels that departed in the Netherlands on June 27, 1598. This picture is taken in Tokyo on March 12, 2006, when the author stayed for more than four weeks at the Tokyo Institute of Technology in Yokohama. The daily commute between Susukakadai and O-Okayama was marvelous. The picture was taken on a day off with one of the students from the lab. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

1602 Octob. 26 — Anna filia Alfonsi Hernandez, et Margaritæ baptizata est in hac ecclesia parochiali divi Philippi novæ arcis Antverpiensis per præm mgrũ frẽm Thomã de Villarreal Pastorẽ ipsius die vigesima sexta Octobris anno dñi millesimo sexcente simo secũdo; sub Patrino Frederico Caguet, et Matrina Mar garita Vã Breda. — Anna 83

Novẽb. 10 — Catharina filia Christophori Vã de Noue, et Frãciscæ de Gros bap tizata est in hac ecclesia parochiali Divi Philippi novæ arcis Antu erpiensis per prẽm mgrũ frẽm Thomã de Villarreal Pastorẽ ip sius die decima Novẽbris, ãno dñi millesimo sexcẽtesimo se cũdo; sub Patrino Didaco Marin Capitaneo, et Matrina Anna de Visser. — Catalina 84

16 — Catharina Vã de Borguẽ filia Joãnis Vã de Borguẽ, et Mariæ Vã de Crus inter hereticos Zelandos insulanos nata, et usque ad vigesimũ ætatis suæ annũ, vel circiter, in aliena secta instructa, gratia [illegible] Catholicæ Ro manæ veræ ecclesiæ unitati recõciliata, et restituta Rmi Antverpiensis au thoritate, Pastori mihi, et Parocho huius novæ arcis Antverpiensis fuit ab eodẽ remissa, quã, cũ industria reverẽdi patris Frãcisci de Matte Minoritæ ejusdẽ arcis pro Belgis sacellani in catholica fide doctã sufficienter instructã cogno vissẽ, ad Bapmi solẽnia pagẽda, et supplẽda, eã illã admissi. Cũ ẽe reverẽdis admodũ dñis meis Licẽtiato Joãni del Rio Archidiacono, Rmi Antverpiensis Officiali, ac Licẽtiato Silvestro Pardo Canonico, ejusdẽ Rmi sigillario, predicto patri de Matte, et alijs visũ fuisset, illã certo, et indubitater (tamet si extra ecclesiam) baptizatã fuisse, ut pote inter tales hæreticos nata, et nutrita, qui bapmũ iuxta institutũ a xpõ dño [illegible] parvulis administrãt; unde nullã iterũ eã, nec sub conditione rebaptizari [illegible]; baptismalia, seu pro solenitate bapmi cæremonias sacras, [illegible], ac eã illã egi, et suppleui, ipsa prius abrenũciãte, fidẽ profitẽte, et bapm petẽte, et iã habitũ acceptãte, et cũ gaudio spirituali in unitate Catholicæ Romanæ ecclesiæ [illegible] sibi [illegible] promittẽte. Patrinũ habuit, et Matrinã ad ampliorẽ instructũ Mar tinũ de Sãtillana huius arcis Sargẽtũ, et [illegible] Perseual Lictoris huius arcis uxorẽ. Interfuere plures ad solẽnẽ actũ, inter quos Joannes Mẽ dez, et Gaspar Luis. In cuius veritatis testificationẽ ipse ego Pastor Fra ter Thomas de Villarreal Theologus Mgr̃ meã signaturã apposui cũ compendio, qua [illegible], die decima sexta Novẽbris ãno dñi mil lesimo, sexcẽtesimo secũdo. — Catalina 85

30 — Thomas filius Thomæ Hoyen, et Catharinæ Olemart baptizatus est in hac ecclesia Parochiali Divi Philippi novæ arcis Antverpiensis die trigesima Novẽbris ãno dñi millesimo sexcẽtesimo secũdo per prẽm mgrũ frẽm Thomã de Villarreal Pastorẽ ejusdẽ sub Patrino Joãne Marti nez, et Matrina Elizabeth de la Peña. — Thomas 86

Decẽ. 15 — Elisabeth filia Andreæ Emanuele, et Margaritæ bap tizata est in hac ecclesia parochiali Divi Philippi novæ arcis Antuer piensis per prẽm mgrũ frẽm Thomã de Villarreal pastorẽ ejusdẽ die decima quinta Decẽbris, ãno dñi millesimo sexcẽtesimo secũ do; sub Patrino Joãne de Molguerecl, et Matrina Frãcisca Rodriguez. — Elizabet 87

26 — Maria filia Martelanguemã, et Mariæ Vã Estikens baptizata est in hac ecclesia parochiali divi Philippi novæ arcis Antverpiensis per prẽm Petrũ Vela Propastorẽ ejusdẽ die vigesima sexta Decẽbris ãno dñi millesimo sexcẽtesimo secũdo; sub Patrino Hier Verguemãs, et Guillmete Dutoly. — Maria 88

29 — Margarita filia Joãnis Vara, et Mariæ de la Cruz baptizata est in hac ec clesia parochiali Divi Philippi novæ arcis Antverpiensis per prẽm Petrũ Vela Propastorẽ ipsius die vigesima nona Decẽbris ãno dñi millesimo sexcẽte simo secũdo; sub Patrino Didaco Alfonso vexilifero, et Matrina Joãna Ti lens. — Margarita 89

Figure 8.23: Middle record, Antwerp, Castle of San Felipe de la Castilla, November 12, 1602. The oldest found record of 'Belgium' , in this book's reported research.

LYSTE

Vande Naemen der Slaeven vande Nederlanden ghekocht binnen de Stadt van Algiers in Barbarijen inde Maent van Auguſtus 1670, door den Eerw. P. F. Henricus VVouſſen, Miniſter van het Convent van Honſchotte in Vlaenderen vande Ordre der Alderheylighſte DRYVVLDIGHEYDT, der Verloſſinghe vande Ghevangenen, ende door P. Thomas Tandt ſijn mede-gheſelle / Religieus van het voorſchreven Convent van Honſchote.

Ghelost met de ghemeyne Aelmoeſſen van de Godtvruchtighe Perſoonen ghejont ter eeren van d'Alderheylighſte DRY-VULDIGHEYDT inde Broederſchappen der ſelve onderhouden in deſe Nederlanden.

Naemen.	Gheboort-plaetſen.	Ouderdom.	Tijdt der Slavernije.
1. Pieter Hendrick	geboren tot Ooſtende	out 23 jaer	Slave van ſes jaren in Algiers.
2. Jan de Grave	geboren tot Giſtele	out 25 jaer	Slave van ſes jaer in't ſelve Algiers.
3. Mavors de Wolf	geboren tot Nieupoorte	out 48 jaer	Slave van drij jaren.
4. Govaert Wines	geboren tot Venloo	out 36 jaer	Slave van vijf jaren.
5. Anthone Anteuniſſen	geboren tot Antwerpen	out 37 jaer	Slave van vijf jaren in't voorſeyde Algiers.
6. François Verlee	geboren tot Hondſchote	out 51 jaer	Slave van drij jaren.
7. Laurens Merſch	geboren tot Hondſchote	out 28 jaer	Slave van vijf jaren.
8. Pieter Rubbens	geboren tot Duynkercke	out 46 jaer	Slave van vier jaren in't ſelve Algiers.
9. Pieter Willaert	geboren tot Nieupoorte	out 29 jaer	Slave van een jaer en half.
10. Gillis Timmerman	geboren tot Strabrouch	out 20 jaer	Slave van een jaer en half in't ſelve Algiers.
11. Jacques Corneliſſen	geboren tot Duynkercke	out 44 jaer	Slave van ſes jaer op de Galeyen van Algiers.
12 Matthias Donx	geboren tot Givelde	out 34 jaer	Slave van drij jaren in Algiers.
13. Jacques Janſſen Brandt	geboren tot Duynkercke	out 26 jaer	Slave van ſes jaren.
14 François Moenaert	geboren tot Duynkercke	out 24 jaer	Slave van vijf jaren in't voorſeyde Algiers.
15. Lowijs du Molen	geboren tot Ooſtende	out 30 jaer	Slave van ſes jaren in Algiers.
16. Cornelis Diericſen	geboren tot Dixmuyde	out 30 jaer	Slave van een jaer en half.
17. Pieter Kints	geboren tot Duynkercke	out 18 jaer	Slave van drij jaren in't voorſeyde Algiers.
18. Anthone Videlaine	geboren tot Caſſel	out 38 jaer	Slave van drij jaren.
19. Jan de Swarte Capiteyn	geboren tot Hardinghen	out 46 jaer	Slave van ſes jaren in't ſelve Algiers.
20. Albert de Ruyter	geboren tot Ooſtende	out 60 jaer	Slave van ſes jaer op de Galeyen van Algiers.
21. Guilliame Coucelſer	geboren tot Ooſtende	out 23 jaer	Slave van twee jaer.
22. Vincent d'Haſe	geboren tot Steenkercke	out 43 jaer	Slave van vijf jaer en half.
23. Marcus Lievens	geboren tot Duynkercke	out 49 jaer	Slave van vijf jaren in Algiers.
24 Andries Coudelare	geboren tot Vienne	out 36 jaer	Slave van vier jaren.
25 Bernard Wetters	geboren tot Ooſtende	out 33 jaer	Slave van vijf jaren in Algiers.

Figure 8.24: 1670, a list of Belgians who were bought free from the Slave Market of Algiers by the convent of Hondschote. They had been enslaved by Dutch pirates, active on the Mediterranean. Martijn Vandenbroucke, who shared these facts with the author, is acknowledged.

pervasive myth exists in Belgium, persisting to this day, that Spanish soldiers and their proxies systematically raped women and burned homes. This myth has contributed to developing the so-called "black legend" in Belgium.

While it is plausible that such events did occur, it is essential to acknowledge that Calvinist forces were also culpable of similar atrocities. In contrast, Spanish literature offers a much more nuanced and historically grounded perspective, arguably presenting a more accurate portrayal of events. This Spanish narrative is diverse and rich in historical detail, thereby providing a counterbalance to the predominantly negative depictions propagated by Dutch sources.

In an article by Jose Javier Esparaza[24], a glimpse is released on the complexity of the conflict in the Netherlands in the 16th and 17th centuries. In the framework of our book, we can extract the following citation from the article:

'Testamentos de soldados españoles desvelan que miles de ellos se casaron con mujeres flamencas. Pero el remoquete del «enemigo español» hizo fortuna gracias a la excelente propaganda de guerra de los calvinistas holandeses, y aún la haría más siglos después, cuando Holanda primero, y Bélgica después, se conformen como naciones. Hoy el flamenco común ve al español como a un enemigo ancestral. No le han contado que, muy probablemente, algún tatarabuelo suyo era de Tomelloso.'

8.11.1 The composition of the Army of Flanders

The work of Geoffrey Parker[25], offers an overview of the composition of the Army of Flanders for every year of the campaign between 1567 and 1659.

For the period between 1609 and 1618, Spanish men in the army were consistently around 50% (about 8000), while the other 50% was approximately equally divided among Belgian, Burgundian, Italian and British men. For different periods in the campaign, the number of Spanish troops remained more or less constant. In contrast, the total amount was increased by the non-Spanish to sometimes 90 thousand men (e.g. after 1618), the vast majority being from Germany and the Netherlands. The age of the Spanish troops at the end of the 1500s was between 18 and 70, with approximately 75% in the age range from 18 to 40 and 25% between 40 and 70. For the troops of the Netherlands (mainly from Wallonia), the age mostly was between 18 and 35. Note that the Army of Flanders soldiers typically had their wives and family with them and lackeys and other civilians, even bankers and prostitutes. They lived as a family in barracks or with local families in their homes.

Interestingly, Geoffrey Parker refers in his book, on pages 147-148, to works describing that many Spaniards in the army, from 1606 onward, began to love Flanders more than their original home in Iberia and began to call the Netherlands 'su casa' (their home). Spaniards began to purchase property and homes in the Netherlands and adopted Flemish customs and titles. Spaniards started to speak French and Dutch, and Flemish and Walloons began to learn Spanish. The two populations also intermarried. Examinations of the wills of Spanish soldiers revealed double as often a local woman as a widow than a Spanish woman.

Later, the pattern of intermarrying reversed again after 1625. From 1632 onward, only one Spanish soldier in 6 was allowed to marry, which, according to church registers, led to many illegal children. It is also known that the army contained double as many civilians (wives, children, lackeys) as soldiers. Also, for every five actual Spanish military, there were around two lackeys who served the soldiers.

Soldiers were typically grouped as Camarada , where there were one captain and approximately six companions. Soldiers of lower ranks also formed comrade groups. Each Camarada stayed together and shared fortunes and misfortunes.

It is also known that the Spaniards in the army considered themselves of higher moral standing than soldiers of other nations. Above all, even amid cruelty, they remained very catholic and proudly wore crucifix ornaments. They also willed lots of money to fraternities and monasteries. Note that the Spanish veterans still in the Netherlands in 1585 (around 4500 men) received a suitable amount of money for the prior 3-year service.

In Chapter 8.9, we list the governors of the Spanish Netherlands. The army was led by Captain Generals, who were sometimes also the governors. Closer to the battlefields, there were also commanders. A famous commander was Spinola[26], from 1602 until 1629 and appears in many places in this book, including in Chapter 33.3.7.

---

[24] Jose Javier Esparaza, 'Una pica en Flandes, el Vietnam del imperio español y por qué los flamencos no amaban al rey Felipe' , El Mundo, November 23 of 2017

[25] Geoffrey Parker, 'The army of Flanders and the Spanish Road 1567-1659' , Cambridge, 2nd edition

[26] Ambrosio Espínola, Marqués de Los Balbases

8.11.2 Timeline of the Eighty Years War with some milestones of the lives of the Desclergues

We present a concise timeline of the Eighty Years' War. This overview omits many events, but significant details are elaborated upon throughout this book.

1566: The Iconoclasm in the Netherlands commenced, beginning in what is now France.

1567: Spanish forces fought and won The Battle of Oosterweel against Dutch Protestant troops. Subsequently, the Duke of Alba (Alva) arrived in the Netherlands to establish control amidst religious unrest. His rule was marked by severe repression, leading to the execution or flight of many Calvinists to the swamped areas in the Netherlands and regions of modern-day Germany.

1568: The Calvinists, now better organized, secured a victory at the Battle of Heiligerlee against Spanish forces. In the same year, high-ranking nobles were executed by Alva.

1570: A Spanish mutiny occurred due to insufficient tax revenues collected from the Netherlands. The Spanish, not viewing their presence as an occupation, expected local tax payments for protection and administrative services.

1572: The Calvinists captured Den Briel and massacred numerous clergy in Gorcum, provoking Catholic outrage. Spanish forces retaliated at Naarden.

1573: Alva's brutal policies led King Philip II to request his resignation. Requesens, a more skilled diplomat, replaced him. Meanwhile, Alva's son, Frederick, managed to recapture most of the eastern cities of the Netherlands in Overijssel and Gelderland.

1575: William of Orange founded a university in Leiden, aiming to rival Leuven.

1576: The Spanish Fury erupted in Antwerp, followed by the signing of the Pacification of Ghent, a peace treaty. This treaty sought to unite the Catholic Southern Netherlands and the Protestant Northern Netherlands, laying the groundwork for the eventual formation of Belgium and the modern Netherlands.

1578: Alessandro Farnese was appointed Governor of the Netherlands. 1580: The Iberian Union began, uniting Spain and Portugal until 1640.

1581: The official name of the Netherlands changed as the region split into the Spanish Netherlands in the south and the States of the Netherlands in the north. The entire area became known as Belgica Confoederata, or the Confederation of Belgium.

1584: William of Orange was assassinated, and his son, Prince Maurice of Orange, succeeded him.

1587: Don Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), our ancestor, arrived in Belgium with the Spanish Army of Flanders and participated in the capture of Geldern.

1588: The Dutch Republic was established. The Spanish Armada's attempted invasion of England failed, and Bergen op Zoom was besieged, with Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) taking part.

Juana Desclergue (DC06c), the daughter of Jeroni Joan Desclergue (DC05), was born at the Spaniard Castle in Ghent.

1589: Spanish forces attempted to reclaim Ostend. The sieges of Heusden, Heel, and Bommelwaard occurred. Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) arrived at Harelbeke and Kortrijk on the Leie River.

1590: Spanish forces attacked Paris and the fort of Noordam near Zevenbergen.

1591: Spanish forces defended Nijmegen.

1592: Spanish forces defended Steenwijk. At the end of August, Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) was a godfather in Kortrijk.

Maria Desclergue (DC06e), the daughter of Jeroni Joan Desclergue (DC05), was baptized at Kortrijk in 1592 on May 29.

1593-1594: The Siege of Coevorden took place. In April, Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) appeared as a godfather in Kortrijk.

1594: The Dutch Republic began its quest for a route to Asia. Felipa de Montoya, wife of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), appeared in Kortrijk at the baptism of a child of Pedro de Montoya in October. In January, Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) also served as a godfather in Kortrijk. From this year onward, the Spanish regime paid more attention to military conduct, establishing courts to ensure justice and discipline[27].

1595: The capture of Hoei occurred, first by the Dutch and then by the Spanish in early spring. The sieges of Le Châtelet, Doullens, and Cambrai took place in the summer. In January, Anna Desclergue (DC06f), Jeroni Joan's daughter, was born.

1596: Johan van Oldenbarnevelt formed a coalition between the Dutch Republic, England, and France against Spain. The sieges of Calais and Hulst also occurred.

1597: The Battle of Turnhout and the surprise capture of Amiens took place. Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) temporarily ended his military career to take on new duties in Tournai by the end of the year.

1598: Albrecht of Austria and his wife Isabella of Spain became the governors of the Southern Netherlands, while Philip III ascended to the Spanish throne. France made peace with Spain. Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) began a new career in Barcelona and served as a member of the Corts from 1598 to 1601.

1600: The Battle of Nieuwpoort was fought.

1601: The Siege of Ostend began. Concurrently, the Dutch formed the Verenigde Amsterdamse Compagnie, a precursor to the VOC, which would later reach as far as Japan, evoking cherished memories as shown in Figure 8.22.

1602: Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) returned to Tournai, where he resided until his death in 1604, maintaining properties in Deerlijk and possibly Kortrijk. In Tournai, Antoni Desclergue (DC06), born in Barcelona before returning to Flanders, was baptized on June 26. Jeroni (DC05) resumed military service. Ambrogio Spinola arrived with a Spanish army of 9000 men to support the reign of Albrecht of Austria. The Siege of Ostend, begun this year, would continue until the end of 1604.

The 1602 document shown in 8.23 mentions Belgium ('Belgis') and is transcribed[28] as:

Catharina van den Berguen filia Joannis van den Berguen et Mariae van de Crus inti sectarios haereticos insulanos nata, et usque ad vigesimum aetatis suae annum vel circiter, in aliena doctrina instructa, Spiritus Sancti ductu Catholicae Romanae verae ecclesiae unitati reconciliata, et restituta Reverendissimi Antuerpiensis authoritatepastori mihi, et parocho hujus novae arcis Antuerpiensis fuit ab eodem remissa. Qua cum industria reverendi patris Francisci de Matta minoritae ejusdem arcis et Belgis sacellani in Catholica etcetera doctrina sufficienter instructam cognovisse, ad Baptismi solemnia peragenda et supplenda eo (?) illam admissi. Cum i.gr reverendis admodum dominis meis Licentiato Joanni del Rio Archidiachono, Reverendissimi Antuerpiensis Officiali ac Licentiato Silvestro Pardo Canonico, ejusdem Reverendissimi sigillario, praedictique patri de Matta, et alijs visu fuisset, illam certo, et indubitanter (tametsi et (?) ex. ecclesia.) baptizata fuisse, ut pote intime toles haereticos nata, et nutrita per baptismam iuxta institutam a … .po Domino for. parvulis administrator; unde nulla …que ea. nec sub conditione rebapitizari debere; baptismalia, seu per solemnitate baptismi ceremonias sacras, super : ac cc. illá egi, et supplevi, ipsa per se ab renunciante fide persitente

---

[27] Alicia Esteban Estríngana, 'La superintendencia de la justicia militar: establecimiento y evolución inicial en el ejército de Flandes (1594-1622),' in Davide Maffi (ed.), Tra Marte e Astrea. Giustizia e giurisdizione militare nell'Europa della prima età moderna (secc. XVI-XVIII), Milano, FrancoAngeli, 2012, 87-123.

[28] Transcript made with help from Georges Picavet.

(?), et baptismam petentes et iam habitum acceptante et cum gaudio spiritali in veritate Catholicae Romanae ecclesiae iux factam persessi. sibi perpetuo vivendum permittente. Patrinum habuit et matrinam ad ampliorem instruct. Martinum de Santillana hujus arcis sargentum et Claram Perseval lictori huius arcis uxorem. Intime fuere plures ad solemnem actum, inter quos (?) Joannes Mendez et Gaspar Louis. In cujus veritatis testificat... ipse ego Pastor Frater Thomas de Villarroel Theologus Magisto (?) presentes signaturae applicui ea ipsa die qua fiebat ... decima sexta novembris anno domini millesimo sexcentesimo secundo.

1603: Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) participated in the Siege of Ostend. The Battle of Sluis also took place. Meanwhile, Jacob van Heemskerk conquered a Portuguese ship in the Strait of Malacca; Portugal and Spain were, at that time, united. In December of the same year, Enric Desclergue y Cortés (DC05c) joined the Spanish army in Flanders and participated in the defense of 's-Hertogenbosch.

1604: The Spanish recaptured Ostend, while a supernova was visible in the night sky. A mine blast killed Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) at Ostend. Meanwhile, the Dutch captured Sluis.

1605: The baptism of Jeroni Desclergue's last son, Miguel (DC06b), occurred after Jeroni's (DC05) death. He was baptized on the day of Saint Hieronymus to commemorate his father.

1606: Ambrogio Spinola arrived in Flanders with a vast army from Milan. Enric Desclergue (DC05c) and Antoni Desclergue (DC05b) participated in the Sieges of Groenlo and Lochem. They also made an unsuccessful attack on Sluis and participated in the Siege of Rheinberg. In the summer of 1606, the Spanish also tried to capture Zwolle. In 1601, Íñigo de Borja y Velasco became the governor of the Antwerp citadel.

1607: The Battle of Gibraltar occurred between the Spanish and Dutch fleets.

1609: A Twelve-Year Truce began. This ceasefire would strengthen the Dutch Republic and weaken Spain, leading to the resumption of hostilities after twelve years. This year, a judicial specialist, Hugo Grotius, published his Mare Liberum, which helped the Dutch gather support for their overseas endeavors. This work would later be elevated to a higher moral level by our blood-relative Charles Philippe de Patin in his Mare Liberum, described in Chapter 70.

A full description of the global situation in the 15th, 16th, and 17th centuries would be fascinating but require a new book. Therefore, only some key facts to remember while reading about this period are mentioned. We also refer to Part XII to better understand the Portuguese endeavors in the centuries and decades preceding the current period.

First, it is important to note that an Iberian Union existed from 1580 until 1640. Although Spain and Portugal were separate countries, they united under the Spanish crown. As seen in Part XII, this union significantly affected the exchange of people and culture with Asia, as Spanish influence in Asia became possible. Still, the global power balance had important implications for the Netherlands' trade and its position in the world. For the Netherlands[29], Portugal's involvement in the Eighty Years' War allowed the Dutch to attack the Portuguese wherever the two nations competed. It also meant that the Dutch could no longer buy spices from the Portuguese, challenging them to find their route to Asia.

Until 1595, the world's seas were dominated by Spain and Portugal. They had, so to speak, a monopoly and had divided the world into two spheres of influence. From 1595 onwards, the Dutch, who had learned about Portuguese trade routes, started their own companies to trade with Asia. These companies were owned by affluent families with roots in the Dutch states or Belgium. Nevertheless, they were successful, and to avoid internal competition, they established the VOC[30] in 1602. Being a company and not a country, the VOC had many successes throughout Asia but was often not guided by a moral compass. Historical sources indicate that the Portuguese were the most humane colonialists in Asia, and they treated the local population almost as equals and married them just as if they were Portuguese. The VOC was different. It is also essential to know that the VOC did not just send Dutch people worldwide but that many foreigners, such as Danes, Germans, Scandinavians, and former inhabitants of France and Belgium, were also involved. They all contributed to both the success and the misbehavior of the VOC in the world.

In 1641, the VOC conquered Malacca from the Portuguese. In 1658, they conquered Ceylon (Sri Lanka) from the Portuguese. Note that 'to conquer' did not mean killing or forcing everyone to return to Portugal. It merely involved a change in governance to VOC control and redirected all finances from Portugal to the VOC. The VOC often used unconventional techniques such as making false promises or using any possible excuse to steal from their competitors while achieving their goals. They often tricked local men of power into alliances that became highly profitable for the VOC and disastrous for the other party. This can be compared to modern practices by some global corporations. After all, the VOC was not a country, and local populations did not necessarily understand this. They were also not held accountable by the Vatican because they were Protestant, not Catholic.

In the West, the Dutch also became very active. For instance, from 1609 onward, they were engaged in the New York Bay[31]. Hudson, who worked for the Chamber of the VOC in Amsterdam, discovered the 'Hudson River' in his attempt to find a new route through America to Asia. The first colonials arrived in 1624. In 1626, Peter Minuit[32] bought Manhattan from the Lenape Native Americans. Nieuw Amsterdam was established in Nova Belgica or New Belgium. This fort would later become New York City. People who understand the different mentalities in Europe and the United States will recognize that the Dutch can be considered the Americans of Europe, with valid similarities at every level of society. Indeed, all stereotypes are common to both territories. This suggests that the Dutch must have had a significant impact on the early development of the states along the East Coast before modern Americans expanded to the West Coast, either through conquest or purchase from the Natives, the Spanish (and Mexicans), or the French. In particular, Belgians are wary of the differences in mentality between Catholic Belgium and the Protestant Netherlands, which is beyond the scope of this manuscript.

We can also mention that the Dutch conquered the Antilles[33] through their West India Company. The islands had been discovered by Alonso de Ojeda and were conquered by the Dutch in 1634 from the Spanish. In 1616, the Dutch settled at Essequibo, and in 1627, they settled at Berbice, both in Dutch Guiana and Suriname. The English tolerated the Dutch presence because of the deal concerning Nova Belgica in 1667, which became New York and would continue as British territory. Colonial history is fascinating and cannot be separated from European events and vice versa. Nevertheless, it is beyond the scope of this book. We will, therefore, continue the sequence of events by going back to 1613.

1613: The famous Piet Hein became a captain for the VOC.

1614: The University of Groningen was established. The Spanish took Aachen and Wesel.

1616: The Dutch settled in Essequibo in the Antilles.

1617: Carlos Coloma de Saa returned to Flanders after a stay in Malta, becoming the Governor of Cambrai. He would soon recruit Antoni Desclergue (DC06), our ancestor.

---

[29] modern Belgium and the Netherlands

[30] Verenigde Oostindische Compagnie, officially called 'Generale Vereenichde Geoctroyeerde Compagnie'

[31] as it is called today

[32] with roots in Tournai

[33] Aruba, Curaçao, Sint Maarten, etc.

1618: Maurits of Nassau became, by inheritance, Prince of Orange. A comet was visible in the sky around Christmas.
1619: Maurits of Nassau executed Johan van Oldenbarnevelt in a struggle for power within the Dutch Republic.
1621: This year marks the end of the Twelve-Year Truce. Spanish troops attacked Sluis. The Siege of Jülich took place in 1621 and 1622.
1622: The Sieges of Bergen op Zoom and Steenbergen occurred.
1624: The Siege of Breda (1624-1625) occurred.
1626: King Philip IV presided over the Catalan Courts and rejected a Union of Arms proposed by his favorite and minister, the Count-Duke of Olivares. Antoni Desclergue (DC06) appeared in Waregem as a godfather. This year, Peter Minuit bought Manhattan for the Dutch, forming the beginning of New Amsterdam and Nova Belgica[34].
1628: Piet Hein captured a Spanish silver fleet near Cuba, causing a temporary financial disaster for Spain.
1629: Olivares established a united army of Spanish and German troops. In October, Antoni Desclergue (DC06) appeared in Wingene as a marriage witness for a soldier.
1632: The Dutch captured Maastricht.
1634: France and the Dutch Republic decided to form their independent federation if the Southern Netherlands revolted. The two powers believed that the Belgians wanted to become independent. Their propaganda poisoned the political atmosphere. In 1634, Maastricht was recaptured by Spanish troops. This year, the Dutch (through their VOC) conquered the Antilles from the Spanish.
1635: Spain decided not to give up Belgium and defended the southern border while attacking the Dutch Republic. The Siege of Leuven occurred.
1638: The Dutch attempted to capture Antwerp but were defeated by the Spanish. The consequent year's hostilities by the French determined the scene.
1639: Due to French wars, the Spanish road could hardly take. Therefore, most of the transport of people, goods, and soldiers occurred overseas. This year, Antoni Desclergue (DC06) initiated the construction of a chapel, highly supported by Marguerite Kelduwier, at Deerlijk and went to Spain. His wife Beatrice remained at Deerlijk, we may assume. She was pregnant. Their son Pere (DC07d) was born and baptized during Antoni's (DC06) absence.
1640: The Corpus de Sang occurred in Barcelona, which initiated the Reapers' War or the Catalan Revolt. This year also marked the end of the Iberian Union.
1641: A Catalan republic was formed under French protection, and Louis XIII of France was proclaimed Count of Barcelona. Antoni Desclergue (DC06) returned to Belgium. He, or his religious brother Jeroni (DC06c), described in 29.9.5, donated to the Hospital of Saint-Jean at Cambrai, where his father Jeroni (DC05) had been treated in 1596.
1642: The Battle of Honnecourt-sur-Escaut occurred.
1643: The Spanish suffered a defeat at Rocroi.
1648: Peace was established between Spain and the Netherlands, and therefore between the Spanish Netherlands and the Dutch Republic. 1650: Antoni Desclergue (DC06) went to Barcelona to participate in the city's siege. His wife Beatrice probably joined him and died in Spain because no funeral was recorded at Deerlijk. Her children at Deerlijk inherited from her in July 1651.
1652: The Spanish army recaptured Barcelona from the French-protected regime. Catalonia thus became Spanish again.
1656: Antoni Desclergue (DC07), son of Antoni Desclergue (DC06) and grandson of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), married Martina Ximenez de la Cruz at Deerlijk.
1659: The Treaty of the Pyrenees between Spain and France was signed. Roussillon and the northern part of Cerdanya became French and have remained so. Antoni Desclergue (DC06) visited Montblanc and returned to Belgium in 1660 or 1661.

One of the essential differences between propaganda and news is that propaganda is conceived to influence opinion and highlights only one part of the truth while hiding all others. Many of our modern textbooks on history in Belgium are based on Dutch sources. For this reason, most Belgians do not know that in the 17th century, compatriots were often turned into slaves by the Dutch. This happened through Dutch pirates and privateers. Indeed, to gain access to the Mediterranean, numerous Dutch converted to Islam. When they boarded and hijacked Flemish ships from the Spanish Netherlands in the Mediterranean, they stole the goods and turned the men into slaves.

Consequently, these men were sold in the slave markets of North Africa. When the Belgians became aware of this, they tried to free the enslaved individuals by paying ransom to the slave owners. An example of a list of freed slaves is shown in Figure 8.24. It can be seen that, on the slave market of Algiers, numerous men from Ostend, Dunkirk, and other places were bought free thanks to the support of the convent of Hondschoote, which is now in northern France near the border with Belgium.

A well-known example is Jan Janszoon (1570), from Haarlem, who converted to Islam and became Murat Reis, after which he joined the fleet of Salé. His conversion took place after he had a shipwreck on the island of Lanzarote and was consequently picked up by Ivan de Veenboer, who had converted earlier and had become Suleiman Reis[35].

The organization that liberated Belgian slaves was 'De Confrerieën van de Trinitariërs in West-Vlaanderen,' also known as 'De Orde van de Trinitariërs.' This organization was established in 1198 in the south of France by Saints John, Martha, and Felix of Valois to liberate Christians from the Turks. After 1200, the order was also active in Flanders to free Flemish slaves from Islamic slave owners. Sometimes men were taken as slaves even on the North Sea by Islamic seafarers from the Mediterranean[36][37].

1679: Antoni Desclergue visited Spain after the Peace of Nijmegen. He served as a marriage broker for his godchild Antoni de Pedrolo y Desclergue (born in 1659 at Montblanc as the son of Francesc Jacinto de Pedrolo y Desclergue and Anna Maria de Ratera y Robuster) and Maria Anna Vosa (de Vos) in Blanes, Gerona.
1691: Antoni Desclergue (DC06) died this year, or soon after.

8.12 The Spanish Devolution War and the War of Succession

8.12.1 The Devolution War 1667-1668

The War of Devolution arose from the principle known as jus devolutionis, which His Majesty King Louis XIV of France applied to himself and his wife, Maria Theresia of Spain. This principle made him the legitimate heir to the Spanish territories of Flanders and Franche-Comté, further fueling his ambitions to inherit more Spanish lands in Spain. The Dutch, who had maintained a long-standing alliance with France, broke their ties and formed a Triple Alliance with England and Sweden to prevent France from

---

[34] later, this would all become New York
[35] Abdelkader Benali, 'Reizigers van een nieuwe tijd: Jan Janszoon, een Nederlandse piraat in Marokkaanse dienst,' De Arbeiderspers, 2020.
[36] Biekorf, Jaargang 75 (1974), 'De confrerieen van de Trinitariërs in West-Vlaanderen'
[37] Peter Lamborn Wilson, 'Pirate Utopias - Moorish Corsairs & European Renegadoes,' Autonomidia, 1996.

Figure 8.25: Left to right, top to bottom, we see H.M. Carlos II of Spain (1661-1700), who was the last Habsburg King of Spain; Archduke of Austria Charles III (1685-1740), who was also H.M. the Emperor Charles VI of the Holy Roman Empire; H.M. King Felipe V of Spain (Versailles 1683 - Madrid 1756), who was Philippe d' Anjou, grandson of Louis XIV; H.M. King Felipe V of Spain in 1723; H.M. King Luis I de España; H.M. King Fernando IV de España, around 1754; H.M. King Carlos III de España, around 1765; H.M. King Carlos IV de España in 1789; H.M. King Fernando VII de España; H.M. Queen Isabella II de España; H.M. King Amadeo I de España; and H.M. King Alfonso XII de España. Finally, in the right lower corner, H.M. King Alfonso XIII de España.

extending its territory to the Dutch border.

To truly grasp the intricacies of the War of Devolution, which will be examined in Chapter 34.10, one must delve into the complexities of the Treaty of the Pyrenees of 1659. This treaty, a delicate balance of power, established peace between Spain and France and orchestrated the marriage between His Majesty King Louis XIV and Maria Theresia, daughter of His Majesty King Felipe IV of Spain. As part of the agreement, Maria Theresia renounced her inheritance rights to prevent Spain from eventually falling under French control, and Spain was supposed to provide a substantial dowry. However, this dowry was never paid, which Louis XIV construed as a breach of contract, thus reviving his wife's potential claim to the Spanish throne, contrary to the original agreement. Upon the death of King Felipe IV, his son from a subsequent marriage was expected to inherit the throne and territories. However, the principle of devolution, which deemed Maria Theresia the rightful heir due to her being a child of Felipe IV's first marriage, effectively blocked the younger half-brother's inheritance. This provided Louis XIV with a pretext to claim the Spanish Netherlands, encompassing regions such as Brabant, Limburg, Cambrai, Antwerp, Mechelen, Upper Guelders, Artois, Hainaut, and Namur. This conflict's personal and familial implications were profound, particularly for the Desclergues family in Belgium, as detailed in Chapter 34.10.

In May 1668, Spain retaliated by invading Cerdanya under the leadership of the Viceroy of Catalonia. Following high-level negotiations across Europe, France relinquished its claims to most of the captured territories, retaining only a few exceptions, many of which remain part of modern-day France. These exceptions included Lille, Armentières, Bergues, and Douai. The regions that temporarily remained under French control included Tournai, Oudenaarde, Kortrijk, Veurne, Binche, Charleroi, and Ath.

8.12.2 The War of Succession 1701-1714

The War of the Spanish Succession was precipitated by the death of His Majesty King Carlos II of Spain, who died childless. His likeness is shown in Figure 8.25. King Carlos II's inability to produce an heir was attributed mainly to the extensive inbreeding within the Habsburg family. Upon his death, the major claimants to the Spanish throne were from the Austrian Habsburg and the French Bourbon dynasties. Ultimately, Philip of Anjou, the grandson of Louis XIV of France, emerged as the legal heir and ascended to the Spanish throne as His Majesty King Felipe V, depicted in Figure 8.25. In exchange for this inheritance, he renounced any future claims to the French throne for himself and his descendants.

The Spanish Netherlands (modern-day Belgium) was ceded to the Austrian Habsburgs, with Archduke Charles, shown in Figure 8.25, assuming control. Archduke Charles would later become Emperor Charles VI in 1711. During the conflict, Catalonia sided with the Austrian Habsburgs but was subsequently conquered by Philip of Anjou's forces, leading to the reunification of Spain under Bourbon rule.

This overview simplifies a complex historical event. The War of the Spanish Succession involved numerous battles, treaties, and political maneuvers, and it has been extensively documented in historical literature. We recommend consulting the comprehensive body of work available on this subject for those interested in a more detailed understanding.

8.13 The Spanish Monarchy from H.M. King Felipe V until the First Republic

8.13.1 H.M. Felipe V of Spain

Felipe V de España (Versailles 1683 - Madrid 1746), shown in Figure 8.25, is also described above. He has been the King of Spain from 1700 until 1724.

8.13.2 H.M. Luis I of Spain

Luis I de España (Madrid 1707 - Madrid 1724), shown in Figure 8.25, was the eldest son of H.M. King Felipe V of Spain. He was the King of Spain in 1724 but tragically died very soon after the coronation. His father would consequently further rule.

8.13.3 H.M. Felipe V of Spain

Felipe V de España (Versailles 1683 - Madrid 1746) is also described above, in Chapter 8.13.1. He became King a second time after the death of his son Luis I de España. Consequently, he remained the King of Spain from 1724 until 1746.

8.13.4 H.M. Fernando VI of Spain, El Prudente

Fernando VI El Prudente (Madrid 1713 - Villaviciosa de Odón 1759), shown in Figure 8.25, was the fourth son of Felipe V of Spain. He was the King of Spain from 1746 until 1759.

8.13.5 H.M. Carlos III of Spain

Carlos III of Spain (Madrid 1716 - Madrid 1788), shown in Figure 8.25, was the eldest son from the second marriage of Felipe V of Spain. He was the King of Spain from 1759 until 1788.

8.13.6 H.M. Carlos IV of Spain

Carlos IV of Spain (Portici 1748 - Rome 1819), shown in Figure 8.25, was a son of Carlos III of Spain. He was the King of Spain from 1788 until 1808.

8.13.7 H.M. Fernando VII of Spain

Fernando VII of Spain (Escorial 1784 - Madrid 1833), shown in Figure 8.25, was the King of Spain from March until May 1808. Later, he became the King again from 1814 until 1833.

8.13.8 H.M. Isabella II of Spain

Isabella II of Spain (Madrid 1830 - Paris 1904), shown in Figure 8.25, was the Queen of Spain from 1833 until 1868.

Figure 8.26: Iconic photograph by Juan Guzmán as described in Chapter 8.15, of Marina Ginestà, during the Spanish civil war.

8.13.9 H.M. Amadeo I of Spain

Amadeo I of Spain (Torino 1845 - Torino 1890), shown in Figure 8.25, was the King of Spain from 1870 until 1873.

8.14 The Spanish Monarchy between the two republics, followed by the Second Republic and the Civil War

During the First Republic, from February 11, 1873, until December 29 1874, Spain was ruled by the following presidents: Estanislao Figueras, Francesc Pi y Margall, Nicolas Salmeron, Emilio Castelar and Francisco Serrano y Dominguez. The Monarchy was reinstalled after that.

8.14.1 H.M. Alfonso XII of Spain

Alfonso XII of Spain (Madrid 1857 - El Pardo 1885), shown in Figure 8.25, was the King of Spain from 1874 until 1885.

8.14.2 H.M. Alfonso XIII of Spain

Alfonso XIII of Spain (Madrid 1886 - Rome 1941), shown in Figure 8.25, was the King of Spain from 1886 until 1931.

8.15 The Second Spanish Republic followed by the ad interim regime of Francisco Franco

The Second Spanish Republic spanned from April 14, 1931, to April 1, 1939. Prominent political figures during this era, many of whom played significant roles during the subsequent civil war, included Niceto Alcalá-Zamora, Manuel Azaña, Diego Martínez Barrio, Francisco Largo Caballero, Santiago Casares Quiroga, Juan Negrín, Francesc Macià, José Aguirre, and Lluís Companys. A notable figure was José Antonio Primo de Rivera, leader of the Falange party, who was executed on November 20, 1936. He is interred at the Monumento Nacional de Santa Cruz del Valle de los Caídos near Madrid, later symbolizing admiration for Francisco Franco's regime.

With respect and neutrality, it is essential to recognize the extraordinary courage displayed by women on both sides during the Spanish Civil War. Future studies may assert that the war was a pivotal moment for the global emancipation and advancement of women's rights. This is a commendable fact that all involved parties should acknowledge. Among the most famous women of the civil war was Isidora Dolores Ibárruri Gómez, a communist from Gallarta, known for the slogan "No Pasarán." She later served as a member of the Cortes Generales (1977-1979) and spent much of her post-war exile in the Soviet Union. Another notable woman was Pilar Primo de Rivera of the Falange party, sister of José Antonio Primo de Rivera. Numerous other women, primarily daughters, and mothers, took up arms to fight for their beliefs and what they deemed best for Spain.

The Spanish Civil War has garnered significant international attention, often not for its core issues but for the romanticized idealism associated with the international brigades. Many journalists worldwide documented the conflict, capturing the fervent idealism of those involved. While Ernest Hemingway's involvement is well-known, other journalists utilized photography to immortalize the moment. One such photographer was Juan Guzmán (born Hans Gutman) (1911-1982), who captured thousands of images. His photograph of Marina Ginestà, a 17-year-old member of the Unified Socialist Youth, standing on top of the Hotel Colón in Plaça de Catalunya, Barcelona, is particularly iconic, symbolizing the power of women during the war. Although this image represents a Republican girl, courageous women also existed on the Nationalist side. Future reconciliation will likely be facilitated by mutual recognition of such valor. Historical comparisons to the role of women during WWI in Europe reveal that human strength and bravery transcend gender. The civil war's dark side includes numerous deaths on both sides, as detailed by historian W. Blockmans[38]:
Military casualties: 75000 Nationalists, 77000 Republicans;
Murdered: 6000 Nationalists, 10000 Republicans;
Lynched or executed: 70000 Nationalists, 60000 Republicans;
Civilian casualties due to military actions: 5000 Nationalists, 10000 Republicans;
Deaths from disease: 90000 Nationalists, 230000 Republicans.
In total, approximately 633000 people, or about 3The establishment of the Second Republic and the ensuing Civil War (July 17, 1936, to April 1, 1939) led to Francisco Franco's interim regime, extensively documented in books, papers, and documentaries. The author acknowledges the sensitivity and complexity of these events and is particularly troubled by the regime's large-scale abduction of children. However, it is also necessary to recognize the Spanish government's efforts during WWII to protect Jews by insisting to the Nazi regime that Jews with Spanish heritage were Spanish citizens and should be allowed to 'return' to Spain due to its neutrality. Some historians argue that the government could have saved more lives had it acted less hesitantly and did not overlook the plight of the Gypsies. Nonetheless, Spain did facilitate the passage of nearly 35000 Jews to safer countries and granted residence permits to another 2000. While this number could have been higher, comparing it to the 25000 Belgian Jews murdered by the Nazis highlights its significance. Compared to the Nazi-occupied Netherlands, where over 100000 of the 140000 Jews were deported and killed, Spain's actions, though limited, were notable.

Further study of the Spanish Civil War and Franco's regime, examining aspects from both perspectives, could provide valuable insights.

---

[38] W. Blockmans, 'Oorlog door de eeuwen heen,' Rijksuniversiteit Leiden, 1993.

Figure 8.27: Athens, May 14, 1962, the wedding of H. R. H. Juan Carlos de Borbón y Borbón-Dos Sicilias and H. R. H. Princess Sophia of Greece and Denmark. On June 6, 1976, H.M. King Juan Carlos I of Spain addressed the American Congress.

Figure 8.28: Sus Majestades los Reyes junto a Sus hijas Sus Altezas Reales la Princesa de Asturias y la Infanta Doña Sofía, © Casa de S.M. el Rey. / Estella de Castro (with permission, July 1st, 2020, La Casa de S. M. El Rey, Palacio de La Zarzuela, Madrid)

However, as the historical events related to the Desclergues are unrelated to this period, they are beyond the scope of this book. The next generation of leaders will likely continue to work towards reconciliation, with truthful information and mutual forgiveness key to settling the past. Figure 8.30 shows El Valle de los Caídos in 2022 after Franco's remains were relocated.

8.16 Spanish Monarchy after Francisco Franco

8.16.1 H.M. King Juan Carlos I of Spain

H.M. King Juan Carlos I, a figure of immense historical significance, was born in Rome in 1938. His reign, which spanned from November 22, 1975, until his abdication in 2014, marked a pivotal period in Spanish history. He is the son of H.R.H. Juan de Borbón, Conde de Barcelona, the legitimate heir to H.M. King Alfonso XIII of Spain, and Princess Maria de las Mercedes of Bourbon and the Two Sicilies. The complex historical circumstances, including the establishment of the Republic and the subsequent Franco regime, led to Juan Carlos ascending to the throne, surpassing his father, the Count of Barcelona. Born in La Granja in 1913, the Count of Barcelona passed away in Pamplona in 1993. On May 14, 1977, Juan de Borbón formally renounced his rights as the successor to H.M. King Alfonso XIII, enabling his son, Juan Carlos I, to become the lawful Monarch of Spain. In a gesture of profound respect and filial honor, H.M. King Juan Carlos I conferred the title 'Conde de Barcelona' upon his father through a Royal Decree on November 6, 1987.

His Majesty's consort is Princess Sophia of Greece and Denmark, with whom he entered matrimony in Athens on May 14, 1962, as illustrated in Figure 8.27. The Spanish Civil War and the subsequent period until 1975 remain etched in the collective memory of the Spanish people. While the deep scars of history cannot be erased, the era of King Juan Carlos ushered in an epoch of peace, stability, and prosperity. In close collaboration with Adolfo Suárez González, the 1st Duke of Suárez (1932-2014), King Juan Carlos played a pivotal role in the transformation of Spain into a modern democracy, culminating in the establishment of a constitutional monarchy in 1978.

The author of this book was born on December 27, 1975, a mere 37 days after the death of Franco and 35 days following Juan Carlos's ascension to the throne. The principle of 'De la ley a la ley' and Juan de Borbón's renunciation of his claim solidified the legitimacy of the Spanish Monarchy. As in all democratic nations, diverse opinions serve to keep society vibrant and engaged. The peaceful transition from a dictatorship to a modern constitutional monarchy is an extraordinary achievement and a source of pride for all Spaniards. Politics, akin to a pendulum, oscillates over time. Post-World War II, Europe sought unity, forming the European Union, while contemporary times emphasize regionalism. Recognizing differences fosters cultural pride and identity, yet acknowledging similarities is essential for unity. Constructive endeavors, emblematic of human intellect and cultural progress, stand in stark contrast to the destructiveness of conflict. Like a stable marriage, unity thrives on mutual respect for identity, forming the bedrock of stability upon which individuals and societies can flourish and secure prosperity for future generations. Instability diverts energy and resources away from productive pursuits. As experienced sailors know, achieving a common goal requires collective effort. The recent pandemic underscored the interconnectedness of all humanity, demonstrating that we all inhabit the same vessel.

Figure 8.29: Left, we see H.M. King Felipe VI de España with H.E. President Barack Obama of the United States of America on September 23 of 2014, at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel, New York (by Pete Souza - United States Government Work). In the middle, the Coat of Arms of Modern Spain is exposed. Right, we observe Su Alteza Realla Princesa de Asturias y Girona, Duquesa de Montblanc (2019).

Figure 8.30: El Valle de los Caídos (2022) (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 8.31: From left to right, the flag of Spain; The flag of the short-lived independent Belgium (Verenigde Nederlandse Staten), 1789-1790; The flag used by France and the First Empire, and therefore also by Belgium during the French period, including the reign of Napoleon Bonaparte; The flag used by the United Kingdom of the Netherlands; The original flag of Belgium, developed by Lucien Jottrand and Édouard Ducpétiaux; and, finally, the modern flag of Belgium.

The author married on the Indian Subcontinent, in Sri Lanka, precisely 21 years after the celebrated 1976 address by H.M. King Juan Carlos I of Spain to the American Congress, as depicted in Figure 8.27.

8.16.2 H.M. King Felipe VI of Spain

His Majesty, King Felipe VI of Spain, was born in Madrid on January 30, 1968, in the Nuestra Señora de Loreto clinic, a city whose rich history and cultural vibrancy are fittingly reflected in his distinguished life. His birth names are Felipe, Juan, Pablo, and Alfonso de Todos los Santos, commemorating, respectively, the first Bourbon king of Spain; his paternal grandfather, the Head of the Spanish Royal Household; his maternal grandfather, the King of the Hellenes; and his great-grandfather, King Alfonso XIII of Spain. His godparents were his grandfather, His Royal Highness Don Juan de Borbón, Count of Barcelona, and his great-grandmother, Queen Victoria Eugenie. In Figure 8.29, His Majesty is shown with President Barack Obama, highlighting his role as a respected global leader.

On June 19, 2014, Felipe VI ascended to the throne, embodying the virtues of a modern monarch while steering Spain with a blend of tradition and progressive vision. His coronation came following the abdication of his father, King Juan Carlos I, who sanctioned the requisite Organic Law on June 18, 2014. King Felipe took the Oath outlined in Article 61 of the Constitution and was proclaimed King before the General Courts. A rigorous academic and military education marked King Felipe VI's formative years. He attended the Colegio Santa María de los Rosales for primary and secondary education. After completing his secondary studies, he spent a year at Lakefield College School in Canada, equivalent to the University Orientation Course. From September 1985 to July 1988, he pursued military studies at the General Military Academy in Zaragoza, followed by training at the Naval Military School in Marín and the Air Force Academy in San Javier. His training culminated in receiving the commissions of Infantry Lieutenant, Ensign of the Navy, and Aviation Lieutenant in July 1989. He is a licensed helicopter pilot with proficiency in instrumental flight in the 402 Squadron of the Air Force. Additionally, he holds the Pilot Wings of the Army and the Navy. King Felipe furthered his education by earning a Law degree from the Autonomous University of Madrid between October 1988 and June 1993 and taking Economics courses to broaden his knowledge. In September 1993, he began a Master's program in International Relations at the Edmund Walsh School of Foreign Service at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., graduating on May 26, 1995. From September 1999 to June 2000, he attended a course on Security and Defense at various international organizations.

King Felipe VI's official activities began in earnest in 1990 with a series of visits to the Autonomous Communities of Spain, aiming to deepen his understanding of the nation and foster closer ties with its people. Following his academic studies in the United States, he undertook numerous institutional commitments as the Heir to the Crown domestically and internationally. His engagements included meetings with constitutional bodies, major state institutions, autonomous communities, and public and private audiences with political, economic, cultural, and media representatives, ensuring he stayed informed on national and international matters.

In his military role, King Felipe VI maintains frequent contact with the Armed Forces and the Civil Guard through a program of activities that includes the presentation of dispatches at Officer and Non-Commissioned Officer Academies, exercises, maneuvers, visits to units, centers, and organizations, and military audiences since 2010. He keeps abreast of military affairs through private audiences with senior military officials, the Civil Guard, and work meetings on current issues.

As Prince of Asturias, he actively promoted Spain's economic and commercial interests abroad, supported the Spanish language and culture through the Cervantes Institute network, and established university chairs to disseminate Spain's history and current affairs. Annually, he made official trips with Queen Letizia to an Ibero-American country and a country of the European Union, the Middle East, or the Far East, where Spain had strategic interests. Since January 1996, he has represented Spain at the inaugurations of Ibero-American presidents.

In addition to his official activities, King Felipe VI is the Honorary President of several associations and foundations, notably the Prince of Asturias Foundation, the Prince of Girona Foundation, and the Hesperia Foundation. The Prince of Asturias Foundation, established in Oviedo on September 24, 1980, aims to promote cultural and moral values that contribute to humanity's progress, with the prestigious "Prince of Asturias" awards presented annually in Oviedo. The Prince of Girona Foundation, founded in 2009, supports young people by fostering entrepreneurial spirit in business, social, scientific, academic, and cultural fields, with the annual Impulsa Forum held in Girona. With Queen Letizia, he presides over the Hesperia Foundation, created in 2010 to promote social projects for disadvantaged youth. He also regularly engages with the Codespa Foundation, which is dedicated to combating poverty through economic and social development, and the Elcano Royal Institute, Spain's foremost think tank on international and strategic affairs.

King Felipe VI's interests include sports, mainly sailing. He was a member of the Olympic sailing team in the Soling class at the Barcelona 1992 Games, where he served as the flag bearer for the Spanish team and finished sixth, earning an Olympic Diploma.

Queen Letizia Ortiz Rocasolano, born in Oviedo on September 15, 1972, to Jesús Ortiz Álvarez and Paloma Rocasolano Rodríguez, epitomizes grace and dedication. She began her studies in Oviedo before moving to Madrid with her family, where she completed her schooling at the Ramiro de Maeztu Institute. Queen Letizia graduated in Information Sciences, specializing in Journalism, from the Complutense University of Madrid and holds a Master's degree in Audiovisual Journalism from the Institute of Audiovisual Journalism Studies. She initially worked at newspapers La Nueva España, ABC, and the EFE news agency. She pursued her Doctorate in Mexico, collaborating with the newspaper Siglo 21.

Her television career started at the Madrid headquarters of Bloomberg, where she specialized in economy and finance under the supervision of the EFE agency. She later joined CNN+ as a reporter, writer, and presenter. In 2000, she joined Spanish Television (TVE), working with the Second Edition news team, and presented Informe Semanal. She also anchored Telediario Matinal, covered Euro specials, and reported from various global locations. She received the "Larra" Award from the Madrid Press Association for the most outstanding journalist under 30 for her exemplary work.

Queen Letizia's official duties focus on her family and supporting King Felipe VI's institutional work. She balances her role as a mother with her official responsibilities alongside the King. Since 2007, she has developed her agenda within the framework of official activities, mainly focusing on education, promoting vocational training, fostering reading and literacy, and supporting healthy habits from early childhood. She championed rare diseases and cancer awareness, becoming Honorary President of the Spanish Association Against Cancer and its Scientific Foundation in 2010, the first permanent presidency she accepted. Her commitment includes promoting scientific research in education, health, and innovation and supporting various disability groups.

Queen Letizia maintains contact with the Armed Forces, attending Armed Forces Day, presenting Combat Flags to Units, and presiding over an Oath of Allegiance ceremony with the Royal Guard. She also accompanies King Felipe VI on official international trips.

Their union, solemnized in the Cathedral of Santa María la Real de la Almudena in Madrid on May 22, 2004, is a testament to their shared dedication and love. Their daughters, Princess Leonor de Todos los Santos and Infanta Sofía de Todos los Santos, embody the future of the Spanish monarchy. Princess Leonor, born on October 31, 2005, in Madrid, is the Princess of Asturias, Girona, and Viana, as well as the Duchess of Montblanc, Countess of Cervera, and Lady of Balaguer, linking her to Spain's rich heritage. Her presence is noted in various sections of this book, including Figure 8.29 and the closing Figures 80.22 and 80.23, where she symbolizes the continuity and future of the Spanish monarchy.

Infanta Sofía, born on April 29, 2007, in Madrid, also brings joy and continuity to the Royal Family. A family portrait, which can be found in Figure 8.28, captures the warmth and unity of the Royal Family. Together, King Felipe VI and Queen Letizia exemplify grace and mutual respect, setting a profound example for their subjects.

King Felipe VI excels in moments of royal splendor and approachable simplicity, navigating his office with a profound sense of duty and genuine connection to his people. His courteous and upright nature has endeared him to many, fostering trust and admiration. Whether engaging in state affairs or spending cherished moments with his family, King Felipe's presence is dignified and endearing, exemplifying the noble virtues of the Spanish Crown.

8.17 Belgium Austriacum

Belgium Austriacum, also called the "Imperial Netherlands" or "Oostenrijkse Nederlanden," formed an autonomous entity within the Habsburg monarchy, comprising 10-11 provinces. The War of the Spanish Succession, culminating in the Treaties of Utrecht in 1713, resulted in the Spanish mainland falling under the Bourbon Dynasty while the Spanish Netherlands came under the control of the Austrian Habsburg Dynasty.

Belgium, a region of considerable prosperity, was thus transferred to Austrian rule, providing significant economic benefits and a strategically valuable border with France for military purposes. Belgium Austriacum lasted from 1715 until 1795. This period is particularly notable in the context of the life of Viscount Charles Philippe de Patin, our blood-relative, as described in Chapter 70.6. Given the lack of other significant genealogical events, we will confine our discussion to a concise overview.

Firstly, it is essential to emphasize that Belgium was regarded as a single unit within the Austrian Empire, notwithstanding the presence of individual provinces. Secondly, the ultimate authority over Belgium resided with the Austrian Monarchy. Thirdly, Belgium had its own local governors.

The first ruler was His Majesty Emperor Charles VI, who succeeded His Majesty Emperor Joseph I in 1711. He was followed by his daughter, Her Majesty Empress Maria Theresa, in 1740, who ruled until 1780. Following Maria Theresa, the ruling family's name changed, marking the beginning of the Habsburg-Lorraine era. His Majesty Emperor Joseph II ruled from 1780 until 1790, succeeded by His Majesty Emperor Leopold II, who reigned from 1790 until 1792. After Leopold II, His Majesty Emperor Francis II (Franz) ruled over the Austrian Netherlands until 1795 and continued as Emperor of Austria until 1835.

8.17.1 H.M. Emperor Charles VI

Charles VI (1685 - 1740), shown in Figure 8.32, was Emperor from 1711 until 1740 and had succeeded his brother Joseph I.

Figure 8.32: Top-left, we see Emperor Charles VI with his family; bottom-left, Maria Theresia depicted as H.M. the Queen of Hungary. Top-right, we see Emperor Joseph II; middle-right, Emperor Leopold II; bottom-right, Emperor Francis II. In the middle, we can see a fresco in Kortrijk, at ' Onze-Lieve-Vrouwe Kerk' . The fresco shows Emperor Charles VI of Austria, left, and Empress Maria-Theresa of Austria, right. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

8.17.2 H.M. Empress Maria Theresia

Maria Theresia (1717 - 1780), shown in Figure 8.32, was the Empress from 1745 until 1765. She is equally seen in Figures 70.48 and 70.49 on page 1469.

8.17.3 H.M. Emperor Joseph II

Joseph II (1741 - 1790), shown in Figure 8.32, was the Emperor from 1765 until 1790.

8.17.4 H.M. Emperor Leopold II

Leopold II (1747 - 1792), shown in Figure 8.32, was the Emperor from 1790 until 1792.

8.17.5 H.M. Emperor Francis II

Francis II (1768 - 1835), shown in Figure 8.32, was Emperor from 1792 until 1806 and ruled over Belgium until 1795. Note, however, that there was an interruption of the Austrian rule in 1789-1790, as is mentioned in Chapter 8.18. Figure 8.32 shows a fresco in the church Onze-Lieve-Vrouwe-Kerk of Kortrijk, of H.M. Emperor Charles VI and his daughter H.M. Empress Maria Theresia.

The use of flags did not convey the significance as it does nowadays to the existence of nation-states. However, sometimes a flag was needed, for instance, to make the identification of a ship possible. According to several sources, during Austrian Belgium, we find a flag consisting of a red (top) and a yellow (bottom) banner, horizontally oriented, with white in between. Later, during the first Belgian revolution, the Belgians transformed the white plane to black, possibly because it resembled better the colors of Brabant, and it's shown in Figure 8.31. The Black, Yellow and Red banners would later form the Flag of Modern Belgium. A brief search for sources depicting this old Austrian Belgian Flag was, however, unsuccessful. Therefore we are not entirely sure of the correctness of this information. We are confident yet of the Flag used in 1789, as described below in Chapter 8.18.

8.18 The First Belgian Revolution in 1789

The First Belgian Revolution of 1789 is often overlooked in educational curricula due to its seemingly insignificant outcomes. Nevertheless, it warrants recognition because, as is widely acknowledged, the year 1789 holds substantial global historical significance. It marked the commencement of the French Revolution, the inauguration of George Washington as the first President of the United States, and Antoine Lavoisier's formulation of the law of conservation of matter, alongside his proof that oxygen is consumed during combustion. Moreover, for art enthusiasts, it was the year Francisco Goya was appointed as an official painter to the Spanish court under King Carlos IV of Spain.

The First Belgian Revolution, also known as the 'Brabantse Omwenteling,' began in 1789 and persisted into 1790. This insurrection was directed against Austrian rule over Belgium. The rebellion originated in Brabant and was quickly disseminated to Flanders, Limburg, Hainaut, and Namur. For a brief period, a state known as the 'Verenigde Nederlandse Staten' was established under the leadership of Hendrik van der Noot. This republic encompassed approximately half of modern Belgium today, predominantly the western half. The contemporary linguistic divide within Belgium was irrelevant to this republic.

Belgium reverted to Austrian control despite international pressures and certain concessions from the Austrians.

However, relentless pressure from France culminated in the French annexation of the territory in 1794. Historians frequently argue that the French campaigns against Austria were motivated not by a desire to conquer Austria but to secure control over Belgium and the Netherlands.

Figure 8.33: H.M. Emperor Napoleon Bonaparte, with his legal wives: left, Joséphine de Beauharnais in 1801, and right, 1813, Empress Marie Louise, mother of Napoleon Bonaparte ’s legal son.

8.19 H.M. Emperor Napoleon Bonaparte in Belgium and Spain

Belgium and the Netherlands were once integral parts of the French Republic and the Napoleonic Empire. Particularly noteworthy is the military involvement of several of our ancestors or their siblings, as documented in Chapter 68.7.1, Chapter 71.7.3, Chapter 48.9.2.3.1, Chapter 65.16.4.2, and Chapter 67.9.6.

When considering the world’s most illustrious leaders in history, we should focus on those who demonstrated a strong sense of morality and purpose and their remarkable achievements. Napoleon Bonaparte is among these leaders, along with Alexander the Great, Charlemagne, and Emperor Charles V. Indeed, His Majesty Napoleon Bonaparte was a highly inspiring figure, particularly for his military. He is also renowned for his ’Code Civil,’ which continues to influence many countries, including Belgium. Numerous portraits of Napoleon exist, such as the one depicted in Figure 8.33. Born Napoleone Buonaparte, he was the son of Carlo Buonaparte and Maria Ramolino. He was born in Ajaccio in 1769 and died under unfortunate circumstances on Saint Helena in 1821. He arrived in France at nine to attend a military school. His mother tongue was Corsican, and he also spoke French with a Corsican accent.

Napoleon was well-read, especially in history, though he was not proficient in languages. He participated in the French Revolution of 1789 under General Jean-Pierre du Teil. Napoleon achieved some success at Toulon in 1793 and had interactions with Robespierre, though he did not join Robespierre’s movement. After 1795, Napoleon lived in Paris in poverty. During the uprising of ’13 Vendémiaire,’ he achieved military success in Paris. On March 9, 1796, he married Joséphine de Beauharnais, depicted in Figure 8.33, and was subsequently sent to Italy to assume command. Napoleon modernized and inspired his unit, achieving significant successes in Italy and initiating the peninsula’s unification—a feat many deemed impossible. His military accomplishments continued to grow.

In 1799, with the approval of most of the establishment, he executed a ’coup d’état,’ becoming the First Consul of France and later being crowned Emperor. The Flag of France is shown in Figure 8.31. When recounting Napoleon’s successes, often described as miraculous, there is a tendency to overlook his actions across the Atlantic. In 1803, he sold Louisiana[39] for 15 million USD.

This sum, equivalent to approximately 25000 kg of gold, would exceed a billion Euros or USD today. Given the low military salaries and the cost of their equipment, this amount significantly contributed to Napoleon’s military successes and his Grande Armée. This book will discuss notable events such as Austerlitz, the expedition to Moscow, the Iberian Peninsula, and the defeat at Waterloo.

Napoleon’s battles occurred in:
Sardinia: 1794 - 1796
Italy: 1796 - 1797
Malta: 1798
Egypt: 1798 - 1799
Sardinia: 1800
Bavaria: 1805
Austria: 1805 (Austerlitz)
Prussia: 1806 - 1807
Spain: 1808 - 1809
Bavaria: 1809
Russia: 1812
Saxony: 1813
French Empire: 1814
The United Kingdom of the Netherlands (Belgium): 1815

Crucial aspects of Napoleon’s life include:

Napoleon married Joséphine de Beauharnais, who remained his dominant passion despite their mutual infidelities. She had been previously married with children and remarried Napoleon on March 9, 1796. Her connections were vital in the early days of Napoleon’s career. Because the couple remained childless, Napoleon, who had an extramarital son and thus knew he was fertile, felt compelled to divorce and marry a younger woman for the sake of Imperial France. The couple divorced in 1809. In 1810, His Majesty Napoleon Bonaparte married Her Royal Highness Marie Louise of Austria, shown in Figure 8.33, daughter of His Majesty Emperor Franz I. They had a son, François Charles Joseph, Napoleon II, in 1811. The Austrians raised this child after Napoleon’s exile to Elba and later to Saint Helena.

Following the defeat in Russia, Napoleon was exiled to Elba. He had to reside there without his son, who was raised under a false

---

[39] Louisiana encompassed nearly one-third of the current territory of the United States, i.e., 827000 square miles of land west of the Mississippi River

Figure 8.34: Symbols used on the French republican calendar. One can see that every date on the calendar had a name. Here, we show the calendar for Year III (1794).

name by the Austrian Imperial Court. This separation was perhaps the most significant reason why Napoleon could not accept his situation[40]. Napoleon intended to house his son at Elba, raising him to prepare him for his future role. Had he been more patient, Napoleon might have found peace.

However, instead of waiting, Napoleon seized an opportunity to return. In February 1815, he escaped Elba with 1000 soldiers, landed at Juan-les-Pins, and marched to Paris, gaining support village by village, primarily from his former soldiers. Napoleon's return lasted 100 days, ending with the final battle near Waterloo on June 18, 1815. This defeat, due to bad luck and health issues, led to his ultimate downfall.

After Waterloo, Napoleon surrendered to a British vessel and was exiled to Saint Helena. He lived in Longwood House, where Hudson Lowe tormented him until his health deteriorated, leading to his death on May 5, 1821. Napoleon's family did not assist him, believing he had escaped to the United States rather than being at Saint Helena. In 1840, he was reburied in Paris at the Dôme des Invalides.

Following the 1789 revolution, the French regime used the Republican calendar, as seen in Figure 8.34. The Republican calendar is crucial for genealogical purposes. Some basics are as follows:
Year I: started September 22, 1792
Year II: started September 22, 1793
Year III: started September 22, 1794
Year IV: started September 23, 1795
Year V: started September 22, 1796
Year VI: started September 22, 1797
Year VII: started September 22, 1798
Year VIII: started September 23, 1799
Year IX: started September 23, 1800
Year X: started September 23, 1801
Year XI: started September 23, 1802
Year XII: started September 24, 1803
Year XIII: started September 23, 1804
Year XIV: started September 23, 1805, and lasted until December 1805.

The Gregorian calendar resumed on January 1, 1806. Converting these dates requires detailed conversion tables, as the start date can be on the 21st, 22nd, or 23rd of our Gregorian months.

The months begin with the end of September, the first month of Fall and the Republican year:
Vendémiaire (vintage month)
Brumaire (mist month)
Frimaire (frost month)
Nivôse (snowy month)
Pluviôse (rainy month)
Ventôse (windy month)
Germinal (germination month)
Floréal (flower month)
Prairial (meadow month)
Messidor (harvest month)

---

[40] In this world, there is nothing more complicated than overcoming the loss of a child. And in this world, there is nothing crueler than taking away someone's child.

Figure 8.35: Left: Oxford, Mississippi, May 2003. Mack Breazeale and Louise Scott proudly offered renowned local dishes such as Cowboy Burgers, Catfish, Southern Barbecue, and Pulled Pork, alongside their celebrated pecans and pecan pie. Mack favored Danish rolls. This photo was taken during the author's first visit to the Breazeales and his maiden trip to the USA. Before Oxford, they met in Tennessee, where the author recalls his first lunch in Nashville, enjoying grilled beef and shrimp while listening to Jimmy Buffett's "Cheeseburger in Paradise." The warmth and hospitality of the South, particularly the Breazeales, motivated the author to work in the USA, driven by a desire for freedom and the pioneering spirit of GT Lorraine rather than career advancement. Middle: The Natchez Trace, a historic trail established by Native Americans and later used by European and American explorers, traders, and emigrants in the 18th and 19th centuries. Mack Breazeale, a native of Bristol, Tennessee, frequently took the author along this trail. The path declined in use with the advent of steamboats on the Mississippi River. Mack was born and buried in Bristol. Right: July 2006, Benjamin, the author's son, in Mack Breazeale's lab at the National Center for Physical Acoustics, University of Mississippi, Oxford. The experimental setup involved acousto-optic Bragg imaging using an acoustic field and cylindrically focused laser light. Mack's lab also possessed a superior Schlieren imaging lens, formerly used by the military in U2 planes before the satellite era, which surpassed the equipment available to the author in Belgium. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 8.36: Photographs taken in Washington D.C. in September 2012 are shown on the left and right. A map of D.C. reveals that the Washington Monument is slightly off-axis because the intended site had soft ground, necessitating its construction a few meters away. The Washington Monument, the tallest obelisk ever built, is not a monolith like those of ancient Egypt; its construction, delayed by the Civil War, was completed in 1884. The city's architect, Pierre Charles L'Enfant, was a French military engineer with possible Flemish ancestry. His name, L'Enfant, might have originated from the Flemish name 't Kint, which appears in the author's family history as discussed in Chapter 68. The U.S. Capitol, designed by William Thornton, was completed in 1800, destroyed in 1814, and rebuilt by 1819, with the dome added later. Washington D.C. was not always the capital; earlier locations for the United States Congress included Philadelphia, New York City, York, Lancaster, Annapolis, and Princeton (Declercq de Silva Archive). In the middle, Pierre Charles L'Enfant is depicted. He was born in Paris on August 2, 1754, and died on June 14, 1825, in Prince George's County, Maryland.

Thermidor (summer heat month)
Fructidor (fruit month)

Finally, weeks consisted of ten days: Primidi, Duodi, Tridi, Quartidi, Quintidi, Sextidi, Septidi, Octidi, Nonidi, and Decadi, with Decadi a day of rest. Most calendars from that time feature artistic depictions of the Republican months by almost Greek goddess-like half-naked women.

When Napoleon sold Louisiana to the United States in 1803, Mississippi had separated since 1763. The French history of the region is still evident in the names of villages, towns, and counties such as Batesville, Paris, Abbeville, and others, interspersed with Spanish names like Senatobia, Hernando, Tula, and many more. Some places still bear the names of Native American towns or individuals. This area holds particular significance for the author, who fell in love with America and decided to join the U.S. faculty. Sweet memories of this period are shown in Figure 8.35, and further in Figure 80.7 on page 2001, and Figure 80.8 on page 2002.

French influences extend beyond the South. A visit to Washington, D.C., reveals a significant French impact, as illustrated in Figure 8.36.

8.20 The Dutch Period before the Second Belgian Revolution

After the defeat of Napoleon and his Grande Armée in Russia, a power vacuum emerged in Europe, enabling the Dutch to take control of Belgium. While a small percentage of the population accepted this change, the majority were opposed. Despite His Majesty King Willem I of the United Netherlands' good intentions, his rule was never fully embraced and resulted in significant friction. After Napoleon's reign, the imposition of the Dutch language was perceived by many as a form of oppression. This resentment later fueled the reinstatement of French as the official language when Belgium gained independence in 1830. Communication remains a passionately debated issue in Belgium.

The literature on the approximately fifteen years of Dutch rule in Belgium consistently agrees that King Willem I, depicted in Figure 8.37, viewed his governance as a unification of the Low Countries. In contrast, the Belgians perceived it as an occupation. The author is convinced that the Dutch mentality differs too greatly from the Belgian mindset for the two countries ever to unite harmoniously. Nonetheless, it is unfortunate for Willem I that his mission was unsuccessful, as his intentions were indeed noble.

Figure 8.37: Z.M. Koning Willem I van de Verenigde Nederlanden.

Figure 8.38: The Coat of Arms of Belgium, on a background of blooming flax.

Perhaps the Belgians did not favor the Dutch flag, shown in Figure 8.31.

His Majesty King Willem I was a descendant of several notable figures, including 'Stadhouder' Willem V, 'Stadhouder' Willem IV, 'Stadhouder' Johan Willem Friso, Hendrik Casimir II van Nassau-Dietz, and Willem Frederik van Nassau-Dietz. The latter was a son of Ernst Casimir van Nassau-Dietz and succeeded Willem II van Oranje as 'Stadhouder' of Groningen and Drenthe. Willem II van Oranje, the Prince of Orange and Count of Nassau-Orange, served as 'Stadhouder' of Holland, Zeeland, Utrecht, Overijssel, Gelderland, Zutphen, Groningen, and Drenthe. His heir as Prince of Orange was Willem III of Oranje. Willem II van Oranje's father, Frederik Hendrik van Oranje, was the son of Willem van Oranje and succeeded Maurits van Oranje as Count of Nassau and Prince of Orange.

8.21 Modern Belgium

When modern Belgium, represented by its contemporary flag depicted in Figure 8.31, which derives from the flag used during the Belgian Revolution (also illustrated in Figure 8.31), gained independence from its Dutch occupier in 1830, both nations adopted new constitutions. Consequently, modern Belgium and the modern Netherlands share the same age regarding their contemporary forms. However, the Netherlands has a more extended history of independence, having established its sovereignty much earlier, whereas Belgium was often under the rule of other nations despite being recognized as a distinct entity. For this reason, the Netherlands is traditionally considered older than Belgium.

Upon the completion of the Belgian constitution and the installation of a constitutional monarch, Belgium's new constitution was regarded as one of the most modern and progressive in the world at the time, earning widespread acclaim. On July 21, 1831, the coronation of H.M. King Leopold I took place, marking his inauguration as the first King of modern and independent Belgium. The Belgian coat of arms, considered one of the most beautiful globally, is shown in Figure 8.38. The Royal Castle of Laeken, which Napoleon once preserved, serves as the official residence of the monarchy and is depicted in Figure 8.39.

People often reflect on their country's illustrious past, yearning to revert to a time perceived as idyllic—where life was perfect, nature exuded a delightful fragrance, happiness was universal, longevity was common, love was abundant, and wealth was widespread. While this nostalgic perspective holds emotional appeal, it is crucial to ground these reflections in historical reality.

Belgium's history provides a rich story of diverse influences and periods of foreign rule. It was part of the Roman Empire for 463 years, the Austrian Netherlands for 80 years, the Spanish Netherlands for 133 years, the Burgundian Netherlands for 98 years, the United Kingdom of the Netherlands for 15 years, the First French Empire for 21 years, and the German Third Reich for four years. As a sovereign state, Belgium has enjoyed nearly 200 years of independence.

For historians, politicians, and academics, it is vital to balance the romanticization of the past with understanding historical complexities and continuous evolution. Embracing this nuanced perspective, which illuminates the intricacies of our past, allows for a more informed and constructive approach to addressing present challenges and shaping the future.

8.21.1 H.M. King Leopold I

Leopold I[41] (Coburg 1790 - Laken 1865), shown in Figure 8.40, was the King of Belgium from July 21, 1831 until 1865.

8.21.2 H.M. King Leopold II

Leopold II of Belgium (1835-1909), shown in Figure 8.40, was the King of Belgium from 1865 until 1909.

---

[41] Leopold Joris Christiaan Frederik van Saksen - Coburg - Saalfeld

Figure 8.39: 2015, the Royal Castle of Laken, Brussels. It's thanks to Napoleon that the Belgians own this beautiful construction. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

8.21.3 H.M. King Albert I

Albert I of Belgium (1875 - 1935), shown in Figure 8.40, was the King of Belgium from 1909 until 1934. He is equally shown in Figures 64.76 on page 1226.

8.21.4 H.M. King Leopold III

Leopold III of Belgium (1901 - 1983), shown in Figure 8.40, was the King of Belgium from 1934 until 1951. He is also shown in Figure 45.73 on page 840.

8.21.5 H.M. King Boudewijn

Boudewijn of Belgium (Brussels 1930 - Motril 1993), shown in Figure 8.40, was the King of Belgium from 1951 until 1993. His Majesty's Queen Fabiola was Doña Fabiola Fernanda María-de-las-Victorias Antonia Adelaida de Mora y Aragón. She was born in Madrid, Spain. The Royal couple married on December 15, 1960.

8.21.6 H.M. King Albert II

Albert II of Belgium (born on June 6, 1934, precisely 10 years before D-day and 63 years before the author's wedding), shown in Figure 8.40, was the King of Belgium from 1993 until 2013. He has four children. His Majesty's Queen is donna Paola Ruffo di Calabria. The Royal couple married on July 2, 1959.

8.21.7 H.M. King Philippe

8.21.7.1 The Royal Family

Born on April 15, 1960, in Brussels, His Majesty King Philippe, shown in Figure 8.42, is King Albert II's and Queen Paola's eldest son. Ascending to the throne on July 21, 2013, King Philippe's reign has been marked by unwavering dedication, reflecting a deep commitment to his role and responsibilities.

His coronation was a momentous occasion, attended by numerous dignitaries and citizens, including the author and his children.

He is a Monarch of Principles and Dedication whose early life demonstrated a keen intellect and a passion for learning. He broke royal tradition by pursuing a classical and bilingual education in Belgium and later enrolled in the Royal Military Academy in 1978. His interest in aerospace led him to earn a fighter pilot's license and qualifications as a paratrooper and commando.

King Philippe continued his studies abroad, attending the University of Oxford and Stanford University, and he obtained a Master's in Political Science. Upon returning to Belgium in 1985, he immersed himself in his country's political, economic, and social structure, acquiring a profound understanding of Belgium through numerous engagements and humanitarian visits.

His intellectual curiosity extends to history, literature, and philosophy. Extensive travels and interactions with global leaders enriched his perspectives, and he closely follows the European integration process.

The death of King Baudouin in 1993 was a pivotal moment for Philippe, as he became the heir apparent following his father's ascension to the throne. King Philippe began to play a more prominent public role by emulating his uncle's steadfastness and principled approach. His commitment to critical contemporary issues has marked his tenure. As Honorary Chairman of the Foreign Trade Agency, he led over 85 economic missions, fostering connections between Belgian and international enterprises. His dedication to sustainable development led him to chair the Federal Council for Sustainable Development and support the International Polar Foundation.

He established the Prince Philippe Fund in 1998 to promote dialogue among Belgium's diverse communities, enhancing mutual recognition and respect. King Philippe's empathy and concern for marginalized individuals drove him to engage with those affected by illness, social exclusion, and disasters. As a patron of Belgian talent, he actively encourages athletes, artists, scientists, and young talents.

King Philippe's reign shines both in the simplicity of his daily interactions and the grandeur of his royal duties. His ability to connect with individuals from all walks of life and his regal presence make him a beloved and respected figure. His openness about his personal challenges has inspired many young people to overcome their difficulties and strive for a promising future. King Philippe embodies the values of perseverance, empathy, and dedication, leading by example with genuine kindness and integrity.

Her Majesty Queen Mathilde, born on January 20, 1973, in Uccle, is the daughter of Count and Countess Patrick d'Udekem d'Acoz. She is a Pillar of Compassion and Advocacy. Her early education in Bastogne and Brussels laid the foundation for a lifelong dedication to service. Queen Mathilde earned a degree in speech therapy and a Master's in psychology from the Université Catholique de Leuven, working as a speech therapist before her marriage to Prince Philippe in 1999.

As Queen, Mathilde supports the King in his duties, engaging with institutions, organizations, and citizens across Belgium and beyond. Her interests focus on education, child poverty, women's empowerment, financial literacy, and mental health. Queen Mathilde's hands-on approach involves regular visits to social organizations and care institutions, ensuring she remains attuned to the population's needs. She assists citizens in financial distress through the Queen's Aid Fund and supports vulnerable youth transitioning to independence. As Honorary President of the King Baudouin Foundation, she engages in societal debates, particularly those affecting vulnerable groups.

Her commitment extends to Child Focus, UNICEF Belgium, and numerous humanitarian causes, emphasizing child welfare and combating violence against children. Queen Mathilde's role as a United Nations Advocate for the Sustainable Development Goals highlights her global influence. She promotes initiatives to address critical issues by 2030. Her leadership in sustainable development earned her the Honorary National German Sustainability Award in 2017. She has conducted numerous humanitarian missions, particularly in Africa, focusing on children's rights, health, poverty reduction, and women's economic empowerment. In 2023, Queen Mathilde was awarded an honorary doctorate from The University of Hasselt for her significant societal contributions. She passionately advocates for culture, art, and music, participating in the Queen Elisabeth Music Competition and serving on the Schwab Foundation Board for social entrepreneurship.

King Philippe and Queen Mathilde have built a beautiful and exemplary family, shown in Figure 8.42, blessed with four remarkable children: Princess Elisabeth, the Duchess of Brabant, Prince Gabriel, Prince Emmanuel, and Princess Eléonore. Their union is a testament to a strong and supportive partnership, setting a sterling example of marital harmony and mutual respect. Princess Elisabeth, highlighted in Chapter 8.21.7.2, currently a student at Harvard University, stands out as a poised and capable heir, ready to follow in her father's footsteps with dignity and strength. Prince Gabriel, Prince Emmanuel, and Princess Eléonore also embody the qualities of kindness, intelligence, and responsibility, traits nurtured by their parents' guidance.

King Philippe and Queen Mathilde embody a harmonious blend of intellect, compassion, and dedication. Their combined efforts to foster national unity, promote sustainable development, and advocate for vulnerable populations create a radiant example of modern monarchy. King Philippe's moral leadership and Queen Mathilde's empathetic advocacy form a partnership that shines brilliantly, much like a diamond, reflecting the strength and resilience of Belgium's royal family and, as an extension, the Belgians. Their exemplary lives and steadfast commitment to their country and its people serve as an inspiring beacon for Belgians and the international community alike.

Figure 8.40: From left to right, we find H.M. King Leopold I at the Military Museum, Jubelpark, Brussels (2015); H.M. King Leopold II of Belgium as Garter Knight; H.M. King Albert I of Belgium; H.M. King Leopold III in 1934 at his desk at the Royal Palace of Laken (by Willem van de Poll, image placed in the public domain by the creator, Nationaal Archief 252-1571); H.M. King Boudewijn on April 12, 1962, and H.M. Queen Fabiola, at a soccer game of Real Madrid against Standard Liege (fraction of a picture by Pot, Harry / Anefo, Nationaal Archief 913-7602, an image placed in the public domain by its creator); and on February 19 of 2020, in Laken, H.M. King Albert II and H.M. Queen Paola (Courtesy of Piet Kesteloot).

Figure 8.41: H.M. King Boudewijn with H.R.H. Prince Filip Leopold Lodewijk Maria de Saxe Cobourg et Gotha (left) and H.R.H. Prince Felipe Juan Pablo Alfonso de Todos los Santos de Borbón y de Grecia (right). Both Princes have later been crowned as Kings of Belgium and Spain, respectively, and are described in Chapter 8.21.7 and Chapter 8.16.2 🅮

8.21.7.2 H.R.H. Princess Elisabeth, the Duchess of Brabant

Princess Elisabeth Theresia Maria Helena, Duchess of Brabant, depicted in Figure 8.43, holds a unique position in the lineage of the Belgian monarchy. Born on October 25, 2001, in Anderlecht, she is the first child of Their Majesties the King and Queen of Belgium. This places her as the heir apparent, a role she has gracefully held since July 21, 2013, when she was bestowed the title of Duchess of Brabant, a designation reserved for the presumptive heir.

Princess Elisabeth's journey towards the throne is marked by rigorous education and dedicated public service. She is a student at Harvard University, where her intellectual pursuits reflect her deep commitment to understanding the complexities of history and politics. This educational path continues her academic endeavors, including studying at Lincoln College, Oxford, and earning her International Baccalaureate from UWC Atlantic College in Wales in 2020. Her comprehensive education is further highlighted by completing the Military and Social Sciences program at the Royal Military Academy in July 2021, showcasing her readiness to undertake the multifaceted responsibilities of future leadership.

Princess Elisabeth's educational journey is enriched by her multilingual proficiency. She fluently speaks Dutch, French, German, and English, a skill that allows her to engage with a wide range of the Belgian population and the international community. This linguistic dexterity is a testament to her ability to bridge diverse cultures and perspectives, a crucial trait for a future leader.

Princess Elisabeth's dedication to public service is not a recent development. In September 2011, she inaugurated the Princess Elisabeth Children's Hospital at the University Hospital of Ghent, marking her first official engagement. This early commitment to public service laid the foundation for her subsequent endeavors, such as lending her name to the Princess Elisabeth Antarctica Research Station and serving as the patron of the naval patrol ship P902 Pollux. Her humanitarian spirit was further demonstrated during her field visit to Kenya with Her Majesty the Queen in 2019, organized by UNICEF, and through her introductory course at the Permanent Representation of Belgium to the United Nations in New York.

Her dedication to social causes extends to her volunteer work with organizations supporting school leavers, the elderly, individuals with disabilities, and people experiencing homelessness. During the COVID-19 pandemic, she made numerous phone calls to isolated seniors in care homes, providing them with much-needed support and encouragement.

Princess Elisabeth's interests are as diverse as her public engagements. She is an avid sportswoman, enjoying skiing, rowing, and sailing, and finds solace in nature through hiking. Years of piano lessons nurture her artistic side, and her musical tastes are as varied as any young person's. Reading remains a source of joy and inspiration for her, fueling her curiosity and broadening her horizons.

Despite her many commitments, Princess Elisabeth values her time with family and friends. She often spends weekends with her siblings Gabriël, Emmanuel, and Eléonore. Her ability to balance the demands of her role with personal interests and relationships speaks to her well-rounded character.

As Princess Elisabeth continues her path toward queenship, her journey is a testament to her exceptional intelligence, dedication, and grace. Her academic achievements, public service, and personal qualities portray a future monarch who is well-prepared to lead Belgium with wisdom and compassion. Her story is not just one of royal duty but of a young woman navigating her unique path with poise and promise, embodying the bright future of the Belgian monarchy.

Figure 8.42: The Royal family of Belgium on the occasion of the celebrations of the Ten Year Jubilee of King Philippe's reign, July 21, 2023. We can see H.M. King Philippe and H.M. Queen Mathilde, and their children, H.R.H. Princess Elisabeth, the Duchess of Brabant, H.R.H. Prince Gabriël, H.R.H. Prince Emmanuel, and H.R.H. Princess Eléonore. In the background, we see the Cinquantenaire, constructed with the help of Theophile Verhaeghe, described in Chapter 48.9 and shown in Image 48.95 on page 920. (Courtesy of the Belgian Royal Palace)

Figure 8.43: July 21, 2023, H.R.H. Princess Elisabeth with her parents and her brother, H.R.H. Prince Emmanuel. (Courtesy of the Belgian Royal Palace)

Part IV

More than two thousand years of Desclergues

Chapter 9

The Desclergues during the Greek Era

9.1 Introduction

Reconstructing the rich history of the Desclergues family can be meticulously achieved by integrating genetics, onomastics, and historical facts within a logical framework. This approach allows one to trace the Desclergues' lineage from the present day back to their distant origins. The Desclergues' roots coincide with the Greeks' arrival in Empúries around 540 BC. Emerging from the local nobility and intermarrying with the daughter of a Greek merchant, the Desclergues were well-educated and initially served as grammateus or scribes. During the Roman period, they held the position of scriba, placing them within the social class of clerics, akin to notaries, in Roman society.

Their status elevated during the Byzantine era as they continued their clerical duties under the Byzantine Emperor, earning the designation of "purple blood," a term denoting their noble status. Under Muslim rule in Spain, the Desclergues thrived as Hakim of Hakin, a title reflecting their role as learned and administrative officials. With the advent of Frankish rule, they adopted the name Clergue and continued flourishing.

During the religious turmoil in Albi, a significant chapter in the Desclergues' history unfolded. Members of the family, steadfast in their beliefs and commitment, aligned themselves with the King of Aragon and played a crucial role in the conquest of Mallorca. Despite the subsequent decline of Mallorca, the family's resilience shone through as they migrated to Catalonia, establishing themselves in Barcelona, Santa Coloma de Queralt and Manresa, and, later, in Montblanc.

The Desclergues have weathered the storms of various cultural landscapes and thrived across different political eras.

9.2 The Foundation of Empúries and the Desclergues Lineage

The story of the Desclergues begins in the rugged landscapes of ancient Iberia, where the local tribe of the Indigetes settled in what would become Empúries. This coastal region, primed for agriculture and trade, nurtured a class of local elites, among whom were the earliest ancestors of the Desclergues. The arrival of Greek colonists from Phocaea around 575 BC marked a pivotal moment. These settlers introduced Empúries to the broader currents of Hellenic civilization, bringing sophisticated governance systems, trade, and cultural exchange.

Herodotus described the Greeks in Phocaea, which is now Foça in Turkey. They originated from Athenians and Phocidians. The Phocians were considered noble and sacred due to their historical and cultural significance in ancient Greece. Phocis, located in central Greece, west of Boeotia, held a unique position both geographically and spiritually, contributing to its esteemed status.

The sacredness of Phocis was largely due to the Panhellenic sanctuary of Delphi, nestled at the base of Mount Parnassus. This sanctuary, dedicated to Apollo, housed the renowned oracle, a pivotal figure in Greek religious life. The oracle's influence drew visitors from all corners of the Greek world, including statesmen, military leaders, and common citizens seeking divine guidance. This influx of visitors bolstered the region's prosperity and reinforced its sacred character.

Historically, the Phocians were also known for founding several important Mediterranean cities, known as "Phocaean cities," such as Phocaea in modern-day Turkey and Marseille in France. This expansion demonstrated their maritime prowess and influence, enhancing their noble status. The region was initially populated by Pelasgians and later saw an influx of Greek populations, including Achaeans, Ionians, and Dorians. This blend of cultures enriched Phocis and contributed to its historical depth and nobility.

Politically and militarily, the Phocians played a significant role in Greek affairs. Initially neutral during the Persian Wars, they eventually aligned with Athens. In the Peloponnesian War, they switched sides to support Sparta, showcasing their strategic importance and adaptability. The Third Sacred War (356-346 BCE) was a pivotal conflict that underscored the sacred status of Phocis. Sparked by the Thebans' accusation of the Phocians cultivating sacred lands, this war highlighted the region's crucial role in the broader geopolitical struggles of Greece, including the ascent of Philip II of Macedon.

Following various conflicts, Phocis became part of the Corinthian League and later the Aetolian League, indicating its strategic importance and integration into larger political entities. These elements collectively underscored the nobility and sacredness of the Phocians, positioning Phocis as a crucial region in the religious, cultural, and political landscape of ancient Greece.

As Empúries flourished under Greek influence, it was inevitable that the Desclergues' ancestors, positioned within the local nobility, forged strategic marital alliances with the Greeks, thus cementing their social ascent. They adapted to the new cultural landscape, blending their local traditions with the administrative and mercantile practices introduced by the Greeks and, later, the Romans.

Figure 9.1: A stater coin from Phocaea with Gryphon head, around 580 BC. The gryphon plays an important role in the symbols used by our ancestors, as can be verified in Figure 19.20 on page 175, Figure 18.4 on page 130, Figure 19.47 on page 207, and Figure 23.5 on page 250.

Figure 9.2: Ruines of Empúries. Credit: LeZibou, wikimedia commons.

9.3 Phocaea was the Origin of Greek Colonists

Phocaea, or Phokaia (modern-day Foça in Turkey), was an ancient Ionian Greek city on the western coast of Anatolia. Greek colonists from Phocaea founded several significant colonies around the Mediterranean, including Massalia (modern-day Marseille) in 600 BC, Emporion (Empúries) in 575 BC, and Elea (Velia) in 540 BC. Phocaea was known for its strategic location near the mouth of the Hermus River and its two natural harbors, which facilitated its development into a thriving maritime economy and a great naval power.

Phocaea's history is marked by its resilient spirit and extensive maritime exploration. According to Herodotus, the Phocaeans were the first Greeks to make long sea voyages, discovering the coasts of the Adriatic, Tyrrhenia, and Spain. Their seafaring prowess was so impressive that Arganthonios, the king of Tartessus in Spain, invited them to settle in his lands and even financed the construction of a defensive wall around their city.

However, the city's fortunes changed under the reign of the Lydian king Croesus and later under Persian control after Cyrus the Great's conquest in 546 BC. Rather than submit to Persian rule, many Phocaeans abandoned their city, with some fleeing to their colonies, including Emporion. This migration significantly influenced the demographic and cultural landscape of Empúries, reinforcing the Hellenic elements within the Iberian context.

9.4 Empúries was a Greek Foundation in Iberia

Empúries, derived from the Greek word "Emporion," meaning "market" or "trading place," was founded around 575 BC by Phocaean Greeks. It is shown in Figure 9.3 on page 81, Figure 9.5 on page 82, Figure 9.6 on page 83, Figure 9.4 on page 82, and Figure 9.2 on page 80. Initially established as a trading post, Empúries soon grew into a significant urban center due to its strategic coastal location and the influx of Greek settlers following the Persian conquest of Phocaea.

The early Greek settlers established their first settlement on a small island near the coast, which archaeologists called the Paléopolis. This island provided a defensible position and a natural harbor, essential for trade and protection. The settlement of Paléopolis, though not extensively excavated due to its current occupation by the village of Sant Martí d'Empúries, has yielded some Greek fortifications dating back to the 4th century BC.

Following the Persians' destruction of Phocaea in 546 BC, a significant influx of refugees arrived in Empúries. The original island settlement could no longer accommodate the growing population, leading to the establishment of a new town on the mainland, referred to as Néapolis. This new section of the city was marked by Greek-style houses and a fortified wall, remnants of which still stand today.

9.5 The Integration of Local and Greek Elites

The intermingling of Greek settlers with the local Indigete nobility was a natural outcome of Empúries' growth as a multicultural hub. Marriages between Greek colonists and regional elites, such as the notable union between a Greek woman and a local nobleman, played a crucial role in the social and cultural integration of the two communities. This blending of traditions and practices was pivotal in developing Empúries as a thriving center of trade and culture.

The Desclergues family, rooted in the local nobility, strategically aligned themselves with the Greek settlers through marital alliances. This union solidified their social standing and facilitated the transfer of Greek administrative and mercantile knowledge to the local elite. The integration of Greek governance systems and economic practices with indigenous traditions created a unique cultural milieu that defined Empúries.

Figure 9.3: The Asclepius of Empúries, also known as the Esculapi of Empúries, is a marble statue discovered in 1909 at the archaeological site of Empúries. Currently believed by most experts to represent Serapis rather than Asclepius, the statue is composed of two pieces: the lower part is made from Pentelic marble, and the bust and arms from Parian marble. Standing at 2.15 meters tall, this late 2nd century BCE artifact is notable for its grandeur and historical significance. Although the original scepter and serpent were not preserved, the figure's divine status is inferred. Displayed at the Barcelona location of the Museu d'Arqueologia de Catalunya for 98 years, it was transferred to Empúries in March 2008. It remains one of the most significant Greek artworks discovered in the Catalan region and a centerpiece of the Museu d'Arqueologia de Catalunya's Empúries collection, alongside the Sacrifice of Iphigenia. Serapis was a syncretic Hellenistic-Egyptian god combining aspects of Osiris and Zeus, while Asclepius was the Greek god of medicine and healing.

9.6 The Legacy of Empúries and the Desclergues

Empúries flourished under Greek influence until it was eventually absorbed into the Roman Empire. The Romans, recognizing the strategic importance of Empúries, further developed the city, introducing Roman administrative systems and infrastructure. Despite these changes, the Greek heritage of Empúries remained deeply embedded in its cultural and social fabric.

The Desclergues lineage, originating in the fusion of Greek and local Indigete nobility, exemplifies the broader historical processes at play in Empúries. A Phocaea slater coin with Gryphon, a symbol used by the Desclergues for centuries, is shown in Figure 9.1 on page 79. Their story is a testament to the enduring impact of Greek colonization on the Iberian Peninsula and the dynamic interplay of cultures that shaped the region's history.

It is quite an interesting thought that the Greek era of Empúries coincided with the height of Epidaurus in Greece, shown in Chapter 27.20.10.

Figure 9.4: Ruins of Empúries.

Figure 9.5: Empúries with its coast and harbor.

Figure 9.6: Museu d'arqueologia de Catalunya, MAC, Empúries.

Chapter 10

The Desclergues during the Roman Era

10.1 The Roman Conquest of Empúries

The Roman conquest of Empúries marked a significant transformation in the region's political, social, and economic landscape. By the 3rd and 2nd centuries BC, Empúries, through its connections with Massalia (modern-day Marseille), was allied with Rome. This alliance was solidified in 218 BC when Scipio Africanus landed at Empúries, intending to cut off Hannibal's rear guard as he advanced towards Italy. The city played a crucial role again in 195 BC when Cato the Elder pacified the indigenous tribes from Empúries, demonstrating its strategic importance to Roman military campaigns.

As the city lost its autonomy, installing Pompey's veterans in 45 BC transformed Empúries into the thoroughly Romanized settlement of Emporiae. The new Roman town was on a broad plateau overlooking the port and the older Greek quarters. This division underscored the social stratification, with Roman merchants and officials living in opulent domus above while artisans and the local populace inhabited the lower, bustling port area.

10.2 The Role of the Desclergues in Roman Empúries

The Desclergues family, with their deep roots in the local nobility and their previous integration with Greek settlers, adeptly navigated the complexities of Roman rule. As Empúries was absorbed into the Roman Republic and later the Empire, the Desclergues' forebears transitioned into crucial roles within the new administrative framework. Their expertise as scribes and bankers became invaluable, allowing them to thrive and prosper under Roman governance.

10.3 Integration into the Roman Administrative Framework

During the Roman era, the Desclergues leveraged their pre-existing status and skills to secure significant positions within the local administration. Their background in Greek administrative practices, acquired through their ancestors' integration with Greek settlers, provided a solid foundation for their roles as scribes and bankers. These positions were essential in the highly bureaucratic Roman system, which required meticulous record-keeping and financial management.

The Desclergues became known for their reliability and expertise, ensuring the smooth functioning of various administrative processes. Their roles included managing land records, tax collection, and overseeing financial transactions, which were critical for maintaining the region's economic stability. As scribes, they were responsible for drafting official documents, which required precision and trustworthiness. Their ability to navigate Rome's complex legal and financial systems solidified their reputation as indispensable figures within the local administration.

10.4 Economic Prosperity and Social Influence

The economic prosperity of Empúries during the Roman era provided ample opportunities for the Desclergues to expand their influence. The city's strategic location on the Mediterranean coast facilitated trade and commerce, attracting merchants and traders across the Empire. The Desclergues, with their banking expertise, played a vital role in financing trade ventures and managing commercial transactions.

Their involvement in banking not only enhanced their wealth but also extended their social influence. The Desclergues became patrons to various local artisans and merchants, fostering a network of clients and allies. This patronage system, characteristic of Roman society, further entrenched their status within the local elite. Their ability to provide financial support and protection reinforced their clients' authority and prestige.

10.5 Adaptation and Legacy

The Desclergues' adaptability was crucial to their enduring success as Roman cultural and administrative practices permeated Empúries. The family adeptly incorporated Roman customs while preserving their Greek and Iberian heritage. This cultural synthesis was reflected in their patronage of local art and architecture, blending Roman styles with indigenous and Hellenistic elements.

The Roman era also saw the Desclergues investing in the construction of public buildings and infrastructure, contributing to the city's development and serving as a testament to their civic commitment. Their involvement in public works endeared them to the local populace and further solidified their legacy as influential and beneficent figures in Empúries.

Chapter 11

Byzantine Era

Figure 11.1: Left: Byzantine Emperor Justinian, mosaic in St Vitale church, Ravenna, Italy Right: Shroud of Emperor Charlemagne, purple dyed silk.

11.1 The Desclergues and Their Byzantine Alliance

An impression of a scribe or a juror in Byzantine Spain is shown in Figure 11.3 on page 89. The Desclergues family, known for their roles as scribes and administrators, found an opportune moment to align with the Byzantine Empire amid the internal strife within the Visigothic kingdom. This strategic alliance elevated their status and gave the family the prestigious epithet of "purple blood." This term reflected their imperial administrative roles, aligning with the Byzantine tradition where purple symbolized imperial authority. Consequences are described in Chapter 17.1.

The two artifacts shown in Figure 11.1 on page 87 exemplify the profound significance of the color purple, particularly within the context of the Byzantine Empire and its influence on noble and imperial symbolism.

On the left of Figure 11.1, the mosaic of Byzantine Emperor Justinian I in the Basilica of San Vitale, Ravenna, Italy, showcases the emperor adorned in a purple robe. This color, known as Tyrian purple, was derived from the Murex sea snail and was so rare and expensive that it was worth its weight in gold. The dyeing process required tens of thousands of snails to produce even a small quantity of dye, making it a luxury only the wealthiest could afford. As such, sumptuary laws restricted its use primarily to imperial and royal families within the Byzantine Empire, symbolizing their supreme authority and noble lineage.

Tyrian purple was not the hue we perceive today; it was a deep, muted reddish-brown. The robe of Justinian in the mosaic may appear more blueish in photographs, but in person, it embodies the rich, intense color that symbolizes his imperial status. This mosaic is a prime example of Early Byzantine art, portraying the emperor with the dignity and sternness characteristic of rulers and divine figures of the time.

On the right of Figure 11.1, the shroud of Emperor Charlemagne, an early 9th-century artifact, further illustrates the enduring prestige of purple. This shroud, woven from purple-dyed silk in Constantinople, is now housed in the Musée National du Moyen Âge in Paris. Depending on the light, the purple silk's shimmering effect could appear more blueish or reddish, showcasing the dye's prized luster. Like Justinian's robe, Charlemagne's shroud highlights the extraordinary value placed on purple textiles, often used to signify the highest echelons of power and divinity.

The association of purple with nobility has deep roots in the Byzantine Empire, where it was mythologically credited to be discovered by the dog of Hercules. Plato described it as the greatest hue, and Roman emperors, followed by Byzantine rulers, adopted it to signify their supreme status. Even religious figures like Jesus and the Virgin Mary were depicted in purple in Byzantine art, underscoring its symbolic importance. However, after the fall of Constantinople in 1204, the production of Tyrian purple declined, leading to the adoption of other dyes like red kermes.

Today, authentic Tyrian purple remains incredibly rare and expensive, with only a few grams available for art conservation.

Figure 11.2: Byzantine Spain and Byzantine North Africa, including Bougie, or Béjaïa, in 560, indicated in green.

Nevertheless, these historical artifacts vividly capture the legacy of purple as the ultimate color of imperial and noble power, particularly in the Byzantine Empire. By the mid-6th century, under Emperor Justinian, the Byzantine Empire sought to reclaim former Roman territories, leading to their intervention in Hispania. This period, often referred to as the Byzantine Hispania, saw the empire establish control over the southeastern quarter of the Iberian Peninsula. The Desclergues leveraged their administrative skills, serving the Byzantines as they attempted to restore Roman order in the region.

11.2 Byzantine Conquest and Administration in Hispania

The Byzantine presence in Hispania began around 552 AD, following the dispatch of an expeditionary force by Justinian to support the rebel Athanagild against the Visigothic king Agila. The Byzantines, under the command of the elderly general Liberius, managed to secure key cities such as Cartagena and Malaga. These cities, serving as critical ports, became the region's main bastions of Byzantine authority.

Despite their initial successes, the Byzantines faced significant challenges. The provincial boundaries were often indeterminate, and their hinterland control remained tenuous. The local Visigothic aristocracy, predominantly adhering to Arian Christianity, opposed the Byzantine-backed Nicene Christians. This religious and political tension made the province challenging to defend, especially as subsequent Byzantine emperors grappled with more pressing issues closer to the heart of the empire.

The establishment of the Byzantine province of Spania was part of Justinian's broader campaign, known as the Reconquest, to restore Roman territories lost to various Germanic tribes. Following their military success in assisting Athanagild, the Byzantines formalized their control by establishing a network of fortifications and governing the region through a Byzantine military and administrative hierarchy. This structure helped maintain control over the area despite its distance from the main centers of Byzantine power in the Eastern Mediterranean.

11.3 The Desclergues in Hispania and North Africa

The Desclergues' collaboration with the Byzantines extended beyond the Iberian Peninsula. Some family members were stationed in Bejaia (ancient Saldae), a strategic port in present-day Algeria under Byzantine control following the Vandalic War. This stationing in North Africa was significant, as it expanded the geographical reach of the Desclergues and enriched their cultural and administrative experience. Their interactions with Islamic and North African influences during this period contributed to the family's diverse legacy.

The integration of the Desclergues into the Byzantine administration exemplifies the interconnectedness of Mediterranean cultures during this period. Their presence in Bejaia is a testament to the fluidity of boundaries and the exchange of ideas across regions. This experience would later be echoed in the claims of Bertrand Du Guesclin in Chapter 19.7, a notable figure who highlighted his ancestral connections to Bougie, underscoring a legacy that spanned continents.

By the late 6th century, the Byzantines organized North Africa into the Exarchate of Africa, a form of governance combining civilian and military authority in the hands of the Exarch. The Exarchate included modern-day Tunisia and parts of Libya, Algeria, and Morocco. This structure aimed to integrate Roman administrative practices with local governance structures, ensuring smoother administration and more effective control.

Figure 11.3: A historical impression of a scribe or juror in Byzantine Spain. This image was made with AI (DALL·E 2024-05-22 20.46.47)

11.4 Byzantine North Africa: Bejaia (Saldae)

Bejaia, known in ancient times as Saldae, came under Byzantine control following their victory over the Vandals in the Vandalic War (533–534 AD). The city, strategically located on the Mediterranean coast, was a naval base and commercial hub. Its port facilities and position along trade routes made it a valuable asset for the Byzantines, who integrated it into their Exarchate of Africa.

Saldae's administration, including some Desclergues ancestors, under Byzantine rule was managed by a Byzantine-appointed official, operating under the jurisdiction of the Exarchate of Africa based in Carthage. The city's military role included serving as a base for naval operations and protecting against threats from Berber tribes and later Arab invaders. The Byzantine period in Bejaia was marked by efforts to promote Eastern Orthodoxy, adding to the region's complex religious mix, which the spread of Islam would later influence. A map of Byzantine Spain, including Béjaïa of Bougie, is shown in Figure 11.2 on page 88.

11.5 The Decline of Byzantine Hispania

Byzantine control in Hispania began to wane towards the end of the 6th century. Visigothic king Leovigild's efforts to consolidate power and his successor Reccared's conversion to Nicene Christianity weakened the Byzantine position. By the early 7th century, Byzantine Hispania was reduced to a narrow coastal strip before disappearing around 624 AD, except for the Balearic Islands, which remained nominally under Byzantine control until the early 10th century.

Several factors marked the decline of Byzantine influence in Hispania. The local Romanized populations, initially supportive of the Byzantines due to their shared Nicene faith, gradually aligned with the Visigoths as religious tensions eased. The logistical difficulties of defending distant territories and Constantinople's lack of substantial support compounded the Byzantines' challenges.

11.6 Conclusion

The Byzantine presence in Hispania and North Africa during the 6th century exemplifies the empire's ambitious efforts under Emperor Justinian to restore Roman imperial control over lost western territories. The Desclergues family's involvement in these regions highlights the interconnectedness of Mediterranean cultures and the complexities of Byzantine administration, largely based on the skills of scribers. The decline of Byzantine Hispania and the eventual Arab conquests reflect the shifting political and religious landscapes of the early medieval period. This era, marked by military campaigns, strategic alliances, and cultural exchanges, underscores the dynamic nature of Byzantine influence across the Mediterranean. The purple blood of the Desclergues would persist and always refer to this period.

Chapter 12

Visigothic and Islamic Era

12.1 The Byzantine Reconquest and Visigothic Resurgence

The initial Byzantine foothold in Spain was established during the reign of Emperor Justinian I, who aimed to reclaim former Roman territories. This effort, part of Justinian's more extensive policy of reconquest, sought to restore Roman rule over the Western territories lost to various Germanic tribes. In 552, the Byzantine general Liberius led an expedition to support the rebel Athanagild against the Visigothic king Agila I. The intervention enabled the Byzantines to secure parts of southern Spain, including key coastal cities like Cartagena and Malaga, thereby forming the province of Spania.

Byzantine control in Spania was characterized by military and administrative structures typical of the Empire, integrating the region into the broader Byzantine imperial framework. Despite these efforts, Byzantine authority was continually challenged by the Visigoths and internal strife within the Empire.

The Visigothic resurgence began in earnest under King Leovigild (568-586), who aimed to consolidate the entire Iberian Peninsula under his rule. Leovigild's victories against the Byzantines near Malaga and Baza and the capture of Cordoba in 572 marked significant setbacks for Byzantine ambitions in Spain. However, the Byzantine administration persisted, focusing on fortifying their remaining territories and maintaining influence through diplomatic and military means.

12.2 The Desclergues and the Visigothic Alliance

During this turbulent period, the Desclergues family adeptly navigated shifting allegiances. Initially aligned with the Byzantine administration due to their noble status and administrative expertise, they transitioned to serving the Visigothic rulers as Byzantine influence waned. This realignment was essential for their survival and prosperity in an era of political instability and frequent regime changes.

Leovigild's successor, Reccared I (586-601), abandoned Arianism in favor of Nicene Christianity, fostering improved relations with the remaining Byzantine territories. The Desclergues, known for their adaptability, leveraged this religious and political shift to secure positions within the Visigothic administration. This period saw a temporary stabilization of the Byzantine-Visigothic frontier, with treaties confirming respective territories and prohibiting further conquests.

12.3 The Islamic Conquests and the Transformation of the Iberian Peninsula

The arrival of Islamic forces in the early 8th century dramatically altered the political landscape of the Iberian Peninsula. The rapid expansion of Islamic rule, marked by the decisive Battle of Guadalete in 711, led to the collapse of Visigothic power and the establishment of Al-Andalus under Umayyad control. The Desclergues, demonstrating remarkable adaptability, transitioned to serving the new Islamic rulers.

Renamed Hakim or Hakin, the Desclergues continued their roles in administration and banking, leveraging their extensive experience and noble lineage. Their ability to serve under successive regimes—Visigothic, Byzantine, and Islamic—highlights their diplomatic acumen and underscores the fluidity of identity and allegiance in medieval Iberia.

In the forthcoming period, certain members of the Desclergue family would settle in Septimania, particularly in the regions near Albi and Toulouse. Concurrently, other branches of the family would remain under Islamic governance, later altering their allegiance as their territorial rulers transitioned to an alliance with the Frankish kingdom. These branches would refer to their lineage as Hakim or Hakin, while the former would refer to Clergue.

Figure 12.1: The professional outfit of our earliest Clergue ancestors in the 9th-12th centuries. They were escribano, a profession that would later become that of clercs and notaries.

12.4 The Byzantine Legacy and Cultural Influence

Despite their eventual decline, the Byzantines left a lasting cultural and economic impact on the Iberian Peninsula. Byzantine influence permeated various aspects of Visigothic rule, including administrative practices and religious affiliations. For instance, Leovigild adopted the imperial purple and minted coins resembling Byzantine currency, reflecting the enduring prestige of the Eastern Roman Empire.

Prominent religious figures like Leander of Seville and John of Biclar maintained connections with the Byzantine world, facilitating cultural and intellectual exchanges. This period also saw continued trade with other Byzantine territories, ensuring the flow of goods and ideas across the Mediterranean.

During the Byzantine era, members of the Desclergues family were actively involved in the administration and defense of Byzantine territories in southern Spain. The Byzantine stronghold included regions like Cartagena and other coastal cities, critical for maintaining Mediterranean trade routes and military operations. Additionally, the Desclergues extended their influence to Bougie in Algeria, reflecting their integration into the Byzantine Empire's broader strategic interests in North Africa.

12.5 The Onset of the Muslim Conquest

The Muslim conquest of Iberia began in 711 when Tariq ibn Ziyad landed at Gibraltar with an army primarily composed of Berbers. The swift victory over King Roderic at the Battle of Guadalete led to the rapid expansion of Umayyad control across the Iberian Peninsula. As the Muslims advanced, the Desclergues family faced significant decisions regarding their allegiance and survival.

12.6 Adaptation and Division within the Desclergues Family

The Desclergues family responded to the Muslim conquest in various ways. Some members, leveraging their administrative and diplomatic skills, adapted and operated under the new Muslim rule. These Desclergues continued to reside in southern Spain, maintaining their estates and influence by collaborating with the Umayyad authorities. Their ability to navigate the changing political landscape ensured their survival and prosperity during this turbulent period. Some would later ally, with the ruler where they resided, with the Frankish.

Conversely, other family members, wary of the new rulers and seeking stability, opted to move northwards into Septimania. Their ancestral ties to Empúries facilitated this migration, allowing them to relocate swiftly and integrate into the local nobility of Septimania. Under Visigothic and later Carolingian influence, this region provided a relatively safer environment for those resisting Muslim rule.

12.7 Catalonia and the Visigothic Resistance

Catalonia was a region of strategic importance during the Muslim conquest. Agila II, a Visigothic noble, established control over parts of Catalonia and Septimania, forming a bastion of resistance against the Umayyads. The Desclergues who moved to Septimania supported these Visigothic efforts, defending key strongholds such as Narbonne and Perpignan.

By 720, however, the Umayyad forces had captured much of Septimania successfully, marking a significant power shift. The fall of these cities signaled the end of organized Visigothic resistance in the region, but individual noble families like the Desclergues continued to wield influence.

12.8 Transition from Scribes to Hakim under Muslim Rule

The Desclergues family, renowned for their scribal expertise, shown in Figure 12.1 on page 91, adapted to significant cultural and political transformations during the Muslim conquest of Iberia. Their very name, 'Clergue,' reflects their long-standing role as scribes, a position of considerable intellectual and administrative importance in both the Byzantine and Visigothic periods. With the advent of Muslim rule, the Desclergues successfully transitioned into the role of 'Hakim' or 'Hakin,' terms that similarly denote a scholar or learned person, underscoring their continued prominence as professional scribes.

Indeed, before the Muslim conquest, the Desclergues had established themselves as key administrative figures in Empúries and the broader regions of Byzantine influence in southern Spain. Their literacy and command of administrative practices positioned them as indispensable assets in the bureaucratic machinery of the time. The term 'Clergue' derives from the Latin 'clericus,' indicating their scholarly and clerical functions within the administrative hierarchy.

Further, the arrival of the Umayyad forces in 711 marked a profound shift in the political landscape of Iberia. As the Muslim conquest advanced, the administrative and intellectual elite, including the Desclergues, faced the challenge of adapting to the new ruling powers. The Desclergues, with their deep-rooted expertise in literacy and governance, were well-placed to transition into the Islamic bureaucratic framework.

Under Muslim rule, the Desclergues must, indeed, have assumed the title 'Hakim' or 'Hakin,' terms that denote wisdom, learning, and administrative proficiency, akin to their original role as 'Clergue.' The term 'Hakim' in Arabic encompasses the dual notions of a wise man and a learned scholar, aligning with the Desclergues' traditional role as scribes and intellectuals.

The professional shift from 'Clergue' to 'Hakim' was a change in terminology and a seamless transition in function and status. The Desclergues continued to perform essential administrative and scholarly duties, maintaining records, drafting official documents, and managing bureaucratic processes. Their ability to adapt to the Muslim administration's new linguistic and cultural context facilitated their continued relevance and influence.

This continuity ensured that the Desclergues remained integral to the administrative operation of the region, contributing to the governance and cultural synthesis characteristic of Al-Andalus. More details of the name evolution of the Desclergues are given in Chapter 15.

Chapter 13

Brittany, Occitania and Catalonia

13.1 Introduction

The Muslim conquest of Iberia began in 711 when Tariq ibn Ziyad landed at Gibraltar with an army primarily composed of Berbers. The swift victory over King Roderic at the Battle of Guadalete led to the rapid expansion of Umayyad control across the Iberian Peninsula. As the Muslims advanced, they established themselves as the ruling elite, comprising Arabs, Syrians, and Berbers. The Arabs, holding superior status, owned prime land, occupied vital government positions, and resided in grand estates. Although numerically less significant, the Berbers often clashed with the Arabs, resentful of their perceived arrogance.

In medieval Spain, the Muslim rulers of Al-Ândalus left a lasting legacy in various aspects of Spanish society, including agriculture, architecture, medicine, and other fields of knowledge. The introduction of irrigation systems, advancements in medical science, and architectural marvels contributed to the region's prosperity. The Islamic rulers' tolerance towards other faiths, particularly Christianity, allowed for religious freedom, albeit with certain obligations such as taxation and respect for Islamic traditions.

Despite occasional conflicts with Christian kingdoms in the north, coexistence between Muslims and Christians was relatively harmonious, characterized by cooperation and peaceful cohabitation.

Over successive generations, intermarriage between the Arab ruling class and local Spanish women led to a dilution of Arab bloodlines with European genes. Consequently, many descendants of the aristocracy in Al-Ândalus displayed physical traits more akin to the indigenous Spanish population, such as blonde hair, blue eyes, and fair complexions. Historical evidence suggests that some of these Muslim rulers were of patrilineal descent of Christians, distinct from the typical Arab or Berber lineage.

Zato, to name one example, also known as Zaddo or Zate, was a significant figure in Barcelona's history during the 9th century. He was a Muslim ruler who held sway over the city during the period of Islamic rule in the Iberian Peninsula. His presence, marked by a name resonant with Islamic heritage, sparks conjecture and debate among scholars. Some posit him as Sadūn, a shadowy figure from the annals of Arabic chronicles, while others cast him as Zadun, a Moorish ruler whose destiny intertwined with the Frankish conquest of Barcelona.

Amidst medieval politics, Zate's story unfolds, weaving through alliances, betrayals, and the clash of civilizations. In 812, , our ancestor, Charlemagne, shown in Figure 76.8 on page 1681, admonished a group of Frankish counts to treat the Hispani living in their domain fair and to restitute to them the land they had acquired through independent land development. This instruction, penned with the weight of imperial authority, spoke of Hispani, immigrants from the Iberian Peninsula, caught in the crossfire of territorial disputes and administrative oppression.

Among their ranks stood Zate, a figure shrouded in ambiguity, his origins hinted at through the veils of historical interpretation. The chronicles describe Zate's audience with Charlemagne as a pivotal moment in which allegiances hung in the balance. Some accounts suggest that he surrendered the keys of Barcelona to the Frankish emperor, while others claim he resisted, only to meet his fate at the hands of Charlemagne's forces. His true fate remains elusive, with various accounts offering conflicting narratives.

13.2 The Formation and Development of the Spanish March (778-950)

The history of Catalonia's formation as a distinct entity is deeply intertwined with the legacy of the Spanish March established by Charlemagne in the late 8th and early 9th centuries. This period, which marked the early foundations of Catalonian identity, saw the emergence of a complex and dynamic system of counties governed by a mix of Frankish and local nobility and supported by a structured administration of secular and ecclesiastical officials. The political and military strategies employed by the Carolingians in establishing and maintaining the Spanish March were pivotal in shaping the medieval landscape of the Iberian Peninsula.

13.2.1 Early Muslim Incursions and Carolingian Response

The establishment of the Spanish March began in the context of the Muslim conquest of the Iberian Peninsula, which had rapidly overrun the Visigothic Kingdom by the early 8th century. The Muslim armies pushed into Gaul, but Charles Martel halted their advance at the Battle of Tours in 732. This victory did not end Muslim incursions but set the stage for subsequent regional Carolingian campaigns.

Internal conflicts within the Muslim emirate of Cordoba piqued Charlemagne's interest in the Iberian Peninsula. In 777, Muslim governors from the Ebro Valley sought Charlemagne's assistance against the emir 'Abd al-Rahmân I. Seeing an opportunity to expand his influence and spread Christianity, Charlemagne launched a campaign in Spain in 778. However, the expedition was unsuccessful, culminating in the disastrous Battle of Roncevaux Pass, where Basque forces ambushed the rear guard of his army.

Despite this setback, the Carolingians continued their efforts to establish a foothold in the region. In 785, the city of Girona voluntarily submitted to the Franks, followed by the counties of Cerdanya and Urgell. These early conquests laid the groundwork for establishing the Spanish March, a buffer zone to protect the Carolingian Empire from Muslim incursions and serve as a base for further expansion.

13.2.2 Structure and Governance of the Spanish March

The Spanish March was not a single administrative unit but a collection of counties that included Barcelona, Ausona, Urgell, Cerdagne, Girona, Empúries, and Roussillon. The primary function of these counties was to secure the Carolingian Empire's southern frontier and facilitate future military campaigns. Each county was governed by a count, who wielded significant military and administrative authority.

The governance of these counties was initially entrusted to both Frankish and local nobility. Notable among the early leaders was William of Gellone, Duke of Toulouse, and cousin of Charlemagne, who played a crucial role in defending and expanding the frontier. Another important figure was Borrell, a local noble who governed the counties of Cerdagne, Urgell, and Ausona. These counts were responsible for maintaining the defense of their territories, administering justice, and collecting taxes. They acted as intermediaries between the local populations and the Frankish king or emperor.

The ecclesiastical organization was also crucial in consolidating Carolingian control. The territories of the Spanish March were divided into four bishoprics: Barcelona, Ausona, Urgell, and Elne. These bishoprics worked to align the region's religious practices with those of the Carolingian Empire, combating local heresies such as Adoptionism, which was contrary to the dogma promoted by the papacy.

13.2.3 Conflicts and Consolidation

Frequent conflicts with Muslim forces and internal dissent marked the early years of the Spanish March. The Muslim emirate launched several retaliatory raids in response to Frankish expansion. In 793, for instance, Abd al-Malik ibn Abd al-Wahid ibn Mughith led a significant expedition against Girona and Narbonne. These raids underscored the constant threat faced by the frontier counties.

Internally, the governance of the March was often contentious. The aristocracy was divided between factions favoring peaceful coexistence with the Muslims and those advocating for continued military aggression. The assassination of Bera, the first count of Barcelona, in 820 exemplified these internal divisions. Bernard of Septimania, a prominent Frankish noble, succeeded Bera and sought to assert more robust control over the region but faced rebellions and accusations of disloyalty, ultimately being executed in 844.

The mid-9th century saw the rise of the house of Carcassonne, led by Sunifred, who consolidated power in several counties, including Barcelona, Girona, and Urgell. Sunifred's successful defense against Muslim incursions and loyalty to the Carolingians earned him significant influence. His descendants, particularly Guifred the Hairy, continued this trend of consolidation. Guifred the Hairy is often credited with unifying several counties and establishing a hereditary dynasty that would become the foundation of medieval Catalonia.

13.2.4 Towards Autonomy and Independence

The transition from Frankish rule to local autonomy was gradual but significant. By the late 9th century, the counts of the Spanish March began to exercise greater independence from the Carolingian rulers. Guifred the Hairy's successors continued to strengthen their political and military positions with less reliance on Frankish support. This shift was marked by the practice of hereditary succession among the counts, which solidified local control and reduced the influence of the Frankish monarchy.

The symbolic break from Frankish authority occurred in 988 when Borrell II, count of Barcelona, refused to renew his oath of allegiance to the new Capetian king of France, Hugh Capet. This act is often seen as the de facto declaration of Catalonian independence, though the formal recognition of this independence would come much later.

13.3 The Breton March

The Breton March, important in Chapter 19.4 and Chapter 19.8, similar to the Spanish March, was a frontier zone established by the Carolingians to protect the western borders of their empire from external threats, specifically the Bretons. Created in the 8th century, the Breton March encompassed the counties of Nantes, Vannes, and Rennes. Its establishment and subsequent evolution played a crucial role in the Carolingian military strategy and in shaping the political landscape of western France.

13.3.1 Historical Background and Initial Establishment

The origins of the Breton March can be traced back to the late 5th and early 6th centuries when Breton populations began settling in the Armorican peninsula, fleeing the Anglo-Saxon invasions of Britain. By the time of the Carolingians, the Bretons had established several small kingdoms and principalities that frequently clashed with their Frankish neighbors.

The first significant attempt to establish control over the Bretons was made by Clovis I, who, after defeating Syagrius, sought to extend his influence over Brittany. However, a more structured approach was taken during the reign of Charlemagne. Charlemagne created the Breton March as a military district to organize and support expeditions against the Bretons and to defend against their incursions into Frankish territory.

13.3.2 The Role of Roland and Early Conflicts

One of the most famous figures associated with the Breton March is Roland, the legendary prefect immortalized in the "Song of Roland." Roland's death at the Battle of Roncevaux in 778 marked the beginning of the Breton March's defensive and offensive military zone role.

The Battle of Roncevaux Pass fought on August 15, 778, represents a significant episode in the history of the Carolingian Empire. This battle, an ambush against the rearguard of Charlemagne's army by the Vascons, has been immortalized in the epic poem "The Song of Roland." The historical reality of the battle is detailed in various sources, including the accounts of Einhard in the Vita Karoli Magni.

Upon Pepin the Short's death in 768, his son Charles, later known as Charlemagne, ascended to the throne. By 777, Charlemagne was approached by Sulayman al-Arabi, the Muslim governor of Barcelona, who sought his assistance against the Emir of Cordoba, Abd al-Rahman I. Charlemagne's campaign into the Iberian Peninsula aimed to establish a Frankish presence and protect Christian territories, creating buffer states against Muslim raids.

The strategic significance of Zaragoza, a key objective of Charlemagne's campaign, lay in its control over the Ebro River and its status as a prominent Christian enclave within Muslim-dominated Iberia. Despite initial successes, including the submission of several towns, the campaign faced complications when local Muslim leaders, such as El Hussayn of Zaragoza, resisted Charlemagne's advances.

The return journey of Charlemagne's army through the Pyrenees culminated in disaster. Using their knowledge of the terrain, the Vascons launched a surprise attack on the Frankish rearguard. Despite the superior arms and valor of the Franks, the Vascons' tactical advantage and lighter armor led to a decisive defeat for Charlemagne's forces. Key figures, including Roland, the prefect of the Breton March, and other high-ranking officials, were killed.

Einhard's "Vita Karoli Magni" provides a detailed account of the ambush, emphasizing the rugged terrain and the inability of the Franks to retaliate due to the Vascons' swift dispersion into the surrounding forests.

The defeat at Roncevaux had significant implications for the Frankish control over the Spanish March, a buffer zone established to protect the southern borders of the Carolingian Empire. The loss weakened Charlemagne's position in the region and highlighted the challenges of maintaining control over distant territories.

As the prefect of the Breton March, Roland held a crucial role in securing the western borders of the Frankish Empire against potential threats from the Breton territories. His death at Roncevaux not only had immediate military consequences but also entered the realm of legend, symbolizing the heroism and sacrifice of the Frankish knights.

The Carolingians faced ongoing resistance from the Bretons. In 753, Pepin the Short recaptured the county of Vannes from the Bretons, solidifying Frankish control over the region. The Breton March served as the staging ground for further campaigns to subdue the Bretons and integrate their territories into the Frankish realm.

13.3.3 Administrative and Military Structure

The administrative structure of the Breton March was similar to that of the Spanish March. It comprised several counties—Nantes, Vannes, and Rennes—each governed by a count. The counts of these territories were responsible for maintaining defense, administering justice, and collecting taxes. The prefect of the Breton March, often the count of Nantes, held overall command and coordinated military operations.

The March was also supported by the Duchy of Maine (Ducatus Cennomanicus), which served as a base for logistical support, including providing troops and supplies. This interconnected system ensured that the Breton March could function effectively as a defensive buffer and a platform for launching military expeditions into Breton territory.

13.3.4 Key Figures and Conflicts

Throughout its history, the Breton March was governed by several notable figures who played crucial roles in its defense and administration. After Roland, another significant leader was Audulf, who led a military campaign to subdue the Bretons in 786. In 799, Gui, a member of the Widonid family, was appointed as the March's prefect. Gui and his brother Frodald, who governed Vannes, were instrumental in maintaining Frankish control over the region.

The 9th century saw numerous conflicts between the Franks and the Bretons. In 818, a major Frankish expedition penetrated Breton territory, reaching Corophes in the former Osismii lands. However, Breton resistance persisted, exemplified by the rebellion led by Wiomarc'h between 822 and 825, which prompted Emperor Louis the Pious to intervene personally.

13.3.5 Decline and Transformation

The decline of the Breton March began in the mid-9th century due to internal Frankish conflicts and external pressures. In 831, the March was effectively disbanded when Louis the Pious restructured the territories, appointing the Breton leader Nominoë as the Duke of Brittany and the Count of Vannes. This reorganization marked the beginning of greater autonomy for the Bretons.

The final phase of the Breton March occurred between 840 and 851. After the death of Louis the Pious in 840, Charles the Bald faced renewed Breton resistance. In 841, Charles appointed Renaud d'Herbauges as the count of Nantes, who was subsequently defeated and killed by Nominoë in 843. The Battle of Ballon in 845, where Nominoë decisively defeated Charles the Bald, marked the de facto independence of Brittany, formalized by the Treaty of Angers in 851. This treaty granted Nominoë's son, Erispoë, the titles of Duke and King of Brittany and incorporated the counties of Nantes and Rennes into the Breton realm.

13.3.6 The Second Breton March

In response to the loss of the original Breton March, Charles the Bald established a second Breton March in 861. This new March was centered on Touraine, Anjou, and Maine counties, with Robert the Strong appointed its marquis. The primary purpose of this latest March was to defend against further Breton incursions and to counter the growing threat of Viking invasions. However, the second Breton March faced significant challenges. The Treaties of Louviers (856), Entrammes (863), and Compiègne (868) saw the gradual cession of territories to the Breton rulers Erispoë and later Salomon. These treaties reflected the shifting power dynamics and the inability of the Carolingians to maintain a stable frontier in the face of external pressures.

13.3.7 Stabilization of Borders

The death of Robert the Strong in 866 at the Battle of Brissarthe marked the end of significant Carolingian attempts to re-establish a robust Breton March. The subsequent period saw increasing Viking activity and internal Breton conflicts. By the late 9th century, under the leadership of Alain Barbe-Torte, the Bretons successfully repelled the Vikings and consolidated control over their territory. The boundaries of Brittany were eventually stabilized to correspond roughly with the modern departments of Côtes-d'Armor, Finistère, Ille-et-Vilaine, Morbihan, and Loire-Atlantique.

13.4 Consolidated Marches

13.4.1 Introduction

The establishment and evolution of the Spanish and Breton Marches were crucial in shaping the medieval political landscape of their respective regions. Through a combination of military conquest, strategic governance, and the gradual assertion of autonomy, the counties of the Spanish March laid the foundation for the emergence of Catalonia as a distinct political and cultural entity. The Breton March, meanwhile, played a vital role in defining the frontier between the Carolingian Empire and the independent Breton kingdoms, ultimately contributing to the formation of the Duchy of Brittany.

Both marches served as buffer zones, protecting the Carolingian heartlands from external threats and facilitating further expansion.

The complex relationships between local and Frankish nobility, the strategic military operations, and the gradual move towards regional autonomy highlight the broader strategies employed by the Carolingians in managing their empire's borders.

13.4.2 The Counties of the Spanish March

The Spanish March consisted of several key counties, each governed by influential counts who played significant roles in the defense and administration of the region:

13.4.2.0.1 Barcelona One of the most critical counties, it was initially governed by Bera, whom Bernard of Septimania later replaced. Guifred the Hairy (Wilfred) eventually established a hereditary dynasty here.

13.4.2.0.2 Girona It was submitted to the Franks in 785 and was a crucial part of the frontier defense.

13.4.2.0.3 Cerdanya It was governed by local nobles like Borrell, who also managed Urgell and Ausona.

13.4.2.0.4 Urgell Another county under the control of Borrell and later Sunifred contributed significantly to the region's defense.

13.4.2.0.5 Ausona Part of Borrell's domain was critical in the consolidation of Carolingian power.

13.4.2.0.6 Empúries It is governed by Sunyer, which is related to the house of Carcassonne and contributes to the region's unification.

13.4.2.0.7 Roussillon It is also governed by the House of Carcassonne, playing a key role in the overall defense strategy.

These counties were overseen by a mix of local and Frankish nobility, who ensured the region's stability and security. Notable figures included William of Gellone, who played a central role in early defensive campaigns and Guifred the Hairy, who later unified several counties under his rule.

13.4.3 The Counties of the Breton March

The Breton March encompassed several counties, each with its strategic significance and governed by influential counts:

13.4.3.0.1 Nantes It was a vital county often governed by the prefect of the March, including notable leaders like Roland and later Gui from the Widonid family.

13.4.3.0.2 Vannes Initially part of the March, it was eventually integrated into the Breton kingdom under leaders like Nominoë.

13.4.3.0.3 Rennes Another critical county for the defense against Breton incursions, governed by counts such as Lambert.

The Breton March faced constant conflicts and adjustments, reflecting the dynamic nature of the Carolingian frontier policy. Key figures like Roland, Audulf, and later members of the Widonid family played crucial roles in maintaining control and organizing military campaigns.

13.4.4 The Transition to Autonomy

By the late 9th century, the Spanish and Breton Marches saw a shift towards greater local autonomy. In the Spanish March, counts like Guifred the Hairy established hereditary control, reducing reliance on Frankish authority. This trend culminated in 988 when Borrell II of Barcelona refused to renew his oath of allegiance to the Capetian king, marking a significant step towards Catalonian independence.

Similarly, in the Breton March, the restructuring under Louis the Pious and subsequent treaties with Breton leaders like Nominoë and Erispoë signaled a shift towards independence. The Treaty of Angers in 851 and subsequent agreements gradually eroded Frankish control, leading to the full integration of Nantes and Rennes into the Breton kingdom.

The meticulous administration and the dynamic interplay of local and imperial interests within these frontier zones underscore the intricate processes that led to the emergence of distinct regional identities within the Carolingian Empire. For the Desclergue family, originating from Empúries and later prominent in various regions, including Septimania and Catalonia, the historical context of the Spanish March provides essential insights into their ancestral legacy and the broader forces that shaped their roles in medieval European history.

The Carolingian strategy of establishing marches as buffer zones was instrumental in protecting the empire's borders and facilitating expansion. These regions' successful management and eventual autonomy highlight the local nobility's adaptability and resilience in navigating the medieval period's complex political landscape. The Spanish and Breton Marches, with their unique histories and critical figures, exemplify the broader Carolingian efforts to maintain control over a vast and diverse empire while laying the groundwork for the emergence of new political entities in medieval Europe.

Chapter 14

The Reconquista: A Brief Analysis of Historical and Cultural Dimensions

14.1 Introduction

The Reconquista, spanning from 722 to 1492, was a pivotal era in the history of the Iberian Peninsula. It was a complex process in which not every portion and aspect was significant to our ancestry. Here, a very general approach is provided, while a more detailed explanation specifically focusing on our ancestry is given in Chapters 17.2, 17.3, 17.4 and 17.5.

The shifting balance of power in the Iberian Peninsula took a significant turn with the rise of the Frankish conquests, gradually pushing Islamic forces back. A critical moment in this process was the Battle of Tours in 732, where Charles Martel led the Franks to a decisive victory, halting the northward advance of Islamic armies. By the late 8th century, the Franks had regained control over substantial territories, including Septimania.

During this transformative period, the Desclergues family reverted to their ancestral roots, discarding the Islamic names Hakim and Hakin and reclaiming their original Roman family name, Clergue. Under Frankish rule, they continued to prosper, leveraging their historical reputation as trusted allies and respected figures within the community. More details of the name evolution of the Desclergues are given in Chapter 15.

This period witnessed the gradual reclamation of territories under Muslim control by the Christian kingdoms of medieval Spain and Portugal. Reconquista, often called the "Reconquest," signifies more than mere military campaigns; it encapsulates complex socio-political, cultural, and religious transformations that redefined the region's identity.

14.2 Historical Context and Phases

14.2.1 Early Resistance and Formation of Christian Kingdoms

The initial phase of the Reconquista is marked by the Battle of Covadonga in 722, where Pelagius (Pelayo), a noble Visigoth, achieved a symbolic victory against the Muslim forces in the Cantabrian Mountains. This victory established the Kingdom of Asturias, precedenting future resistance. The strategic withdrawal and consolidation in the northern mountainous regions allowed the Christian forces to regroup and develop strongholds, which later became the foundation for southward expansion.

14.2.2 The Role of Christian Kingdoms

The Reconquista was not a monolithic endeavor; it involved various Christian kingdoms, including Asturias, León, Castile, Aragon, Navarre, and Portugal. Each kingdom had its dynamics and phases of expansion, often marked by intermittent periods of truce and conflict. Notable milestones include the capture of Toledo by Alfonso VI of Castile in 1085, which was a significant cultural and strategic victory.

14.2.3 The Almoravid and Almohad Interventions

The Christian advances were periodically challenged by the intervention of North African Muslim dynasties, namely the Almoravids and later the Almohads. These interventions reinvigorated Muslim resistance and temporarily halted Christian expansion. However, internal divisions and the eventual weakening of these dynasties facilitated renewed Christian offensives.

14.3 The Concept of Reconquista: Historiographical Debates

The term "Reconquista" itself has been a subject of historiographical debate. Coined in the 19th century, it reflects a nationalist perspective that aimed to construct a continuous narrative of Christian reclamation. Some historians argue that this term imposes a teleological framework on disparate events. Others emphasize the "restoration" of Christian Visigothic rule, suggesting a return to a pre-Muslim political and religious order. However, the Reconquista was also marked by the establishment of new political entities and social structures significantly different from the Visigothic period.

14.4 Cultural and Religious Dynamics

14.4.1 Coexistence and Conflict

The cultural and religious landscape of the Reconquista was characterized by periods of coexistence and conflict. In the early phases, Muslim rulers often allowed Christian and Jewish communities to maintain a degree of autonomy under the dhimmi system. Conversely, the Christian kingdoms employed similar systems for the Muslim populations in the conquered territories, known as the Mudéjars. This coexistence, however, was often fraught with tensions and periodic violence.

14.4.2 The Role of Military Orders and Crusading Ideology

Military orders, such as the Knights of Santiago, Calatrava, and Alcántara, played crucial roles in the Reconquista, blending religious zeal with military objectives. These orders were instrumental in defending and expanding Christian territories. The Reconquista was also intertwined with the broader crusading movement, receiving papal support and attracting knights from across Europe who sought indulgences and spiritual rewards.

14.5 Socio-Economic Transformations

14.5.1 Repopulation (Repoblación)

As territories were reconquered, the Christian kingdoms implemented policies of repopulation (repoblación) to solidify their control and promote economic stability. This involved settling new Christian populations, often from the north, into the newly acquired lands. The process varied significantly, with some regions experiencing significant demographic and economic shifts while others retained large Muslim populations who continued to cultivate the land.

14.5.2 Economic Integration and Urban Development

The Reconquista also led to the economic integration of the Iberian Peninsula into the broader European economy. Key cities, such as Toledo, Seville, and Valencia, became vibrant trade and cultural exchange centers. Introducing new agricultural techniques and crops influenced by Muslim practices contributed to economic growth and urban development.

14.6 The End of the Reconquista and Its Legacy

14.6.1 The Fall of Granada

The culmination of the Reconquista was marked by the capture of Granada in 1492 by the Catholic Monarchs Ferdinand II of Aragon and Isabella I of Castile. This victory ended Muslim rule in Iberia and symbolized the completion of the Christian reconquest. The subsequent Treaty of Granada initially guaranteed the religious and cultural rights of the Muslim population. Still, these promises were soon violated, leading to forced conversions, expulsions, and the establishment of the Spanish Inquisition.

14.6.2 Long-term Impacts

The legacy of the Reconquista extends beyond the medieval period. It shaped the national identities of Spain and Portugal, influencing their expansionist policies in the New World. The religious and cultural homogenization policies set precedents for future European colonial endeavors. The narrative of the Reconquista continues to influence contemporary political and cultural discourses in Spain and beyond.

Chapter 15

The Name Desclergue: A Socio-Historical and Genealogical Study

Figure 15.1: A historical scene in Spain around 700 AD during the period of Moorish control. The image features a scribe, a Jewish scholar, and a Muslim scholar. Lacking actual paintings of such scenes, this image was made with AI (DALL·E 2024-05-22 19.33.58)

In Chapter 12.8 and Chapter 14, a transition has already been mentioned from Clericus or Clergue to Hakim or Hakim. Here, a more profound analysis is provided.

In exploring and delineating one's ancestry, it is imperative to establish a clear understanding of the concept of ancestry itself. From a strictly biological standpoint, ancestry is characterized by the genetic transmission from an egg cell and a sperm cell, leading to the emergence of offspring. This biological framework serves as the basis for the examination conducted within this scholarly work. However, it is essential to acknowledge the existence of alternative conceptions of ancestry, often entailing a fusion of biological and socio-cultural elements. For instance, ancestral lineage can be traced by perpetuating a family name, which may not necessarily adhere strictly to a patrilineal lineage. Instances abound where family names are passed down through maternal lines or adopted via lordships, where the name's bearer may not always be the biological progenitor.

Within the context of our lineage, substantial evidence suggests a biological descent tracing patrilineally from Bertrand Du Guesclin, who descended from Hakim, who was a Desclergue, as further outlined in Chapter 19.11. Nevertheless, the trajectory of our familial nomenclature has undergone several alterations across generations, transitioning from Clericus to Clergue and Hakim and then to Desclergue and Du Guesclin (and its various iterations, such as De Glerquin, described in Chapters 19.26.4 and 75) to Torró in the 14th century, Desclergue in the 15th century, and Declercq in the 17th century. The transition from Torró to Desclergue in the 15th century notably precipitated the designation of our House in Montblanc as 'Desclergue.' However, it is crucial to recognize that the etymology of this family name has its roots in maternal inheritance despite the patrilineal bloodline of Du Guesclin from Hakim-Clergue. Thus, our lineage denoted by the name Desclergue unfolds as a two millennium-spanning narrative spanning from Montblanc through Barcelona and Mallorca to the Languedoc region in the County of Toulouse, particularly the city of Albi and to Islamic Spain, Roman and Greek Epuries.

The surname Desclergue[1] is deeply embedded in the historical landscape of the Languedoc region of France, tracing back to the flourishing House of Clergue during the early Middle Ages. The evolution of this name from Clergue reflects a linguistic shift and a socioeconomic transformation within medieval society. Originating from Languedoc, the surname Clergue is distinct from typical toponymic or patronymic names. Its etymology is tied to the ancient profession of the escribano, shown in Figure 12.1, predating the formal establishment of notaries. An escribano was a learned individual who was well-versed in legal matters, adept at writing, and knowledgeable in scholastic studies. These individuals, often prominent in towns and cities, wielded influence and amassed wealth through their expertise. Unlike the later connotations of the term 'clergy,' the Clergues were not ecclesiastical figures but esteemed members of the burgeoning bourgeoisie.

---

[1] Lope Garcia de Salazar, 'Origen de 300 Apellidos Castellanos y Vascongados; Estudio al que preceden algunos comentarios al libro titulado 'Bienandanzas e Fortunas' , Tip. de Emeterio Verdes Correo, num 9, Bilbao, Año 1916, pages 23-24

As the Clergue family history unfolded, their status as escribanos granted them financial prosperity and societal esteem. In medieval society, they occupied a position of honor within the bourgeoisie, a class characterized by commercial activity and civic engagement. However, their aspirations transcended mere bourgeois status; they sought entry into the ranks of the nobility, driven by a desire for further recognition and prestige.

The path to nobility for the Clergues was paved through strategic alliances forged by marriage. The customary arrangement often involved a symbiotic exchange: one party brought wealth and financial resources, while the other contributed their noble lineage. Through such unions, the Clergues navigated the intricate web of medieval social hierarchy, ascending to the ranks of the nobility. Attainment of noble status heralded a transformation in social standing and a consolidation of power and influence. The newfound prestige elevated the Clergues and their descendants to prominent positions within their communities. Their wealth and noble pedigree secured their place among the elite, ensuring a legacy of privilege and distinction for generations to come.

The journey from escribano to noble exemplifies medieval Europe's dynamic interplay between socioeconomic forces and familial aspirations. The evolution of the Clergue name from its humble origins to a symbol of aristocratic privilege underscores the fluidity of social mobility and the enduring allure of nobility in the medieval imagination. Through strategic alliances and wealth accumulation, the Clergues transcended their bourgeois roots, carving out a place of prominence within the annals of history.

Before the arrival of the Moors on the Iberian Peninsula, Catalonia, along with much of what is now Spain, was part of the Visigothic Kingdom. The Visigoths were a Germanic tribe that invaded the Iberian Peninsula in the 5th century AD and established their kingdom there. Catalonia was not explicitly delineated as a distinct political entity during this time. Instead, it was part of the broader territory ruled by the Visigothic kings. The Visigothic Kingdom's capital was initially located in Toulouse, in what is now southern France, but it was later moved to Toledo in Spain. A consequence of this fact is that it is inevitable that there must have been members of the Clergue family in Catalonia before the Moors arrived, just as there were members of that family in Toulouse and other parts of Occitania.

The Hebrew word for Clergue, in its meaning before it was used for religious clergymen, is Hakham, which essentially means 'wise.' In Arabic, it is Hakim. When the Moors conquered the Iberian Peninsula in the early 8th century, diverse populations already inhabited the region, including Visigoths, Hispano-Romans, Jews, and various indigenous groups. Hakim was a title in the Western Caliphate judicial system, comparable to Clergue or a Juror. This was similar to the role held by Raymond Desclergue and Francesc Desclergue in Mallorca in the 13th century and resembles the positions held by later Desclergues. The Caliph administered justice in person, but as a rule, the cadis exercised this function in small villages by hakims. At their head stood the qadi of the qadis, established at Cordova. A special judge, the Sahib-ash-shura or Sahib-al-madina, heard criminal and police cases under a procedure simpler than the qadi. The zabalaquen or hakim carried out the sentences of the qadi.

Christian Müller[2] states that Hakim is a judicial magistrate and the title is also used to denote a judge who is not a qadi. In other words, Hakim overlaps significantly with the positions of Clergue before the term was used for religious clergypersons, i.e., jurors, judicial magistrates, and notaries. In modern-day Turkish, Hakim is also a judge.

Jean-Pierre Van Staëvel published a study[3] on the judiciary system of Al-Andalus and discovered, too, the relevance of Hakim in Moorish Spain. He writes that they served as justice auxiliaries, instrumental witnesses, notaries, or experts and constituted judicial personnel such as notaries. Their role was influential in the mediation of law and judgment. Van Staëvel confirms that there were secondary magistrates, ākim, or āib al-akām, subordinate to the qadis in large towns.

The arrival of the Moors marked a significant shift in the socio-political landscape of Iberia, leading to complex interactions and transformations among the existing populations. One of the primary effects of the Moorish conquest was the gradual Islamization of the Iberian Peninsula. While some indigenous peoples and rulers embraced Islam voluntarily, motivated by economic, social, or political factors, others continued to practice their existing religions, including Christianity and Judaism. Conversion to Islam was not universally enforced, and different regions experienced varying religious tolerance under Moorish rule. Those who converted to Islam and those who allied with the Moors often adopted Arabic names and cultural practices. This phenomenon was particularly prominent among the urban elite and administrative class, who sought to integrate themselves into the new ruling structures established by the Moors. However, many aspects of pre-existing cultures and identities persisted alongside Islamic influences, contributing to the rich culture of al-Andalus, the Islamic territory in Iberia.

Communities of Christians and Jews, known as Mozarabs and Sephardic Jews, respectively, continued to exist under Moorish rule, albeit subject to specific social and legal restrictions. These communities often maintained religious and cultural practices while adapting to al-Andalus's evolving political and social dynamics. Following the Moorish conquest of the Iberian Peninsula in the 8th century, the fate of clerics, administrators, scribes, and governors who already resided in Iberia varied depending on various factors, including their religious affiliation, social status, and regional circumstances. The Moorish rulers established a new administrative system in al-Andalus, drawing upon existing administrative structures while introducing Islamic institutions and practices. A scene involving a scriber in Muslim Spain is shown in Figure 15.1.

For many clerics, administrators, and scribes who were Christians or adherents of other religions, the transition to Moorish rule necessitated adaptation to the new political and cultural realities, such as adopting a new name to better fit into the new tradition. Some individuals could retain their positions within the administrative apparatus, notably if they demonstrated loyalty to the new rulers or possessed valuable skills and expertise. In some instances, Christian clerics and administrators continued to serve under Moorish governors, albeit subject to the authority of Islamic law and governance. People identified as Clergue would, under Arabic rule, become Hakim, an expression with several meanings, such as wise man, governor, ruler, prefect, judge, magistrate, administrative, or master. Hakim is also used in Arabic to refer to the alderman, constable, sultan, or province governor.

Arabic names were changed according to local interpretation in parts of Europe that were not under Islamic rule. Famous examples are Avicenna for Ibn Sina, or Saladin for Salah ad-Din Yusuf ibn Ayyub. Another word that serves as a good example is Imam, often appearing as Inam in Western literature and chronicles. The alteration of m into n in that process is not unique. Other examples include Ibn al-Haytham, which was transformed into Alhazen. The name Hakim often appears in Western historical texts as Hakin due to transliteration differences and variations in spelling conventions over time. For instance, Ibn Sina often appears as Avicenna al-Haki and Avicenna al-Hakin. Another example is Al-Hakim bi-Amr Allah, who often appears as Al-Hakin bi-Amr Allah, or Hakim ibn Hizam, who appears as Hakin ibn Hizam.

---

[2] Christian Müller. Administrative tradition and civil jurisdiction of the Cordobán āib al-akām (I). Al-Qanara : revista de estudios árabes , 2000, 21 (1), pp.57-84. ff10.3989/alqantara.2000.v21.i1.403ff. ffhalshs-04144926f

[3] p. 47-80, in Staëvel, Jean-Pierre Van. "Institution judiciaire et production de la norme en al-Andalus aux ixe et xe siècles." Regards sur al-Andalus (VIIIe- XVe siècle), édité par François Géal, Casa de Velázquez, 2006.1483. The chapter is part of Géal, François, éditeur. Regards sur al-Andalus (VIIIe-XVe siècle). Casa de Velázquez, Éditions Rue d'Ulm, 2006.

The case of Hakim appearing as Hakin is essential in the context of Bertrand Du Guesclin, who claimed patrilineal descent from a Mediterranean Aquin. The latter can only have been Hakin or Hakim, Arabic for Clergue. Suppose Bertrand Du Guesclin descends from a Clergue in Spain with the Moorish version of his name Hakim or Hakin. In that case, this theory is consistent with his claim that he descended from an Aquin from the Mediterranean and with the fact that his name in Bretagne and France was sometimes spelled as de Glerquin, De Glerquino, De Guerclin, Du Clerquin, De Clequin, De Clequino, De Glerquin, De Glerquino, du Glearquin, as explained in Chapter 75, and, in Spain, Glesquin, de Glerquin, de Claquin, du Guerclin, du Guerclin, or Claquin, as outlined in Chapter 19.26.4. Literally, Des Clergue is Al-Hakim in Arabic.

Therefore, there may be some ground of truth in the legend that Bertrand Du Guesclin used to claim for his ancestry, outlined in Chapter 19.7, in that his ancestor may have been a certain Aquin, but not a King. If so, then this Hakim or Hakin should have had, given De Guesclin's Y-DNA, a Desclergue as an ancestor, dating back from the time before the Arabic invasion of Iberia and the same clan as our Desclergue ancestors in Occitania, outlined in Part V.

Chapter 16

The Powerful Clergues Clan in Occitania

16.1 Introduction

The Desclergues trace their origins to Empuries during Greek and Roman times. Throughout the turbulent periods marked by conflicts with the Visigoths, the establishment of Byzantine rule in southern Spain and Mallorca, described in Chapter 11, subsequent Arab conflicts and rule, outlined in Chapter 12, and finally, the arrival of the Franks with the formation of the Spanish March, described in Chapter 13, and the steady Reconquista, explained in Chapter 18, progressing southwards from Barcelona, the Desclergues dispersed across what is now Catalonia and Occitania. In Catalonia, under Arab rule, they would have been known as 'Hakim' or 'Hakin,' while those in Catholic regions such as Occitania were called Clergue. Apart from the lineage detailed in Part VI, our ancestors were based in Albi, with clan members also located in nearby areas, such as Castres. From Albi, they participated in the Reconquista of Nova Catalunya and the Conquest of Mallorca, described in Chapter 18.

The Desclergues were notaries and bankers in Catalonia and Occitania. Finding out who was precisely related to whom and how was impossible. We can, however, be sure that the clans are connected and, therefore, to us.

Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal informed the author that the clans in Occitania must have been linked a long time ago to the Desclergues in Catalonia. Indeed, in the Albiguense period, or the Crusade against the Cathars in the Languedoc region, some nobles called 'nobles des Clergue.' The use of 'des' as an article in family names, such as Despujol or Despuig, occurred in some surnames in the Catalano-Occitan language spoken in that area closest to Montpellier. The Clergue family was very noble in Languedoc and involved in the conflict of the Albigensian Crusade in the 12th century.

According to Cortés Rosal, the etymology of our last name is very interesting. The name evolved from cultured Latin to vulgar Latin and from there to Occitan and ancient Catalan like 'Clerc' to 'Clergue.' It denoted someone important in the early Middle Ages dedicated to the profession of law and writing, someone scholarly in academic studies, and someone who could write. The scribes and then the clerks were very cultured people.

Cortés Rosal believes that the family name Desclergue originates from the French side of the Pyrenees because, on the other side, most, if not all, were Arab in the twelfth century.

Indeed, in Chapter 15, we explained carefully how the name originates from early scribers, who, in the Arab region were called 'Hakim' or 'Hakin.' At the same time, in Catholic areas, they were 'Clergue' or 'Clericus.' Both names were equivalent.

16.2 Cathars

Catharism, a medieval Christian dualist movement that emerged in the Languedoc region of France in the 12th century, is often viewed through various lenses, and perspectives on what is considered noble or admirable can vary. Cathars emphasized spiritual purity and asceticism. They rejected materialism and sought simple lives dedicated to spiritual growth and moral integrity. This commitment to purity and simplicity can be seen as noble.

Cathars adhered to a strict doctrine of non-violence, refraining from participation in warfare or violence of any kind. Their commitment to peace and pacifism is admirable in a medieval context marked by frequent warfare and bloodshed.

Catharism was relatively progressive in its view of gender roles compared to the broader medieval society. Women could hold positions of authority within the movement, such as being Perfects (the highest rank of Cathar clergy), which was rare in medieval Christianity.

Catharism was known for its intellectual rigor and theological sophistication. Cathar Perfects engaged in debates with Catholic theologians, showcasing a commitment to reasoned discourse and theological inquiry.

Cathars opposed the wealth and corruption of the Catholic Church, criticizing its hierarchy and sacraments. Their rejection of the Church hierarchy's luxury and emphasis on personal spirituality over institutional authority resonated with some individuals

Figure 16.1: A depiction of a Cathar gathering, created using AI (DALL·E, 2024-05-24 11:24:42) Cathar masses, known as "consolamentum" ceremonies, were likely characterized by their simplicity and spiritual focus. Held in modest settings, such as private homes or secluded locations, these gatherings lacked elaborate rituals and opulent decorations typical of Roman Catholic services. The central element was the laying on hands by the "Perfects" (spiritual leaders), symbolizing the Holy Spirit's descent and the recipient's purification and entry into a state of spiritual purity. Prayers, readings from sacred texts, and hymns emphasized themes of dualism, the rejection of materialism, and the aspiration for a pure, ascetic life. The ceremony fostered a sense of community and spiritual solidarity among the participants.

Figure 16.2: The Château de Linardié is a castle located in Senouillac, in Tarn (France) and is the historic home of the de Clergue family.

Figure 16.3: Carcassonne, 2022. Carcassonne, a UNESCO World Heritage site, is a fortified medieval city in southern France's Aude department of the Occitanie region. Nestled strategically between the Atlantic Ocean and the Mediterranean Sea, Carcassonne's origins date back to the Gallo-Roman period, with its impressive fortifications constructed mainly during the 12th century. This historic citadel was crucial in the Albigensian Crusades, a 13th-century campaign to eliminate the Cathar heresy in Occitania. Carcassonne's double-walled fortifications and 52 towers are a testament to medieval military architecture. Today, Carcassonne is celebrated for its historical significance and its picturesque beauty, drawing visitors from around the world to explore its ancient ramparts and cobblestone streets. (Declercq de Silva Archive) seeking a more authentic religious experience.

However, it's important to note that Catharism was also viewed unfavorably by many contemporary authorities, particularly the Catholic Church, which condemned it as heretical. Some critics argue that Catharism's strict dualism and rejection of vital Christian sacraments, such as baptism and the Eucharist, were seen as problematic and misguided. Additionally, historical records suggest that Cathars faced persecution, including violent suppression by the Catholic Church and secular authorities.

In modern times, perspectives on Catharism can vary widely, with some viewing it as a courageous and noble expression of spiritual dissent and others critiquing its theological positions and the social consequences of its beliefs.

The main difference between Catharism and the belief of the Catholic Church lies in their theological doctrines, particularly regarding the nature of good and evil, the material world, and the role of the Church and sacraments. The primary theological difference that sets Catharism apart from Catholicism is its dualistic worldview.

Catharism embraced a dualistic cosmology, believing in the existence of two opposing forces: the spiritual realm of reasonable, associated with God, and the material realm of evil, associated with Satan. This dualism led Cathars to reject the material world as inherently corrupt and evil, viewing it as Satan's creation. They believed life's goal was to transcend the material world and attain spiritual purity.

In contrast, the Catholic Church espouses a monotheistic worldview, affirming the existence of one God, the creator of both the spiritual and material realms. While Catholicism acknowledges the presence of evil in the world due to humanity's fall, it does not adhere to a strict dualism that posits an inherent evil in the material world itself. Instead, Catholicism teaches that the material world is fundamentally sound, as God creates it.

This difference is significant because of its theological implications for understanding the nature of reality, humanity, and the divine. The Catholic Church's rejection of dualism allows for a more integrated understanding of existence's spiritual and material aspects, emphasizing the sacramental nature of creation and the potential for redemption within the material world. In contrast, Catharism's dualistic worldview can lead to a more radical rejection of material existence and a focus on spiritual transcendence.

Furthermore, the theological differences between Catharism and Catholicism had significant social and political implications during the medieval period. Catharism's rejection of the authority of the Catholic Church and its sacraments challenged the power and legitimacy of the Church hierarchy, leading to conflict and persecution by ecclesiastical and secular authorities. Thus, the theological differences between Catharism and Catholicism were not only matters of doctrinal dispute but also profoundly affected the balance of power and social order in medieval Europe.

16.3 Our Roots in Albi and Castres, France

Due to the subsequent association with the Roman Catholic Church through their affiliation with the Knights Templar, it is evident that our ancestors were not Cathars. Nonetheless, certain members of their clan were adherents of Catharism. Consequently, there were indeed Desclergues who were Cathars, depicted in Figure 16.1 on page 103, and related to our ancestors, who were devout Roman Catholics. This religious divergence within the Desclergues clan likely created internal tensions. It may have been a significant factor influencing our ancestor, Ramon Desclergue (Raymond Clergue), to align with the King of Aragon in his conquest of Mallorca.

The Cathars, also known as Albigensians, were adherents of a religious movement that emerged in the Languedoc region of southern France during the 12th century. The origins of Catharism are complex and intertwined with various religious and social factors of the time.

The Cathar belief system was rooted in dualism, positing two opposing cosmic principles: one representing good and spiritual purity and the other representing evil and material corruption. Cathars believed that the material world, including the human body, was inherently corrupt and created by the evil principle, while the spiritual realm was pure and divine. This dualistic worldview influenced their rejection of material wealth, hierarchy within the Church, and sacraments such as marriage and baptism.

The spread of Catharism can be attributed to various factors, including disillusionment with the Catholic Church's corruption and wealth, the appeal of a simpler and more ascetic lifestyle, and the influence of earlier dualistic movements like Manichaeism.

Albi and Castres were significant centers of Cathar activity in the Languedoc region. The nobility of these regions, particularly the powerful Counts of Toulouse, were known to be sympathetic to Cathar beliefs, providing protection and support to Cathar communities.

However, the growing influence of Catharism alarmed the Catholic Church, which saw it as a heretical threat to its authority and orthodoxy. In response, Pope Innocent III launched the Albigensian Crusade in 1209, aimed at suppressing Catharism and reclaiming control over the Languedoc region.

The Albigensian Crusade resulted in a brutal and protracted conflict marked by military campaigns, sieges, and massacres. One of the most infamous incidents was the siege of Béziers in 1209, where thousands of inhabitants, both Cathars and Catholics, were slaughtered indiscriminately.

Despite the persecution, Catharism persisted in pockets throughout the region for several decades. However, the Inquisition, established by the Church to root out heresy, intensified its efforts to eradicate Catharism through measures such as mass trials and executions. Facing persecution and death, many Cathars sought refuge in remote mountainous areas and neighboring regions beyond the reach of the Inquisition. Some migrated to regions like Catalonia in Spain, where Cathar sympathizers provided sanctuary. Others fled to areas such as Lombardy in northern Italy, where Cathar communities remained in secrecy for some time.

Ultimately, the Cathar movement gradually dwindled due to a combination of persecution, internal divisions, and assimilation into other religious groups. By the 14th century, Catharism had largely disappeared as an organized religious movement, but its legacy endured in the memories of those who sought spiritual alternatives to mainstream Christianity.

With the name 'Albi' in mind, the name 'Montisalbi,' synonymous with Montblanc, should ring a bell, as introduced in Chapter 5.

16.4 Montaillou

Amidst the zenith of Albi's illustrious Cathar culture, the lineage of the Clergues exhibited a remarkable propensity for dispersal, particularly in times of fervent Cathar persecution. Our progenitors sought sanctuary in the enclaves of Aragon, notably in the resplendent realms of Barcelona and the Balearic Isles. At the same time, parallel branches of our ancestral tree took root in the bastion of Montaillou, where they ascended to eminence as the formidable Clergue dynasty.

A critical book highlighting a Clergue clan in Montaillou is written by Ladurie E. Le Roy.[1] We have taken most of the information below from that reference, in particular, "Chapter III A dominant house: the Clergue family"

The Montaillou community comprised individuals from diverse social and economic backgrounds. Within the village, some households enjoyed relative affluence, like the Benets, the Belots, and the Clergues. Conversely, there were less prosperous households, or those perceived as such, including the Maurys, the Bailles, the Testaniéres, the Pellissiers, and certain Martys. Families with lower incomes probably constituted a significant minority in the village. Although the absence of land records makes it challenging to provide exact statistics, various sources indicate a substantial difference of approximately fifty to one between the most prosperous non-noble astal in the parish, exemplified by the Clergue brothers, and the possessions of a needy individual. Wealthier residents often owned between eight to ten hectares of land and meadows per household, while those with fewer means might possess one or two hectares or even less.

These disparities did not necessarily hinder social interaction but could occasionally create tension, even without overt class conflicts. Distinctions in local wealth manifested in various aspects of life, such as the amount of cash a person had at their disposal—ranging from minor to none. Nevertheless, land ownership and sheep ownership were the primary determinants. Someone who owned a few dozen sheep was considered relatively well-off. However, even at a lower level of prosperity, nearly every family, except the destitute widows, maintained a few ewes, providing a level of security to the household and a basic level of dignity to their domus.

Other significant indicators of economic status included the presence of oxen in the stable, possession of at least one mule or donkey for plowing and transportation purposes, whether there were live-in servants, whether children were apprenticed as shepherds or domestic help, whether the house had multiple floors, the availability of kitchen utensils, and the presence of stocks of hay, grain, and tools. Illegitimate children and those who were not heirs often ended up in roles as servants or shepherds, gradually slipping down the social ladder and eventually leading a less prosperous domus.

The criteria for distinguishing between wealth and poverty in Montaillou were multifaceted and broader in scope than the later contrast between farmers and day laborers in northern France, who were differentiated by their possession of plowing horses. This geographic distinction can be explained by the absence of extensive tenant farming in Montaillou, where sheep-raising is more critical than arable farming. Additionally, plowing was typically conducted using oxen, mules, and donkeys, which were more indicative of farming on a smaller scale.

At the apex of this social and economic hierarchy and the core of the structure known as domus, there resided, akin to a spider within its web, the leading 'ostal' of the Clergue family. In terms of demographics, the Clergue households held sway over the village. According to the available, albeit incomplete, data extracted from the Fournier records, Montaillou counted at least twenty-two individuals bearing the Clergue surname. Following them, there were the Maurs (thirteen), the Martys (eleven), the Bailles, Belots,

---

[1] Le Roy Ladurie E. - Montaillou. Cathars and Catholics in a French Village 1294-1324

Benets, and Azémas (ten each), the Pellissiers (eight), the Rives and the Argelliers (seven), the Authiés and the Forts (six), and the Bars and the Vitals (four). However, in isolation, these statistics fail to convey the complete picture. What contributed to the dominance of a domus were factors such as wealth, influence, and connections formed through patronage and 'friendship.' The Clergue domus possessed all these attributes. While it would be enlightening to explore this domus in detail, we must, for now, rely on a glimpse offered through the eyes of Fabrisse Rives, a wine seller from the village. On a day when she found herself short of measures for dispensing wine, she borrowed one from her neighbors, the Clergues. At the entrance to their ostal, she encountered three elderly local matrons basking in the sun. Mengarde Clergue, the priest's mother, and her two companions, Guillemette Belot and Na Roqua, are all stalwart pillars of Catharism. Fabrisse proceeded inside and ascended to the anteroom (aula) on the first floor above a small partially subterranean shed (sotulum). Later in the day, Fabrisse crossed paths with Pierre Clergue. In his room, she noticed the renowned wine measure on the table and the secretive presence of Guillaume Authié. The Clergue residence, with its anteroom, first floor, entrance, and individual bedrooms, stood as one of the most substantial structures in the village. Ample land holdings accompanied it. Bernard Clergue, the 'bailiff' and brother of the priest, not only cultivated his agricultural land but also managed land confiscated from heretic peasants of Montaillou by the Comte de Foix, which, by extension, fell under the control of the 'bailiff,' who exploited it for profit. Bernard harbored a deep affection for the Pays d'Aillon, the estate he oversaw for the Comte. It was 'his' land, and even while incarcerated by the Inquisition, he would gaze longingly at it from afar as he soaked in the sun atop the Tour des Allemands in Pamiers. On his part, Clergue, the priest, oversaw the land holdings of all his relatives, acting as a proxy for his niece when her husband, Bernard Malet of Prades, purchased land once owned by Raymond Malet, the son-in-law of Raymond Pierre. The Clergue domus also evidently possessed herds of pigs and sheep. Bernard Clergue took measures to protect his garden from damage by his pigs, and during his imprisonment, he gifted three fleeces of wool to Carnot, the prison sergeant, who then catered to Bernard's requests within the prison. The sergeant's wife, Honors entrusted Bernard with the keys to the prisoners' rooms. Beyond simply having financial resources, the Clergues possessed either money or credit. To secure the release of his beloved brother Pierre, the bailiff was willing to expend 14000 sous in bribes to influential individuals. However, wealth was just one facet of their influence. In the case of the Clergue family, although they were peasants by origin, their affluence was accompanied by a degree of power and valuable connections. Bernard Clergue was acquainted with influential figures in the Comte de Foix's court and did not hesitate to employ financial incentives to sway them. The family wielded a threefold influence: within the court of Foix, the regional Church, and the village and its environs. The priest Clergue's influence was recognized as extensive, with Guillaume Maurs stating, "He has great power at the Court of the Comte de Foix and in the Church." There was even a sense of fear that he could wield his influence to have people apprehended and harmed, as articulated by Guillaume Maurs when he said, "One of these days, he can have us taken and destroy us." This fear led some to flee their homeland, seeking refuge elsewhere. Beyond the borders of the Comté de Foix, a region subject to the Kingdom of France, the Clergues' influence extended to Carcassonne, where the Inquisition occasionally sought their assistance and considered their opinions. Bernard Clergue, addressing Bernard Benet, once said, "If you go and confess to the Inquisitor in Carcassonne the misdeeds which I have suggested to you, I will pay the expenses of your journey and get the Inquisitor to annul the sentence which condemned you to wear the yellow crosses." However, these alleged misdeeds were likely fabricated, illustrating the priest's willingness to circumvent Inquisitorial law to protect his parishioners. This dual role allowed him to act as their guardian and a protector of his power. Pierre Maury, a shepherd who had been a fugitive from justice for a considerable period, offered a categorical perspective. However, it's worth noting that Maury might have held leverage over Clergue due to their previous associations with Catharism: "If the priest of Montaillou had wanted to catch me, he would have done so a long time ago!" Maury recounted an encounter with the priest when he came to collect tithes at his father's house. Despite this opportunity, Clergue did not have Maury arrested. Although the Clergues had once been implicated in Catharism, they were part of a domus that possessed significant resources and managed to defy the odds for many years, both for themselves and their associates. Yet, this game was fraught with danger, and ultimately, they faced defeat. The local authority wielded by the Clergue household entailed a multifaceted and ambivalent relationship with the local peasants. At times, the Clergue house asserted its superiority over the rustic domus, eventually leading to a rupture in their connections.

When I fell ill in Varilhes," recounted Béatrice de Planissoles, "the clergyman came to visit me and remarked, 'I've got the people of Montaillou right where I want them, thanks to the Inquisition.' In response, I inquired, 'Why do you persecute the devout Christians when you used to hold them in high regard before?' The clergyman replied, 'I haven't changed. I still hold the devout Christians in high regard. But I seek retribution against the Montaillou peasants who have wronged me, and I will exact revenge in any way I can. After that, I'll settle matters with God.' In Montaillou, the term 'peasant' or 'rustic' was considered an insult, even though farmers and shepherds inhabited the village. When conversing with Béatrice, the clergyman referred to his fellow Montaillou citizens as peasants or rustics, aiming to diminish them and distinguish them from his family. However, this attempt was in vain. The domus of the Clergues was closely linked through family ties and blood relations with other domus in the parish. The Clergues had strong connections through marriage or kinship, and sometimes both, with the Benets, Belots, Rives, Martys, Liziers, and Forts. Additionally, we shouldn't overlook the numerous temporary unions involving the active male members of the Clergue family, with Pierre, the priest, leading in this regard, just as in all other aspects. This was common among all the women in Montaillou, from the poorest to the chatelaines. They all held affection, deloused, and admired the Clergues. These kinship, marriage, or cohabitation bonds provided crucial support or collaboration for the Clergue family, both in their prosperous times and during their decline.

However, these connections didn't preclude later conflicts or intense animosity with certain domus, such as the Benets, even though they were indirectly linked to the Clergues through a chain of marriages. There was also the crucial complicity in heresy. Before his ultimate acts of betrayal motivated by revenge rather than ideological conversion, Pierre Clergue was a staunch advocate of Cathar beliefs, which he shared with members of other influential families. 'If only all the priests in the world were like the priest of Montaillou,' sighed Guillaume Authié in 1301, expressing trust in every member of the Clergue domus. Pierre and Bernard Clergue unquestionably demonstrated their loyalty to the heretics during their turbulent youth, as confirmed by Guillaume Maurs.

One evening in Montaillou, during an episode when the Inquisition was taking drastic actions, the local priest aided two heretics in escaping from the Belot family's residence. These fugitives were directed to find refuge in the wilderness known as A la Cot. In a separate incident, as recounted by Alazais Fauré, Pierre Clergue stood guard at a location called la Paredeta to ensure the safety of a delicate situation while Prades Tavernier, disguised as a traveling merchant dealing in leather and wool, provided solace to a dying Montaillou resident. Alazais Azéma brought attention to Bernard Clergue's previous associations, highlighting how Bernard collected grain as tithes and discreetly placed a portion on the low roof of Raymond Belot's house, instructing Raymond to deliver it to the heretics. The Clergue family's influence in Montaillou rested on four pillars: wealth, familial connections, heretical beliefs, and power. This influence was deeply embedded in the local institutions.

Pierre Clergue held the position of the village priest, although his numerous extracurricular activities sometimes hindered his fulfillment of religious duties. He divided his time and attention between mistresses and his pastoral responsibilities. Nevertheless, superficially, Pierre appeared to be a conscientious priest, regularly hearing confessions, celebrating mass on Sundays and feast days (even while in mortal sin), attending diocesan gatherings, and collecting tithes. He also distinguished himself as one of the few educated individuals in the village, possessing a rare collection of books. Notably, he had access to the Cathar calendar, which blended folklore and liturgy, loaned to him by the Authié brothers. Pierre occasionally acted as a notary, overseeing essential documents related to his friend Béatrice's dowry. Moreover, he served as an official representative of the Carcassonne Inquisition, using this position for protection and oppression. Local opinions about Pierre were mixed; after many years, Béatrice remembered him as a competent and good-hearted man, sentiments shared by many in the region.

In Montaillou, the Clergue family, particularly Pierre and Bernard, wielded spiritual and temporal authority. Pierre served as the priest, while Bernard acted as the bailiff. Working together, they collected tithes on different occasions. Bernard also functioned as a magistrate and collected dues for the Count, who held significant political power in the village. In his de facto role as the Inquisition's bailiff, Pierre collaborated with his brother Bernard, who served as the local Justice of the Peace and police commissioner for the Count. Bernard apprehended individuals accused of heresy and, when necessary, confiscated their livestock. The Clergue brothers frequently combined their efforts, leveraging feudal and manorial authority. For example, Raymond Clergue, alongside Jacques Alsen, the vice-chastelain of Montaillou, pursued Guillaume Maurs, once a personal adversary and now a family foe, through the Pedorres Pass in the Pyrenees at Puymorens. Regrettably, their mission proved unsuccessful, encountering only the outlawed shepherd Pierre Maury, whom they allowed to escape after obtaining some provisions from him.

During the significant Inquisition roundup in August 1308, Pierre Clergue confined all parishioners over twelve or thirteen within the chateau of Montaillou. Some of these individuals were later released, following a selective process of liberation. Within his parish, Pierre was referred to as 'the castle's man,' a position he exploited for personal gain until a twist of fate led to an illicit relationship with the chatelaine (or former chatelaine). The Clergues and their rivals in the village took turns wielding local offices, such as seigneur, bailiff, and chatelain, at the peasant level, all to control these positions for their objectives. After 1320, as the influence of the Clergue family began to decline, their adversaries, including Pierre Azéma of Montaillou (cousin of Bishop Fournier), Raymond Triahl (vicar of Montaillou and Prades), and Bernard Marty (consul of Montaillou), used the secular arm of the local castellani against the Clergues and their associates. For instance, Pierre Azéma, a humble peasant, ordered the lieutenant of the Count de Foix's chatelain to imprison Bernard Benet, a temporary and unwitting accomplice of the Clergues, in the chateau's dungeons without seeking permission. Pierre Azéma also directed the confiscation of Benet's livestock, placing them in the Count's custody. These specific events exemplify the intricate dynamics of the village far more effectively than any theoretical charter.

This marks the solitary instance in the Foumier Register where a consul in Montaillou is mentioned. Subsequently, Montaillou had consuls, who were ostensibly appointed through a free election by the municipal assembly of family heads. However, their role in Montaillou's 'group struggle,' rather than a 'class struggle,' was relatively minor. For the various rural factions involved, including the Clergue 'domus,' the primary objective was not so much to resist oppression from the seigneurie and castellani but rather to assert control (sometimes alternately) over the local authorities of the seigneurie, 'bailie,' and castellani to suppress rival clans. Consequently, the authority of these institutions was less perceived as a result of their oppression and more as a means through which competing interests sought to exert influence.

Having provided an overview of the Clergue house and its place in the domus system in Montaillou, we must now introduce its members. Firstly, there's a question of titles and leadership. After the patriarch Pons' passing, Alazais Azéma referred to the Clergue domus as the house of Pons Clergue's sons. Fabrisse Rives, the wine-seller, mentioned the priest's house and his brothers' residence. Alazais Fauré, sister of Guilhabert the heretic, called it Bernard Clergue's house. Raymonde Arsen, who served the Belots and is a valuable source of information, used both expressions interchangeably: the house of Bernard Clergue and his brothers and the people of the priest's house. Theoretically, Pierre and Bernard held equal leadership roles within the Clergue domus, though one was somewhat more prominent. When Pierre Clergue passed away, his brother Bernard, who admired him and acknowledged his superiority, referred to him as 'my God,' 'governor,' and capdelador.

Even with the strong cohesion among members of the Clergue house, they sometimes shared different views or trusted each other completely. Even the patriarch, Pons Clergue, a staunch Cathar, eventually grew concerned about his son Pierre's moral decline and espionage activities. Pierre, the priest, had suggested to Raymond Maury that he should bring back his long-outlawed son, Pierre Maury, to Montaillou for heretical activities and other 'crimes.' Upon learning this, Pons became furious and he warned Raymond Maury not to trust the treacherous priest. He advised, 'Do not believe a word of that deceitful priest. Tell Pierre Maury, "You are at the Pass of the Seven Brothers, near Montaillou; flee to the Marmara Pass; if you're at the Marmara Pass, continue fleeing to the Pass of Puymorens, where the Pamiers diocese borders end. Do not stay there, but flee even further!"'

Did Pierre Clergue know about this warning? If he did, he showed no ill will. He regarded his father's remains as the repository of the domus fortune, having taken hair and nail clippings from it to preserve the family's well-being. Pierre had a deep attachment, simultaneously Cathar and Catholic, to his mother, Mengarde. When village gossips, including Alazais Azéma, Guillemette Belote, and Alazais Rives, criticized Mengarde after her funeral, claiming she had given birth to a vicious brood and that all her sons were terrible men, Pierre paid them no heed.

He defended his mother, stating to Béatrice, 'My mother was a virtuous woman. Her soul rests in Heaven. She did many good deeds for the "good Christians" and sent parcels of food to the Montaillou heretics imprisoned, such as old Na Roqua and her son Raymond Roques.' Despite his devotion to his Cathar mother's memory, Pierre hedged his bets and had Mengarde buried near the Virgin's altar in Notre Dame de Carnesses, the pilgrim chapel in Montaillou. Pierre Maury found this burial location disgraceful, alluding sympathetically to Mengarde's sinful past. Emersende Marty, another Montaillou heretic, paradoxically commented, 'If the Bishop of Pamiers knew about the priest's worthy mother's past, he would have her remains exhumed and ejected from the church where she lies buried.'

Pierre Clergue was a dutiful son but an unsatisfactory priest. He took pride in having Mengarde buried near the Virgin's altar, but he also told Béatrice, 'Mary is not the mother of God; she is the vessel in which Jesus Christ was 'foreshadowed.'' Pierre remained faithful to his mother's memory, making Raymonde Guilhou his confidante, occasional lover, and regular delouser. Raymonde had been converted to Catharism by Mengarde while she was alive. While the Clergue brothers got along well with their parents, did they maintain unity among themselves despite occasional disagreements? There were sporadic signs of surface tension. When Bernard Clergue wanted to provide grain to the heretics, he concealed it from his brothers or some of the four. However, this was a mere episode and didn't jeopardize the fundamental unity of the domus, preserved by its male members and several loyal relatives, including Bernard Gary of Laroque d'Olmes. This dedicated nephew proved instrumental in assisting the Clergues during the challenging times that accompanied their decline.

The decline occurred after an extended period of dominance. Initially, around the year 1300, Pierre and Bernard Clergue held influential positions as a priest and a bailiff, respectively. They acted as local liaisons for the Authié brothers and, along with the other two Clergue siblings who remained less prominent, they served as the guardians of a village marked by heretical beliefs. Pierre and Bernard, although harboring some sinful inclinations themselves, maintained strong connections with the Catholic Church in the lowlands and skillfully played various sides against each other. Bernard collected tithes from the Church of Rome and discreetly shared a portion with the Cathars, ensuring their activities remained concealed. On the other hand, Pierre secured a prominent social standing in the village through his association with the former chatelaine and his scholarly reputation, fostered by his interactions with the Authié brothers and his role as an educator to a student.

This student, Jean, held Cathar's sympathies, and Clergue employed him to convey affectionate letters and, on occasion, act as an intermediary during his rendezvous with Béatrice de Planissoles. However, the Clergue family's secure dominance was unsustainable in the long run. The Carcassonne Inquisition began scrutinizing Montaillou, forcing the Clergue family to decide whether to renounce heresy or face its consequences. Pierre and Bernard eventually betrayed the Albigensian beliefs they may have only half-heartedly embraced by this point. In such situations, former sect members often perceive them as renegades, while they believe they have seen the light.

Pierre Clergue may have already started informing others as early as 1300. Before his affair with Béatrice concluded, the outspoken Cathar women of Montaillou were already accusing him of destroying the region. In any case, in the first decade of the 14th century, the villagers and the heretical community of Montaillou became aware of the snake in their midst. A new side of Pierre Clergue emerged, painted in detail by the scribes of Pamiers. He appeared as a sophisticated and arrogant man, driven by pride, desire, vengeance, and the characteristic toughness of his region. There are two versions of Pierre Clergue's significant betrayal: his own, which we will explore later, and that of the people he betrayed—some of whom were his friends and family, including the Maurys, Benets, Belots, and even the Maurs. These proud mountain families, now oppressed, unanimously accused the priest and his domus of switching allegiances and becoming instruments of the Inquisitors.

For instance, Guillaume Belot told Raymonde Arsen bluntly during one of their meetings at La Calm: "The people from the priest's household and the priest himself are responsible for many inhabitants of Montaillou being summoned by the Lord Inquisitor of Carcassonne, shown in Figure 16.3 on page 104. It's high time the people from the priest's household faced the same fate as the other Montaillou residents and ex-heretics." Indeed, Clergue, once a Cathar and still partly an Albigensian at heart, did not spare his parishioners. Thanks to the priest's influence, the Maurs, rivals of the Clergues, were either imprisoned or banished to Catalonia. Pons Clergue tried to justify his son's actions by citing the inevitable necessities imposed by cooperation with France. Pierre Clergue behaved like a typical collaborator. Disowned by some of his people, he believed he could mitigate his losses by keeping his friends and clients beyond the reach of the colonizing power and the Carcassonne Inquisition. Within this context, the tragedy of August 1308 unfolded as Clergue stood by as an accomplice while the Inquisition's agents detained his congregation.

All Montaillou residents, males, and females aged twelve or older, were apprehended. This action may have been based on the confessions of Gaillarde Authié, the wife of Guillaume Authié, a heretic who faced questioning by the Inquisition in Lent of 1308. The revelations made by Pierre Authié's nephews, known as the de Rodés, who hailed from Tarascon and included a Dominican in Pamiers, were even more decisive. The roundup itself was highly dramatic. The feared Poloniac oversaw the Carcassonne Inquisition's agents and effortlessly captured all eligible Montaillou inhabitants. Fortunately, Pierre Maury had remained in the Qyériu Pass; a messenger carrying flour informed him of the village's lockdown. A few Montaillou women escaped, taking loaves of bread and posing as agricultural migrants from elsewhere. The fortunate escapees and fugitives settled in Spain's Catalan or Saracen border regions. Temporarily, the village became a haven for children and sheep. The adults and adolescents from Montaillou, initially detained in the chateau, were later transported to the Carcassonne prison. Some faced execution by burning, while others spent a prolonged period, segregated by gender, in communal cells within the prison, where they received food parcels ("victuals") from their families. The rest of the prisoners were released relatively quickly, with the Inquisition allowing them to return to Montaillou. There, they lived under the simultaneously protective and perilous authority of the Clergue family. The village, or what remained of it, reluctantly rallied around its priest, aging amid debauchery and accusations. Yellow crosses marked the scarred village, the symbols former heretics wore.

Pierre Clergue seized this opportunity to settle old scores with his adversaries, particularly the Maurs, who had suffered during the roundup. Mengarde Maurs insinuated that the priest's past might not be devoid of heresy, and we know the consequences she faced. Pierre Clergue's self-perception was somewhat less damning than his victims' image of him. He saw himself not as a renegade but as an avenger of injustices, someone executing his sense of justice.

Around the same time, in 1308 or thereabouts, when Béatrice, twice widowed, fell seriously ill in Varilhes, Pierre, traveling to attend a diocesan council, made a final visit to his former mistress. She remained a dear friend to him. Sitting at her bedside, he inquired about her health and emotional state, held her hand, and stroked her arm. Béatrice confided her fears about their previous heretical discussions, admitting that she had never dared to confess them to a priest. With more courage, she asked Pierre why he was persecuting his former friends, the heretics. In response, as we've seen, he conveyed that he still had goodwill toward the good Christians (the heretics) and that his actions aimed to exact revenge on the Montaillou peasants who had wronged him.

To demonstrate his unwavering commitment to his Cathar beliefs, which had remained intact despite his condemnation in Carcassonne, Pierre reiterated one of the theories he had once shared with his former lover. He stated, "Only God can forgive sins, and there is no need for confession." Eight years prior, when he was still a Cathar without being deeply involved in espionage, he elaborated further: "The only valid confession is the one people make to God; He knows the sin before it is committed, and He can grant forgiveness." A comparison of these two statements reveals that in 1308, Clergue was more than ever acting as a double agent while his true Cathar beliefs persisted. Pierre also aimed to maintain his role as a leader and protector within his network of acquaintances in the village and the surrounding region. Despite the inevitable inconsistencies during these challenging times, his behavior before and after 1308 was consistent. Depending on the circumstances and without expecting anything in return, Pierre shielded specific local individuals from the authorities in Carcassonne. One day, as he basked in the sun at his church's entrance, Fabrisse Rives approached him, divulging the recent sinful activities, or perhaps denouncing them, on her deathbed, concerning Alazais Benet. Pierre reacted angrily, advising Fabrisse to remain silent, asserting, "There are no heretics in these parts, and even if there were, they would be swiftly rooted out."

Despite Fabrisse's revelations, Pierre managed to manipulate the Carcassonne Inquisition by only denouncing personal enemies of his clan, thus keeping them ignorant of Fabrisse Rives' situation, and the idea of summoning her never crossed their minds. After the 1308 crackdown, Pierre Clergue found it increasingly challenging to continue protecting his friends, clients, or acquaintances involved in sinful activities. However, he did not entirely relinquish his protective duties. As we have witnessed, on two occasions, Pierre Clergue and members of his domus aided the outlawed Pierre Maury in evading capture, even providing him with financial support. In 1320, just before his downfall, Clergue, for a fee of two 'silver tournois,' had Guillaume Mondon of Ax rid of his yellow crosses. But even those who appeared to defend the Church but were former heretics in Montaillou were uncovered in 1320 by Jacques Fournier.

The Clergue faction met the same fate as those they had previously reported. Desperate, two rival groups turned against each other, ultimately dividing Montaillou. The Azéma-Guilhabert clan, represented by Alazais Fauré, née Guilhabert, sought to dismantle the Clergue clan. Alazais accused Esclarmonde, Raymond Clergue's wife, of attending the heretical gathering of Guillaume Guilhabert. The Clergues retaliated vigorously, with Pierre, the priest, finally imprisoned by Jacques Fournier, attempting to leverage his remaining influence with the Carcassonne Inquisition. Through his relatives still residing in the village, he tried to coerce Bernard Benet into providing false testimony against the Guilhabert-Azémas.

However, despite the efforts of the priest's family, their endeavors were futile, and it was the turn of the Clergue brothers to languish and perish in captivity. Yet, Pierre Clergue chose to remain silent for reasons unknown to us. This man, who possessed a wealth of information, departed this world without divulging any secrets, or if he did, such revelations were not documented by the scribes. One would like to believe that, rightly or wrongly, he did not betray others, in stark contrast to the numerous unfortunate victims of the Inquisition who did.

This account of the activities of the Clergue clan leads us to contemplate more broadly the nature and exercise of power in Montaillou. Reference to feudalism and the manorial system holds some relevance due to the intricate web of obligations that enveloped the village's microcosm and its inhabitants. However, in Montaillou, power was effectively wielded and transmitted at a level beneath the formal feudal and manorial structures. While official relationships exhibited hierarchy, such as those linking the bailiff as the Comte's representative to the Comte's humble dependents or the connections between the priest and his parishioners, these relationships gained significance from the underlying bonds of friendship, family, patronage, and sometimes even vendetta and enmity. The Clergue domus served as the convergence point for all these interconnections. Although the Clergues lacked noble status and manorial rights, they assumed the roles of both "bailiff" and priest, concurrently occupying positions as friends, lovers, patrons, co-sponsors, and influential kin to many village residents. Their status was above nobility because they had purple blood. Simultaneously, they played the roles of oppressors and adversaries to another segment of the population.

For an extended period, Bernard Clergue and, more prominently, his brother Pierre governed Montaillou through alliances forged by blood or marriage. However, as Montaillou became the target of persecution, power gradually waned as it also became corrupt. The local adversaries of the Clergue clan, long suppressed, eventually gained the upper hand. During his influential period, the priest established a veritable network of friends, family, co-sponsors, and mistresses across his parish, encompassing the entire Pays d'Aillon and Sabarthés regions. When bribed, the priest would secure exemptions from the requirement to wear the yellow cross for former heretics. Alternatively, he might coerce a woman by saying, "Either you have an intimate relationship with me, or I will ensure that you are reported to the Inquisition in Carcassonne."

The Clergues, acting as intermediaries between village society and the larger surrounding society, depended on higher-level intermediaries and protectors who possessed access to the highest authorities in the region, including the court of Foix, the diocese, and the Inquisition. While we are aware of only a few of these upper-level intermediaries, most of them, although not all, were local nobles, priests, manorial magistrates, or prévôts. Bernard Clergue attempted unsuccessfully to activate this protection network through bribery when his brother, the priest, was imprisoned. Similar means secured Pierre Maury's acquittal. Throughout Occitania, groups consisting of priests, bailiffs, minor local nobility, prosperous peasants, and friends of friends endeavored, sometimes successfully, to counter the Inquisition and the oppressive forces of the French state and the Church.

Nevertheless, their successes were only partial, as profound tensions existed between the system based on friendship, marriage, and patronage that prevailed in the village of Montaillou and the system rooted in political authority and ecclesiastical oppression emanating from the surrounding society. A significant discrepancy existed between the values held by the Cathars and the peasants and those of the Catholics and the urban population. Additionally, the geographical proximity of Carcassonne and Pamiers to Montaillou and Sabarthes heightened the risk of conflict.

Montaillou, which was far from a monolithic entity, had to utilize all its resources of secrecy and ingenuity to deflect external threats. Ultimately, the convergence of two divergent systems led to their breakdown.

16.5 Cortés Rosal's Reflections

And about the etymology of the surname that comes from clerics or doctors with academic studies and scribes (notaries). This noble and ancient Clergue family from Languedoc was always dedicated to notary writing and was rich in land.

According to Cortés Rosal, The Maison des Clergue in the Frankish county of Montpellier is very interesting because they wanted to erase it from history due to the issue of the Albigensians, Cathars, and then the Order of the Hospital of Jerusalem and the Templars. This family acts in the 12th century and 13th century in all these conspiracies. Cortés Rosal imagines that the Desclergue family would be unique in the region of Montblanc in Catalonia. Everyone in that century must have been cousins. The Clergue of the area of Gascon Occitania and Catalan Occitania were nobles. All the affluent families, those in power, and those with doctors of academic studies, such as scribes, also called notaries, were noble. The Occitan, Gascon, or Aquitaine nobility was of exceptional blood. The origin of its nobles and counts has been hidden and tried to be erased. These Clergue from the Occitan village of Montaillou were a branch of the Clergue stem family of Languedoc.

Obviously, there were more branches in other parts of Occitania. The Occitan lineages frequently crossed the Pyrenees or the Hispanic March towards Navarre, Aragon, or Catalan counties due to dissensions or divisions or family conflicts; due to political conflicts, for services to any County House, or to serve in the Christian Cause against the Arabs. They continually changed their coats of arms, also called signs of lineage. However, on many occasions, they preserved something of the coat of arms or related derivations, colors, metals, pieces, etc. The heraldic relationship between pieces and exact colors is fascinating: blue or azure and gold. A heraldic exercise is shown in Figure 17.9

16.6 Château de Linardié

Other traces of the Clergues are, for instance, found in Linardiés. The Château de Linardié, shown in Figure 16.2 on page 104, is a fortress in Senouillac, located within the Tarn region of France. Its origins trace back to the 15th century, making it a cherished historical residence for the de Clergue family. Between 1996 and 2006, it became a hub for contemporary art exhibitions before eventually falling into abandonment. The tale of the Linardié castle unfolds in the annals of history, with its first mention dating back to the 15th century, documented in a court record. It was under the ownership of the noble Clergue family during this period, with Manaud de Clergue notably serving as the lord of Linardié. Generations of Clergue descendants continued to steward the property, as evidenced by records dating back to 1672, which cited François de Clergue as the possessor of the "castle, garden, meadows, land, woods, vineyard, stable, dovecote, farmyard, soil, and pasture" in Linardié, along with a house in the nearby hamlet.

The castle's connection to the Clergue family dates to 1400, firmly establishing their nobility. The family held legal rights and levied taxes, such as the pesade tax on livestock. During the tumultuous era of the Wars of Religion, Linardié did not escape the regional turmoil. Two figures, Georges de Clergue, and Captain Jean de Linardie, are often intertwined in historical accounts. It's essential to clarify a recurring misconception: the name of the Linardié lords has occasionally been erroneously linked to the defense of the Protestant faction. The confusion arises from another family with the same name who fought for the Huguenots. Conversely, the lords of Linardié staunchly supported the Catholic cause during the conflict that raged in Senouillac. In 1587, the lord of Linardié negotiated on behalf of the bishop of Albi with the inhabitants of Campagnac, promising them peace and security.

Captain de Clergue did not oversee the strongholds from the castle of Linardié but rather from the tower of La Bonnette. This tower briefly fell into the hands of the Protestants in 1575 but was swiftly reclaimed, thanks to its strategic location, which spared it from reprisals. Despite the tumultuous religious and political landscape, the de Clergue family persisted in Linardié. The final lord of Linardié, Jean-Felix de Clergue, passed away towards the end of 1789. His brother, Joseph de Clergue de Durefort, faced arrest in Albi in 1793 but was soon released due to his advanced age. The castle changed hands at this juncture, becoming the property of the Rességuier family. In 1823, Félix-Joseph-François de Rességuier, in possession of the estate through inheritance from his maternal grandmother, Marie-Anne de Clergue, concluded a sale of the Château de Linardié to Abraham Mercadier, a merchant in Senouillac. This transaction marked the end of ten generations of the de Clergue family's custodianship of Linardié.

16.7 Béatrice de Planisolles

The Cluergues family from the Occitania region also appears in the narrative of Béatrice de Planisolles. Béatrice de Planisolles, who was born in 1274 in Caussou and passed away in Varilhes, Ariège, was the chatelaine of Montaillou. She faced accusations of witchcraft and heresy by the inquisitor Jacques Fournier due to her connections with the Clergue family and Catharism. Her case is frequently cited among the entries in Fournier's inquisition register.

Béatrice's journey began when she married her first husband, Bérenger de Roquefort, around 1291. At approximately 17 years old, she assumed the role of chatelaine of Montaillou in the Aillou region. Records indicate that Guillaume Authier d'Ax, a notary and future Perfect, attended their wedding. The Authier family played a pivotal role in the revival of the Cathar faith during the 1290s, being part of the "ric borzes" (wealthy bourgeoisie) mentioned by Guillaume de Tudèle in his song "Cançon de la Crosada" ("Song of the Crusade"). This song suggested that their association with heresy would lead to them losing their wealth. In 1294, Béatrice had two children and was expecting a third. During this period, she endured unwelcome advances from her husband's steward, Raymond Roussel. He attempted to persuade her to accompany him to Lombardy, where Cathars still practiced, but she declined. Subsequently, in January or February 1297, she was sexually assaulted by Pathau Clergue, who publicly claimed her as his mistress in February 1297 following the death of Berenger de Roquefort.

Béatrice then entered into a two-year affair with the priest Pierre Clergue, who happened to be the cousin of Pathau Clergue. She later married her second husband, Othon de Lagleize, adopting the name Béatrice de Lagleize. After Othon's passing, she engaged in a romantic liaison with the teacher of her daughters, another priest named Bartholomew Amilhac.

In Languedoc, she continued to be known as Béatrice de Planisoles. On Saturday, July 26, 1320, she faced accusations of heresy, witchcraft, and blasphemy before inquisitor Jacques Fournier. Interestingly, Fournier questioned her without requiring her to take an oath initially. He showed significant interest in the Clergues de Montaillou. This family had played a pivotal role in the Cathar resurgence a quarter of a century earlier, although they managed to evade capture due to their influence in the region. The Cathar heresy had been effectively suppressed in Sabartès by the inquisitor Geoffroy d'Ablis since 1303, later joined by Bernard Gui in 1307. However, a few heretics persisted in Catalonia.

Following her leadership of the remaining Cathar resistance fighters in Catalonia, Arnaud Sicre offered to deliver the most influential Perfect in the region to the bishop.

16.8 Lord of Guimerie

We also find the Clergues in Henri Graule[2] writes the following statements.

"Out of five daughters that Pierre de Lescure had, three had embraced the religious state; among the three boys. Gabriel, the youngest of the family, also followed the voice of God, who called him to the ecclesiastical state. The Lord of Guimerie, Pierre de Clergue, a neighbor of the lords of Lescure, wanted to join this illustrious family and married Anne de Lescure, the seventh child of Pierre and Marie Rabastens."

"Around 492, John had inherited from his great-uncle William of Lescure. This one, to maintain a high reputation of the barony, had left to his great-nephew the greatest portion of his property. With the considerable fortune he owned, Jean compromised by deeds of August 47 and February 22, 1512, with his uncles and aunts, Gabriel de Lescure, Anne de Lescure, widow of Pierre de Clergue, lord of the Guimerie, and Jeanne de Lescure, also widow of Jean de Lemozy, concerning their legitimate rights."

Interestingly, though probably a coincidence, there was also a connection between a Clergue and a Du Puich in Occitane, just like in the 17th century we found a connection between a Du Puich and a Desclergue in Harelbeke. It concerns a testament that reads as follows:

1491-1519 Lausime by Alexis Dupuy, lord of Cabrilles and Montcuquet — Sale of censives by Isarn de Quercy to Jean Desmonts, of the castle of Labessière-de-Burens. — Lausimes by noble and venerable Jean de Voisins, priest, as rector of the church of Mont-lausine, castle of Lautrec. — Acts relating to the guardianship of noble Jean de Capriol, son and universal heir of Guillaume de Capriol, bachelor in both rights, by Guillaume de Lafont, de Fenayrols, administrator of the property of the said minor. — Lausimes by Isarn Cavayer, merchant in Lautrec, — by Fortanier de Solomiac, bourgeois of the said Lautrec, — and by Antoine de Villespassans, lord of Saint-Amancet and the castle of Laboulbène, represented by Pierre de Villespassans, monk of Saint-Benoît de Castres. — Testament of noble Catherine Clergue, widow of Pierre Dupuy, buried in the Saint-Pierre chapel of the church of the Minor Brothers of Lautrec, near her husband. She made her son Alexis universal heir. His daughters Sabine Dupuy (Puega), wife of Guillaume de Solomiac, and Jeanne, wife of nobleman Pierre d'Hugues, of Castres, are named in this will, as well as Pierre de Clergue (Clerici), brother of the testatrix. Physical description: (Register.) — In-folio, 271 leaves, paper.

---

[2] Henri Graule, "Histoire de Lescure; ancien fief immédiat du Saint-Siège et de ses seigneurs," Paris, Têqui, 1895.

Part V

The Desclergues' Return to Spain

Chapter 17

Historical Events Marking this Period

Figure 17.1: The Virgin of the Consellers, by Lluis Dalmau (around 1444), oil on oak, Museo Nacional d' art de Catalunya, Barcelona. ⓢ

17.1 Purpura de la Patria

The Purpura de la Patria stand out as a distinct class of individuals, occupying a position of prominence within the societal hierarchy. Originating from the Latin term purpura, meaning purple, these individuals were vested with the authority to wield the quill, serving as scribes, notaries, and officials in the administrative machinery of the era. Their designation as Purpura de la Patria denotes their dual role as both guardians of the homeland and custodians of legal and bureaucratic affairs.

In ancient European history, the roots of the nobility class of Purpura de la Patria, found in Chapter 11 and illustrated in Figure 11.1 on page 87, surpassed all others in prestige and influence. Their origins could be traced back to the opulent courts of the Byzantine Empire, where the purple dye adorning the robes of emperors symbolized not only imperial power but also aristocratic lineage of the highest order.

These noble families, descended from ancient Roman patricians, Germanic chieftains, or Frankish royalty, were the custodians of tradition and the guardians of ancestral estates. Their genealogies intertwined with those of kings and queens, granting them a divine legitimacy and a sense of ancestral pride that permeated every aspect of their existence.

At the heart of their identity lay a myriad of privileges and responsibilities. Their exclusive access to land, wealth, and resources ensured their economic dominance, while feudal obligations such as military service and the administration of justice within their domains solidified their position atop the feudal hierarchy.

Yet, alongside their privileges came weighty burdens. As stewards of their ancestral lands, they were tasked with upholding law and order, fostering economic prosperity, and defending their territories from external threats. Their role extended beyond governance to encompass cultural patronage, religious piety, and diplomatic endeavors, shaping the socio-political landscape of medieval Europe.

The influence of the textitPurpura de la Patria extended far beyond the confines of their feudal domains. Through lavish patronage of the arts, sponsorship of religious institutions, and the construction of grandiose palaces and castles, they fostered a vibrant cultural renaissance characterized by opulence, refinement, and religious fervor.

Moreover, their impact on the political landscape was profound. They forged alliances, brokered treaties, and participated in dynastic marriages to safeguard their interests and augment their power. Their legacy endured through the ages, influencing subsequent generations of nobility and leaving an indelible mark on European society.

Figure 17.2: Barcelona by Georg Braun and Frans Hogenberg, Civitates Orbis Terrarum, Band 1, 1572.

Centernac
St. Hipòlit
Corbòs
Perpinyà (1209)
Orla
Mas de la Garriga
El Masdéu (1136)
Bages
Palau del Vidre
Castelló d'Empúries (1217)
NOGUERA PALLARESA
SEGRE
LLOBREGAT
Puig-Reig (1231)
GIRONA
Aiguaviva (1207)
LLEIDA
Corbins (1167)
Gardeny (1156)
Barbens (1168)
Granyena (1189)
Vallfogona
Torres de Segre
Palau Solità (1140)
L'Espluga de F.
Barberà (1172)
Poblet
S. Creus
Selma (1196)
La Mesó del Rourell
La Joncosa (1202)
Barcelona (1150)
EBRE
Riba-Roja
Nonaso
Ascó (1236)
Algars
Gandesa
Miravet (1156)
Orta (1193)
TARRAGONA
Tortosa (1148)
Prat
EBRE
● Encomienda del Temple
• Sub-encomienda del Temple
* Monasterio del Císter
0 10 20 30 km
ENCOMIENDAS DEL TEMPLE EN CATALUNYA (s/. J. Fuguet)
RIU CORB
VALLFOGONA
ALBIÓ
MONTARGULL
Belltall
Santa Coloma
Castell de Queralt
LA CONCA DE BARBERÀ
MONTBRIÓ DE LA MARCA
OLLERS
RIU ANGUERA
PIRA
L'ESPLUGA DE F.
BARBERÀ
EL PINETELL
SELMA
L'ALT CAMP
LA MESÓ DEL ROURELL
Paretdelgada
EL BAIX CAMP
RIU FRANCOLÍ
EL TARRAGONÈS
TARRAGONA
● Encomienda del Temple
• Sub-encomienda del T.
• Pueblo de señorío del T.
Santuario relacionado con el T.

Figure 17.3: The Encomiendas of the Templars in Catalonia (left) and, specifically, the Conca Barberà (right). The maps were taken from Joan Fuguet Sans and Carme Plaza Arqué.[1]

Though their influence waned with the dawn of the Renaissance and the onset of modernity, the legacy of the textitPurpura de la Patria persists as a testament to the enduring allure of ancient aristocracy, their tales woven into the fabric of European history, their noble lineage forever enshrined in the annals of time.

As evidenced by the subsequent analysis, exemplified in Figure 18.3 on page 130 and in Figure 18.5 on page 131, the Desclergues were affiliated with the Purpura de la Patria.

17.2 The Catalan Genesis of the Desclergue Family

The Desclergue family's odyssey traverses epochs marked by religious discord, political turbulence, and economic vicissitudes, offering a window into the socio-economic fabric of medieval Europe. Originating from the Albigensian tradition, a family member embarked on a journey as a Templar during the Conquest of Mallorca under James I of Aragon, laying the groundwork for their multifaceted pursuits in the centuries to come. Another took part in the conquest of Nova Catalunya.

Transitioning into commerce and finance, the Desclergue family emerged as influential figures in Catalan society, wielding their expertise as merchants and bankers. Holding esteemed roles such as jurado and síndico, they bolstered the economic vitality of their surroundings, contributing to the region's prosperity.

The economic downturn of the 14th century catalyzed a significant shift for the Desclergue family. Faced with the aftermath of Mallorca's decline and broader European crises, they sought refuge in Catalonia, particularly in the Penedés area, where they reaffirmed their entrepreneurial spirit and laid the groundwork for future success.

Navigating through subsequent epochs, the Desclergue family adapted to evolving socio-economic landscapes. Expanding their endeavors, they secured footholds in notarial offices, ecclesiastical circles, academics, and burgeoning markets like Andalusia and the Americas, diversifying their pursuits and consolidating their influence.

The rise of the House of Austria and the ascendancy of Flanders as a commercial hub heralded a paradigm shift in the family's trajectory. Embracing migration once more, they seized new opportunities and horizons, navigating the dynamic currents of global commerce with agility and foresight. Exploring the Catalan genesis of the Desclergue family unveils resilience, adaptability, and entrepreneurial fervor. From the tumultuous backdrop of medieval Europe to the thriving markets of Catalonia and beyond, their saga embodies the enduring human quest for prosperity and kinship amidst the ebb and flow of history. Though obscured by time, their legacy is a testament to the indomitable spirit of exploration and enterprise.

17.3 Toulouse County and La Marca, Aragon and Barcelona

Our ancestors, who bore the names 'Clergue' and later 'Desclergue' and 'Declercq,' can be traced back to Toulouse, a beacon county northeast of the Pyrenees. Their shield underwent an evolution over time, shown in Figure 17.9 on page 127, but first appeared when the family was flourishing in Occitania.

The County of Toulouse is located in the Occitan area of southern France. It has a rich history and, in the past, had frequent conflicts and political intrigue. From its establishment in the early medieval era until its ultimate incorporation into the Kingdom of France, Toulouse served as a stronghold of authority, civilization, and resistance amid the chaotic environment of medieval Europe.

The County of Toulouse can be linked to the events that unfolded in the aftermath of Charlemagne's military campaigns against the Vascons in 778. The county's origin was shaped by the military necessities of the Carolingian Empire during a period of intense struggle. To strengthen his control over the land he had acquired and provide protection against future attacks, Charlemagne created the county and incorporated it into the emerging Kingdom of Aquitaine.

The creation of Toulouse was accompanied by the formation of the Marca, South of the Pyrenees, as a protection corridor against the Moors. In this Marca, we expect to find the patrilineal ancestry of Bertrand Du Guesclin, as described in Chapter 19.8.

The Marca Hispanica, sometimes known as la Marca, was a geographical area created by Charlemagne, the Frankish monarch, and Holy Roman Emperor, in the 8th century to serve as a protective barrier. The Marca was strategically located south of the Pyrenees mountain range and functioned as a military barrier against the Moorish invasions into Frankish territory. It was vital in protecting Charlemagne's dominion from the spread of Islamic power in the Iberian Peninsula. After the Umayyad Caliphate conquered the Iberian Peninsula in the early 8th century, Charlemagne initiated a series of military campaigns called the Carolingian Reconquista. These expeditions were intended to regain control over lands in the region. Charlemagne constructed the Marca Hispanica to protect the border of his dominion against Moorish encroachment.

Charlemagne designated reliable nobles and military leaders to administer the Marca Hispanica and supervise its protection. The individuals referred to as 'marcher lords' or 'marquises' were given significant rights and jurisdiction to govern the province and defend against any Moorish invasions. The Marca's advantageous geographical position enabled Frankish armies to initiate counteroffensives into areas controlled by Muslims while simultaneously serving as a secure shelter for Christian refugees escaping from Islamic governance. La Marca created stability for Toulouse and Aquitaine.

Nevertheless, Aquitaine's stability was limited since internal conflicts and foreign pressures fragmented it by the middle of the 9th century. Toulouse became a significant hub in regional power dynamics as the center of power changed. The Counts of Rouergue, who exercised dominion over Toulouse, inherited power, establishing the groundwork for the county's future political panorama.

Toulouse's past is intriguing as it contains stories of dynastic conflicts, territorial disputes, and monumental fights. Raymond of Saint-Gilles's rise signified a pivotal moment as he skillfully maneuvered through the complex challenges of succession conflicts and foreign dangers, establishing the foundation for a formidable principality.

However, the possibility of violence seemed imminent, as the Counts of Toulouse were entangled in a prolonged battle against the Dukes of Aquitaine and the Counts of Barcelona. Catharism, a rebellious movement, emerged during this time and challenged the church's power significantly. It also challenged the political skills of the rulers of Toulouse. Finally, the murder of the papal legate Pierre de Castelnau sparked the Albigensian Crusade, a momentous event that profoundly altered the fate of Toulouse. Although the county put up a brave fight, it ultimately fell victim to the strategic actions of the King of France, resulting in its incorporation into the kingdom in 1271.

During its independence, however, while the Desclergues were thriving in the county and the town of Albi, the government of Toulouse revolved around a complex network of family connections, political alliances, and feudal responsibilities that shaped its social structure. The count, a crucial element of Toulouse's power system, had powers beyond simple administrative tasks. In some ways, the county was also very progressive during its time. Indeed, despite lacking a formal title, the countess had significant power and often used her family ties to further the county's objectives. Similarly, the establishment of primogeniture, which included the oldest son inheriting the whole realm, emphasized the significance of ancestry and the passing down of power in preserving Toulouse's heritage. After all, Toulouse was not a republic.

The aristocracy of Toulouse, consisting of powerful vassals, barons, lords, and knights, constituted a strong group that revolved around the count's court. Although sometimes challenged by conflicting loyalties and aspirations, their allegiance acted as the foundation of Toulouse's military might and political stability.

The territory controlled by Toulouse was characterized by a complex network of fiefdoms, where loyalties and land ownership were constantly changing and disputed. From the regions of Albi and Béziers to Rouergue and Carcassonne, each territory saw changes in power as counts sought to expand their influence and strengthen their control over the area.

The administrative machinery of Toulouse was built upon its territorial subdivisions, which included Quercy, Rouergue, Carcassonne, Foix, and Couserans. The several areas of Toulouse, each characterized by its own cultural and traditional elements, have greatly enriched its identity. These regions have formed solid connections and a sense of loyalty that surpasses geographical limitations.

It cannot be denied that the County of Toulouse has a significant position in medieval history, serving as a pivotal center of authority and sway that greatly influenced the future of southern France. Toulouse's heritage persists as a tribute to the perseverance and fortitude of its people, from its turbulent beginnings to its ultimate integration into the Kingdom of France. Our ancestors, however, did not take part in that integration because they migrated to Barcelona, Mallorca, and Aragon.

Indeed, modern texts view Toulouse as a French area that was ultimately incorporated into the country of France. However, that is false. Toulouse was neither French nor Spanish. It had an independent identity, like Bretagne, for instance. Toulouse, located geographically between the burgeoning powers of France to the north and the kingdoms of Aragon and the County of Barcelona to the south, significantly influenced the dynamics of the area. The relationships of Toulouse, Aragon, and Barcelona were marked by an intricate network of alliances, rivalries, and family connections, which had significant consequences for these institutions' political, cultural, and economic progress.

Similar to several aristocratic lineages of that era, the Counts of Toulouse often tried to strengthen their authority through strategic matrimonial unions and alliances. As a result, marriages occurred between the royal families of Toulouse, Aragon, and Barcelona, creating strong family connections that significantly impacted the political situation in the area.

An essential link between Toulouse and Aragon was established through the union of Alfonso II of Aragon and Sancha of Castile. Sancha was the daughter of Alfonso VII of Castile and Urraca of León, who in turn was the daughter of Alfonso VI of León and Castile and Constance of Toulouse, who was the daughter of William IV of Toulouse. This alliance strengthened the bonds between the House of Barcelona and the House of Toulouse while establishing a link to the reigning dynasties of Castile and León.

Moreover, the Counts of Barcelona and the Kings of Aragon often pursued partnerships with Toulouse to counteract the growing dominance of the Kingdom of France in the area. Toulouse was a protective barrier between the French monarchy and the regions of Aragon and Barcelona. Forming alliances with the Counts of Toulouse acted as a defensive measure against any invasions from the north.

The County of Toulouse was also pivotal in trade and economy, a crucial link between the Mediterranean region and northern Europe. Its strategic location along major trade routes encouraged the interchange of commodities, ideas, and cultural practices across Europe's many areas. The economic dynamism of Toulouse and its surrounding areas significantly promoted wealth and facilitated cultural interaction and innovation.

Toulouse was well recognized for its dynamic troubadour culture, which thrived in the medieval era. Artists hailing from Toulouse and nearby areas, including troubadours, poets, and musicians, played a crucial part in molding the cultural environment of southern France and Catalonia. Their poetic verses and musical creations exalted the principles of courtly love, chivalry, and gallantry, exerting a profound influence on cultural trends throughout Europe.

17.4 The Knights Templars, Juanista and Mary Magdalene

17.4.1 A general Perspective

The Encomiendas of the Templars in Catalonia are shown in Figure 17.3 on page 114.

The Knights Templar, a medieval Christian military order founded in the early 12th century, has a rich and complex history that has captivated historians, scholars, and conspiracy theorists. Within this historical context, numerous expressions and symbols have emerged, each carrying significant historical weight and layers of interpretation. It is interesting to identify terms such as the 'Juanist' faction, the symbolism of Mary Magdalene, and the veneration of Saint John.

The term 'Juanist' is derived from the Spanish word 'Juanista,' which refers to a purported faction within the Knights Templar associated with the veneration of Saint John the Baptist. This factional divide, believed to have emerged during the 12th and 13th centuries, is a subject of much speculation and debate due to the scarcity of primary sources and the passage of time. Its origins remain obscure but form part of the broader discussions on the Templars' religious beliefs and practices.

To grasp the significance of Saint John within Templar mythology, we must delve into the esoteric traditions and symbolic landscape of medieval Christianity. Saint John the Baptist held a central position in Christian iconography, revered as the precursor to Jesus Christ and the herald of his coming. In Templar symbolism, Saint John often represented spiritual purification, initiation, and the quest for divine knowledge. The order's dedication to Saint John was evident in the establishment of numerous churches, chapels, and preceptories bearing his name across Europe and the Holy Land.

The figure of Mary Magdalene, too, features prominently in Templar lore, albeit in a more enigmatic capacity. Legends and speculation intertwine Mary Magdalene with the Templars through narratives of her purported presence in the Holy Land following Christ's crucifixion. Some theories suggest that the Templars unearthed relics or secret knowledge associated with Mary Magdalene during their excavations beneath the Temple Mount in Jerusalem. These conjectures draw inspiration from medieval legends surrounding Mary Magdalene, which portray her as a figure of mystical wisdom, spiritual revelation, and, in some traditions, even divine lineage.

The confluence of Saint John and Mary Magdalene within Templar symbolism invites interpretations ranging from the symbolic to the speculative. Some scholars propose that the Templars synthesized Christian, Gnostic, and Hermetic mysticism elements, weaving them into esoteric knowledge and spiritual practice. Within this framework, Saint John and Mary Magdalene may symbolize complementary aspects of divine revelation and inner illumination, embodying the Templars' quest for spiritual enlightenment amidst the tumult of crusades and conflicts.

Yet, separating fact from fiction presents a formidable challenge amid Templar symbolism and mythology. Historical sources offer tantalizing glimpses into the order's beliefs and practices but often need to be completed and subject to interpretation. The Templars' eventual downfall in the early 14th century, marked by charges of heresy, blasphemy, and conspiracy, further shrouded their legacy in mystery and controversy.

In the following centuries, the Templars became the subject of myth, legend, and speculation, their enigmatic legacy perpetuated by novels, films, and esoteric traditions. To recognize possible appearance of Templar families, one must look for Saint Mary Magdalene or Saint John connected to hospitals, for instance, symbols of the two Juanist orders.

17.4.2 The Templar's Chapel of Metz

Metz is far from Spain, but belonged to the network of the Knight Templars. The author visited the chapel often, hence this chapter. The grandness in simplicity of the Chapel is shown in Figure 17.7 on page 125 and in Figure 17.8 on page 126.

The Templar's Chapel of Metz stands as a singular testament to the architectural prowess and historical significance of the Knights Templar in medieval Europe. Situated in the Arsenal district of Metz, France, this chapel is the sole surviving vestige of a once-thriving Templar commandery established in the 12th century. Its rich history, architectural uniqueness, and the remnants of its artistic interior provide a fascinating glimpse into the world of the Templars and their enduring legacy.

The Templar presence in Metz dates back to 1133, making it the oldest known Templar establishment in the Holy Roman Empire. The Knights Templar, a religious and military order founded in 1129, played a crucial role during the Crusades, safeguarding pilgrims and defending the Holy Land. In Metz, their initial domain was granted by Agnes, the abbess of Sainte-Glossinde, and was located in what is now Rue des Augustins.

By the end of the 12th century, around 1180, the Templars relocated to the site of the present-day citadel, near the Saint-Pierre-aux-Nonnains church. This move marked the establishment of a more substantial commandery, of which the octagonal chapel is the most notable surviving structure. The Templar's influence in Metz grew amidst a landscape shared with other prominent military orders such as the Hospitaliers and the Teutonic Knights.

Following the dissolution of the Templar Order in 1312, their properties were divided between the Order of the Hospitaliers of Saint John and the Teutonic Knights. The Metz commandery was not immune to these changes, but uniquely, many Templars in the region were absolved and even allowed to retain their lands and titles.

Constructed between 1180 and 1220, the Templar's Chapel of Metz is an exemplar of late Romanesque architecture with distinct Gothic influences. Its octagonal plan, reminiscent of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem and the Palatine Chapel in Aachen, is characteristic of Templar ecclesiastical buildings. The chapel's design features thick Romanesque walls with narrow, round-arched windows, combined with Gothic ribbed vaults that enhance its verticality.

The interior is adorned with frescos that date back to the first half of the 14th century, although many were restored or recreated in the early 20th century by Hermann Schaper. Noteworthy is the sculpted keystone depicting the Holy Spirit as a dove, and the sculpted capitals adorned with fleur-de-lis motifs.

The chapel's octagonal form, measuring 8.30 meters in diameter, includes a square chancel ending in a semi-dome apse. This unique layout aligns it with other notable Templar structures in Europe, reinforcing its architectural and symbolic significance.

Over the centuries, the chapel has undergone various transformations. Following the French acquisition of Metz in 1556, a citadel was constructed, leading to the demolition of most of the Templar commandery except for the chapel and a chapter house, the latter being destroyed in the early 20th century.

The chapel's historical value was recognized early on, leading to its classification as a historical monument in 1840. This status helped preserve it during the construction of the Metz Arsenal in 1861, a feat attributed to Prosper Mérimée, the then Inspector General of Historical Monuments.

In the modern era, the chapel served various purposes, including a military telegraph station and a powder magazine. After its acquisition by the City of Metz in 1905, it underwent several restorations, including a significant effort in 1908. Today, the chapel is used as an exhibition hall, having been restored to reflect its original appearance as much as possible.

The Chapel of Metz stood model for the one in Laon, shown in Figure 29.73 on page 405.

17.5 Templars in Occitania and in Aragón

The Enigmatic Origins of the Desclergue Family are interwoven with the history of the Knight's Templars.

The Desclergue family, though not as renowned as some medieval aristocratic houses, harbors a captivating history intertwined with the enigmatic Order of the Templars and the dynamic political landscape of the Kingdom of Aragon. Delving into historical records unveils a narrative that spans medieval France and the Mediterranean, revealing the origins and trajectory of this intriguing lineage.

The earliest threads of the Desclergues trace back to Albi, a bustling center of commerce and culture in southern France. Here, amidst a mosaic of merchants and notaries, our earliest known ancestor emerged from the Clergue family. However, it is not merely the family's commercial pursuits that capture attention, but rather their affiliation with the Templar order, a network that held sway over medieval Europe.

The Templars, renowned for their martial prowess and religious devotion, provided sanctuary for individuals facing persecution, such as adherents of the Cathar belief system. Within this context, our Clergue ancestor found refuge, joining the Templars and leveraging their influence to navigate the turbulent currents of medieval society. As the Templars aligned themselves with the Crown of Aragon, our ancestors became embroiled in the grandeur of Mediterranean conquests.

The conquest of Mallorca is a testament to the symbiotic relationship between the Templars and the Aragonese monarchy. Templar knights, including our ancestors, played a pivotal role in this maritime campaign, expanding the dominion of the Crown across the Mediterranean. Meanwhile, the Templar headquarters in Albi facilitated interactions between local families and the order, shaping the regional dynamics of Templar influence.

While other Clergue families existed in regions like Castres, their lack of involvement with the Templars underscores the localized nature of Templar influence and the unique trajectory of the Desclergue lineage. Through their association with the Templars and service to the Crown of Aragon, the Desclergue family navigated the complexities of medieval geopolitics, leaving an indelible mark on their familial legacy.

In unraveling the Desclergue family, we gain insight into the multifaceted dynamics that shaped medieval noble houses. Their story serves as a poignant reminder of the interplay between individual agency, institutional affiliations, and geopolitical exigencies in the annals of history.

The Order of the Temple, often called the Templars, operated from 1129 to 1312 and had significant influence in Occitania and Aragón, including Barcelona and Mallorca, during its duration.

The Templars gained popularity in the region of Occitania, including some territories of present-day France, due to their strong affiliation with the religious zeal and the Christian Crusades that took place throughout the 12th century. The Templars were established with the primary objective of safeguarding Christian pilgrims en route to the Holy Land. However, their involvement in ensuring the security of pilgrimage routes resulted in a rapid accumulation of power and wealth, augmenting their dominance. As a result, significant land gifts and financial contributions were received from European nobles.

Within the region of Occitania, the Templars established commanderies, which functioned as localized centers of operation responsible for the administration and oversight of their extensive properties and assets. The commanderies were dispersed around the region, with a particular concentration seen in regions like Provence and Languedoc. The Templars' military acumen and organizational proficiencies facilitated the accumulation of riches and authority, establishing their prominence as influential people within Occitanian society.

The business endeavors of the Templars transcended their military and religious obligations. The Templars actively participated in banking and financial services, assuming a role akin to that of medieval bankers, thus increasing their economic importance within Occitania. Both pilgrims and aristocrats placed their confidence in the Templars, who were responsible for issuing letters of credit and facilitating financial transactions across vast distances. This played a significant role in fostering economic growth within the area.

The Templars also had a significant position throughout the Crown of Aragón, which consisted of Aragón, Catalonia (including Barcelona), and the Balearic Islands (including Mallorca). The emergence of the Templars in this geographical area was intricately linked to the Crown's territorial expansion and the Reconquista, which denotes the Christian endeavor to reclaim the Iberian Peninsula from Islamic dominion.

The Templars played an active role in military operations aimed at reclaiming Muslim-controlled territory in the Iberian Peninsula, engaging in significant battles, and strengthening strategically essential positions. The Aragonese monarchs and provincial aristocracy held the Almogavars in high regard due to their military prowess and tremendous contributions to the Reconquista.

The Templars strategically created commanderies and obtained land concessions from the Crown in Barcelona and Mallorca, consolidating and fortifying their influence within these regions. The individuals in question effectively administered agricultural estates, fortifications, and infrastructure projects, making significant contributions to the economic advancement and overall stability of the area.

The military and economic dominance of the Templars in Aragón played a pivotal part in consolidating the Crown's authority. The financial services offered by the entity, including the facilitation of loans and the provision of financial guidance, had a significant role in fostering the economic expansion of the region of Aragón, bolstering its position as a prominent hub for trade throughout the Mediterranean.

Nevertheless, as the Templars' economic prosperity and political power expanded, they encountered increasing scrutiny and envy from secular governing bodies and other religious factions. The final demise of the Templars occurred when King Philip IV of France and Pope Clement V took action to repress the order throughout the early 14th century, ultimately resulting in the dissolution of the Templars in 1312.

In brief, the growth of the Templars in Occitania and Aragón throughout their operational period spanning from 1129 to 1312 was distinguished by their significant military engagements, extensive land purchases, diverse commercial endeavors, and provision of financial services. The group had a substantial role in fostering economic growth within the territories and solidifying governmental authority, eventually leaving a durable historical impact despite their final downfall.

17.6 Ramon Llull was Francesc Desclergues' Acquaintance

Francesc Desclergue, described in more detail in Chapter 18.11, was not only a contemporary in Mallorca; given his social position, he knew Ramon Llull, shown in Figure 17.6 on page 125, very well.

Ramon Llull, a towering figure in the intellectual landscape of the Middle Ages, left an indelible mark on history through his multifaceted contributions as a philosopher, theologian, missionary, and visionary thinker. Born in the vibrant cultural milieu of Palma de Mallorca around 1232, Llull's life journey unfolded against the backdrop of a world marked by religious, cultural, and political upheavals. His legacy, spanning centuries, continues to captivate scholars and enthusiasts alike, embodying the essence of intellectual curiosity, religious fervor, and visionary innovation.

From his early years as a courtier in the entourage of King James I of Aragon to his transformative spiritual awakening around the age of thirty, Llull's life was characterized by a profound quest for truth and meaning. His encounter with Christ manifested through visionary experiences precipitating a radical departure from his erstwhile worldly pursuits, leading him to dedicate himself to serving God and humanity.

Central to Llull's mission was his relentless pursuit of the conversion of Muslims and Jews, a task he approached with unparalleled zeal and ingenuity. In his seminal works, such as the "Book of Contemplation of God" and the "Ars Compendiosa," Llull crafted a philosophical framework imbued with theological insights, aiming to engage minds across religious divides. Through intricate combinations of theological principles and logical deductions, he sought to demonstrate the truth of Christian doctrine to believers and non-believers.

Llull's linguistic prowess and literary innovation further underscored his significance as a cultural luminary. As one of the pioneers of literary Catalan, he wielded language as a potent tool for conveying philosophical, scientific, and spiritual insights. His writings, whether in Arabic, Latin, or Catalan, served as a bridge between diverse intellectual traditions, laying the groundwork for the emergence of a rich literary heritage in the Catalan language.

Beyond his literary and theological endeavors, Llull's visionary spirit extended to politics and diplomacy. His engagement with European powers and ecclesiastical authorities attests to his role as a shrewd political strategist, navigating the complex dynamics of medieval power structures with foresight and understanding. From advising monarchs and popes to advocating for crusades and missionary endeavors, Llull's influence transcended geographical and temporal boundaries, leaving an indelible imprint on the trajectory of European history.

Ramon Llull's enduring legacy resonates in his visionary insights into artificial intelligence and logical reasoning. Anticipating future developments in mathematics and computer science, he conceived a "logical machine" to facilitate intellectual inquiry and theological debate. His innovative approach to combining theological doctrines with logical methodologies foreshadowed modern advancements in computational thinking, earning him recognition as an artificial intelligence pioneer.

Despite facing opposition and skepticism in his lifetime, Llull's enduring impact on Western thought and culture is undeniable. From his pioneering efforts in interfaith dialogue to his visionary conceptions of linguistic and philosophical inquiry, he inspires generations of scholars and seekers alike. As we reflect on the life and legacy of Ramon Llull, we are reminded of the transformative power of intellectual curiosity, spiritual conviction, and visionary innovation in shaping the course of human history.

The tales of great philosophers often overshadow the silent heroes who supported and sacrificed alongside them. Such is the story of Blanca Picany, the wife of Ramon Llull. Born into a noble Mallorcan family in 1232, Blanca's life journey intertwined with Ramon's, leaving an indelible mark on the fabric of their time.

Blanca's early years were steeped in the privileges and responsibilities of her lineage. Her family had settled in Mallorca following James I's conquest in 1229. The Picany family enjoyed prominence, a position connecting Blanca with Ramon Llull, a young philosopher destined for greatness.

In 1257, at age twenty-five, Blanca entered into matrimony with Ramon Llull. Their union was not merely a joining of two individuals but a merging of destinies as they embarked on a journey of love, partnership, and shared purpose. Ramon's position as seneschal of the king of Mallorca's court ensured a comfortable life for the couple, allowing them to focus on their familial and societal duties.

Their marital bliss bore fruit in the form of two children: Domènec and Magdalena. As Ramon immersed himself in philosophical pursuits and intellectual endeavors, Blanca devoted herself to nurturing their children and managing their household affairs. She stood as the steadfast anchor, providing support and stability amidst the upheavals of her husband's restless mind.

However, the tides of fate would soon alter Blanca's life. In 1263, at thirty, Ramon Llull experienced a profound spiritual awakening, catalyzing a radical transformation in his life's purpose. He embarked on a pilgrimage to Rocamador, seeking divine guidance and enlightenment. Torn between her loyalty to her husband and her responsibilities as a mother and steward of their estate, Blanca faced a momentous decision.

With Ramon's departure, Blanca assumed the mantle of leadership, navigating the complexities of domestic affairs and safeguarding their family's legacy. She sought assistance from Pere de Caldes, the mayor of Mallorca, imploring him to appoint an administrator to manage their temporal possessions. Blanca's pragmatic approach underscored her resilience and pragmatism in adversity.

Blanca's bond with Ramon endured as the years passed, transcending physical distance and temporal concerns. Though separated by circumstance, their hearts remained intertwined, united in their shared devotion to each other and their family. Despite the challenges and sacrifices, Blanca remained steadfast in her commitment to her husband's vision, a testament to the enduring power of love and partnership.

In 1313, as Ramon Llull penned his final will at eighty-one, Blanca's absence from the document hinted at the passage of time and the inevitable march of mortality. While her fate remains uncertain, her legacy lives on in the echoes of history, a testament to the quiet strength and unwavering resolve of a noble Mallorcan wife who stood by her philosopher-husband's side through the trials and triumphs of life.

17.7 The Templars of Mallorca

In the complexity of medieval politics and warfare, the Templars of Mallorca[3][4][5][6][7][8] found themselves entwined not only in matters of faith and defense but also in the machinations of powerful secular rulers. Their presence on the island was not merely a consequence of military conquest but also a reflection of strategic alliances and patronage from the highest echelons of European nobility.

Central to the Templars' endeavors in Mallorca was the support of the Count of Barcelona and the King of Aragon, whose patronage played a pivotal role in shaping the order's fortunes in the region. As the paramount ruler of Catalonia and Aragon, the Count of Barcelona held sway over vast territories, including the Balearic Islands. His alliance with the Templars provided them with military backing and diplomatic leverage, ensuring their continued prominence in Mallorca.

Similarly, the King of Aragon, James I, emerged as a critical benefactor of the Templars following the conquest of Mallorca in 1229. Recognizing their contributions to the Reconquista and unwavering loyalty, James I granted the Templars lucrative land grants and strategic fortresses, consolidating their position on the island. Moreover, the Templars' participation in the king's military campaigns further solidified their bond with the Aragonese crown, cementing their role as stalwart defenders of Christian dominion in the Mediterranean.

Beyond the confines of Mallorca, the Templars' influence extended to Occitania and Languedoc, regions in what is now southern France. Templar encomiendas in these territories served as vital nodes in the order's expansive network, facilitating the flow of resources and manpower to support their endeavors in the Mediterranean. Templars from Occitania and Languedoc, drawn by a sense of duty and adventure, journeyed to Mallorca to join their brethren in the defense of Christendom and the pursuit of divine glory.

However, the Templars' involvement in Mallorca was not solely motivated by martial aspirations. As adept administrators and stewards of land, they assumed responsibility for managing vast estates and agricultural holdings across the island. Through their efficient management practices and farming innovations, the Templars contributed to the economic prosperity of Mallorca, fostering trade and commerce within their domains.

Despite their manifold contributions, the Templars' fate in Mallorca mirrored that of their brethren across Europe. Accusations of heresy and financial malfeasance, instigated by political rivals and opportunistic monarchs, culminated in the dissolution of the order by Pope Clement V in 1312. The commandery of Mallorca, along with its assets and personnel, fell into the hands of secular authorities, marking the end of an illustrious chapter in medieval history.

Today, the legacy of the Templars in Mallorca endures, preserved in the annals of history and etched into the island's landscape. The Castell del Temple, though weathered by time and tumult, stands as a testament to their indomitable spirit and martial prowess. The Altarpiece of Saint Bernard, once a focal point of worship within the commandery's chapel, serves as a poignant reminder of the Templars' devotion to God and their quest for spiritual enlightenment.

As historians and scholars continue to unravel the mysteries surrounding the Templars' enigmatic past, the Commandery of the Temple of Mallorca remains a beacon of inspiration and intrigue, beckoning us to delve deeper into the annals of medieval history and uncover the truths that lie buried beneath the sands of time.

17.8 Mallorca and the Nobility from Occitana

The historical narrative of Mallorca from 1000 AD to 1400 AD encompasses a multifaceted interplay of cultural, political, and social dynamics that had a significant influence on the island's trajectory of growth and evolution. During this historical period, there were notable transformations in political power, leading to the transfer of Mallorca from being under Islamic rule to being a Christian dominion. Additionally, Mallorca actively participated in complex alliances and trades with its bordering territories.

During the first period of this historical epoch, the island of Mallorca, akin to a substantial segment of the Iberian Peninsula, came under the control of the Umayyad Caliphate. This historical era established the foundation for a culturally varied fusion, marked by the confluence of many influences. Mallorca had significant growth as a center for agricultural and commercial activities, resulting in the development of a diverse population consisting of Muslims, Christians, and Jews who managed to cohabit relatively amicable manner. The island's agriculture sector, well-known for its almond farming and wine production, is crucial in supporting its economy.

During the period spanning from the 10th to the 13th century, the island of Mallorca had a series of Islamic dynasty regimes, such as the Taifa of Dénia and the Almoravids. These consecutive rulers facilitated a significant cultural interchange and contributed to the economic flourishing of the region. Nonetheless, a significant shift occurred in 1229 when King James I of Aragon instigated the Christian Reconquista of Mallorca, signifying the culmination of Islamic governance.

After the successful conquest, the island of Mallorca was included in the Kingdom of Aragon. However, it maintained regional autonomy as stipulated in the Treaty of Capdepera. The autonomy of Mallorca was consolidated by King James II of Aragon by the establishment of the Kingdom of Mallorca in 1276, which bestowed to the island the privileges of self-governance and formal recognition. During this temporal period, the urban settlement of Palma flourished, undergoing a significant transformation into a thriving and affluent metropolis.

However, the 14th century brought about significant changes and presented tremendous obstacles. The Kingdom of Mallorca underwent a process of reintegration into the Crown of Aragon in the year 1343, as directed by Peter IV of Aragon, terminating its independent status. Although Mallorca saw periods of economic expansion and success as a prominent Mediterranean trading center, it was not impervious to the catastrophic consequences of the Black Death during the mid-14th century, which led to a substantial decrease in its population. Moreover, the 1391 anti-Jewish pogroms, which were prevalent across the Crown of Aragon, had significant implications for the Jewish community in Mallorca, serving as a prime illustration of the complex sociopolitical dynamics of that period.

Concurrently, the involvement of Occitanian fighters hailing from the southern region of France in the Reconquista of Mallorca, which took place in the 13th century, exemplified the interdependence of the medieval Mediterranean realm. The participation of Occitania may be attributed to political alliances, family connections, and strategic goals, mostly stemming from the historical associations between the Crown of Aragon and Occitania.

---

[3] Fuguet Sans, Joan (2005). Templers i hospitalers, IV. Guia de la Catalunya Vella, el Penedès, els comtats del Rosselló i Mallorca. Barcelona: Rafael Dalmau Ed.

[4] Llompart, Gabriel (1987). La pintura gòtica a Mallorca. Barcelona. Ed. Polígrafa

[5] Lluis Salvador d'Austria (1897). Die Balearen. Geschildert in Wort und Bild. Vol. 1. Würzburg / Leipzig: Woerl

[6] Rotger y Capplonch, Mateo (1897-1906). Historia de Pollensa. Vols 1, 2 i 3. Palma: Amengual y Muntaner

[7] Sastre, Joan Carles (2004). Documentació sobre l'orde del temple a l'Arxiu de Santa Clara. Bolletí de la Societat Arqueològica Lul·liana, núm. 60

[8] FTorres Orell, Francesca (2010). Les torres del Temple. Bolletí de la Societat Arqueològica Lul·liana, núm. 66

The Conquest of Mallorca in 1229, led by King James I of Aragon, emerged as a significant event in Occitanian involvement. The Aragonese monarchy actively sought the backing of nobles from Occitania, particularly the Counts of Toulouse and Montpellier. These nobles responded to the appeal and allied themselves with the Aragonese expeditionary army. The contribution of the party mentioned above was of great significance, as it offered indispensable military reinforcement, substantial financial assets, and essential naval assistance, all of which played a pivotal role in the victorious conquest of Mallorca. The successful conquest represents a significant milestone within the larger context of the Reconquista movement. It resulted in the expansion of Christian dominion over the western Mediterranean region and the establishing of authority over crucial trade routes.

In acknowledgment of their assistance, King James I of Aragon granted Occitanian allies some privileges and territorial concessions on the island of Mallorca, therefore consolidating their established influence. As a result, Mallorca underwent a process of cultural and political amalgamation, exemplifying the heterogeneous backgrounds of its governing class.

In summary, the historical period from 1000 AD to 1400 AD in Mallorca is characterized by a complex series of transformations. The historical period under consideration spans the transition from Islamic governance to Christian governance, the founding of the Kingdom of Mallorca, and its later assimilation into the Crown of Aragon. The modifications above occurred against a context of economic expansion, cultural interchange, and oscillations in population, with the inclusion of Occitanian participation introducing an additional stratum of intricacy to the historical narrative of the island. The lasting impact of this period serves as evidence of the complex interaction of historical factors that influenced the Mediterranean region.

17.9 The Desclergues were Pioneers of Mallorcan Banking

Within the labyrinthine corridors of medieval Mallorcan banking,[9] the indelible imprint of pioneers such as Ramon Desclergue and his contemporaries looms large. Amidst the prevailing obscurity, their endeavors emerge as beacons of financial innovation and entrepreneurial acumen, shaping the nascent landscape of banking in the Kingdom of Mallorca. This chapter delves into their seminal contributions, elucidating the origins and evolution of Mallorcan banking through the prism of their visionary exploits.

At the dawn of Mallorca's conquest, Ramon Desclergue epitomized the entrepreneurial spirit that underpinned the burgeoning credit activity. As early as 1242, he navigated the intricate webs of money deposit and lending operations, laying the groundwork for a nascent banking ecosystem. Alongside Desclergue, luminaries such as Renovard de Malbosch, G. De Temines, and de Guardia emerged as stalwarts of Mallorcan banking, their collective endeavors forging a path towards financial prosperity.

The symbiotic relationship between Desclergue and his contemporaries, epitomized by limited partnerships and collaborative ventures, underscored the interconnectedness of Mallorca's banking elite. Together, they navigated the turbulent currents of medieval commerce, leveraging their collective expertise to facilitate economic transactions and foster commercial growth. In the annals of Mallorcan banking, their names resonate as paragons of financial ingenuity and entrepreneurial resilience.

As the Kingdom of Mallorca navigated the complex interplay of religious and cultural dynamics, Desclergue and his colleagues transcended conventional boundaries, fostering cross-cultural exchanges and economic cooperation. Their pioneering efforts laid the foundation for a vibrant banking ecosystem, characterized by diversity and dynamism. Within the realm of private banking, their enterprises thrived, providing vital financial services to merchants and individuals alike.

Amidst the archival lacunae and historical ambiguities, the legacy of Desclergue and his contemporaries endures as a testament to the enduring spirit of Mallorcan entrepreneurship. Their visionary exploits, immortalized in the annals of medieval banking, continue to inspire contemporary scholars and historians, offering invaluable insights into the genesis and evolution of Mallorcan financial institutions.

In conclusion, the pioneering endeavors of Ramon Desclergue and his colleagues illuminate the hitherto obscured landscape of medieval Mallorcan banking. Through their visionary exploits and entrepreneurial acumen, they forged a path towards financial prosperity, shaping the contours of Mallorca's economic destiny. Their legacy, enshrined in the annals of history, serves as a poignant reminder of the indomitable spirit of innovation and resilience that defines Mallorcan banking.

17.10 The Tradehub of Mallorca in the Late 13th Century

A map, showing Mallorcan trade in the Crown of Aragon around 1285 is shown in Figure 17.4 on page 123.

During the latter part of the 13th century, the island of Mallorca was a primary constituent of the Crown of Aragon, exerting a crucial influence on the intricate commerce network that spanned the Mediterranean area. Mallorca's advantageous geographical position in the western Mediterranean, along with its conducive agricultural environment, facilitated its emergence as a prominent commercial center.

The marine commerce of Mallorcan trade in the year 1285 was characterized by its outstanding strength and resilience. The island harbored a highly advanced fleet of vessels, referred to as "nàutiques," that played a crucial role in enabling maritime commerce across the Mediterranean region. Merchants and shipowners from Mallorca were actively involved in marine endeavors that included regions such as the Levant, North Africa, and the Iberian Peninsula. The primary basis of Mallorca's commerce was exporting domestically produced commodities, including cereals, wine, olive oil, and almonds. The items above were in great demand throughout the Mediterranean markets, therefore making a substantial contribution to the economic success of the island. Additionally, the economic importance of Mallorca was enhanced by its involvement in the manufacturing of premium textiles, namely silk and wool. The island was well recognized for its proficient weavers and textile artisans, and the manufacturing of textiles played a crucial part in its commercial interactions. The textiles produced in Mallorca were much sought after in both the Crown of Aragon and other distant places, playing a significant role in bolstering the island's economic prowess.

During the specified historical time, the prevalent medium of exchange in Mallorcan commerce was the "diner," which served as a prominent unit of account within the broader Mediterranean commercial network. The diners of Mallorca were acknowledged and embraced in other Mediterranean ports, augmenting the island's capacity for trade.

The commerce of Mallorca was influenced by its religious variety. The island had a substantial Jewish population, characterized by their prominent engagement in commerce and banking. The extensive network of links maintained by Mallorca throughout the Mediterranean region and other areas played a pivotal role in fostering commercial partnerships and bolstering the economic success of the island.

---

[9] Antonio Mercader, "La Banca Mallorquina en la Baja Edad Media", Tesis doctoral Tomo I, Frau Director: Dr. Pau Cateura Bennàsser, Departament de Ciències Històriques i Teoria de les Arts, Universitat de les Illes Balears Palma, junio 2014.

In addition, the political stability experienced by Mallorca during its affiliation with the Crown of Aragon had a pivotal role in creating a favorable setting for commercial activities. The island saw advantageous outcomes due to the protection and backing provided by the Aragonese crown. This support fostered an environment that encouraged foreign merchants to actively participate in commerce with Mallorca, augmenting its economic influence.

The scope of Mallorcan commerce in 1285 extended beyond the exchange of tangible commodities. The island's advantageous geographical position further made it a central center for the dissemination of information. The intellectual and cultural liveliness of Mallorca was enhanced by the acquisition of information about various cultures, markets, and inventions, which merchants and tourists facilitated.

In summary, during the approximate period of 1285, the trade activities of Mallorca within the Crown of Aragon exhibited several noteworthy features. These included the establishment of a prosperous maritime network, the exportation of agricultural and textile goods, the implementation of a distinctive currency system, the presence of a diverse populace encompassing a notable Jewish community, and the stability ensured by the governance of Aragon. The convergence of these elements resulted in Mallorca becoming a prosperous hub of trade and commerce within the Mediterranean region, fostering economic success and cultural plenty over the specified timeframe.

The depicted cartographic representation in Figure 17.5 on page 124, showcases Aragon and Mallorca as pivotal hubs of maritime interactions spanning across Europe, Asia, and Africa within the expansive Mediterranean basin, rendering it a captivating and invaluable artifact. Crafted by the esteemed Jewish geographer and cartographer, Elisha Ben Abraham, this map not only illustrates geographical features but also underscores the profound historical significance of Mallorca. Notably, Mallorca became the birthplace of the renowned Mallorcan Cartographic School, a testament to its pivotal role amidst the maritime flourishing attributed to its strategic location within the Mediterranean. Produced in Mallorca in the year 1375 by Elisha Ben Abraham, this masterpiece epitomizes the maritime grandeur of its era, encapsulating both aesthetic allure and scholarly insight.

17.11 Intertwined Mallorca and Barcelona

During the 14th century, the historical narratives of Mallorca and the bustling metropolis of Barcelona, shown in Figure 17.2 on page 114, were closely interconnected, influenced by a diverse range of elements, including political dynamics, economic activities, cultural exchanges, and commercial interactions. During this period, there was a notable movement of nobles, bankers, and businesspeople from Mallorca to Barcelona. This occurrence was strongly influenced by historical circumstances that had a significant impact on the Crown of Aragon and fostered a dynamic relationship between these two Mediterranean cities.

The political shift of Mallorca after its integration into the Crown of Aragon served as a significant motivator for this departure. The invasion of Mallorca by King James I of Aragon in 1229 effectively terminated the island's autonomy, establishing its integration into the broader Aragonese domain. Consequently, the aristocracy and elites of Mallorca forged alliances with the central authority in Barcelona, which had emerged as the administrative and political hub of the Crown.

The movement was propelled by the appeal of economic prospects since Barcelona was undergoing a phase of remarkable prosperity due to a thriving trade and commerce industry. Barcelona, geographically located along the Mediterranean coast, played a significant role as a crucial commerce hub. This geographical advantage attracted a diverse range of individuals, including merchants, bankers, and businesspeople from Mallorca, who were keen on capitalizing on the city's developing markets and profitable opportunities.

The concentration of authority under the Crown of Aragon further stimulated the migration process. Barcelona assumed a prominent role as the focal point of political decision-making, characterized by the presence of the royal court, which became a distinguishing characteristic of the city. To maintain proximity to centers of political influence and engage in political activities, the aristocracy of Mallorca considered it beneficial to transfer to Barcelona.

The migratory process was heavily influenced by the importance of security and stability, particularly in light of the tumultuous events that impacted Mallorca in the 14th century. Historical occurrences such as the Black Death and the anti-Jewish pogroms in 1391 engendered a prevailing sentiment of uncertainty and instability among the inhabitants of Mallorca, hence motivating some individuals to pursue a more stable milieu in Barcelona.

Cultural and intellectual forces also influenced the migration. During this period, Barcelona emerged as a dynamic hub of cultural and educational activities, characterized by prominent universities and institutions fostering intellectual exchange. The city's vibrant cultural environment attracted scholars, artists, and intellectuals from Mallorca, who sought to participate in scholarly endeavors and facilitate the interchange of ideas.

Moreover, the prominent position of Barcelona as a significant center for commerce enabled Mallorcan entrepreneurs to enhance their commercial ventures and gain entry into more extensive trade networks, therefore accessing a larger pool of potential customers. The urban area's robust economic activity provided many prospects for expansion and success.

Finally, the relocation to Barcelona provided the Mallorcan nobles and gentry with social and networking prospects. Residing in an urban environment allowed them to establish meaningful connections with their contemporaries and cultivate social and professional networks that may potentially provide benefits aligned with their personal and vocational pursuits.

In brief, the migration of nobility, bankers, and merchants from Mallorca to Barcelona during the 14th century was multifaceted and intricate. Political integration, economic prospects, administrative incentives, security considerations, cultural allure, and the pursuit of social and business opportunities drove this phenomenon. The migration seen during this era not only demonstrated the changing dynamics of the Crown of Aragon but also played a significant role in the development of Barcelona as a prosperous hub for trade and cultural activities. The interchange of ideas, products, and knowledge between Mallorca and Barcelona during this century demonstrated the interconnection of Mediterranean communities. This shared history and collaboration contributed to the wealth and vitality of both regions within the superb framework of the Crown of Aragon.

17.12 The Transition from Mallorca to the Catalan Mainland

During the 14th century, particularly until around 1370, the illustrious lineage of the Desclergues found its abode nestled within the vibrant landscapes of Mallorca, an island teeming with commercial opportunities and cultural richness. This era coincided with the twilight of James III of Mallorca's reign and the ascension of Peter IV of Aragon to the throne, both pivotal figures shaping the political and economic landscape of the region. Against this backdrop, the Desclergues flourished within the prosperous milieu of Mallorca.

To grasp the motivations behind their eventual migration, one must delve into the intricate complexity of economic dynamics that characterized Mallorca and its relationships with the mainland metropolises of Valencia and Barcelona. During this epoch, the Balearic Islands stood as bastions of economic vitality, their autonomy and flourishing trade serving as a bulwark against Aragon's reluctance to relinquish control. Within this thriving environment, the logic of a seasoned merchant abandoning such prosperous shores amidst the simmering tensions between James and Peter, or in the immediate aftermath of the tumultuous events of 1349, appears inherently flawed.

Indeed, the decision to depart Mallorca in favor of Montblanc, situated on the mainland near Tarragona, defies conventional economic rationale. Montblanc, at the time, lacked the commercial allure and infrastructural advantages enjoyed by the bustling hubs of Mallorca or Barcelona. Yet, the Desclergues embarked on their migration during the 1370s, driven not by mere caprice but by the harsh realities of fiscal policies that rendered Mallorca less hospitable for their commercial endeavors.

Upon their arrival on the Catalan mainland, the Desclergues initially established themselves in Penedés, a region offering greater economic promise and stability compared to Montblanc. The presence of affluent Jewish merchants among their network likely played a significant role in this strategic relocation. Concurrently, the mounting difficulties faced by Jewish communities in Mallorca would have provided additional impetus for departure, as the Desclergues facilitated the transition of Jewish merchants to the mainland.

From Penedés, the Desclergues eventually gravitated towards Barcelona, the preeminent commercial hub of the region. Here, they found fertile ground for their entrepreneurial ambitions amidst the bustling trade networks and burgeoning urbanity of the Catalan capital.

It is only from the vantage point of the 15th century onwards that Montblanc emerges as an attractive locus for merchants seeking to penetrate and compete within a region hitherto monopolized by Barcelona.

In retrospect, the migration of the Desclergues stands as a testament to the nuanced interplay of economic imperatives, political exigencies, and cultural dynamics that shaped the medieval Mediterranean world. Their journey from Mallorca to the Catalan mainland reflects not only the shifting tides of commerce but also the resilience and adaptability inherent to the merchant class in navigating the ever-evolving currents of history.

17.13 Highlighting the Templars in Catalonia

Figure 17.3 shows the Templar's presence in Catalonia.

The Templar presence in Catalonia is deeply intertwined with the region's history of conquest, noble patronage, and strategic territorial acquisitions. Dating back to the early 12th century, the Templars swiftly gained prominence through significant donations and alliances with Catalan nobility, ultimately playing a crucial role in the defense and expansion of Catalonia's border territories.

One of the pivotal moments in the Templar's establishment in Catalan territory occurred in 1130 or 1131, with the generous donation of the Granyena castle by Ramon Berenguer III, the count of Barcelona. This act not only signified the beginning of Templar presence in the region but also highlighted the personal commitment of Ramon Berenguer III to the Order, as he professed within its ranks. Building upon this momentum, the Count of Urgell, Ermengol IV, followed suit by donating the Castle of Barberà (de la Conca) to the Templars just a year later. This initial wave of donations demonstrated a clear intention on behalf of Catalan nobility to involve the Templars in the ongoing conquest efforts.

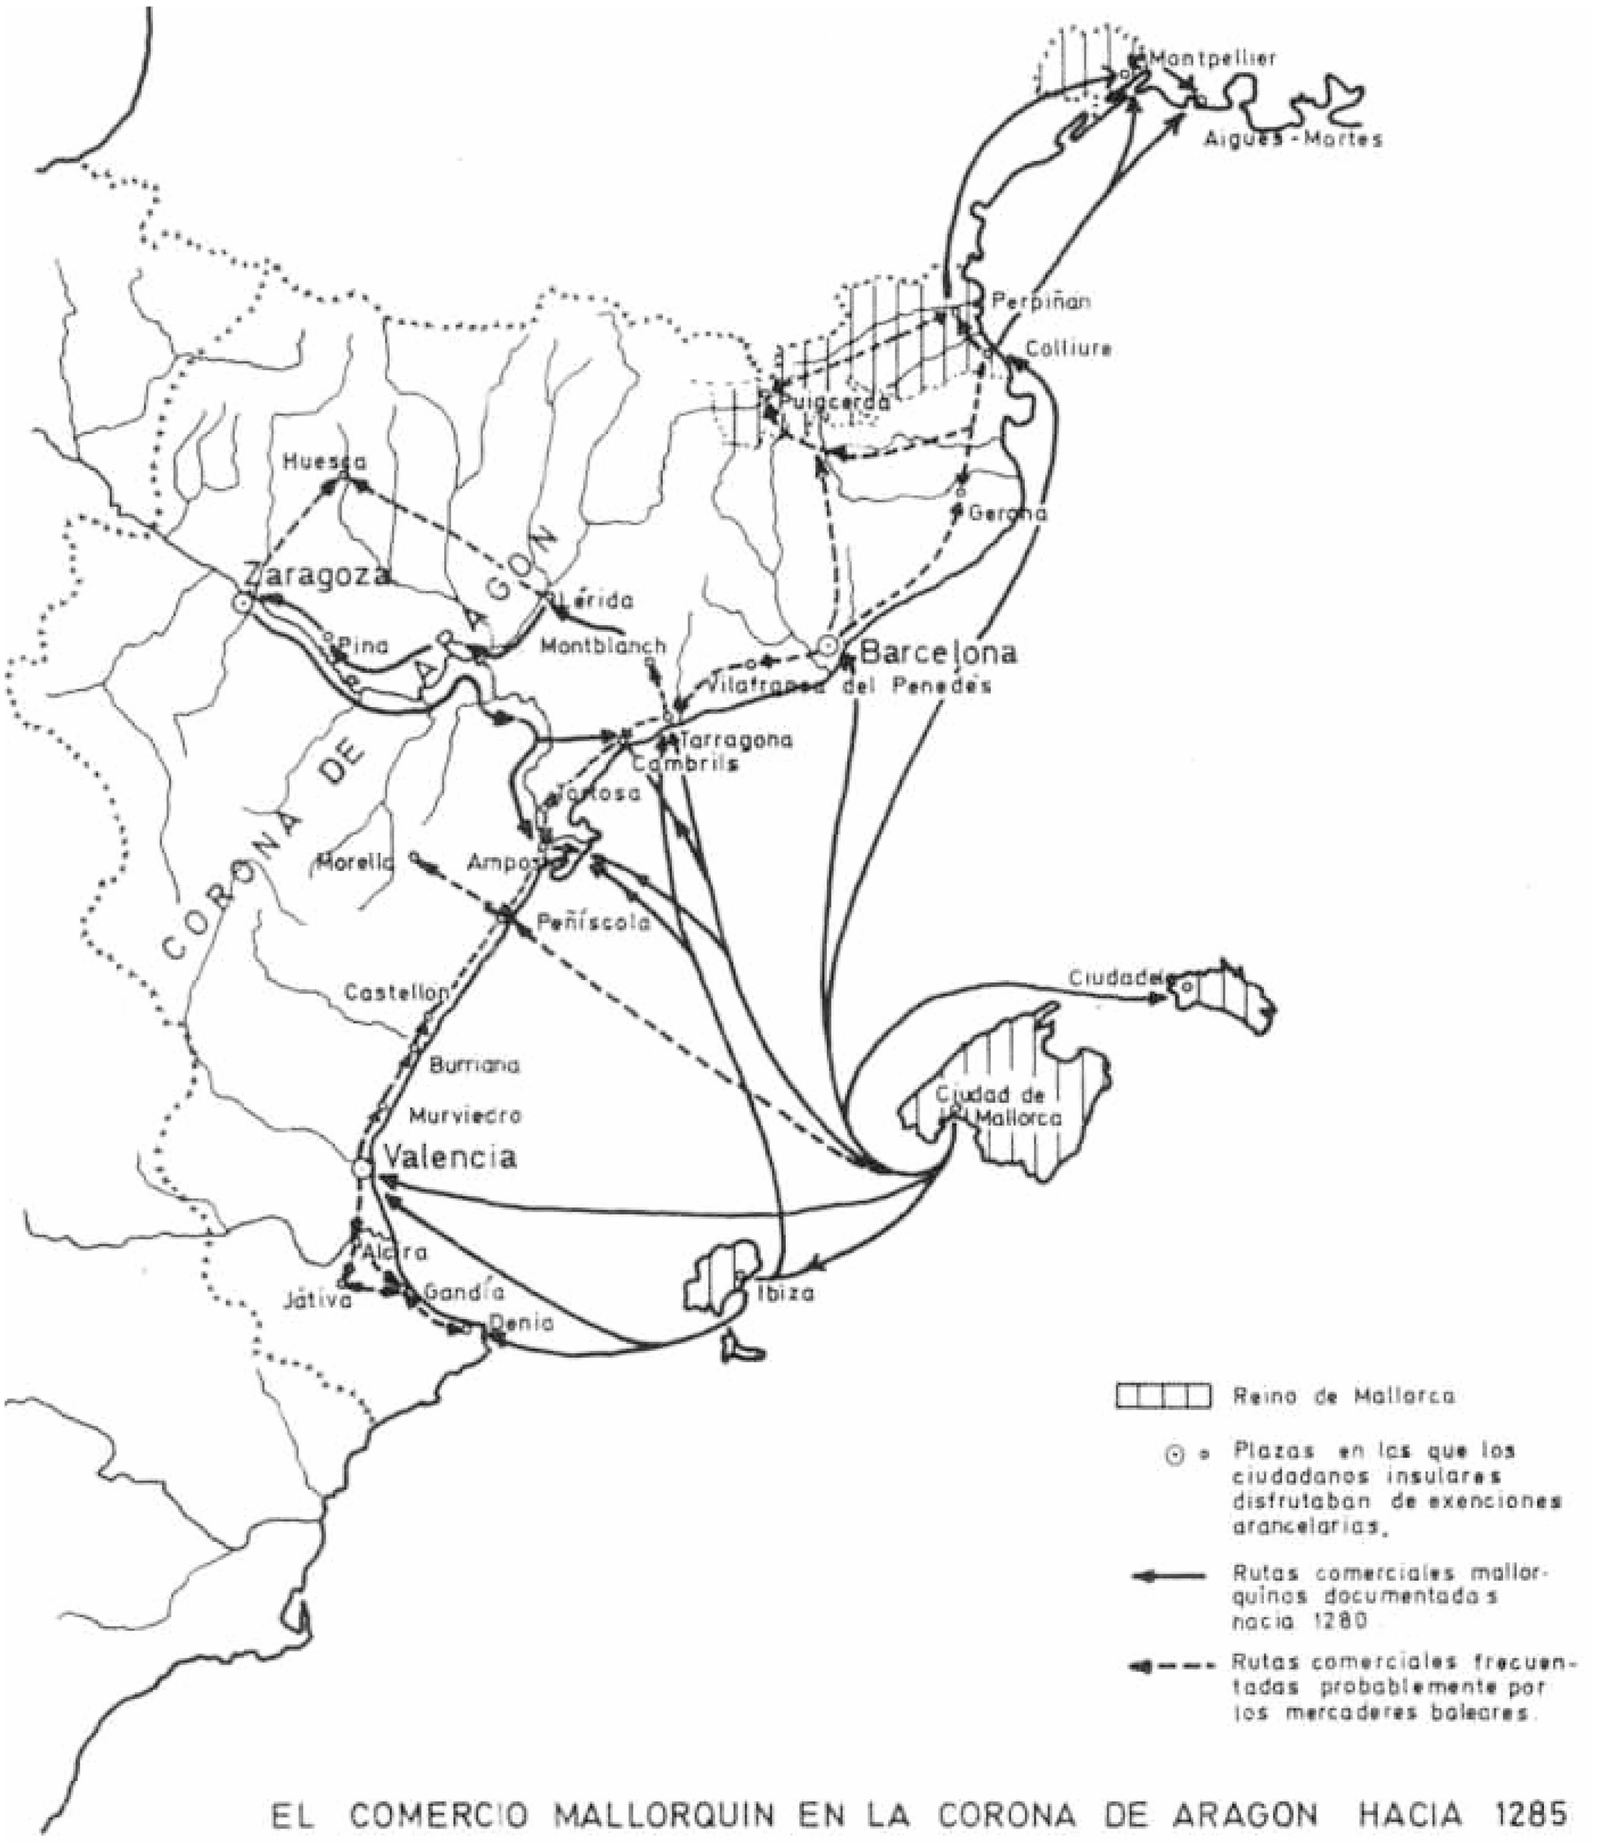
The consolidation of Templar holdings in Catalonia continued with the donation of Ramon Berenguer IV's share of dominion over Barberà in 1133, further solidifying the Templar presence in the region. Ramon Berenguer IV is shown in Figure 17.10 on page 127. However, it is essential to note that despite these early donations, the formal establishment of Templar commanderies in Catalonia did not occur until the conquest and stabilization of crucial border territories, notably Tortosa-Miravet (1148-1153) along the Ebro and Lleida-Gardeny (1149) along the Segre. The strategic significance of the Conca de Barberà, situated in the rear of the border, cannot be understated, and it is believed that the Templar commission established in the Barberà castle played a pivotal role in the Order's operations within the Principality. The Templar encomienda in Barberà, along with its sub-encomiendas Vallfogona, Rourell, and Espluga de Francolí, attracted the patronage and support of local nobility, particularly notable were the Queralt-Timor, Su, Oluja, and Cervera-Torroja lineages. The involvement of these noble families further underscored the symbiotic relationship between the Templars and the Catalan aristocracy.

Central to the consolidation of Templar territories in Catalonia was the figure of Arnau de Torroja, who served as Provincial Master and later Grand Master of the Order. Arnau de Torroja's ties to prominent Catalan lineages, including the Queralt-Timor and Cervera-Torroja families, further facilitated the Templar's expansion and influence in the region.

The Templar presence in Catalonia continued to attract individuals of noble lineage, such as Ramon de Anglesola, who joined the Barberà encomienda in 1307. Notably, Ramon's profession within the Order occurred at the Franciscan convent of Montblanc, coinciding with an assembly of the Templar Order. Despite not holding any formal position within the encomienda or professing before the trial, individuals like Ramon de Anglesola received substantial pensions, reflecting the influence of their noble lineage within the Order.

Furthermore, the familial connections within the Templar Order extended beyond Catalonia, as evidenced by Sibyl, the wife of the Viscount of Ampurias and mother of the Templar Hug of Ampurias. Hug's involvement in the Order and subsequent capture during the siege of Tripoli in 1289 underscored the transregional nature of Templar activities and the interconnectedness of noble lineages throughout the Mediterranean.

In conclusion, the Templar presence in Catalonia was characterized by strategic acquisitions, noble patronage, and territorial consolidation, all of which played a vital role in the defense and expansion of Catalonia's borders. Through alliances with Catalan nobility and the leadership of figures like Arnau de Torroja, the Templars established a formidable presence in the region, shaping its history and leaving a lasting legacy that continues to fascinate historians to this day.



Montpellier
Aigues-Mortes
Perpiñan
Colliure
Puigcerdà
Gerona
Huesca
Zaragoza
Lérida
Pina
Montblanch
Barcelona
Vilafranca del Penedes
CORONA DE ARAGON
Tarragona
Cambrils
Tortosa
Amposta
Morella
Peñíscola
Castellon
Burriana
Murviedro
Valencia
Ciudadela
Ciudad de Mallorca
Alcira
Játiva
Gandía
Denia
Ibiza
Reino de Mallorca
Plazas en las que los ciudadanos insulares disfrutaban de exenciones arancelarias.
Rutas comerciales mallorquinos documentadas hacia 1280
Rutas comerciales frecuentadas probablemente por los mercaderes baleares.
EL COMERCIO MALLORQUIN EN LA CORONA DE ARAGON HACIA 1285

Figure 17.4: Mallorcan trade in the Crown of Aragon around 1285. This map was taken from Antonio Riera Melis.[2]

Figure 17.5: The Mediterranean Sea, copied from the Catalan Atlas of Elisha ben Abraham Cresques (1325-1387). Source: Library of Congress, Geography and Map Division.

Figure 17.6: Ramon Llull knew our ancestor Francesc Desclergue in Mallorca. Left is a statue at the University of Barcelona, right is Ramon Llull (left) and Thomas le Myésier (right), taken from 'Illustration de Electorium parvum seu breviculum, 1321.'

Figure 17.7: Two views of the Templar's Chapel of Metz at night, highlighting its octagonal structure and the subtle yet striking details of its Romanesque-Gothic architecture under the soft illumination.

Figure 17.8: A compilation of photos showcasing the interior of the Templar's Chapel of Metz, featuring the intricate frescos, the sculpted keystone, and the detailed capitals that exemplify its rich historical and artistic heritage. The photo bottom-right shows frescos of templar roses, similar to those applied in the Chapel of Deerlijk in Figure 49.33 on page 1001 and also in Santa Coloma de Queralt, shown in Figure 29.16 on page 375 and Figure 29.17 on page 375.

Figure 17.9: The shield of Clergue in Occitania evolved into that of the Desclergues from Montblanc in a way that is totally logic in Heraldry. The one on the left is the oldest of Clergue, followed by two later evolved Clergue shields. The shield on the right is Desclergue. In Figure 23.1 on page 247, for instance, the coat of arms of the Desclergues, including the shield, on their house on the Main Square of Montblanc is shown. How this shield would later serve to form the one of the author and his descendants, is explained in Figure 23.2 on page 248. The other elements of the coat of arms of the Desclergues of Montblanc are explained in Figure 23.5 on page 250. The shield can also be found in ancient documents, as seen in Figure 23.4 on page 249.

Figure 17.10: Queen Petronella of Aragon and count Ramon Berenguer IV of Barcelona, painted by Filippo Ariosto in 1587.

Chapter 18

Our Desclergue Ancestry

18.1 The Genesis of Catalunya Nova: Conquest and Colonization

In the 12th and 13th centuries, a significant movement of settlers from the Occitan region, particularly around Toulouse, migrated into the newly conquered territories of New Catalonia, or Catalunya Nova, under the rule of the Counts of Barcelona. This movement was part of a broader pattern of conquest, colonization, and Christianization, pivotal in forming Europe during the medieval period.[3]

The Count of Barcelona spearheaded the conquest of New Catalonia, Ramon Berenguer IV, who successfully seized control over the territories from the Islamic Taifas of Tortosa and Lleida in the mid-12th century. These military victories were not just territorial expansions but also marked the beginning of significant demographic and cultural transformations in the region. The subsequent expulsion of a substantial portion of the Muslim population and the destruction of their social fabric necessitated a repopulation of the area with Christian settlers.

The Occitan settlers from the Toulouse region played a crucial role in this process. The motives for their migration were multifaceted, including push factors such as social upheaval, inheritance practices that disadvantaged younger sons, and periodic famines and crises back home. These factors were compounded by pull factors in New Catalonia, such as land and wealth accumulation opportunities through participation in the feudal colonial system established by the Counts of Barcelona.

Upon arrival, these settlers were not merely transplanting their previous lifestyles but actively participating in creating a new feudal society. They brought with them their agricultural practices, legal norms, and religious customs, which they integrated with the existing frameworks in New Catalonia. The presence of Occitan settlers is vividly documented through notarial records, which contain detailed transactions and demographic information illustrating these settlers' integration and economic activities.

Archival records from ecclesiastical sources like the Cathedral of Tortosa and the Cistercian monasteries of Poblet and Santes Creus offer rich insights into colonization. These documents reveal the mechanisms of land distribution and the establishment of new laws and societal norms. For historians, such records are invaluable for understanding the socio-economic underpinnings of medieval frontier societies.

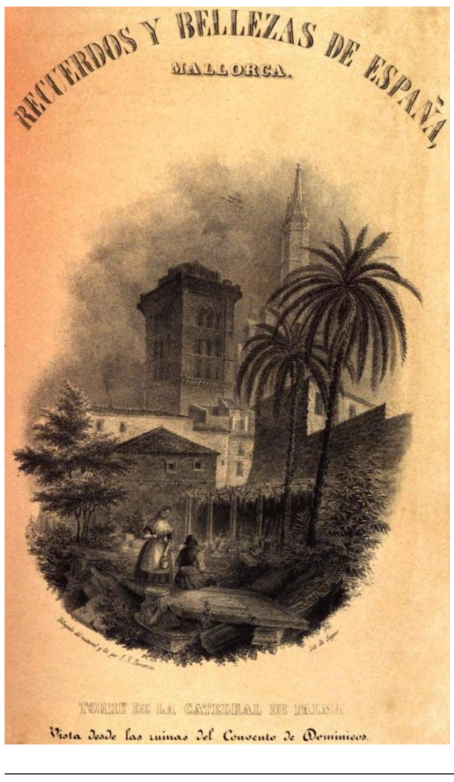
Furthermore, the analysis of anthroponyms in the records from this period shows a clear transition from predominantly patronymic names to those reflecting geographic or topographic origins. This shift indicates the broader social transformations in New Catalonia, where land and identity were redefined under the new Christian rule.

The migration of settlers from the Toulouse region into New Catalonia during the 12th and 13th centuries is a testament to the dynamic processes of medieval European history that involved conquest, colonization, and the reshaping of cultural landscapes, which determined the course of our ancestry.

18.2 The Role of the Knight's Templar in Catalonia's Expansion

The Knights Templar played a pivotal role in the broader context of the Christian Reconquista in the Iberian Peninsula, including the territorial expansions into New Catalonia during the 12th and 13th centuries. This period marked a crucial phase in Templar involvement in military and socio-economic structures across Europe, particularly within newly conquered territories such as those around Tortosa and Lleida.

Founded in 1119, the Order of the Knights Templar was established to protect Christian pilgrims traveling to the Holy Land. However, their role quickly expanded to include fighting in the Crusades and establishing a financial network across Christendom.



RECUERDOS Y BELLEZAS DE ESPAÑA
MALLORCA.
TORRE DE LA CATEDRAL DE PALMA
Vista desde las ruinas del Convento de Dominicos.

Figure 18.1: In 'Recuerdos y bellezas de España: Mallorca'[a], we read: Also then the Common showed the spirit of freedom that the concessions of the late Conqueror awakened in all hearts: the trustees did not leave without first extending a solemn protest on January 26, 1281 that they intended to carry out their mission without detriment to the privileges of the island. And the Juries, as interpreters of the distrust that had been engendered by the reservation of imposing new taxes and the promises to fully benefit the kings of Aragon stipulated by Don Jaime in the agreement, obtained from him with their requests a declaration that he did not intend to thereby harm their vassals, nor violating their privileges, nor imposing any servitude on them, and that they ratify their franchises for the third time. That year, the Juries were Pedro Saudera, Bernardo de Zaragoza, Francesc Desclergue (Francisco Desclergue), Guillelmo Valenti, Bernardo de Vich and Martin Mayol.

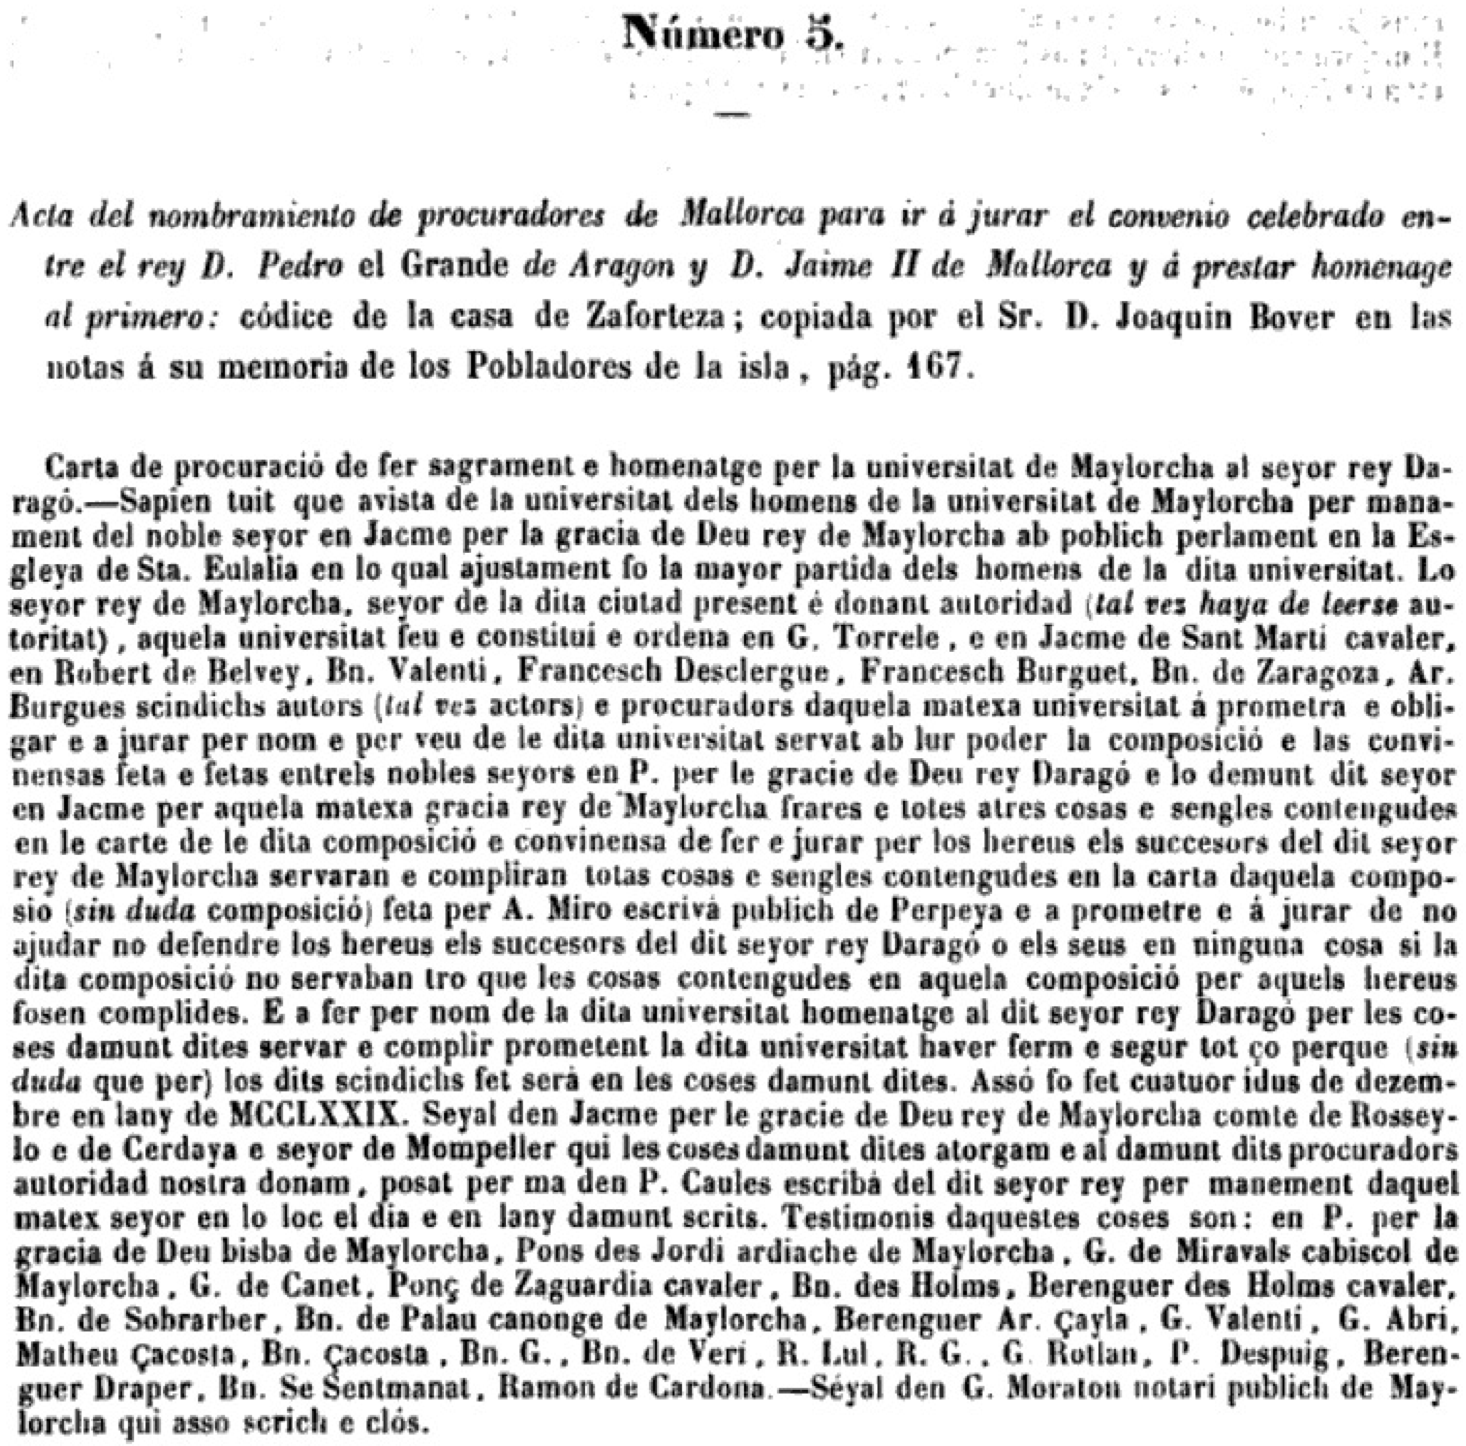
[a] Pablo Piferrer, "Recuerdos y bellezas de España: Mallorca", Jose Repullés, 1850, page 240

---

[3] Núria Pacheco Catalán, « Les migrations transfrontalières au Moyen Âge. Les Occitans en Catalogne Neuve (xiie-xiiie siècles) », Les Cahiers de Framespa [En ligne], 43 | 2023, mis en ligne le 01 décembre 2023, consulté le 07 mai 2024.



Número 5.

Acta del nombramiento de procuradores de Mallorca para ir á jurar el convenio celebrado entre el rey D. Pedro el Grande de Aragon y D. Jaime II de Mallorca y á prestar homenage al primero: códice de la casa de Zaforteza; copiada por el Sr. D. Joaquin Bover en las notas á su memoria de los Pobladores de la isla, pág. 167.

Carta de procuració de fer sagrament e homenatge per la universitat de Maylorcha al seyor rey Daragó.—Sapien tuit que avista de la universitat dels homens de la universitat de Maylorcha per manament del noble seyor en Jacme per la gracia de Deu rey de Maylorcha ab poblich perlament en la Esgleya de Sta. Eulalia en lo qual ajustament fo la mayor partida dels homens de la dita universitat. Lo seyor rey de Maylorcha, seyor de la dita ciutad present é donant autoridad (tal vez haya de leerse autoritat), aquela universitat feu e constitui e ordena en G. Torrele, e en Jacme de Sant Marti cavaler, en Robert de Belvey, Bn. Valenti, Francesch Desclergue, Francesch Burguet, Bn. de Zaragoza, Ar. Burgues scindichs autors (tal vez actors) e procuradors daquela matexa universitat á prometra e obligar e a jurar per nom e per veu de le dita universitat servat ab lur poder la composició e las convinensas feta e fetas entrels nobles seyors en P. per le gracie de Deu rey Daragó e lo demunt dit seyor en Jacme per aquela matexa gracia rey de Maylorcha frares e totes atres cosas e sengles contengudes en le carte de le dita composició e convinensa de fer e jurar per los hereus els succesors del dit seyor rey de Maylorcha servaran e compliran totas cosas e sengles contengudes en la carta daquela composio (sin duda composició) feta per A. Miro escrivá publich de Perpeya e a prometre e á jurar de no ajudar no defendre los hereus els succesors del dit seyor rey Daragó o els seus en ninguna cosa si la dita composició no servaban tro que les cosas contengudes en aquela composició per aquels hereus fosen complides. E a fer per nom de la dita universitat homenatge al dit seyor rey Daragó per les coses damunt dites servar e complir prometent la dita universitat haver ferm e segur tot ço perque (sin duda que per) los dits scindichs fet será en les coses damunt dites. Assó fo fet cuatuor idus de dezembre en lany de MCCLXXIX. Seyal den Jacme per le gracie de Deu rey de Maylorcha comte de Rosseylo e de Cerdaya e seyor de Mompeller qui les coses damunt dites atorgam e al damunt dits procuradors autoridad nostra donam, posat per ma den P. Caules escribá del dit seyor rey per manement daquel matex seyor en lo loc el dia e en lany damunt scrits. Testimonis daquestes coses son: en P. per la gracia de Deu bisba de Maylorcha, Pons des Jordi ardiache de Maylorcha, G. de Miravals cabiscol de Maylorcha, G. de Canet, Ponç de Zaguardia cavaler, Bn. des Holms, Berenguer des Holms cavaler, Bn. de Sobrarber, Bn. de Palau canonge de Maylorcha, Berenguer Ar. Çayla, G. Valenti, G. Abri, Matheu Çacosta, Bn. Çacosta, Bn. G., Bn. de Veri, R. Lul, R. G., G. Rotlan, P. Despuig, Berenguer Draper, Bn. Se Sentmanat, Ramon de Cardona.—Séyal den G. Moraton notari publich de Maylorcha qui asso scrich e clós.

Figure 18.2: Francesc Desclergue on page 267 in Recuerdos y bellezas de España: Mallorca’[1]

Clergue ó Desclergue (Francisco) ciudadano de Mallorca, en 1276 vistió la púrpura de la patria y en 1279 fué síndico al rey D. Pedro de Aragon.

Figure 18.3: Clergue or Desclergue (Francisco), a citizen of Mallorca, in 1276 he wore the purple of the country and in 1279 he was trustee to King D. Pedro of Aragon. "La púrpura de la patria" is a metaphorical expression in Spanish that refers to the highest honors or distinctions a person can receive from their country. The term "púrpura" (purple) symbolizes prestige, distinction, and honor, as historically purple has been associated with royalty and nobility. So, when someone is said to have "la púrpura de la patria," it means they have been recognized and honored by their nation for their achievements, contributions, or sacrifices, with nobility roots in Byzantine Spain. It signifies the highest level of recognition and honor bestowed upon an individual by their country.[a]

---

[a] Don Joaquin Maria Bover, "Los Pobladores de Mallorca despues de la última conquista por Don Jame I de Aragon", Palma, 1858. Page 35.

Figure 18.4: The Heraldic Shield of Borrell, described in Chapter 18.11.3. The use of a Gryphon on the Coat of Arms of the Desclergues in Montblanc, described in Chapter 23.3, may refer to the Borrell Shield, or else, to that of Bertrand Du Guesclin. As a matter of fact, the Gryphon used by Du Guesclin, as shown, For instance, in Figure 19.20 on page 175 in Chapter 19.14, and equally described in Chapter 19.26.6 also refers to Borrell, as he was a descendant of the House of Borrell of Barcelona, through his forefather Bertrand IV Du Guesclin, the son of Bertrand III Du Guesclin and Mahaut de Dol. Despite being Borrell, once a Count, the Counts of Barcelona used the Heraldic Shield of the County of Barcelona, however. The gryphon, shown in Figure 9.1 on page 79, was also popular in Phocaea from where the Greeks migrated to Empúries, where they married our patrilineal ancestor.

MEMORIA
DE
LOS POBLADORES DE MALLORCA
DESPUES DE LA ÚLTIMA CONQUISTA
por D. Jaime I de Aragon,
Y NOTICIA DE LAS HEREDADES ASIGNADAS
Á CADA UNO DE ELLOS
EN EL REPARTO GENERAL DE LA ISLA.
SACADA DE VARIOS CÓDICES,
HISTORIAS Y DOCUMENTOS INÉDITOS,
POR
D. Joaquin María Bover,
Socio correspondiente de la real Academia de buenas letras de Barcelona, y de otros cuerpos literarios, nacionales y estrangeros.

PALMA:
IMPRENTA DE LOS SOCIOS GELABERT Y VILLALONGA.
1838.

Figure 18.5: On page 141 and 142, we find that, in the year 1279, Guillermo de Torrella was trustee of Mallorca to King D. Pedro together with Jaime de San Marti, Roberto Bellvey, Bernardo Valentí, Francisco Desclergue, Francisco Burguet, Bemardo de Zaragoza and Amaldo Burgués, whose election was made by the great and general council gathered in the church of Santa Eulalia on December 10 of the aforementioned year, with present: Pedro de Moradine bishop of Mallorca, Ponce de Jardino archdeacon, Guillermo de Miravalls capiscol, Guillermo de Canet, Ponce Zaguardia, Bernardo de Ulmis, Berengario de Ulmís knight, Bernardo de Sobrarbér, Bernardo de Palau canons, Jaime Valentí, Guillem Valentí, Mateo Zacosta, Guillem Abrí, Mateo Zacosta, Bernardo Guillem de Veri, Ramón Llull, Guillermo Rollan, Pedro Despuig and others. Page 159 explains how Francesc Desclergue was establish at the University of Mallorca. On page 165, Francesch Desclergue is mentioned as juror of Mallorca.

In the context of the Iberian Peninsula, the Templars were instrumental in both military campaigns and stabilizing these new frontiers.

In New Catalonia, the Templars' presence became significant following the conquests of Tortosa and Lleida by Count Ramon Berenguer IV, who was keen on using their military expertise and resources. The Count granted the Templars extensive lands and privileges as a reward for their assistance in the conquests and to ensure the consolidation of Christian control in these areas. These lands often included strategic points along crucial trade routes and borders, which were vital for the defense and expansion of the Christian territories.

The establishment of Templar commanderies in New Catalonia served multiple functions. These commanderies were military bases, agricultural hubs, administrative centers, and part of a more extensive financial network that supported Templar activities across Europe and the Holy Land. In Tortosa, for example, the Templars established a significant commandery that managed large tracts of land and took part in the region's local governance and economic life. The commandery helped organize and secure the area, which was crucial for its integration into the Christian domains.

Moreover, the Templars' role in administrating and developing new settlements in the conquered territories was significant. They introduced advanced agricultural techniques, improved irrigation systems, and brought in new crops, which transformed the agricultural landscape of New Catalonia. Their land management and development efforts were instrumental in stabilizing these frontier regions, making them attractive for further settlement by Christian colonists, including those from Occitania.

The Templars also contributed to the spiritual and cultural landscape of New Catalonia by establishing churches and temples within their commanderies. They helped anchor the new Christian communities firmly in their faith.

The Knights Templar's dual role as fierce warriors and savvy administrators facilitated the successful integration of these new territories into the Christian dominions of the Counts of Barcelona. The Templars' legacy in New Catalonia is evident not only in the military victories that expanded Christian borders but also in the socio-economic transformation of the region, which they helped to administer and develop.

18.3 The Brothers Francesc and Arnau Clergue

The reader will find the descendants of the brothers Arnau and Francesc Clergue in Figure 18.15 on page 135. In the later decades of the 12th century, the Reconquista and territorial expansions in Catalonia offered unprecedented opportunities for individuals across Christendom to gain land and prestige. Among these individuals were Arnau Clergue and his elder brother, Francesc Clergue, both hailing from Albi in the Toulouse region. Their divergent paths illuminate the socio-political dynamics of the time, particularly within the framework of the Knights Templar and the feudal structures of newly conquered lands.

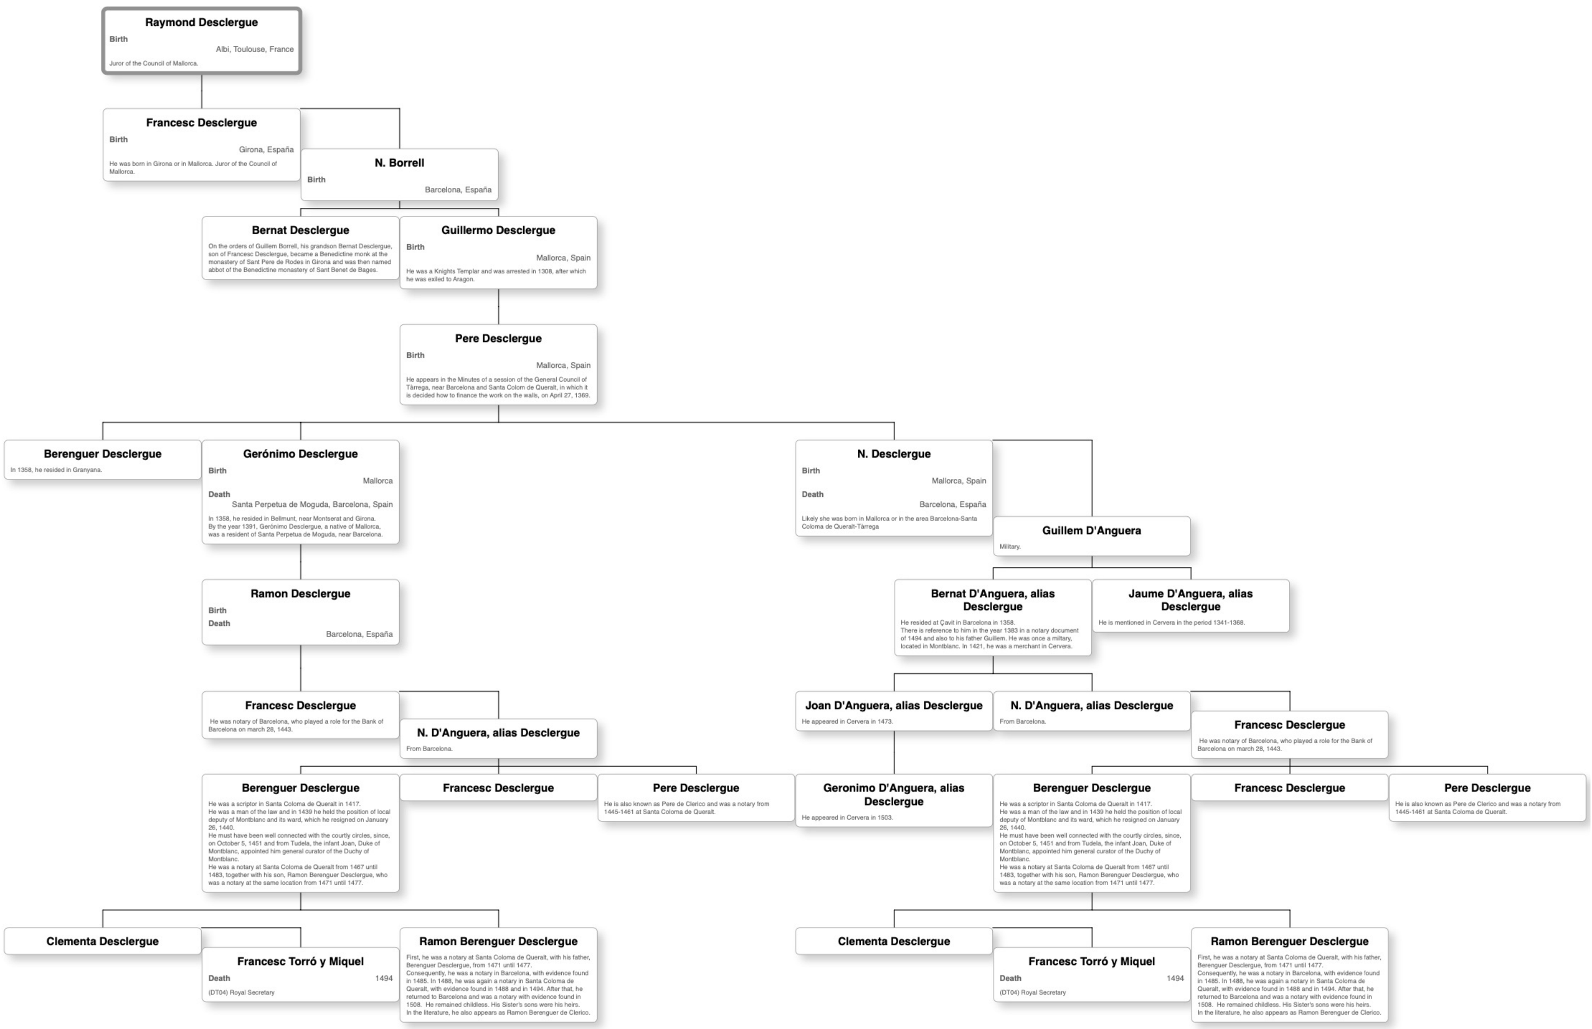
As the eldest, Francesc inherited the family's estate in Albi, a common practice that often left younger siblings like Arnau seeking fortunes elsewhere. The expansion of the Christian territories in Catalonia under the Counts of Barcelona presented such an opportunity for Arnau, who, with great courage and determination, joined the military efforts of the Knights Templar. His involvement was not just a quest for land but also a spiritual and social endeavor, aligning with the Templars' dual role as both a monastic order and military force.

A pivotal September 30, 1180 document, provided in Figure 18.14 on page 134, provides crucial insights into Arnau's circumstances and achievements. This document records a significant transaction involving Berenguer Arnau d'Anglesola, a local nobleman who dedicated his body and soul to the militia of the Temple (the Knights Templar). In this act, he also distributed his lands and rights among various parties, including a specific mention of the lands of Arnau Clergue. This land was explicitly exempted from a broader grant to the Monastery of Poblet, indicating Arnau's distinct and notable status in the region.

The document specifies that alongside the Templar and monastic affiliations, the rights and lands in Barbens, a strategic location along the Segre River near Lleida, were intricately managed and redistributed among various local stakeholders. Arnau Clergue's holding within this framework suggests that by 1180, he had established himself sufficiently to warrant individual mention in these significant legal and territorial rearrangements. This mention not only underscores his integration into the feudal and military structure of New Catalonia but also his successful alignment with the Templar's strategic interests in the region.

The nature of Arnau's landholding and his role in local society would have been multifaceted. As a Templar knight, he would have had military responsibilities, including defending the Christian frontier against possible Moorish counterattacks and participating in further campaigns of the Reconquista. Economically, his landholdings would contribute to the region's agricultural output, supporting the local economy and the sustenance of the Templar order. Socially, Arnau would likely have played a role in the regional administration of justice and governance, typical of Templar knights, who were often integrated into the local noble hierarchy.

Arnau Clergue's story is a testament to the mobility and fluidity of the medieval European social structure, driven by the expansive and transformative forces of the Crusades and the Reconquista. His successful establishment in Catalonia reflects the broader



Raymond Desclergue
Birth
Albi, Toulouse, France
Juror of the Council of Mallorca.
Francesc Desclergue
Birth
Girona, España
He was born in Girona or in Mallorca. Juror of the Council of Mallorca.
N. Borrell
Birth
Barcelona, España
Bernat Desclergue
On the orders of Guillem Borrell, his grandson Bernat Desclergue, son of Francesc Desclergue, became a Benedictine monk at the monastery of Sant Pere de Rodes in Girona and was then named abbot of the Benedictine monastery of Sant Benet de Bages.
Guillermo Desclergue
Birth
Mallorca, Spain
He was a Knights Templar and was arrested in 1308, after which he was exiled to Aragon.
Pere Desclergue
Birth
Mallorca, Spain
He appears in the Minutes of a session of the General Council of Tàrrega, near Barcelona and Santa Colom de Queralt, in which it is decided how to finance the work on the walls, on April 27, 1369.
Berenguer Desclergue
In 1358, he resided in Granyana.
Gerónimo Desclergue
Birth
Mallorca
Death
Santa Perpetua de Moguda, Barcelona, Spain
In 1358, he resided in Bellmunt, near Montserat and Girona. By the year 1391, Gerónimo Desclergue, a native of Mallorca, was a resident of Santa Perpetua de Moguda, near Barcelona.
N. Desclergue
Birth
Mallorca, Spain
Death
Barcelona, España
Likely she was born in Mallorca or in the area Barcelona-Santa Coloma de Queralt-Tàrrega
Guillem D'Anguera
Military.
Ramon Desclergue
Birth
Death
Barcelona, España
Bernat D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He resided at Çavit in Barcelona in 1358. There is reference to him in the year 1383 in a notary document of 1494 and also to his father Guillem. He was once a miltary, located in Montblanc. In 1421, he was a merchant in Cervera.
Jaume D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He is mentioned in Cervera in the period 1341-1368.
Francesc Desclergue
He was notary of Barcelona, who played a role for the Bank of Barcelona on march 28, 1443.
N. D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
From Barcelona.
Joan D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He appeared in Cervera in 1473.
N. D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
From Barcelona.
Francesc Desclergue
He was notary of Barcelona, who played a role for the Bank of Barcelona on march 28, 1443.
Berenguer Desclergue
He was a scriptor in Santa Coloma de Queralt in 1417. He was a man of the law and in 1439 he held the position of local deputy of Montblanc and its ward, which he resigned on January 26, 1440. He must have been well connected with the courtly circles, since, on October 5, 1451 and from Tudela, the infant Joan, Duke of Montblanc, appointed him general curator of the Duchy of Montblanc. He was a notary at Santa Coloma de Queralt from 1467 until 1483, together with his son, Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, who was a notary at the same location from 1471 until 1477.
Francesc Desclergue
Pere Desclergue
He is also known as Pere de Clerico and was a notary from 1445-1461 at Santa Coloma de Queralt.
Geronimo D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He appeared in Cervera in 1503.
Berenguer Desclergue
He was a scriptor in Santa Coloma de Queralt in 1417. He was a man of the law and in 1439 he held the position of local deputy of Montblanc and its ward, which he resigned on January 26, 1440. He must have been well connected with the courtly circles, since, on October 5, 1451 and from Tudela, the infant Joan, Duke of Montblanc, appointed him general curator of the Duchy of Montblanc. He was a notary at Santa Coloma de Queralt from 1467 until 1483, together with his son, Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, who was a notary at the same location from 1471 until 1477.
Francesc Desclergue
Pere Desclergue
He is also known as Pere de Clerico and was a notary from 1445-1461 at Santa Coloma de Queralt.
Clementa Desclergue
Francesc Torró y Miquel
Death
1494
(DT04) Royal Secretary
Ramon Berenguer Desclergue
First, he was a notary at Santa Coloma de Queralt, with his father, Berenguer Desclergue, from 1471 until 1477. Consequently, he was a notary in Barcelona, with evidence found in 1485. In 1488, he was again a notary in Santa Coloma de Queralt, with evidence found in 1488 and in 1494. After that, he returned to Barcelona and was a notary with evidence found in 1508. He remained childless. His Sister's sons were his heirs. In the literature, he also appears as Ramon Berenguer de Clerico.
Clementa Desclergue
Francesc Torró y Miquel
Death
1494
(DT04) Royal Secretary
Ramon Berenguer Desclergue
First, he was a notary at Santa Coloma de Queralt, with his father, Berenguer Desclergue, from 1471 until 1477. Consequently, he was a notary in Barcelona, with evidence found in 1485. In 1488, he was again a notary in Santa Coloma de Queralt, with evidence found in 1488 and in 1494. After that, he returned to Barcelona and was a notary with evidence found in 1508. He remained childless. His Sister's sons were his heirs. In the literature, he also appears as Ramon Berenguer de Clerico.

Figure 18.6: The descendants of Raymond Desclergue. In Figure 25.6 on page 275, the ancestors of Clementa Desclergue are shown, through whom the Desclergues of Montblanc took the name Desclergue, as they were the heirs of Clementa's brother, Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.

Figure 18.7: On September 12 of 1276, Jaume II, at the age of 33, was crowned as King of Mallorca in the Church of Santa Eulàlia. He would reign until 1311. The person handing over the book and the crown is Francesc Desclergue, in Chapter 18.11, who served as the Jurat. The three images depict the same scene, but are from different historical sources. A close-up of Francesc Desclergue is shown in Figure 18.8. One of the images comes from "al Llibre de privilegis dels reis de Mallorca in 1334" (Arxiu Històric Municipal de Palma). The other is a "miniatura del Llibre dels Privilegis - Jaume II i les ordinacions de l'any 1300." The assertion that the Desclergues possessed 'purple blood' or belonged to the 'purpura de la patria' is substantiated not only by written records but also visually corroborated in the presented images, where members of the Desclergues family are depicted wearing purple attire.

Figure 18.8: Francesc Desclergue, in Chapter 18.11. Close-up of Figure 18.7.

Figure 18.9: King James I of Aragon (Montpelier 1208 - Valencia 1276) conquered Mallorca and was thereby helped by prominent persons, such as Raymond Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.10.

Figure 18.10: Jeanne de Toulouse (1220–1271), Countess of Toulouse and Marquise of Provence, depicted here, was a French noblewoman. Born in Toulouse, she married Alphonse of France, brother of Louis IX, and accompanied him on the Seventh and Eighth Crusades. After Alphonse's death in 1271, Jeanne passed away just days later in Sienna. She influenced her cousin, King James I of Aragon, shown in Figure 18.9, on page 133, in establishing his confidence in Raymond Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.10.

Guillem Borrell
Birth Girona, España
Guillem Borrell stemmed from the House of the Counts of Barcelona.

Guillem Borrell
Notary in Barcelona in 1330.

N. Borrell
Birth Barcelona, España

Francesc Desclergue
Birth Girona, España
He was born in Girona or in Mallorca. Juror of the Council of Mallorca.

Pere Borrell
Birth 1275 Barcelona, España
Death Perpignan, France

Bernat Desclergue
On the orders of Guillem Borrell, his grandson Bernat Desclergue, son of Francesc Desclergue, became a Benedictine monk at the monastery of Sant Pere de Rodes in Girona and was then named abbot of the Benedictine monastery of Sant Benet de Bages.

Guillermo Desclergue
Birth Mallorca, Spain
He was a Knights Templar and was arrested in 1308, after which he was exiled to Aragon.

Pere Desclergue
Birth Mallorca, Spain
He appears in the Minutes of a session of the General Council of Tàrrega, near Barcelona and Santa Colom de Queralt, in which it is decided how to finance the work on the walls, on April 27, 1369.

Berenguer Desclergue
In 1358, he resided in Granyana.

Gerónimo Desclergue
Birth Mallorca
Death Santa Perpetua de Moguda, Barcelona, Spain
In 1358, he resided in Bellmunt, near Montserat and Girona.
By the year 1391, Gerónimo Desclergue, a native of Mallorca, was a resident of Santa Perpetua de Moguda, near Barcelona.

N. Desclergue
Birth Mallorca, Spain
Death Barcelona, España
Likely she was born in Mallorca or in the area Barcelona-Santa Coloma de Queralt-Tàrrega

Guillem D'Anguera
Military.

Ramon Desclergue
Birth
Death Barcelona, España

Bernat D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He resided at Çavit in Barcelona in 1358.
There is reference to him in the year 1383 in a notary document of 1494 and also to his father Guillem. He was once a miltary, located in Montblanc. In 1421, he was a merchant in Cervera.

Jaume D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He is mentioned in Cervera in the period 1341-1368.

Francesc Desclergue
He was notary of Barcelona, who played a role for the Bank of Barcelona on march 28, 1443.

N. D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
From Barcelona.

Joan D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He appeared in Cervera in 1473.

N. D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
From Barcelona.

Francesc Desclergue
He was notary of Barcelona, who played a role for the Bank of Barcelona on march 28, 1443.

Berenguer Desclergue
He was a scriptor in Santa Coloma de Queralt in 1417.
He was a man of the law and in 1439 he held the position of local deputy of Montblanc and its ward, which he resigned on January 26, 1440.
He must have been well connected with the courtly circles, since, on October 5, 1451 and from Tudela, the infant Joan, Duke of Montblanc, appointed him general curator of the Duchy of Montblanc.
He was a notary at Santa Coloma de Queralt from 1467 until 1483, together with his son, Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, who was a notary at the same location from 1471 until 1477.

Francesc Desclergue

Pere Desclergue
He is also known as Pere de Clerico and was a notary from 1445-1461 at Santa Coloma de Queralt.

Geronimo D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He appeared in Cervera in 1503.

Berenguer Desclergue
He was a scriptor in Santa Coloma de Queralt in 1417.
He was a man of the law and in 1439 he held the position of local deputy of Montblanc and its ward, which he resigned on January 26, 1440.
He must have been well connected with the courtly circles, since, on October 5, 1451 and from Tudela, the infant Joan, Duke of Montblanc, appointed him general curator of the Duchy of Montblanc.
He was a notary at Santa Coloma de Queralt from 1467 until 1483, together with his son, Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, who was a notary at the same location from 1471 until 1477.

Francesc Desclergue

Pere Desclergue
He is also known as Pere de Clerico and was a notary from 1445-1461 at Santa Coloma de Queralt.

Figure 18.11: Descendant generations of Guillem Borrell.

Guillermo de Torrella, señor del Valles en Cataluña, sobrino y apoderado del antecedente, fundó en 1231 el hospital de Santa María Magdalena de esta ciudad, que despues fué casa de dueñas y actualmente monasterio de religiosas agustinas, y en 1262 fué uno de los que promovieron la fundacion del monasterio de Clarisas. En el año 1279 fué síndico de Mallorca al rey D. Pedro, juntamente con Jaime de San Martí, Roberto Bellvey, Bernardo Valentí, Francisco Desclergue, Francisco Burguet, Bernardo de Zaragoza y Arnaldo Burgues, cuya eleccion hizo el grande y general Consejo reunido en la iglesia de Santa Eulalia el dia 10 de diciembre del referido año, hallándose presentes: Pedro de Muredine obispo de Mallorca, Ponce de Jardino arcediano, Guillermo de Miravalls capiscol, Guillermo de Canet, Ponce Zaguardia, Bernardo de Úlmis, Berengario de Úlmis caballero, Bernardo de Sobrarber, Bernardo de Palau canónigos, Jaime Valentí, Guillem Valentí, Mateo Zacosta, Guillem Abrí, Mateo Zacosta, Bernardo Guillem de Verí, Ramon Lull, Guillermo Rollan, Pedro Despuig y otros.

Figure 18.12: Francesc Desclergue in Juan Dameto, "Historia general del Reino de Mallorca, Volume 2", Imprenta Nacional a cargo de D. Juan Guasp y Pascual, 1841, p. 858-859.

juramento. Á 10 de Diciembre de 1279 juntáronse en Santa Eulalia en parlamento público la mayor parte de los hombres de la universidad (a), dice el acta; y asistiendo y dando autoridad ó licencia el príncipe, la universidad ó general consejo hizo, constituyó y ordenó que fuesen sus síndicos y procuradores para prometer y jurar la observancia del tratado Guillelmo Torrella, Jaime de Sant Martí caballero, Roberto de Belvey, Bernardo de Çaragoça y Arnaldo Burgués (b). Firmó el rey el acta del nombramiento y dió su autoridad á los elegidos; y asistieron como testigos el obispo D. Pedro de Muredine, Ponce de Jordi ó Jardino arcediano, Guillelmo de Miravals cabiscol, Guillelmo de Canet, Ponce de Çaguardia, Bernardo de Olms, Berenguer de Olms, Bernardo de Sobrarbe, Bernardo de Palau canónigo de Mallorca, Berenguer Arnaldo Ça-illa, Guillelmo Valentí (1), Guillelmo Abrí, Mateo Çacosta, Bernardo Guillelmo de Verí, Raimundo Lull, Ramón Guillelmo, Guillelmo Rotlán ó Roldán, Pedro Despuig, Berenguer Draper, Bernardo de Sentmenat y Ramón de Cardona (2). También entonces el común hizo muestra del espíritu de libertad que las concesiones del difunto conquistador en todos los corazones despertaron: los síndicos no partieron sin extender antes á 26 de Enero de 1281 solemne protesta de que entendían desempeñar su misión sin detrimento de los privilegios de la isla (a); y los jurados, como intérpretes de la desconfianza que habían engendrado la reserva de imponer nuevos tributos y las promesas de valer en todo á los reyes de Aragón estipuladas por D. Jaime en el convenio, alcanzaron de él con sus instancias una declaración de que no intentaba perjudicar con ello á sus vasallos, ni atentar á sus fueros, ni imponerles servidumbre alguna, y que por tercera vez ratificase sus franquicias. Eran aquel año jurados Pedro Saudera (b) caballero, Bernardo de Çaragoça, Francisco Desclergue, Guillelmo Valentí, Bernardo de Vich y Martín Mayol.

(a) Debe entenderse de los prohombres y personas oficiales, no de los simples ciudadanos, pues la porción de Santa Eulalia edificada á la sazón, apenas si era capaz de unos pocos centenares de personas.

(b) Atenido á los documentos del archivo, y cotejado en varios códices su tenor, diré que fueron ocho y no cinco los síndicos nombrados en Santa Eulalia, á saber: Guillermo de Torrella y Jaime de Sant Martí caballeros, Roberto de Bellvehí, Bernardo Valentí, Francisco Des Clergue, Francisco Burguet, Bernardo de Çaragoça y Arnaldo Burgués. En lugar de Jaime de Sant Martí fué elegido en otra reunión tenida el 18 de Febrero siguiente en el convento de Dominicos Fernando Rodríguez militar. Nada de testigos en el acta, según los expresados códices, y Dameto no expresa de dónde tomó sus nombres.

(1) Dameto añade Jaime Valenti (a).

(2) Aunque este antiguo cronista con su acostumbrada diligencia extracta en su narración este instrumento, con todo al Sr. Bover se debe su publicación íntegra, tal como está en un precioso códice propio de la casa de Zaforteza: por esto reproducimos su copia en el n.º 5 del APÉNDICE á esta 2.ª Parte.

El prelado que se menciona es el de Mallorca; mas bien pudiera ser que entre los caballeros los hubiese de Rosellón, Cerdaña y Cataluña, pues dan margen á suponerlo los apellidos y el asistir y apuntarse meramente como testigos, lo cual supone no participación en el general consejo, sino que formaban la comitiva del rey como en tales casos se acostumbraba.

(a) En cambio omite otros. Es trabajo excusado notar las diferencias entre la presente lista y la de Dameto.

(a) Dicha protesta de los expresados síndicos hízose con efecto en el palacio del obispo; pero en su acta tal como en el archivo existe, tampoco consta el nombre de aquél ni de ningún canónigo, ni de otro testigo más que de estos cuatro: Guillermo Canet, Ponce de Ça Guardia, Bernardo Dalmau juez y Pedro de Caldes escribano.

(b) Debe leerse Ça Verdera.

(c) Cómo y por quién se convocaba queda dicho en la nota tres páginas atrás; los consejeros eran nombrados, según el sistema que rigió sucesivamente, por cédulas ó listas parroquiales y mutua designación sometida luego á escrutinio, ó por insaculación y sorteo. Estudiado bien el punto, resta poco lugar á inducciones. Es importante fijarse en la respectiva representación de cada estamento, pues los caballeros ó militares no tenían en el consejo sino la mitad de la de los otros tres brazos de ciudadanos, mercaderes y menestrales, y los payeses una mitad de la suma de los consejeros de la ciudad, ó sea un tercio del total numérico, que era la proporción constante en que entraban los pueblos de la isla respecto de la capital, así en cargos como en beneficios. Varió repetidamente de 250 á 84 el número de los consejeros, como se ha visto en la parte histórica; pero la relación entre los estamentos fué la misma siempre, menos en los últimos tiempos, en que la balanza se ladeó hacia los principales en detrimento de los menores.

Figure 18.13: Francesc Desclergue and his role in Mallorca.

13

1180 setembre 30

Berenguer Arnau d'Anglesola deixa el seu cos a la milícia del Temple, i juntament amb Guillem, fill seu, li dóna tots els seus honors i drets de Barbens, a excepció de la terra d'Arnau Clergue, que dóna al monestir de Poblet. També dóna al Temple i a Poblet a mitges altres drets sobre diverses terres de franquesa repartits segons l'albir de Berenguer de Boixadors i de Constantí. Berenguer Arnau reconeix haver rebut del Temple 500 morabetins.

Acta carta II kalendas octobris, anni ab Incarnatione Christi MºCºLXXXº.

Llatí. 300 × 135 mm.

J. SANTACANA TORT, El Monasterio de Poblet, Barcelona 1974, 689-691, núm. 232.

Temple, milícia del. Poblet. Barbens. Balaguer. Vilanova de Balaguer. Segre, riu. Gardeny (Lleida). Urgell, comtat d'.

Pere, capellà (templer?) i escrivà. Berenguer Arnau d'Anglesola. Guillem d'Anglesola, fill de Berenguer Arnau. Arsenda, muller de Guillem d'Anglesola. Guillem de Cervera, marit de Berenguera d'Anglesola. Guillem de Cervera, pare i avi dels homònims. Pere de Bellvís. Arnau de Rubió. Berenguer de Boixadors. Constantí. Arnau Clergue. Ramon Guillem de Conques. Bernat de Cass... Bernat de Tàrrega. Bernat de Claret. Arnau de Torroja, mestre templer. Bernat d'Albespí, comanador templer de Gardeny. Ponç de Balaguer, templer. Bernat de Cornellà, templer. Berenguer de Lluçà, templer. Ermengol VII, comte d'Urgell.

Figure 18.14: The September 30, 1180 document[2] contains a significant transaction between Berenguer Arnau d'Anglesola, a prominent High Middle Ages nobleman, and two key institutions: the Templars and the abbey of Poblet. Berenguer Arnau d'Anglesola contributes and dedicates himself and his son Guillem to the Templar Order. This dedication is symbolic but includes tangible donations. Berenguer Arnau donates all his honors and rights in Barbens, a crucial and commercial location, to save property belonging to Arnau Clergue, which he gives to Poblet Monastery. The Templars and Poblet received their properties by the medieval custom of nobility, which granted land and privileges to religious organizations for spiritual protection and alliances. Berenguer Arnau and the Templars agree to share property rights in different regions, with management discretion given to Berenguer de Boixadors and Constantí, indicating a complicated governance network and shared interests. The record notes that Berenguer Arnau got 500 morabatins from the Templars, implying a reciprocal connection rather than charity. This financial transaction may indicate a military responsibility or noble-Templar assistance and assurance.

N. Clergue or des Clergue
Arnau Clergue or des Clergue
Francesc Clergue or des Clergue
Birth
Albi, Toulouse, France
Pere Clergue or des Clergue
Raymond Desclergue
Birth
Albi, Toulouse, France
Juror of the Council of Mallorca.
Francesc Desclergue
Birth
Girona, España
He was born in Girona or in Mallorca. Juror of the Council of Mallorca.
N. Borrell
Birth
Barcelona, España
Bernat Desclergue
On the orders of Guillem Borrell, his grandson Bernat Desclergue, son of Francesc Desclergue, became a Benedictine monk at the monastery of Sant Pere de Rodes in Girona and was then named abbot of the Benedictine monastery of Sant Benet de Bages.
Guillermo Desclergue
Birth
Mallorca, Spain
He was a Knights Templar and was arrested in 1308, after which he was exiled to Aragon.
Pere Desclergue
Birth
Mallorca, Spain
He appears in the Minutes of a session of the General Council of Tàrrega, near Barcelona and Santa Colom de Queralt, in which it is decided how to finance the work on the walls, on April 27, 1369.
Berenguer Desclergue
In 1358, he resided in Granyana.
Gerónimo Desclergue
Birth
Mallorca
Death
Santa Perpetua de Moguda, Barcelona, Spain
In 1358, he resided in Bellmunt, near Montserat and Girona. By the year 1391, Gerónimo Desclergue, a native of Mallorca, was a resident of Santa Perpetua de Moguda, near Barcelona.
N. Desclergue
Birth
Mallorca, Spain
Death
Barcelona, España
Likely she was born in Mallorca or in the area Barcelona-Santa Coloma de Queralt-Tàrrega
Guillem D'Anguera
Military.
Ramon Desclergue
Birth
Death
Barcelona, España
Bernat D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He resided at Çavit in Barcelona in 1358. There is reference to him in the year 1383 in a notary document of 1494 and also to his father Guillem. He was once a miltary, located in Montblanc. In 1421, he was a merchant in Cervera.
Jaume D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He is mentioned in Cervera in the period 1341-1368.
Francesc Desclergue
He was notary of Barcelona, who played a role for the Bank of Barcelona on march 28, 1443.
N. D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
From Barcelona.
Joan D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He appeared in Cervera in 1473.
N. D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
From Barcelona.
Francesc Desclergue
He was notary of Barcelona, who played a role for the Bank of Barcelona on march 28, 1443.

Figure 18.15: The brothers Arnau and Francesc Desclergue and their descendants.

patterns of land redistribution, military service, and religious commitment that characterized the era, a time of profound historical significance. His life and achievements provide a window into the complex interplay of feudal loyalty, familial duty, and spiritual devotion that defined the lives of many during the high Middle Ages in the newly Christian territories of the Iberian Peninsula.

The role of Frances Desclergue was similar to that of Arnau in that he was also a Knight's Templar, but he remained in Albi. The Clergues would, however, migrate again when the son of Francesc, Raymond Clergue, outlined in Chapter 18.10, would join the conquest of Mallorca in 1229.

The Conquest of Mallorca was a significant military campaign initiated by King James I of Aragon, also known as James the Conqueror. The campaign began in December 1229, aiming to seize the Balearic island of Mallorca from Muslim rule. The strategic importance of Mallorca, located in the Mediterranean Sea, made it a valuable asset for controlling maritime routes and enhancing trade and military logistics. The conquest was successfully concluded by 1231, leading to the incorporation of Mallorca into the Crown of Aragon and marking a significant extension of Christian dominions in the Mediterranean region and the settlement of our ancestral branch of the Desclerues in Mallorca.

18.3.1 Pere Clergue, Arnau Clergue's Son

A document[4] dated September 9, 1252, emerges in a context that bridges ecclesiastical authority, feudal lordship, and community rights, reflecting the evolving dynamics of medieval Catalan society. This document concerns a judicial decision presided over by Pere de Queralt, acting as an arbitrator, to resolve a boundary dispute involving territorial demarcations between the lands of Vilosell and those of l'Albi (in Spain). This dispute involved several parties: Berenguer de Castellots, abbot of the monastery of Poblet, the community of Vilosell, Ramon Pere, the lord of l'Albi, his son Arnau, and the men of l'Albi.

Pere de Queralt's arbitration concludes with the setting of boundary stones ('fites') and both parties agreeing to respect these boundaries under the penalty of 100 morabetins—a substantial sum indicating the importance of the dispute.

Pere Clergue, mentioned as a witness in this document, ties back to the earlier one from September 30, 1180, explained in Chapter 18.3, where his father Arnau Clergue's land was excluded from a donation to the Templars and given to the monastery of Poblet. By 1252, Pere appears to have achieved a significant professional status, likely as a notary or scribe. His presence as a witness in such an important legal document further suggests that the Clergue family maintained or even enhanced their local social standing over the decades.

Pere's cousin, Raymond Clergue, would bet on Mallorca to establish his career, as explained in Chapter 18.10.

18.4 Excile from Albi Langedoc 1209-1229

In contrast with Arnau Clergue and his son Pere Clergue, highlighted in Chapter 18.3, the events in Albi and Toulouse were detrimental to the branch of Francesc Desclergue, the heir of the family, who has stayed in Albi and whose son, Raymond Clergue, would join the conquest of Mallorca, becoming Ramon Desclergue, and establish our ancestral family line outside Occitania. The reasons for resettling the head of the family were linked with the Albigensian Crusade in Toulouse, which caused turmoil and probably broke the Clergue family in pieces. Indeed, some may have been Cathars, while others, such as Raymond Clergue, followed Rome and preferred the Knight's Templar.

The Albigensian Crusade (1209-1229), also known as the crusade against the Albigensians, represents a significant historical event in which the Catholic Church mobilized forces to combat heretical movements, primarily Catharism and, to a lesser extent, Valdeism. The origins of this crusade can be traced back to the twelfth century, with the Council of Lombers marking the formal recognition of the "Albigensian heresy." It's notable that this designation was applied to the region without it necessarily being more Cathar than its neighboring areas.

---

[4] Josep Torné i Cubells, "Catàleg de Pergamins de l'actual Arxiu del Monestir de Poblet", p. 42.

The stronghold of this heretical movement was primarily situated in Languedoc, where two influential families, the House of Toulouse and the House of Trencavel, held sway. However, internal divisions among these families hindered a united front against the encroaching crusaders. While Count Raymond VI of Toulouse eventually capitulated and aligned with the Church, Raimond-Roger Trencavel chose to resist the crusade. Subsequently, the crusaders, having captured Béziers and Carcassonne and imprisoned Trencavel, entrusted leadership to one of their own, Simon de Montfort, in 1209. What began as a campaign against heresy swiftly transformed into a conquest, initially serving the interests of Montfort and later, following his demise in 1218 and the subsequent failure of his son Amaury, becoming a venture for the crown.

Despite the shifting political dynamics, the suppression of Catharism persisted, initially under the auspices of local bishops and later through the establishment of the Inquisition in 1233. The territorial repercussions of the crusade were profound, with the viscounties of Carcassonne, Albi, and Béziers being annexed to the royal domain by 1226, and the County of Toulouse passing to Alphonse de Poitiers, brother of Saint Louis, in 1249 before being fully annexed in 1271. Languedoc, which had previously fallen within the sphere of influence of the Crown of Aragon, gradually came under the dominion of the King of France by the end of the thirteenth century.

By the close of the century, the scourge of Catharism had been largely eradicated from Languedoc, with only a scattering of adherents finding refuge in Lombardy.

18.5 The Conquest of the Arab Kingdom of Mallorca

The Desclergue family's migration from Languedoc to Mallorca is exemplary of medieval Mediterranean dynamics. Rooted in their time's political and economic upheavals, the Desclergues undertook their journey reflecting a strategic response to shifting fortunes and opportunities. While still in the Languedoc, they tried to establish connections with Barcelona.

During the medieval era, Barcelona emerged as a bustling trade and finance hub, exerting its influence over maritime Aragon. For families like the Desclergues, proximity to this economic powerhouse presented an avenue for advancement. Descendants of Raymond Clergue and his progeny, they sought to carve their niche within Barcelona's orbit while maintaining a distinct presence outside the city walls. This strategic positioning allowed them to compete effectively against rivals such as Genoa, leveraging their notarial positions and financial acumen to ascend the social and political ladder.

However, the allure of Barcelona's prosperity was not the sole driving force behind the Desclergues' migration. Faced with limited prospects for advancement in their native Occitania and in their guest town, Barcelona, they cast their gaze further afield in search of new opportunities.

The conquest of the Arab Kingdom of Mallorca occurred in 1229. It was carried out by King James I of Aragon (also known as James the Conqueror) with the support of troops from Catalonia and other parts of the Crown of Aragon. This conquest marked the beginning of Christian rule on the island of Mallorca, which was previously under Islamic control.

The conquest of the Arab Kingdom of Mallorca emerged as a promising venture, offering unexplored markets and the potential for social and economic ascent. Unlike the saturated conquest of Valencia, Mallorca represented a frontier ripe for exploitation, albeit fraught with risks.

The Desclergues, imbued with a familial ethos of enterprise and exploration, embraced the challenge with gusto. Their migration to Mallorca symbolized a broader pattern of familial ascendancy driven by a desire to expand horizons and capitalize on emerging trends. In Mallorca, they found a melting pot of cultures and commerce where Arab, Jewish, and Christian influences intermingled to create a vibrant society.

The Desclergues thrived in their new surroundings, leveraging their expertise in commerce and finance to navigate the complexities of Mediterranean trade networks. Their adaptability and resilience underscored their ability to seize opportunities amidst geopolitical flux, leaving an indelible mark on Mallorca's economic and social landscape.

18.6 Banking in Mallorca

The kingdom of Mallorca was located in the 13th and 14th centuries at the epicenter of the great Mediterranean trade routes. In this world in full transformation, private banking institutions will emerge, which will provide important services to merchants such as currency exchange, deposits, exchanges and loans. For this reason, we already detected five private banks in the middle of the 13th century, in the last decades of the same century and the first decades of the 14th century their number grew to six or seven, reducing to three or four banking institutions at the end of the 14th century.

The need felt by institutions, such as the Crown and the municipality, to manage their income and taxes more efficiently determined the founding of a royal bank ('taula del senyor rei'), in 1301, linked to the monetary reform of the kingdom, and a municipal bank ('taula de la Universitat') in 1321, emerged in the context of the economic collaboration of Mallorca with the company of the conquest of Sardinia, becoming after Venice the oldest public banking institutions in Europe.

18.7 Trade in Mallorca

The economic interactions of Mallorca during the thirteenth century witnessed significant engagement in transatlantic trade routes, particularly with Ligurian sailors navigating to England and Flanders. The involvement of Mallorcan sailors in Atlantic commerce became evident by May 1296. This period also marked pivotal developments in trade regulations, with Edward I of England granting the Mercatory Charter on February 1, ensuring free trade and perpetual peace with France on May 20. Such regulatory changes spurred merchant activities, attracting Mediterranean sailors to the burgeoning trade routes.

The port of Palma emerged as a crucial node in the transshipment of goods between Ligurian coasts, Flanders, and England. Mallorca's economic landscape was characterized by a dual commercial dynamic, facilitating the exchange of goods between diverse regions. Flemish textiles, routed through Languedoc and Montpellier, were among the commodities traded, with Mallorca serving as a key intermediary. Conversely, pharmaceutical substances were imported into England through companies established by Montpellier bourgeois.

Documentation indicates the regular arrival of Atlantic supplies at the port of Palma, while Mallorcan ships were acknowledged in England through credentials issued by Edward III's chancellery. Castilian sailors also found a lucrative charter market on the island, further enhancing Mallorca's position as a pivotal trading hub. Similarly, towns along the Strait of Gibraltar became indispensable stopovers for transactions with Portugal.

The Desclergues family, prominent in Mallorcan history, epitomized the multifaceted involvement in commerce during this era. Their roles as jurors, notaries, and merchants underscored active participation in trade, finance, and currency exchange. The family's ties extended to Barcelona, reflecting shared business interests and necessitating frequent travel for negotiations, legal matters, and business expansions. This interconnected economic framework operated within the broader Kingdom of Aragon, renowned for its commercial and military influence.

The Desclergues family's legacy unfolds as a narrative of perpetual movement and engagement across various urban centers, including Barcelona, Valencia, and beyond. Their activities encompassed contract negotiations, dispute resolution, and network expansion, transcending geographical boundaries. Far from static figures, they epitomized dynamism and entrepreneurial spirit, traversing trade routes extending from Mallorca to Seville, Granada, Montpellier, and beyond. This dynamic engagement epitomized the pursuit of commercial opportunities, symbolized by the Spanish expression "men with restless asses."

18.8 The Desclergues embodied the Renaissance Spirit

The Desclergues stood as a beacon of commerce, culture, and connectivity in the vibrant medieval Mediterranean. Their lifestyle was intricately woven into the bustling trade routes and cosmopolitan hubs that spanned from the shores of Mallorca to the markets of Genoa, from the ports of Marseille to the alleyways of Seville.

In an era where East met West in a whirlwind of commercial activity, the Desclergues thrived. The Mediterranean was their playground, where the competition between Arabs, Christians, and Jews was not just a clash of civilizations but a symphony of economic dynamism. The family's footsteps echoed through the bustling ports of Sardinia, Corsica, Montpellier, and beyond as they navigated the currents of trade and finance.

Mallorca, with its blend of Arab and Jewish influences, served as a vibrant economic emporium where cultures converged. Amidst the hedonistic atmosphere of sophistication and luxury, the Desclergues embraced the spirit of cultural crossroads, engaging with philosophers, poets, and troubadours. It was a world of great freedom of thought, where ideas mingled as freely as goods and currencies.

Yet, amidst the luxury and refinement, the Desclergues were not untouched by the conflicts of their time. The Crusades raged on, casting shadows of war and skirmishes across the Mediterranean landscape. But theirs was not a dark epic but a story of resilience and adaptability in the face of adversity.

For the Desclergues, travel was not just a luxury but a necessity. From Barcelona to Zaragoza, Valencia to Genoa, they traversed the Mediterranean with purpose, forging connections, sealing contracts, and navigating the intricacies of trade. Their contacts spanned far and wide, a testament to their prominence in the commercial world.

In Barcelona, Valencia, and Zaragoza, the Desclergues were frequent visitors, and their presence was felt in the bustling markets and streets. Every journey was an opportunity; every encounter was a potential business deal or alliance.

Theirs was a life lived at the intersection of commerce and culture, where the sea was not just a barrier but a bridge connecting distant lands and disparate peoples.

18.9 Countess Joan of Toulouse (1220–1271)

The Viscounty of Albi belonged to the County of Toulouse. Countess Joan of Toulouse (1220–1271), shown in Figure 18.10 on page 133, was a pivotal figure in the medieval history of the County of Toulouse, inheriting her title from her father, Raymond VII, and playing a significant role in the political and religious dynamics of her time. Born at the Castle of Corneto near Siena, her lineage traced back to the noble houses of Toulouse and Aragon.

Early in her life, Joan's betrothal to Hugh, the heir of Hugh X of Lusignan, hinted at the intricate webs of European aristocratic alliances. However, this engagement was short-lived. Following the Treaty of Paris in 1229, Joan's marital destiny shifted. One of the stipulations of this treaty was her betrothal to Alphonse, Count of Poitiers, brother of King Louis IX of France, signifying the strategic importance of alliances in medieval politics.

Joan's upbringing at the French royal court distanced her from her Occitanian heritage. This detachment was evident in her lack of sympathy towards the Albigensians, a religious group persecuted during the Albigensian Crusade. Her marriage to Alphonse, though the exact date remains uncertain, solidified her position as Countess of Toulouse alongside her spouse.

Despite the absence of offspring from their union, Joan and Alphonse embarked on significant military campaigns together, including the Seventh and Eighth Crusades. These endeavors underscored their commitment to both religious fervor and political power.

Upon her father's death in 1249, Joan ascended to the role of ruler of Toulouse alongside her husband. However, their governance was often absentee, as they entrusted the administration of their lands to appointed officials. Joan's attempt to dispose of her inherited lands in her will, designating her distant relative Philippa de Lomagne as her universal heiress, reflected the complexities of medieval inheritance laws and familial connections.

Notably, Alphonse's will included a provision to bequeath Joan's lands in the Comtat Venaissin to the Holy See, a decision that was upheld, leading to the territory's status as a Papal territory until the late 18th century.

Joan de Toulouse was blood-related to James I the Conqueror, born in 1208 and who died in 1276, who was the King of Aragon, Count of Barcelona and Lord of Montpellier from 1213 to 1276, King of Mallorca from 1231 to 1276, and Valencia from 1238 to 1276.

Joan of Toulouse and James I of Aragon were blood-related through marriage. Joan of Toulouse was the daughter of Raymond VII, Count of Toulouse, and his wife, Sancha of Aragon. Sancha was the daughter of Alfonso II of Aragon (James I of Aragon's grandfather), making her a sister to James I of Aragon. Therefore, Joan of Toulouse was James I's niece, establishing their blood relationship.

Through James I of Aragon, born in Montpelier in 1208 and dead in 1276, Joan of Toulouse provided nobleman Raymond Desclergue new opportunities in James I's conquest of Mallorca. Being a Knight's Templar and, as far as we can assume, being a Roman Catholic and not a Cathar, he received total confidence from Joan of Toulouse and, therefore, from James I of Aragon.

18.10 Raymond des Clergue, Father of the Desclergues Clan in Spain

Ramón Clergue or des Clergue or Desclergue was the son of Mossen Francesc Clergue or des Clergue, a native of Languedoc who went to Catalonia in the Kingdom of Aragon, where he settled and founded a family, during the time of Peter II King of Aragon, Count of Barcelona and Lord of Montpellier.He was a Juror of the Council of Mallorca as a result of the family's support of King James I in the Conquest of Mallorca. Ramón des Clergue or Ramón de Clergue or Ramón Desclergue was a Jury of Mallorca in 1249 and in 1253.[5][6][7]

Cateura refers to Ramon Des Clergue as "Ramon Des Clergue, another of the jurors of 1249 who, like Valenti de Torres, appears in 1237 among the 10 leaders chosen and confirmed by the Infante Pedro de Portugal to administer a general collection, and who 18 concept..."[8]

He was the father of Francisco Clergue or des Clergue or Desclergue (Francesc Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.11), Knight of the Order of Saint John of the Hospital of Jerusalem, who was also a Juror of Mallorca in 1276[9] and 1281.

The descendants of Raymond Desclergue are shown in Figure 18.6 on page 132.Raymond des Clergue was a Knight's Templar from Albi, who would, later in his life, be known as Ramon Desclergue. He was the father of Francesc Desclergue and is the founder of the Desclergues name-line in Catalonia. He settled in Girona and established activities in Mallorca. Although his main location remained Girona, he probably lived prolonged times in Mallorca. Certainly, his son, Francesc Desclergue, was fully established in Mallorca and maried a daugther of Borell, in Mallorca, as described in Chapter 18.11.

In the tumultuous period of the 13th century, when Occitan was engulfed in a civil war due to the Albigensian heresy, Raymond des Clergue found himself at a crossroads. His family was divided into heretics on the one hand and Roman Catholics on the other hand. The year was 1229, and King James I of Aragon, shown in Figure 18.9, on page 133, was embarking on a daring mission to conquer the island of Mallorca on behalf of the Roman Catholic kingdoms. This endeavor would prove to be a pivotal moment in the history of the region.

Raymond, a member of the Clergue family, hailed from a land marred by religious strife. The family itself was divided, with some members adhering to the heretical beliefs of the Albigensians, while others remained staunch followers of Roman Christianity. This internal schism within the Clergue family added a layer of complexity to Raymond's decision-making.

The political landscape of Occitan was treacherous, characterized by opposing camps locked in a bitter struggle. The Albigensian heresy had created an environment of great instability and danger. It was amidst this turmoil that Raymond found himself in the service of King James I of Aragon, a ruler with ambitions to expand the influence of Christianity in the region.

Raymond's decision to join King James I's campaign in the conquest of Mallorca was multifaceted. On one hand, it was a chance to escape the chaotic and perilous atmosphere of his homeland. Occitan's civil war had left no corner untouched, and the promise of a more stable life in the conquered territories of Mallorca was an enticing prospect.

Furthermore, there was the allure of economic prosperity tied to serving King James I in the Christian cause against the Muslims. The conquest of Mallorca offered the possibility of wealth and land for those who participated in the endeavor. Raymond saw this as an opportunity to secure a brighter future for himself and his family.

Lastly, the involvement of religious orders like the Order of the Temple or the Order of Saint John also played a role in Raymond's decision. These orders held a significant presence in the crusading efforts of the time. Joining their ranks offered spiritual purpose and a chance to serve a higher calling.

Raymond des Clergue's journey from the tumultuous Occitan to the shores of Mallorca was driven by a combination of factors – the desire for stability, economic opportunity, religious fervor, and a sense of duty in a time of conflict. His story is a testament to the complex and multifaceted nature of historical decisions made during a period marked by religious strife and territorial expansion.

In Mallorca, Ramon Desclergue was a Knights Templar and Juror, [10] a banker and a merchant. [11][12][13]

In the historical context of the establishment of municipal systems in Valencia and Mallorca following military operations and political shifts under Jaume I, Ramon Desclergue emerges as a pivotal figure in the pre-municipal and early municipal development of Mallorca.

During the transitional period in Mallorca, marked by the dominion of Peter of Portugal and Nunyo Sanç, Ramon Desclergue played a multifaceted role. Desclergue, identified as a merchant and banker, was not merely a participant in commercial activities but also a key actor in shaping the socio-political landscape of the emerging municipality.

Desclergue's involvement in the prohoms commission underscores his significance in the colonization efforts and economic administration of Mallorca. Initially focused on coordinating colonization and settlement efforts, Desclergue and other prohoms quickly expanded their roles beyond mere coordination to become central figures in the management of communal economic affairs.

One notable instance of Desclergue's influence is reflected in the land grant made by Nunyo Sanç to the community in 1235. This marked a crucial step in the institutionalization of the municipality, as Desclergue and his contemporaries negotiated the transfer of land ownership to the community, setting a precedent for communal governance and legal personality.

Moreover, Desclergue's inclusion in the commission of prohoms tasked with collecting funds for the island's defense highlights his integral role in shaping the fiscal policies of Mallorca.

Alongside other influential figures, Desclergue contributed to the formulation and implementation of economic strategies essential for the sustenance and defense of the island.

Furthermore, Desclergue's presence in the early municipal landscape indicates the convergence of economic power and political authority within the emerging municipal framework. As a merchant and banker, Desclergue wielded considerable influence, not only in economic matters but also in shaping political decisions and communal governance structures.

Ramón Desclergue worked as a merchant banker as early as 1242, carrying out money deposit and loan operations, and participating in limited partnerships.[14]

Pau Cateura Bennasser writes [15] that Year 1252 - The consuls of the City of Mallorca are: Ferrer de Sant Martí, Ramon Desclergue,

---

[5] Alvaro Campaner y Fuertes, "Cronicon Mayoricense: noticias y relaciones historicas de Mallorca desde 1229 a 1800," Juan Colomar y Salas, 1881.

[6] Bartomeu Bestard, "Los Jurados de la ciudad y reino de Mallorca," Diario de Mallorca, March 2015.

[7] Los jurados de la ciudad y reino de Mallorca (1249-1718) ; Editorial: Lleonard muntaner, editor, s.l. ; EAN: 9788496242463 ; Año de edición: 2005

[8] P. Cateura Bennasser, "Sociedad, jerarquia y poder en la mallorca medieval", Fontes Rerum Balearium, 1984, ISBN 978-8439826842.

[9] Alvaro Campaner y Fuertes, "Cronicon Mayoricense: noticias y relaciones historicas de Mallorca desde 1229 a 1800," Juan Colomar y Salas, 1881.

[10] juror or jurador was a magistrate, a local official and came from the Knight's establishment. A translation is more or less as foillows: Jurado, Jurat, Veguer, Juries

[11] A. Pons, "Historia de Mallorca. Instituciones, cultura y constumbres del Reino (s.XII-XV), II (Palma de Mallorca, 1965)" cit., II, señala los nombres siguientes como jurados: Francisco de Sant Martí, R. de Clergue, Valentín Ses Torres, Berenguer de Pinós, A. de Llearda y P. F. Ferrer.

[12] Joaquin Cerdá Ruiz-Funes, "Jurados, iurats, en municipios Españoles de la baja edad media (reflexiones para una comparacion)", Universidad Autónoma de Barcelona, ISSN 0210-7716, Nº 14, 1987, págs. 27-40.

[13] Pau Cateura Bennasser, " Municipi i monarquia en la Mallorca dels segles XIII-XIV", Anales de la Universidad de Alicante, Historia Medieval, ISSN: 0212-2480, 1984.

[14] Antonio Mercader Frau, Thesis "Banca y crédito en el reino de Mallorca (Baja edad media) 1229-1401," Ciències Històriques i Teoria de les Arts, Universitat de les Illes Balears, 21 de juliol 2009, (Thesis director Dr. Pau Cateura Bennàsser)

[15] Pau Cateura Bennasser, " Municipi i monarquia en la Mallorca dels segles XIII-XIV", Anales de la Universidad de Alicante, Historia Medieval, ISSN: 0212-2480, 1984.

Valentí Ses Torres, Berenguer de Pinós, A. De Lleida, P. F.

18.10.1 Desbosch, Friend of Desclergue

The Desbosch family's lineage spans centuries, with its origins rooted deeply in the annals of history, dating back to the medieval period of the 11th to 14th centuries. They were founded by a family in Gascony (nowadays in France). Primarily associated with the defense of Catalonia against the incursions of the French forces during the tumultuous period of 1285, the Desbosch family emerged as stalwart defenders of their homeland. Notably, their valorous contributions are epitomized in the heroic resistances witnessed at critical strongholds such as Castelló de Empuries and Perelada.

Through their steadfast defense of Castelló de Ampuries and Perelada, the Desbosch family exemplified the noble virtues of loyalty, courage, and sacrifice, leaving an enduring imprint on the collective memory of Catalonia and perpetuating their esteemed lineage through the ages.

Although the Desbosch is Catalan, their French counterparts are called Du Bois.[16]

Like Raymond des Clergue, family members of the Desbosch family acted as bankers. The reader is urged to read Chapter 49.9.2, concerning the period around 1600 in Belgium, where Jeroni Joan Desclergue (DC05) was acquainted with Jean Du Bois, which is also evidenced in chapter 34.13.8.12.

The author acknowledges the contributions made by Cortés Rosal in uncovering the history of the Desclergues before they arrived in Montblanc. The key to finding the connection and the first origins North of the Pyrenees came through a study of the Desbosch family, originating from Templars in Occitania who carried the name 'Bosch.' Indeed, Rénovard Desbosch was a friend of Raymond Clergue, and both were Knights Templars. They were Juanista.

Note that in the chronicles, 'Desbosch' and 'Malbosch' are identical.

18.10.2 Ramón Desclergue ceased the Opportunity

In Mallorca, Raymond des Clergue was known as Ramón Desclergue.

In Pau Cateura Bennàsser,[17] we find the following citation:

The first modality involved the banking system established on the island. Through Blasco's accounts, we indeed detected four taulas. These are the banks of Ramón Desclergue de Renovard de Malbosc de G. de Temines and de Guardia. Together they make payments, charged to funds deposited from the bailiwick, worth 4261 salaries. However, the other formulas mentioned are the most common, sometimes even combined with individuals who hold some position or who manage some type of The income is paid to the interested party on behalf or by order of Blasco or, where appropriate, of the king.

Ramón Desclergue worked as a merchant-banker, carrying out both deposit and money lending operations, as well as participating in limited partnerships. In 1242, for example, he delivered 2260 salaries in deposit to Bernat Cer, invested in cloth, and 1225 salaries in cash to sell and invest in Yspania.[18] In 1245, he hired Bernal de Riba as a fisherman for a year, which proves that he ceased every opportunity.[19] Specific banking operations are listed further by Pau Cateura Bennàsser,[20]

18.11 Francesc Desclergue, the Son of Raymond des Clergue

Images of Francesc Desclergue are shown in Figure 18.7 on page 132, with a close-up in Figure 18.8 on page 132.

Piferrer y Fábregas[21] writes: "On December 10, 1279, most of the men of the university met in Santa Eulalia in public parliament, the minutes say; and with the prince assisting and giving authority or license, the university or general council made, constituted and ordered its trustees and attorneys to promise and swear to observe the treaty Guillelmo Torrella, Jaime de Sant Martí knight, Roberto de Belvey, Bernardo de Çaragoça and Arnaldo Burgués. Based on the archive documents, and comparing their tenor in several codices, I will say that there were eight and not five the trustees appointed in Santa Eulalia, namely: Guillermo de Torrella and Jaime de Sant Martí gentlemen, Roberto de Bellvehí, Bernardo Valentí, Francesc Desclergue, Francisco Burguet, Burguet, Bernardo de Çaragoça and Arnaldo Burgués. In place of Jaime de Sant Martí, Fernando Rodríguez, a military man, was elected in another meeting held on the following February 18 at the Dominican convent. No witnesses in the record. according to the aforementioned codices, and Dameto does not express where he took their names from."

Francesc Desclergue was a Knight's Templar. like his father, Ramon Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.10. Both individuals hailed from aristocratic lineages deeply entrenched within the history of Occitanie, exhibiting notable eminence in their social standing.

Francesc Desclergue in Mallorca is found in Figure 18.1 on page 129 and in Figure 18.2 on page 130. His social status, like that of his ancestors, was Purpura de la Patria, as can be found as such in Figure 18.3 on page 130 and in Figure 18.5 on page 131.

Francesc Desclergue is mentioned as the previous owner of a house in Mallorca in the work by Pablo Cateura Bennasser[22]

He married in Mallorca to a daughter of Guillem Borrell, a merchant established in Mallorca described in Chapter 18.11.3. The chronicles write that Guillem Borrell came from a family of merchants and notaries originally from Girona. He left by testamentary disposition the goods he owned in Girona for the Monastery of Santa Pere de Rodes of the Order of Sant Benet as a dowry to his grandson, described in Chapter 18.11.4, son of his daughter, who received sacred vestments and studies in the said monastery.

Francesc Desclergue was Jurado of Mallorca in 1276 and 1281.[23][24] In this role, he can be seen in Figure 18.7 on page 132, with a close-up in Figure 18.8 on page 132.

Antonio Ortega Villoslada[25][26] also writes that...Since the pact did not contemplate the victims of Daniel Can's coca, the ruling of the lieutenant and the jurors is challenged in Mallorca, at the request of the ship's boss and merchants. The list of claimants has

---

[16] Note that the modern and prevalent translation of 'bois' is 'wood.' However, throughout history, in French, 'bois' has also been used to indicate a forest. The word 'forêt' in French is typically preserved for a large forest, while 'bois' is used for a small forest.

[17] Pau Cateura Bennàsser, "Las cuentas de la colonización feudal (Mallorca, 1231-1245)", ISSN-e 1988-2971, ISSN 0214-3038, N 20, 1997, págs. 57-142.

[18] ARM. E.C.R. 342, fol, 83v

[19] ARM. E.C.R. 343, fol. 296 r.

[20] Pau Cateura Bennàsser, "Las cuentas de la colonización feudal (Mallorca, 1231-1245)", ISSN-e 1988-2971, ISSN 0214-3038, N 20, 1997, pages 81, 114, 115, 132, 133, 134.

[21] Piferrer y Fábregas, Pablo, 1818-1848; Quadrado, José María, 1819-1896, "Islas Baleares; por Pablo Piferrer y José Ma. Quadrado," Barcelona Cortezo, 1888, page 877

[22] Pablo Cateura Bennasser, "Aspectos de la propiedad urbana en la época de la dinastia privativa de Mallorca," page 38, La Fardelliana, 1984.

[23] Bartomeu Bestard, "Los Jurados de la ciudad y reino de Mallorca," Diario de Mallorca, March 2015.

[24] Los jurados de la ciudad y reino de Mallorca (1249-1718) ; Editorial: Lleonard muntaner, editor, s.l. ; EAN: 9788496242463 ; Año de edición: 2005

[25] Antonio Ortega Villoslada, "El reino de Mallorca y el mundo Atlántico, 1230-1349: evolución político-mercantil", Netbiblo, 2008, page 285.

[26] A.R.M. A.H-1760, fols. 91r-147/10v.

a majority of Jews from the Mallorcan aljama: Simón Virgili; Francesc Desclergue; the pharmacist Guillermo Roig; Bannus Caxi Pisano; Rafael Dayen; Abraham Malaqui; Isaac ben Aron Hayo Cohen; Samuel Maani; Haco ben Farra; Jacob ben Ninem Isaac ben Farra; Mosse Mayr; Abraham ben Salema and Isaac Levi... habitatores Maioricarum et alii adherentes eis.

Francesc Desclergue also acted, being a Knight's Templar, as emissary of one of the Muslim Caliphs of the well-known lineage of the Yaqub or Yaacub and he helped the King of Aragon in the Conquest of Mallorca.

In Antonio Ortega Villoslada[27], we find an interesting exploration of the Kingdom of Mallorca's interactions within the broader Atlantic world during the period spanning from 1230 to 1349. This exploration unveils complex economic, political, and cultural exchanges. Integral to this analysis is an examination of the House of Mallorca's trajectory alongside the burgeoning trade routes linking the Mediterranean to the English Channel. Amidst the backdrop of the Reconquista, tensions between Castile and the Merinids over control of the Strait of Gibraltar reverberated through the region, manifesting in Castile's stringent regulation of Balearic shipping. Papal decrees further underscored Castilian authority, particularly evident in the provisioning of grain to Maghreb ports by Balearic vessels. Concurrently, the Kingdom's engagements with northern Europe pivoted towards supplying raw materials for the textile industry. The 1330s ushered in a new era of conflict, marked by wars with Genoa and Morocco, as well as recurrent Anglo-Flemish hostilities. These challenges spurred the establishment of mercantile enterprises across the Atlantic coast, from Andalusia and Portugal to France, England, and Flanders. Drawing on eight years of meticulous archival research spanning French, Peninsular, and Mallorcan repositories, this study delves into the intricate networks that underpinned medieval Mediterranean commerce. The inclusion of comprehensive indices—ranging from general and toponymic to onomastic classifications—enhances the volume's accessibility and scholarly rigor, offering a nuanced understanding of Mallorca's entanglements within the Atlantic world.

In particular, Antonio Ortega Villoslada writes that the Balearic Islands were the target of the Merinid army, and in the summer of 1293 an alarm was declared due to foreseeable raids. Despite this and the renewed anti-Castilian alliance, in autumn 1293, of Abu Ya'qub and Muhammad II, in order to surrender Tarifa, and the assistance of Valencian and Barcelona galleys, no negative incidents are seen in stable Aragonese merchant traffic in Morocco with Mallorcan residents holding relevant positions in the court of Abu Ya'qub. This is the case of Francesc Desclergue, the sultan's emissary to James II of Aragon - July 1294. Dufourcq[28] writes that the presence of Mallorcan citizens acting as links between Aragon and Morocco was based on the privileged island location. In particular, with these ulterior motives, James II accredited in July a new ambassador to the Merinid, Father Batle. Like Torrella and Deslergue, he was a Mallorcan: the great Balearic island was the advanced base of the Catalan Empire towards the Maghrib, the Christian land of Spain, which had the easiest and most frequent relations with the whole of Berberia. Furthermore,[29] the impulse of the Infante Pedro of Portugal and the pontifical bulls will favor the full integration of the Balearic Islands into the Maghreb mercantile fabric.

Apart from being Purpura de la Patria and a Knight's Templar, the reason he was a Juror of the Council of Mallorca was a result of the family's support of King James I in the Conquest of Mallorca.

The activities of Francesc Desclergue, testified by historical sources, indicate that he epitomized a convergence of ideological affiliations, embodying both the ethos of the Knight's Templar and the doctrinal framework of Juanism, thereby reflecting a nuanced interplay between military-religious orders and mystical traditions within the historical context under scrutiny.[30]

18.11.1 Francesc Desclergue and his Freedom of Speech

In the 1600s, we find Antoni Desclergue (DC06) protesting as seen in the literature citations in Chapter 34.3.

Freedom of speech of the Desclergues resulted from their status surpassing the other nobility because of the ancient nature of their purple blood, dating back to Byzantine and Roman times.

Francesc Desclergue emerges prominently in the historical narrative of Mallorca's governance during the late 13th century. The text, shown in Figure 18.13 on page 134, provides glimpses[31] into his role as one of the trustees appointed during a critical juncture in Mallorcan history, marked by the convocation of the 72nd public parliament on December 10, 1279.

During this assembly, convened in Santa Eulalia, Francesc Desclergue, alongside other notable individuals such as Guillermo de Torrella, Roberto de Belvey, Bernardo de Qaragoga, and Arnaldo Burgués, was entrusted with the solemn task of upholding the observance of the treaty. This treaty, commonly attributed to Guíllelmo Torrella, Jaime de Sant Martí, and others, carried significant implications for the governance and autonomy of Mallorca within the broader political framework of the Kingdom of Aragon. The participation of Desclergue and his counterparts as trustees underscores the intricate web of alliances and power dynamics characterizing medieval Mediterranean politics. Mallorca's strategic location and economic significance made it a prized possession coveted by various powers of the time, including the Crown of Aragon. Thus, the agreements forged during such parliamentary sessions were crucial in safeguarding the island's interests and autonomy amidst shifting geopolitical currents.

Moreover, the text sheds light on the internal dynamics of Mallorcan society, with references to the spirit of freedom ignited by the concessions of past rulers. The trustees, including Francesc Desclergue, exhibited a staunch commitment to preserving the privileges and autonomy of Mallorca, as evidenced by their solemn protest in January 1281. This protest, aimed at affirming their mission without compromising the island's rights, reflects the tension between local autonomy and external authority during this period.

18.11.2 Francesc Desclergue and the Maria Magdalena Hospital

In Mallorca's medieval history, Francesc Desclergue emerges as a key player in establishing religious institutions and shaping its administrative landscape. He stands alongside illustrious companions, his actions intertwined with the founding narratives of monasteries and the renowned hospital of Santa María Magdalena.

Francesc Desclergue's legacy is deeply entwined with the foundational narratives of Mallorca's religious and administrative evolution, as shown, for instance, in Figure 18.12 on page 133. In 1231, Guillermo de Torrella, lord of Valles in Catalonia and nephew of

---

[27] Antonio Ortega Villoslada, "El reino de Mallorca y el mundo Atlántico, 1230-1349: evolución político-mercantil", Netbiblo, 2008 - 350 pages.

[28] Ch. E. Dufourcq, "L'Espagne catalane." p. 231.

[29] Ch. E. Dufourcq, "L'Espagne catalane." p. 346.

[30] The inquisitive scholar, with a yearning akin to the seeker of ancient lore, may embark upon a quest to unearth the enigmatic traces of a hospital intertwined with the names of Francesc Desclergue, Hugo Ponce, and Guillermo Serrà, while delving deep into the labyrinthine ideological entanglements of the revered King of Aragon.

[31] The footnote in Figure 18.13 on page 134 provides additional insights into the complexities of Mallorcan politics, with discrepancies regarding the number and identity of trustees recorded in different sources. Despite such discrepancies, the overarching narrative remains one of concerted efforts by influential figures like Francesc Desclergue to navigate the intricate socio-political landscape of medieval Mallorca.

Raimundo de Torrella laid the foundation of the hospital of Santa María Magdalena in Mallorca. Initially a place of care and solace, this institution would later undergo a remarkable transformation, becoming a haven for dueñas and eventually evolving into a monastery for Augustinian nuns, a testament to Desclergue's vision and influence.

Furthermore, Francesc Desclergue's imprint on Mallorca's religious landscape extends to establishing the Clarisas monastery in 1262, a testament to his commitment to fostering spiritual sanctuaries within the region. However, his most significant endeavor materialized in 1279 when he assumed the mantle of the Mallorca syndic under King Don Pedro's patronage.

In this pivotal role, Francesc Desclergue collaborated with a cadre of influential individuals, including Jaime de San Martí, Roberto Bellvey, Bernardo Valenti, Francisco Burguet, Bernardo de Zaragoza, and Arnaldo Burgues, among others. Their collective efforts culminated in the formal ratification of Desclergue's appointment by the grand and general Council convened in the venerable precincts of the church of Santa Eulalia on December 10th of that historic year.

The assembly witnessed the convergence of ecclesiastical dignitaries and secular authorities, underscoring Francesc Desclergue's role in Mallorca's political and administrative spheres. His partnership with visionaries in establishing monastic institutions and the iconic hospital of Santa María Magdalena illuminates his enduring legacy as a steward of Mallorca's spiritual and social fabric.

Furthermore, for those familiar with the Knight's Templars, the establishment of the Santa Maria Magdalena Hospital resonates. Interestingly, Jeroni Joan Desclergue (DC05) also resided in the parochial of Maria Magdalena in Tournai while he stayed in Flanders, as shown in Chapter 30.5.

18.11.3 Guillem Borrell, Father-in-law of Francesc Desclergue

Guillem Borrell, the father-in-law of Francesc Desclergue belonged to a wealthy family of merchants and notaries in Girona, connected with the Bellonids, or the ancient House of Barcelona, and also connected to the Torró family of Empuries, Girona and, later, Barcelona. His descendants are shown in Figure 18.11 on page 133.

The connection between the Bellonids and the Borrell family lies in the lineage of the Counts of Barcelona. The Bellonids were a noble Frankish family that played a significant role in the Carolingian Empire. They were descended from Bellon, who was a contemporary of Charlemagne.

The earliest known Count of Barcelona from the Bellonid lineage was Wilfred the Hairy (Guifré el Pilós in Catalan), who ruled in the late 9th and early 10th centuries. However, it was his son, Borrell II, who is often considered the first to bear the title 'Count of Barcelona' officially.

Borrell II is particularly notable for his rule during a tumultuous period in the history of Catalonia, facing threats from both Muslim raiders from Al-Andalus and the Frankish kings from the north. His reign saw the consolidation and expansion of the County of Barcelona's territory and influence.

The House of Barcelona, represented by the Borrells and their descendants, held the title of Count of Barcelona and exerted authority over the County of Barcelona in Catalonia. Over time, they established themselves as one of the most powerful noble families in the region, playing pivotal roles in the political and social landscape of Catalonia and beyond.

18.11.3.1 Pere Borrel

Pere Borrell was Francesc Desclergue's brother-in-law and son of Guillem Borrell. Despite Guillem Borrell's presence in Mallorca, his trade activities brought him to Barcelona and other regions, and definitely also to Girona, where his own roots were. Pere Borrell, born in Barcelona around 1275, was a merchant or shipowner[32] who engaged in commercial activities between Catalonia and other Mediterranean regions in the early 14th century.

A conflict arises around the time of the prosecution of the Knight's templars and, therefore, around the time when the Borrells and many other families, including the Desclergues, would be expelled from Mallorca and find refuge in Aragon.

Pere Borrell's unfavorable stance towards Mallorca is evident in a particular incident that unfolded during the summer of 1309. A squadron of Mallorcan corsairs intercepted Pere Borrell's vessel, heavily laden with firewood and en route from Alicante, at the entrance to the port of Alcoll. The Mallorcans redirected his ship to the Balearic capital, where Pere Borrell was held captive for a prolonged period of four months. This detention resulted in significant damage to the fruit cargo he was transporting, with Pere Borrell estimating the losses at a staggering 700 Barcelona pounds.

The aftermath of the incident unfolded into a complex web of diplomatic negotiations and legal disputes between Pere Borrell, representing Catalan interests, and the monarchs of Aragon and Mallorca. Jaume II of Aragon, in a bid to seek justice, demanded compensation for Pere Borrell's losses from the Mallorcan monarch, initiating a protracted legal process. Despite the involvement of legal experts and negotiations spanning several years, a resolution remained elusive, highlighting the intricate nature of such disputes during that era.

The conflict between Pere Borrell and Mallorca exemplifies the complexities of maritime trade relations and the legal frameworks governing commercial activities during the early 14th century. Pere Borrell's case highlights the risks faced by merchants operating in the Mediterranean, where political tensions and piracy were prevalent. Moreover, it underscores the importance of diplomatic channels and legal mechanisms in resolving disputes between merchants and sovereign entities.

The involvement of legal experts and the mediation efforts of Jaume II and Sanç de Mallorca underscore the significance of legal norms and diplomatic protocols in regulating commercial disputes during this period. Additionally, the reference to the active role played by the people of Perpignan in supplying cloth to the Catalan market sheds light on the interconnectedness of regional economies in the medieval Mediterranean.

Overall, Pere Borrell's anti-Mallorcan stance reflects broader dynamics of political and commercial competition in the Mediterranean during the early 14th century, highlighting the intricate web of interests and alliances that shaped maritime trade relations in the region.

18.11.3.2 Guillem Borrell, junior

He was the son of Guillem Borrel. He was the brother of Pere Guillem and the brother-in-law of Francesc Desclergue.

We cite Sarah Decker's work,[33] "On May 31, 1330, twelve women went before the notary Guillem Borrell of Barcelona to invest in a

---

[32] Antoni Riera i Melis, "La marca antimallorquina de Pere Borrell" in "El regne de Mallorca, la corona d'Aragó i França al començament del segle XIV", October 28, 2027, in e-Spenia, revue interdisciplinaire d'etudes hispaniques médiévales et modernes.

[33] Decker, Sarah. '5 Working Women in Medieval Catalan Cities.' The Fruit of Her Hands: Jewish and Christian Women's Work in Medieval Catalan Cities, University Park, USA: Penn State University Press, 2022, pp. 101-128.

commercial partnership (societas) formed earlier that day between Bernat de Vila, a merchant of Barcelona, and Berenguer Vinot, a merchant of Mallorca, for commerce within and between their two cities as well as across the Mediterranean.1 Together, these twelve women made nearly half of the investments in Bernat and Berenguer's partnership and contributed slightly over one-third of the capital that the two men received for their budding joint business venture.".

18.11.3.3 The Borrell family

The Borrell family stands as an illustrious lineage, their significance resonating through the centuries. Originating in the aftermath of Visigothic rule, Catalonia's ascendancy burgeoned after the retreat of King Amalric to Barcelona following his defeat by Childebert, King of the Franks, in 531 CE. Amidst the shifting tides of power and influence, the Borrells emerged as stalwart custodians, navigating the intricate geopolitical landscape of medieval Catalonia.

The genesis of the Borrell dynasty coincided with the tumultuous epoch of Moorish incursions into the Iberian Peninsula. Barcelona, nestled amidst strategic terrain, served as a bulwark against Moorish encroachment, fostering a legacy of resilience and defiance against foreign dominion. The Borrells, entrenched in the heart of Catalonia, became instrumental in repelling Moorish advances, safeguarding the region's autonomy.

The Carolingian Franks, in their bid to assert hegemony over the region, established the 'March of Spain,' a buffer zone against Moorish expansionism. Within this crucible of political intrigue, the Borrells ascended to prominence, assuming stewardship over Barcelona and its surrounding territories. Their dominion expanded, encompassing the counties of Girona, Osona, and beyond, consolidating Catalonia under their sway.

The Borrells epitomized the fusion of feudal authority and regional autonomy, their governance marked by a delicate balance between central control and local autonomy. Amidst the ebb and flow of dynastic rivalries, they navigated the intricate web of alliances and conflicts, cementing their position as paramount rulers of Catalonia.

The zenith of Borrell hegemony witnessed the consolidation of Catalonia's territorial domains through judicious matrimonial alliances and strategic acquisitions. Counties such as Besalú, Cerdanya, and Roussillon were seamlessly integrated into the Borrell sphere of influence, bolstering their stature as preeminent lords of the Catalan realm.

The crowning achievement of the Borrell dynasty came with the union of Ramon Berenguer IV, Count of Barcelona, with Petronila, heiress to the Kingdom of Aragon, in 1137. This auspicious marriage heralded the birth of the Aragonese-Catalan confederation, a formidable union that reshaped the geopolitical landscape of medieval Iberia.

The Borrells' legacy endures as a testament to Catalonia's indomitable spirit and quest for self-determination. Through their astute leadership and unwavering resolve, they navigated the tumultuous currents of history, leaving an indelible imprint on Catalonia's collective consciousness. As custodians of Catalonia's heritage, the Borrells remain venerated figures, their legacy serving as a beacon of inspiration.

The Desclergues of Montblanc not only trace their lineage to the Desclergues of Mallorca but also to the House of Borrell of Barcelona. For a detailed account of how these connections unfolded, the reader is referred to Part VII.

18.11.3.4 The Borrell linkage between Toulouse and Barcelona

When the Borrell family is studied, in connection with the counts of Barcelone, one immediately encounters the County of Toulouse, where the Desclergues had their ancient roots.

The lineage of Borrell, intricately a part of Catalonia's history, unveils a tale of political acumen, cultural enlightenment, and strategic alliances that shaped the destiny of the region. At the heart of this saga stand two eminent figures: Borrell II of Barcelona, a pioneer in the county's renaissance, and his illustrious descendant, Raimond Borrell of Barcelona, a formidable leader who navigated the turbulent waters of medieval politics.

Borrell II, born into the esteemed lineage of the Counts of Barcelona, ascended to power amid the splendor of the Ottonian Renaissance. His tenure marked a period of cultural blossoming, where the ancient libraries inherited from the Visigothic Kingdom flourished under his patronage. In 967, his union with Luitgarde of Toulouse not only solidified strategic alliances but also ushered in an era of intellectual exchange. It was during this auspicious occasion that Borrell II encountered Gerbert d'Aurillac, a luminary destined for papal glory. The Count's patronage of Gerbert's education in the Catalan abbeys of Vich and Ripoll foreshadowed the latter's ascent to the papal throne as Sylvester II, leaving an indelible mark on European history.

However, Borrell II's reign was not devoid of challenges. The specter of Al-Mansur's incursions loomed large, as the Moors sacked Barcelona in 985, testing the mettle of the Catalan count. Yet, Borrell's resilience shone through as he undertook the arduous task of fortifying Barcelona, transforming it into a bastion of defiance against external threats. His deft diplomacy, coupled with the allure of Muslim gold, not only fortified Barcelona's defenses but also elevated it to the status of a burgeoning capital, exerting influence over neighboring Moorish kingdoms.

The legacy of Borrell II found continuity in the personage of Raimond Borrell of Barcelona, his descendant who inherited not only the mantle of leadership but also the burden of safeguarding Catalonia's autonomy. Born to Borrell II and Letgarde de Rouergue, Raimond Borrell's ascendancy to power marked a period of geopolitical maneuvering amid the crumbling Caliphate of Cordoba. Faced with the encroaching threat of Almanzor's incursions, Raimond Borrell's astute leadership and strategic alliances with neighboring counts proved pivotal in repelling the Moorish onslaught.

His marriage to Ermessende of Carcassonne in 993 further cemented alliances, laying the groundwork for a formidable coalition against Sulayman al-Mustain. The Barcelona Cathedral, a testament to Raimond Borrell's patronage, stood as a beacon of his commitment to cultural and religious resurgence. Yet, his ambitions were not confined to the realm of diplomacy; Raimond Borrell's military campaigns against Sulayman al-Mustain underscored his resolve to safeguard Catalonia's autonomy against external threats.

However, Raimond Borrell's ambitions were curtailed by mortality, as he breathed his last in 1017, leaving behind a legacy of political sagacity and cultural resurgence. His offspring, including Berengar-Raimond I, continued the legacy of the Borrell lineage, steering Catalonia through the tides of history.

The Borrell ancestry is intertwined with Toulouse's legacy, forging a lineage that endured the vicissitudes of time. From Borrell II's patronage of intellect to Raimond Borrell's geopolitical maneuvers, the Borrells left an indelible mark on Catalonia's history, illuminating the path of progress and resilience in the face of adversity.

18.11.3.5 Ermessenda, the consort of Ramon Borrell

This section is added for the reader interested in enigmatic historical figures. Ermessenda emerges as a central figure in the annals of Catalonia and Girona during the tumultuous 11th century, her life and legacy intertwined with the shifting tides of power and authority. Born in 972, she would eventually wield influence as consort and regent, leaving an indelible mark on the political and cultural landscape of her era.

At the tender age of 17, Ermessenda entered into matrimony with the Count of Barcelona, Ramon Borrell, thus initiating a partnership that would define her role in governance. Together, they embarked on a journey marked by military campaigns against the Saracens, navigating the treacherous waters of civil war in the Caliphate of Córdoba. Despite facing formidable adversaries, their joint efforts yielded significant military and economic triumphs, laying the foundation for their shared rule over the counties of Barcelona, Girona, and Osona.

Following the untimely demise of her husband in 1058, Ermessenda assumed the mantle of regent, guiding her son through the turbulent waters of minority rule. Her tenure as regent was characterized by astute governance and unwavering resolve, as she navigated the challenges posed by external tensions and internal strife. In the face of feudal revolution and familial discord, Ermessenda exhibited intelligence, skill, and a steadfast commitment to her principles.

Her regency spanned decades, marked by numerous disagreements and power struggles, particularly with her son Berenguer Ramon I and grandson Ramon Berenguer I. Yet, Ermessenda's resolve remained unyielding, her loyalty to her principles unwavering until the twilight of her days. Ultimately, faced with the prospect of surrendering control to her grandson, she made the difficult decision to sell the estates of the three counties, a testament to her unwavering commitment and principled stance.

Ermessenda's legacy extends beyond the realm of governance, encompassing significant contributions to the Catholic Church and cultural heritage. Through her patronage, she facilitated the construction of the Cathedral of Girona and the Monastery of Sant Daniel, ensuring the preservation of pieces of great historical and material value for posterity.

In retrospect, Ermessenda's life serves as a testament to the resilience and fortitude of women in medieval Europe, her legacy enduring as a beacon of strength and leadership in the face of adversity. Through her intelligence, determination, and unwavering commitment to her principles, she left an indelible mark on the history of Catalonia and Girona, shaping the destiny of generations to come.

18.11.4 Bernat Desclergue, the Son of Francesc Desclergue

He was the son of Francesc Desclergue, in Chapter 18.11, and the brother of Guillermo Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.12.

On the orders of Guillem Borrell, his grandson Bernat Desclergue, son of Francesc Desclergue, became a Benedictine monk at the monastery of Sant Pere de Rodes in Girona and was then named abbot of the Benedictine monastery of Sant Benet de Bages.

His father, Francesc Desclergue, gave the goods to the Order of Sant Benet. The documents show that there was a problem with these goods. Indeed, it seems that they were late in delivering it in full, which is why the Order of Sant Benet filed a legal claim against the family.

18.12 Guillermo Desclergue, the Son of Francesc Deslergue

He was the son of Francesc Desclergue, in Chapter 18.11, and the brother of Bernat Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.11.4.

In the historical context of 1308, mentioned in Chapter 18.13, Guillermo Desclergue, akin to his progenitor Francesc Desclergue, was apprehended alongside fellow members of the Templar Order during the widespread arrests targeting Templars. This event substantiates Guillermo Desclergue's affiliation with the Templar Order, a legacy inherited from his father Francesc and grandfather Ramón. Notably, the familial entanglement in this ordeal extends to encompass all male members of the Desclergue lineage.

Legal proceedings ensued promptly following their apprehension, culminating not in capital punishment or physical torment, but in the imposition of exile and forfeiture of assets. King James of Mallorca orchestrated a swift and clandestine implementation of exile, compelling the Desclergue family to seek refuge in Aragon, where the punitive measures against Templars were comparatively lenient. Within the Catalan domain of Aragon, the displaced Mallorcan Templars found sanctuary through the patronage of two influential noble families, namely the Queralt and the Cervelló, both deeply entrenched within the Templar network.

Subsequent to a period of settlement and stabilization in Aragon, Guillermo Desclergue, along with other Templar affiliates, endeavored to reclaim a portion of their confiscated wealth through legal recourse, particularly before the court of King Sancho of Mallorca. However, these efforts proved ineffectual during Sancho's reign, necessitating protracted litigation that ultimately found resolution under the governance of Pedro IV. It was during Pedro IV's reign that the Desclergue lineage, along with other Mallorcan Templar families, achieved a partial restitution of their real estate holdings, unencumbered by commercial or legal entanglements with the defunct Templar Order.

18.13 The Trial of the Templars in 1307

The trial of the Order of the Temple stands as a significant international legal event of the 14th century. Initiated in 1307 by the French monarchy, the Order of the Temple faced a barrage of allegations, including charges of heresy, simony, sodomy, and idolatry. This episode assumes critical importance due to its intersection with a religious military order and its implication in the power struggle between King Philip the Fair of France and Pope Boniface VIII.

Commencing on the ominous date of Friday, October 13, 1307, the trial culminated in the issuance of the papal bull "Considerantes dudum" by Clement V on May 6, 1312. Notably, it concluded with the execution of the order's Grand Master, Jacques de Molay, at the stake on either March 11 or 18, 1314. Subsequently, the assets of the Order underwent dispersal over the ensuing years.

Of particular note are two significant events in this process: the recognition of the Order of Montesa in the Kingdom of Aragon by Pope John XXII through the papal bull 'Ad fructus uberes' on June 10, 1317, and the acknowledgment of the Order of Christ in the Kingdom of Portugal on March 14, 1319. These events underscore the far-reaching ramifications of the trial and its enduring impact on the ecclesiastical and geopolitical landscape of medieval Europe.

From 1308 onward, the Desclergues and other Templar families in Mallorca were protected and welcomed by two very powerful noble families who had had great ties and relationships with the Order of the Temple, the Queralts and The Cervelló, who were less affected by the debacle of the Templars, thanks to a certain consideration on the part of the Royal House of Aragon in times of misfortune for the Order of the Templars.

18.14 The Desclergues Emigration from Mallorca to Aragon in 1382

In 1382, the Desclergues, a notable family from Mallorca, made a significant migration to Aragon, marking a pivotal moment influenced by economic conditions and political turmoil. Their decision to relocate was rooted in a series of economic and political factors that shaped the landscape of trade and governance in the region during the late 14th century.

Prior to their migration, the Desclergues enjoyed positions of prominence in Mallorca, allowing them to weather economic downturns to a certain extent. However, the economic stability of Mallorca began to wane, particularly after 1349, as a consequence of various factors, including the fiscal policies of reformer Berenguer de Abellá and the military actions of Pedro IV against James III.

The attractiveness of Barcelona as a destination for merchants increased following the Cortes of 1333, when Alfonso III implemented measures to alleviate the tax burden on merchants. Despite these changes, Mallorca remained economically viable until the latter half of the 14th century. However, the economic crisis precipitated by Berenguer de Abellá's reforms led to a mass exodus of merchants from Mallorca to cities such as Barcelona and Valencia.

The Desclergues, prominent figures in Mallorcan society as merchants, bankers, and notaries, possessed extensive commercial networks, social connections, and familial relationships in Barcelona due to their professional engagements. Constantly engaged in travel, contractual negotiations, and business transactions, they maintained an active lifestyle, seldom remaining fixed at their residence in Mallorca. Given the island's significance as a hub for trade, Mallorcan merchants were compelled to navigate a competitive marketplace, fostering numerous commercial and interpersonal alliances.

Following the 1307 trial of the Templars, the Desclergues, despite their residency in Mallorca, confronted severe repercussions stemming from the dissolution of the Templar Order. Consequently, in 1308, all their assets on the mainland, and possibly some in Mallorca, were confiscated. Subsequently, upon the subsiding of these tumultuous events, they endeavored to reclaim their seized properties, albeit with uncertain prospects of success. It was not until the reign of Peter IV of Aragon and the reconquest of Mallorca that they managed to retrieve the remaining assets, owing to the protective patronage extended to former Templars by the Crown of Aragon.

Upon their complete relocation to the mainland after 1382, the Desclergues severed ties with Mallorca indefinitely, marking the conclusion of their association with the island—a chapter definitively closed in the annals of their history.

For the Desclergues clan, the decision to migrate to Barcelona in 1382 was a strategic response to the deteriorating economic conditions in Mallorca. It was a collective endeavor, with the entire family relocating together, leveraging their diverse skills and professions to support each other. Among them were bankers, merchants, jurists, priests, and notaries, whose combined expertise contributed to their success in Barcelona.

The decline of Mallorca from 1349 onwards can be attributed to the military actions of Pedro IV against James III. Following a series of conflicts and confrontations, Pedro IV declared James III guilty of charges brought against him in 1343. Subsequently, Pedro IV invaded Mallorca, culminating in the defeat of James III's troops at Santa Ponsa. This victory enabled Pedro IV to assert control over Mallorca and expand his dominion to include Roussillon. James III's subsequent attempts to regain power, including an attack on Mallorca in 1349, ultimately ended in his defeat and death in the battle of Lluchmayor.

18.15 Pere Desclergue, the Son of Guillermo Desclergue

Pere Desclergue was the son of Guillermo Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.12.

He appears as a witness in the minutes of a session of the General Council of Tàrrega, near Barcelona and Santa Coloma de Queralt, in which it is decided how to finance the work on the walls, on April 27, 1369.[34]

Pere's son was Geronimo Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.16. His other children, Berenguer and his daughter, are described in Chatper 18.15.1 and Chapter 18.15.2, respectively.

18.15.1 Berenguer, the Son of Pere Desclergue

Berenguer was the son of Pere Desclergue and he resided in Granyana in 1358.[35]

18.15.2 N. Desclergue, the Daughter of Pere Desclergue

N. Desclergue was the daughter of Pere Desclergue and she married Guillem D'Anguera, described in Chapter 25.0.1.6. She is also described in Chapter 25.0.1.8.

18.16 Geronimo Desclergue, the Grandson of Guillermo Desclergue

He was the son of Pere Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.15, and the grandson of Guillermo Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.12. In 1358, he resided in Bellmunt, near Montserat and Girona.[36] He was a merchant. By the year 1391, Gerónimo Desclergue, a native of Mallorca, was a resident of Santa Perpetua de Moguda. near Barcelona.

Geronimo Desclergue had a sister, N. Desclergue, who married a military, Guillem D'Anguera. She is described in Chapter 18.15.2 and Chapter 25.0.1.8.

Geronimo Desclergue belongs to the generation that returned from Mallorca to Aragon because the economic and political situation deteriorated too much in Mallorca.[37]

---

[34] "Acta d'una sessió del Consell General de Tàrrega en què es decideix com finançar l'obra dels murs," 1369, abril, 27 (AHCT LP III 80r; SARRET 261-262) (trasllat de 1369, juny, 11), Tàrrega, transcribed in Max Turull Rubinat i Jaume Ribalta Haro, "De Voluntate Universitatis, La Formació I 1. Expressió de la voluntat del municipi" (Tàrrega, 1214-1520), p. 220.

[35] item 164, Suma dels fochs de Granyena LXXVI, p. 370 in J. M. Pons Guri, "un fogatjament desconegut de l'any 1358."

[36] Suma dels fochs de Bellmunt XI, p. 414, item 85 v. Listed in J. M. Pons Guri, "un fogatjament desconegut de l'any 1358." He also appears on p. 165.

[37] It is conceivable that other persons carrying the name Clergue equally arrived in Mallorca, who were not noblemen. Their history is different as they were less attached to their family name and allowed it to evolve into Quecles, nowadays a common family name on the Balearic islands. The phenomenon is described in Antoni Mas Forners and Joan-Luis Monjo Mascaró, "La Mallorquinització onomàstica a la València del segle XVII. L'aportació de la vila de Santa Margalida",2002, ISBN 84-95802-16-3, págs. 119-144.

One of the descendants of Guillermo Desclergue, was Pere Desclergue, a priest. Jaume Sobrequés i Callicó writes,[38] "The Chancellor of Enrique IV of Castile orders, on February 1, 1463, priest Pere Desclerga, of Santa Perpétua to provide information on whether Beltrán de Armendáriz had promised, when attacking the castle of Santa Perpétua, in Penedés, to respect the property of Guerau Alemany de Cervelló and Elionor de Montagut, widow, castellan of said castle, and if he had kept his promise. He orders that Elionor's assets not be returned to her, but rather that they be held hostage until something is decided in justice."

18.17 Ramon Desclergue, the Son of Geronimo Desclergue

Ramon Desclergue was the son of Geronimo Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.16. He was named after his patrilineal ancestor Raymond Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.10. His son was Francesc Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.18.

18.18 Francesc Desclergue, the Son of Ramon Desclergue

He is also mentioned in Chapter 19.15.5.
Francesc Desclergue was the son of Ramon Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.17.
He was married to the daughter of Bernat D'Anguera, alias Desclergue, and their sons were Brenguer Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.19, and Francesc Desclergue, junior.
He was notary of Barcelona, who played a role for the Bank of Barcelona on march 28, 1443, as shown in Figure 19.23 on page 189.

18.19 Berenguer Desclergue, the Son of Francesc Desclergue

His father was Francesc Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.18. He is also described in Chapter 25.0.1.4.
He started his career as scriptor in Santa Coloma de Queralt in 1417.
He was a man of the law and in 1439 he held the position of local deputy of Montblanc and its ward, which he resigned on January 26, 1440. He must have been well connected with the courtly circles, since, on October 5, 1451 and from Tudela, the infant Joan, Duke of Montblanc, appointed him general curator of the Duchy of Montblanc.
Berenguer Desclergue was the father of Clementa Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.20, and Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.2.

18.20 Clementa Desclergue, the Daughter of Berenguer Desclergue

In Chapter 25.0.1, the brother of Clementa Desclergue is described, Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, in Chapter 25.0.1.2, while her ancestors through her grandmother's side, D'Anguera, equally descending from Raymond Desclergue, are equally outlined. She equally appears in Chapter 25.0.1 and Chapter 20.6.2.
She married Royal Secretary Francesc Torró y Miquel, described in Chapter 20.6.1. The ancestry of her husband is described in Chapter 20.
Clementa Desclergue's father was Berenguer Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.4 and in Chapter 18.19.

18.21 The Settlement in Montblanc

The settlement of the Desclergues in Montblanc is elucidated in Chapter 21. However, it is crucial to acknowledge that their residency in Monblanc did not confine them solely to that locale. Instead, the Desclergues maintained multifaceted engagements in various regions, including Barcelona, Cervera, Lleida, Granvera, Balaguer, Manresa, and Sevilla. This dispersion underscores the expansive network of familial affiliations that the Desclergues cultivated beyond the confines of Montblanc.
Moreover, the Desclergues demonstrated remarkable resilience and adaptability in their professional activities, often operating in multiple locations concurrently. This mobility was driven by the exigencies of their professions, necessitating frequent relocations. Consequently, it was not uncommon for members of the Desclergue family to have children born in disparate locales, reflecting their itinerant lifestyle and unwavering professional commitments.
The Desclergues epitomized a dynamic and interconnected presence across various geographical and professional spheres, transcending the boundaries of any single settlement such as Montblanc.

18.22 Desclergues in Barcelona

18.22.1 Benedicto Desclergue in Barcelona

We also find 'El Padre Maestro Fray Benedicto Desclergue fue hombre de grande gobierno, hijo del Convento de Santa Catarina Martyr de Barcelona,' on page 88 of Historia de la antiqva Hibera, Written by Francesc Martorell y de Luna, Hijo natural y Ciudadano de Tortosa, MDCXXVII (1627). No further traces of this individual have been found; therefore, his relationship to the Desclergue family remains unknown.

18.23 Desclergues in Cervera

18.23.1 Joan Desclergue in Cervera

He is most likely the brother of Bernat Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.6, and the son of Guillem D'Anguera, who was married to the daughter of Pere Desclergue. He is mentioned in Cervera in the period 1341-1368.[39]

---

[38] Jaume Sobrequés i Callicó, "Catálogo de la cancillería de Enrique IV de Castilla, señor del principado de Cataluña: (lugartenencia de Juan de Beaumont, 1462-1464)", Editorial CSIC - CSIC Press, 1975, page 406

[39] Jacme dez Clergue, in Xavier Rivera Sentís, "Un capbreu del monestir benedictí de Sant Pere el gros: 1341-1368", Miscel·lània Cerverina 19 (2009) 75-128, p. 115, item 37v.

18.23.2 Joan Desclergue in Cervera & Barcelona

He is most likely a descendant of Bernat Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.6.
There is a Joan Desclergue appearing as preserver of a hospital, namely,
'[Li]ber primus infirmarie Ospitalis [Sanct]e Crucis presentis civitatis inceptus per Thomam Soldevila, presbiterum, nunc dicti Ospitalis infirmarium [. . .]'[40][41]
The reference to Joan Desclergue, the preserver, is also found in 'AH 2 1473, maig 1-1479, desembre 30. Barcelona ,' of the Brochure published by the Biblioteca de Catalunya[42].
In a record of 1472, Joan Clergues, presbyter of Cervera, and his sister Joana, widow of Antonio Carnicer de Granyena (Lleida), are mentioned[43].
His son was most likely Geronimo Desclergue, decribed in Chapter 18.23.3.

18.23.3 Geronimo Desclergue in Cervera & Barcelona

He is most likely a descendant of Bernat Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.6, who was the son of Guillem D'Anguera and N. Desclergue, the daughter of Pere Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.15. Presumably, he was the son of Joan Desclergue, in Chapter 18.23.2.
In the book 'La Casa Desclergue de Montblanc' , authored by Jose Sanchez Real[44], the author refers to,
'Pere Costa: Nobiliario Catalán, Siglo XVIII, Manuscrito 153, Pago 214.,' and,
'Desclergas. Esta familia fué domiciliada en Barcelona, en donde se acabó la linea varonil; las memorias que de ella hallo son que en el año 1503, Geronimo Desclergas se hallava Veguer de Cervera por el Sr. Rey de España y Archiduque de Austria Don Felipe I. Consta de un mandato expedido en 19 de julio de dicho año en la Curia de Cervera, en las escrituras de Matheo Magre, en donde se lee que esta familia de Desclergas eran Cavalleros Donzeles.,' or,
'Desclergas. This family was domiciled in Barcelona, where the male line was finished; the memories that I find are that in the year 1503, Geronimo Desclergas was Veguer de Cervera (Vigerius of Cervera, or Lord of Cervera) by H.M. the King of Spain and Archduke of Austria Don Felipe I. It consists of a mandate issued on July 19 of that year in the Curia of Cervera, in the writings of Matheo Magre, where it is read that this family of Desclergas were Cavalleros Donzeles (i.e. Knights).'
The descendants of Geronimo Desclergue have died out. We also find Geronimo Desclergue in a list of nobles of the year 1458, who have received a noble title by Felipe II in the Corts de Barcelona, where Geronimo Desclergue appears, on page 241 (Libro XIX Cap XIV), in Anales de Catalunya y Poilogo Breve de Los Progressos Contiene los svcessos del Ano 1458. Published in 1709 by Juan Pablo Marti. This Geronimo should not be confused with the later Gerónimo Desclergue y de Amat (DC02dy2y1) appearing in Figure 26.6 on page 293 in Chapter 25.1.3.3.

18.24 Desclergues in Lleida

18.24.1 Antich Desclergue in Lleida

We retrieve an Antich Desclergue, in the book 'Mestrescoles i rectors de l 'Estudi General de Lleida (1597-1717)' , by Francesc Esteve i Perendreu, where on page 44 we find: 'On the 25th day the rector appeared at the House of the Mestrescolia (the School Rector) and, in front of the Mestrescolia and the presence of Francesc Baffart, professor of laws; Josep Galino, chaplain, Antich Desclergue and Miguel Sallent, addressing the Mestrescolia said: 'If he had ripped off the sign and broken it into pieces, he did not do it in disrespect of the Lord or the Apostolic authority. Therefore it should be forgiven' after which the Mestrescolia has forgiven it.'
Antich Desclergue also appears on the Faculty and Rectors of 'Estudi General de Lleida (1597-1717). Note that 'another' Antich Desclergue, related to Manresa/Barcelona, also existed. Because we are not sure if they were, in fact, the same person or not, we have separated both entries.

18.25 Desclergues in Granvena

18.25.1 Gabriel Desclergue in Granvena & Lleida

Bernardo Desclergue (DC04b), presbyter (dead in 1490), son of Gabriel Desclergue, an inhabitant of Granyena (Lleida), appears in a handwritten will in the Historical Archive of Protocols of Barcelona[45]. Joana, daughter of Gabriel Desclergue, would marry Antoni Carnicer de Granyena.

---

[40] Biblioteca de Catalunya, Topogràfic: BC AH 2, Número de Registre: 10830, Dates: 1473, maig 1-1479, desembre 30. Barcelona. Contingut: Llibre d' entrades de malalts de l' Hospital de la Santa Creu. Els assentaments recullen les dades següents (de forma incompleta): nom, professió, edat, procedència, pertinences i díxits; al marge: cambra de l' Hospital on ingressa, incidències (data de la mort o sortida, restitució de pertinences) i diners. Dut per Tomàs Soldevila, prevere i infermer de l' Hospital; Joan Desclergue, prevere (f. 10).

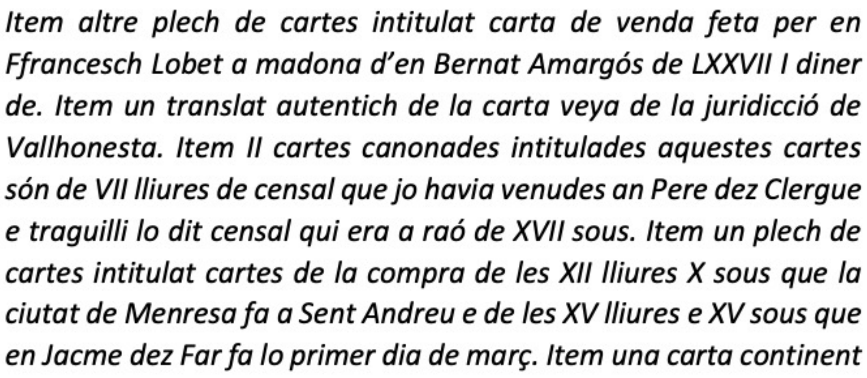
[41] Gabriel Aguaço, prevere i infermer (f. 41); Pere Olzina, prevere i infermer (f. 73).

[42] Fons Hospital de la Santa Creu de Barcelona (documents conservats a la Biblioteca de Catalunya), Arxiu, Biblioteca de Catalunya, Reis Fontanals – Maria Toldrà, 31 d' octubre de 2012 , [Última actualització: 24 octubre de 2013].

[43] Registro 3 459 (1472) Fol. 41 v. A.C.A. Barcelona. This note and the others obtained from the exact file has been provided to Sanchez Real by Mercedes Costa.

[44] Jose Sanchez Real, 'La Casa Desclergue de Montblanc' , published in 1974 by Caja de Ahorros Provincial, Tarragona; deposito legal B IVa.P.665 - 1974 and printed by Graficas Lorente, Ciudad 13, Barcelona 2, Spain.

[45] Notary's Handbook of Marco Busquets (1463-1490); Historical Archive of Protocols of Barcelona.



Item altre plech de cartes intitulat carta de venda feta per en Ffrancesch Lobet a madona d'en Bernat Amargós de LXXVII I diner de. Item un translat autentich de la carta veya de la juridicció de Vallhonesta. Item II cartes canonades intitulades aquestes cartes són de VII lliures de censal que jo havia venudes an Pere dez Clergue e traguilli lo dit censal qui era a raó de XVII sous. Item un plech de cartes intitulat cartes de la compra de les XII lliures X sous que la ciutat de Menresa fa a Sent Andreu e de les XV lliures e XV sous que en Jacme dez Far fa lo primer dia de març. Item una carta continent

Figure 18.16: Pere Desclergue, appearing in an inventory in Manresa, in 1410. Citation from Josep Batlle i Costa, "La famíla Amargós a través dels seus llibres particulars", Els Tretze Llibres de la Nissaga dels Amargós (Manresa 1299-1438), Annex 8. Inventari de Bernat Amargós Marit d'Alamanda de Copons, p. 109.

18.26 Desclergues in Verdú-Tàrrega

18.26.1 Balaguer Desclergue in Verdú

Josep Xavier Muntané santiveri[46] describes the existence of a couple, Balaguer Desclergue and Arsenda, in Verdú, near Tàrrega. On January 13, 1393, in the district of Verdú, a noteworthy transaction[47] involving a vineyard in the Tàpies d'en Llanera took place, which had a significant bearing on Balaguer Desclergue ('Balaguer deç Clergue,' 'Balaguer des Clergue') and his wife Arsenda (sic, and 'eius uxori na Aseno'). The property, bordering lands owned by Pere Bufraganyes and Pere Pereguiam as well as the public road of Ciutadilla, was sold by Blanca Bonanada along with her son Pere Merles and his wife Dolça to Pere Barba of Verdú for 40 sous. A critical aspect of this sale was the stipulation that a continuing census payment of 3 sous was to be made to Balaguer Desclergue and Arsenda in honor of Sant Marc. This arrangement highlights the ongoing financial and social influence that Balaguer and Arsenda held in the region, reflecting their status and the economic dependencies woven through such land transactions during that period.

18.27 Desclergues in Tarragona

18.27.1 Benet Desclergue in Tarragona

We find Desclergue Benet in 1549 as prior dominic de Tarragona in Josep Torné i Cubells, 'Catàleg de Pergamins de l' actual arxiu del monestir de Poblet' .

18.28 Desclergues in Balaguer

18.28.1 Bonaventura Desclergue in Balaguer

We found, for the town of Balaguer (near Leida), a Bonaventura Deç Clergue in the period 1211-1352, on pages 141 and 145 in Moisés Selfa, 'About the concept of onomastic identity: The privileges' parchments of the city of Balaguer (1211-1352)' , Imago TemporIs. medIum aevum, VIII (2014), 135-149.

18.29 Desclergues in Manresa

18.29.1 Pere Desclergue in Manresa

Pere Desclergue was intricately involved in various transactions and possessions related to Bernat Amargós and his household in Manresa in 1410. The inventory, referred to in Figure 18.16 on page 147, reveals a detailed list of items ranging from mundane household goods to significant documents and valuable possessions. Pere Desclergue appears to have been engaged in several financial dealings and exchanges with Bernat Amargós, evident from the numerous letters of purchase and sale mentioned in the inventory. Pere Desclergue was a creditor, as indicated by the letter of order detailing a debt owed to Bernat Amargós by Pere Anglada de Prats. Additionally, Pere Desclergue had purchased or had been involved in the transfer of various census allowances, with specific mentions of transactions involving Livres, Sous, and other monetary units. These transactions reflect his economic ties and investments in the region.

In the document in Figure 18.17 on page 148, we find a text with a narrative revolving around a gathering of individuals from the parish of Sant Pere de Fonollosa, within the diocese of Vic, convened under the authority of the Veguer of Manresa. This assembly, which took place on December 15th, 1448, is described as being attended by various members of the community, as well as notaries and witnesses. Among those listed as present at the assembly is one individual named Pere Desclergue ('Peter dez Clergue'). While the text does not explicitly detail the role or significance of Pere Desclergue, his inclusion among the assembled individuals suggests that he held some degree of importance within the community or was involved in the proceedings taking place at the church. It is possible that he held a position of leadership or authority within the parish, or that he was personally involved in the matters being discussed or decided upon during the assembly.

We do not know how Pere Desclergue and two persons named Nicolas Desclergue, in Chapter 18.29.2 and Chapter 18.29.3 are related to each other.[51]

---

[46] Muntané Santiveri, Josep Xavier. «Ex nacione judayca ad fidem christianam moviter conversi: conversos jueus de Tàrrega i de poblacions veïnes». Urtx: revista cultural de l'Urgell, 2020, Núm. 34, p. 63-111, item 12.1

[47] in APV, 110.4, Manual notarial (1392-1393), f. 37r-v.

[51] It is, however, remarkable that around 1500, there was a family in Kortrijk, with whom the Desclergues of Montblanc would marry, where there was also a tradition of naming their sons Nicolas Declercq. If we allow wild speculation, we could assume a possibility that the Declercqs of Kortrijk, described in Chapter 34.13, who married the Desclergues, were, in fact, descendants of Desclergues in Manresa and, therefore, related. Chapter 18.32.2 is, in this context, equally interesting. It is important to remember that Carlos V conquered Tournai from the French and returned the city to Flanders, under Spanish Habsburg reign in 1521. Undoubtedly Spanish military and administration must have settled then at Tournai. Perhaps, there were Desclergues from Manresa among them, with a prospect of establishing trade between Flanders and Aragon.

328

1448 desembre 15, diumenge, Sant Pere de Fonollosa

En presència de Jaume Serrolí, notari substitut, i Miquel Parets, testimo-nis, són convocats, amb repic de campanes i crit de viafora, els homes de la parròquia de Sant Pere de Fonollosa, diòcesi de Vic, amb llicència i per manament de l'honorable veguer de Manresa, també present.

f. 171v, 172r

Deinceps vero die dominica intitulata quinta decima mensis de-cembris et anni supra proxime dictorum, in presentia Iacobi Seroli, notarii substituti iurati // (f. 172r), et Michaelis Parets, superius nominatorum, testium ad hec vocatorum specialiter assumptorum, convocati et congregati homines infrascripti parrochie ecclesie Sancti Petri ter-mini de Ffonollosa, diocesis Vicensis predicte, in dicta ecclesia per repicamentum cimbalorum et sonum de viafors emissum, ubi alias, ut dixerunt, universitas dictorum parrochie et termini et singulares eius-dem pro comunibus actibus illius solita est convocari et congregari, de licentia tamen et mandato dicti honorabilis vicarii Minorise, hiis presen-tis, ad quamquidem convocationem et congregationem presentes fue-runt et venerunt qui secuntur, scilicet.

[Sancti Petri de Ffonollosa]

Iohannes Serra, Petrus Robinat, Petrus de Borrelles, Raymundus Cases, Bartholomeus Querol, filius Petri Querol, Petrus de la Vall, Bernar-dus Querol alias Pereta, Iohannes Puig, Bernardus Gali, Anthonius de Bacardit, filius Petri de Bacardit, Gabriel Vilar, Petrus de Querol, Iohan-nes de Goell, Salvator Goell, Petrus de Bacardit, Raymundus Morera, Petrus Morera et Petrus dez Clergue.

Figure 18.17: Pere Desclergue in a narrative revolving around a gathering of individuals from the parish of Sant Pere de Fonollosa, within the diocese of Vic, convened under the authority of the Veguer of Manresa on December 15, 1448.[48]

A 29 de 8bre 1674

Figure 18.18: Label on a document of 1674 concerning Nicolau Desclergue. It states "On October 29, 1674, ..." The document itself is shown in Figures 18.19, 18.21 and 18.22. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Nicolau Desclergue

1663

1674

Figure 18.19: The first page of the 1674 document concerning Nicolau Desclergue. The next page is shown in Figure 18.21. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Fas fe yo Gaspar Madrynera nott ciutada de Manresa y scriva assumpt de la Cort del Veguer de Manresa com als 23 del
mes de Janer 1663. los admi-nistradors de la [illegible] causa dita de Desclergue an consignat los redditus de dita [illegible] causa de l'any 1662. a la sra Severina Costella y Soler [illegible] muller del dit Joseph Coste-lla ab clausula de inti-
ma y altres clausulas com consta [illegible] en lo llibre de dita causa pia a carte

Gaspar
Madrynera nott

Figure 18.20: 1663, January 23, Gaspar Madrynera, notary at Manresa, in a document about Severina Costella, the wife of Josep Gostella, and Desclergue. Possibly, it concerns Nicolau Desclergue. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

[illegible] de aquell muller consta de llurs desposoris dels quals fa fe lo Rnt Joan Peramau pre Vicedo-mer de la Seu de Manresa als 25 del mes de setembre 1672. Item a Francisca Canongia muller de Mauricii Canongia Saguer ciutada de Manresa filla legitima y natural de Pere Marti Jorba Sastre ciutada de dita ciutat y de Isabel de aquell muller consta de llurs desposoris dels quals fa fe lo Rnt
Jaume Aldebo pre domer de la Seu de Manresa als 26 del mes de Noembre 1672. Item a Agnes Gouern muller de Anthoni Gouern Corder ciutada de Manresa filla legitima y natural de Roger Armant Corder ciutada de dita ciutat y de Victoria de aquell muller consta de llurs despo-soris dels quals fa fe lo Rnt Jaume Aldebo pre domer de la Seu de Manresa als 27 del mes de dezembre 1672. com a degeneres del fundador de dita causa pia. la qual consignatio se fa per iguals parts y portions entre ellas dividi-dores y ab clausula de intima y demes clau-sulas necessaries en pntia del molt Rnt P. Jaume Aldebo pre. domer de la Seu de Manresa
dega de Manresa y Rages per lo molt Illustre Capitol de Canonges de la Sta Iglesia de la Seu de Vich portant veus de Bisbe de Vich la Sede

Figure 18.21: The second page of the 1674 document concerning Nicolau Desclergue. The next page is shown in Figure 18.22. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 18.22: The third page of the 1674 document concerning Nicolau Desclergue. The previous pages are shown in Figures 18.19, 18.21. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth Montblanc, España
(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.
Grandfather; First cousin twice removed up (m); Fifth cousin twice removed up (m)

Eleonor Torró y Miquel
She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.
Grandmother; First cousin twice removed up (f)

Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Birth 1507 Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Marriage Isabel Simón Valencia
(DC02d) Some literature assumes there was a Galceran I and a Galceran II, father and son, while, in fact, it was one and the same person who was active for many years.
Father; Second cousin once removed up (m); Sixth cousin once removed up (m)

Ana de Villavicencio
Birth Jerez de la Frontera, España
Death 1537
Mother

Joan Berenguer Desclergue
Death after 1503
(DC02) He appears in the fogatge of Montblanc in 1515.
Uncle; Second cousin once removed up (m); Sixth cousin once removed up (m)

N. Prunera y Ferrer
Birth Tàrrega, España

Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.

Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Birth Montblanc, España
Death after 1579 Montblanc, España
(DC03)
First cousin (m); Third cousin (m); Seventh cousin (m)

Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.
First cousin twice removed up (f)

Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death Montblanc, España
(DC04)
First cousin once removed (m); Second cousin once removed up (m); Third cousin once removed (m); Seventh cousin once removed (m); Partner or husband

Figure 18.23: The blood connection between the parents of Jeroni Joan Desclergue (DC05), described in 29. Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortes (DC04) was married to Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio. The latter was the daughter of Galceran Desclergue (DC02d) and Ana de Villavicencio.Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortes (DC04) was the son of Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03) and Maria Ana Cortes de Monroy y Vega Bazan. Both Maria Anas were of the same generation due to Galceran Desclergue's long marital career while a merchant in Seville. The bloodbond of Jeroni Joan's parents is a testimony of the activity of the Desclergues in Sevile and the trade established there, with the New World, through Hernán Cortés, described in Chapter 27.20.

```
Nomina   sindicorum,   actorum   et   procuratorum   universitatum,
Pro civitate Minoris.
     Nicolaus dez Clergue et Berengarius Lucas Ripoll.
```

Figure 18.24: Nicolaus Desclergue pledged allegiance to His Majesty the King, on Wednesday November 29, 1458.[49]

155*v*// Oydors de la vegaria de [Manresa]
Manuel Joan de Reiadell.
A xviiii del mes de janer any mil dxvi, per mort del dit mossèn Manuel Joan de Reiadell, fou ensaculat mossèn Nicholau Clergue, cavaller y metge.
A xiiii de febrer mdxxi, per mort del dit Nicolau Clergue, fonch ensaculat mossèn Guillem Bellver.
A viiii de noembre mdlii, per transferiment del dit mossèn Guillerm Bellver de oydor en deputat, fou enseculat concordament mossèn Martí Ioan de Foxà, senyor de Cornet.
A xviii de juliol mdlxxxiiii, per mort de dit mossèn Martí Joan de Foxà, és ensaculat concordament mossèn Francesc de Lorde y de Sellent.
A xv de juliol mdcv, per transferiment de dit mossèn Francesc de Lorde de hoydor en deputat, és estat enseculat concordament mossèn Anton Dezcallar y Roset, de la Pobla de Lillet, donzell.
A xv de maig mdcx, per transferiment de dit mossèn Anton Dezcallar de oïdor en deputat, és enseculat concordament mossèn Jaume de Sorribes y del Graner.

Figure 18.25: Nicolas Desclergue died in Manresa, in 1521.[50]

18.29.2 Nicolau Desclergue (I) in Manresa

He is found as 'Mestre en medicina' and possessed 106 lliures in the period 1490-1493 as can be read in Marc Torras i Serra, 'Les declaracions de béns dels metges i apotecaris de Manresa en el segle XV.'

Nicolau Desclergue (I) was a Knight and he died in 1521, as can be read in Figure 18.25 on page 151.

Pere Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01), described in Chapter 25.0.2, was not only an inhabitant of Montblanc, but also Burgués Honrado of Manresa, and Trustee of Prats del Rey, in 1533. Therefore it is almost sure that the Desclergues of Manresa are blood-related. Most likely, Nicolau Desclergue (I) was his brother or his maternal cousin, while Nicolau Desclergue (II), in Chapter 18.29.2, a descendant of Nicolau (I).

18.29.3 Nicolau Desclergue (II) in Manresa

Nicolau Desclergue is a close or distant cousin of the Desclergues of Montblanc and likely descends from Nicolau Desclergue (I) in Manresa in Chapter 18.29.2. We have found an interesting document in which he appears in 1674 in Manresa. The document is shown in Figure 18.18 on page 148, Figure 18.19 on page 148, Figure 18.21 on page 149 and Figure 18.22 on page 150. The document shown in Figure 18.20 on page 149 likely also concerns him.

18.30 The Desclergues in Sevilla

The prominence of the Desclergues, among the Catalan merchants in Sevilla, is described in Chapter 25.1.3, through our ancestor Galceran Desclergue (DC02d).

The trade routes, meticulously crafted by the strategic genius of Hernán Cortés, outlined in Chapter 27.20, spanned from Mexico to Cuba, Santo Domingo, and finally Seville. His masterful endeavors precipitated a surge in commercial activities, drawing merchants from diverse corners of the Mediterranean to converge upon Seville. Here, they sought to establish thriving commercial enterprises and marriages, among them the enterprising Desclergue lineage, who left an indelible mark on Seville's bustling mercantile landscape.

It's crucial to recognize the challenges these merchants faced in their endeavors to export and import goods between America and the Canary Islands. In their quest for solutions, they turned to the wise counsel of Don Francisco Núñez, a luminary figure in legal circles. Don Francisco Núñez, a Doctor of Law from the prestigious University of Salamanca, served as the Relator within the Royal Council of Charles V for a significant period, from 1518 to 1545, his guidance proving invaluable in their commercial pursuits.

Interestingly, Don Francisco's personal life was intertwined with the era's significant figures, further bolstering his influence and network. He was the first cousin of Anna Cortés de Monroy, the father of Doña María, and a cousin-uncle to Doña María Anna, establishing deep connections within Seville's elite. His marriage to Mrs. Isabel Rodríguez de las Varillas also played a role in solidifying his position within the upper echelons of Sevillian society.

Through the astute guidance of figures like Don Francisco Núñez, the merchants of Seville, such as the Desclergues, navigated the complex maze of international trade, laying the groundwork for enduring commercial prosperity within the burgeoning transatlantic economy of the sixteenth century.

Galceran Desclergue (DC02d), the uncle of Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03), was married to Ana de Villavicencio, whose grandfather was Ana Sánchez Cortés, the daughter of Martin Cortés de Monroy from the family of Hernán Cortés, described in Chapter 27.20.

Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03) was married to Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán, stemming from the family of Hernán Cortés. The latter couple is described in Chapter 27.

Figure 18.23 on page 150, shows the blood connection between the parents of Jeroni Joan Desclergue (DC05), described in 29. His father, Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortes (DC04) was married to Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio, Jeroni's mother. Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Galceran Desclergue (DC02d) and Ana de Villavicencio. Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortes (DC04) was the son of Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03) and Maria Ana Cortes de Monroy y Vega Bazan.

Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio and Maria Ana Cortes de Monroy y Vega Bazan were of the same era. The blood bond of Jeroni Joan's parents is a testimony of the activity of the Desclergues in Sevile and the trade established there, with the New World, through Hernán Cortés, described in Chapter 27.20.

18.31 Other Desclergues in Montblanc

Before the arrival of our patrilinear bloodline in Montblanc, introduced by Pere Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01), described in Chapter 25 and Chapter 25, there were already Desclergues as military, under the family D'Anguera. We refer to Chapter 25.0.1.7 for more information.

18.32 Other Desclergues

18.32.1 Cerdana Desclergue

Cerdana Desclergue lived in Urgell in 1313-1315 and was the concubine of Raymond Emil.[52]. We do not know who she was.

18.32.2 Nicolaus Desclergue

Nicolaus Desclergue pledged allegiance to His Majesty the King, in Figure 18.24 on page 150, on Wednesday November 29, 1458. We do not know who he was. There is a frequent encounter of persons, named Nicolas Desclergue, at Manresa, as shown in Chapter 18.29. We also urge the reader to read a footnote in Chapter 18.29.1.

18.32.3 Benet Desclergue

On February 18, 1549, Benet Desclergue appeared in Montblanc's notarial document.[53] The document is a historical record of land transactions and ecclesiastical permissions involving various individuals and places in Catalonia, specifically around Montblanc and the Monastery of Poblet, dating back to the 16th century. It includes references to the establishment of emphyteutic leases, a medieval legal agreement for land use, which were granted by ecclesiastical authorities to local inhabitants under certain conditions. The document details the administrative and clerical personnel involved and the geographic scope of these transactions, spanning multiple villages and municipalities.

Benet Desclergue, as mentioned in this document, was the prior Dominic of Tarragona. His role in this context is likely that of a critical ecclesiastical authority responsible for overseeing and granting permissions for significant ecclesiastical property transactions. This would have included approving the use and management of church lands, which in this period would have been critical given the Church's substantial land holdings and the economic and social importance of such properties. The involvement of figures like Benet Desclergue would have been essential to ensure that such transactions were in line with the canons and regulations of the Church and that they were conducted for the benefit of the community and the Church's interests.

It's possible that Benet Desclergue was the brother of Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés, described in Chapter 27, but we found no details to support this assumption.

---

[52] Josep M. Palau i Baduell, Doctoral thesis, "El bisbat d'Urgell del Segle XIV (a travas de la visita pastoral de 1312 a 1315)", 2015, University of Barcelona., records of 1313 GENER 26, 1315 GENER 30, and 1315 MAIG 3

[53] Josep Torné i Cubells, "Catàleg de Pergamins de l'actual Arxiu del Monestir de Poblet", Item 04.

Part VI

The Patrilineal Ancestry along Bertrand Du Guesclin

Chapter 19

Bertrand Du Guesclin or Beltràn de Claquin

19.1 Introduction

Bertrand du Guesclin's declaration, "Ni quito ni pongo rey, pero ayudo a mi señor," epitomizes loyalty and duty underpinning 14th-century feudal society. This statement, rich with historical nuance, mirrors the expectations placed upon various societal roles, including noblemen, scribes, notaries, jurors, and academics.

For noblemen, the 14th century was marked by stringent codes of chivalry and feudal obligations. Their primary duty was to their lord, a relationship underscored by personal loyalty and service in military and political arenas. Du Guesclin's allegiance to Enrique de Trastámara is a testament to this feudal principle, where the bond between a vassal and his lord was sacrosanct and paramount, reflecting the core tenets of medieval nobility.[1]

Scribes and notaries, though not directly involved in declarations of political loyalty, played a critical role in the administration of justice and governance. Their responsibility was to maintain the integrity and truth of documents, which supported their societies' legal and administrative framework. The notion of aiding a lord, as expressed by du Guesclin, aligns with their duty to ensure that records and agreements accurately reflect their lords' rightful claims and intentions, thereby upholding social order and legal legitimacy.[2]

Jurors, often drawn from the local nobility or respected citizens, were expected to balance personal loyalty with broader principles of justice. While du Guesclin's statement might suggest a bias, it highlights a common medieval dilemma: navigating personal loyalties within the framework of public duties. Jurors had to make decisions that upheld justice while also reflecting the complex web of feudal allegiances, thereby maintaining both personal and public integrity.[3]

Academics and scholars, somewhat removed from direct feudal conflicts, were nevertheless bound by a duty to pursue knowledge and truth. Their work often relied on the patronage of nobles, creating a dynamic where loyalty and support were crucial. The principle of aiding a lord is an extension of their duty to support societal stability and governance, facilitating the flourishing of academic and intellectual pursuits. This relationship underscores the interconnectedness of medieval society, where various roles, despite their differences, were united by underlying principles of loyalty and duty.[4]

In summary, du Guesclin's statement encapsulates the essence of 14th-century feudal and societal principles. It emphasizes the importance of loyalty to one's lord while navigating the dynamics of power and duty. This loyalty was a binding force that maintained social and political order, a cornerstone of medieval societal structure from noblemen to jurors and beyond. The overarching theme of personal service and loyalty was integral to the highly stratified and duty-bound society of the Middle Ages, ensuring cohesion and stability amid the complexities of feudal life.

The premise positing Bertrand Du Guesclin as the progenitor of the patrilineal lineage is founded on several corroborating observations.

Firstly, historical records penned by Ancient French Chroniclers assert that Du Guesclin sired descendants in Soria, who bore appellations such as 'de Touron,' 'de Tours,' or 'Thoreux.' In Spanish, these names are reducible to 'de Torres' or 'Torró,' with the archaic rendition of 'Torró' being 'Turró.' Comprehensive analysis contends 'de Torres' implausibility, favoring 'Torró' as the probable nomenclature.

Secondly, the Desclergues of Montblanc trace their lineage back to Torró ancestry. Despite the Desclergues' familial heritage spanning more than two millennia, historical records reveal an absence of patrilineal lineage beyond Pere Desclergue (DC01) in noble title petitions. A thorough examination of genealogical and historical data reveals Pere Desclergue's full designation as Pere Desclergue

Figure 19.1: Left is an image of Bertrand Du Guesclin (by Féron, work on paper, date unknown, origin unknown, found at the Scottish National Portrait Gallery Print Room, accession number UP G 239). At Saint Coulomb, right, on the Côte d' Émeraude in Brittany, the fortress 'Le Fort du Guesclin' is located (the photo was taken before 1900).

---

[1] Keen, M. (1984). Chivalry. Yale University Press.

[2] Clanchy, M. T. (1993). From Memory to Written Record: England 1066-1307. Blackwell.

[3] Hyams, P. R. (1981). King, Lords, and Peasants in Medieval England: The Common Law of Villeinage in the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries. Clarendon Press.

[4] Southern, R. W. (1986). Scholastic Humanism and the Unification of Europe. Blackwell.

Figure 19.2: The author's father (1941-2015) (left) and elder uncle (1937-2007, father of Carole) (right), to compare with an image of Du Guesclin (middle). (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 19.3: The author's great grandfather Ernest Constant Declercq (left) and Bertrand Du Guesclin (right). It's evidence that the skull of men (not necessarily the face) is dominantly inherited along the male line. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

y Torró or Pere Torró y Desclergue. This historical reticence to trace lineage patrilineally underscores the prevalence of the name Pere Torró y Desclergue (DC01), described in Chapter 25, thereby emphasizing Torró lineage from the paternal line and Desclergue lineage from the maternal line.

Thirdly, contemporary accounts from Du Guesclin's era record diverse renditions of his surname, some of which resemble 'Desclergue,' as outlined in Chapters 19.26.4 and 75. This linguistic proximity suggests familiarity and acceptance among Du Guesclin's descendants with the appellation 'Desclergue,' substantiating its adoption within the lineage.

Fourthly, employing abductive reasoning based on critical evidence—such as Du Guesclin's own assertion of his descent from Aquin—suggests that the Du Guesclin lineage traces back to a figure known as Desclergue. This individual, while operating under Moorish rule in Iberia, was designated as 'Hakin' or 'Hakim,' a title synonymous with 'Clergue,' as explained, for instance, in Chapter 15. The swift affiliation of Bertrand Du Guesclin with the King of Aragon and the Trastamara dynasty implies a recognition and exploitation of the Desclergues' esteemed reputation and noble lineage. This lineage, reputed for its 'purple blood,' outlined in Chapter 17.1, traces its roots to Byzantine rule in Spanish territories, including Bougie, now part of modern-day Algeria. Such connections underscore the historical significance and the noble heritage that Bertrand Du Guesclin leveraged in his ascent.

Lastly, genetic analyses, including Y-DNA and autosomal DNA studies, shown in Chapters 19.27 and 73.10.4.3, corroborate Bertrand Du Guesclin as the patrilineal forebear of the Desclergues, providing empirical support for those mentioned above historical and genealogical conjectures.

The precise genealogy can be found in Chapter 20 and Chapter 25.

In this Chapter, we extensively study the patrilineal ancestry through Bertrand Du Guesclin by exposing and explaining all the existing evidence.

The current study ranges from historical facts to heraldry and DNA. The Y-DNA Haplogroup of the Desclergues stems from Du Guesclin, while specific autosomal DNA fractions were inherited from old families in Brittany, together with larger fractions from old nobility in Aragon and Castilla. The heraldic coat of arms of the Desclergues of Montblanc provides further evidence of this lineage.

Genetically speaking, the Desclergues have a Y-DNA Haplogroup in the branch SRY2627, typically referred to as 'Catalan DNA' , but there is a historical explanation why Du Guesclin may have had the same DNA while he was born in Bretagne. One of several migrations from Spain to Bretagne, recorded in history, must be the reason and is described further in Chapter 19.6.

To summarise, several facts in different adjacent fields of expertise confirm that Du Guesclin is the forefather of the Desclergues of Montblanc, who constructed the house on the Main Square. At the same time, the patrilineal ancestors of Du Guesclin, must equally have been Desclergues. In what follows, we will refer to DNA analysis, the Coat of Arms and also facts known about the offspring of Du Guesclin in Spain. The Trastámara family forms the link between Du Guesclin and Montblanc. The bloodline, starting with the eldest recorded ancestor of Du Guesclin, is:

Richer de Guarplic (around 1040 AD) (DG01),
Clamaroch de Guarplic (DG02),
Bertrand I de Guarplic (DG03),
Geoffroy de Guarplic (DG04),
Bertrand II du Guesclin (DG05),
Pierre du Guesclin (DG06),
Bertrand III du Guesclin (DG07),
Bertrand IV du Guesclin (DG08),
Guillaume du Guesclin (DG09),
Robert II du Guesclin (DG10),
Bertrand du Guesclin / Beltràn Claquin (DG11),
Beltrán Torró (DT01), Galceran Torró (DT02),
Pere Torró (DT03),
Francesc Torró y Miquel (DT04),
Don Pere de Torró y Desclergue (DC01),
Don Berenguer Desclergue (DC02),
Don Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03),

Figure 19.4: Artistic impression of the first Du Guesclin, Aquin or Hakin, who was stationed at Saint Coulomb, an outpost of the Marche of Bretagne. This image was made with AI (DALL·E 2024-05-22 20.52.24)

Don Bonaventura y Cortés (II) (DC04),
Don Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05),
Don Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06) (1602 AD),
Don Antoni Declerque (III) (DC07),
Don Pere Declercgz (II) (DC08),
Don Joan Declercq (II) (DC09),
Renier Declercq (DC10),
Pierre Joseph Declercq (DC11),
Leo Bernard Declercq (DC12),
Ivo Declercq (DC13),
Ernest Constant Declercq (DC14), shown in Figure 19.3 on page 156,
Michel Achiel Renatus Declercq (DC15),
Maurice Alois Declercq (DC16),
Nico Felicien Declercq (DC17),
Benjamin J. H. Declercq, Anna-Laura F. M. Declercq, Lambert L. B. Declercq (DC18).
An illustration of 'Le Fort du Guesclin' is, finally, shown in Figure 19.1 on page 155.

19.2 Who was Bertrand Du Guesclin?

During the rise of French nationalism in the 19th century, Bertrand Du Guesclin was often depicted as a quintessential common Breton who ascended from humble beginnings to heroic stature. This portrayal, however, is a romanticized and historically inaccurate representation. Social mobility in the 14th century was virtually nonexistent. In reality, Du Guesclin hailed from a lineage of distinguished families. As detailed in this study, his patrilineal ancestry includes noble bloodlines, tracing back to the Desclergues of Spain. This noble heritage was established through the settlement of the knightly figure, Hakin, in Brittany. Thus, Du Guesclin's rise was not from obscurity but rooted in his noble heritage and connections. His ancestry, partially shown in Figure 19.7 on page 161, was not that of a common man.

Bertrand Du Guesclin was a Complex Figure of Loyalty and Allegiance.

Bertrand Du Guesclin, a prominent figure of the Hundred Years' War, remains an enigmatic character whose loyalty and allegiances have been the subject of historical debate. While some portray him as a hero of the conflict, celebrated by troubadours like Cuvelier for his romanticized exploits, others view him with suspicion and label him a traitor, particularly among certain Breton factions.

He had noble origins and a dutiful Lordship. Born around 1319, Bertrand Du Guesclin was no mere second-rate squire but the scion of a prestigious and affluent lineage. In the early 14th century, when the dubbing of knights was an extravagant affair, even the lesser members of the Du Guesclin family were not spared. Bertrand inherited two substantial fiefs, Broons and Sens, adding to his stature as the head of the family. He fulfilled his role as a lord and family leader by ensuring the well-being of his vassals and relatives who accompanied him in his rise and military campaigns, generously bestowing lands and fiefs upon them.

Du Guesclin was a loyal vassal to Jeanne de Penthièvre, shown in Figure 19.5 on page 158. His loyalty would play a significant role in his acceptation by the Count of Barcelona and the King of Aragon, as explained in Chapter 19.20 and Chapter 19.19. Throughout his life, Du Guesclin remained steadfast in fulfilling his vassal obligations, particularly towards Jeanne de Penthièvre. Jeanne, the heiress to the Avaugour and the Duchy of Brittany, held a pivotal position in his life. Du Guesclin's war contracts consistently included a clause that obligated him to leave everything and fight for her when called upon. To Du Guesclin and much of the Breton aristocracy, Jeanne was the legitimate Duchess of Brittany, and Jean de Montfort was regarded as a usurper. Du Guesclin served as Jeanne's war leader, succeeding notable figures in her familial network, such as Rolland de Dinan-Montafilant and the renowned hero of the Combat des Trente, Jean de Beaumanoir.

Jehenne duchesse de Bretaigne femme de st Charles de Bloys

Figure 19.5: Bertrand Du Guesclin, the loyal vassal and war leader, and Jeanne de Penthièvre, the legitimate Duchess of Brittany, whose alliance shaped the Breton War of Succession. Du Guesclin's unwavering commitment to Jeanne's cause underscored his military prowess and dedication, pivotal in her struggle against Jean de Montfort. The photo right is an impression made by AI (DALL·E 2024-05-25 08.21.02). The image left is a portrait of Joan of Penthievre, the duchess of Brittany, in the 16th century Receuil d'Arras, a collection of portraits copied by Jacques de Boucq and was drawn around 1570.

Jeanne de Penthièvre, born in 1319 and dying in 1384, was a significant figure in the 14th-century Breton War of Succession, a conflict that shaped the political landscape of Brittany. As the daughter of Guy de Penthièvre and Jeanne de Avaugour, Jeanne's claim to the Duchy of Brittany was based on her descent from Arthur II, Duke of Brittany, through her father, who was Arthur II's younger son. Jeanne's marriage to Charles of Blois in 1337 further strengthened her position. When Duke John III of Brittany died without direct heirs in 1341, Jeanne and her husband Charles of Blois claimed the duchy, sparking the War of Succession against John of Montfort, another claimant.

Jeanne de Penthièvre's significance extends beyond her dynastic ambitions. She played a crucial role in Bertrand Du Guesclin's career. Bertrand Du Guesclin rose from obscurity to become one of the most respected generals of his time. His loyalty to the House of Blois, specifically to Jeanne de Penthièvre, was a pivotal aspect of his early career. Du Guesclin initially served as a loyal vassal to Jeanne, supporting her claim to the Breton duchy against the Montfort faction. His military prowess was instrumental in several key battles during the Breton War of Succession, where his strategic insight and leadership significantly bolstered Jeanne's position.

As a vassal, Du Guesclin owed military service and support to Jeanne, who, in turn, provided him with protection and the means to sustain his retinue. This relationship was mutually beneficial, as Jeanne's cause allowed Du Guesclin to demonstrate his military capabilities, ultimately leading to his recognition as one of the foremost knights of his era. His loyalty to Jeanne and the House of Blois was steadfast until the Treaty of Guérande 1365 ended the war and recognized John of Montfort as the Duke of Brittany. This resolution marked a turning point in Du Guesclin's career, as he then shifted his allegiance to the French crown, where he continued to distinguish himself in the Hundred Years' War.

Du Guesclin's prominence as a formidable warlord surged in 1354 at Pontorson, where he assumed the role of captain, a stronghold that guarded the northeastern entrance to Brittany. This strategic location allowed him to monitor key territories like Mayenne and Dinan under Jeanne de Penthièvre's control. His remarkable military acumen was showcased in Normandy, where he bravely battled against the Anglo-Navarrese forces, culminating in the victorious Battle of Cocherel in May 1364. King Charles V rewarded him with the county of Longueville. However, Du Guesclin also experienced captivity at the hands of the English, with his lords ultimately securing his release through ransom.

He became a Constable of France and the defender of Allied Interests.

Following his release, Du Guesclin played a pivotal role in the Spanish theater, supporting the Duke of Anjou's ally, Henry of Trastamare, in ascending to the Castilian throne. He expanded his territory and welcomed Breton settlers to his lands in Borja and Molina. At the behest of Louis of Anjou, King Charles V appointed him the Constable of France on October 2, 1370, placing him in command of the royal armies during a critical period marked by a major English offensive. Du Guesclin's priorities lay in safeguarding the interests of his lords and their allies, with the king's concerns taking a secondary role.

1373 Du Guesclin expelled Duke John IV and his English allies from Brittany. However, King Charles V did not restore Brittany to Jeanne de Penthièvre, leading to a five-year period where Du Guesclin governed Brittany unofficially. In December 1378, the King annexed Brittany into his realm, causing tension. From his vantage point in Pontorson, Du Guesclin observed the movements of his vassals, allies, and fellow soldiers who formed a League to resist the annexation. He allowed John IV, backed by this League and endorsed by Jeanne de Penthièvre, to return to Brittany. Charles V was displeased, even contemplating removing Du Guesclin's constable's sword, but the Duke of Anjou intervened. Du Guesclin ultimately resumed military operations and passed away due to illness during the siege of Châteauneuf-de-Randon on July 13, 1380.

In retrospect, Du Guesclin's lifelong loyalty to Jeanne de Penthièvre, his allies, vassals, and friends is evident. He acted in defense of Brittany by driving out English marauders. Yet in 1378, despite possessing significant military power, he did not intervene when John IV, an Anglophile sovereign, returned to the Breton throne. For Du Guesclin and other Breton nobles, annexing Brittany to the royal domain meant becoming direct vassals of King Charles V, obligating them to fight for him without compensation. The plan to eventually return the duchess to her Breton throne faltered when John IV had descendants, the Montfort dukes, who painted Du Guesclin as a traitor to Brittany.

The disposition of Du Guesclin's remains is a testament to the complex web of allegiances and loyalties he navigated during his lifetime. His flesh found its resting place with the Dominicans of Montferrant, his heart in the Franciscan church of Dinan, and his bones were ultimately laid to rest in the royal necropolis of Saint-Denis. A glorious ceremony marked this final honor, attended by the entire royal family and the elite of the military aristocracy of the Kingdom of France.

Ultimately, we find ourselves compelled to ponder the true essence of Bertrand Du Guesclin during his lifetime. Historiography offers varied perspectives: some praise him as a gallant knight, celebrated for his numerous military triumphs and esteemed titles, while others depict him as originating from relatively modest beginnings, hailing from the lesser nobility of Brittany but ascending within noble echelons. Though enticing to contemporary sensibilities, the latter portrayal is fraught with complexity. In Du Guesclin's era, social mobility was severely constrained. Historical records attest that Bertrand Du Guesclin consistently asserted his lineage traced back to a Saracen sovereign named Aiquin (or Aquin). We can scrutinize this assertion in our present era, aided by the renowned 'Aquin's Romance.' Yet, within Bertrand Du Guesclin's consciousness, his descent from the Saracen king Aiquin or Aquin, who reigned over Bougie in modern-day Algeria and certain territories in Spain, remained an unwavering certainty. He identified his original family name as Glay Aquin, employing it prominently during his stays in Spain, where he was occasionally referred to as Claquin or Beltran Claquin. The open embrace of this narrative indicates the absence of contention from Breton's French and Spanish nobility regarding his genealogical origins. As a scion of royalty, it was therefore unsurprising for Bertrand Du Guesclin to secure entry into the Aragonese nobility and entirely natural for him to secure a marriage alliance with Miss Torró, hailing from the venerable nobility of the Empúries region near Gerona. Likewise, as a descendant of regal lineage, it was within the realms of normativity for Bertrand Du Guesclin to be conferred the lordship of Soria and for Henri de Trastemara to elevate him to the throne of Granada, incentivizing his efforts towards the reconquest of Granada from the Saracens.

Concerning Aquin, we must refer to the work of Paris Gaston[5] The narrative of Aquin's Romance, alternatively known as Aiquin, embodies a rich tapestry of gestural lyricism, detailing the epic resurgence of Charlemagne's control over Brittany from the grasp of the Saracen ruler Aiquin. This tale, steeped in antiquity, is a guiding light through the obscure corridors of regional folklore, preserving invaluable local traditions within Brittany's cultural fabric. Likely crafted between 1170 and 1190, its passage through time has been hindered by the unfortunate state of a 15th-century rendition, suffering truncations and mutilations that greatly affected its syntax, semantics, and prosody. Joüon des Longrais provided insight into the narrative's journey by chronicling the saga of the manuscript, which had been safeguarded on the diminutive isle of Cézembre since at least the 16th century. Despite enduring English attacks in 1693, the manuscript survived unharmed and found refuge within the National Library's vaults, cataloged as number 2233 in the French collection. Joüon des Longrais identified other manuscripts as mere replicas of this revered exemplar, though mistakenly dating its origins to the early 15th or late 14th century, a claim unsupported by philological evidence beyond the mid-15th century.

Continuing seamlessly, a plethora of bibliographical references emerge, encompassing literary historiography from Fauchet's manuscript annotations to scholarly investigations into Bretonic antiquity intertwined with the history of Du Guesclin. Of particular interest are the connections drawn by Froissart, linking the saga with the illustrious lineage of Du Guesclin.

Luce's analysis dissects the chronicler's narrative, as delineated by Joüon des Longrais. It reveals encounters with a Breton knight who unveils the constable's name as "Du Glay Aquin," along with the story behind it.

The genesis of the narrative unfolds as follows: A monarch from Bougie and Barbary named Aquin (later Aiquin by the 14th century), taking advantage of Charlemagne's conflicts in Iberia, arrives at Vannes, seizing control and constructing a tower by the sea named Glay, colloquially referred to as Glay Aquin. After Charlemagne frees Brittany from Saracen's rule, Aquinas flees with his partner, inadvertently leaving their child behind in the fortress. Charlemagne, our ancestor, shown in Figure 76.8 on page 1681, discovers the child, Olivier, and grants him the fiefdom of Glay Aquin and its surroundings. Olivier, the progenitor of the lineage from which Bertrand du Glay Aquin, or Du Guesclin, emerges as a notable figure. Intriguingly, Bertrand purportedly embraced this saga, envisioning a quest to reclaim the Bougiean crown after his involvement in placing Henri de Transtamare on the Spanish throne.

Subtle differences arise between the narrative and the lyrical composition, potentially due to memory lapses or intentional embellishments. The Glaiequin lineage likely fabricated this tale, perhaps influenced by the phonetic similarity between their surname and Aiquin or Aquin. Consequently, the "Aiquin Tower" in the story evolved into Glay Aquin, distancing itself from its origin in Quidalet. Nevertheless, traces of its true essence persist, hinted at by its possible identification with the Oregle tower in Saint-Servan, known as Solidor—a name shrouded in mystery. An annotator of the manuscript, hailing from Saint-Malo in the 16th century, suggests "Seul y dort" as its etymology, interpreted as "sleep there alone," implying the tower's supposed impregnability. This fabrication of the abandoned child's presence within the tower is a vital link connecting the Glaiequin lineage to their former Saracen overlords.

In conclusion, as Luce astutely observed, these ingrained illusions, nurtured since childhood, may have subtly influenced the constable's ambitions and, consequently, his fate. Paris Gaston argues that the legend of Aquinas deserves a place in Du Guesclin's biography.

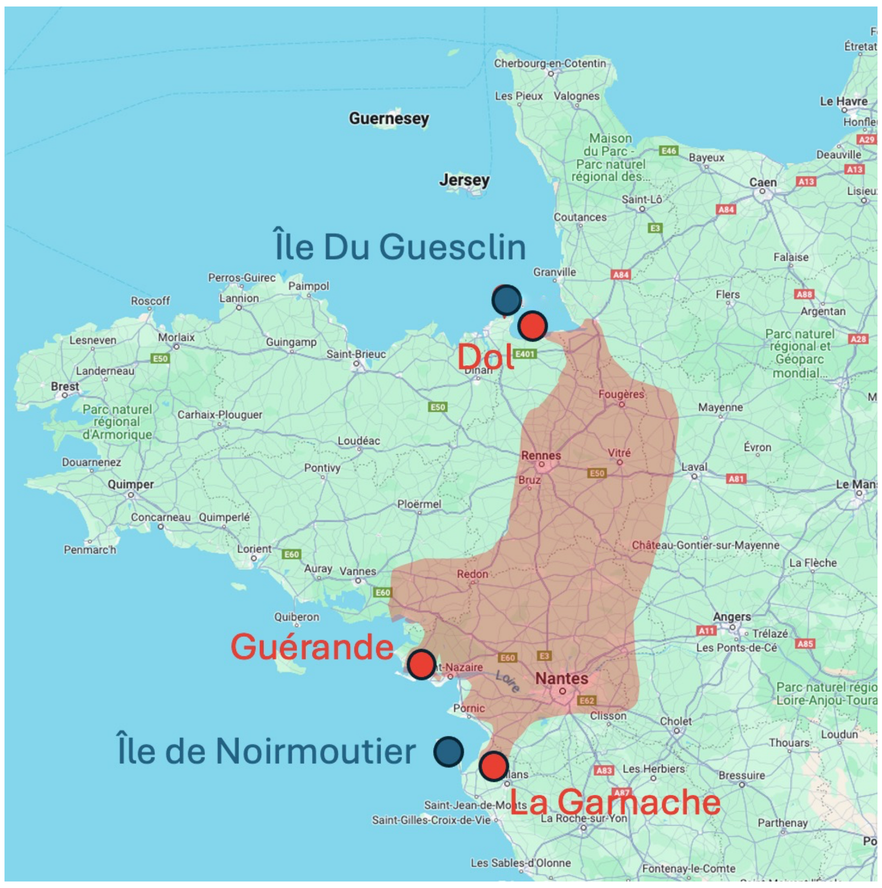
19.3 Why Bertrand Du Guesclin?

The ancestral lineage of the Desclergues family presents an intriguing puzzle, with connections to historical figures such as Bertrand Du Guesclin and involving individuals like Torró, Miquel, and Clergue.

In part II, the research methodologies applied by historians are discussed. The inclusion of Bertrand Du Guesclin in our ancestry is founded on a comprehensive synthesis of inductive, deductive, and abductive reasoning, integrating all historical and DNA evidence available to the author. A Y-DNA Haplogroup analysis of Bertrand Du Guesclin's remains would significantly enhance this research. However, given the current limitations and logistical challenges, such an analysis is unlikely to occur soon. Despite these constraints,

---

[5] Paris Gaston. Le Roman d'Aquin, ou la Conqueste de la Bretaigne par le roy Charlemaigne, chanson de geste du XIIe siècle, publiée par F. Joüon des Longrais, 1880. In: Romania, tome 9 n°35, 1880. pp. 445-463.



Guernesey
Jersey
Cherbourg-en-Cotentin
Les Pieux
Valognes
Le Havre
Honfleur
Deauville
Lisieux
Bayeux
Caen
Saint-Lô
Coutances
Granville
Falaise
Flers
Argentan
Île Du Guesclin
Dol
Perros-Guirec
Paimpol
Lannion
Roscoff
Morlaix
Guingamp
Saint-Brieuc
Lesneven
Landerneau
Brest
Fougères
Mayenne
Évron
Rennes
Vitré
Bruz
Laval
Le Mans
Loudéac
Pontivy
Carhaix-Plouguer
Douarnenez
Quimper
Concarneau
Quimperlé
Penmarc'h
Lorient
Ploërmel
Auray
Vannes
Redon
Château-Gontier-sur-Mayenne
La Flèche
Quiberon
Angers
Trélazé
Les Ponts-de-Cé
Guérande
Nantes
Loire
Pornic
Clisson
Cholet
Thouars
Loudun
Île de Noirmoutier
Les Herbiers
Bressuire
La Garnache
Saint-Jean-de-Monts
Saint-Gilles-Croix-de-Vie
La Roche-sur-Yon
Parthenay
Les Sables-d'Olonne
Fontenay-le-Comte

Figure 19.6: The Breton March (La Marche de Bretagne) is highlighted in red. Established by the Carolingian Empire during the reign of Charlemagne, the Breton March served as a fortified buffer zone along the western frontier of the Frankish Empire. Its primary purpose was to protect the empire from incursions by the independent and often rebellious Breton territories. The March encompassed strategically significant strongholds such as Nantes, Rennes, and Vannes, fortified to maintain Frankish control and influence over the region. Île de Noirmoutier in the South and Saint Coulomb (Île du Guesclin) in the North were strategic outposts.

the author remains hopeful that future advancements will facilitate this crucial aspect of genealogical validation.

A genealogist striving for straightforwardness and simplicity might assume that Pere Desclergue (DC01) descends patrilineally from Ramon Desclergue. However, such an assumption would overlook critical details revealed in historical documents. Notably, the appearance of the name Torró and the omission of Pere Desclergue's paternal ancestors in a document intended for his descendants to obtain a noble title suggest complexities in his lineage. Given the importance of patrilineal ancestry in claims to nobility, the absence of mention of his paternal lineage is significant. If Pere Desclergue had inherited his surname from his father, his descendants would undoubtedly have emphasized this connection in their noble appraisals. This evidence indicates that the Desclergue name was inherited through Pere's mother. As elucidated in this study, Pere adopted the name from his maternal uncle, from whom he inherited, while his paternal lineage traces back to the Torró family, stemming from Du Guesclin.

Bertrand Du Guesclin represents a particularly intriguing figure in our ancestry tree. The seamless integration of his descendants with the Desclergue family, adopting their name after just a few generations, can be attributed to an awareness of their ancient genealogy. Bertrand Du Guesclin himself asserted his descent from a figure named Aquin. The name Aquin, or Hakin, derives from the Arabic term Hakim, which essentially shares the same meaning as Clergue. Discounting the legendary notion that Du Guesclin descended from an obscure king named Aquin, the most plausible hypothesis is that he descended from Hakin, a member of the Desclergue family established in Islamic Spain. This genealogical connection underscores the historical and cultural amalgamations that have shaped our lineage.

19.4 La Marche de Bretagne and Île Du Guesclin

To better understand the March of Brittany, the reader may consider Chapter 13 first. During the reign of Charlemagne, a significant historical figure known as Hakim, also referred to as Hakin or Aquin in various sources, was stationed at an outpost in the Marche de Bretagne. This Hakim, whose lineage is traced back to the prestigious Desclergues family from Spain, detailed in Chapter 15, had earned the designation under Moorish rule, where the title 'Hakim' was equivalent to 'Clergue' in the local context. His ancestry returned to the Byzantine period in Spain, during which his forebears gained 'purple blood' status, explained in Chapter 17.1, denoting noble lineage. One of his patrilineal ancestors resided in Bougie (present-day Béjaïa in northern Algeria), described in Chapter 11, which influenced Bertrand Du Guesclin's ambition to conquer Bougie. This ambition was intertwined with his support for Enrique de Trastamara and the King of Aragon in their efforts to thwart English influence in Spain, as explained in Chapter 19.17.

Figure 19.6 on page 160 illustrates a contemporary map of Brittany, highlighting in red the approximate area of the Breton March (La Marche de Bretagne). Within this delineated zone, numerous fortifications were established. In the southern part of the March, significant strongholds included La Garnache and Guérande, with the island of Noirmoutier serving as a crucial outpost. In the northern section, fortifications were centered around Dol, with Saint-Coulomb, also known as Île Du Guesclin, acting as a vital outpost.

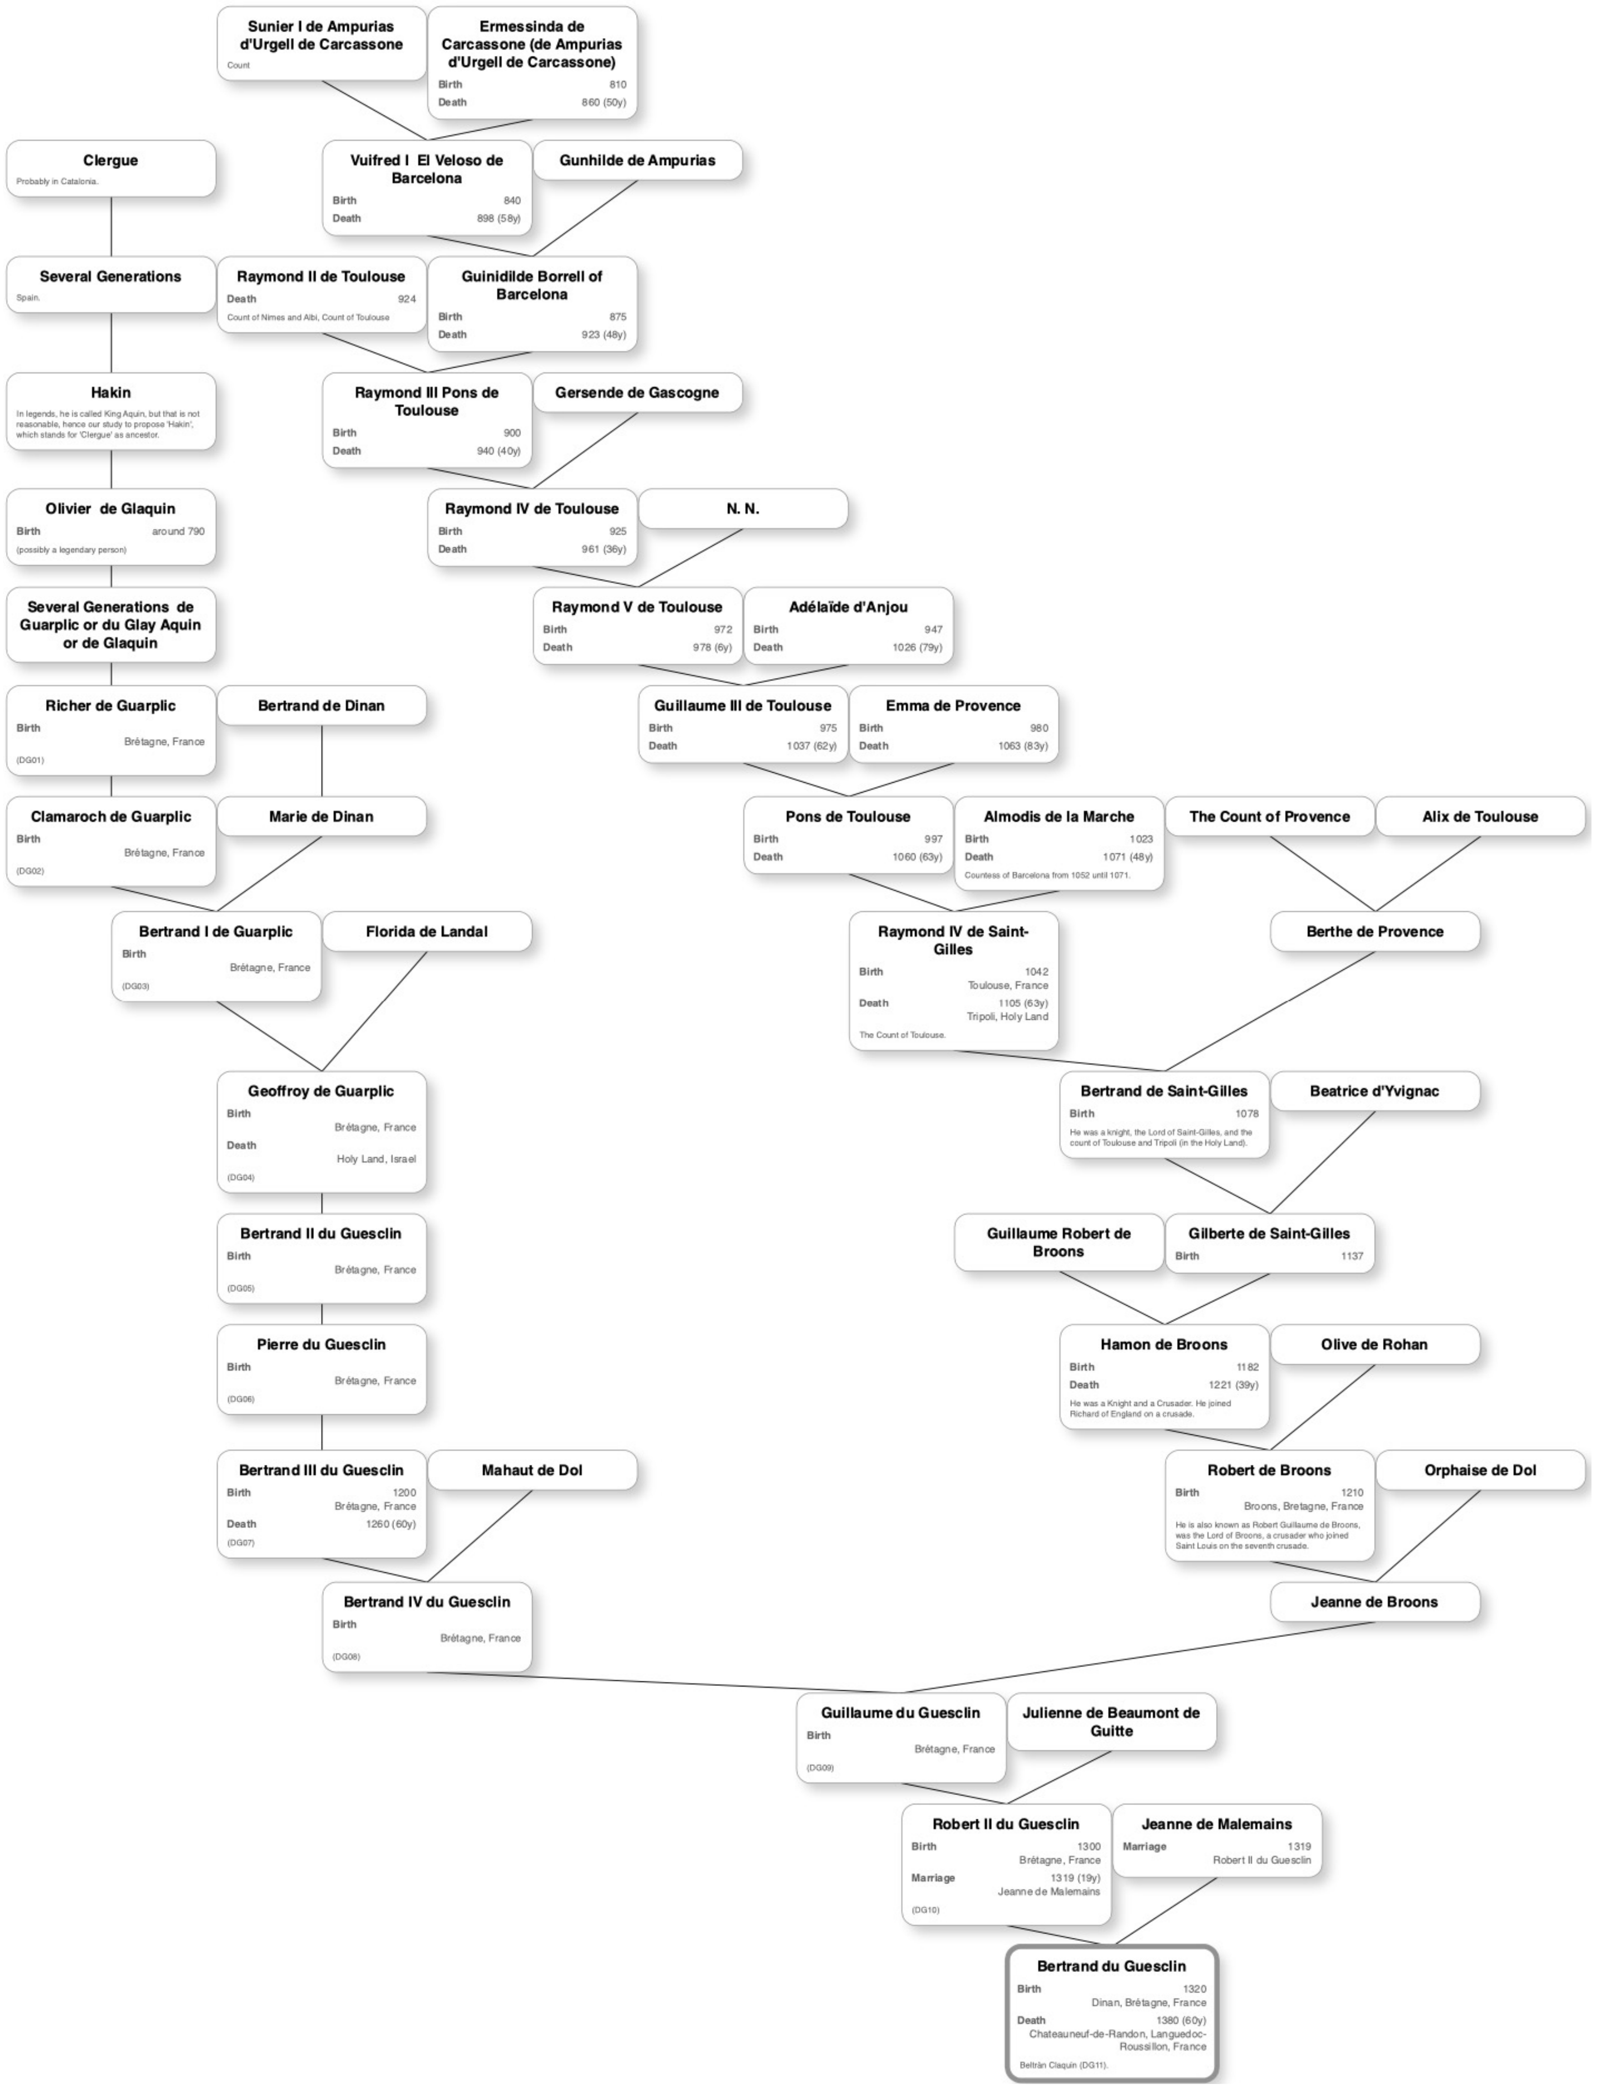
The Franks strategically employed Île de Noirmoutier as a refuge and defensive position against the frequent Viking raids during the 9th century. The fortifications on the island enabled the Franks to launch military operations aimed at securing the coastal regions and maintaining surveillance over Breton activities. Saint-Coulomb, or Île Du Guesclin, held further significance as it was the station of the patrilineal ancestor of Bertrand Du Guesclin, underscoring, in retrospect, the military and strategic importance attributed to these fortified locations within the broader context of the Carolingian defensive network against external and internal threats. The significance in the realm of the ancestry of Du Guesclin is clarified in Chapter 19.8.

19.5 Spanish Patrilineal Roots

Bertrand Du Guesclin is remembered for his notable titles, 'King of Granada,' 'Connétable de France,' and 'Condestable de Castilla,' listed in Chapter 19.22. The history of Bertrand Du Guesclin's ancestors is actually deeply rooted in Spanish origin, French ancestry, and descendants in Spain, as explained in Chapter 19.13.

The story begins with his ancestor, who held a significant judicial position under Moorish rule in Spain and later settled in Saint-Coulomb, Brittany.

This settlement is crucial in understanding Du Guesclin's Mediterranean roots, which he was well aware of, as indicated by his dark



Sunier I de Ampurias d'Urgell de Carcassone
Count
Ermessinda de Carcassone (de Ampurias d'Urgell de Carcassone)
Birth 810
Death 860 (50y)
Clergue
Probably in Catalonia.
Vuifred I El Veloso de Barcelona
Birth 840
Death 898 (58y)
Gunhilde de Ampurias
Several Generations
Spain.
Raymond II de Toulouse
Death 924
Count of Nimes and Albi, Count of Toulouse
Guinidilde Borrell of Barcelona
Birth 875
Death 923 (48y)
Hakin
In legends, he is called King Aquin, but that is not reasonable, hence our study to propose 'Hakin', which stands for 'Clergue' as ancestor.
Raymond III Pons de Toulouse
Birth 900
Death 940 (40y)
Gersende de Gascogne
Olivier de Glaquin
Birth around 790
(possibly a legendary person)
Raymond IV de Toulouse
Birth 925
Death 961 (36y)
N. N.
Several Generations de Guarplic or du Glay Aquin or de Glaquin
Raymond V de Toulouse
Birth 972
Death 978 (6y)
Adélaïde d'Anjou
Birth 947
Death 1026 (79y)
Richer de Guarplic
Birth
Brétagne, France
(DG01)
Bertrand de Dinan
Guillaume III de Toulouse
Birth 975
Death 1037 (62y)
Emma de Provence
Birth 980
Death 1063 (83y)
Clamaroch de Guarplic
Birth
Brétagne, France
(DG02)
Marie de Dinan
Pons de Toulouse
Birth 997
Death 1060 (63y)
Almodis de la Marche
Birth 1023
Death 1071 (48y)
Countess of Barcelona from 1052 until 1071.
The Count of Provence
Alix de Toulouse
Bertrand I de Guarplic
Birth
Brétagne, France
(DG03)
Florida de Landal
Raymond IV de Saint-Gilles
Birth 1042
Toulouse, France
Death 1105 (63y)
Tripoli, Holy Land
The Count of Toulouse.
Berthe de Provence
Geoffroy de Guarplic
Birth
Brétagne, France
Death
Holy Land, Israel
(DG04)
Bertrand de Saint-Gilles
Birth 1078
He was a knight, the Lord of Saint-Gilles, and the count of Toulouse and Tripoli (in the Holy Land).
Beatrice d'Yvignac
Bertrand II du Guesclin
Birth
Brétagne, France
(DG05)
Guillaume Robert de Broons
Gilberte de Saint-Gilles
Birth 1137
Pierre du Guesclin
Birth
Brétagne, France
(DG06)
Hamon de Broons
Birth 1182
Death 1221 (39y)
He was a Knight and a Crusader. He joined Richard of England on a crusade.
Olive de Rohan
Bertrand III du Guesclin
Birth 1200
Brétagne, France
Death 1260 (60y)
(DG07)
Mahaut de Dol
Robert de Broons
Birth 1210
Broons, Bretagne, France
He is also known as Robert Guillaume de Broons, was the Lord of Broons, a crusader who joined Saint Louis on the seventh crusade.
Orphaise de Dol
Bertrand IV du Guesclin
Birth
Brétagne, France
(DG08)
Jeanne de Broons
Guillaume du Guesclin
Birth
Brétagne, France
(DG09)
Julienne de Beaumont de Guitte
Robert II du Guesclin
Birth 1300
Brétagne, France
Marriage 1319 (19y)
Jeanne de Malemains
(DG10)
Jeanne de Malemains
Marriage 1319
Robert II du Guesclin
Bertrand du Guesclin
Birth 1320
Dinan, Brétagne, France
Death 1380 (60y)
Chateauneuf-de-Randon, Languedoc-Roussillon, France
Beltràn Claquín (DG11).

Figure 19.7: Ancestry of Bertrand Du Guesclin.

Figure 19.8: The picture was taken at Nabeul in Tunesia, around 500 km East of Béjaïa (Bougie) in Algeria, in 1984. The author stands in the middle. Bertrand Du Guesclin believed he had ancestors in Bougie. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Bertrand du Guesclin
Birth 1320 Dinan, Brétagne, France
Death 1380 (60y) Chateauneuf-de-Randon, Languedoc-Roussillon, France
Beltràn Claquin (DG11).
N. N.
Michel du Guesclin
(DG12)
N. Torró
Dame de Soria
Beltrán Torró
Birth around 1358
(DT01).
Galceran Torró
(DT02)
Nicolau Torró
(DT03b)
Galceran Torró
(DT04c)
Pere Torró
(DT03) He was a notary
N. N.
Jaume Safont
(DT04d)
Francesc Torró y Miquel
Death 1494
(DT04) Royal Secretary
Clementa Desclergue
Eulalia Torró
(DC01d)
Francina Torró
(DC01c)
Galceran Torró y Desclergue
Birth Montblanc, España
(DC01b) Alias Galceran Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue. He appears with his brother Pere (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt.
Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth Montblanc, España
(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.
Geraldo or Guérech or Guerau Torró
(DT01b) He used the shield with two fleurs de lys and a tower in 1405.
N. N.
Guerau Torró
(DT02b)
Margarida
Nicolau Torró
Death before 1431
(DT02c)
N. d'Estapera
Eulalia Miquel
Antoni Torró
(DT03c)
Francesc Torró
(DT03d)
Joan Torró
(DT03e)
Joan Torró y Miquel
(DT04b) He appears as a notary in Barcelona in 1444 and he only had daughters. He was involved in the administration of the Temple and the Hospital General de Santa Creu de Barcelona.
N. Hostalric
Eleonor Torró y Miquel
She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.
Eleonor Torró y Miquel
She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.
Bertran Torró
Death 1462
(DT03f) In 1455, he also appears in the chronicles as Betrán Turró.
Francesca N.
Sibilla Miquel
Birth Girona, España
Death 1476
Nicolau Torró i Miquel
Death 1469
Galceran Torró
Death 1454 Barcelona, España
(DT03g) He lived and worked as a judge in Tortosa in 1391.
Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth Montblanc, España
(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.

Figure 19.9: Descendants of Bertrand du Guesclin. Pere Desclergue (DC01) (Pere Torró y Desclergue) was a patrilineal great-great-great-grandson of Bertrand Du Guesclin (DG11).

Figure 19.10: Close up of the sword handle on the tomb of Du Guesclin at the Basilica of Saint-Denis in Paris. Two young children mourn on a blank heraldic shield, after the death of Du Guesclin, in 1380. They likely represented his biological children. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Burgos
Ezcaray
Calahorra
Arnedo
Ejea de los Caballeros
Huesca
Lerma
Santo Domingo de Silos
Tudela
E-7
Barbastro
Monzón
Tarazona
Borja
E-7
Zuera
Binéfar
Soria
Aranda de Duero
Burgo de Osma-Ciudad de Osma
Zaragoza
Lleida
San Esteban de Gormaz
Cuarte de Huerva
E-90
Fraga
AP-2
Calatayud
Cariñena
Belchite
Caspe
E-90
Sigüenza
Daroca
Tarragona
Alcañiz
Cambrils
Andorra
Calamocha
Tortosa
E-15
E-90
E-5
Guadalajara
Morella
Amposta
Ebro
Alcalá de Henares
La Ràpita
Vinaròs
Madrid
Getafe
Albarracín
Teruel
Benicarló

Figure 19.11: A map showing the locations offered to Bertrand Du Guesclin, namely, Deza, Soria, Molina de Aragon, Almazán, Atienza, Monteagudo de las Vicarías, Serón de Nágima.

Figure 19.12: The Duero River in Soria (2022)

hair and complexion, traits that set him apart from his contemporary Bretons. [6][7][8]

19.6 Mediterranean Blood at Saint Coulomb

Despite numerous theories and assumptions formulated in later centuries, it is evident that Du Guesclin believed he had Mediterranean roots. He likely had precise knowledge about his ancestors, given how smoothly he gained access to the French King and to the Count of Barcelona, the King of Aragon and to the Trastamara of Castilla.[9]. Du Guesclin had black hair and was relatively dark-skinned, earning him the nickname 'le Dogue noir,' which referred to his color and fighting skills.

Despite numerous claims by modern Bretons that old Bretons sometimes had dark skin and dark hair, it does not explain why the ancient literature focussed so much on these aspects of Bertrand Du Guesclin. Had he looked like a regular Breton, they would never have mentioned it.[10][11][12][13] The Mediterranean blood theory is supported by the Y-DNA investigation, described in Chapter 73.3, which suggests that Du Guesclin's Haplogroup is older than the settlement of the bloodline in Brittany and originates from Spain. This aligns with the idea that Bertrand Du Guesclin descended from Hakim, his Spanish ancestor.

19.7 The Legend of King Aquin

Du Guesclin often recounted that he descended from King Aquin of Bougie, present-day Béjaïa in Algeria. Although this legend seems fanciful, the name Aquin holds significant weight. The myth is rooted in historical facts around Charlemagne (742-814) when northern Spain allied with him against the Saracens of the south. Historical DNA studies, particularly regarding the SRY2627 Y-DNA Haplogroup, given in Part XV, suggest its origins in northeastern Spain, explaining its appearance in the Du Guesclin lineage. It is known that many locals converted to Islam under Muslim rule in Spain, leading to numerous mixed marriages. The rulers of Spain, after several generations, had blue eyes and blond hair, as recorded in contemporary literature.

In the legend, Bougie is an actual location and the French name for 'Bejaia' in Algeria. Aquin was believed to be a Saracene commander who held the Château de Glay at Saint-Coulomb during Charlemagne's reign. The capture of this castle by a Saracene would have been possible through an overseas raid. The legend states that King Aquin of Bougie withdrew to Spain, leaving one of his sons behind. This son would be raised as a Christian Knight under the legendary Knights Roland and Olivier's aegis and Charlemagne's hospitality. This bloodline, known as Glay-Aquin, eventually transformed into 'De Claquin' in Spanish documents during Bertrand Du Guesclin's time and 'Du Guesclin' in central France.

---

[6] Dark hair and slightly dark skin in Brittany's population may also result from 'Britonia,' a connection in the 6th century between Brittany and the north of Galicia. Excluding all the theories related to Aquin, there is a possibility that 'Spanish DNA' arrived in Brittany through Britonia, forming the deep ancestry of Du Guesclin. Legends and stories in the British Isles, such as 'The Book of the Taking of Ireland' (Lebor Gabála Érenn), describe Spanish invasions in ancient times. Because Brittany is situated between Spain and Ireland, Spanish settlements in Brittany might have contributed to Du Guesclin's ancestry. Particular examples in this Irish book of invasions, or the 'Historia Brittonum' version, include Partholón, Nemed, Fir Bolg, Tuatha Dé Danann, and the Milesians. The Milesians were sons of 'Mil Espáine' (hence 'Milesians') in Gaelic, meaning Miles Hispanica in Latin (Spanish soldiers). Therefore, even much earlier than the time of Charlemagne, there are traces of Spanish migrations to Brittany, which should not be excluded as possible origins of Du Guesclin. Romain Grouazel-Krauss, an expert on Celtic history and language, graciously provided this information. Nevertheless, the fact that Du Guesclin's darkness was so explicitly mentioned in historical sources must have set him apart from the average Breton. Also, the French King would never have trusted him so much had he been considered indegeneously Breton with archaic roots in Breton. Contemporaries of Bertrand Du Guesclin must have known better and accepted his claims of southern roots stemming from Aquin (or Hakin).

[7] In Brittany, many names describe a place of origin. Such tradition is not unique and also appears in other regions and countries. However, peculiar to Brittany is that some of these widespread names refer to distant lands. An example is 'Lespagnol,' referring to Spain. Historians claim that Brittany is at the tip of France along the naval highway of the West-coast of Europe, where sailors and military passed from all over Europe, even in ancient times. Interesting work on such matters was written by Jean Le Dû, who explored the ethnic appellatives in the anthroponymy of Basse-Bretagne. Therefore, it is plausible that the ancestors of Bertrand Du Guesclin arrived in Brittany similarly to others with Iberian roots, whether by trade, accident, or other means. However, being a regular Breton would not have inclined the French King ever to make him Constable of France.

[8] Jean Le Dû, 'Les appellatifs ethniques dans l' anthroponymie de la Basse-Bretagne' , in Hommes et Terres du Nord, numéro hors-série 1988; Campagnes et littoraux d' Europe, Mélanges offerts à Pierre Flatrès. pp. 67-76.

[9] The assertion that Bertrand Du Guesclin perceived himself, through sentiments, as distinct from his contemporary Bretons and suspected, therefore, a Mediterranean lineage, for which he sought a historical context, aligns with contemporary romantic narratives. However, projecting our modern corny interpretations onto the 14th century would be naive.

[10] The word 'noir' in old French did not necessarily mean 'black' but could also imply 'sad' or 'scary.'

[11] Some Bretons had slightly dark skin, believed to be a relic of the Atlantic (Mesolithic) people who lived around 10000 years ago on the West Coast of France and Great Britain. Kerry Lotzof explains that DNA research on old remains revealed indications of blue or green eyes, dark hair, and probably dark skin, not pale white skin. Although no direct descendants (perhaps because the Y-DNA Haplogroup is different) exist, the autosomal DNA survives in modern populations through blending. Elaine Evans agrees with Lotzof's conclusions. However, it is more likely that the dark-haired appearance in many Britons is linked to Britonia. Britonia was a small empire in the 6th century, connecting the very North of Galicia (Spain) to Armorica (Brittany) and the West-side of Britain (West coast of England and Wales). An exchange of genes may have resulted in dark hair and perhaps slightly darker skin in these regions.

[12] Kerry Lotzof, 'Cheddar Man: Mesolithic Britain's blue-eyed boy' , The Natural History Museum (Cromwell Road, London SW7 5BD, UK).

[13] Elaine Evans, 'Why does Whitehaw Woman have dark skin?' , Brighton Museum & Art Gallery.

Figure 19.13: Deza Castle, Palacio de los Finojosa (2022). As detailed by Clemente Sáenz Ruidrejo and Florentino Zamora Lucas in Corpus of Medieval Castles of Castile, the town of Deza was once enclosed by a wall of Arab origin, extensively modified by Christian builders. This wall, constructed of unworked masonry, was of considerable height, though only scant remnants remain today. The wall, which ran in an NW-SE orientation, lacks visible remains of towers or other constructions. The original castle stood inside the town, at the site known as del Castillo or La Fortaleza. This castle featured a semicircular arch access flanked by two structures and a ramp adjacent to the Gothic church of Nuestra Señora de la Asunción. Historical accounts suggest the presence of an additional outer defense gate and possibly a fortified barrier. The fortified house of the Finojosa, now an exhibition hall on the town's perimeter, has a square floor plan with two towers and a two-story patio. Adjacent to this palace, a path leads to the ruins of an ancient castle with fortifications. In 1296, the infantas de la Cerda seized Deza and other towns in eastern Soria, reluctantly returning them to Castile following the Peace of Tarazona in 1305 and the settlements of Huerta and Monreal in 1308. Peace was often fleeting, as exemplified by the brief Deza peace of 1361 between Pedro I the Cruel and the Aragonese King, brokered by Cardinal Guido, which lasted less than a year. Deza became a strategic headquarters for Pedro I during the conflicts with the Trastámaras. King Enrique de Trastámara later granted Deza, along with Almazán, Morón, and Monteagudo, to Bertrand du Guesclin as a reward for defeating his half-brother Pedro. In 1437, the Peace of Naples between Castile, Aragon, and Navarre restored Deza to Castilian control.

If this story holds true, King Aquin was likely a self-proclaimed king who conquered a small territory in Brittany, probably a Saracene knight with Spanish roots. A medieval French ’chanson de geste’ titled ’Aquin, la conqueste de la Bretaigne par le roy Charlemagne’ (Aquin, the conquest of Brittany by king Charlemagne), likely written in the 12th century, supports this narrative. Additionally, ’La Chanson de Roland,’ recorded in the 11th century, references Charlemagne's activities in northern Spain, mentioning Muslim warriors from ’overseas,’ possibly converted Basques.

The Saracen rulers of Zaragoza, Girona, Barcelona, and Huesca agreed to obey Charlemagne in return for military support against the Umayyad Emir of Cordova. Charlemagne viewed this as an opportunity to extend his empire into Spain and spread Christendom on the Peninsula. Negotiations between Charlemagne and the Spanish Saracens occurred in the late 8th century, leading to the northern part of Spain becoming part of Charlemagne's empire, known as the Spanish March (Marca Hispánica). This period might explain the movement of Du Guesclin's ancestors from Spain to Brittany, possibly holding the castle of Glay. However, they might not necessarily have been Kings, but could have been, instead, jurors and scribes, operating under the designation Hakin or Hakim, Arabic for Clergue.

Bertrand Du Guesclin was so convinced of his Mediterranean roots that he planned to conquer Bougie before becoming Connétable de France. Jean Froissart wrote, in Chroniques, éd. Kervyn, t. XII, p. 227:

.Messire Bertrand disait, quant il eut bouté hors le roi Don Pietre de son royaume de Castilla et couronné le roi Henri de Castilla et d’ Espagne, qu’ il s’ en voulait aller au royaume de Bougie (il n’ avait que la mer à traverser), et disait qu’ il voulait reconquérir son royaume et son héritage.’

Du Guesclin negotiated with the king of Aragon, Pere IV, to make available to him two large ships and a galley for six months to undertake this personal crusade, highlighting the significance of this endeavor to him.[14]

The family name of Du Guesclin appears in old archives in various forms: ’du Guesclin, Waglip, Gayclip, Guarclip, Guerplic, Glerquin, Claquin, Glaquin, Glayequin, etc.’ Some names contain ’Aquin,’ reinforcing the myth. While political motives may have driven Du Guesclin, the French, and the Bretons to create, spread, and transform such tales, it remains a well-known legend that could not be omitted.

Although descending from a King Aquin may seem fanciful and legendary, strong indications suggest that Bertrand Du Guesclin may actually have descended from a certain Aquin or Hakin, who was not a king but a juror or governor, as further explained. How else would the King of Aragon or Enrique de Trastamara have trusted him in their combat against the Muslims of Spain?

19.8 Hakin in La Marche de Bretagne, Originating from La Marche d’Espagne

19.8.1 General Considerations

The context of the paternal ancestor of Du Guesclin with Spanish roots is, still, most likely explained through the establishment of La Marche de Bretagne and La Marche d’Espagne under Charlemagne (742-814), explained in Chapter 13 and Chapter 19.4. These protection corridors, established in the north of Spain and the East of Brittany, facilitated the movement of Charlemagne's allies, including Du Guesclin's ancestors, from Spain to Brittany. DNA analysis in Chapter 19.27.4 confirms this Spanish root, and the settlement period around 801-818 aligns with the establishment of these marches.

---

[14] Michael Jones, Letters, Orders and Musters of Bertrand du Guesclin, Boydell Press, 2004, no.178, p. 65.

Figure 19.14: Old homes in Deza. (2022)

Sunier I de Ampurias d'Urgell de Carcassone
Count
Ermessinda de Carcassone (de Ampurias d'Urgell de Carcassone)
Birth 810
Death 860 (50y)
Vuifred I El Veloso de Barcelona
Birth 840
Death 898 (58y)
Gunhilde de Ampurias
Raymond II de Toulouse
Death 924
Count of Nimes and Albi, Count of Toulouse
Guinidilde Borrell of Barcelona
Birth 875
Death 923 (48y)
Raymond III Pons de Toulouse
Birth 900
Death 940 (40y)
Gersende de Gascogne
Raymond IV de Toulouse
Birth 925
Death 961 (36y)
N. N.
Raymond V de Toulouse
Birth 949
Death 978 (28y 11m 30d)
Adélaïde d'Anjou
Birth 947
Death 1026 (79y)
Guillaume III de Toulouse
Birth 975
Death 1037 (62y)
Emma de Provence
Birth 980
Death 1063 (83y)
Pons de Toulouse
Birth 997
Death 1060 (63y)
Almodis de la Marche
Birth 1023
Death 1071 (48y)
Countess of Barcelona from 1052 until 1071.
The Count of Provence
Alix de Toulouse
Raymond IV de Saint-Gilles
Birth 1042
Toulouse, France
Death 1105 (63y)
Tripoli, Holy Land
The Count of Toulouse.
Berthe de Provence
Bertrand de Saint-Gilles
Birth 1078
He was a knight, the Lord of Saint-Gilles, and the count of Toulouse and Tripoli (in the Holy Land).
Beatrice d'Yvignac
Guillaume Robert de Broons
Gilberte de Saint-Gilles
Birth 1137
Hamon de Broons
Birth 1182
Death 1221 (39y)
He was a Knight and a Crusader. He joined Richard of England on a crusade.
Olive de Rohan
Robert de Broons
Birth 1210
Broons, Bretagne, France
He is also known as Robert Guillaume de Broons, was the Lord of Broons, a crusader who joined Saint Louis on the seventh crusade.

Figure 19.15: The ancestry of Robert de Broons. Apart from the earlier ancestors, from the Borrell house of Barcelona, Counts of Barcelona, there is also a connection to that House through Almodis de la Marche, as shown in Figure 19.16 on page 166.

Almodis de la Marche
Birth 1023
Death 1071 (48y)
Countess of Barcelona from 1052 until 1071.
Pons de Toulouse
Birth 997
Death 1060 (63y)
Raymond IV de Saint-Gilles
Birth 1042 Toulouse, France
Death 1105 (63y) Tripoli, Holy Land
The Count of Toulouse.
Berthe de Provence
Bertrand de Saint-Gilles
Birth 1078
He was a knight, the Lord of Saint-Gilles, and the count of Toulouse and Tripoli (in the Holy Land).
Beatrice d'Yvignac
Gilberte de Saint-Gilles
Birth 1137
Guillaume Robert de Broons
Hamon de Broons
Birth 1182
Death 1221 (39y)
He was a Knight and a Crusader. He joined Richard of England on a crusade.
Olive de Rohan
Robert de Broons
Birth 1210 Broons, Bretagne, France
He is also known as Robert Guillaume de Broons, was the Lord of Broons, a crusader who joined Saint Louis on the seventh crusade.
Orphaise de Dol
Berenguela de Barcelona
Alfonso VII of Leon
King
Sancho VI de Navarra
Birth 1133 Pamplona, España
Death 1194 (61y)
The Wise. King of Pamplona and Navarra.
Sancha de Castilla
Berenguela Sánchez de Navarra
Queen of England, as she was the wife of King Richard the Lionheart.
Maria Sanchez of Navarra
Princess
Gil Podavila or Bodavila
Birth Fran
Death Estella, Navarra, Spa
Knight Templar. Also known as Gil Podavila / Bodavila / Bouteville. His nephews in England were also Knights Templar: Geoffrey Boteville and Oliver Boteville (Geoffroy de Bouteville/ Olivier de Bouteville).
He went on to settle in the Court of his second cousin Sancho V of Navarra the Wise, where he married Doña María Sánchez de Navarra, youngest daughter of his cousin the King Don Sancho of Navarre the Wise
Ramon Berenguer I of Barcelona
Birth 1023
Death 1076 (53y)
Ramon Berenguer II of Barcelona
Birth 1053
Death 1082 (29y)
Maud de Apulia
Birth 1060
Death 1112 (52y)
Ramón Berenguer III of Barcelona
Birth 1082
Death 1131 (49y)
Douce de Provence
Birth 1090
Death 1127 (37y)
Ramón Berenguer IV of Barcelona
Birth 1114 Barcelona, España
Death 1162 (47y 11m 30d) Borgo San Dalazzo, Italy
Petronila de Aragon
Birth 1136
Death 1173 (37y)
Berenguer of Barcelona
Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza
Marriage 1188 Sancha Nuñez de Lara
He stayed in Salamanca between 1168 and 1181. He had two illegitimate children who were later legitimized by Pope Celestine III (Giacinto Orsini from Rome)
Sancha Nuñez de Lara
Marriage 1188 Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza
Don Pedro Sánchez de Varillas
Lord of Barillas in Navarre.
Urraca Gil
Don Ramón Sánchez
Commander of the Templars in the city of Salamanca.
Nuño Sánchez
Lord of Roussillon
Pedro de Aragon
Alfonso II de Aragon y de Barcelona
Birth 1157
Death 1196 (39y)
Sancha de Castilla
Birth 1154
Death 1208 (54y)
Pedro II de Aragón
Birth 1178
Death 1213 (35y)
Maria de Montpelier
Birth 11
Death 1213 (33

Figure 19.16: The descendants of Almodis de la Marche. She connects Bertrand Du Guesclin to the House of the Counts of Barcelona, Borrell. Du Guesclin was also connected to Borrell through direct ancestors, as seen in Figure 19.15 on page 165.

Léon Levillain[15] writes that the Breton and the Spanish Marches were connected and should not be considered isolated regions. There was an exchange of people in a military context, and there were also marriages of the nobility involving both regions.

La Marche de Bretagne was established in 753 by Pépin le Bref and was succeeded by Roland (778), Adulf (786), le comte Guy (799), and Lambert I of Nantes (814-818). A second March was established in 861 by Charles le Chauve (Charles the Bald). La Marche d'Espagne existed from 801 until 843 and began with the Siege of Barcelona in 801. The counties belonging to the March were Barcelona, Berga, Besalu, Cerdagne, Conflent, Empúries, Gerona, Manresa, Osona, Pallars, Ribagorza, Roussillon, and Urgell. The appearance of a Mediterranean ancestor of Du Guesclin may be traced back to the period 801-818 if we assume it is real and reject heroic and romantic legends. Readers are invited to read Chapter 17.3 to understand better the context of La Marca in the realm of Aquitaine and Toulouse and the ancestors 'Clergue' who lived in Albi in the county of Toulouse. The population of the Marca Hispanica was heterogeneous, including Frankish invaders, native Hispano-Roman residents, and remnants of Visigothic nobles who had migrated southward after the Muslim conquest. Over time, the territory attracted people from many regions of the Frankish Empire, enhancing its demographic and cultural variety.

If Bertrand Du Guesclin is indeed a patrilineal descendant of someone from the families of the counties in La Marche d'Espagne, six notable candidates emerge among these counts, contributing to the administrative and territorial organization of the region. The legendary King Aquin may have been one of them. However, more likely, the Hakin or Clergue of whom Du Guesclin descends, was a scriber or a juror under one of these nobles.

19.8.2 Specific Notable Figures in La Marche d'Espagne

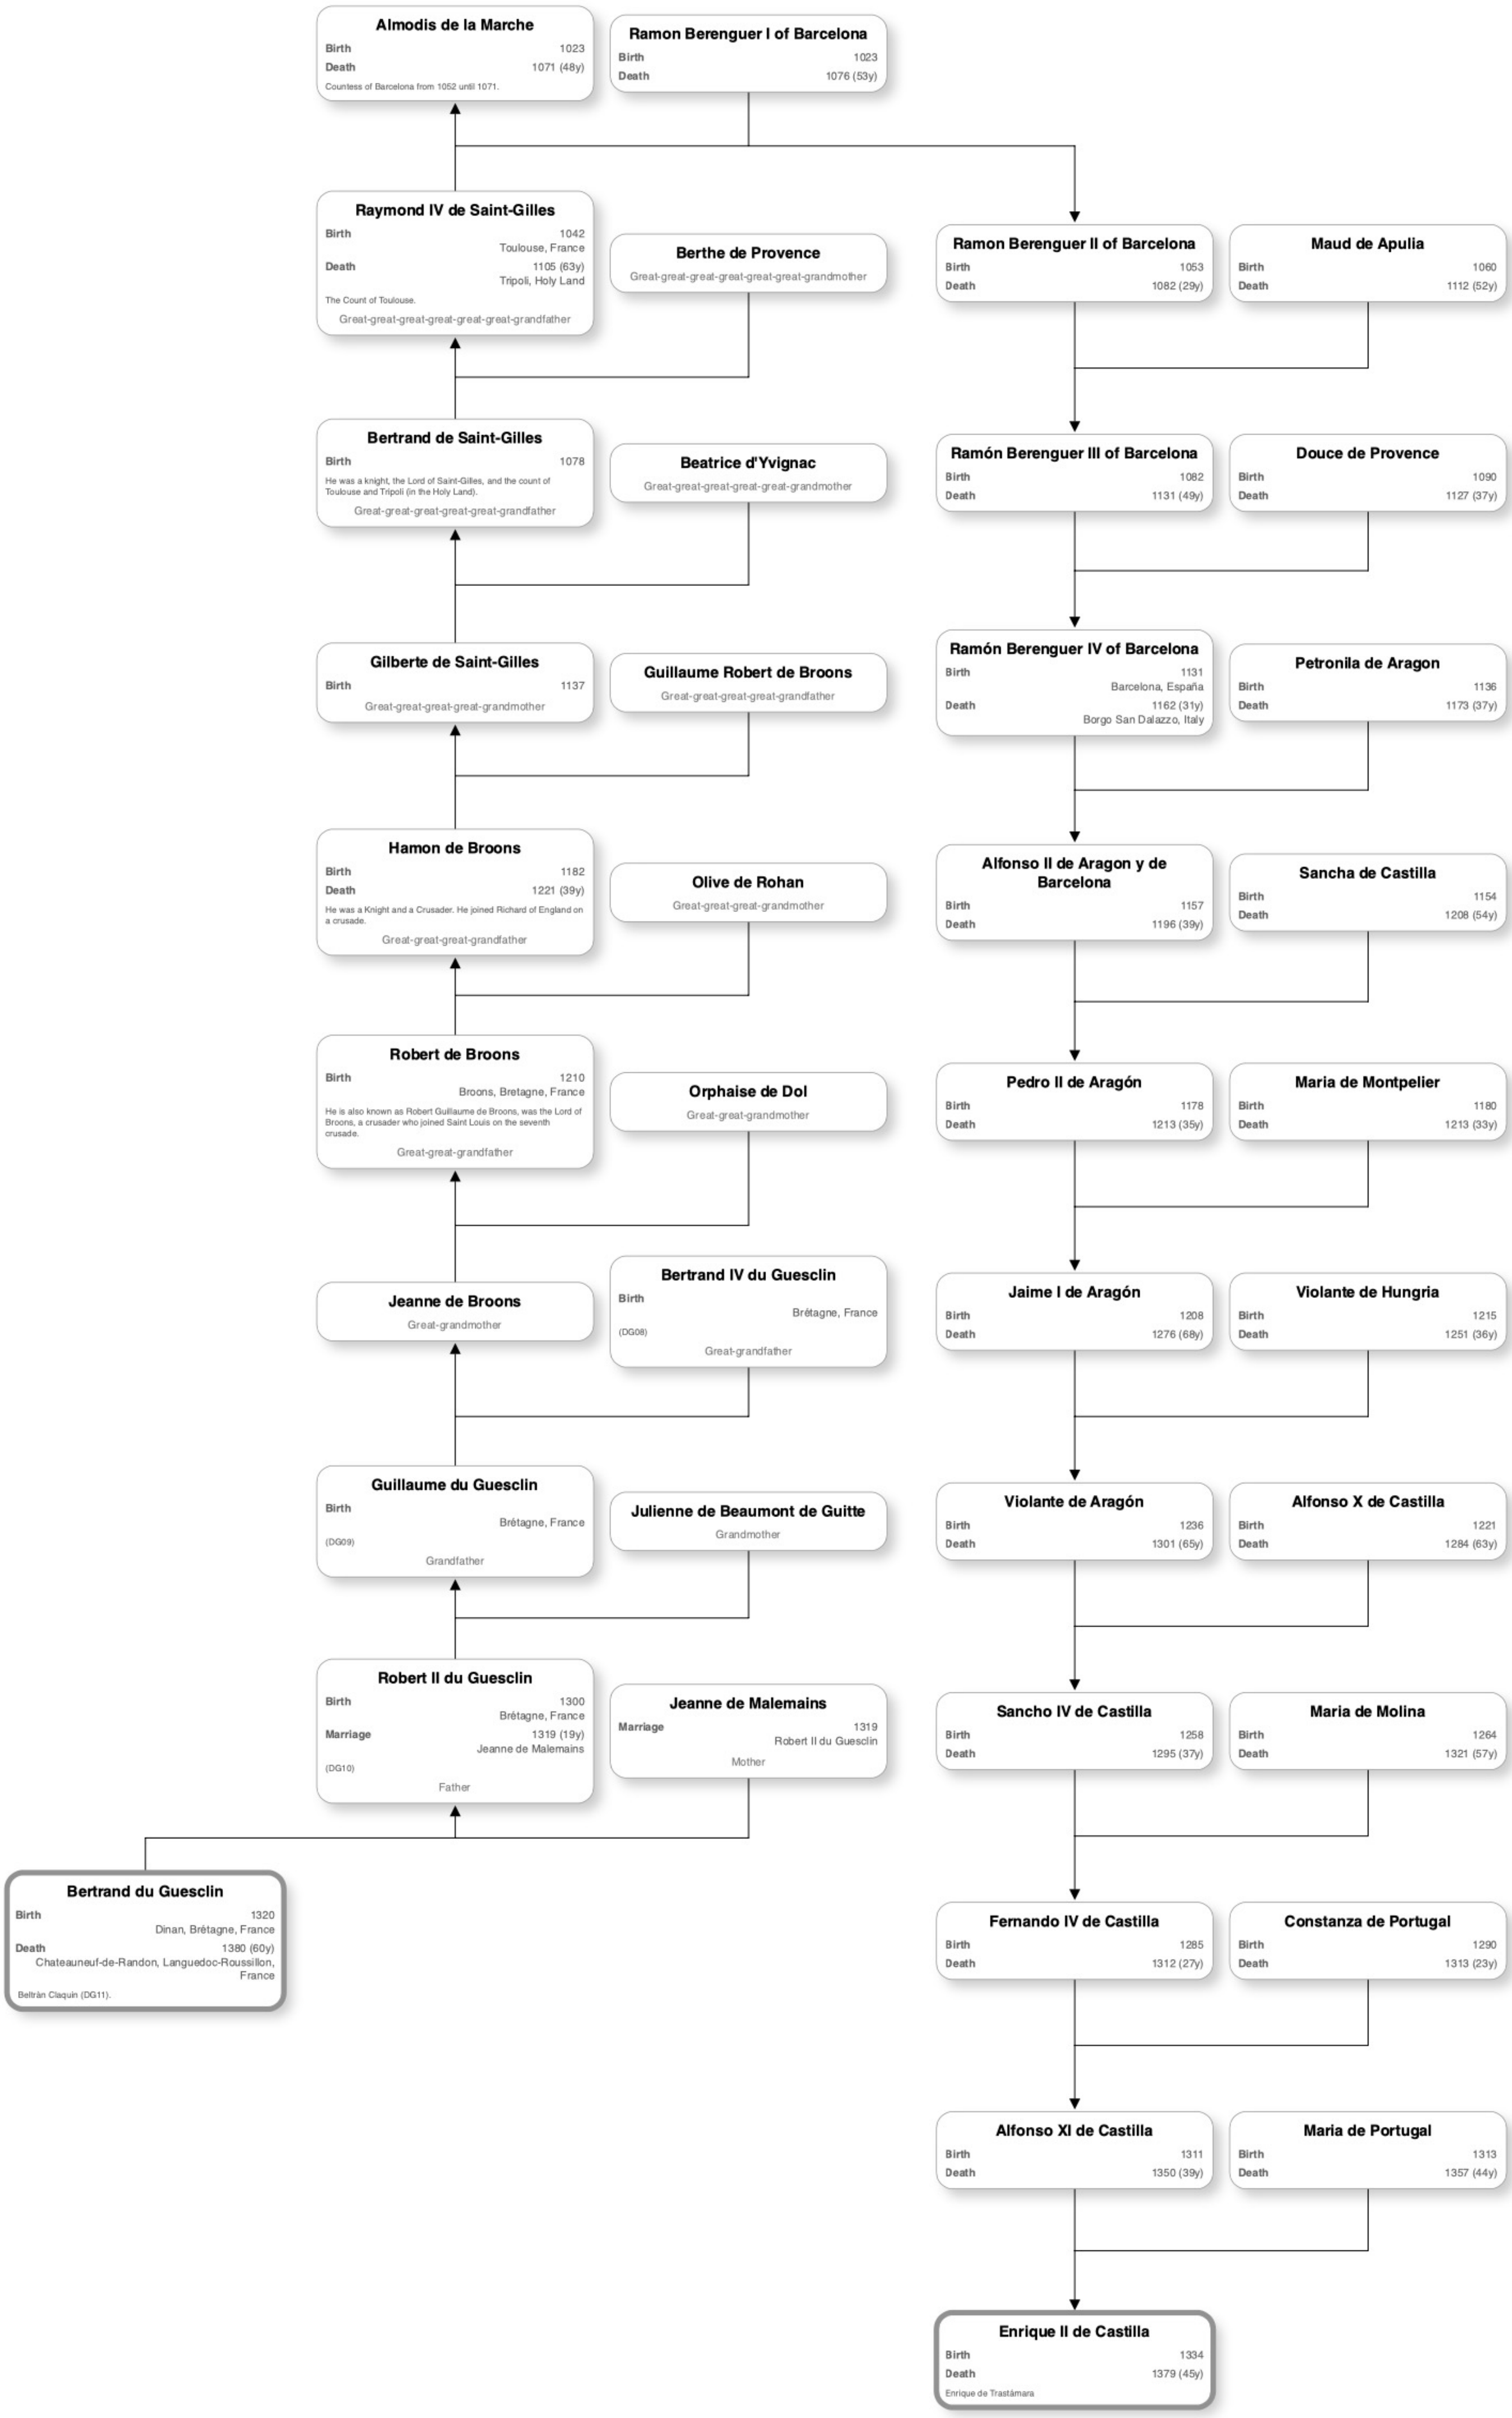
19.8.2.0.1 Borrell Borrell, whose tenure extended beyond 809, is a significant figure in the March of Spain. Notable mentions of Borrell include references in the Vita Hludowici Imperatoris, which records his involvement in campaigns against Tortosa in 798 and 809. His name suggests a potential familial connection to later counts of Barcelona. Additionally, Borrell's son, Seniofredo, is documented in historical charters, further cementing Borrell's presence within the March's administrative landscape.

19.8.2.0.2 Zaddo Zato, also known as Zaddo, held sway as a Muslim ruler of Barcelona. Historical accounts, such as the Annales Laurissenses Continuatio and the Vita Hludowici Imperatoris, attest to his role in the governance of Barcelona, particularly in its interactions with neighboring territories. Zato's significance within the March of Spain is underscored by his actions, including his journey to Narbonne in 801, as documented in the Vita Hludowici Imperatoris.

19.8.2.0.3 Aureol Aureol, whose tenure ended in 809, served as a count within the March, overseeing territories across the Pyrenees. Einhard's chronicles provide insight into Aureol's demise, attributing it to conflicts with neighboring authorities, notably Amoroz, the prefect of Cæsaraugusta and Osca. Despite limited details regarding his lineage, Aureol's presence underscores the diverse counts operating within the March of Spain.

---

[15] Léon Levillain, 'La Marche de Bretagne, ses marquis et ses comtes' , Annales de Bretagne. Tome 58, numéro 1, 1951. pp. 89-117



Almodis de la Marche
Birth 1023
Death 1071 (48y)
Countess of Barcelona from 1052 until 1071.
Ramon Berenguer I of Barcelona
Birth 1023
Death 1076 (53y)
Raymond IV de Saint-Gilles
Birth 1042
Toulouse, France
Death 1105 (63y)
Tripoli, Holy Land
The Count of Toulouse.
Great-great-great-great-great-great-grandfather
Berthe de Provence
Great-great-great-great-great-great-grandmother
Bertrand de Saint-Gilles
Birth 1078
He was a knight, the Lord of Saint-Gilles, and the count of Toulouse and Tripoli (in the Holy Land).
Great-great-great-great-great-grandfather
Beatrice d'Yvignac
Great-great-great-great-great-grandmother
Gilberte de Saint-Gilles
Birth 1137
Great-great-great-great-grandmother
Guillaume Robert de Broons
Great-great-great-great-grandfather
Hamon de Broons
Birth 1182
Death 1221 (39y)
He was a Knight and a Crusader. He joined Richard of England on a crusade.
Great-great-great-grandfather
Olive de Rohan
Great-great-great-grandmother
Robert de Broons
Birth 1210
Broons, Bretagne, France
He is also known as Robert Guillaume de Broons, was the Lord of Broons, a crusader who joined Saint Louis on the seventh crusade.
Great-great-grandfather
Orphaise de Dol
Great-great-grandmother
Jeanne de Broons
Great-grandmother
Bertrand IV du Guesclin
Birth
Brétagne, France
(DG08)
Great-grandfather
Guillaume du Guesclin
Birth
Brétagne, France
(DG09)
Grandfather
Julienne de Beaumont de Guitte
Grandmother
Robert II du Guesclin
Birth 1300
Brétagne, France
Marriage 1319 (19y)
Jeanne de Malemains
(DG10)
Father
Jeanne de Malemains
Marriage 1319
Robert II du Guesclin
Mother
Bertrand du Guesclin
Birth 1320
Dinan, Brétagne, France
Death 1380 (60y)
Chateauneuf-de-Randon, Languedoc-Roussillon, France
Beltràn Claquin (DG11).
Ramon Berenguer II of Barcelona
Birth 1053
Death 1082 (29y)
Maud de Apulia
Birth 1060
Death 1112 (52y)
Ramón Berenguer III of Barcelona
Birth 1082
Death 1131 (49y)
Douce de Provence
Birth 1090
Death 1127 (37y)
Ramón Berenguer IV of Barcelona
Birth 1131
Barcelona, España
Death 1162 (31y)
Borgo San Dalazzo, Italy
Petronila de Aragon
Birth 1136
Death 1173 (37y)
Alfonso II de Aragon y de Barcelona
Birth 1157
Death 1196 (39y)
Sancha de Castilla
Birth 1154
Death 1208 (54y)
Pedro II de Aragón
Birth 1178
Death 1213 (35y)
Maria de Montpelier
Birth 1180
Death 1213 (33y)
Jaime I de Aragón
Birth 1208
Death 1276 (68y)
Violante de Hungria
Birth 1215
Death 1251 (36y)
Violante de Aragón
Birth 1236
Death 1301 (65y)
Alfonso X de Castilla
Birth 1221
Death 1284 (63y)
Sancho IV de Castilla
Birth 1258
Death 1295 (37y)
Maria de Molina
Birth 1264
Death 1321 (57y)
Fernando IV de Castilla
Birth 1285
Death 1312 (27y)
Constanza de Portugal
Birth 1290
Death 1313 (23y)
Alfonso XI de Castilla
Birth 1311
Death 1350 (39y)
Maria de Portugal
Birth 1313
Death 1357 (44y)
Enrique II de Castilla
Birth 1334
Death 1379 (45y)
Enrique de Trastámara

Figure 19.17: Bertrand Du Guesclin was a distant blood-relative of Enrique de Trastamara.

Figure 19.18: Right is the Heraldic Shield of Du Guesclin. It is described as "d'argent à l'aigle bicéphale éployée de sable becquée et membrée de gueules, à la cotice du même brochant sur le tout." Left are images of the double headed eagle in Spain or related to Spain. From left to right, top to bottom:
1) Silk textile fragment with double-headed eagles, Islamic Spain, 12th century. This silk fragment belongs to the 'cloak of the Virgin' of Thuirs, in the Pyrénées Orientales. Such silk clothes were used by christian princes and for liturgic purposes.
2) The 'Pseudo-saint Clément, Recognitiones,' showing the Archangel Michael, killing a devil, and a monk, with a two-headed eagle between the arches. It can be found at Mont Saint-Michel. The image is from the time of Otto III, crowned emperor in 996, who strongly propagated the 'Renovatio Imperii.' Since the Archangel Michael was the patron of the Castilian and French Kings, the scene refers to the defeat of the Muslims in Spain, their emblem, the two-headed eagle, being attached between the arches.
3) Detail of the Tunica of Infante Don Garcia (†1145/46), son of Alfonso VII El Emperdor, from his tomb in the Parochial Church of Oña in Burgos. Two-headed eagles are shown, emblems of the rank of a caesar or military. This is the first proof that the two-headed eagle emblem was adopted by a christian commander.
4) Blue Tissue from San Zoilo Monastery in Palencia, Spain. It has Kufic inscriptions and dates from the 10th-11th century.
5) Two-headed-eagle with lions in Spain in the 12th-13th centuries.
6) Textile Fragment with Double-Headed Eagles from Islamic Spain, 11th-12th century. From the tomb of Saint Bernard of Calvó in the Cathedral of Vich, Catalonia, Spain. This silk is believed to be a part of a booty from the reconquest campaigns against the Muslims of Spain that Calvó led as bishop of Vich.

19.8.2.0.4 Bero Bero, son of Guillaume, emerges as a prominent figure within the March, associated with territories conquered from the Saracens. Historical documents, including charters and annals, attest to his campaign involvement and his role as a witness to significant events, such as Emperor Charlemagne's testament in 811. Bero's connection to Barcelona is further underscored by his familial ties, notably through his wife, Romella, and their descendants.

19.8.2.0.5 Odilo Odilo, whose parentage remains undisclosed, is documented as a count within the Spanish March, as evidenced by a charter issued by Emperor Charlemagne in 812. Although details regarding Odilo's activities and territories are scarce, his inclusion among the March counts highlights the diversity of individuals appointed to administer its regions.

19.8.2.0.6 Salamon Salamon, whose tenure spanned from before 864 to 873, played a pivotal role as a count within the March of Spain. Historical records, including charters and chronicles, provide insights into Salamon's activities, including his involvement in judicial matters and interactions with ecclesiastical institutions. His enduring influence and the events surrounding his demise underscore the significance of Salamon's role in the March.

19.9 Consistency with the Official History of Saint Coulomb

After reading several old and recent sources, we found a description formulated by the Office du Tourisme de Saint-Coulomb, which we will briefly summarize. Figure 19.6 on page 160 illustrates the geography. The oldest remains of Saint Coulomb date back to 450 BC. Some traces of Roman history have also been found. In 580, the Irish Saint Colomb (not to be confused with Saint Columba of Sens) established the parish, later named after him.
The ancestors of Du Guesclin established a small fortress on the tiny island nowadays known as 'l'ilot du Guesclin' on the East of the beach of Saint Coulomb around the year 800, probably on the ruins of an old Roman settlement. An artistic impression is shown in Figure 19.4 on page 157. The lords of Guarplic (the ancestors of Du Guesclin) would reign over the island until 1250. Before this, we can situate the legend of Aquin, a Saracen who escaped from the Carolingian armies and arrived with his entire household on a rock called 'le Glay.' He would reside there for 30 years and would run when he heard of the arrival of Charlemagne. During his escape, he left behind (he forgot) one of his sons. The child would receive protection from Charlemagne, who gave the child the name Glay Aquin, which soon transformed to Guarplic and Clakin, and later to Du Guesclin.
In 1254, the Lord of Guarplic established a more massive fortress (le Plessis-Bertrand) at Saint Coulomb, easier to defend. One of the 'cadet' descendants of this person was the ancestor of Bertrand Du Guesclin.
Note that the official story dates the first arrival of an ancestor of Du Guesclin at Saint Coulomb to 800, which corresponds to the above conclusion that during the period 801-818, the Marches of Spain and Brittany co-existed.
Therefore, a knight from the north of Spain may have arrived in Brittany.
Interestingly, Mont Saint Michel was the northernmost fort of the Marche de Bretagne, located on the east side of a bay. If the Carolingian armies wanted to control the entire bay, they had to capture Saint Coulomb on the west side. Therefore, from a military standpoint, it makes sense that Saint Coulomb was occupied at that time and served as outpost. It may or may not have remained disconnected from the rest of the March; hence the reasons for the legend of a family who resided there for several years until they abandoned the place, leaving behind one son is plausible.

Figure 19.19: This image depicts a grand banquet held at the Royal Palace of Barcelona on January 1, 1366. Bertrand Du Guesclin, a notable French commander, was invited by King Pedro IV of Aragon (the Count of Barcelona). During this event, Du Guesclin was introduced to Doña Torró, a noblewoman who would later be known as Doña de Soria. The banquet was attended by other prominent dignitaries, including Hugh de Calveley, Marshal of France Arnoul d'Audrehem, and Louis de Chalon, known as the Green Horseman. The gathering was a significant political and social event, reinforcing alliances and showcasing the grandeur of the medieval court. This image was made with AI (DALL·E 2024-05-25 17.51.19)

19.10 Du Guesclin's Strategic Genesis in Bougie (Béjaïa)

Bougie, or Bejaia, is shown in Figure 11.2 on page 88 during the time of Byzantine Spain, explained in Chapter 11.4.

Bertrand Du Guesclin's strategic positioning within the geopolitical landscape of medieval Europe, particularly his patrilineal origins in La Marche d'Espagne, encompassing prominent regions such as Barcelona, Berga, Besalu, Cerdagne, Conflent, Empúries, Gerona, Manresa, Osona, Pallars, Ribagorza, Roussillon, and Urgell, is a subject of historical intrigue. This assertion gains credence through DNA analysis, suggesting a connection to this geographically diverse region. Du Guesclin's awareness of his lineage is evidenced not only by his physical appearance, which purportedly differed from his Breton contemporaries but also by genealogical records indicating blood ties to the count of Barcelona and the Kings of Aragon, as outlined in Chapter 19.13.

The strategic implications of Du Guesclin's claimed patrilineal ancestry in Bougie, shown on the map in Figure 11.4 on page 89, coupled with his familial connections to the count of Barcelona and the kings of Aragon, reverberate throughout medieval European politics. His astute assertion of ancestral ties provided him with a multi-faceted advantage, garnering support not only from the Count of Barcelona and the King of Aragon but also from the French monarchy. This strategic move allowed him to maintain a form of neutrality in the Hundred Years' War, a valuable asset to the French King because he had no reason to ally with the English.

Furthermore, Du Guesclin's purported roots in Bougie, strategically located in present-day Algeria, assumed heightened significance concerning Aragon's Mediterranean expansion during the 14th century.

Bougie's strategic position as a harbor facilitated trade and maritime endeavors, making it a coveted prize in the regional power struggles. Recognizing the potential benefits of controlling this crucial port city, Aragon and Barcelona eagerly embraced Du Guesclin's endeavors, banking on his renowned military prowess to secure Bougie under friendly control. The capture of Bougie held the promise of enhancing Aragon's influence over Mediterranean trade routes, consolidating its position as a formidable maritime power in the region.

19.11 Descent from Desclergue through Hakim

An interested reader might search for Aquino [16] near Rome or explore the roots of Du Guesclin in the context of the Umayyad invasions of France. [17] However, these endeavors are unlikely to yield fruitful results. Such hypotheses are based on illogical assumptions and possess a very low probability of accuracy.

Before the arrival of the Moors on the Iberian Peninsula, outlined, for instance, in Chapter 12, Catalonia, along with much of what is now Spain, was part of the Visigothic Kingdom. The Visigoths were a Germanic tribe that invaded the Iberian Peninsula in the 5th century AD and established their kingdom there. Catalonia was not specifically delineated as a distinct political entity during this time. Instead, it was part of the broader territory ruled by the Visigothic kings. The Visigothic Kingdom's capital was initially located in Toulouse, in what is now southern France, but it was later moved to Toledo in Spain.

A consequence of this fact is that there must have been members of the Clergue family in Catalonia before the Moors arrived, just as there were members of that family in Toulouse and other parts of Occitania.

The genesis of the name Desclergue, explained in Chapter 15, should be studied here with a focus on the Muslim period, during which Hakim stood synonym for Clergue.

The Hebrew word for Clergue, in its meaning before it was used for religious clergymen, is Hakham, which essentially means 'wise.' In Arabic, it is, as already mentioned, Hakim.

When the Moors conquered the Iberian Peninsula in the early 8th century, diverse populations already inhabited the region, including Visigoths, Hispano-Romans, Jews, and various indigenous groups.

Hakim was a title in the Western Caliphate judicial system, comparable to Clergue or a Juror. This was somewhat similar to the role held by Raymond Desclergue and Francesc Desclergue in Mallorca in the 13th century and resembles the positions held by later Desclergues. Rafael Altamira[18] writes,

"the Caliph administered justice in person; but as a rule this function was exercised by the cadis (qadi) (and in small villages by hakims). At their head stood the qadi of the qadis, who was established at Cordova. A special judge, the Sahib-ash-shurta or Sahib-al-madina (zal-medina) heard criminal and police cases, under a procedure simpler than that of the aadi. The zabalaquen or hakim carried out the sentences of the qadi."

Christian Müller[19] writes, while citing numerous Arabic sources related to Moorish Spain, that,

"Hakim is a judicial magistrate, and the title is also used to denote a judge who is not a qadi."

In other words, Hakim overlaps significantly with the positions of Clergue before the term was used for religious clergymen, i.e., jurors, judicial magistrates, and notaries. In modern Turkish, Hakim is also a judge.

Jean-Pierre Van Staëvel published a study[20] on the judiciary system of Al-Andalus and discovered the relevance of Hakim, or Hakin, in Moorish Spain. Van Staëvel writes that,

"the diversity of these, particularly with regard to the procedural means that they implement in the context of the cases submitted to them, corresponds to a similar complexity of the methods of investigation" as well as "levels of the judicial hierarchy (There were secondary magistrates, hakim, or sahib al-ahkam, subordinate to the qadis in large towns), by the apparently increasing recourse to justice auxiliaries who, instrumental witnesses, notaries or experts, constitute judicial personnel of less prestige, particularly well-known for the case of notaries, although they play a role not negligible in the mediation of law with individuals, on the very ground of the application of the rule and the judgment."

The arrival of the Moors marked a significant shift in the socio-political landscape of Iberia, leading to complex interactions and transformations among the existing populations.

One of the primary effects of the Moorish conquest was the gradual Islamization of the Iberian Peninsula. While some indigenous peoples and rulers embraced Islam voluntarily, motivated by economic, social, or political factors, others continued to practice their existing religions, including Christianity and Judaism. Conversion to Islam was not universally enforced, and different regions experienced varying degrees of religious tolerance under Moorish rule.

Those who converted to Islam and those who allied with the Moors often adopted Arabic names and cultural practices. This phenomenon was particularly prominent among the urban elite and administrative class, who sought to integrate themselves into the new ruling structures established by the Moors. However, many aspects of pre-existing cultures and identities persisted alongside Islamic influences, contributing to the rich culture of al-Andalus, the Islamic territory in Iberia.

Communities of Christians and Jews, known as Mozarabs and Sephardic Jews, respectively, continued to exist under Moorish rule, albeit subject to certain social and legal restrictions. These communities often maintained their religious and cultural practices while adapting to the evolving political and social dynamics of al-Andalus.

Following the Moorish conquest of the Iberian Peninsula in the 8th century, the fate of clerics, administrators, scribes, and governors who already resided in Iberia varied depending on various factors, including their religious affiliation, social status, and regional circumstances. The Moorish rulers established a new administrative system in al-Andalus, drawing upon existing administrative structures while introducing Islamic institutions and practices.

For many clerics, administrators, and scribes who were Christians or adherents of other religions, the transition to Moorish rule necessitated adaptation to the new political and cultural realities, such as adopting a new name to better fit into the new tradition. Some individuals could retain their positions within the administrative apparatus, particularly if they demonstrated loyalty to the new rulers or possessed valuable skills and expertise. In certain cases, Christian clerics and administrators continued to serve under [16] Suppose we assume that a certain Aquin established Glay-Aquin at Saint-Coulomb and that Du Guesclin descended from this person. In that case, it is more likely that instead of a King from Bougie, the man was a person from Spain or Italy carrying the name d'Aquino or d'Aquin. Perhaps during a short period, Saint-Coulomb was held by the armies of the Marche de Bretagne, leading to the settlement of Du Guesclin's ancestors there. Families named D'Aquin or D'Aquino could have been present in Northern Spain (mainly Barcelona and Valencia) and Italy, suggesting possible Roman roots. The village of Aquino, located in Frosinone, Italy, established in early Roman times as Aquinum, became a crucial trade center between Rome and Capua. Cicero transformed it into a 'municipium,' and the Triumvirate turned it into a colonia. Several well-known personalities were born in Aquino, such as the poet Juvenal (around 100 AD) and the emperor Pescennius Niger (193-194 AD). Saint Thomas of Aquino (1225-1274) was born 8 km north of Aquino. Nevertheless, in the time of Charlemagne, there was no Aquino of importance and a person who lacked noble blood would not have been entrusted with an outpost in Brittany.

---

[17] Du Guesclin's lineage may also be connected to the Umayyad invasion of France during the period 719-759, which reached as far north as Bourges before Charlemagne's reign. Perhaps a Spanish family (Aquin or Aquino) settled in Brittany during this time, producing the ancestors of Bertrand Du Guesclin. However, this theory is less likely due to the lack of historical evidence supporting Saracen invasions reaching Brittany.

[18] Rafael Altamira, Cambridge Medieval History, Cambridge University Press, 1922, Vol. III, Chapter 16: The Western Caliphate.

[19] Christian Müller. Administrative tradition and civil jurisdiction of the Cordobán āib al-akām (I). Al-Qanara : revista de estudios árabes , 2000, 21 (1), pp.57-84. ff10.3989/alqantara.2000.v21.i1.403ff. ffhalshs-04144926f

[20] p. 47-80, in Staëvel, Jean-Pierre Van. "Institution judiciaire et production de la norme en al-Andalus aux ixe et xe siècles." Regards sur al-Andalus (VIIIe- XVe siècle), édité par François Géal, Casa de Velázquez, 2006. The chapter is part of Géal, François, éditeur. Regards sur al-Andalus (VIIIe- XVe siècle). Casa de Velázquez, Éditions Rue d'Ulm, 2006.

Moorish governors, albeit subject to the authority of Islamic law and governance.

People identified as Clergue would, under Arabic rule, become Hakim, an expression with several meanings, such as wise man, governor, ruler, prefect, judge, magistrate, administrative, or master. Hakim is also used in Arabic to refer to the alderman, constable, sultan, or province governor.

To understand the link between Hakim, Hakin, and Aquin, keep the following in mind. Arabic names were always changed according to local interpretation in parts of Europe that were not under Islamic rule. Famous examples are Avicenna, for Ibn Sina, or Saladin, for Salah ad-Din Yusuf ibn Ayyub. Another word that serves as a good example is Imam, often appearing as Inam in Western literature and chronicles. The alteration of m into n in that process is not unique. Other examples include Ibn al-Haytham, which was transformed into Alhazen.

The name Hakim often appears in Western historical texts as Hakin due to transliteration differences and variations in spelling conventions over time. For instance, Ibn Sina often appears as Avicenna al-Haki and Avicenna al-Hakin. Another example is Al-Hakim bi-Amr Allah, who often appears as Al-Hakin bi-Amr Allah, or Hakim ibn Hizam, who appears as Hakin ibn Hizam.

The case of Hakim appearing as Hakin is essential in the context of Bertrand Du Guesclin, who claimed patrilineal descent from a Mediterranean Aquin. The latter can only have been Hakin or Hakim, Arabic for Clergue.

If Bertrand Du Guesclin indeed descends from a Clergue in Spain, as we postulate, with the Moorish version of his name Hakim or Hakin, then this theory is consistent with his claim that he descended from an Aquin from the Mediterranean and the fact that his name in Bretagne and France was sometimes spelled as de Glerquin, De Glerquino, De Guerclin, Du Clerquin, De Clequin, De Clequino, De Glerquin, De Glerquino, du Glearquin, as explained in Chapter 75, and, in Spain, Glesquin, de Glerquin, de Claquin, du Guerclin, du Guerclin, or Claquin, as outlined in Chapter 19.26.4.

Literally, Des Clergue is Al-Hakim in Arabic.

Therefore, there may be some ground of truth in the legend that Bertrand Du Guesclin used to claim for his ancestry, in that his ancestor may have been a certain Aquin, but not a King. If so, then this Hakim or Hakin should have had, given De Guesclin's Y-DNA, a Desclergue as an ancestor dating back to the time before the Arabic invasion of Iberia and from the same clan as our Desclergue ancestors in Occitania.

In Chapter 19.13, we go deeper into the autosomal connection of Bertrand Du Guesclin.

19.11.1 Du Guesclin's Heraldic Shield points at Muslim Spain

The double-headed eagle motif is significant in the iconography of numerous cultures throughout history, symbolizing power, royalty, and divine authority.

The roots of the double-headed eagle motif stretch back to the ancient Near East, specifically Mesopotamia, where it served as a royal emblem for the Hittites. Despite limited research on the motif before the Common Era, scholars have acknowledged its presence on Hittite monuments in central Anatolia since their discovery by Charles Texier in the early 19th century. However, it wasn't until Arthur C. Parker's influential article in 1923,[21] that the Mesopotamian precursor to the Hittite usage was recognized.

The Hittite Empire, a cultural amalgamation that thrived from the 14th to 12th centuries BCE, was a prime example of the double-headed eagle motif's significance. This symbol, representing a fusion of cultures with influences from the Assyrians during the Assyrian Colony period, was a testament to the peaceful era that saw the Assyrians establishing trading posts in Anatolia. The Hittite pantheon, a reflection of this syncretization, incorporated deities from various sources. However, the fall of the kingdom, directly or indirectly related to invasions by the Sea Peoples, marked the end of this prosperous period.

Evidence suggests that the Hittites engaged in falconry, as depicted in texts and imagery portraying a double-headed eagle, referred to as a 'hawk' in some instances. Falconry, an ancient practice, played a role in Hittite culture, with images depicting the use of the lituus, an implement for hunting hares. These depictions underscore the significance of avian symbolism in Hittite society and the potential connection between falconry and the double-headed eagle motif.

During the reign of Charlemagne and a few centuries after, the double-headed eagle played a significant role in its association with Muslim Spain, contrary to its later association with the Byzantine Empire. The stylized depictions of the eagle on artifacts served as emblems of local emirs, with ornamental adaptations reflecting the dynamic interactions between Muslim and non-Muslim communities on the Iberian Peninsula. In central Europe through the Holy Roman Empire and in Byzantine, following a prolonged hiatus in its usage, the double-headed eagle reemerged in the thirteenth century AD as a prominent symbol within the Byzantine Empire, particularly under the Palaiologos dynasty. However, simultaneous to its adoption in Byzantium, the symbol found resonance among the Seljuk Turks of Rūm, also known as the Sultanate of Rūm, during the 13th century. The Seljuk elite, influenced by Byzantine cultural elements, incorporated the double-headed eagle into their heraldic repertoire, reflecting a fusion of identities within Anatolian Muslim society.

Western Europe, particularly Brittany, associated the double-headed eagle with Muslim Spain.[22][23] Evidence is found in a 1000 AD French version of the Clementine Recognitions depicting the Archangel Michael slaying a devil, with a two-headed eagle positioned between the arches.[24] Given the significance of Archangel Michael as the patron saint of Castilian and French kings, this imagery symbolizes the triumph over perceived Muslim adversaries, represented by the double-headed eagle, aligning with prevailing religious and political narratives of the time.

Examples of the use of the double-headed eagle in Muslim Spain or its connection to it are shown in Figure 19.18 on page 168.[25][26][27][28][29] In that figure, the heraldic shield of Du Guesclin is also shown for comparison.

Because of its association with Muslim Spain, it is unthinkable that anyone would voluntarily use this emblem in his heraldic shield until, in later centuries, the double-headed eagle was associated with Byzantine or the Holy Roman Empire.

---

[21] Arthur C. Parker, "The Double-Headed Eagle and Whence it Came," 1923.

[22] Reconstructed by the Abegg Stiftung Riggisberg, Switzerland. P. Ackermann: A Gold-woven Byzantine Silk of the Tenth Century. In: Revue des Arts Asiatiques X, 1936, 87-88. D.G. Sheperd: A mediaeval brocade. In: Bulletin of the Cleveland Museum of Arts 37, 1950, 195-196; S. Müller-Christensen: Zwei Seidengewebe als Zeugnisse der Wechselwirkung von Byzanz und Islam. In: Artes Minores. Dank an Werner Abegg. Bern, 1973, 22-25.

[23] Stone slab with Double-Headed Eagle, Stara Zagora, Nasionalen Arkheologicheski Muzei, Sofia Inv. nr.B: 854; 10th-11th century, from the time of the Macedonian Empire in Bulgaria (976-1018) or from the time of Byzantine occupation (971-976; 1018-1185) and may be the emblem of the rank of the Bulgarian tsar/basileus in Illyricum. Evans, Helen C. & William D. Wixom. Eds. The Glory of the Byzantine Empire. Art and Culture of the Byzantine Era A.D. 843-1261. The Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, 1997. 326f.

[24] Miniature of the Archangel Michael (killing a devil) and a monk, with a two-headed eagle between the arches, ms. of Pseudo-saint Clément, Recognitiones; Mont Saint-Michel, c. 1000. Avranches, Bibliothèque Municipale ms. 50.

[25] 29Í19 cm Achat à Chamonton, 1906. Inv. 28003. Musée des Tissus, Lyon. Guide des Collections, 1998, p. 69

[26] Avranches, Bibliothèque Municipale ms. 50

[27] Dodds, Jerrilynn, D.A.: Andalus. New York, 1992, p. 107-108

[28] Lyon, Musée des Tissus, inv. N° MT 25080

[29] Miguel y Badia, Madrid. The Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, N.Y. Purchase, Joseph Pulitzer Bequest, 1941 (41.92).

We may, therefore, assume that Du Guesclin used the emblem based on heraldic rights and obligations, which must be considered evidence of ancestry in Muslim Spain, a fact that was, in a sense, even highlighted by the family's proclaimed descendence of a legendary King Aquin. Given that 'King Aquin' was, to all possible logic, a certain Hakin or Hakim with ancestors who were Clergue, as outlined in Chapter 19.11, the use of the double-headed eagle, the appearance of Aquin and the application of a red bend on top of the shield, indicate that Du Guesclin descended from a Clergue, who transformed the family name into Hakim and whose descendant arrived in Brittany as military on the island that was, after that, called Glay Aquin, where Du Guesclin claims his Brittannic roots.

19.12 The Reported Patriliniar Ancestors of Du Guesclin

19.12.1 Richer de Guarplic (DG01)

He is the earliest documented paternal ancestor of Bertrand Du Guesclin. Retrospectively, he is often referred to as "Richer Du Guesclin" or "Richer de Guarplic," although he was not known to have had a distinctive family name in the modern sense. He resided at Fort du Guesclin in Saint Coulomb at the beginning of the 11th century, indicating a gap between him and the paternal ancestor who arrived in Bretagne during the reign of Charlemagne or earlier.

Richer Du Guesclin, the Lord of Saint-Mélor, Saint-Coulomb, and Clos Poë-Alet, as well as the Lord of the castle of Guarplic, which would later be called Guesclin, has a rich lineage. He founded the fort of Richeux and was married to Marie de la Vieuville. Notably, genealogists such as Le Père Anselme claim that Richer de Guarplic was a son of Solomon, the bastard of Dinan, a claim that invites further discussion. This connection to Solomon, born around 1010 as the son of Aymon de Dinan, adds depth to Richer's lineage. Aymon, born in 975 and deceased in 1030 at Conquerreuil (Loire Atlantique), was Vicomte d'Alet and Seigneur de Dinan, Dol, and Combourg. Aymon was a son of Aimery III de Thouars, Vicomte de Thouars from 987 until 997, and Judith de Poitou.

Aimery III de Thouars was the son of Herbert I de Thouars, a Knight and Vicomte de Thouars, and Hildegarde d'Aulnay. Herbert I de Thouars, born around 935 and died on May 18, 988, at Thouars in Poitou-Charentes, was a Knight and Vicomte de Thouars. His parents were Aimery II de Thouars, Vicomte de Thouars, and Alienore. Aimery II de Thouars, born in 916 at Thouars, died in 955, and was buried at l'Abbaye de Saint Léger. He was a son of Aimery I le Rich de Thouars, the 3rd Viscount of Thouars, and Aremburge de Vermandois. Aimery I le Riche de Thouars, born in 875 in Loudrun, Vienne in Poitou-Charentes, died after 936. Geoffroy I de Thouars, a Knight, and Emmeline de Poitou were his parents. Geoffroy I de Thouars was a Knight born around 850-870 at Thouars in Deux Sèvres, Poitou-Charentes. His parents were Aimeric de Thouars, born around 820-840, and a lady 'de Fezensac.' Aimeric de Thouars was 'Vassus dominicus Thouars' (vassal of the Lord).

Because the family line via Solomon, the bastard of Dinan, does not extend further than Aimeric de Thouars, born between 820 and 840, it is possible that he was a descendant of the child left behind in Bretagne during the period 801-818 as described in Chapter 19.7. The family line via Solomon, the bastard of Dinan, is disputed among ancient genealogists, warranting caution.

19.12.2 Clamaroch de Guarplic (DG02)

Clamaroch Waglip (du Guesclin) (Clamaroch / Glamarouch), was a son of Richer de Guarplic. He was married to Marie de Dinan. Marie de Dinan was the daughter of Bertrand de Dinan.

19.12.3 Bertrand I de Guarplic (DG03)

Bertrand Waglip (du Guesclin) was the son of Clamaroch Waglip and married to Florinne (or Florida) de Landal, Dame of Fresnay. He was the lord of Guesclin, Saint-Coulomb, Saint Ideux and Cancale. From his wife he inherited in 1150 'la terre de la Fresnaye aux moines de l' abbaye de la Vieuville, du diocèse de Dol,' which supposedly was the house of de Landal. The couple had two sons, Geoffroy (a crusader), Richard and Guillaume.

19.12.4 Geoffroy de Guarplic (DG04)

Geoffroy Waglip (du Guesclin) (Waglip, Gayclip, Guarplic) was the son of Bertrand Waglip and Florida de Landal. He died in 1080 and was Lord of the Chateau Richeux and Guarplic. It is not known who he had children with. He was a crusader in the 2nd crusade. This crusade liberated Lisbon, Tarragona and Tortosa from the Moors in Iberia and besieged Damascus in the East. He was the Lord of Château-Richeux, which he had to abandon due to the wars in Brittany. Then he became the Lord of Guarplic[30].

19.12.5 Bertrand II du Guesclin (DG05)

Bertrand du Guesclin was a son of Geoffroy Waglip. He was the Lord of Guesclin, Saint-Coulomb, Saint-Ideuc and Cancale. It is not known who he had children with.

19.12.6 Pierre du Guesclin (DG06)

Pierre du Guesclin was a son of Bertrand du Guesclin. He was the Lord of Guarplic, and he died after 1234. It is not known who he had children with. He chose to take the side of the English.

19.12.7 Bertrand III du Guesclin (DG07)

Bertrand du Guesclin was a son of Pierre du Guesclin. He was the Knight Lord of Guarplic and lived from 1200 to 1260. He had two sons, Pierre du Guesclin and Bertrand IV du Guesclin. His wife was Mahaut de Dol.

---

[30] Dictionnaire de la Noblesse par M. de la Chenaye-Desbois, tome VII. Paris M. DCC. LXXIV.

19.12.8 Bertrand IV du Guesclin (DG08)

He was a son of Bertrand III du Guesclin and Mahaut de Dol. He was the Lord of La Ville-Anne, of Quatre-Voies, of Vauruze and of Clos-Poulet. His wife was Jeanne de Broons, daughter of Robert de Broons and Orphaise de Dol.

19.12.9 Guillaume du Guesclin (DG09)

He was a son of Bertrand IV du Guesclin and Jeanne de Broons. He was first married to Alix de Dinan, daughter of Roland de Dinan, Lord of Montafilant, and Anne de Leon. He later married Julienne de Beaumont de Guitte. We refer to Chapter 19.13 for more information.

19.12.10 Robert II du Guesclin (DG10)

He was a son of Guillaume du Guesclin and was born around 1300. In 1319, he married Jeanne de Malemains, Dame of Sens and Moulin de Vieuxvy-sur-Couasnon. Jeanne was the only child of Foulques, a family from Sacey in Normandy. Robert II du Guesclin died in 1353 in Spain. He was a Knight. He was the Lord of Broons, a vassal of the Lord of Dinan, and he collaborated with Charles de Blois against the Count of Montfort.

They had children, including Bertrand V du Guesclin, our ancestor, referred to as 'Bertrand Du Guesclin (DG11).'

19.13 Autosomal Roots of Bertrand du Guesclin in Occitania

19.13.1 Toulouse-Gerona-Barcelona-Empúries

The comté de Toulouse, situated in the heart of medieval Occitania, held strategic significance as a crossroads of trade and culture. Its creation in 778 by Charlemagne followed the Carolingian defeat of the Basques at Roncesvalles, reflecting efforts to secure the region against external threats. Toulouse's prominence grew as it became a key center of power within the fragmented kingdom of Aquitaine. The counts of Rouergue, who also held sway over Toulouse, contributed to the consolidation of regional authority, laying the groundwork for the principality's eventual emergence.

One pivotal figure in Toulouse's history was Raymond of Saint-Gilles, whose principality encompassed Toulouse and territories extending into Languedoc and Provence. Raymond's involvement in the First Crusade and subsequent establishment of the Crusader state of Tripoli underscored Toulouse's international significance. His son Bertrand carried on his legacy, engaging in conflicts with neighboring powers, including the counts of Barcelona, as part of the broader struggles for regional supremacy.

Meanwhile, the comté de Gerona, centered around the ancient city of Girona, traced its origins to the Carolingian era. The initial integration of Girona into the Carolingian kingdom facilitated its administrative organization under Frankish aristocrats like Rostaing. However, subsequent developments, including the rise of the Barcelona dynasty under Guifred the Hairy, reshaped Gerona's political landscape. Establishing independent counties such as Besalú underscored the region's evolving dynamics, characterized by a delicate balance of autonomy and suzerainty.

Empúries, named after the ancient Greek colony of Emporion, emerged as a distinct county in the 9th century following the division of the comté de Gerona. The House of Empúries, founded by Count Suniaire II, exerted influence over territories spanning Empúries and Peralada. Dynastic alliances with neighboring powers, notably Roussillon, shaped Empúries' trajectory, culminating in its eventual integration into the Crown of Aragon. The county's economic significance, stemming from its coastal position and maritime trade, contributed to its strategic importance within Catalan.

Barcelona, the preeminent power in Catalonia, played a central role in shaping the region's political landscape. Count Raimond-Bérenger III's acquisition of Besalú and Cerdagne expanded Barcelona's territorial reach, consolidating its dominance over adjacent counties. The absorption of Roussillon and Empúries further augmented Barcelona's influence, paving the way for its emergence as a regional powerhouse. Barcelona's strategic location along the Mediterranean coast facilitated economic prosperity and cultural exchange, bolstering its position as a leading center of commerce and governance.

The religious landscape of the region, marked by the emergence of Catharism, posed challenges to secular and ecclesiastical authorities alike. Count Raymond V's efforts to combat Cathar heresy underscored the tensions between religious orthodoxy and dissent. The Albigensian Crusade, instigated by the assassination of the papal legate Pierre de Castelnau, led to the annexation of Toulouse by the French crown, signaling the end of an era of regional autonomy.

In summary, the historical narrative of the comté de Toulouse, Gerona, Empúries, and Barcelona reflects the intricate interplay of political, economic, and religious forces in medieval Catalonia. From consolidating territorial power to the challenges of religious dissent, the region's history offers insights into the complexities of medieval governance and identity formation.

19.13.2 Bertrand Du Guesclin's Occitanian Blood

Guillaume du Guesclin, described as a patrilinear ancestor of Bertrand Du Guesclin in Chapter 19.12.9, forms Du Guesclin's blood connection with Occitania. This connection is crucial for what is described in Chapter 19.15.1.

Guillaume du Guesclin was the son of Bertrand IV de Guesclin and Jeanne de Broons. The latter was the daughter of Robert de Broons and Orphaise.

Robert de Broons, also known as Robert Guillaume de Broons, was the Lord of Broons, a crusader who joined Saint Louis on the seventh crusade. He was born around 1210 in Broons, in Bretagne. His father was Hamon de Broons, born around 1182, equally a Knight and a Crusader. He joined Richard of England on a crusade. Hamon de Broons died in 1221. He was the son of Robert de Broons and Gilberte de Saint-Gilles.

Gilberte de Saint-Gilles was born around 1137 as the daughter of Bertrand de Saint-Gilles and Beatrice d'Yvignac.

Bertrand de Saint Gilles, born around 1078, was a knight, the Lord of Saint-Gilles, and the count of Toulouse and Tripoli (in the Holy Land). His father was Raymond IV, the count of Toulouse, born around 1042 and died around 1105. His mother was Berthe de Provence, the daughter of the Count of Provence and Alix de Toulouse.

It means Bertrand Du Guesclin had the Counts of Toulouse and Barcelona among his ancestors.

A closer look at Raymond IV of Toulouse, and his parents Pons Guillaume de Toulouse and Almodis de la Marche speaks for itself.

Raymond IV of Toulouse, also known as Raymond de Saint-Gilles, was a prominent figure in medieval Occitan politics and European affairs during the 11th and early 12th centuries. Born around 1042 in Toulouse, Raymond was the second son of Pons, Count of Toulouse, and Almodis de la Marche. Despite being born into a prestigious lineage, Raymond's inheritance was modest compared to that of his older brother, William IV, who inherited most of their father's estates upon his death. Raymond's share included the county of Saint-Gilles, comprising half of the diocese of Nîmes, the castle of Tarascon, the land of Argence, and half of the abbey of Saint-Gilles.

Raymond's rise to prominence began when he married a Provençal princess, solidifying his ties to the region. Raymond expanded his territorial holdings significantly through astute political maneuvering and opportunistic acquisitions. In 1065, upon the death of his cousin Berthe, Countess of Rouergue, Raymond seized her titles and properties, including the coveted county of Rouergue. This acquisition marked a crucial step in consolidating his territorial power.

Raymond's political alliances and conflicts further shaped his legacy. In 1074, he defied Pope Gregory VII's call to combat the Normans of southern Italy, leading to his excommunication twice by the pope. However, these excommunications were later lifted in 1080 upon the death of Raymond's first wife. Raymond also aligned himself with the Archbishop of Arles against the Count of Provence and the papacy, further establishing his independence and authority in the region.

Raymond expanded his influence beyond Provence and Rouergue by leveraging strategic marriages and inheritance. In 1094, upon his brother's death during a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, Raymond inherited additional territories, including the counties of Toulouse, Albi, Agenais, and Quercy. His marriage to Elvira of Castile further augmented his wealth and power, solidifying his position as a formidable Occitan lord.

Raymond's legacy extended beyond political prowess and contributed to economic developments in his domains. He instituted the coinage of Saint-Gilles, known as the 'moneta egidiensis,' which symbolized his authority and economic prosperity. Despite facing challenges, such as disputes over inheritance and conflicts with rival claimants, Raymond's leadership and strategic vision laid the foundation for the formidable county of Toulouse.

In conclusion, Raymond IV of Toulouse, or Raymond de Saint-Gilles, emerged as a key figure in medieval Occitan history, renowned for his political acumen, territorial expansion, and contributions to economic development. He solidified his position as a powerful lord in southern France through a combination of inheritance, marriages, alliances, and military strength. He played a significant role in shaping the region's political landscape during his lifetime.

Pons Guillaume de Toulouse (dead in 1060), also known as Pons II, was a significant figure in the political landscape of medieval France. He served as the Count of Toulouse, Albi, Agen, and Quercy from 1037 until he died in 1060. Born to William III, Count of Toulouse, and Emma, Countess of Provence, Pons inherited his father's titles and possessions upon his succession.

Pons' early reign was marked by strategic acquisitions and alliances, consolidating the power of the House of Toulouse. In 1038, he acquired rights over Albigensian and Nîmes through his marriage to his first wife, Marjorie. Additionally, Pons shared the diocese of Albi with Bernard Aton Trencavel, demonstrating his influence in ecclesiastical affairs.

His commitment to expanding Toulouse's influence is evident in his charters of donation to Cluny in 1040 and his recognition as a count palatine in a charter of Moissac in 1047. These actions contributed to the establishment of Toulouse as a significant political entity in the region, laying the foundation for its future prominence under the reign of his youngest son, Raymond de Saint-Gilles.

Pons' marital alliances played a crucial role in furthering his political ambitions. His first wife, Marjorie, brought him territorial rights, while his second marriage to Almodis de la Marche, following the annulment of her previous marriage due to consanguinity, solidified alliances with influential families. Pons had several children from his second marriage, including William IV, Raymond IV, Hugh, and Almodis, who would play significant roles in shaping the future of Toulouse and its surrounding territories.

Despite his political accomplishments, Pons' personal life is shrouded in mystery, particularly regarding his first son, Pons the Younger. The absence of references to Pons the Younger in contemporary sources raises questions about his existence and fate. While some genealogical records acknowledge his existence, his omission from Pons Guillaume's will, which carefully outlined succession plans, remains perplexing.

Pons Guillaume de Toulouse's legacy extends beyond his lifetime, as his strategic maneuvering and familial alliances laid the groundwork for Toulouse's continued political ascendancy in the medieval period. His descendants would go on to shape the history of the region, leaving an indelible mark on the landscape of southern France.

Almodis de la Marche, born circa 1023 and passing away on November 17, 1071, in Barcelona, is a significant figure in the landscape of high medieval southern nobility. Through her successive marriages, she wielded considerable political influence and played a pivotal role alongside her husbands and children, shaping the events in the regions where she held sway. Martin Aurell aptly characterizes her as an "extraordinary woman" whose life was marked by intrigue, power struggles, and tragedy. This essay seeks to delve into the multifaceted life of Almodis de la Marche, tracing her lineage, marriages, political maneuverings, and eventual demise.

Almodis was born into the noble lineage of the Counts of La Marche, her father being Bernard I and her mother Amélie. She was among several siblings, including notable figures such as Audebert II and Eudes I. Notably, she should not be confused with her niece, who bore the same name. Almodis's family connections would prove instrumental in shaping her alliances and ambitions throughout her life.

Her journey into matrimony began with her marriage to Hugues V, lord of Lusignan, around 1035. This union bore her two sons, yet due to consanguinity issues, the marriage was annulled. Almodis's subsequent marriage to Pons, Count of Toulouse, significantly shifted her fortunes. However, her life took a dramatic turn when she was abducted by Raimond-Bérenger I, Count of Barcelona, while still married to Pons. Despite the controversial nature of their union, Almodis and Raimond-Bérenger I were wedded, cementing her position as the Countess of Barcelona.

Almodis's tenure as Countess of Barcelona was marked by her active involvement in the region's political and cultural affairs. She engaged in lawmaking, notably contributing to the compilation of the Usages of Barcelona, and played a crucial role in consolidating her husband's power. Her diplomatic skills were evident in her alliances with Catalan vassals and even Muslim emirs, underscoring her pragmatic approach to governance.

The complexities of Almodis's marital and political entanglements reached a tragic climax with her assassination by her stepson, stemming from conflicts over succession and power dynamics within the Barcelona dynasty. Her death marked the end of an era characterized by alliances, rivalries, and shifting loyalties among the nobility of southern France and Spain.

In conclusion, Almodis de la Marche emerges as a captivating figure whose life epitomizes the intricacies of medieval power dynamics, familial alliances, and personal ambitions. Her story serves as a testament to the agency wielded by noblewomen in shaping the political landscape of medieval Europe, even as they navigated the constraints imposed by patriarchal norms and dynastic pressures.

19.13.3 Du Guesclin and Borrell

Pierre II Du Guesclin and Bertrand IV Du Guesclin both married to daughters of Robert de Broons and Orphaise de Dol.

The subsequent generation identified with the Heraldry of the ancestry of de Broons, through the use of the Gryphon. Indeed, the oldest very established ancestry of de Broons were the Borrell, counts of Barcelona, who, as can be seen in Figure 18.4 on page 130, used the Gryphon in their heraldic shield. Of the subsequent generations, there was Pierre III du Guesclin on the one hand, and the cadette branch of Bertrand IV Du Guesclin on the other. Pierre II Du Guesclin is described in Chapter 19.14.4 and one can see, for instance in Figure 19.20 on page 175 that he began to use the gryphon on the helmet of his coat of arms.

Bertrand IV Du Guesclin married Jeanne de Broons, and their son was Guillaume Du Guesclin, who married Juliette de Beaumont de Guitte. Guillaume de Guesclin and Julienne de Beaumont de Guitte had a son, Robert II Du Guesclin, who married Jeann de Malement. Bertrand Du Guesclin was their son.

The ancestry of Robert de Broons is shown in Figure 19.15 on page 165. Two key figures appear in his ancestry, namely, Almodis de la Marche, who was married to Pons de Toulouse, ancestor of Du Guesclin, and, after his death in 1060, to Ramon Berenguer I of Barcelona. The descendants of Almodis de la Marche, until Robert de Broons, are shown in Figure 19.16. The House of Barcelona was the House of Borrell. They appear through the second marriage of Almodis de la Marche and Guinidilde Borrell of Barcelona, the daughter of Vuifred I El Veloso de Barcelona and Gunhilde de Ampurias. The shield of Borrell is shown in Figure 18.4 on page 130. The prominent use of the Gryphon by Bertrand Du Guesclin in Spain is explained in Chapter 19.26.6. More details are given below.

Almodis de la Marche (1023-1071) was the countess of Barcelona from 1052 until 1071. Her husband, the count of Barcelona, was Berenger Ramon I of Barcelona (1005-1035), the son of Ramon Borell de Barcelone (972-1017), Count of Girona, Osana and Barcelona, and Ermessende de Carcassonne. After the death of Berenger Ramon I of Barcelona, Almodis de la Marche married Pons de Toulouse (997-1060), and from that marriage stemmed Raymond de Saint-Gilles, known as Raymond IV (or VI) of Toulouse (925-961).

However, Pons de Toulouse also stemmed from the House of Borrell of Barcelona. Indeed, his parents were Guillaume III de Toulouse (975-1037) and Emma de Provence (980-1063).

Guillaume III de Toulouse was the son of Raymond V de Toulouse (972-978) and Adélaïde d'Anjou (947-1026).

Raymond V de Toulouse was the son of Raymond IV de Toulouse (925-961).

Raymond IV de Toulouse was the son of Raymond III Pons de Toulouse (900-940) and Gersende de Gascogne.

Raymond III Pons de Toulouse was the son of Raymond II de Toulouse (who died around 924) and Guinidilde de Barcelone, of the Borrell House of Barcelona.

Suniarius comes ac marchius et uxor mea Richildes comitissa" donated donated property to the church of Barcelona, for the souls of "patri meo condam qui fuit Guifredi comitis et matri mea condam qui fuit Guinidillis comitissa et fratri meo qui fuit condam Borrello comites...et proles meos condam Ermengadus et Borrellus", by charter dated 16 May 944.[31]

The earliers Count of Barcelona is referred to in ancient writings as Burrello comitis, conerninf the events in 798, in Vita Hludowici Imperatoris. The Vita Hludowici Imperatoris names Isembardum, Hudemarum, Beram, Burellum as those leading the campaign against Tortosa in 809. His name suggests a family connection with the later counts of Barcelona.

19.13.4 Du Guesclin was a Blood Relative of Enrique de Trastamara

Because Bertrand Du Guesclin was related to the nobility of Arragon and Barcelona, it is obvious that he was also blood-related to Enrique de Trastamara. The precise relation is shown in Figure 19.17 on page 167.

19.14 Was Du Guesclin a Templar?

Figure 19.20: The shield of the Du Guesclin family in the façade of the Notre Dame du Temple at Pléboule in Bretagne, allegedly a former Templar's chapel, by many believed evidence that the Du Guesclins were templars. The shield and it's particular gryphon on top, is also shown in Figure 19.47 on page 207. It's possible role in the formation of the coat of arms of the Desclergues is explained in Figure 23.5 on page 250. The use of a gryphon on the Du Guesclin shield is described in Figure 18.4 on page 130 and linked Du Guesclin with the Borrell clan of Barcelona. The gryphon, shown in Figure 9.1 on page 79, was also popular in Phocaea from where the greeks migrated to Empúries, where they married our patrilineal ancestor.

19.14.1 Introduction

The question of whether Bertrand Du Guesclin was a templar is a very controversial one. The author assumes he was not because it is not even sure that such a secret order existed in France after 1307. It is a fact, however, that he had a crusader among his ancestors, perhaps even more than one. When Du Guesclin was in Spain and allied with someone with ancestors of ancient nobility, several of whom were known to be Knight's Templars, that does not mean that he was also a Templar. However, his crusader ancestors and reputation as a winning military, not to mention the support and friendship of the King of Aragon, were probably of higher importance than whether he might have been a Templar. Du Guesclin's ancestry is still debated today and may or may not have included the high nobility of Brittany, either through marriage or beyond. In other words, Du Guesclin possessed sufficient glamour and appeal to establish a liaison with a woman of the noble Torró family in Aragon despite his lack of physical attraction.

---

[31] Marca Hispanica (1688), Appendix, LXXXI, col. 857.

Still, some explanations of the Crusades and Templars may interest the reader.

The cohort of individuals participating in the Crusades was characterized by a duality in their affiliations: some amongst them transitioned into the esteemed ranks of the Templar Order, while others pursued alternative trajectories, abstaining from Templar induction. Simultaneously, a segment of crusaders were pre-existing members of the Templar Order. The comprehension of the Templar milieu remains challenging within contemporary historiographical discourse due to the paucity of historical artifacts. This scarcity is attributable to the substantial destruction of Templar-related materials, followed by the fabrication of counterfeit chronicles and documents, which subsequently obfuscated the authentic historical record. Consequently, the corpus of genuine Templar knowledge is exceedingly limited.

The Templars occupied an eminent stratum within medieval society, epitomizing an intellectual and influential elite endowed with profound erudition. Their organization also commanded substantial wealth, an entity that functioned as an early precursor to modern banking institutions, surpassing both the Papal and Royal Houses in financial affluence. Entrance into their ranks necessitated a lineage of exceptional distinction. Within the Templar ambit, the concept of the bank check was conceived, and they wielded dominion over currency exchange and money-changing practices. This enduring influence on contemporary financial and banking structures is reminiscent of the enduring impact of Roman Law on modern legal systems.

Moreover, the Templars were adept practitioners of cryptographic methods, employing encoded language as a means of disseminating crucial information and news. Their extensive knowledge of antiquity, gleaned from their activities in the Middle East, augmented their mystique and intellectual prowess.

So, the Poor Fellow-Soldiers of Christ and the Temple of Solomon, commonly recognized as the Knights Templar, constituted a prominent military order within the Catholic faith during the medieval period, specifically within Western Christianity. Established circa 1119, their primary headquarters resided on the Temple Mount in Jerusalem, where they thrived for nearly two centuries.

The Templars received formal endorsement from the Roman Catholic Church, most notably through papal edicts such as the papal bull Omne datum optimum issued by Pope Innocent II. Consequently, the Templars garnered substantial support as a charitable organization throughout Christendom, experiencing significant growth in membership and influence. Distinguished by their characteristic white mantles adorned with a red cross, the Templar knights emerged as highly skilled combatants during the Crusades. Moreover, a considerable proportion of the order's membership, amounting to as much as 90%, consisted of non-combatant individuals who oversaw an expansive economic infrastructure spanning Christendom. They pioneered innovative financial practices reminiscent of early banking systems and established a network of approximately 1000 commanderies and fortifications across Europe and the Holy Land, laying the foundation for one of the earliest multinational corporations in the world.

The Templars maintained close associations with the Crusades, and as their capacity to secure their holdings in the Holy Land waned, support for the order dwindled. Heightened by rumors surrounding the Templars' clandestine initiation rituals, a sense of mistrust arose. Despite being heavily indebted to the order, King Philip IV of France skillfully exploited this mistrust. In 1307, he exerted pressure on Pope Clement V to orchestrate the arrest of numerous Templar members in France, subjecting them to torture until they provided false confessions, ultimately leading to their execution by burning at the stake. Under mounting pressure, Pope Clement V dissolved the order in 1312. The sudden disappearance of a substantial component of the medieval European infrastructure fueled speculation and gave rise to enduring legends, perpetuating the enduring allure of the "Templar" name to the present day.

The Poor Fellow-Soldiers of Christ and the Temple of Solomon, also known by their Latin designation "Pauperes commilitones Christi Templique Salomonici," were alternatively referred to as the Order of Solomon's Temple, the Knights Templar, or simply the Templars.

The mystique surrounding the Templars' headquarters on the Temple Mount was deeply rooted in its believed connection to the ruins of the Temple of Solomon. Consequently, the Crusaders, inspired by this association, referred to the Al-Aqsa Mosque as Solomon's Temple. From this location, the nascent order adopted the name 'Poor Knights of Christ and the Temple of Solomon,' or simply 'Templar knights.'

19.14.2 Bertrand Du Guesclin had Ancestors who were Crusaders

The story of the Crusaders is closely connected to the story of the Knight's Templars, although, technically, they are different phenomena. Still, some Knights who went on a crusade were or became Templars, while not all Templars were Crusaders and not all Crusaders were Templars.

Geoffroy Waglip, or Geoffrou de Guarplic, participated in the Second Crusade in 1147. He died in the Holy Land. Bertrand Du Guesclin was his great-great-great-great-great-grandson.

Approximately twenty years after the First Crusade was successfully concluded in 1118, a limited number of knights contacted the Patriarch of Jerusalem with a request that deviated from the norm. These persons articulated their intention to undertake vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience, committing themselves to an exceptional service to God. Rather than withdrawing from society and adopting a monastic lifestyle, they advocated to dedicate themselves to the protection of defenseless pilgrims who were at risk of being assaulted by bandits and Saracens while undertaking their journeys to sacred locations. The effort was received with great enthusiasm by the King of Jerusalem, who extended a gracious welcome and provided them with lodging at his palace situated on the Temple Mount in Jerusalem. This location is widely regarded to be the historical site of King Solomon's Temple and place of residence. The aforementioned geographical site served as the origin for their appellation, 'the Poor Knights of the Temple of Solomon in Jerusalem.' During this juncture, their economic circumstances had deteriorated so much that they depended on donated and abandoned garments. It has been said that they faced a scarcity of equines, which resulted in their first seal depicting two knights sharing a single horse.

Nevertheless, the individuals who established the organization have significant social influence and financial resources. Significantly, the Order attracted several notable individuals during its early stages, most notably Hugh, Count of Champagne, who became a member of the nascent organization in the year 1125. Several nobles were either unable or unwilling to commit to vows of chastity and poverty, demonstrating their support of the Poor Knights' cause by offering donations of land or earnings. Arguably, the most notable advantage possessed by the organization in the first twenty years after its formation was its affiliation with St. Bernard of Clairvaux, a very prominent ecclesiastic figure of the early 12th century, facilitated by one of its founders, Hugh of Payns.

The 'Poor Knights' did not gain a monastic constitution and formal recognition as a religious order until the Council of Troyes in 1129. St. Bernard formulated the Rule and drew inspiration from the Cistercians' Rule but with modifications to account for the knights' obligations regarding their equipment, steeds, and duties on the road instead of living in isolation inside a monastery. Indeed, the precise formulation of the Rule was devised by a substantial committee, including various members of the Knights'

Order. During this particular era, the Poor Knights, who experienced a gradual accumulation of riches as a collective entity but remained humble as individuals, decided to choose white robes and surcoats as their selected garments. The authorization to don a red cross patée on their shoulders and breasts was bestowed 17 years later, in 1147.

Notwithstanding their accomplishments in acquiring acknowledgment, possessions, and fresh members, the Knights Templar, as they were progressively referred to, had not yet solidified their position as a noteworthy military entity or shown their prowess in combat. The Second Crusade afforded the change in question.

The capture of the County of Edessa by the influential Seljuk commander Zengi in 1144 had a profound impact on Western Europe. It catalyzed the initiation of a fresh crusade. The formal plea was sent by Pope Eugenius, with St. Bernard emerging as a particularly zealous, articulate, and impactful preacher for this nascent crusade. Although St. Bernard managed to get the backing of Conrad of Hohenstaufen, the German King, it was ultimately the youthful French King Louis VII who played a pivotal role in spearheading this campaign. Louis originally intended for a career in the Church but assumed the position of ruler in France after the death of his older sibling. Throughout his lifetime, he was renowned for his profound devotion, and the crusade concept resonated with him. Following a fiery oration delivered by St. Bernard at Vézélay on Palm Sunday in the year 1147, a satisfactory contingent of nobility, which notably included the Duchess of Aquitaine, spouse of King Louis, pledged their participation in the crusade, ensuring its feasibility.

From the very beginning, the campaign had difficulties in terms of coordination. The German crusaders embarked on the French contingent. They proceeded in an unorganized fashion across the Western regions of the Byzantine Empire, leading to many confrontations with the forces of the Empire. The French troops, arriving around one month later, demonstrated a higher level of discipline. However, they had challenges in their interactions with the locals, who had become resentful due to the Germans' actions.

Consequently, the acquisition of necessary supplies proved to be a challenging endeavor. The circumstances escalated to a critical point, leading King Louis to dispatch diplomatic representatives to the Greek Emperor to negotiate market rights. These advantages were sought in return for ensuring the organized transit of the Crusaders through Byzantine territory.

One of the envoys appointed by Louis was the Master of the Temple in France, who should not be mistaken for the Grand Master. Everard de Barres, a figure of significance, had already established a strong rapport with King Louis and held leadership over a contingent of 130 Templar Knights, accompanied by a comparable number of sergeants and support staff, resulting in a combined force of around 300 Templars. The Templars in question were presumably individuals who had just joined the organization from France, although they had received training and completed a process of indoctrination.

Since the commencement of the Second Crusade, the participants adhered to their customary duty of protecting pilgrims. However, in this particular instance, the pilgrims were armed and accompanied by a substantial convoy of supplies, which included the Queen of France and several other noble women.

After passing the Bosporus in the latter part of October, the French crusaders were informed of distressing accounts of the destruction of the German crusaders. These rumors were subsequently confirmed to be tragically accurate. The German forces experienced extensive devastation in the vicinity of Dorylaeum, a location of notable triumph for the Crusaders during the First Crusade. Reportedly, a mere 20% of the German crusaders managed to escape the carnage. Conrad von Hohenstaufen ascribed the calamity to the 'act of betrayal' committed by the Greeks instead of assuming accountability for his deficient leadership and neglect in deploying scouts. This narrative was then communicated to King Louis.

Subsequently, the other members of the German contingent aligned with the French forces, but Conrad, the group leader, became indisposed and later embarked on a voyage back to Constantinople. The French proceeded with more caution as they advanced down the coastal path.

After surpassing the city of Laodicea, the pathway moved for another two days, eventually over a steep mountain pass atop Mount Cadmus. The commander, who held a vassalage to the Queen of France rather than her husband, chose to defy the given instructions for the vanguard to establish a camp at the summit of the pass.

Consequently, this decision resulted in a notable separation between the various sections of the army. Taking advantage of this favorable circumstance, the Turkish forces, who had been closely monitoring the movements of the army, promptly launched an assault on both the leading and trailing divisions, who were still grappling with the arduous ascent. During the combat, King Louis was unhorsed prematurely and sought shelter, as reported in varying accounts, either amid the rocky terrain or by climbing a tree. During the turmoil and widespread destruction, the Templars emerged as the only organized and disciplined military unit capable of executing successful retaliatory actions. At the onset of dusk, the Turkish forces were successfully repulsed, but at the cost of significant casualties incurred by the Crusaders, primarily affecting their equine units and logistical convoy.

Profoundly impacted by this particular encounter, King Louis relinquished complete control over his whole military force to the Templars. The organization of the Crusader army by Everard de Barres included the formation of units consisting of 50 individuals, with each unit under the leadership of a solitary Templar. The Templars built a military organization and emphasized the importance of its preservation. Additionally, they gave directives for deploying infantry units to safeguard the cavalry during offensive maneuvers. They stressed the need to launch counterattacks only when they were organized correctly and under competent leadership. The implementation of these procedures by the Templars upon assuming leadership seems to have been lacking since they had not been previously executed. This contrasts sharply with the notably disciplined army of Richard the Lionheart, seen half a century later.

Nevertheless, using discipline in isolation proved insufficient in tackling the complex issues around food and forage. The Turkish forces used a tactical approach, sometimes called the 'scorched earth' plan, to deprive the advancing Crusaders of essential supplies. In due course, the Crusaders were compelled to consume their equine companions, except the Templars, who had judiciously administered their provisions and could sustain themselves and their steeds. The Templars were able to effectively mask the inherent vulnerability of their whole military contingent, successfully fending off a further four assaults by the Turks. It was only after these encounters that the Crusaders ultimately arrived at the port of Adalia, which was under Byzantine authority.

Upon arriving at Adalia, King Louis VII, unlike his descendant and namesake, King Louis IX, decided to separate from his army and expeditiously journeyed to Antioch accompanied by his spouse and prominent nobles. The ordinary participants of the Crusades were confronted with the challenges of widespread disease and famine, leading many to resort to selling themselves into Turkish enslavement as a means of ensuring their survival.

In March 1148, King Louis arrived at Antioch, facing the absence of his infantry forces and experiencing a pressing financial predicament. During this period, the Templars sought to showcase their prowess in a different domain that would eventually earn them a reputation, whether positive or negative, in the realm of finance. Everard des Barres embarked on a maritime voyage from Antioch to Acre, where he successfully obtained financial assistance by leveraging Templar assets via the mortgaging process. The funds received were significant, as shown by King Louis' directives to his ministers in France to reimburse the Templars. These orders prove that the loans equated to around fifty percent of the King of France's yearly income at that period.

The outcome of the Second Crusade was similarly disastrous. On June 24, 1148, a collective resolution was reached by the leaders of the crusade, which included Conrad of Hohenstaufen (who had embarked immediately from Constantinople to the Holy Land and subsequently participated in the crusader council), King Louis and King Baldwin of Jerusalem, to initiate a military offensive against Damascus. The decision was very unconventional, given that the Sultan of Damascus, during that period, had maintained a relatively amicable relationship and a shared adversary with Nur ad-Din, the successor of Zengi. Despite the presence of the Masters of both the Temple and the Hospital at this war council, their views remain unknown, and their influence was not yet significant enough to impact the outcome.

The first attempts to capture Damascus from the Eastern and Southern directions were fruitless due to the presence of gardens and orchards around the city. These cultivated areas, together with their accompanying irrigation canals, hindered large-scale horse attacks while providing archers with advantageous concealment.

A consensus was reached to relocate the encircling military forces towards the eastern region, characterized by the absence of gardens and orchards, as well as a limited availability of water resources. Following this, the whole of the crusade devolved into conflicts and allegations as the crusading military force fragmented, resulting in the tarnishment of the reputations of both King Louis and Conrad of Hohenstaufen.

The outcome of the Second Crusade had noteworthy ramifications. The event proved that the prowess of 'Frankish' knights was not impervious, and the invincibility of Frankish forces was not unassailable, instilling a sense of increased confidence among the Turks. In Western Europe, it was seen that the Crusaders did not consistently receive divine favor from God.

Nevertheless, the pursuit of individuals to blame started promptly due to the prevailing belief that divine favor was necessary. The Greeks emerged as the primary target of blame, as Conrad and Louis saw themselves to have been 'betrayed,' either by deception or deliberate entrapment into ambushes. The 'Poulains,' referring to the barons and lords of the Kingdom of Jerusalem, were also subjected to censure since the Crusaders saw them to be too willing to engage in peace negotiations with their Saracen foes.

However, it is essential to highlight that a German writer ascribed the catastrophe in Damascus to the Templars. It is said that the Templars had received a significant monetary incentive from the Saracens to assist the besieged city covertly. The charge above was only put up by German authorities, whereas the French made no such claims. Upon his return to France, King Louis was effusive in his admiration for the Templars, contributing to the further enhancement of their esteemed status.

The Templars did not manage to develop a strong presence in the German-speaking regions, and within fifty years, the Germans formed their Order, known as the Deutsche Ritter Orden. Nevertheless, it was a monarch from France who eventually precipitated the demise of the Knights Templar.

Bertrand Du Guesclin hailed from a lineage deeply entrenched in the legacy of the Crusades, not only through his patrilineal ancestry. At the heart of Bertrand Du Guesclin's Crusader matrilineal ancestry lies Robert de Broons, also known as Robert Guillaume de Broons, the Lord of Broons, whose participation in the Seventh Crusade under King Louis IX, commonly known as Saint Louis, underscores the family's commitment to the Crusading cause. The Seventh Crusade (1248-1254) was primarily aimed at recapturing Jerusalem, which had been lost to the Muslims in 1244. Led by King Louis IX of France, it ultimately failed with the capture and imprisonment of Louis IX in Egypt.

Robert de Broons's decision to join Saint Louis on this expedition reflects the widespread enthusiasm among Western European nobility to reclaim the Holy Land from Muslim control during the 13th century. His father, Hamon de Broons, an esteemed Knight and Crusader, accompanied Richard the Lionheart, King of England, on a Crusade, showcasing the family's continued dedication to the Crusading ethos across generations.

Hamon's involvement underscores the transnational nature of Crusading efforts, as knights from various European regions rallied under the banner of Christendom to defend or reclaim territories in the Levant. Richard the Lionheart's crusade was the Third Crusade (1189-1192), which aimed to reconquer Jerusalem after its capture by Saladin in 1187. Notable figures like King Richard I of England, King Philip II of France, and Holy Roman Emperor Frederick I participated in this crusade.

Delving deeper into the familial tree, Gilberte de Saint-Gilles emerges as a pivotal figure in Bertrand Du Guesclin's Crusader ancestry. As the daughter of Bertrand de Saint-Gilles, a distinguished knight and ruler, Gilberte inherited a legacy shaped by Crusading endeavors. Bertrand de Saint-Gilles's multifaceted roles as the Count of Toulouse and Tripoli exemplify the interconnectedness between Crusading ventures and political power dynamics in the medieval Mediterranean world.

Bertrand de Saint-Gilles's lineage intertwines with illustrious Crusaders and rulers, including Raymond IV, Count of Toulouse, a central figure in the First Crusade (1096-1099). The First Crusade was called by Pope Urban II in 1095, aiming to capture Jerusalem from Muslim control.

Raymond IV played a significant role in capturing Jerusalem and establishing the Crusader states, including the County of Tripoli. Raymond's participation in the Crusades and his territorial holdings in Toulouse and Tripoli underscore the entanglement of Crusading aspirations with territorial expansion and consolidation in the Levant. The Crusades were not only religious expeditions but also had significant political and territorial objectives, with rulers like Raymond IV seeking to expand their influence in the region under the guise of religious fervor.

19.14.3 Templars in Matignon, Bretagne

Matignon is nowadays a French commune located in the Côtes-d'Armor department in the Brittany region, 40 km West of Ile-Du-Guesclin in Saint Coulomb and 40 km North of Broons, where Bertrand Du Guesclin was born. The Templars had a presence inside the geographical boundaries of the nation known as Matignon.

During the Middle Ages, the Templars and, subsequently, the Hospitallers of Saint-Jean of Jerusalem had a significant role, particularly at Pléboulle, located near Cap Fréhel, as well as in Pléneuf-Val-André.

The existence of the ancient inhabitants is shown by many remains, particularly at Pléboulle, Fréhel, Plévenon, and Saint-Alban. Jean-Pol Pimor and Didier Marsaudon, two individuals with a keen interest in history and local traditions, have embarked on a journey to retrace the footsteps of several monastic orders. It is worth noting that, in many instances, legends have been given more prominence than facts.

Recently, researchers have presented their collaborative findings in a publication titled "Tracing the Path of the Templars and Hospitallers of Saint John of Jerusalem." The narrative has elements of both astonishment and exhilaration.

According to Didier Marsaudon, the organization's primary purpose was to safeguard Christian pilgrims throughout their journey to the Holy Land. The European authorities warmly welcomed pilgrims but with the caveat of securing enough financial resources to fulfill their objectives. Pope Clement V disbanded the Order of the Templars in 1312.

The Hospitallers order was established in 1099, with the primary objective of providing hospitality to travelers and tending to the infirm.

According to Jean-Pol Pimor, in 1312, the Order of Hospitallers successfully reclaimed a significant portion of the assets formerly held by the Order of the Temple, which the Pope had disbanded. Subsequently, their organization emerged as the preeminent force within Christianity. In the realm of Matignon, there are two distinct orders.

The first installation of the Templars in Brittany occurred in the city of Nantes. The presence of the Hospitallers in that region was rather limited in terms of their population. Nevertheless, evidence of their historical presence may be identified by place names, including the term 'Hospital.'

Throughout history, La Fresnaye Bay has consistently functioned as a sanctuary and intermediate point for vessels navigating from the vast expanse of the open sea. The Templars established the Temple commandery at Montbran, located near Pléboulle.

The Temple Chapel at Pléboulle has been consistently portrayed as a Templar chapel in various historical records. Historians now believe that the Temple Chapel originated linked to the Hospitallers.

According to Didier Marsaudon, the renowned Montbran fair may be traced back to the Middle Ages and is likely to have been established by the Templars.

19.14.4 A templar's Chapel in Pléboule

In Pléboule, in the Côtes-d'Armor in Bretagne, there is indeed a chapel, shown in Figure 19.20 on page 175, called initially Chapelle de la Sainte-Croix (The Chapel of the Holy Cross), and later called Notre-Dame-du-Temple, or le Temple.

The chapel of Notre-Dame du Temple, also known as the Sainte-Croix chapel, situated in Pléboulle, is among the three remaining structures associated with the Knights Templar. These structures are located at the entrance of the Cap Fréhel peninsula, alongside the Tour de Montbran and the church of Plurien. It is believed that the Templars from the prominent commandery of Lannoué near Yvignac were responsible for the establishment of the church above.

The chapel was constructed around the 13th century and underwent restoration in the 15th century under the patronage of a progeny of Bertrand du Guesclin, whose heraldic emblem is intricately carved into the stone above the main entrance.

Regrettably, no remnants of the cottage next to the church exist within the Templars' historical context.

In 1274, an individual named Hamon Danebant made a generous contribution by donating many parcels of property in the parish of Pléboulle to the monastery of Saint-Aubin-des-Bois. One of the establishments above is situated in Clos Saint-Gilles, near the hospital. Given that the extant remains of the Clos Saint-Gilles mill are situated around 400 meters to the north of the Temple town, it is quite probable that the hospital in question pertains to the Notre-Dame church.

Furthermore, in 1295, the abbey above entered into a formal arrangement with Geoffroy le Porc, a resident of Pléboulle, about a precious feudal kingdom known as Trehen Daan. This particular stronghold was situated next to the fortified enclosure of Daan, around 500 meters south of the Temple. However, starting from the latter part of the 14th century, Pierre III du Guesclin and the Hospitallers jointly held the lordships of Montbran and Trehen. If the fiefdom of Montbran was to be restored to the lords of Plancoët, it is worth noting that the fiefdom of Tréhen was bestowed to the Hospitallers.

In the year 1424, Brother Nicolas Poitevin, who held the position of commander at La Guerche and La Noué, made a declaration about around ten establishments situated in Pléboulle at the Temple Trehen near Monbran. This included a courtyard in front of the church of the said Temple. The use of the word 'legalize' implies that the settlement of the Temple accommodated parish offices starting from the 15th century. The persistence of this arrangement can be observed in the 18th century through the examination of the paper terrier of the commandery of La Caillibotière, which was initiated in 1776.

Within the parish of Pléboulle exists the Church of Notre Dame du Temple, situated within the immediate jurisdiction of the seigneury above dela Caillibottiere. According to the terrier, it is mandated that the Great Parish Mass be conducted on Three Sundays: firstly, on the day of the exaltation of the Holy Cross, specifically on September 14 during the Amonbran fair; secondly, on Shrove Sunday; and finally, on all days of the feast of the Blessed Virgin. The authority of the commandery encompasses the Cemetery of the Church above. The officers' seats are in the wall surrounding the Cemetery, constructed from cut stone. The audience was convened every week, namely on Mondays. According to the Napoleonic land registration of 1826, the church and Cemetery were encompassed totally by a surrounding fence.

A detailed description of the chapel was provided in the topographic inventory conducted by Patrick Pichouron in 2010:

The chapel of Notre-Dame du Temple is a structure characterized by a singular nave, which has been created using materials such as granite and schist rubble. The architectural structure consists of a central nave and a choir section, which are distinctly divided by a diaphragm arch. The western gable wall is accompanied by a pair of angular buttresses with projections on each side. The entrance has a pointed arch doorway adorned with an archivolt, including returns, arches, and columns. Above this is a decorative element carved in high relief, situated inside a walled bay. This decorative element is shaped like a scutiform shield, displaying a two-headed eagle on a crest helm. The northern wall lacks windows or openings. The buttress provides support to the structure, similar to the south wall. The surface of the bedside is level. The structure has an openwork design, including a pointed arch bay adorned with Gothic-style tracery. Additionally, it is equipped with straight buttresses, each projecting from its respective side. The architectural feature that divides the nave from the chancel consists of a two-bay comb bell tower, while the western roof is equipped with bolt holes. The exposed wooden frame, previously concealed by affixed paneling, is now visible. The choir is situated next to an aisle on its northern side, while a door provides access to the choir from the southern direction.

Steven Lemaître, in his regional thematic inventory 2016, described the chapel as follows:

The chapel of Notre-Dame-du-Temple is situated in the hamlet of the same name, located around 1.9 kilometers to the south of Pléboulle. The structure in question is characterized by its rectangular shape, with a solitary central space further elongated by a chancel, accompanied by a two-bay aisle on each side. The western façade of the structure has a gateway that is adorned with triple arches, positioned at third places. These arches are accentuated on the inner curve by a toric molding and are topped by a substantial archivolt. The entrance is characterized by a simple cylindrical window adorned with a large coat of arms and a prominent two-headed eagle wearing a helmet adorned with a peacock crest. The lack of a specific design element, known as a notice, clearly identifies the lineage of the Du family Guesclin as the oldest branch. Two oblique buttresses support the gable wall, each with two drip-edge projections. Additionally, the roof has smooth slopes that terminate in slightly projecting brackets. The presence of masonry connecting the oblique buttresses and the outside face of the eaves in the nave suggests a subsequent restoration of the roof. The barrel window and the Du Guesclin coat of arms were likely repurposed from a previous structure. The southern front of the structure is adorned with three semi-circular windows that date back to the 17th century. Of particular note is the second window, which incorporates elements of Gothic tracery. This window has two trefoiled lancets topped by a reassembled network design. The outer facade has a buttress that divides the elevation into two sections and adjoins the triumphal arch of the nave. Twin drip edge projections characterize the buttress. The eastern portion of the external facade, which corresponds to the chancel, has decorative elements like a pointed arch doorway with a simple cavetto molding, a narrow square aperture, and a contemporary semi-circular window. The bedside exhibits a flat surface, which is upheld by three angular buttresses with drip edges and lacks a foundation. Specifically, two buttresses are positioned to the south and one to the north. The bedside is further adorned with a pointed arch window that incorporates tracery. This window consists of two trefoiled lancets topped by a network design, which encloses a quatrefoil. Additionally, the window is embellished with two trefoiled spandrels on each side. The slopes provide a consistent and polished appearance, aligning with the repair efforts undertaken on the gable wall of the western facade. In contrast to the choir, the northern aisle of the structure is illuminated by a Gothic bay with tracery adorned with a trefoiled lancet. Additionally, a modern entrance with a straight lintel provides entry to the western side. The north gutter of the nave is blind; only two buttresses with double drip edges, similar to the one that abuts the opposite gutter, interrupt the façade. The bell tower is situated on the ridge of the eastern roof of the nave. It has two barrel chambers with cavetto transoms, each topped by a triangular roof. In the eastern section of the Cemetery, situated behind the choir, are observable late-medieval and modern graves. Notably, a bubo calvary returning to the 17th century commands attention in this area. The pinnacle cross of this calvary, depicting a crucifixion scene, is likely a repurposed element from a previous calvary of medieval origins.

The inside of the nave has a floor composed entirely of compacted soil. Positioned along the southern gutter is a funeral slab that depicts a cross resting on a two-tiered foundation. This design serves as a poignant reminder of the dispersed human remains discovered during unplanned investigations conducted in the last several decades. The nave and choir are distinguished by a prominent diaphragm arch, characterized by a pointed arch shape and adorned with two modestly chamfered extensions. A decorative relief arch with a floral motif further enhances this arch. The arch in question is supported by engaged pillars with numerous sides lacking a foundation. These pillars are adorned with decorative foliage and sculpted caps. The entrance leads to a chancel with a modern altar. However, when observing the eastern roof, it becomes apparent that there are two discernible layers of whitewash, suggesting the presence of a previously paneled vault. In the northern direction are two arcades with pointed arches, each consisting of two chamfered arches. These arcades provide access to the aisle, which contains a private chapel. The arcades are supported by an octagonal pier and two engaged pillars with a chamfered base and molded capitals. In proximity to the center mound, four sepulchral slabs, aligned in a north-south direction, are visibly exposed from the earthen surface of the exclusive chapel. Traces of ironwork may be identified, indicating the existence of a historical iron partition between the nave and the choir, as well as between the private chapel and the choir.

It is worth noting that there was also a Saint-Croix temple in Barcelona,[32] locally referred to as Santa Creu, established by Guillem Torró. Establishing the Santa Creu hospital in Barcelona is a pivotal moment in the history of healthcare institutions, particularly in medieval Europe. Delving into its origins reveals not only the inception of a significant medical center but also sheds light on broader trends in hospital administration and development during the late Middle Ages.

Before the union of 1401, Barcelona's hospital landscape was diverse, with various institutions serving different functions within the community. The merging of hospitals marked a significant shift, leading to the creation of larger, more centralized facilities, such as the Hospital de la Santa Creu. Understanding this context is crucial in comprehending the motivations behind the establishment of such institutions and the challenges they faced in their early years.

A key figure in unraveling the early history of the Santa Creu hospital is the notary Joan Torró. Through his First Manual, spanning the years 1401-1404, valuable insights into the administrative processes and day-to-day operations of the hospital emerged. Torró's documentation offers a glimpse into the inner workings of this nascent healthcare institution, revealing the roles and responsibilities of its personnel, as well as the procedures governing patient care and financial management.

Examining Torró's manual alongside broader historical trends allows us to grasp the Santa Creu hospital's significance in late medieval Europe. Its establishment symbolized a shift towards more organized and centralized healthcare provision, reflecting the evolving needs and aspirations of urban societies during this period. Moreover, the challenges faced by the hospital in its formative years underscore the complexities involved in establishing and maintaining such institutions, highlighting the resilience and ingenuity of those involved in their administration.

In essence, the foundation of the Santa Creu hospital in Barcelona represents not only a milestone in the city's medical history but also a microcosm of broader developments in healthcare provision and administration during the late Middle Ages. Through meticulous archival research and analysis of primary sources such as Torró's First Manual, scholars can continue to unravel the intricacies of medieval healthcare systems and their enduring legacies.

19.14.5 Jacky Minier's thoughts

As Bertrand Du Guesclin is portrayed in modern literature, an obscure Breton nobleman rose inside the annals of history as a notable military figure, garnering acclaim for his achievements in warfare. In the year 1370, the King granted him the esteemed designation of Constable, which held a position of great significance in the military hierarchy, comparable to that of a Chief General overseeing the Armies at that particular period.

This accomplishment had substantial significance. Nevertheless, because of the shifting political environment, the Constable was compelled to return to Brittany, resulting in the disbandment of the forces under his command. Paradoxically, those above inactive military personnel would subsequently coalesce into the notorious paramilitary factions known as the 'Grandes Compagnies,' often portrayed as marauders who ravaged the rural regions of France and launched assaults on fortresses and aristocratic properties.

Amidst this era of societal turmoil, a captivating sequence of occurrences transpired. In light of the need to confront the prevailing presence of the Grandes Compagnies, a proposition arose to engage the assistance of Du Guesclin to expel them from the kingdom. Du Guesclin expeditiously initiated measures, although intriguingly, without resorting to the customary use of sheer physical strength often associated with him. Conversely, he began discussions with the organization's leaders, assumed control over their ranks, and guided them towards territories like Provence, Languedoc, and, ultimately, Spain.

Regrettably, Du Guesclin found himself in a predicament when he was apprehended in Spain during his involvement in a military confrontation between Peter of Castile and Henry of Trastamarre. Intriguingly, Peter of Castile had difficulty ascertaining a suitable monetary payment for the highly regarded French warrior. Ultimately, the establishment of an excessive amount is attributed to Du Guesclin himself, a perception commonly associated with his vanity.

The atypical depiction of a character who is both revered for his bravery in the military and regarded with doubt because of his inflated self-esteem evoked a complex range of emotions. Nevertheless, my viewpoint of Du Guesclin saw an abrupt transformation when I came across a line in a publication authored by Bernard Fabré-Palaprat, who wrote the 'Manual of the Knights of the Temple' and advocated for a neo-Templar order during the era of Napoleon.

The prevailing historical narrative often conforms to the preferences of ruling elites, who manipulate events to further their interests.

---

[32] Alberto-Jesús Martínez Bedmar, "La fundación del hospital de la Santa Creu de Barcelona: el manual Primero del notario Joan Torró," thesis, 2028, The University of Barcelona, Faculty of Geography and History.

However, an alternate explanation exists, which lacks backing from official documents but presents thought-provoking inquiries. According to Fabré-Palaprat, Bertrand Du Guesclin occupied the esteemed role of Grand Master within the covert Order of the Temple. This organization persisted in France for fifty years following its official disbandment by Philip the Fair and Clement V. However, it operated openly in other nations, such as Spain, Portugal, Scotland, Italy, and Austria.

If this claim is valid, it implies that the Templars aligned themselves with the French faction in opposition to the English forces during the Hundred Years' War. In this particular context, it is plausible that the military forces under the leadership of Du Guesclin consisted of captains who often hailed from esteemed lineages, maybe including those affiliated with the Templar Order or those who had sympathies towards it. Nevertheless, as political factors became more important than the struggle against the English, the Constable was recalled to his barony, resulting in these men being left to their ways without their influential commander. It is possible that their views and beliefs were not per the changing political environment. Nevertheless, their actions in the years 1373 and 1374 showed little respect for the directives issued by the monarchy.

When Bertrand was assigned to expel them from the realm, he refrained from participating in a conventional 'hunt.' Instead, he negotiated with the group's leaders and subsequently took charge, leading them toward Spain.

In this region, the Templars were known to operate publicly, as we have already shown. Is it possible that there was a covert collaboration between Du Guesclin and the Templars? The potentiality is undeniably extraordinary. What were the persuasive reasons used by Du Guesclin to secure the loyal allegiance of the fearsome 'Grand Companies' in their expedition to Spain, where they engaged in combat on behalf of Henry of Trastamarre against Peter I, who had allied with the 'Black Prince' of Aquitaine (English)? The impact of the Templars is significant throughout the 14th century, which may account for their concession to Bertrand.

A distinct viewpoint arises when considering the exorbitant ransom demanded by Du Guesclin from his prisoner, Peter I the Cruel. How could an individual with extensive knowledge of the socioeconomically disadvantaged areas at that period, suffering from severe food shortages since the disintegration of the Templar territories, justify requesting such a disproportionately large amount of money from the monarchy, apparently motivated by a sense of arrogance?

The issue pertains to a prominent figure in the nation's history, often seen as possessing arrogance and excessive self-regard, particularly among kids in their second year of middle school. One of the most puzzling elements of this line of thought is when individuals collectively mobilized to make contributions and gather funds for the hero's ransom. Would individuals have shown the same behavior towards their monarch or against someone they held low esteem? These inquiries need careful attention.

Did the individuals admire a conceited and arrogant individual? Individuals tend to see these attributes, even without a profound comprehension of political matters, and our predecessors had a comparable level of perceptiveness, although with a lesser degree of knowledge.

Can you provide an alternate explanation? It is plausible that the individuals involved did not exclusively provide the financial resources, particularly in the second instance when Du Guesclin purportedly assumed responsibility for his ransom by liquidating the Duchy of Trastamarre, subsequently succeeded by the Duchy of Molina, as the narrative suggests.

Was the event indeed a ransom, or might it perhaps be classified as a different kind of financial transaction? The covertly transferring funds under the premise of a ransom, performed with the strategic sophistication reminiscent of Du Guesclin. From this perspective, the theory proposing 'Du Guesclin's role as the Grand Master of the Temple' presents a significantly divergent interpretation.

Could the 'Treasure of the Temple' be transported to Spain or other locations outside 14th-century France? During that period, the Languedoc region was next to Aragon, which included the territories of Roussillon and Catalonia. This presents thought-provoking possibilities.

19.14.6 Cuvelier's thoughts

The following text is rephrased from Cuvelier (Chronique de Bertrand Du Guesclin) and M. De Frémenville (Histoire de Bertrand Du Guesclin) and deals with 'Le Connétable Du Guesclin.'

It is well recognized, in concurrence with the perspectives of several biographers, that after the Treaty of Guérande and the talks about his ransom, which the King of France financially supported, Du Guesclin earnestly considered the realization of his youthful goals. He likely encountered steadfast support and unyielding commitment to this mission among his fighters. Nevertheless, we must exercise caution in endorsing Mr. de Fréminville's assertion that he was compelled to go to the sacred regions due to profound and enigmatic duties, of which the author of this text claims to possess esoteric knowledge.

The issue of whether Du Guesclin possessed the title of Grand Master of the Order of the Temple remains unanswered, based on the transmission charter released by Mr. de Fréminville. The existence of an original charter is not a matter of debate, and it is acknowledged that Jacques de Molay, foreseeing the unfavorable conclusion of his trial, handed the confidential archives of the Order of the Temple to Larmenius, who held the position of patriarch in the East. The historical record indicates that a significant number of Templars faced execution by burning at the hands of King Philip IV.

However, the intervention of Joan of Navarre, as well as the support from the monarchs of Scotland and Portugal, provided a safeguard for many Templars, enabling the Order to persist as a covert organization inside France. Nevertheless, can it be ascertained if this affiliation has sustained a consistent and unbroken existence from the early 14th century to the current era? The clandestine history of the organization can be traced back to 1313 when it started at the base of the pyre, and the unfortunate Grand Master met his demise. This historical investigation is supported by certified records that provide evidence linking the organization to the period of the Duke of Cossé-Brissac, who served as its last legitimate head before facing execution.

The title above does not provide a conclusive response to the inquiries above. Although the list of grandmasters is extensively documented, its consistent nature gives rise to some uncertainties instead of definitively resolving them. The name of Bertrand Du Guesclin arises in the context of the highest authority, positioned between Jean de Clermont, who is thought to have assumed this role in 1349, and Jean III d'Armagnac, who is believed to have followed Du Guesclin as Constable in 1381. According to historical records, the individual in question is said to have affixed his signature on a document that may be traced back to 1357.

The task of acknowledging the appointment of a twenty-seven-year-old man as the supreme figure of a prohibited and rigorously supervised organization is undeniably arduous. This individual, who had not yet achieved recognition outside the confines of Brittany in 1357, was only starting to establish a reputation at that time. This objection presents a strong argument and is corroborated by other sources. We express our sorrow in communicating this issue to Mr. de Fréminville. We wanted to give him a concession that would enhance Du Guesclin's status to a heightened degree of magnificence. The recognition of the importance attributed by Mr. de Fréminville to establishing a connection between the constable image and the Order of the Temple is rooted in a profound sense of filial loyalty.

Nevertheless, there is a lingering historical ambiguity around the underlying impulses that drove Du Guesclin towards the Eastern territories, which have traditionally been associated with tremendous achievements and triumphs.

Charles V unquestionably had a clear purpose in mind when endorsing this endeavor and generously allocating the required resources to its head. Unlike several rulers of his day, this particular King demonstrated a realistic and rational approach, devoid of any ambition to engage in a fresh crusade that would distract him from his lifetime endeavors.

This is supported by his transition from the initial intention of embarking on a religious mission to Cyprus and Syria to pursuing a merely political campaign beyond the Pyrenees. Charles V was motivated by a specific objective, which was to create a sense of Order in France. This included consolidating royal power and bringing under control the feudal and military forces that had either transformed into tools of revolt against the monarchy or contributed to societal chaos.

During the 14th century, the military structure of the kingdom consisted of two distinct components. On the one hand, some warriors were bound to the territorial jurisdiction of the monarchy, alongside others who were influential vassals compelled to serve the sovereign under the risk of losing their possessions. Conversely, some enjoyed freedom and saw warfare as a vocation, willingly providing their military services to the highest bidder. The troops often engaged in contractual agreements with the King or with knightly commanders who held commissions. These captains, in turn, provided the enlisted men with the necessary equipment in exchange for a mutually agreed-upon sum. The feudal system, or the prevailing customary practices, required vassals and sub-vassals to fulfill a yearly obligation of forty days of duty. Nevertheless, in instances of utmost importance, these responsibilities often went unmet.

In response to this issue, the French monarchs enlisted many groups of mercenaries, brigands, and soldiers of fortune. These individuals, finding it difficult to readjust to a society marked by a strict social structure during periods of tranquility, ultimately clashed with it. These bands of marauders traversed many territories, engaging in acts of robbery against travelers and looting castles and monasteries. They were under the command of greedy soldiers and destitute knights who lacked inherited wealth.

The assailants engaged in acts of aggression against urban settlements, causing devastation to rural areas and perpetrating abhorrent offenses, as documented in contemporary records, with a sense of dread. Hailing from the region of Brabant, this group was first referred to as 'Brabançons' and then as 'cotereaux,' a term derived from their use of short swords. During the era of Du Guesclin, individuals of his ilk were often denoted as 'itinerant combatants' or 'tardiness-afflicted individuals.' The marauders, who were organized into substantial groups, had emerged as a significant cause of fear for governing authorities and the general public, presenting an overwhelming challenge to establishing any societal structure.

Notably, the executives of these corporations were esteemed individuals and knights of their day. Prominent individuals of historical significance included Bègue de Vilaine, Ives de Caverley, Arnoult de Cervolles, sometimes referred to as the archpriest or archdevil, Mathieu de Gournay, Bernard de Lasalle, Gaultier Huet, the viscount of Auxerre, the Mauny brothers, and several more individuals whose remarkable achievements were meticulously documented in extensive historical accounts. These strong military units had lately achieved a decisive victory against a royal army, resulting in the capture of the Duke of Bourbon and his son. The size of their group had seen a substantial increase due to the protracted conflict in France dating back to the Rule of the first Valois monarch. This growth was so pronounced that the whole kingdom seemed to be powerless in the face of their presence.

In light of the urgent need to counteract these factions, King Charles V endeavored to gain the support of their leaders and establish a collaborative relationship. The individual had the task of identifying a foreign organization that would be enticing to them, with a crucial emphasis on including a charismatic leader who had a comprehensive understanding of the aims of the monarchy and could effectively establish a sense of trust among the members. If the extant troubadour poem provides an accurate depiction of the encounter between Du Guesclin and the marauders at the Châlons camp, wherein he arrived with an offer of two hundred thousand francs on behalf of the King of France and the promise of potential riches in Spain, then the speech attributed to the Breton knight during this large gathering of forty thousand individuals would undeniably position him as one of the most skilled orators of his era. The speech begins with the following statement:

"Allow me to elucidate the purpose of my presence here.
Individuals freely endeavored to protect their fellow citizens at the behest of the monarch, who was responsible for safeguarding France.
I express my desire for your presence. May you kindly accompany me throughout my journeys. In a mutually agreeable partnership, you shall willingly bear the responsibility.
Due to his strong inclination to engage in combat against the Saracens, one may choose to accompany the monarch of Cyprus under divine protection or go to Spain to partake in its pleasurable offerings. The region is known for its favorable conditions conducive to sustaining life, as well as its production of exceptional wines, renowned for their exquisite taste and clarity.
I implore you not to refuse my request, as I want to go to Avignon, where I possess knowledge of the route. I intend to seek forgiveness on your behalf for the transgressions you have committed, including the acts of murdering and robbing. Following this, we will proceed with our trip in unison.
It is plausible to assert that we may see our actions as having sufficiently burdened our conscience.
In my assertion, esteemed lords, I confidently affirm my conscientiousness, having refrained from engaging in any actions that would cause moral distress. However, should any transgressions be attributed to my name, it is not unfounded to surmise that, as my esteemed associates, you have committed acts of greater impropriety towards me. Let us demonstrate reverence for the divine and disavow allegiance to evil forces.
In human existence, we must introspect and contemplate the consequences of our behaviors.
Engage in courtship with women and ensure the protection of households, Engage in acts of violence against men and children, and seek monetary compensation from all parties involved;
The consumption of bovine animals such as cows, cattle, and sheep, as well as the exploitation of geese, chicks, and capons, with the indulgence in exquisite wines, were prominent aspects of our revelry.
The act of desecrating churches and religious organizations was a transgression of far higher magnitude than those often associated with ordinary criminals.
It is imperative to discourage engaging in harmful actions only targeting Christians strongly. I propose that by heeding my advice, we may collectively achieve financial prosperity. Furthermore, following my guidance will enable us to enjoy eternal bliss hereafter."

How may an individual counteract the influence of compelling arguments put forward by an individual with such persuasive abilities? Exclamations of joy reverberated throughout all quarters; the vocalizations of the exultant gathering fervently reiterated the appellation of the monarch. A formal invitation was made to partake in a meal with the monarch inside the confines of his royal residence.

On that significant occasion, Du Guesclin, supported by substantial financial resources, successfully garnered the allegiance of his first group of dedicated followers, who had previously occupied peripheral positions within the realm of the monarchy. Furthermore, a formidable force of forty thousand troops, now under his exclusive command, played a crucial role in achieving his policy goals. Charles V effectively found a purpose for these strong groups and, as a result, managed to suppress their constant hostility. This difficulty is commonly confronted at the culmination of significant social crises: revolutions can only be ended by such measures. When a discerning authority encounters formidable forces, its primary objective should be to include and integrate them rather than to eliminate them.

France was no longer at risk from the mighty corporations, and the remarkable diversion of the Loire River demonstrated to the global community the deeply ingrained material structure inside the nascent civilization. The marauders abandoned their practice of extorting ransom from locals, refraining from threatening the reputation of aristocratic women.

Additionally, the modern condottieri transitioned from using their swords to selling their services instead of using their writing talents. However, it remained crucial to provide these passionate aspirations and creative intellects with a significant objective. Suppose Charles V had recognized the promise of the Castilian expedition under the leadership of Bertrand Du Guesclin. In that case, it is plausible that a government with a comprehensive understanding of its difficulties and resources might likewise identify a productive mission and willing partners.

King Charles V, displaying unwavering dedication to liberating France from the occupying forces, first showed a predisposition towards embarking on a crusade regardless of the associated expenses.

Nevertheless, the evolving circumstances in Spain during that period prompted a modification in his intended course of action, a strategic maneuver that he astutely linked to religious inspiration, a facet that Du Guesclin initially highlighted. Peter the Cruel, the monarch of Castile, who was responsible for the death of his spouse, Blanche de Bourbon, had been engaged in a prolonged dispute with France ever since. King John had provided refuge for Henry of Transtamarre, the brother and competitor of Peter, inside his royal court for an extended period. A significant portion of the Spanish nobles expressed a desire for reform, and a reasonable time had arisen to undertake an endeavor, with the backing of France, to modify the prevailing circumstances. This undertaking directly impacted French interests extending beyond the Pyrenees and the monarchy's prestige.

During that particular era, Spain was renowned for its grandeur and adherence to chivalric values. Embarking on a journey over the mountains was akin to undertaking a crusade since it entailed an imminent encounter with the Saracens of Granada. These Saracens were known to be associates of Peter the Cruel, an individual characterized as a renegade and sorcerer whose notoriety from afar gave rise to peculiar narratives. The historical context was the pursuit of territorial expansion via the conquest of countries, the defeat of the Moors, the desire for retribution against a captivating queen, the acquisition of money, and the forcible attainment of absolution. What factors can impede one's ability to achieve success given the promising opportunities and the guidance of a prominent individual such as Du Guesclin?

The written records provide ample evidence of the outcomes of the twin missions in the Iberian Peninsula, characterized by notable prudence and an unparalleled military strategy. It is well recognized that Henry of Transtamarre assumed the position of ruler in Castile but, shortly after that, encountered a decisive English invasion headed by the Black Prince to overthrow the monarch supported by the French. The ensuing mistakes and violations committed by Don Pèdre facilitated the rise of his competitor. After a strenuous war orchestrated by Du Guesclin, who held the position of commander-in-chief for both French and Castilian armies, the opposing King ultimately assumed power over a throne marred by the act of killing one's sibling.

The expeditions conducted in the years 1365 and 1368 are early examples of our historical record of intricate and far-reaching military operations devised to subjugate and perpetuate foreign control. Du Guesclin effectively maintained Order and discipline among the individuals involved in this operation, changing them from unruly marauders into well-disciplined warriors. Under the supervision of a leader exclusively committed to upholding the monarchy, they formed the steadfast nucleus of an establishment that would imminently bring about a profound metamorphosis inside the country.

Following the events above, Charles VII strategically used the influence bestowed upon him by Joan of Arc, much like his predecessor, who had profited from Du Guesclin's efforts. As a result, Charles VII successfully concluded the administrative modifications set in motion by the esteemed commander, culminating in the notable enactment of the ordinance of 1448. The decree above implemented a military function for every parish and formed ordinance companies that appealed to the youthful nobles. Henceforth, feudal responsibilities and the inclusion of lordly contingents became a peripheral role within the military framework of the kingdom. The detachment of service from territorial ownership resulted in the disintegration of the feudal system at its core. The military, under the strict Rule of the monarchy, served as a means of exercising absolute authority, leading to the transformation of the territory to provide a foundation for a new system of administration.

The royal corporations played a significant part in undermining the once invincible nobility, whose sturdy strongholds would eventually succumb to the might of artillery. In his comprehensive study on military tactics, M. de Fréminville presents persuasive evidence that the process of besieging a fortress was much prolonged and unpredictable before the introduction of cannons. Modest fortifications, manned by around fifty steadfast defenders, have successfully shown the capacity to withstand much greater military forces for one year. Nevertheless, as the author expounds, the use of artillery brought about a significant transformation in the conduct of siege warfare, altering the balance of power in favor of the assailants. In the aftermath of this transition, no castle remained impenetrable.

During this historical period, a significant number of strongholds and castles, which had long withstood the dominion of the governing authorities, started to deteriorate, revitalizing France's geographical terrain in parallel with the evolving societal dynamics. A moment of great historical significance transpired when Du Guesclin directed his cannons toward a humble edifice. This day, he was proved to be as crucial as the occasion when he partook in a lavish meal alongside King Charles V within the regal chambers of Paris, thereby cementing his authority over formidable troops who would soon become steadfast and devoted commanders.

Bertrand du Guesclin, in addition to his prowess as a courageous knight, had exceptional political insight that enabled him to have significant influence during his time due to his forward-thinking nature. The remarkable acts of bravery documented by his biographers, however noteworthy, only represent a small portion of his genuine contributions to future generations.

Suppose Du Guesclin had not had a profound understanding of his obligations and purpose. In that case, he might have potentially reveled in the influence and authority derived from his military achievements, which were still considered crucial then. As Constable of Castile, Count of Soria, and Duke of Molinas, he was bestowed with abundant riches and prestigious accolades. Nevertheless, despite the pleas from a grateful monarch, Du Guesclin decided to go back to France, relinquishing a stable and unchallenged position in favor of the risks associated with military conflict, the perils of jealousy, and an unknown destiny. His steadfast commitment to France and their deeply rooted adherence to monarchical principles, characteristics that were uncommon during the 14th century but became more prevalent in the 17th century, compelled them to conceptualize the nobleman's existence as a continuous endeavor to resist England, a perpetual surrender of personal desires to the monarch whose power encompassed the entirety of the nation.

During his military campaign in Andalusia, where he was subduing the last strongholds loyal to Don Pèdre, Du Guesclin was corresponded with by Charles V, who issued a pressing summons for his immediate return. The monarch, who had diligently prepared for an impending fight with intelligent strategies and covert schemes inside the subjugated regions, presently saw a revival of prosperity for the kingdom. In light of the reasonable accumulation of resources and the observation of a growing national spirit, Charles acknowledged the need for a leader capable of efficiently organizing the military and successfully exerting its influence. He sought somebody with the exceptional strategic abilities of a distinguished military leader and esteemed recognition from the general public. Du Guesclin had the first attribute due to his innate qualities provided by nature.

In contrast, the latter attribute was acquired more recently via his successful mission, which garnered significant attention from the kingdom and elevated his status among the most prominent knights of his day. The elevation of the individual to the valued post of Constable seems to have been carefully planned and deliberated upon by the monarch for a significant period, allowing for the development and maturation of both individuals and situations involved. Before commencing the imminent conflict, in which he intended to take a proactive role, the monarch despatched Marshal d'Andreham, a former comrade-in-arms of Du Guesclin, to the region of Spain. The objective of his assignment was to communicate the monarch's objectives to Du Guesclin and direct him to promptly return to the Pyrenees, mobilizing all feasible military resources from France and Spain in service of the monarchy.

The tremendous excitement experienced by Du Guesclin upon his abrupt elevation to the highest echelons of the kingdom, surpassing countless princes and lords, may be easily imagined by the narratives provided by his biographers. It is plausible to consider that, despite his modesty, he may have had both uncertainties and anxieties over attaining unparalleled levels of prosperity. Nevertheless, under the assurance of Marshal d'Andreham, who secured the unwavering backing of the kingdom's knighthood for the King's selection, Du Guesclin consented to assume the position of Constable. However, he stipulated a solitary condition that offered a comprehensive insight into his character: he insisted on a formal commitment to a predetermined salary, which would be consistently disbursed to his army, ensuring his capacity to exercise commanding authority. Without a doubt, it can be inferred that he had foresight while establishing this condition, as he anticipated the imminent difficulties that would emerge, even from the most knowledgeable counselors of King Charles, who lacked an understanding of the need for significant financial resources to support an army, particularly in light of the considerable depletion of the royal treasury.

After receiving thorough reassurance from Marshal d'Andreham of the King's objectives and their unequivocal alignment, Du Guesclin embarked on his journey. While journeying across the mountainous terrain, the individual arrived at the territory of Foix, an area that maintained its allegiance to the nation of France. The individual's expedition originating from the lower regions of the Pyrenees evolved into a sequence of intense conflicts, including confrontations with English defensive structures impeding progress and the need to overcome isolated divisions of the Prince of Wales' military forces. Nevertheless, the size of his military troops expanded as he traversed this particular area of France, gradually seeing the emergence of a desire for self-governance.

Every day was marked by a series of attacks, unexpected events, and intense hand-to-hand fighting encounters, reminiscent of the vivid descriptions found in Froissard's flowery prose. Across the regions of Languedoc, Périgord, and Limousin, the resounding call of "Notre Dame Guesclin!" reverberated, effectively fostering a sense of solidarity among the populace, who were united by their shared patriotic sentiments and under the influence of Du Guesclin, the inhabitants of these regions started to rouse from their extended periods of inactivity. He advocated reconquesting a kingdom that had suffered significant losses, emphasizing restoring past achievements and fostering a profound animosity towards the English. This sentiment, which he effectively disseminated, persisted throughout the history of France.

While journeying across these territories, he garnered not only moral backing but also mobilized tangible assets, mobilizing the populace towards their emancipation, a notion that was innovative for that age.

In the meanwhile, the King of England, with his characteristic vigor, mounted a military expedition. Before Du Guesclin crossed the Loire, the English had initiated invasions of Normandy and Maine, deploying a substantial military contingent under the leadership of Robert Knolles, who swiftly advanced towards the fortifications of Paris. According to historical chronicles, there is evidence of English messengers making frequent visits to the Saint-Honoré gate. Additionally, the citizens of Paris were known to see the enemy's campfires, which could be seen flickering on the horizon from the towers of Notre Dame nightly. With a cautious approach, Charles postponed the engagement with Knolles until his new Constable arrived, considering previous setbacks.

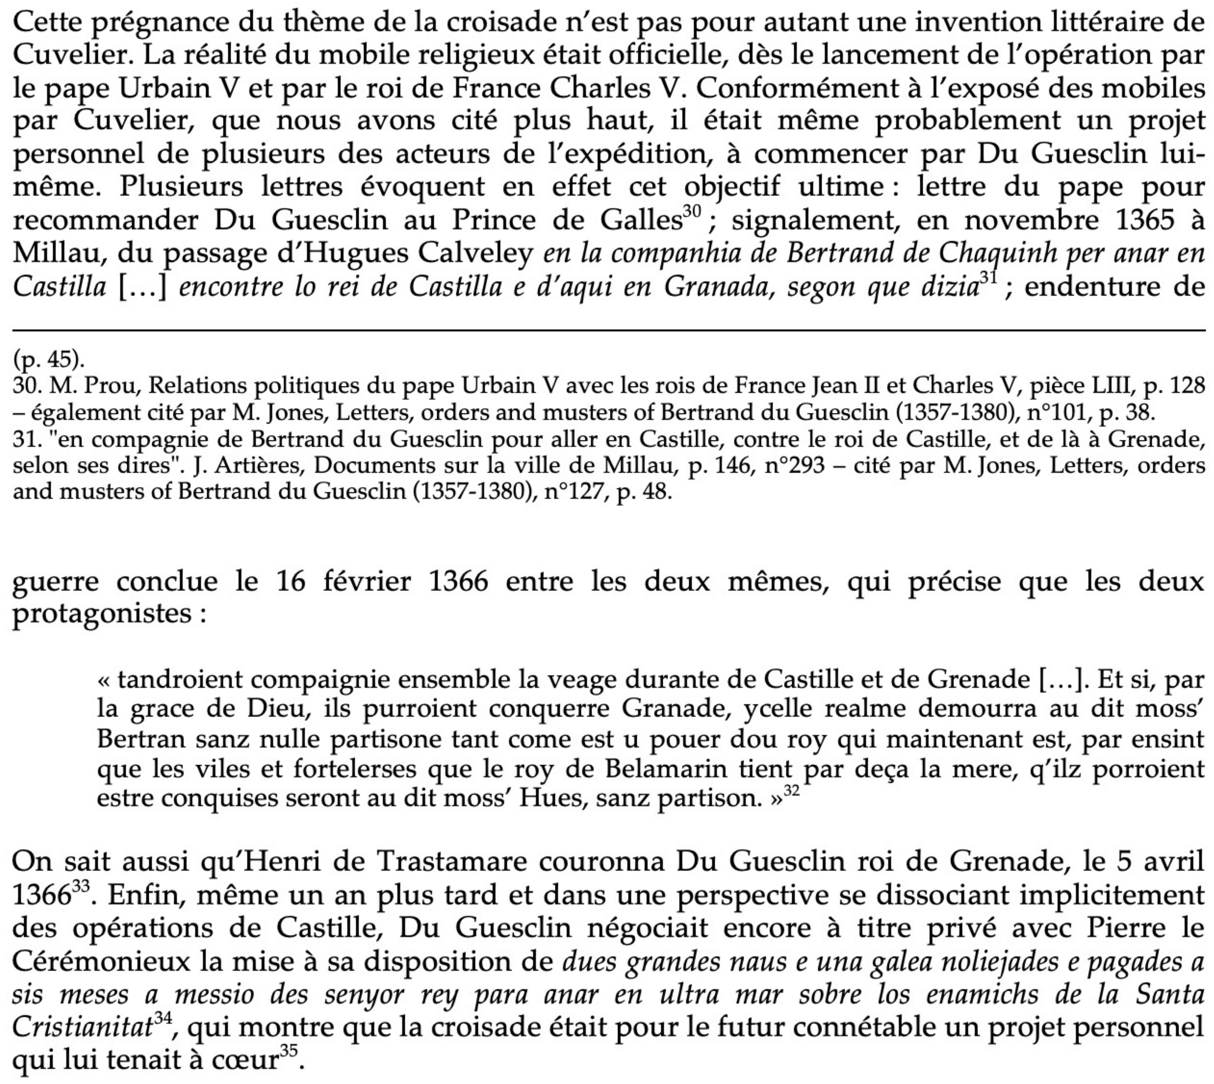
Following the successful capture of Limoges, Du Guesclin promptly expedited his journey back. Clad in the attire of a modest trader and mounted on a resilient equine companion, he embarked upon a journey via the English encirclement enveloping the capital, traversed the fortifications of the city, and proceeded into the Saint-Paul mansion among the exuberant festivities of Christmas. The bold action undertaken and its successful result, together with Du Guesclin's established status as a seasoned combatant, stimulated widespread emotion, fostering a sense of assurance that might incite acts of heroism under practical guidance and feelings of powerlessness in its absence.

In October 1369, Du Guesclin, now near the King, was bestowed with the esteemed position of Constable at an elaborate ceremony inside the confines of the besieged city. In light of the need to launch a surprise attack on the English, he formulated a strategic plan. With the fortification of Paris's fortifications and the concentration of troops in the region, the strategic priority shifted towards launching swift offensives against the adversaries in Poitou and Normandy. This approach aimed to effectively cut off their access to vital reinforcement from the southern territories and the sea.

The responsibility of overseeing the forces stationed in the capital city was entrusted to the esteemed Marshal de Sancerre. At the same time, Du Guesclin made his way to Caën, successfully deceiving the English, who were under the impression that he was still in Paris. A significant portion of his military forces promptly assembled at that location. Instead of monetary compensation, he allocated his riches obtained in Spain and his opulent gold dinnerware, which was bestowed to him by King Henry, to his soldiers. Tiphaine Raguenel, the esteemed spouse of the individual in question, made a personal gift by including her jewels.

After successfully organizing his troops, Du Guesclin started his military campaign, subsequently confronting the formidable army led by the famed Thomas Grandson. Following a demanding nocturnal march against inclement weather conditions, the individual caught the opposing forces off guard, resulting in a decisive triumph at Pont-Vallain. After engaging in vigorous close-quarters combat, the grandson was subsequently captured by Du Guesclin. After fifty years marked by pride and triumph, English chivalry ultimately experienced a setback and later made payments for the release of captives. As Lefèvre asserts, this outcome was so widespread that even the most junior members of the military, such as squires and Pages, managed to capture prisoners on that particular day.

19.15 Descendants in Spain



Cette prégnance du thème de la croisade n'est pas pour autant une invention littéraire de Cuvelier. La réalité du mobile religieux était officielle, dès le lancement de l'opération par le pape Urbain V et par le roi de France Charles V. Conformément à l'exposé des mobiles par Cuvelier, que nous avons cité plus haut, il était même probablement un projet personnel de plusieurs des acteurs de l'expédition, à commencer par Du Guesclin lui-même. Plusieurs lettres évoquent en effet cet objectif ultime : lettre du pape pour recommander Du Guesclin au Prince de Galles[30] ; signalement, en novembre 1365 à Millau, du passage d'Hugues Calveley en la companhia de Bertrand de Chaquinh per anar en Castilla […] encontre lo rei de Castilla e d'aqui en Granada, segon que dizia[31] ; endenture de

---

(p. 45).

[30] M. Prou, Relations politiques du pape Urbain V avec les rois de France Jean II et Charles V, pièce LIII, p. 128 – également cité par M. Jones, Letters, orders and musters of Bertrand du Guesclin (1357-1380), n°101, p. 38.

[31] "en compagnie de Bertrand du Guesclin pour aller en Castille, contre le roi de Castille, et de là à Grenade, selon ses dires". J. Artières, Documents sur la ville de Millau, p. 146, n°293 – cité par M. Jones, Letters, orders and musters of Bertrand du Guesclin (1357-1380), n°127, p. 48.

guerre conclue le 16 février 1366 entre les deux mêmes, qui précise que les deux protagonistes :

> « tandroient compaignie ensemble la veage durante de Castille et de Grenade […]. Et si, par la grace de Dieu, ils purroient conquerre Granade, ycelle realme demourra au dit moss' Bertran sanz nulle partisone tant come est u pouer dou roy qui maintenant est, par ensint que les viles et fortelerses que le roy de Belamarin tient par deça la mere, q'ilz porroient estre conquises seront au dit moss' Hues, sanz partison. »[32]

On sait aussi qu'Henri de Trastamare couronna Du Guesclin roi de Grenade, le 5 avril 1366[33]. Enfin, même un an plus tard et dans une perspective se dissociant implicitement des opérations de Castille, Du Guesclin négociait encore à titre privé avec Pierre le Cérémonieux la mise à sa disposition de dues grandes naus e una galea noliejades e pagades a sis meses a messio des senyor rey para anar en ultra mar sobre los enamichs de la Santa Cristianitat[34], qui montre que la croisade était pour le futur connétable un projet personnel qui lui tenait à cœur[35].

Figure 19.21: Facsimile of pages 25-26 of Lassabatère Thierry. Bertrand Du Guesclin et la guerre juste : traces et motifs d'une construction légendaire. In: Écrire la guerre, écrire la paix. Actes du 136^e Congrès national des sociétés historiques et scientifiques, « Faire la guerre, faire la paix », Perpignan, 2011. Paris : Editions du CTHS, 2013. pp. 18-28. (Actes des congrès nationaux des sociétés historiques et scientifiques, 136-9). From this document with proper references, we know that Du Guesclin received support and recommendations by the Pope and we also know that Henry of Trastamara crowned Du Guesclin king of Granada on April 5, 1366.

19.15.1 Banquet with the King, and Errors in Historical Works

In understanding why the Count of Barcelona warmly welcomed Bertrand Du Guesclin and even invited him for dinner, shown in Figure 19.19 on page 169, it is essential to consider the strategic and historical contexts. The support from Aragon for Du Guesclin can be seen through the lens of medieval geopolitics and shared values. Du Guesclin's military prowess and strategic acumen were crucial during the Hundred Years' War and the Spanish War of the Two Peters. His resistance against English claims to French territories, driven by a confluence of feudal obligations and burgeoning French nationalism, made him a significant figure in reclaiming and defending French sovereignty. Aragon's King saw Du Guesclin as a valuable ally in diminishing English influence in Spain, aligning with Aragon's interests in regional stability and dominance. The shared knightly values and the moral alignment against Peter the Cruel further solidified this support. Thus, the Count of Barcelona's warm reception of Du Guesclin was rooted in a combination of realpolitik and mutual benefit.

Historical animosities and alliances also played a crucial role in this welcoming gesture. The longstanding enmity against the Montfort family explained in Chapter 19.20 and dating back to the brutal Albigensian Crusade led by Simon de Montfort, created a shared grievance between Du Guesclin and the Count of Barcelona. The House of Montfort's actions left a legacy of bitterness in Occitania, which was carried forward into the Breton War of Succession. Du Guesclin's support for Jeanne de Penthièvre against the Montforts resonated deeply with the Count of Barcelona, who viewed this struggle as a continuation of resistance against a common foe.

Furthermore, as explained in Chapter 19.19, Du Guesclin's lineage, potentially tracing back to the respected Desclergue family in the County of Barcelona, further endeared him to the Count. This convergence of historical grievances, shared values, and strategic alliances explains the Count of Barcelona's friendly and welcoming attitude towards Bertrand Du Guesclin.

Bertrand Du Guesclin, undeniably a prominent figure in French medieval history, indeed merits a closer examination due to his remarkable military prowess and influential alliances. In his lifetime, Du Guesclin earned unparalleled recognition for his military acumen, a reputation that led him to become an indispensable advisor to the French King Charles V. His impact extended beyond the borders of France, particularly in Spain, where his military achievements commanded respect, even though his noble lineage was not of the highest echelons.

Above all, Du Guesclin, as explained in Chapter 19.11, had purple blood, being a patrilineal descendant of Desclergues through an ancestor who had flourished as Hakim in Muslim Spain.

While Bertrand Du Guesclin descended from the oldest nobility on our planet, he did not hail from a patrilineal bloodline of the highest nobility, such as Kings. Nevertheless, it is worth noting that he possessed noble ancestry through his mother and other ancestral grandmothers, such as the one described in Chapter 19.13, who hailed from Brittany. His connection with the French King Charles V and his affiliations with the Aragonese King Pere IV of Aragon and the Castilian Enrique de Trastamare undoubtedly played a pivotal role in facilitating his integration into Spanish society. These powerful alliances not only bolstered his status but also likely aided him in forming connections with local Spanish women.

Significantly, the fact that Du Guesclin's descendants continued to forge marital unions with the high nobility or old nobility, such as Desclergue, Torró, Miquel, underscores the significance of his choice of a life partner from the Torró family. It is improbable that lona en atención al mal estado en que se encontraba la casa del veguer de esta ciudad[11].

8 JOSÉ M.ª MADURELL MARIMÓN

Sibilia de Fortiá, la reina ampurdanesa, fué huésped del palacio condal mayor barcelonés según nos lo atestigua la documentación coetánea[12].

Para afrontar el peligro que suponía la invasión de las compañías extrañas que habían entrado en el Ampurdán, la abadesa y las monjas del monasterio de Pedralbes, emplazado en las afueras de Barcelona, fueron obligadas, como medida preventiva, a dejar la clausura conventual para trasladarse al interior de la ciudad de los condes. En aquel entonces Pedro IV les ofreció su palacio real mayor, por creerlo lugar de refugio más adecuado en tales circunstancias para aquella comunidad religiosa (Reg. 1289, f. 87 v.º).

Hemos de hacer mención del espléndido banquete, que, el día primero del año 1366, dió Pedro IV en su palacio mayor de Barcelona al que fueron invitados Bertrán de Claquin — conde de Longeville — [13] y los capitanes de las grandes compañías puestas al servicio de nuestro monarca[14].

Durante el reinado de Juan I esta real morada sirvió de albergue simultáneamente a la reina de Sicilia y a la infanta de Mallorca por orden expresa de este monarca, en que disponía el traslado de aquellas ilustres damas desde el nuevo palacio real menor al palacio real mayor, que nuestro soberano, en esta oportunidad, calificaba de antiguo (Reg. 1954. f. 54 v.º).

Nota curiosa, digna de ser destacada en la época de Juan I, es el destino que se dió de una parte de su mansión palatina de Barcelona para instalar en ella la Escuela Luliana[15].

El arzobispo de Mesina se cuenta también entre los ilustres huéspedes que pernoctaron en esta real morada. Martín el Huma-

[11] ACA, Consejo de Ciento, doc. 132.

[12] «Mem. Real. Acad. Buen. Letras de Barcelona» 10 (1928) 22: Sobiranes de Catalunya. La Reyna Empordanesa, por José M.ª Roca.

[13] Carta de pago otorgada por Guillermo Reginalt, de la familia del noble «Bertrandi de Glesquino, comitis Longeville» a favor del tesorero real Pedro dez Vall (Archivo hist. Notarial de Barcelona. Protocolo Francisco de Ladernosa leg. 7, Manual años 1377-1381: 6 de febrero de 1377).

[14] Bofarull, Antonio de: Crónica del Rey de Aragón D. Pedro el Ceremonioso o del Punyalet. Barcelona 1850, p. 379.

[15] «Bol. Real Acad. Buen. Letras de Barcelona» 13 (1918) 403, doc. LXVI: Catàlech de documents lulians, por J. Avinyó.

136

Figure 19.22: Bertrand Du Guesclin was warmly welcomed in Barcelona by King Pedro IV of Aragon on the first day of 1366.[a]

[a] José M. Madurell Marimón, "El Archivo Viejo o de las Puertas de Hierro," in Las Antiguas Dependencias del Palacio Real Mayor de Barcelona, in Analecta Sacra Tarraconensia, Revista de Ciencias Histórico-Eclesiásticas, Balmesiana, Barcelona, 1941, p.8.

such unions would have been feasible had he chosen a woman of lesser significance.

It underscores his ability to navigate the complex social hierarchies of medieval Europe and his lasting legacy, partially influenced by modern viewpoints, as a figure who transcended the limitations of his birthright through his military prowess and strategic alliances.

In French literature, we find "Doña de Soria, dame de la cour de la reine Jeanne de Castille" as the consort of Du Guesclin in Spain, where it is assumed that she was from a powerful family in Soria, sometimes assumed de Torres. This is, however, impossible. Either it was caused by misunderstandings, wrong translations from French to Spanish or vice versa, or deliberately to avenge the loss of Soria by du Guesclin.

In reality, Du Guesclin's consort must have been "dame de la cour de la princesse Jeanne de Aragon", or in other words, a Lady of Honor in the court of Juana de Aragón.

Juana de Aragón was born in Barcelona on November 7, 1344, and she died in Castellón de Ampurias in 1385. Castellón de Ampurias is also known as Castelló d'Empúries. Juana de Aragón was the princess of Aragon because she was the daughter of King Pedro IV of Aragon and his wife, María de Navarra. She was the countess of Ampurias by her marriage (June 19 of 1373) with Juan I of Ampurias (1338-1398).

Doña de Soria was from the Torró family of Castelló d'Empúries.

We may assume that the alliance between Bertrand Du Guesclin and Doña Torró, later to be known as Doña de Soria, was made by King Pere IV of Aragon during a banquet on January 1, 1366.[33] Indeed, the companies, including that of Bertrand Du Guesclin, arrived in Barcelona on Christmas Eve 1365 and were directed to their designated quarters in or around the city. The main dignitaries of the troops, i.e. Bertrand du Guesclin, Hugh de Calveley, Marshal of France Arnoul d'Audrehem and Louis de Chalon (nicknamed the Green Horseman) were warmly received by the king, as evidenced by the pomp displayed by King Pere IV of Aragon (also known as Peter the Ceremonious) during the banquet given in their honor on New Year's Day 1366.

Indeed, the text in Figure 19.22 on page 186 provides[34] a fascinating glimpse into the historical events surrounding Bertrand Du Guesclin, a notable French commander and Constable of France, illustrating his significant standing in medieval European politics. Specifically, it recounts a grand banquet held in his honor by King Pedro IV of Aragon on the first day of 1366, situated in the grandeur of the Royal Palace of Barcelona. This event underscores Du Guesclin's importance and reflects the period's strategic alliances and diplomatic engagements.

During the mid-14th century, regions such as the Ampurdán (The area of Empúries) in Catalonia were plagued by the invasions of mercenary groups, commonly referred to as 'free companies.' These mercenaries, often comprised of demobilized soldiers from various European armies, posed significant threats to local stability and security. In response to such crises, communities like the nuns from the Pedralbes monastery were compelled to seek refuge within the fortified city of Barcelona, specifically within the Royal Palace, which was deemed the safest sanctuary by the king.

---

[33] Pere el Cerimonioós, Crònica, Barcelone, Ed. F. Soldevila, 1971, chap. 6 et 58, p. 1150-1151, chap. 57, p. 1150

[34] José M. Madurell Marimón, "El Archivo Viejo o de las Puertas de Hierro," in Las Antiguas Dependencias del Palacio Real Mayor de Barcelona, in Analecta Sacra Tarraconensia, Revista de Ciencias Histórico-Eclesiásticas, Balmesiana, Barcelona, 1941, p.8.

The splendid banquet hosted by Pedro IV, which prominently featured Du Guesclin among other captains of these mercenary companies, was not merely a social occasion but a profound demonstration of political alliance and mutual support. By inviting Du Guesclin and his captains, Pedro IV acknowledged their crucial role in defending his realm. He secured their loyalty and service amid his territories’ ongoing conflicts. The presence of these esteemed military leaders underscored their significance in the political landscape of the time.

This narrative is corroborated by other historical records, such as a payment letter issued by Du Guesclin’s family member in 1377, further indicating the deep financial and contractual relationships established between Du Guesclin’s forces and the Crown of Aragon. Furthermore, Antonio de Bofafull’s chronicle vividly details these events, painting a broader picture of King Pedro’s reign, known for his strategic matrimonial and military alliances that significantly shaped the political landscape of medieval Spain.

In sum, the banquet for Bertrand Du Guesclin was not just an event of mere ceremonial dining but a strategic focal point that reinforced necessary alliances, showcasing the intertwining of military power with royal diplomacy during a tumultuous era in European history. This occasion vividly illustrates how medieval monarchs utilized grand gestures of hospitality in the face of geopolitical struggles to secure crucial military support and stabilize their reigns. The strategic importance of these alliances cannot be overstated, as they were the bedrock of political stability in a time of uncertainty and upheaval.

Furthermore, the banquet really happened and is not the result of the fantasies of later chroniclers because testimonies are found in the ancient archives of the time.[35][36]

We should also keep in mind that King Pere IV of Aragon had interest in his alliance with the French King and that Henry of Trastamara a few months later, on April 5, 1366, crowned Bertrand du Guesclin as King of Granada, as shown in Figure 19.21 on page 185 clearly shows. In other words, this crowning and his alliances made Du Guesclin more attractive as a husband than one would otherwise tend to believe.

In the initial edition of this book, the author meticulously delineated the accounts found in historical chronicles pertaining to Du Guesclin and his descendants in Spain. Given the aforementioned factors, it becomes necessary to consider that these chronicles, authored one to three centuries following Du Guesclin’s demise, were likely constructed upon hearsay regarding two offspring who were purportedly born in Soria to a lady hailing from the Torró family. These chroniclers, however, were inclined to seek plausible connections within Castile, the geographical location of Soria, and consequently concentrated their attention on noble lineages associated with the ’de Torres’ surname. This approach led them to assert that the Du Guesclin lineage had merged with various noble lineages such as the de Guzman family, the de Fuentes lineage, the commanders of Mudela within the Order of Calatrava, among other imaginative connections. Ultimately, the French chroniclers, later adopted by their Spanish counterparts, seemingly aimed to elevate the lineage of Du Guesclin to a lofty status within the context of the Spanish Empire.

It is imperative to regard all of this information as speculative accounts and, in some instances, deliberate distortions of historical facts.

The sole point of certainty that can be gleaned from historical chronicles is that Du Guesclin fathered two sons during his time in Spain. One of these offspring bore the name Beltran, Bertran or Bertrand and adopted a surname found in various forms, including de Torres, de Tours, Thoreux, or, as our research has revealed, Torró.

The Torró family and their heraldry are described in Chapter 20 on page 215.

19.15.2 ’Dame de Soria’ was not from Soria

19.15.2.0.1 Soria is a Journey through Spanish History and Genealogy Nestled within the heart of Spain lies the picturesque region of Soria, a land steeped in rich history and adorned with tales of lineage and ancestry. Through the annals of time, Soria’s noble families have generated a narrative intertwined with the broader Spanish heritage, tracing their roots back to the historic regions of Navarra and León.

Soria’s aristocracy boasts a proud lineage, with familial ties dating back centuries. These noble houses, often bearing surnames like Rada, Azagra, Bazán, Muriera, Lopez, Fortunez, and Aznarez, are emblematic of the enduring spirit of Spanish nobility. They have historically played pivotal roles in shaping the region’s destiny, from defending against Moorish incursions to participating in the tumultuous politics of medieval Spain.

However, beneath the surface of these noble lineages lies a narrative shrouded in controversy and obscured by the sands of time. The intricate web of political intrigue, religious fervor, and territorial disputes has often led to the manipulation of historical truths. Forces such as the Papacy and the Crown of Castile have been known to rewrite narratives, erasing the contributions of certain groups, such as the Templars, the Navarrese, and the Aragonese, in favor of a more streamlined version of history.

Salamanca, a neighboring region, is a notable example of the diverse influences shaping Spanish genealogy. Accounts suggest the presence of families with Breton ancestry, intertwined with local lineages such as Anaya and Paz. Despite this, historical narratives propagated by certain institutions have sought to downplay or erase the contributions of these settlers, perpetuating a myth of a homogeneous Spanish identity untouched by external influences.

Figures like Papa Luna emerge as champions of historical truth, challenging the prevailing orthodoxy and advocating for the recognition of diverse ancestries. They argue against the erasure of contributions from regions such as Brittany, Normandy, and Poitou, highlighting the complexity of Spanish heritage. Yet, amidst the tide of political upheaval and cultural change, certain chronologies, particularly those promoting a monolithic Gothic identity, have persisted, obscuring the true diversity of Spain’s genealogical landscape.

As we move deeper into the labyrinthine corridors of Spanish genealogy, we are confronted with the complexity of our collective heritage. From the Jewish origins obscured by Gothic reinterpretations to the enduring legacy of French aid in the Christian Conquest, the tale of Soria and Spain is one of diversity, defiance, and resilience. It beckons us to challenge established narratives and embrace the richness of our ancestral truth, recognizing that the intermingling of cultures, bloodlines, and historical forces shapes our identities.

19.15.2.0.2 Soria and Du Guesclin French historical records designate Bertrand Du Guesclin’s Spanish consort as the ’Dame de Soria,’ suggesting her origin in the region of Soria. Correspondingly, these records associate her with the surname ’de Torres,’ or at least presume their progeny adopted this name.

However, such an assertion is untenable. A Sorian lineage bearing the name ’de Torres’ would have unlikely allied with Du Guesclin, while a counterpart from Aragon would not have possessed the requisite nobility to warrant his alliance. As elucidated in Chapter 19.15.3, it becomes apparent that Du Guesclin's consort could only have been a woman known as 'Torró.' It is plausible that French chroniclers, in their translations and interpretations, misconstrued 'Torró' with the surname 'de Torres,' given the shared reference to a tower in French.

---

[35] Carta de pago otorgada por Guillermo Reginalt, de la familia del noble Bertrandi de Glesquino, comitis Longeville, a favor del tesorero real Pedro dez Vall (Arcbivo bist. Notarial de Barcelona. Protocolo Francisco de Ladernosa leg. 7, Manual años 1377-1381: 6 de febrero de 1377).

[36] Antonio de Bofafull, Crónica del Rey de Aragón D. Pedro el Ceremonioso o del Punyalet. Barcelona 1850, p. 379.

The implausibility of a noblewoman from Soria engaging in a liaison or marriage with Bertrand Du Guesclin stems from the fact that Sorian nobility typically aligned with Pedro de Trastamara, not Enrique de Trastamara, whom Du Guesclin served as a vassal, supported by the Kings of Aragon and France. Consequently, control over Soria and Molina eventually fell under Enrique de Trastamara, elevating Du Guesclin to Duke of Molina and Lord of Soria. These appointments served as compensation for Du Guesclin's assistance and retribution against the Sorian nobility, staunch supporters of Enrique de Trastamara, and fervent adversaries of the French.

However, Molina later transitioned into the possession of the King of Aragon due to Enrique de Trastamara's dubious dealings. While Du Guesclin briefly resided in Deza, Soria, it was Molina where he maintained prolonged dominion. Given the geographical proximity between Molina and Soria, French chroniclers likely assumed that Du Guesclin's consort, Torró or Turró, hailed from the neighboring Soria. The notion of her Catalonian origins seemingly eluded chroniclers, thus leading to their fallacious attribution. This oversight might have even been politically motivated, serving as retribution against Castile by the French monarchy.

Although the precise sequence of events remains elusive, Du Guesclin's consort certainly could not have been a 'de Torres' from Soria, as he never held sway in the region's courts, precluding any noble families from offering their daughters in union with him.

In a conversation with medievalist Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal, it was emphasized that the conservative Sorian nobility, aligned with Pedro de Trastamara, vehemently opposed the bestowal of Molina upon Bertrand Du Guesclin, underscoring their antipathy toward him. This animosity likely dissuaded Du Guesclin from establishing a familial presence in Molina, opting instead for brief sojourns. Consequently, no noble family would have countenanced a union between their daughter and Du Guesclin. Therefore, the designation of his consort as a 'de Torres' from Soria is patently unfounded. The absence of any reprisals against families allied with Bertrand Du Guesclin affirms that none bore the surname 'de Torres' and establishes the inaccuracy of such claims.

The aversion of Castilians towards Pedro de Trastamara's demise contrasts sharply with the French perspective, which celebrated it as a triumph, given Pedro's alliances with Portugal, England, and potentially Gascony, Aquitaine, Brittany, and Normandy—regions subdued by the French crown.

Bertrand Du Guesclin relinquished the countship of Trastamara due to the tarnished reputation of the Trastamara lineage under Enrique de Trastamara, compounded by Du Guesclin's role in Pedro's demise, supported by the King of France. These factors collectively preclude the possibility of Du Guesclin forming a familial bond with a 'de Torres' from Soria.

Conversely, a Torró from Aragon would have been a more plausible match, given the diminished hostility towards Du Guesclin in that region. Nonetheless, it is conceivable that such an alliance would have required establishment before Pedro de Trastamara's defeat, as even Aragonese nobility would have balked at such a union after that. Nevertheless, the descendants of Du Guesclin would likely have identified more closely with their mother's lineage, Torró, given the potential repercussions of openly acknowledging their Du Guesclin heritage. Later generations would be more inclined to manifest their patrilinear identity.

The portrayal of the Torres lineage from Soria as descendants of Bertrand Du Guesclin likely originated from the writings of Argote, possibly driven by motives of vengeance. Subsequent misinterpretations by French chroniclers, perhaps influenced by biased translations, further perpetuated this misconception.

In conclusion, Bertrand Du Guesclin's reputation fared more favorably in Aragon, owing to the strained relations between Pedro IV of Aragon and Pedro de Trastamara of Castile. Consequently, a union with a lady from Aragon or Catalonia would have been more socially acceptable than in Castile, where animosity towards Du Guesclin and his associates was pronounced. Hence, it is more feasible to entertain the notion of Du Guesclin's involvement with a Torró in Aragon or Catalonia rather than with a noblewoman from Soria, particularly given the prevailing sentiments of the Sorian nobility at the time.

We must also consider that Du Guesclin has several crusaders among his ancestors and that the blood of the Counts of Barcelona and Toulouse ran through his veins, as described in Chapter 19.13. Therefore, he was an acceptable marriage partner to the Aragaonese and, more precisely, the Catalans and the Barcelonese. Further reasons are explained in Chapter 19.19 and Chapter 19.20.

19.15.3 Doña Torró - Du Guesclin's Doña de Soria, and their Offspring

19.15.3.0.1 Context, Heraldry and Perspective Territories in Spain that were of interest to Bertrand Du Guesclin's adventure in Spain are shown in Figure 19.11 on page 162, such as, as outlined in Chapter 19.22 on page 203, Soria, shown in Figure 19.12 on page 163, Almazán, Atiensza, Deza, shown in Figure 19.13 on page 164 and Figure 19.14 on page 165, and Molina (Molina de Aragón).

As described in Chapter 19.26.1, the French King and his Constable Bertrand Du Guesclin were on the side of H.M. Enrique de Trastámara in the conflict between Peter the Cruel and Henry of Trastámara. This conflict occurred within an ongoing conflict between Castile and Aragon, in which the French King and his Constable Bertrand Du Guesclin were also on the side of Aragon. H.M. the King of Aragon stood equally on the side of H.M. Enrique de Trastámara.

The families of Soria were on the side of Peter the Cruel. It is not thinkable that any of these families would have had their daughter marry or have children with Bertrand Du Guesclin. They were on a different side, and Du Guesclin was not an established and recognized nobleman in Soria.

When Henry of Trastámara made Bertrand du Guesclin Count of Trastámara in 1366 and Duque of Molina and Soria in 1371 under the Spanish version of his name 'Claquin,' he likely did this to take revenge on the noble families of Soria because they had not supported him. Du Guesclin, as French constable, would, however, not ally with any woman not from high nobility as it would damage his reputation in France and Spain.

When Du Guesclin resided in Soria, he had offspring with a Lady, but she could not have been from Soria. Only a noble Lady from the Crown of Aragon, from the ancient noble Turró or Torró family, would have been acceptable. French historians with political motives, soon copied by Spanish chronicles, referred to her as 'de Tours' or 'de Touraine' and 'de Torres' and claimed she was a 'de Torres' from Soria. The claim must have been done to stab the noble lineages of Soria in the back at first and, centuries later, to assert nobility bonds between France and Spain.

When Henry of Trastámara made Bertrand Du Guesclin Count of Trastámara in 1366, he established this new Claquin nobility line in Spain and allowed Du Guesclin to create a new Heraldic shield containing the double-headed eagle from the du Guesclin family and also the three fleurs-de-lys from the Turró or Torró family, as shown in Figure 23.6 on page 251. The use of three fleurs-de-lys suited Du Guesclin in France, too, as the French King must have interpreted it as a reference to France and its Monarchy, while to

M. Rébouis lit une dissertation : Huit lettres de change de Barcelone des quatorzième, quinzième et seizième siècles.

Dans une visite faite, en septembre 1888, à l'exposition de Barcelone, M. Rébouis a remarqué dans la section d'archéologie des lettres de change soigneusement exposées par leur propriétaire, M. Luis Bordas y Sala, secrétaire de la chambre des notaires de Barcelone.

L'une d'elles, du 28 mars 1443, est tirée de Perpignan, pour la somme de 27 livres 10 sous barcelonais, par Jaubert Sauri, en faveur de Johan et Bernat de Barqueras, les preneurs; le tiré est Johan Marturell, de Barcelone. Cette lettre fut négociée par la banque de la cité de Barcelone fondée en 1401. On peut voir au dos de la lettre qu'elle a été examinée et annotée par D. Francisco Desciergue, notaire de Barcelone, qui était chargé à cette époque du livre de la banque; ce livre, selon les ordonnances qui régissaient la banque de Barcelone, devait toujours être tenu par un notaire.

M. Rébouis fait l'éloge du mémoire plein de judicieuses observations que M. L. Bordas y Sala avait présenté à la section d'archéologie et montre, après lui, l'intérêt qu'offrent ces lettres de change pour les formes de protêt, d'acceptation, d'endossement usitées, à cette époque, dans une région en étroites relations commerciales avec le midi de la France.

Figure 19.23: Notary Francesc Desclergue, described as notary of Barcelona, who played a role for the Bank of Barcelona on march 28, 1443. Citation from 'Journal officiel de la République française. Lois et décrets' , June 14, 1889. (reference 1889/06/14 (A21, N158) of Bibliothèque nationale de France.

Du Guesclin, it perpetuated his status as Constable of France.

Nevertheless, Du Guesclin's glory in Spain did not last very long and went down with the glory of Henry of Trastámara. The County and Dukedoms were lost, and Du Guesclin's children continued the lineage through the names of 'Torró.' Their 'Torró' bloodline was, nevertheless, part of the Torró clan that was already established as a very ancient nobility in Catalonia long before the arrival of Du Guesclin. In other words, not every Torró nobleman is a descendant of Bertrand Du Guesclin.

The lineage leading to Pere Desclergue (DC01) of Montblanc used Torró until Pere Torró i Desclergue (DC01). He was the first to establish the family line of the Desclergues in Montblanc, which is our patrilineal ancestry, the family who founded the famous house on its Main Square.

The Torró ancestry of Du Guesclin's partner is full of cross-breeding marriages in Girona, with the 'de Miquel' family, and this interbreeding continued after that, whereby some descendants chose to go with the family name Torró and others de Miquel throughout this family clan, or both, some descending from Du Guesclin. 'De Miquel' used the gryphon as shield, while 'Torró' used three fleurs-de-lys, sometimes with the middle one replaced by a tower and sometimes with the outer two replaced by a star. The Desclergues of Montblanc adopted these signs in their heraldic coat of arms, where they placed the gryphon on the helmet and the three fleurs-de-lys as ornaments around their shield. By doing so, they indirectly referred to their Miquel and Torró ancestry and Du Guesclin, who also used the gryphon on the helmet.

19.15.3.0.2 The Specific DNA Clues The Y-DNA Haplogroup of Du Guesclin is described in Chapter 19.27.3 on page 211.

19.15.4 The Descendants of Beltrán Torró, Son of Bertrand Du Guesclin

Based on the literature, Bertrand Du Guesclin produced two sons in Spain. Under the assumption they carried the name Torró, these sons were Beltrán Torró and Guerau Torró. The first was named after Bertrand Du Guesclin and appears as such in the literature[37], the second assumed name possibly is the maternal grandfather's name.

In 1974, Carmen Batlle i Gallart published research[38] on the Torró family of Barcelona and discovered they were split off from the Torró of Castelló d'Empúries. She did not know or discover that one or two of these split-off branches may have been descendants of Bertrand Du Guesclin.

Her article was a continuation of her thesis on Barcelona's social and economic crisis in the middle of the 15th century.[39]

Beltrán Torró had a son, Galceran Torró. The latter had two children, Nicolau Torró and Pere Torró. Nicolau had a son, Galceran Torró.

Pere Torró married Eulalia Miquel, and their children were Francesc Torró i Miquel and Joan Torró i Miquel. An investigation by Cortés Rosal revealed that Joan Torró y Miquel and Doña Hostalric had no sons, only a daughter, Eleonor Torró y Miquel. She is the mother of Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02), and she was married to our Desclergue forefather described in Chapter 25, Pere Torró y Desclergue.

Francesc Torró i Miquel was royal secretary, and he was married to Clementa Desclergue;[40] their children were Eulalia Torró and Francina Torró. The other children of Francesc Torró i Miquel and Clementa Desclergue were two sons, Galceran Torró y Desclergue and Pere Torró y Desclergue (DC01), our patrilineal ancestor.

19.15.5 The Ancestry of Clementa Desclergue

Clementa Desclergue, the wife of Francesc Torró y Miquel, was the daughter of Berenguer Desclergue. The latter was the brother of Francesc Desclergue and Pere Desclergue, also known as Pere de Clerico, a notary from 1445-1461 at Santa Coloma de Queralt. Berenguer Desclergue was a man of the law, and in 1439, he held the position of local deputy of Montblanc and its ward, which he resigned on January 26, 1440. He must have been well connected with the courtly circles since, on October 5, 1451, and from Tudela, the infant Joan, Duke of Montblanc, appointed him general curator of the Duchy of Montblanc.

The father of Berenguer Desclergue was Francesc Desclergue, found in Figure 19.23 on page 189, and his mother was Doña d'Anguera (alias Desclergue).

Berenguer's grandfathers were Ramon Desclergue on his father's side and Bernat Desclergue (Bernat d'Anguera, alias Desclergue), on his mother's side. There is a reference to him in the year 1383 in a notary document of 1494 and to his father, Guillem. Bernat d'Anguera was a military, located in Montblanc, like his father Guillem.

---

[37] Bertrand Thoreux, or de Torres, while Torró is much more plausible.

[38] Batlle i Gallart, Carme. «Una família barcelonesa: los Torró». Annals de l'Institut d'Estudis Gironins, 1974, Vol. 22, p. 203-210

[39] C. BATLLE, La crisis social y económica de Barcelona u mediados del siglo XV, Barcelona, 1973.

[40] We derived that Clementia was Clementa Desclergue.

Francesc Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.18, the father of Berenguer Desclergue, was a notary in Barcelona in 1443, who played a role for the Bank of Barcelona and he is shown in Figure 19.23 on page 189.

Clementa Desclergue also appears in Chapter 18.20.

The ancestors of Clementa Desclergue are described in Chapter 18. In particular, we find her father, Berenguer Desclergue, in Chapter 18.19, her grandfather, Francesc Desclergue, in Chapter 18.18, her great-grandfather, Ramon Desclergue, in Chapter 18.17. Ramon Desclergue's forefathers are described in Chapter 18.16, concerning Gerónimo Desclergue, Chapter 18.15, concerning Pere Desclergue, Chapter 18.12, concerning Guillermo Desclergue, Francesc Desclergue in Chapter 18.11 and Raymond Desclergue in Chapter 18.10.

Clementa Desclergue's grandmother, the mother of Berenguer Desclergue, was the daughter of Bernat D'Anguera, the son of Guillem D'Anguera. Bernat D'Anguera's mother was the granddaughter of Guillermo Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.12. In other words, Clementa Desclergue, through her father, Berenguer Desclergue, descended along two bloodlines from Raymond Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.10.

19.15.6 The Descendants of Guerau Torró, Son of Bertrand du Guesclin

LA CATEDRAL DEL MAR
SERIESATRESMEDIA
UNA SERIE DE NETFLIX
LOS HEREDEROS DE LA TIERRA

Figure 19.24: The Cathedral Santa Maria del Mar, located in the Ribera district of Barcelona, is an exquisite example of Catalan Gothic architecture. Constructed between 1329 and 1383, the cathedral was built by the parishioners and the port workers of the La Ribera neighborhood. Its majestic structure stands as a testament to the communal effort and devotion of the people of medieval Barcelona. Several members of our Torró, Miquel and Ros family were buried inside the Cathedral Santa Maria del Mar in Barcelona. This historic church, renowned for its architectural splendor, also served as the central building in the two acclaimed Netflix series 'La Catedral del Mar' and 'Los Herederos de la Tierra.' Both series offer modern-day interpretations of ancient Barcelona, a time when our ancestors thrived in the city. The main character in these series, Arnau Estanyol, bears a sentimental resemblance to the Desclergues family through his merchant activities and his friendly relations with the Jewish community of Barcelona.

As mentioned in Chapter 19.15.4, a brother of Beltrán Torro existed, while his name is an assumption, namely Guerau.

In her work, Batlle I Gallart, mentioned in Chapter 19.15.4, focuses on Bertrán Torró, who married Sibillia Miquel and is not our ancestor. She observed that the Torró family originated in Castelló d'Empúries, not far from Girona, and that one branch of that family migrated to Barcelona. She found that the brothers' Jaume and Joan Torró branches remained in Castelló d'Empúries. At the same time, Guerau Torró and his wife Margarida moved to Barcelona, followed by Nicolau, who is the father of the subject of interest to Carmen Batlle i Gallart, i.e. Bertrán Torró, husband of Sibillia Miquel. It was, for instance, discovered by Carmen Batlle i Gallart that Elionor, the daughter of Joan Torró (of the branch that stayed in Castelló d'Empúries), was sponsored by Galceran Torró (the son of Nicolau), who in his will also remembered Francesca Torró, the wife of Pere Miquel. The latter was a graduate of the decrees of Castelló d'Empúries. He also remembered Pere, the son of Francesca Torró and Pere Miquel.[41]

Carmen Batlle i Gallart observed that Guerau Torró from Castelló d'Empúries was the first of this Torró family to settle in Barcelona. He was, according to Carmen Batlle i Gallart, a faithful servant of Ferdinand I. Guerau Torró was part of the embassy sent by this monarch to Naples in October 1414 to study the possibilities of carrying out the marriage of his second son Juan with the new Neapolitan queen, Juana.[42] Carmen Batlle i Gallart, however, did not reach an explanation on why Guerau Torró was so much a trustee of King Ferdinand I of Aragon that he entrusted him with finding a bride for his son. The Torró were, of course, an ancient noble family, but there was more.

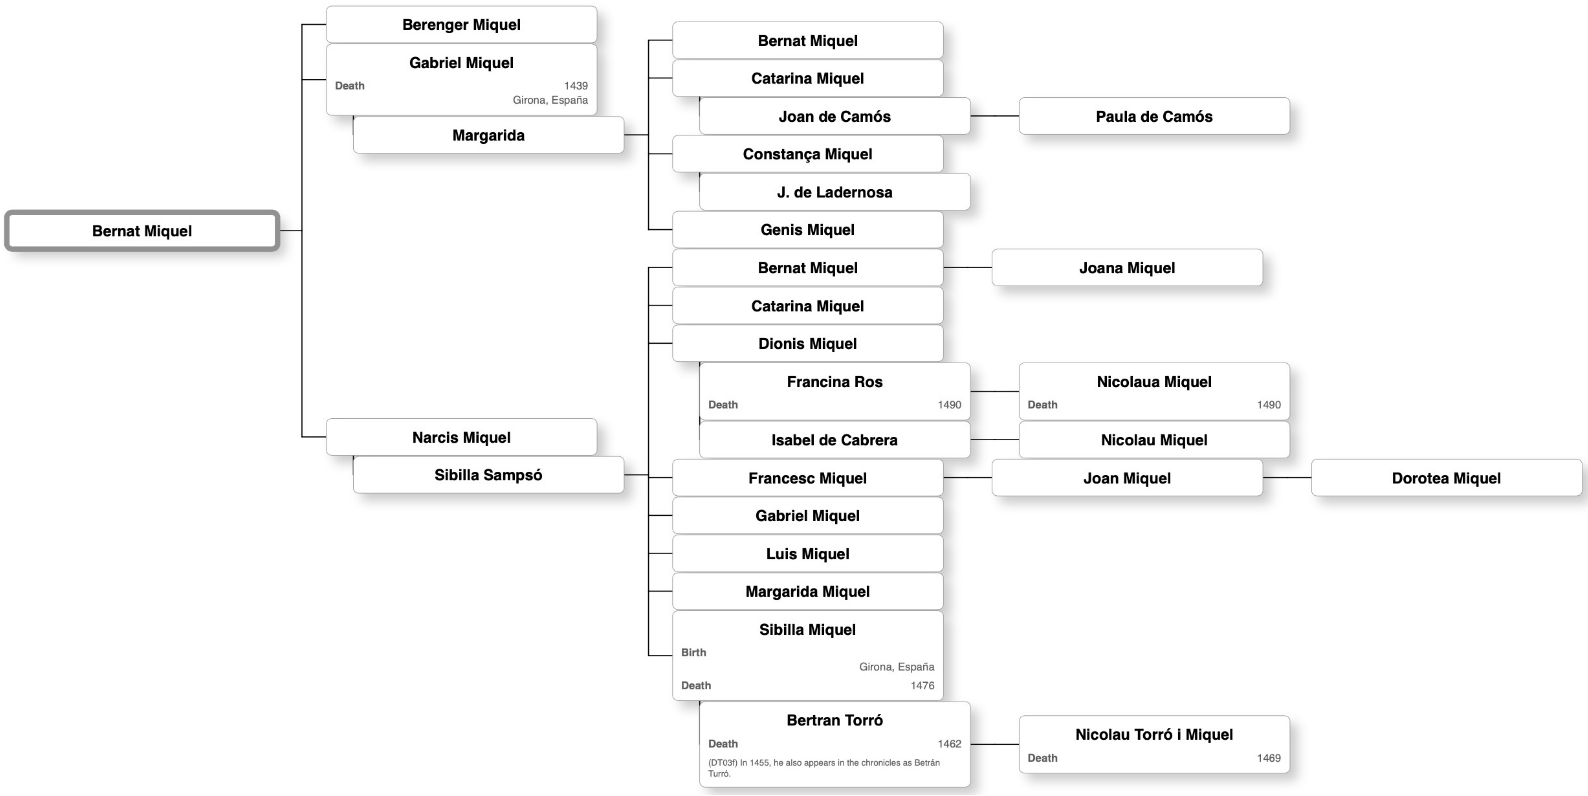
To understand this trust, it is important to look closely at King Ferdinand I of Aragon,[43] born on November 27, 1380 in Medina

---

[41] Archivo Histórico de Protocolos de Barcelona, Francesc Matella, leg. 6, Primer libro de testamentos 1441-1468, 17 de julio de 1454.

[42] M. de la Cinta Mañé, "Algunos aspectos de la lugartenencia del infante don Juan en Sicilia (1415-14-16)," tesis para obtener el grado de Licenciatura, Barcelona, 1975, pág. 30.

[43] King Ferdinand I of Aragon is also known as Ferdinand of Antequera. In Catalan, whe was called Ferran d'Antequera, in Castilian, Fernando de Antequera.



Berenger Miquel
Gabriel Miquel
Death 1439
Girona, España
Margarida
Bernat Miquel
Catarina Miquel
Joan de Camós
Paula de Camós
Constança Miquel
J. de Ladernosa
Genis Miquel
Bernat Miquel
Bernat Miquel
Joana Miquel
Catarina Miquel
Dionis Miquel
Francina Ros
Death 1490
Nicolaua Miquel
Death 1490
Narcis Miquel
Isabel de Cabrera
Nicolau Miquel
Sibilla Sampsó
Francesc Miquel
Joan Miquel
Dorotea Miquel
Gabriel Miquel
Luis Miquel
Margarida Miquel
Sibilla Miquel
Birth
Girona, España
Death 1476
Bertran Torró
Death 1462
(DT03f) In 1455, he also appears in the chronicles as Betrán Turró.
Nicolau Torró i Miquel
Death 1469

Figure 19.25: The descendants of Bernat Miquel, ancestor of Sibilla Miquel, the wife of Betrán Torró.

del Campo. King Ferdinand I of Aragon died on April 2, 1416 in Igualada. He was the grandson of King Peter IV of Aragon and was the son of King John I of Castile (1358-1390). He was the King of Aragon, the King of Sardinia, and the King of Sicily from 1412 to 1416. Additionally, he was also the King of Valencia, the King of Mallorca, the Count of Barcelona, the Count of Besalú, the Count of Pallars Jussà, the Count of Roussillon, the Count of Cerdagne, and, importantly, the Count of Empúries from 1412 to 1416, as well as the Count of Urgell and the Viscount of Age from 1413 to 1416.

His mother was the Infanta Éléonore of Aragon (1358-1382), daughter of King Peter IV of Aragon and sister of the following two kings of Aragon: John I and Martin I.

King Ferdinand I of Aragon lost his mother when he was two and his father when he was ten. In 1390, his older brother Henry (1379-1406) took over from John I of Castile under the name Henry III.

On the death of Henry III in 1406, he assumed the regency of the kingdom of Castile until 1410 in the name of his nephew John II. In 1410, the death of his uncle Martin I of Aragon triggered a succession crisis[44] in the States of the crown of Aragon. In that crisis, some supported James II, Count of Urgell, the closest descendant of the King in the male line, while others supported the French Louis III of Anjou, the grandson through his mother of King John I of Aragon. Others supported Ferdinand. A conference was held from March 1412 in Aragon, in Caspe, where the influence of Pope Benedict XIII of Avignon led the participants to choose Ferdinand.[45] Ferdinand, therefore, became the King of Aragon, the first representative in Aragon of the House of Trastamare.[46]

So, Ferdinand I of Aragon was the grandson of King Peter IV of Aragon, but also the grandson of Henry II of Castile through his father, King John I of Castile. Henry II of Castile is better known as Enrique de Trastamare, the son of Alphonso XI and Leonor de Guzman and the half-brother of Peter I of Castile, Peter the Cruel, whom he opposed during the first civil war of Castile from 1351 until 1369.

Bertrand Du Guesclin fought on the side of Enrique de Trastamare. In other words, Guerau Torró was the trustee of King Ferdinand I of Aragon, grandson of Enrique de Trastamare. The clue in this story is that Guerau Torró, or Grau de Torró, nephew of our ancestor Beltrán Torró, was the grandson of Bertrand Du Guesclin.

Once Guerau Torró, grandson of Bertrand Du Guesclin and nephew of our ancestor Beltrán Torró, had settled in Barcelona, he was followed by his brother, the money changer Nicolau, probably because of his business, and he was already called a Barcelona citizen at the beginning of the 15th century. From the money changer's marriage to a woman named d'Estapera, Galceran was born, sponsored by Antonia, wife of the Barcelonese merchant Pere Morer and a relative of the Torrós. Doña d'Estapera was the daughter of Antoni d'Estapera, a notary.[47] Thanks to his paternal fortune, Galceran could study law at the Lérida Study and expand his knowledge at the Universities of Toulouse and Montpellier until he obtained the title of Doctor of Laws. In Toulouse, he left some debt and later worked with the Doctor of Laws, Joan Agulló, who always owed him part of his salary. To prepare for his studies and then to carry out his work in Barcelona, he needed to have books, and in fact, we know part of his jurist's library, which was pawned.[48]

Carmen Batlle i Gallart focuses much of her article on Bertrán Torró (dead in 1462 and married to Sibillia Miquel), half-brother of Galceran (Doctor of Laws, dead in 1454) and married to Sibilla Miquel (dead in 1476). She writes that Bertrán, son of the money changer and his second wife, Francesca, did not receive such careful cultural training but only the standard education of honorary citizens, the class to which the family belonged. It is explainable, considering he was the second born and destined for business. The two brothers appear very close. Once their father died (before 1431), they continued to share their father's house in El Borne, equipped with a bridge. Galceran did not arrange his burial in the Torró chapel in Santa María del Mar. Carmen Batlle i Gallart believes that this is because the chapel would only later become the property of the Torró. Galceran indicated in his will that he be buried in the church of Saint Catherine of the Convent of the Preachers.

Bertrán, husband of Sibillia and possessor of the solid family fortune, seems to have first dedicated himself to commercial businesses and then concentrated his activity in municipal politics until achieving a certain prestige in the City House during the government of the 'buscaris.'

---

[44] The War of Succession of Aragon, 1410-1412

[45] Jacques d'Urgell rejected this decision, but the rebellion he launched was quickly put down.

[46] The House of Trastamare was the House of the Kings of Castile since 1369.

[47] BITECA bioid 2924, Antoni D'Estapera, notari, Floruit 1409, Lloc vinculat Barcelona; manid 1050 MS: Barcelona: Arxiu de Protocols, 7 - Constantia Julia, escrit 1409-12-02 a quo.

[48] Two 'Bartol' or comments by this jurist on the first part of the 'Digesta nova' and the second part of the 'Inforsada,' a Joan Fabra on the 'Instituta,' a Radulf, several books of the 'Codi' and others that ended up in the hands of their creditors as a guarantee for the payment of census and life pensions or the purchase of them.

His situation in establishing the merchants of the Council of Hundred lasted more than twenty years from 1433. Carmen Batlle i Gallart found him in said estate in 1433, 1435, 1436, 1437, 1438, 1446, 1448, 1449, 1450, 1451 and 1452.[49] As a buscari he developed great activity. He occupied a prominent place in the Barcelona government, becoming councilor in 1455, the first year merchants and artisans arrived at the conselleria. Certainly, his prestige within the popular group led to his tragic end at the hands of his enemies. Bertran had been a member of the Cortes, a position for which he was elected on October 9, 1454. Bertrán, for his ability and commitment, was re-elected on May 12 of the following year, while the majority of his colleagues were dismissed.[50]

His dedication to the work of trustee led him to be appointed ambassador of the Corts to King Juan II, who was going to Gerona at the end of August 1456.[51]

In his mission, Bertrán ran into the members of the Biga, who, already in October 1457, wanted his death, as the notary of the Provincial Council expressed. On October 16 of that year, Bertrán left Barcelona on the 'somatent, towards Caldes to recover Isabel, the widow of citizen Joan Romeu, kidnapped by Pere de Castellbell.

When arriving in Caldes, Bertrán Torró, one of the captains, asked for a bowl of broth because he was faint. Chronicler Jaume Safont tells us that this detail earned him ridicule from his companions. The nickname remained with him until his death, "que més li haguera valgut que hagués bagut plom fus", he adds, moved by his hatred towards the searchers[52] This chronicler hated Bertrán for political reasons despite both being more or less related. Indeed, Jaume Safont was the half-brother of Francesc Torró, royal secretary.

During this long period of the Cortes, a certain contact would occur between Bertrán and Juan, then King of Navarre and then of Aragon, to the point that the Barcelona trustee lent the monarch 500 florins. The debt was left pending due to the expulsion of the King and the violent death of Bertrán Torró, so Juan II included it in his will so that it could be paid by his son Fernando.[53]

A candle in an iron candelabra illuminated the macabre scene until the moment of the funeral, which occurred at night.

Bertrán Torró's death is recorded in the death book of Santa María del Mar of Barcelona, his parish, because he owned a large house with a chapel in El Borne, a house that faced Calle de las Moscas and had a bridge. Among other assets, it was inherited by his widow, Sibilla Miquel, who had many conflicts with Nicolau Torró, a money changer, perhaps Bertrán's natural son or son from a first marriage. The fight was motivated by the possession of the important sum of 3217 pounds of censuses on the kingdoms of Aragon and Mallorca, and the appointment of arbitrators resolved it: Joan Planes, doctor of decrees and canon of the Seu d'Urgell, Arnau Dezmas, doctor of laws from Barcelona and Joan Narcís Saplana. These jurists handed down the sentence before the notary Joan Brujó on June 6, 1496, with their decision favorable to the heirs of Nicolau, who had already died on this date. His relative Francesc Torró, the king's secretary, inherited a part and used the 400 pounds received to provide for his daughters Francina and Eulalia.

Sibilla, the wife of Betrán Torró, belonged to an important family from Gerona, the Miquel family. Her place in her ancestry tree is shown in Figure 19.25 on page 191. Her father was Narcís Miquel, an honorary citizen with a gentleman brother; her mother, Sibilla Sampsó, belonged to another well-known family from the same city. Five sons and five daughters were born from this marriage, most of whom entered religion: Caterina in Sant Pere de les Puelles in Barcelona, Margarida in Sant Feliu in Gerona, Isabel in Sant Salvador in Perpignan and Aldonga in Belloc de Peralada, Gabriel was abbot of Gerri and Lluís archdeacon of Conflent and canon of Elna, when on January 3, 1456 the Barcelona councilors, including his brother-in-law Torró, recommended him to the Pope.

Of Sibilla's brothers, the one who Carmen Batlle i Gallart was mostly interested in is Díonís Miquel, for having been the heir to the fortune of his brother-in-law Bertran Torró, along with receiving the surname Torró, which could, however, not be perpetuated on this side either. Indeed, he received the inheritance upon the death of his sister on April 16, 1476. Dionís, like his brothers, entered religion and was a hospital canon in Pamplona, but he abandoned his ecclesiastical career to fulfill his sister's will. So, he adopted the surname Torró, and he married Francina Ros, signing the marriage chapters on October 15, 1479, before the family notary, Rafael Riudor.

Francina Ros belonged to a family of honorary citizens of Barcelona, the daughter of Joan Ros, a doctor of law, and Margarida. It seems like a good match for Dionís Torró alias Miquel, who was a gentleman and used his brother-in-law's fortune based mainly on public censuses, like those mentioned above, and private ones like the one paid by the notary Joan Ubach and his family.

From this marriage, a daughter was born, Nicolaua, who died a few months later, barely surviving her mother, who died on April 27, 1490. [54] Dionís went to Castile, where he was in 1494, perhaps to serve King Ferdinand. He then remarried Isabel de Cabrera, with whom he had no children. Dionís lived in Barcelona, where he participated in the municipal government, being councilor 'en cap' in 1507. He was also appointed consul of the Catalans in Malta on September 18, 1510.[55] Perhaps he did not take possession of the position because he died then. His wife survived him and was his heir. So, on November 5, 1511, he made an inventory of his property before the notary Guerau Joan Coromina, who listed the house of Bertrán Torró in Borne.

The Torrós had their own grave in the chapel of Saint Ivo and Saint Eulalia in the church of Santa María del Mar, and their shields appeared there. Santa María del Mar is shown in Figure 19.24 on page 190. The Torrós included a tower between two spearheads on a field of gold. The Miquels applied only two fleurs-de-lis. The Roses used a rose.

In this chapel, badly destroyed in 1936, one can still see the shields of the Miquel, Torró, and Ros on the cartouches and that of the Miquel on the holy water font. The recumbent statues of Sibilla Miquel and Francina Ros were also preserved on the covers of their respective coffins, which have disappeared.[56]

19.15.7 Historians on Du Guesclin's Offspring

The life of Bertrand Du Guesclin is very well documented because of his importance to the history of France. Although many of these works are written from a rather French nationalistic viewpoint, from these sources, we must conclude that Du Guesclin has been officially married twice in France and had no legal descendants from any of these marriages. However, the same sources also mention that he had a relationship with a lady at Soria in Castile during his stay in Spain between 1365 and 1370 and that there were descendants. At the same time, the reader is urged to read Chapter 19.15.2 and Chapter 19.15.3.

---

[49] Historical Archive of the City of Barcelona, Deliberations books of those years.

[50] Manual de Novells Ardits vulgarment appellat Dietari del antich Consell Barceloní, II, Barcelona, 1893, págs, 189 y 207. Sobre dichas Cortes véase S. SOBREQUÉS, Los orígenes de la revolución catalana del siglo XV, Cortes de Barcelona de 14154-1458, «Estudios de Historia Moderna», II (1952), 1-96. See also C. BATLLE, La crisis, págs. 331-349.

[51] Cortes de los antiguos reinos de Aragón y Valencia y Principado de Cataluña, XXIII, págs, 117-118.

[52] Jaume Safont, Díetari de las zurbasíons del tems del rey Don Joan... Biblioteca de Catalunya, ms. 978, fol. 55 v.

[53] The claim was presented to Ferdinand the Catholic in the Cortes held against the Catalans as a grievance, and finally the king ordered the payment of the amount owed in five monthly installments (ACA reg, 3,572, íol. 177 v-178 , Alcalá de Henares, February 24, 1498).

[54] Francina made a will before the notary Miquel Carbonell on April 22, 1490. (José M.a DE ALÓS Y DE DOU, The heraldry in the basilica of Santa María del Mar, «Bulletin of the Society of Attraction of Foreigners» (Barcelona), 1924, pp. 37.38).

[55] Antonio Capmany y Monpalau, Memorias históricas sobre la marina, comercio y artes de la antigua ciudad de Barcelona, reed. Barcelona, II, 1961-1963, págs, 857 y 1.029.

[56] Juan Ainaud, José Gudiol y Federico Verrié, Catálogo monumental de España. La ciudad de Barcelona, Madrid, 1947, I, pág. 125 y II, figs, 738-739.

In the medieval era, it was common for nobility to father numerous illegitimate offspring. Unlike today, during that period, illegitimate children were not concealed within the family; they were acknowledged as the offspring of their noble fathers to the same extent as legitimate children. Distinctions between legitimate and illegitimate offspring primarily surfaced in inheritance matters following the father's demise. In the absence of explicit provisions within a will, illegitimate children were typically excluded from inheriting their father's assets or titles. Consequently, medieval marriages often served as strategic alliances aimed at facilitating the transfer of wealth and titles, prioritizing pragmatic considerations over romantic affection.

In the case of Bertrand Du Guesclin, this was the same. It is, however, remarkable that he has never had legal children. Therefore, he had no heir when he died.

A son, known from documents,[57] was named Michel Du Guesclin and died in 1383. There were also reportedly two children from his relationship with a doña at Soria in Castile in Spain.

Indeed, André Davy, in his book 'Frères d' Armes,' writes that Bertrand Du Guesclin joined Torró[58], his dame of Soria, in December 1370. He writes,

'Il voyait tendrement s' écouler les jours auprès de sa Dame De Soria, suivante de la reine Dona Léonor.'

From the relationship of Du Guesclin and his Dame de Soria were two children born. The alliance with his Dame de Soria lasted from 1366 until at least 1370. Other authors write that this Dame de Soria was dame de la cour de la reine Jeanne de Castille. In other words, they are all guessing. What is most likely, as stated above, is that Dame de Soria "dame de la cour de la princesse Jeanne de Aragon", or in other words, a Lady of Honor in the court of Juana de Aragón[59] the daughter of King Pedro IV of Aragon who was supported by Bertrand Du Guesclin and who also acknowledged the military achievements of the Desclergues in Montblanc as shown in Figure 21.1 on page 235, Figure 21.2 on page 237, Figure 21.3 on page 238, and Figure 21.4 on page 239.

In the period 1370-1371, the 'Corts Generals' of the Crown of Aragon were held in Tarragona, Tortosa and Montblanc, which is described in Jordi Rius i Jové[60]

Historians also allude to the existence of heraldic shields employed by the descendants of Du Guesclin. However, it is important to underscore that these assertions lack empirical substantiation and are primarily predicated upon presumptions regarding the purported lineage of Du Guesclin within noble Castilian families, including the de Torres and de Guzman clans.

A close look at the tomb of Du Guesclin in Paris reveals an interesting detail. His sword's handle, seen in Figure 19.10, shows two young persons, in the age range of 9-14 years, mourning on a weapon shield that shows no heraldic symbols. As Du Guesclin died in 1380, his Spanish children, with his Doña de Soria, must have been 9-14 years old at that time. The lack of heraldic symbols on the shield may symbolize that they were not the heraldic heirs in France of Du Guesclin because they did not stem from a legally married couple.

Besides the literature facts shown below, the other tangent pieces of evidence are DNA with fractions of old Breton families found in our DNA, and a paternal line separated from ours around 1000 years ago (based on the Y-DNA Haplogroups) exists near the ancestral villages of Bertrand Du Guesclin. Gathering these facts forms compelling evidence, although critics would say that the old Breton autosomal DNA may also appear through some noble lineages passing through the Torró family.

Next, we will summarise what is known about each child and present the testimonies in the literature.

In Chapter 19.26.3, we describe the evidence of Bertrand Du Guesclin visiting Montblanc in 1365 and 1370. Later, Montblanc was under the influence of de Trastámara, but the connections in that area must be searched in the Girona area instead.

19.15.7.1 On Michel Du Guesclin (DG12)

He was a son of Du Guesclin in France and is mentioned in the Chamber of Accounts register of 1380, f ° 17a, for a receipt of twenty-nine 'Livres tournois' which are granted to him in consideration of his services. He was a bastard of Bertrand Du Guesclin and Jeanne de Laval. He served very briefly in Flanders and established himself in Normandy.

19.15.7.2 On Beltran Torró (DT01), our ancestor

He was Du Guesclin's son in Spain. He received his father's first name, and if historians are right about him, he must have followed in his father's military footsteps despite their confusion with the name Beltran de Torres. According to their accounts, in that case, he was a Commander of Mudela in the Knight's Order of Calatrava.

The historians' accounts, despite the name confusion and that fact that the boys of Bertrand Du Guesclin were Aragonese and not Castilian, is somewhat reasonable, because the Order of Calatrava played a significant role in the Crown of Aragon during the era of the Reconquista. Their presence in this region can be traced back to 1179 when Alfonso II, known as 'the Chaste,' granted them the territory of Alcañiz and its surrounding areas. In this newly acquired domain, the order established various 'encomiendas' and 'subencomiendas,' with the Alcañiz Commission emerging as the most prominent.

The Calatravas of Alcañiz significantly contributed to the ongoing Reconquista efforts. They gradually expanded their influence by acquiring strategic locations such as Monroyo in 1209, Alcorisa in 1263, Calaceite in 1271, and Calanda in 1360. Their territorial holdings extended even further to encompass Bejís in 1235, and they briefly controlled Villena in the Kingdom of Valencia.

However, the Encomienda of Alcañiz faced a steady decline beginning in 1533, marked by the death of Juan de Lanuza, the commander of the order and Viceroy of Aragon. Subsequent papal bulls resulted in the transfer of authority over the encomienda to the monarchs Carlos I and Felipe II.

In the 18th century, the Alcañiz encomienda experienced fragmentation as Valdealgorfa, La Codoñera, and Torrocilla de Alcañiz gained independent jurisdiction, marking a significant transformation in the organization and governance of the region.

19.15.7.3 On Guérech Torró (DT01b)

He was Du Guesclin's son in Spain. There is no direct evidence in the literature as to what the first name of this descendant was. It may be Guérech, a Breton name appearing in Catalonia as Guerau, Gerau, or Grau, another word for Gerardo. In Jean Ogée[61], it is found that the name was considered a Breton version of Girard, which in Spanish transforms either to Gerardo or to Grau.[62] Some sources state that the Lords of de Fuentes (from the land of Sevilla), such as Pedro de Fuentes, Gómez de Fuentes, and Alvaro de Guzmán, descend from Bertrand Du Guesclin. Other sources say this is not true and suggest that de Fuentes stem from a mercenary who accompanied Bertrand Du Guesclin (e.g., a cousin or someone else) during his stay in Spain. Alonso López de Haro even explains the origins of the Lords of de Fuentes and does not consider Bertrand Du Guesclin. As stated above, we figured out that all such claims are fiction and that Du Guesclin had no offspring with a Torres lady from Soria, but rather with a Torró lady from Gerona.

---

[57] le registre de la Chambre des Comptes en 1380

[58] André Davy, like all historians, wrote Torres and not Torró.

[59] Juana de Aragón was born in Barcelona on November 7, 1344, and she died in Castellón de Ampurias, in 1385. Castellón de Ampurias is also known as Castelló d'Empúries. Juana de Aragón was princess of Aragon, because she was the daughter of King Pedro IV of Aragon and his wife María de Navarra. She was the countess of Ampurias by her marriage (June 19 of 1373) with Juan I of Ampurias (1338-1398).

[60] Jordi Rius i Jové, 'Capítols de Cort de Barcelona i Fraga, 1379-1384' , Institut d' Estudis del Baix Cinca-I.E.A., IEBC.

[61] Jean Ogée, 'Dictionnaire Historique et Géographique de la Province de la Bretagne'

The reader will find that we have DNA connections with Guzmán and Fuentes. Still, since it concerns autosomal DNA, it's impossible to reconstruct which ancestry line the links appear along.

Other sources state that Grau de Torres and Juan Gutiérrez de Torres, come from this house founded in Soria. They settled in Arévalo and Cuéllar, where they perpetuated the family name, consistent with other information. This is, however, also fiction.

19.15.7.4 An Undated Reference

VI. Doña Francisca de Guzman, hija de doña María Manuel y de don Alvar Perez de Guzman.

Doña Francisca de Guzman, hija de doña María Manuel y de don Alvar Perez de Guzman, casó con Gomez de Fuentes, señor de la villa de Fuentes, hijo de Pedro de Fuentes y de doña María de Guzman de la casa de Teba, y nieto de Gomez de Fuentes y de doña Blanca de Sandoval, hija de don Pedro de Sandoval, assistente de Sevilla y visnieto de Pedro de Fuentes y de doña Beatriz Malavar, todos señores de Fuentes, del linage de don Bertran de Claquin, gran condestable de Francia, duque de Molina y señor de Soria, de quien en la historia del rey don Pedro de Castilla se haze tan particular memoria. Tuvieron hijos á—Don Alvaro de Guzman, señor de Fuentes. Y ella casó segunda vez con don Bernardino de Zúniga, hermano del duque de Bejar, de cuyo matrimonio no quedó succesion.

Figure 19.26: Narrative on Doña Francisca de Guzmán, daughter of Doña María Manuel and Don Alvar Pérez de Guzmán. (Courtesy of R. Grouazel-Krauss)

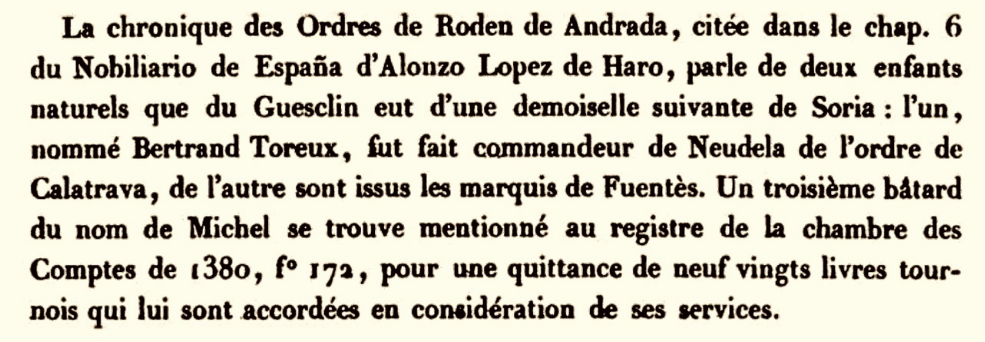
The narrative in Figure 19.26 says that Doña Francisca de Guzmán, daughter of Doña María Manuel and Don Alvar Pérez de Guzmán, married Gómez de Fuentes, lord of the town of Fuentes, son of Pedro de Fuentes and Doña María de Guzmán of the house of Teba, and grandson of Gómez de Fuentes and doña Blanca de Sandoval, daughter of don Pedro de Sandoval, assistant to Seville and great-grandson of Pedro de Fuentes and doña Beatriz Malabar, all gentlemen are of Fuentes, of the lineage of don Bertrand de Claquin, great constable of France, Duke of Molina and Lord of Soria, of whom in the history of King Don Pedro de Castilla such a particular memory is made. Doña Francisca de Guzmán had children by Don Álvaro de Guzmán, Señor de Fuentes; and she married a second time to don Bernardino de Zúñiga, brother of the Duke of Bejar, from whose marriage there was no succession.

19.15.7.5 A Reference by Cuvelier, 14th Century



La chronique des Ordres de Roden de Andrada, citée dans le chap. 6 du Nobiliario de España d'Alonzo Lopez de Haro, parle de deux enfants naturels que du Guesclin eut d'une demoiselle suivante de Soria : l'un, nommé Bertrand Toreux, fut fait commandeur de Neudela de l'ordre de Calatrava, de l'autre sont issus les marquis de Fuentès. Un troisième bâtard du nom de Michel se trouve mentionné au registre de la chambre des Comptes de 1380, f° 172, pour une quittance de neuf vingts livres tournois qui lui sont accordées en considération de ses services.

Figure 19.27: Narrative by Cuvelier. (Courtesy of R. Grouazel-Krauss)

We investigated a transcript, shown in Figure 19.27 found in Ernest Charrière (éd.), Chronique de Bertrand du Guesclin, par Cuvelier, trouvère du XIVe siècle, Paris, Firmin-Didot, 1839 (2 tomes).

The narrative tells that the chronicle of the Orders of Roden de Andrada, quoted in chap. 6 of Alonzo Lopez de Haro's Nobiliario de España, speaks of two natural children that du Guesclin had from a young Lady from Soria:

A) one, named 'Bertrand Toreux' (Bertrand Torró (DT01)), who was made Commander of Neudela of the Order of Calatrava,

B) from the other (DT01b) stem the Marquis de Fuentès.

C) A third bastard named Michel (DG12) is mentioned in the Chamber of Accounts register of 1380, f ° 17a, for a receipt of nine twenty 'Livres Tournois' granted to him in consideration of his services.

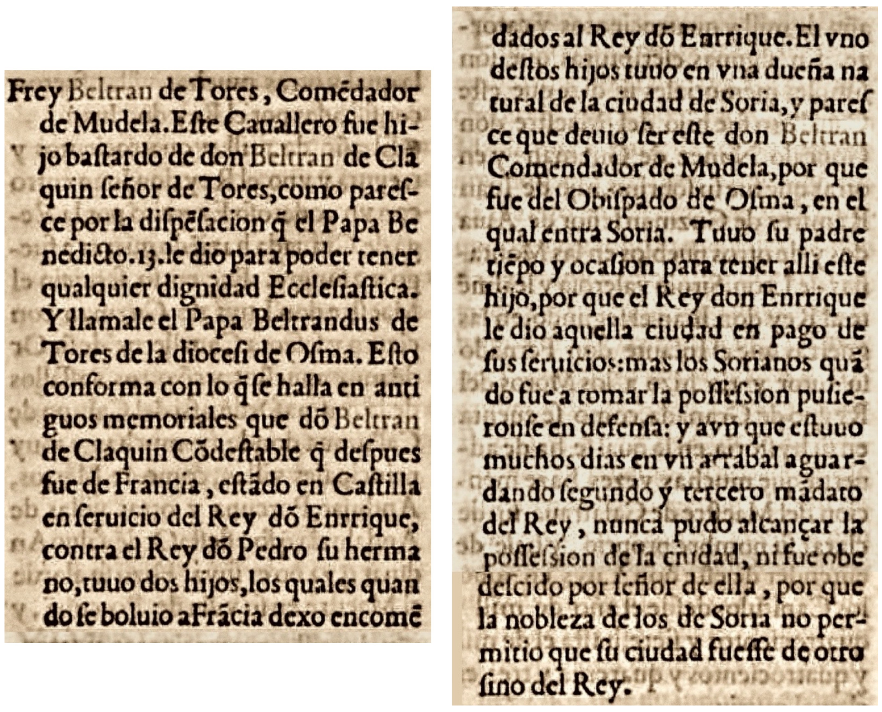
The challenge at hand revolves around Cuvelier's limited access to information regarding the subsequent generations following Du Guesclin's children, whence facts were clearly added here in later times. Consequently, these later historical accounts contain supplementary data characterized by a blend of propaganda, inaccurate details, and unsubstantiated rumors interwoven with factual elements, mirroring a pattern consistent with other historical references of its kind.

19.15.7.6 A rRference by Francisco de Rades y Andrada, 1572

As shown in Figure 19.28, we examined Francisco de Rades y Andrada, 'Chronica de las tres ordenes y cauallerias de Sanctiago, Calatraua y Alcantara: en la qual se trata de su origen y successo, y notables hechos en armas de los maestres y caualleros de ellas: .. Compuesta por el licenciado Frey Francisco de Rades y Andrada' , printed in 1572 by Juan de Ayala.

---

[62] Perhaps this name made historians believe that Don García de Torres, Bishop of Burgos, was a Descendant of Grau, son of Du Guesclin and buried in his Cathedral in Burgos after his death.



Frey Beltran de Tores, Comẽdador de Mudela. Eſte Cauallero fue hijo baſtardo de don Beltran de Claquin ſeñor de Tores, como pareſce por la diſpẽſacion q̃ el Papa Benedicto. 13. le dio para poder tener qualquier dignidad Eccleſiaſtica. Y llamale el Papa Beltrandus de Tores de la dioceſi de Oſma. Eſto conforma con lo q̃ ſe halla en antiguos memoriales que dõ Beltran de Claquin Cõdeſtable q̃ deſpues fue de Francia, eſtãdo en Caſtilla en ſeruicio del Rey dõ Enrrique, contra el Rey dõ Pedro ſu hermano, tuuo dos hijos, los quales quando ſe boluio a Frãcia dexo encomẽdados al Rey dõ Enrrique. El vno deſtos hijos tuuo en vna dueña natural de la ciudad de Soria, y pareſce que deuio ſer eſte don Beltran Comendador de Mudela, por que fue del Obiſpado de Oſma, en el qual entra Soria. Tuuo ſu padre tiẽpo y ocaſion para tener alli eſte hijo, por que el Rey don Enrrique le dio aquella ciudad en pago de ſus ſeruicios: mas los Sorianos quãdo fue a tomar la poſſeſſion puſieronſe en defenſa: y avn que eſtuuo muchos dias en vn arrabal aguardando ſegundo y tercero mãdato del Rey, nunca pudo alcançar la poſſeſſion de la ciudad, ni fue obedeſcido por ſeñor de ella, por que la nobleza de los de Soria no permitio que ſu ciudad fueſſe de otro ſino del Rey.

Figure 19.28: Narrative by Francisco de Rades y Andrada, 1572. (Courtesy of R. Grouazel-Krauss)

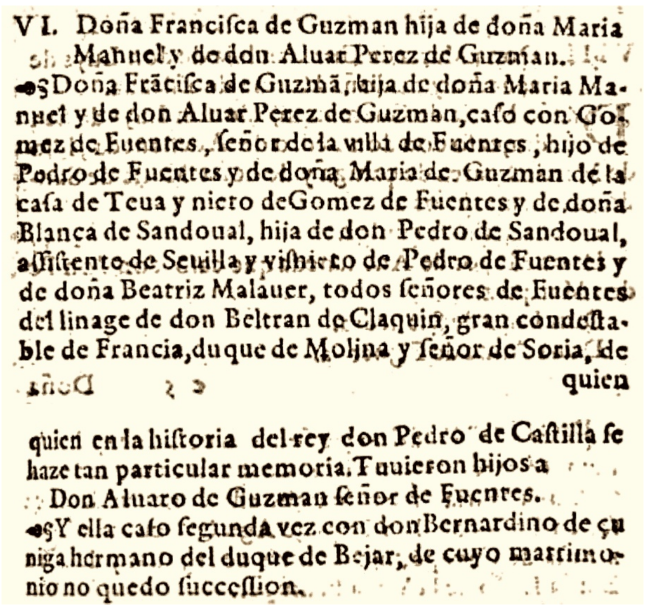
The narrative reports that 'Frey' (i.e. a brother of a brotherhood) Beltran Torró (DT01) was Commander of Múdela. This Knight was the bastard son of Don Beltrán de Claquin, Lord of Torres (i.e. Tours), as is seen from the dispensation that Pope Benedict 13 gave to have any Ecclesiastical dignity. The pope called him 'Beltrandus de Torres of the Diocese of Osma' (where Soria is located). Indeed, he must have been born there while his mother, a Torró from Gerona, resided there. The use of the word 'Torres' by an Italian or Latin writing pope would also not disagree with the name Torró.

Note that although Bertrand Torró was born in Soria (probably in Deza), he never actually possessed Soria. Indeed, his father (Beltran de Claquin) had had the time and the opportunity to have sons at Soria, but he could never take possession because the local nobility opposed him strongly. King Don Enrique had given the ownership of the town to Claquin, but the Sorianos protested and defended against him taking the city. And although he spent many days in a suburb waiting for the King's second and third mandate, he could never take control of the city, nor could he exercise his claim as Lord of the town because the nobility there did not allow it. This is a very strong indication that his woman could not have been a Torres from Soria, but, as we state, was a Torró from Gerona.

19.15.7.7 A Reference by Juan Manuel, 1575



VI. Doña Franciſca de Guzman hija de doña Maria Manuel y de don Aluar Perez de Guzman.

¶ Doña Frãciſca de Guzmã, hija de doña Maria Manuel y de don Aluar Perez de Guzman, caſo con Gomez de Fuentes, ſeñor de la villa de Fuentes, hijo de Pedro de Fuentes y de doña Maria de Guzman de la caſa de Teua y nieto de Gomez de Fuentes y de doña Blança de Sandoual, hija de don Pedro de Sandoual, aſſiſtente de Seuilla y viſnieto de Pedro de Fuentes y de doña Beatriz Malauer, todos ſeñores de Fuentes del linage de don Beltran de Claquin, gran condeſtable de Francia, duque de Molina y ſeñor de Soria, de

quien

quien en la hiſtoria del rey don Pedro de Caſtilla ſe haze tan particular memoria. Tuuieron hijos a Don Aluaro de Guzman ſeñor de Fuentes.

¶ Y ella caſo ſegunda vez con don Bernardino de çuniga hermano del duque de Bejar, de cuyo matrimonio no quedo ſucceſſion.

Figure 19.29: Narrative by Juan Manuel, 1575 (Courtesy of R. Grouazel-Krauss). This text is essentially the same as the narrative by Juan Manuel, Infante de Castilla, 14th century, shown in Figure 19.26.

We researched Juan Manuel, 'El Conde Lucanor' , 1575, shown in Figure 19.29. The narrative, in English, says that Doña Francisca de Guzmán daughter of doña María Manuel and don Alvar Pérez de Guzmán, was married to Gómez de Fuentes, the Lord of the town of Fuentes, son of Pedro de Fuentes and doña Maria de Guzmán of the house of Teva and grandson of Gómez de Fuentes and Doña Blanca de Sandoval, daughter of Don Pedro de Sandoval, assistant to Seville and great-grandson of Pedro de Fuentes and Doña Beatriz Malabar. All mentioned gentlemen of Fuentes are from the lineage of Don Beltrán de Claquin, Grand Constable of France, Duke de Molina and lord of Soria of whom in the history of the king don Pedro de Castilla such a special memory is made. She had children with Don Álvaro de Guzmán, the Lord of Fuentes. She married a second time with Don Bernardino de Zúñiga, brother of the Duke of Bejar, of whose marriage there was no offspring.

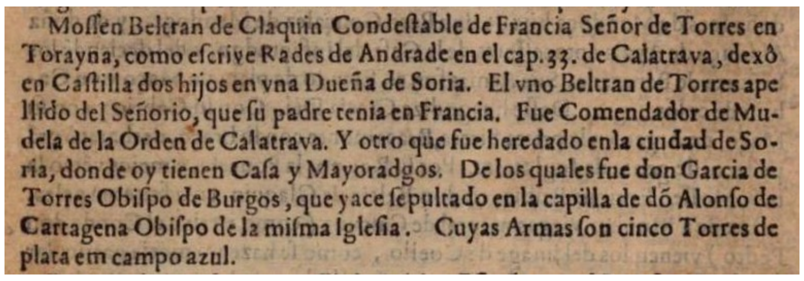
Note that we have DNA in common with persons carrying the names Sandoval, Guzmán, Fuentes, Zúñiga, as shown earlier in Chapter 73, but there is no possibility to show through which bloodlines we inherited this DNA. As stated above, the claims made in this reference came ex-post-facto, 2 centuries after Du Guesclin passed away and are the imagination of the chronicler.

19.15.7.8 A Reference by Gonzalo Argote de Molina, 1588

We have taken a close look at Gonzalo Argote de Molina, 'Nobleza de la Andalucia. Historia de las hazañas y de los caballeros del reinado de Jaén' , printed in Sevilla by Fernando Diaz, 1588 and shown in Figure 19.30.

The narrative says that Mosén Beltrán de Claquin, Constable of France, Señor de Torres in Torayna, as Rades de Andrade writes in chap. 33. Calatrava, left two children in Castile with Doña de Soria. One child was Beltran Torró (DT01), who had the Lordship's surname, which his father had in France. He was Commander of Múdela of the Order of Calatrava. The other child (DT01b) was the heir of the Lordship of the city of Soria, where he inherited titles and possessions. From the latter child (DT01b) stem (among others) Don García de Torres, Bishop of Burgos, who lies buried in the chapel of Don Alonso de Cartagena and who was bishop of the same Church. His weapons were five silver towers on a blue field.

Again, this chronicler confuses 'de Tours' with 'Torró' and imagines it must be 'de Torres.'



Moſſen Beltran de Claquin Condeſtable de Francia Señor de Torres en Torayna, como eſcrive Rades de Andrade en el cap. 33. de Calatrava, dexô en Caſtilla dos hijos en vna Dueña de Soria. El vno Beltran de Torres apellido del Señorio, que ſu padre tenia en Francia. Fue Comendador de Mudela de la Orden de Calatrava. Y otro que fue heredado en la ciudad de Soria, donde oy tienen Caſa y Mayoradgos. De los quales fue don Garcia de Torres Obiſpo de Burgos, que yace ſepultado en la capilla de dõ Alonſo de Cartagena Obiſpo de la miſma Igleſia. Cuyas Armas ſon cinco Torres de plata em campo azul.

Figure 19.30: Narrative by Gonzalo Argote de Molina, 1588.

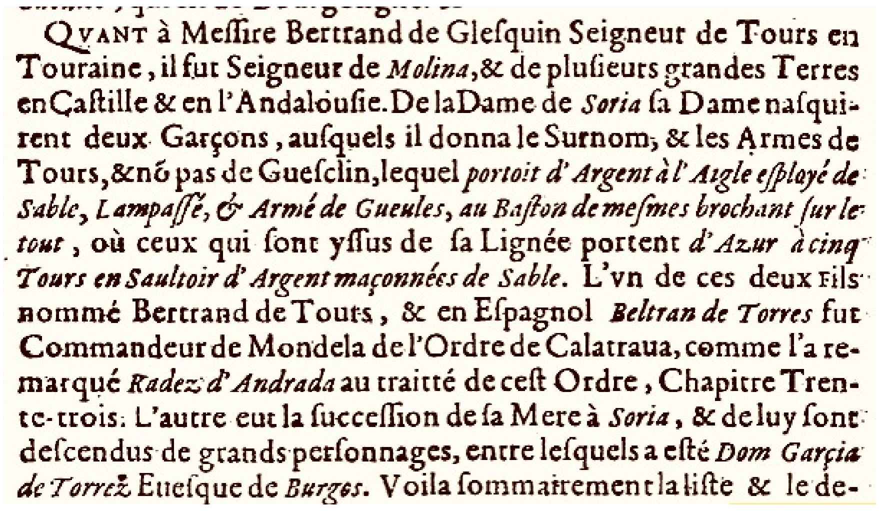
19.15.7.9 A Reference by Medro Porralis, 1591

We have found Medro Porralis, 'Coronica del Serenissimo Rey Don Pedro, hijo del Rey don Alonso de Castilla y con licencia de su Magestad impressa' , 1591.
This reference focuses on King Don Pedro and describes 'Mossen Beltran de Claquin' frequently, including the fact that he became the Lord of Soria, for instance, in chapter VIII on page 154. His offspring is, however, not mentioned in this reference.

19.15.7.10 A reference by Andre Fauyn, 1620



QVANT à Meſſire Bertrand de Gleſquin Seigneur de Tours en Touraine, il fut Seigneur de Molina, & de pluſieurs grandes Terres en Caſtille & en l'Andalouſie. De la Dame de Soria ſa Dame naſquirent deux Garçons, auſquels il donna le Surnom, & les Armes de Tours, & nõ pas de Gueſclin, lequel portoit d' Argent à l' Aigle eſployé de Sable, Lampaſſé, & Armé de Gueules, au Baſton de meſmes brochant ſur le tout, où ceux qui ſont yſſus de ſa Lignée portent d'Azur à cinq Tours en Saultoir d' Argent maçonnées de Sable. L'vn de ces deux Fils nommé Bertrand de Tours, & en Eſpagnol Beltran de Torres fut Commandeur de Mondela de l'Ordre de Calatraua, comme l'a remarqué Radez d' Andrada au traitté de ceſt Ordre, Chapitre Trente-trois. L'autre eut la ſucceſſion de ſa Mere à Soria, & de luy ſont deſcendus de grands perſonnages, entre leſquels a eſté Dom Garçia de Torrez Eueſque de Burges. Voila ſommairement la liſte & le de-

Figure 19.31: Narrative by Andre Fauyn, 1620 (Courtesy of R. Grouazel-Krauss)

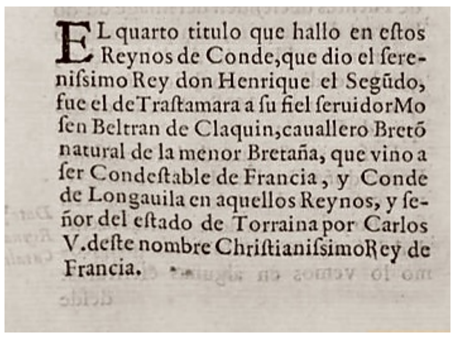
We evaluated Andre Fauyn, 'parisien, advocat, en la cour de Parlement' , 'Le theatre d' honneur et de chevalerie, ou L' histoire des ordres militaires des roys, & princes de la chrestiente, & leur genealogie: de l' institution des armes, & blasons , Volume 2' , 1620, shown in Figure 19.31.
The narrative says that Messire Bertrand de Glesquin, Lord of Tours in Touraine, was the Lord of Molina and several vast lands in Castile and Andalusia. From his Lady in Soria were two boys born, to whom he gave the name, and the arms of Tours, not of Guesclin. His sons wore either a shield of Argent à l' Aigle esplayé de Sable, Lampassé, and Armé de Gueules, in Baston of the same debris on the whole, or on Azure five Towers in Saultour d' Argent masonry of Sable. One of these two sons was named Bertrand de Tours (DT01), or Beltran de Torres in Spanish, and was Commander of Mudela of the Order of Calatrava, as Radez d' Andrada noted in that Order's treaty, Chapter Thirty-three. The other (DT01b) had his mother's succession in Soria, and from him descended great personages, among whom was Dom Garcia de Torrez (DT02e), the Bishop of Burgess.
Again, the assumption that they should be Torres because du Guesclin was Lord of Tours, is the imagination of the chronicler who copied from earlier works. The real name must have been Torró. The consequence on the assumed shields of the descendants is a simple deduction by the chronicler from his inaccurate statements.

19.15.7.11 A Reference by Alonso Lopez de Haro, 1622

We refer to Alonso López de Haro (criado de su Majestad, y Ministro en su real Consejo de las Ordenes), 'Nobiliario genealógico de los reyes y títulos de España. Dirigido a la Magestad del Rey Don Felipe Quarto nuestro señor.' , printed (con privilegio) in Madrid, by Luis Sánchez Impresor Real, in 1622. The extracts are shown in Figures 19.32, 19.33, and 19.32. Alonso Lópes de Haro describes how Mosén Beltran de Claquin received the title of Count of Trastámara. He was rewarded the honor by King Don Henrique II as a token for his support. It is found in the referred book and Chapter 3 of year 7 of King Don Pedro's chronicle and equally in Esteban de Garibay in book 14 of part 2 of his compendium chapter 38. The title of 'Count of Trastamare' did not last long because King Henrique II lost the conquered kingdoms temporarily. The Dynasty did not reinstall it in its contemporary form. One would later give it to another dynasty.
In 1371, Du Guesclin was bestowed with other titles as compensation. He became the Duke of Molina and Soria. The title of Count of Trastámara, Lemos and Sarria went to Don Pedro of Castile.
Du Guesclin, who was the natural owner of Soria, had two children: Beltran Torró (DT01), Comendador de Múdela of the Order of Calatrava; At the same time, the other (DT01b) was the natural heir of Soria, and his offspring gave rise to different lineages of descendants, including, as some say, the Marquises of de Fuentes from the land of Sevilla. Argote de Molina stated this in 'Conde Lucanor' . In particular, concerning the Fuentes line, Alonso López de Haro declares that this line may have originated from a mercenary who was with Du Guesclin (possibly a nephew or brother) and not Du Guesclin himself. Therefore, in the 1600s, there were two opinions concerning the House of 'de Fuentes' . The Dynasty of de Fuentes received the Duchy of de Soria through a dowry payment in the time of H.M. King Enrique III. This House would later carry the name of 'de Guzmán' . Alonso López de Haro further declares that everything indicates that Francisco Hernández was the first person to represent the House of de Fuentes at Soria, that he was Spanish, and not French. He achieved this title by marrying Leonor Pérez. The latter was from the Guzmáns of the House of Orgaz. The heraldic shield used by de Fuentes is that of the House of Orgaz, with five flowers and being bordered. The name came from Alsonso Fernandez de Fuentes, the first to take this surname from Fuentes' town's dominion. The latter was a Knight who served King Don Juan I and became the city owner, bought from the sons of Martin Fernandez de Guzmán, Lord of Almonte and a rich man from Castile. In other words, Alonso López de Haro makes several claims that the 'de Fuentes' family are not descendants of Du Guesclin.

Clearly this chronicler mixes rumors with facts and then adds logical deductions based on inaccurate claims. However, he was right in concluding that they were not descendants of Du Guesclin.



EL quarto titulo que hallo en eſtos Reynos de Conde, que dio el ſereniſsimo Rey don Henrique el Segũdo, fue el de Traſtamara a ſu fiel ſeruidor Moſen Beltran de Claquin, cauallero Bretõ natural de la menor Bretaña, que vino a ſer Condeſtable de Francia, y Conde de Longauila en aquellos Reynos, y ſeñor del eſtado de Torraina por Carlos V. deſte nombre Chriſtianiſsimo Rey de Francia.

Figure 19.32: Alonso López de Haro writes that Bertrand Du Guesclin received the title of Count of Trastámara.

De la acoſtumbrada largueza y mano liberal deſte ſereniſsimo Principe no quedò quexoſo Moſen Beltran de Claquĩn: porque, como auemos dicho; le hõrò con el Titulo Ducal de las ciudades de Molina y Soria en el año de 1371. y

Figure 19.33: Alonso López de Haro describes how Bertrand Du Guesclin after he had lost the title of Count of Trastámara, was rewarded with the titles of Duke de Molina and Duke de Soria.

cuya cauſa vino a ceſſar en el la dignidad Ducal, de quien eſcriue Rades de Andrada en el capitulo treinta y tres de la cronica de las ordenes, que tuuo en vna dueña natural de la ciudad de Soria dos hijos, que el vno dellos ſe llamô Beltran de Torres Comendador de Mudela de la orden de Calatraua: y del otro hermano dizen decienden los Marqueſes de Fuentes en tierra de Seuilla, ſegũ eſcriue Argote de Molina en el Conde Lucanor, diziendo, que los Marqueſes de Fuentes decienden del linage de dõ Beltran de Claquin, aunque el miſmo autor en la nobleza del Andaluzia dize, que decienden de vno de los Franceſes que vinieron con Moſen Beltran de Claquin de Francia.

Figure 19.34: Alonso López de Haro describes the two children of Du Guesclin and writes about the line of de Fuentes, which is disputably stemming from one of them showing arguments against, but also leaving sufficient doubt.

19.15.7.12 A Reference by Père Anselme de Sainte-Marie, continuée par Honoré du Fourny, 1726-1733

We have shed some light on Anselme de Sainte-Marie (1625-1694 ; augustin), 'Histoire généalogique et chronologique de la maison royale de France, des pairs, grands officiers de la Couronne, de la Maison du Roy et des anciens barons du royaume. Tome 6 / par le P. Anselme de Sainte-Marie, continuée par Honoré du Fourny' , book published by la Compagnie des libraires (Paris) in 1726-1733. The narrative, shown in Figure 19.35, says that Michel Du Guesclin (DG12), bastard of Bertrand Du Guesclin, served in Normandy with eight noblemen on October 18, 1379; the King gratified him on December 21, 1380, for his services during the wars. He also served briefly in Flanders under the leadership of admiral Vienne in 1383. He had some problems with Jeanne de Laval, the widow of his father.

19.15.7.13 A Reference by Michaud frères, 1814

We studied Michaud frères, 1814, 'Biographie universelle, ancienne et moderne, ou, Histoire, par ordre alphabétique, de la vie publique et privée de tous les hommes qui se sont fait remarquer par leurs écrits, leurs actions, leurs talents, leurs vertus ou leurs crimes: ouvrage entièrement neuf, Volume 12' . This article, shown in Figure 19.36, is written from a French perspective and confirms a son of Du Guesclin in France, with Jeanne de Laval, namely Michel Du Guesclin. It's also referring to famous works about Du Guesclin, and it exposes the ancient spelling of this family name, such as du Glaicquin.

19.15.7.14 A Reference by Christine de Pisan, 1824

We have reviewed Christine de Pisan, 'Collection complète des mémoires relatifs a l' histoire de France - Du Guesclin, tome 2 Anciens Mémoires sur Du Guesclin, 1er et 2me parties' , edited by Petitot de l' imprimerie de Rignoux, 1824. This article states that Du Guesclin left no children in his two marriages. Still, according to Rodez de Andrada's testimony, in his chronicle of orders, he had had in Spain two natural sons, of a young lady in the town of Soria. One of these sons, named Bertrand Toreux, was Commander of Neudela, Order of Calatrava; From the other, it is said, descend the Marquis de Fuentès. Du Guesclin had certainly a third natural son; because one finds in the registers of the chamber of accounts, in the year 1380, a receipt of 29 'Livres tournois' , paid by order of the King, to Michel, bastard son of the late Comte de Longueville, constable of France, 'for consideration of several good and pleasant services that said Michel (DG12) would have done for him in his wars, which he has been taken several times, and put in great ransom.'
The fact that still stands out in this reference is that Bertrand Torró, son of Bertrand Du Guesclin, was Commander of Neudela (or Mudela), even when de Pisan spells his name as was Toreux and not, like other chroniclers, de Torres.

19.15.7.15 A Reference of Alberto y Arturo Garcia Carraffa, 1952-1958

We have examined Alberto y Arturo Garcia Carraffa, 'El Solar Catalán Valenciano y Balear - con la colaboración de Armando de Fluvia y Escorsa' , San Sebastián, Librería Internacional, in particular 1952-1958, 87: 110-111 and 112-113. The reference is interesting for 'de Torres' lineages, but is unimportant to the descendants of Du Guesclin because they cannot have been 'de Torres.' Lucia Mosquera Novoa, shown further, like many others, also refers to Los Carraffa.

Fils naturel de Bertrand du Gueſclin Connêtable de France.

Michel bâtard du Gueſclin, ſervoit en Normandie avec 8. écuyers le 18. octobre 1379. & le roy lui fit une gratification le 21. decembre 1380. en conſequence des ſervices qu'il avoit faits aux guerres, où il avoit été pris pluſieurs fois & mis à grande rançon, il ſervoit en Flandres ſous l'amiral de Vienne en 1383. & eut quelques démêlés avec Jeanne de Laval veuve de ſon pere. D. Lobineau, hiſtoire de Bretagne, page 432.

C

Figure 19.35: Citation of D. Lobineau, histoire de Bretagne, page 432.

modèles des guerriers ; l'un et l'autre, par des services éclatants, ont mérité l'honneur de partager la sépulture des rois. Duguesclin avait épousé en secondes noces Jeanne de Laval, fille unique de Jean de Laval, sire de Châtillon ; on ne lui connaissait qu'un fils naturel (Michel Duguesclin), qui se distingua dans la guerre. Il désirait d'avoir un fils légitime, auquel il pût laisser ses grands biens (1) et sa gloire. Mais son attente fut trompée, et Olivier Duguesclin, son frère, digne compagnon de ses travaux, devint son héritier. On trouve, dans la Bibliothèque historique de France, la liste des ouvrages imprimés et manuscrits qui concernent la vie de Duguesclin. Cette liste commence par des romans en vers, qui paraissent avoir servi de base aux premières histoires ; l'un d'eux a pour titre : le Roumant de Bertrand du Glaicquin. Il est certain que par la négligence des auteurs contemporains, qui font courir leur héros de Bretagne en Guienne, en Poitou, dans la Picardie, etc., sans fixer les dates, on est souvent embarrassé pour classer les faits dans leur ordre chronologique. Nous terminerons cet article en citant les principales histoires de Duguesclin : I. Le Triomphe des neuf Preux, ou Histoire de Bertrand du Guesclin, duc de Molines, Abbeville.

Guesclin, duc de Molines, Abbeville.

Gerard, 1487 ; Paris, Lenoir, 1507, in-fol. ; II. Histoire des prouesses de Bertrand du Clesclin, Lyon, 1529, in-4°. ; III. Le Livre des faits d'armes de Bertrand du Guesclin, in-fol. gothique ; IV. Histoire de Messire Bertrand du Guesclin, connétable de France, duc de Molines, comte de Longueville et de Burgos, escrite en prose l'an 1387, et mise en lumière par Claude Menard, Paris, S. Cramoisy, 1618, in-4°. Le style est vieux ; Menard l'a conservé tel qu'il était dans le manuscrit original, qui fut écrit par ordre de Jean d'Estouteville. V. Histoire de Bertrand du Guesclin, par Paul Hay, seigneur du Chastelet, Paris, 1666, in-fol., et 1693, in-4°. : il y a plusieurs fables dans cette histoire ; VI. Anciens Mémoires du quatorzième siècle, depuis peu découverts, contenant la vie du fameux Bertrand du Guesclin, etc., traduits par (Jacques) Lefebvre, Douai, 1692, in-4°. : tous les détails de cet ouvrage, dit le Père Lelong, sont curieux et intéressants ; VII. Histoire de Bertrand Duguesclin, par Guyard de Berville, Paris, 1767, 2 vol. in-12 : ouvrage prolixe, mal écrit, mais plusieurs fois réimprimé ; IX. Vie du même, dans les Hommes illustres de France, par d'Auvigny, tome VIII. On trouve la description des funérailles de Duguesclin dans le nouveau Trésor de Martène, tom. III ; et des observations sur ce connétable, par D. Vaissette et le Père Griffet, dans l'Histoire de Languedoc, tom. IV, note 27 ; et dans l'Histoire de France du Père Daniel, tom, VIII, pag. 179 (1).

(1) En 1373, Charles V avait encore fait présent à Duguesclin du comté de Montfort-l'Amaury. Le gouverneur de ce comté donnait au connétable, dans ses quittances, le titre de très noble et très puissant prince. Voyez les Preuves de l'Histoire de Duguesclin, par Du Chastelet.

12..

V—VE.

Figure 19.36: Statements by Michaud frères, 1814 (Courtesy of R. Grouazel-Krauss)

19.15.7.16 A Reference of Roberto Calvo Torre

In an online article (in 'Solo Genealogie') about Capitán Gaspar Sánchez de Torres, born at Evoria in Aragon in 1615 and dead in Venezuela, the different de Torres lineages are mentioned. The work is interesting to read, but does not concern descendants of Du Guesclin because they did not carry the name 'de Torres,' but 'Torró.'

19.15.7.17 A Reference of Lucia Mosquera Novoa, 2015

Before reading this secion, the reader might be interested to read Chapter 19.15.3 on page 188 first. We have read with great interest Lucia Mosquera Novoa, tesis doctoral 'Juan de Torres: edición y estudio de su poesía' , Universidade da Coruña, 2015.

We refer to chapters '2. 1. Orígenes de un linaje' and '2. 2. 2. Juan de Torres, from the Soria lineage' and '2. 2. 2. Juan de Torres, from the Soria lineage.'

Lucia Mosquera Novoa describes that there are many, sometimes confusing, sources in antique literature, which point at old noble origins of the 'de Torres' families in Spain, with roots in the Kingdom of Navarra in the 13th century, the most famous one being Gutierre López de Torres, chief of the nobles of the Navas de Tolosa in 1212. The author points out that there are numerous branches of this clan, probably all having different origins.

The genealogists closest to the 15th century, typically refer to two essential lineages, namely the 'de Torres of Soria' and the 'de Torres of Jaén' . Some genealogists claim that the ones of Soria, descend from Bertrand Du Guesclin. Thus, the name Torres is said to derive from 'Torrayna' , a French domain owned by Du Guesclin[63], or from the surname of the unknown lady of Soria's family with whom he had children; We cite Georges Minois,[64]

'La maîtresse attittrée de Bertrand en Castile es, d' après d' Ayala, la 'dame de Soria' , dont nous ignorons le nom, mais qui appartenait, semble-t-il, à la puissante famille de Los Torres, un des clans dirigeants de Soria. Cette dame faisait partie des suivantes de la reine Jeanne, femme d' Henri, très influente auprès son mari, assure Cuvelier. Est-ce par son intermédiaire que Soria fut donné à Du Guesclin, afin de rapprocher les deux amans? Ce n' est pas impossible. Bertrand a maintenant deux fils de la dame de Soria.'

It is, however, highly unlikely that the Soria noble families would have allowed any of their daughter to become the wife of Du Guesclin. It is therefore almost impossible that any of the Torres bloodlines that stem from Soria, would carry the blood of Bertrand Du Guesclin. Despite the very high quality of Lucia Mosquera Novoa's work and its particular interest to Torres families, the work does not concern Bertrand Du Guesclin.

19.15.7.18 A Reference of Lucia Mosquera Novoa, 2017

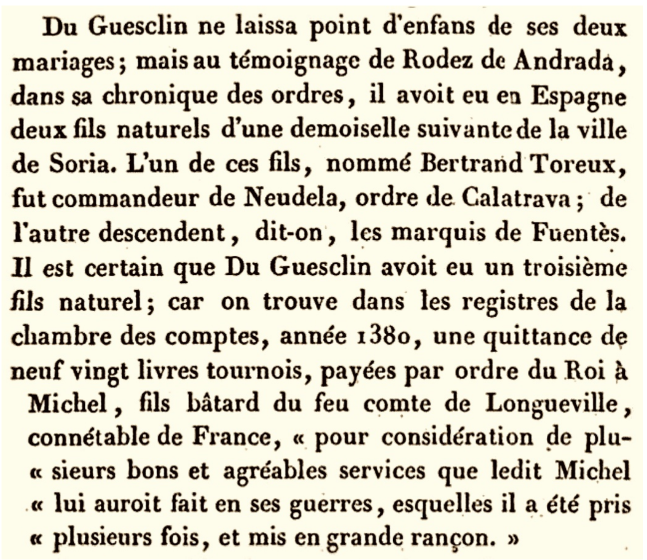
We refer to the book 'De Lagrymas Fasiendo Tinta. Memorias, identidades y territorios cancioneriles,' edited by Virginie Dumanoir, in the series 'Collection de la Casa de Velázquez' , 2017; and in particular the chapter written by Lucia Mosquera Novoa, 'El problema de la homonimia en la identificación histórica de Juan de Torres, poeta y caballero del siglo XV' . This chapter is a brief version of her thesis of 2015, elaborated in Chapter 19.15.7.17.

On pages 139-152, we cite reference 29,

---

[63] Núñez de Castro 1653: 371

[64] Georges Minois, 'Du Guesclin' , 1993, page 351.



Du Guesclin ne laissa point d'enfans de ses deux mariages; mais au témoignage de Rodez de Andrada, dans sa chronique des ordres, il avoit eu en Espagne deux fils naturels d'une demoiselle suivante de la ville de Soria. L'un de ces fils, nommé Bertrand Toreux, fut commandeur de Neudela, ordre de Calatrava; de l'autre descendent, dit-on, les marquis de Fuentès. Il est certain que Du Guesclin avoit eu un troisième fils naturel; car on trouve dans les registres de la chambre des comptes, année 1380, une quittance de neuf vingt livres tournois, payées par ordre du Roi à Michel, fils bâtard du feu comte de Longueville, connétable de France, « pour considération de plu- « sieurs bons et agréables services que ledit Michel « lui auroit fait en ses guerres, esquelles il a été pris « plusieurs fois, et mis en grande rançon. »

Figure 19.37: Words by Christine de Pisan, 1824. (Courtesy of R. Grouazel-Krauss)

Figure 19.38: The tomb of Enrique II of Trastámara, the first king of Castile from the Trastámara dynasty, who died on May 29, 1379. He ascended to the throne after killing his half-brother, Peter I of Castile. Enrique II was the illegitimate son of Alfonso XI, and his rise to power marked a significant shift in the Castilian monarchy.

'Algunos consideran antepasado del linaje Torres de Soria a Bertrand du Guesclin,[65], ...'
Despite the assumptions made by Lucia Mosquera Novoa in her work of very high quality, there are no reasons to believe that Du Guesclin would have had offspring with a Torres from Soria. Instead, his woman must have been a Torró from Gerona and their two sons were born at Soria, but they were not Torres. Despite the connections Lucia Mosquera Novoa found in later generations of Torres with Aragon, they were not the descendants of Du Guesclin.

19.16 Du Guesclin's Brief Biography

Bertrand du Guesclin, son of Robert Dugesclin and Jeanne de Malesmains, was born circa 1320 at Château de la Motte-Broons in Dinan, Brittany, France. Some sources, such as Acques Saillot, suggest 1311 or 1314 as his birth year[66]. He had several sisters and two brothers. Du Guesclin died on July 13, 1380, in Châteauneuf-de-Randon, Lozère, Languedoc-Roussillon, France. He held titles such as Comte de Longueville and Connétable de France. He was also titled King of Granada (1369 - July 13, 1380), Ducque of Soria and Molina (1369 - July 13, 1380), Condestable de Castilla (1369 - July 13, 1380), and Count of Borja (1366 - July 13, 1380).
While Du Guesclin's professional life was illustrious, his personal life was equally intriguing. He was married twice, first to Thiéfaine Raguenel, the Vicomtesse de la Belière and daughter of Robert Raguenel and Jeanne de Dinan, who sadly passed away in 1371. His second marriage, on January 21, 1373, was to Jeanne de Laval, the daughter of Jean de Laval and Isabeau de Tinténiac.
He also had extramarital relationships, and it is from a union in Spain that the Desclergues descend.
In 1341, Du Guesclin served alongside Charles de Blois in military operations. On July 25, 1364, he made a donation to Raoul de Beauchamp and Clémence Du Guesclin, as noted by Gaultier et Dupaz[67].
Du Guesclin participated in the Battle of Cocherel in 1364, capturing Jean Grailly. That same year, he married Thiéfaine Raguenel. On May 26, 1371, he leased land to Raoul de Beauchamp and Clémence Du Guesclin. In January 1374, he signed a marriage contract with Jeanne de Laval in Rennes, Brittany[68][69].
Du Guesclin died on July 13, 1380.

19.17 Du Guesclin's Appearance in Spain: War of Two Peters

The War of the Two Peters, fought between Castile and Aragon from 1356 to 1375, was a protracted contest between Peter of Castile and Peter IV of Aragon for the sovereignty of Castile. The English supported the former through Edward III and his son, while France supported the latter. Furthermore, Navarre and Portugal were drawn into the conflict. The outcome placed Aragon in a position of dominance, although the Black Death had severely impacted their economy before the conflict.
Castile was in turmoil at the beginning of the 14th century due to a civil war that pitted the crowned king Peter of Castile and his allies against his half-brother Henry of Trastámara, shown in Figure 19.38 on page 199, and his supporters, including the French commander Bertrand du Guesclin and his troops. The trajectory of du Guesclin can be found in Figure 19.41 on page 206. This conflict, also known as the War of Two Peters, was connected to the larger Hundred Years' War. Peter, King of Castile, desired to obtain control of the Kingdom of Valencia, which consisted of the regions of Murcia, Elche, Alicante, and Orihuela. On the other hand, King Peter IV of Aragon desired dominance over the Mediterranean Sea in opposition to Castile and its ally, Genoa. An incident occurred between these two powers regarding Catalan galleys supported by Mossèn Francesc de Perellós of Aragon and assisting France in its war against England. The Catalan crew of Perellós was able to seize two Genoese ships at Sanlcar de Barrameda. At the same time, the Castilian armada commanded by King Peter of Castile pursued them to Tavira but failed to capture them.
Peter of Castile and Henry of Trastámara fought in the border region between Castile and Aragon from 1356 to 1375, with the

---

[65] Núñez de Castro, Historia Eclesiástica y Seglar de la Muy Noble y Muy Leal Ciudad de Guadalaxara, p. 371 y Argote de Molina, Nobleza de Andalucía, pp. 425-426.

[66] Acques Saillot, 'Tome XX - Encyclopédie généalogique de la Noblesse de France,' 2018.

[67] Gaultier et Dupaz, 'Histoire généalogique de plusieurs maisons illustres de Bretagne, enrichie des armes et blasons d'icelles de diverses fondations d'abbayes et de prieures,' 1619.

[68] Tome VI - 3e Edition - Histoire généalogique de la maison royale de France et des grands officiers de la couronne et de la maison du Roy.

[69] Tome XX - Encyclopédie généalogique de la Noblesse de France,' 2018.

Castilians capturing Aragonese cities such as Teruel. On March 9, 1357, Castile advanced into Aragon and conquered Tarazona. The same year, on May 8, a peace treaty was signed. Castilians captured several fortresses, including Verdejo, Alhama, and Torrijos, at the beginning of 1361. On May 18, however, a peace treaty was signed, and the subjugated territories were returned to their original proprietors. This agreement, also known as the 'Peace of Terrer' or 'Peace of Deza,' was mediated by the Aragonese ambassador Bernardo de Cabrera. Peter IV of Castile betrothed his daughter Constance to Frederick III the Simple to solidify the truce.

In June 1362, Charles II of Navarre and Peter of Castile met in Soria and pledged mutual assistance. Peter allied with The Black Prince and his father, King Edward III of England. After concluding the negotiations, the monarch of Castile made a covert incursion into Aragon's territory, resuming hostilities. Peter of Castile discovered the Aragonese monarch in Perpignan without an army and was caught off guard. The Castilians captured Arize, Atece, Terrer, Moros, Cetina, and Alhama; however, despite a full-scale siege, they were unable to seize Calatayud. Peter then returned to Seville without advancing further.

In 1363, Castile again laid claim to Tarazona, reigniting the conflict between the two parties. Pedro of Castile sought assistance from Portugal and Navarre, while the monarch of Aragon sought aid from France and an alliance with Henry II of Castile. Pedro of Castile was ultimately victorious, capturing Cariena, Teruel, Segorbe, Morvedre, Almenara, Xiva, and Bunyol.

On July 2, 1363, the papal nuncio Jean de la Grange initiated peace negotiations with Mourvedre (Sagunt), but the treaty was never ratified, resulting in ongoing hostilities. From 1363 to 1369, the Castilians initiated a campaign to penetrate the Kingdom of Valencia, invading and capturing cities such as Alicante, Caudete, Elda, and Gandia. During this time, Peter of Castile was focused on thwarting Henry of Trastámara's attempt to seize the throne of Castile. Peter was ultimately dethroned in 1366 and encountered opposition from Henry, Bertrand du Guesclin, and Hugh Calveley, among others.

Peter, feeling threatened, fled his dominion immediately and did not remain to battle the opposing forces. He retreated from Burgos first, then Toledo, and finally Seville. He brought his treasury to Portugal, where his uncle, Peter I of Portugal, greeted him with hostility. Peter traveled from Portugal to Galicia in northern Spain, where he issued orders to murder Suero, the archbishop of Santiago, and Perálvarez, the dean. Both were devoted Henry supporters.

In 1369, Henry overthrew and murdered Peter of Castile. Throughout the War of the Two Peters, the Kingdom of Granada supported Peter. Castilian forces and their Moorish allies invaded southern Valencia during the conflict. This led to a period of low-level devastation and political instability. Unfortunately, in 1364, their siege of Orihuela was ineffectual.

John I of Castile and Eleanor of Aragon contracted their marriage to reclaim the comarcas that Aragon had conquered. Eleanor of Aragon was the daughter of Peter IV of Aragon, whereas John I of Castile was Henry II of Castile's successor. Lordship of Molina was one of the comarcas that Castile reclaimed. Due to the destruction of the Aragonese economy by war, the Black Death, scarcity, and a scourge of locusts, there was a significant population decline. In addition, the Cathedral of Tarazona was destroyed and not rebuilt until much later. Intriguingly, it is believed that this conflict contributed to the development of administrative and military forces that set the groundwork for a unified Castile and Aragon in the following centuries.

In Spanish, the War of Two Peters is also known as La Guerra de los Dos Pedros, and, in Catalan, La Guerra dels dos Peres.

19.18 Bertrand du Guesclin's Chivalric and Strategic Motives in the War of the Two Peters

To gain a deeper insight into Bertrand du Guesclin's motivations during the War of the Two Peters and his subsequent perception by the Aragonese nobility, we draw extensively on the scholarly work of Thierry Lassabatère.[70] Bertrand du Guesclin, a prominent figure from the fourteenth century, famously participated in the War of the Two Peters in Spain, which pitted Peter I of Castile against his half-brother Henry of Trastámara. The reasons for du Guesclin's involvement and subsequent appreciation by the regional powers of Aragon and Barcelona can be distilled from political, personal, and ideological motives.

Initially, du Guesclin's entry into the Spanish conflict was primarily motivated by political and strategic considerations linked to the broader Franco-English rivalry during the Hundred Years' War. The Kingdom of France, under Charles V, saw an opportunity to weaken England's ally, Peter I (known as "Peter the Cruel"), by supporting his rival, Henry of Trastámara. Du Guesclin, having earned a reputation for his military prowess and leadership, was chosen to lead the "Free Companies" — groups of mercenaries ravaging the French countryside during a lull in the conflict with England — and redirect their activities toward a politically helpful purpose.

This intervention was about removing mercenaries from French soil and expanding French influence in Iberia at England's expense, especially after the English-supported Peter I defeated Henry in the Battle of Nájera (1367). The reversal of this outcome was crucial for France's strategy, which relied on weakening English alliances and extending French influence across the Pyrenees.

His contemporaries framed du Guesclin's campaign in Spain — notably in Cuvelier's "Chanson de Bertrand du Guesclin" — as a war of cause. The conflict was depicted as a moral and ethical obligation to depose a tyrant (Peter the Cruel) who was notorious for his alleged injustices and cruelty, including the murder of his wife, alliances with Muslim kingdoms, and general tyranny. These actions were portrayed as violations of Christian and kingly duties, legitimizing Henry's claim and the intervention by external forces like du Guesclin under the doctrine of just war. This portrayal aligned with the medieval concept of chivalry and the responsibilities of nobility to uphold justice and Christian values.

Du Guesclin's efforts in Spain earned him significant admiration from the regional powers, notably the King of Aragon and the Count of Barcelona. His military success against Peter the Cruel directly benefited these rulers by stabilizing the region and removing a despotic leader whose actions destabilized Castile and its neighboring realms. Furthermore, du Guesclin's role in reinstating Henry of Trastámara aligned with their interests in promoting a more balanced power dynamic in Iberia, which could resist English influence more effectively.

The nobility of Aragon, Barcelona, and Empúries appreciated du Guesclin for his immediate military achievements and his longer-term impact on the region's geopolitical stability. By supporting Henry, du Guesclin played a part in establishing a regime that was seen as more legitimate and favorable to the interests of its neighboring Christian powers.

While Bertrand du Guesclin did not physically lead campaigns into Granada, his strategic intentions towards this Muslim-held kingdom illustrated his broader military and religious objectives. His involvement in the Iberian Peninsula, particularly during the War of the Two Peters, was deeply intertwined with the ideological framework of the Reconquista. Although he never fought in Granada, du Guesclin was promised the title of King of Granada by Henry of Trastámara should he successfully aid in its capture. This promise highlights the extent of du Guesclin's involvement and his aspirations within the larger context of Christian reconquest efforts against Muslim territories in Spain.

---

[70] Thierry Lassabatère, "Bertrand Du Guesclin et la guerre juste : traces et motifs d'une construction légendaire", Actes des congrès nationaux des sociétés historiques et scientifiques, 2013, 136-9, p. 18-28. The article belongs to "Écrire la guerre, écrire la paix. Actes du 136e Congrès national des sociétés historiques et scientifiques, Faire la guerre, faire la paix, Perpignan, 2011"

The ambitions towards Bougies (Béjaïa), while not realized during du Guesclin's lifetime, further underscore his broader vision for expanding Christendom's influence. The strategic interest in Bougies, a critical Mediterranean port, reflects the medieval priorities of controlling vital maritime routes and ports for economic and military advantage. While direct military actions by du Guesclin in Bougies are not documented, his plans for such territories demonstrate his understanding of the interconnected nature of military conquests and economic dominance during the period, not to mention his claim that he descended from a certain Hakin (Aquin) who once controlled Bougies.

Bertrand du Guesclin's chivalric intentions and aspirations toward Granada and beyond played a significant role in shaping his legacy, particularly in the eyes of the Aragonese nobility. The Count of Barcelona and the King of Aragon, along with their noble courts, likely viewed du Guesclin as embodying the ideals of higher nobility — not necessarily in terms of lineage but through his adherence to the chivalric codes and his commitment to the Christian cause during a tumultuous period in Iberian history.

Du Guesclin's reputation as a leader who pursued noble causes, especially in the context of the Reconquista, resonated strongly with the values held by the Aragonese. His ambitions to extend Christian dominion, his strategic mindset, and his willingness to engage in alliances that aimed at stabilizing and securing Christian territories against Muslim kingdoms would have been seen as exemplifying the virtues of knighthood and nobility. This recognition was due to his military prowess and his embodiment of the chivalric virtues of loyalty, courage, and honor in service to a greater, divinely inspired mission.

The appreciation of du Guesclin by the Aragonese nobility and royalty reflects his alignment with the region's broader political and religious goals. His legacy, enriched by his chivalric aspirations and his strategic contributions to the Christian cause in Iberia, positions him as a figure of respect and admiration across different realms of medieval Europe. Through this lens, du Guesclin's narrative is not just one of a military leader but also a paragon of the chivalric ideals highly esteemed among Aragon's nobility.

While Bertrand du Guesclin was regarded highly by the Aragonese nobility for his chivalric values and strategic contributions, his reputation among the nobility of Soria, who had aligned with Peter the Cruel rather than Henry of Trastámara, was markedly different. Loyal to Peter's cause, these nobles likely viewed du Guesclin with contempt and hatred, perceiving him as an external aggressor who disrupted the existing order and sided with what they saw as usurpation. This stark contrast in perceptions — admiration in one camp and detestation in another — highlights the complex and divisive nature of du Guesclin's involvement in Spanish affairs. Such a mixture of hate and admiration from different factions within Spain and Brittany underscores the dual nature of his legacy.

Bertrand du Guesclin remains a fascinating historical figure, embodying the variegated responses elicited by his actions, which were seen with mixed feelings across Brittany and Spain, reflecting his time's diverse political landscapes and allegiances.

19.19 The Logic Behind Aragon's Support of Bertrand Du Guesclin

This analysis draws upon the nuanced interpretations found in Léon-Honoré Labande's study on Bertrand Du Guesclin's historical role during the tumultuous period of the Hundred Years' War and his involvement in the Spanish War of the Two Peters. Du Guesclin's actions encapsulate a narrative deeply intertwined with feudal loyalties, nationalistic fervor, and the strategic imperatives of medieval geopolitics. It's essential to recognize that interpretations of Du Guesclin's nationalism might be influenced by later chroniclers who viewed his exploits through burgeoning French nationalism.

Du Guesclin's motivations for supporting the French crown against English claims, his rationale for backing Enrique de Trastámara in Spain, and the King of Aragon's favor towards him are not simple to decipher. They are pivotal to understanding this period.

At the core of Du Guesclin's resistance against English territorial ambitions was a robust confluence of legal and feudal elements. He upheld values that ancient scribers or Clergue exemplified, emphasizing his progenitor 'Hakin.' The English claim to French territories, rooted in Edward III's maternal lineage from Philip IV, clashed with the French Salic Law, which precluded succession through the female line. Du Guesclin, representing the French martial and noble elite, deemed these claims legally void. According to Labande, his stance was also propelled by a burgeoning French nationalism, which opposed any form of English dominion over French lands. Du Guesclin's military engagements, characterized by significant confrontations aimed at reclaiming French territories, were not just about reclaiming land. They were driven by a strategic imperative to expunge English influence and reaffirm French rule. These actions underscored his commitment to French sovereignty and his role as a stalwart defender of his homeland against foreign encroachments. His involvement in the Spanish War of the Two Peters illustrates his strategic and value-driven approach to medieval politics. Du Guesclin's support for Enrique de Trastámara over Peter the Cruel was influenced by political alignment, personal values, and feudal loyalty. This decision aligned with the broader French geopolitical strategy to dilute English influence in Spain, symbiotic with France's long-term objectives in the Hundred Years' War. Du Guesclin viewed Enrique's cause as more just and moral than Peter's despotic rule, resonating with his chivalric ideals.

Supporting Enrique also aligned with his feudal obligations, promising further military and political dividends and enhancing his stature within the French and Spanish courts.

The King of Aragon's support for Du Guesclin can be viewed through strategic realpolitik and shared knightly values. Aragon had much to gain from a weakened English presence in Spain, seeing Du Guesclin's military expertise as vital for Enrique's campaign, promising a quicker resolution to the conflict and regional stabilization—a direct benefit to Aragon.

Supporting Du Guesclin also fostered beneficial relations with the French crown, promising diplomatic and military support and bolstering Aragon's regional dominance and diplomatic leverage. If the King of Aragon shared Du Guesclin's knightly values of justice and chivalry, he would see his involvement as morally appropriate, further justifying his support.

19.20 The Role of the House of Montfort in the Mutual Sympathy Between Bertrand Du Guesclin and the Count of Barcelona

To understand why Bertrand Du Guesclin was warmly welcomed by the Count of Barcelona, described in Chapter 19.15.1, despite historical tensions between France and Occitania, we must examine the political, dynastic, and military interactions spanning from the Albigensian Crusade (1209-1229) to the Breton War of Succession (1341-1364).

The Albigensian Crusade, initiated by Pope Innocent III from 1209 to 1229, aimed to eradicate Catharism in the Languedoc region. However, the crusade was significantly motivated by the French Crown's desire to control southern France's affluent and semi-independent territories. King Philip II Augustus and his successor Louis VIII played crucial roles in this crusade, which saw the French monarchy, with northern French nobles' assistance, subjugate these territories, expanding Capetian influence.

Simon de Montfort led the crusading forces ruthlessly, with campaigns marked by massacres and the establishment of French dominance over Occitan lands. Montfort's actions were deeply resented by local nobility and populace, including the counts of Toulouse and Barcelona. The House of Montfort's legacy, particularly Simon's role, left enduring bitterness, creating hatred against the northern French and their interventions.

In the 14th century, Bertrand Du Guesclin emerged as a central figure in the Breton War of Succession (1341-1364). This conflict arose after Duke John III of Brittany's death, leading to a succession dispute between Jeanne de Penthièvre, supported by France, and John of Montfort, backed by England. Bertrand Du Guesclin, her most important vassal and military commander, supported Jeanne's claim. The Montfort family's involvement created a direct lineage of enmity tracing back to Simon de Montfort's actions in the Albigensian Crusade. John of Montfort, against whom Jeanne de Penthièvre fought, was a descendant of the same Montfort lineage that had devastated Occitania, entrenching hatred among those who suffered under their earlier campaigns.

By Du Guesclin's time, the French monarchy had evolved, with Charles V (Charles the Wise) of the House of Valois on the throne. The Valois continued the territorial ambitions of their Capetian predecessors. Charles V strategically used military leaders like Du Guesclin to consolidate and expand French influence.

The alliance between the Count of Barcelona and Bertrand Du Guesclin can be understood through several factors. They shared hostility towards the Montforts, whose brutal legacy in Occitania during the Albigensian Crusade and involvement in the Breton War of Succession made them mutual adversaries. Du Guesclin's support for Jeanne de Penthièvre, who fought against the Montforts, resonated with the Count of Barcelona, who viewed Jeanne's struggle as resistance against a common foe.

Historical grievances against the French crown also played a role. Although Charles V had no direct involvement in the Albigensian Crusade, his Capetian lineage connected him to the Crusaders who oppressed Occitania. However, Du Guesclin's role was personal and distinct from the broader actions of the French monarchy, allowing regional leaders to differentiate between the king's vassal and the historical monarchy. Additionally, Du Guesclin descended from a 'Hakin' from Spain, suggesting origins from the Desclergue, a highly respected lineage prominent in the County of Barcelona. This connection further endeared him to the Count of Barcelona.

In conclusion, Bertrand Du Guesclin was warmly welcomed by the Count of Barcelona due to a convergence of historical grievances and contemporary political alliances. Both figures shared a mutual disdain for the Montforts, rooted in their destructive legacy from the Albigensian Crusade and the subsequent Breton War of Succession. Du Guesclin's chivalric loyalty to Jeanne de Penthièvre aligned him against the Montfort faction, endearing him to those who opposed the Montforts and their legacy. Thus, despite broader historical tensions between France and regions affected by the Albigensian Crusade, the specific circumstances and alliances of the 14th century facilitated a warm reception for Du Guesclin in Barcelona.

19.21 Du Guesclin's role in the Battle of Montiel

Due to the nature of a portion of its interests and participants, the Battle of Montiel (1369) was situated within the Castilian Civil War and the Hundred Years' War, particularly in the War of the Two Peters, described in Chapter 19.17. A contextual map is shown in Figure 19.41 on page 206. It was fought between Castilian-French and Castilian-Granada alliances. Enrique de Trastámara (later Enrique II of Castile) prevailed over his brother Pedro el Justiciero, who commanded the second force. It was contested around Montiel on March 14, 1369, in Ciudad Real, Castilla-La Mancha province. Bertrand du Guesclin played a decisive role in the outcome of the battle.

Enrique de Trastámara, the illegitimate half-brother of King Pedro I of Castile, had claims to the Castilian succession. France supported the right of the second and dispatched its top constable to confront the pro-government forces. Thus, the great strategist Bertrand du Guesclin traversed the Pyrenees and confronted Pedro at the battle of Montiel, which was part of a much larger conflict on a continental scale: the Hundred Years' War. This literal and figurative conflict between brothers lasted for over fifteen years.

Enrique, motivated by his desire to become monarch, resolved to invade Castile in 1360 and quickly captured the city of Nájera. Pedro, however, responded swiftly and confronted his brother in that city, defeating him at the end of April. Upon discovering that his adversaries had fled beyond the boundaries of his kingdom, the monarch signed an extradition treaty with the King of Portugal to retrieve the exiles and punish them appropriately for their support of his brother and hostility toward him. Enrique, having survived the conflict of Nájera with the aid of Bertrand du Guesclin and Guillaume Boitel, traversed the Pyrenees and sought sanctuary in France, whose court was sympathetic to his cause. He engaged a mercenary army with a significant amount of money and, after traversing Aragon in 1366, returned to Castile on a war footing. He was coronated King of Castile and Leon after conquering Calahorra, Navarrete, and Briviesca.

Edward, son of the King of England and, therefore, Prince of Wales, also known as the Black Prince, saw an opportunity to benefit himself in his conflict with France and to prevent Castile from becoming an ally of France against the English interests of the Plantagenets in their struggle for dominance in France from the south of Aquitaine, on its border with Castile. As this kingdom supported the Trastámara, he sided with Pedro the Cruel and supplied him with weapons, personnel, and other supplies. The Anglo-Castilian army invaded Castile in 1367 and fought Enrique at Nájera.

The expert French commander of Enrique's army, Bertrand du Guesclin, was captured prisoner but subsequently liberated and sought refuge in Aragon. The Black Prince renounced his alliance with Pedro because he was irritated that Pedro had not reimbursed him for his campaign expenses. He was appalled by the violent vengeance with which the Castilian monarch punished his defeated enemies, contrary to all honor codes of late medieval chivalry. In August of that year, he departed the peninsula, abandoning him to his fate.

Enrique returned to invade Castile in a new campaign that lasted an additional year and a half after he learned about the English defection.

Pedro had assembled a large army of loyal Castilians, Moors, and Jews to compensate for the defection of Edward of Lancaster. Aware that his half-brother already de facto ruled half the kingdom, he traversed the land until he located it and confronted his army beneath the battlements of Montiel Castle.

On March 14, Enrique was able to render Pedro's men impotent and compel them to seek refuge within the fortress after a brutal battle.

Peter the Cruel, already besieged by his brother's forces, attempted a desperate escape by negotiating a separate surrender with du Guesclin, whom he believed to be more approachable.

Instead of taking him out into the open, the French soldier led him straight to Enrique's compound. Pedro knocked Henry down and was about to murder him when Du Guesclin, a man of tremendous physical strength, grabbed the monarch by the ankles and brought him to the ground. Already Enrique, on top of his sibling, repeatedly stabbed the monarch. Faced with Pedro's silent accusation of treason, the French general uttered his famous words: textit"I neither install nor remove a king; I only assist my lord."

After Pedro's death, his brother severed the head of the corpse (which he flung onto a path) and, positioning the mutilated body between wooden boards, hung it on the walls of the castle of Montiel, much to the dismay of the pro-government supporters who were still resisting there. Upon observing the unfolding of events, they immediately surrendered.

Enrique de Trastámara was named king of all Castile in lieu of his brother, whom he had murdered, and was given the name Enrique II.

Upon ascending the throne, Enrique II maintained the alliance with Carlos V of France and assisted the French in retaking the English-held port of La Rochelle in 1372.

Despite fears that he would seek vengeance against the Moors and Jews who had fought for and against his brother, Enrique revealed himself as a just monarch who forgave both groups and allowed them to live in peace after that.

19.22 Honors Received by Du Guesclin

The titles of Bertrand du Guesclin were Seigneur de La Motte Broons (1353 - July 13, 1380), Comte de Longueville (1364 - July 13, 1380), Connétable de France (October 2, 1370 - July 13, 1380), Seigneur de Pontorson (1376 - July 13, 1380), Roi de Grenade (1369 - July 13, 1380), Duc de Soria and de Molina (1369 - July 13, 1380), Connétable de Castilla (1369 - July 13, 1380), Comte de Borja (1366 - July 13, 1380).

Alfred Morel-Fatio studied the donation of the dukedom of Molina to Bertrand Du Guesclin. [71] He quotes Ayala[72], "E dio (Enrique II) a Mosen Beltran de Claquin, que era Breton, a Molina e diole mas el condado de Trastámara, e mando que se llamase duque de Trastámara." [73]

Historians disagree when Du Guesclin became the duke of Molina. Ayala believes that it must have been 1366, and he states "E dio a Mosen Beltran de Claquin, que era Breton, a Molina et dioke mas el condado de Trastámara", while Morel-Fatio states that "Il est bien plus vraisemblable d'admettre que Molina a été donné à notre Bertrand après sa rentrée en Castile, au commencement de 1369, et comme compensation de la donation de Trastámara qui après Nágera perdit son effet."

Ayala, among others, also refers to other places awarded to Du Guesclin, namely, Soria, Almazan, Atienza, Montagudo, Deza, and Seron. It is interesting to read that many years later, Antoni Desclergue i Ratera (DC05b) received a letter from the Marquis of Almazan, as shown in 32.18 on page 497.

Bertrand du Guesclin has been bestowed with the highest honor in France, post mortem, by being buried with the Kings of this country, as seen in Figure 19.39.

19.23 Du Guesclin's Legacy

Numerous statues of Bertrand Du Guesclin can be found throughout France, particularly in Brittany, commemorating his significant historical contributions. As with many historical figures, Du Guesclin has been utilized for political purposes in the centuries following his death, either honored or criticized, similar to the symbolic use of Jeanne d'Arc following the Franco-Prussian War of 1870.

Du Guesclin's pivotal roles in the histories of England, Brittany, France, Castile, and Aragon are well-documented. His military prowess and strategic acumen were instrumental in various conflicts, including the Hundred Years' War and the Castilian Civil War, where he supported Henry II of Castile against Peter of Castile. Du Guesclin's appointment as Constable of France under King V highlights his critical role in reorganizing the French military and fortifying the kingdom's defenses against English aggression.

In Brittany, Du Guesclin's legacy is particularly revered, reflecting his roots and early military exploits in the region. His successful campaigns, such as the Battle of Cocherel and the reconquest of Poitou, cemented his reputation as a formidable knight and tactician. Furthermore, his diplomatic skills were evident in his ability to forge alliances and manage the complexities of medieval geopolitics.

Du Guesclin's legacy extends beyond his military achievements; he is also remembered for his chivalric values and leadership qualities. His death at the Siege of Châteauneuf-de-Randon in 1380 marked the end of an era, but his contributions have left an indelible mark on French history. Consequently, he is perhaps most remembered in France, where his life and deeds continue to be studied and celebrated.

19.24 Bertrand Du Guesclin's Final Words Revealed his Roots

Accounts of Du Guesclin's death are documented in various historical narratives.

On the way, Du Guesclin stopped under the walls of Châteauneuf-Randon in Occitanie, which his friend Marshal de Sancerre besieged. The thirst to fight retook hold of him, and he led several assaults. The governor had promised to surrender in two weeks if he was not rescued. Then, Du Guesclin fell ill and died soon. While dying, he said to Sancerre, giving him the constable's sword: "It helped me to defeat the enemies of my king, but it gave me cruel ones near him. I hand it over to you, and I protest that it has never betrayed the honor that the king had done me by entrusting it to me."

He added, turning to the officers who surrounded him:

"Souvenez-vous qu'en quelque pays que vous fassiez la guerre, les Clergues, les enfants et le pauvre peuple ne sont point vos ennemis."[74]

The governor, true to his word, brought the keys of the city to the constable's coffin.

Bertrand du Guesclin, on his deathbed, reputedly referenced the Desclergue family, emphasizing their neutrality and longstanding presence in regions such as Occitania and Catalonia and historical contexts like Byzantine and Muslim Spain. This interpretation, though controversial and biased, aligns with the thematic focus of this book. It challenges the longstanding belief that Du Guesclin used the term gens d'église. Such a term would have been anachronistic and disrespectful in the 14th century. Instead, the appropriate terms would have been clergé in French or clergue in Occitan. Clergue could mean clergy, clerk, scriber, or the family Clergue and Desclergue.

---

[71] Alfred Morel-Fatio, "La donation du duché de Molina à Bertrand du Guesclin", Bibliothèque de l'école des chartres, 1899, tome 60, pp 145-176, Paris and pp. 1-32, depending on the copy or scan.

[72] Ayala, Cronica del rey D. Pedro, ed. Rivedeneyra, ann. 1366, ch. 7.

[73] The quote said conde, but Alfred Morel-Fatio discovered this to be an error and had to be duque instead, based on other documents in France.

[74] Clergues was Occitan for clercs as well as clergy and would, in French be translated to clergé, or gens d'église in modern accounts.

Figure 19.39: The Basilica of Saint Denis in Paris is where Du Guesclin was awarded the greatest honor of being buried among the Kings of France. The tomb in front is that of Jeanne de Bourbon (1338-1377), queen of France and consort of French King Charles V. Next is Charles V (1338-1380), King of France from 1364 until 1380. Consequently we find the tomb of Bertrand Du Guesclin (1320-1380), connétable de France from 1370 until 1380 and the tomb was commissioned by King Charles V. The post close to Du Guesclin is the bust of Marie d'Anjou (1404-1463), queen of France and consort of King Charles VII. In the back are the tombs of Isabeau de Bavière (1371-1435), queen of France and consort of Charles VI, and that of Charles VI (1368-1422), King of France from 1380 until 1422. The photo was taken in 2023. (Declercq de Silva archive

Figure 19.40: Tomb of Du Guesclin at the Basilica of Saint-Denis in Paris. The photos were taken in 2023. (Declercq de Silva archive

19.25 The Burial Place of Bertrand Du Guesclin

He is buried at Saint-Denis in Paris, as shown in Figure 19.40, the final resting place of the French Kings. Anyone interested in the other tombs associated with Du Guesclin[75] is redirected to other sources.

19.26 Heraldry and the Appearance of Du Guesclin in Spain

19.26.1 Du Guesclin supporting H.M. Enrique de Trastámara of Castile in The Castilian Civil War, and supporting H.M. Peter IV of Aragon in The War of the Two Peters

As Muhammad V of Granada strived to establish and maintain peace in his kingdom, the neighboring realm of Castile, under the rule of Peter I, pursued a contrasting path of almost constant warfare. Peter's belligerent career, which earned him the epithet 'Peter the Cruel,' had its roots in a complex web of dynastic conflicts and geopolitical rivalries.

Peter's tumultuous reign can be traced back to his father, Alfonso XI, a monarch known for his aggression and prolificacy in fathering children. In 1334, Alfonso's wife, Maria of Portugal, gave birth to Peter I, securing the male heir line for the Castilian throne. However, Alfonso's extramarital affair with Eleanor de Guzman, a noblewoman with roots in the Kingdom of Leon's aristocracy, would set in motion a series of events that would shape Peter's future.

Eleanor bore Alfonso several children, further exacerbating Maria's discontent. Her resentment reached its zenith when Eleanor gave birth to ten children. Upon Alfonso XI's death during the plague, while besieging Gibraltar, Maria orchestrated her son Peter's ascent to the throne. Her first act was to have Eleanor imprisoned and executed, a move that would have lasting consequences.

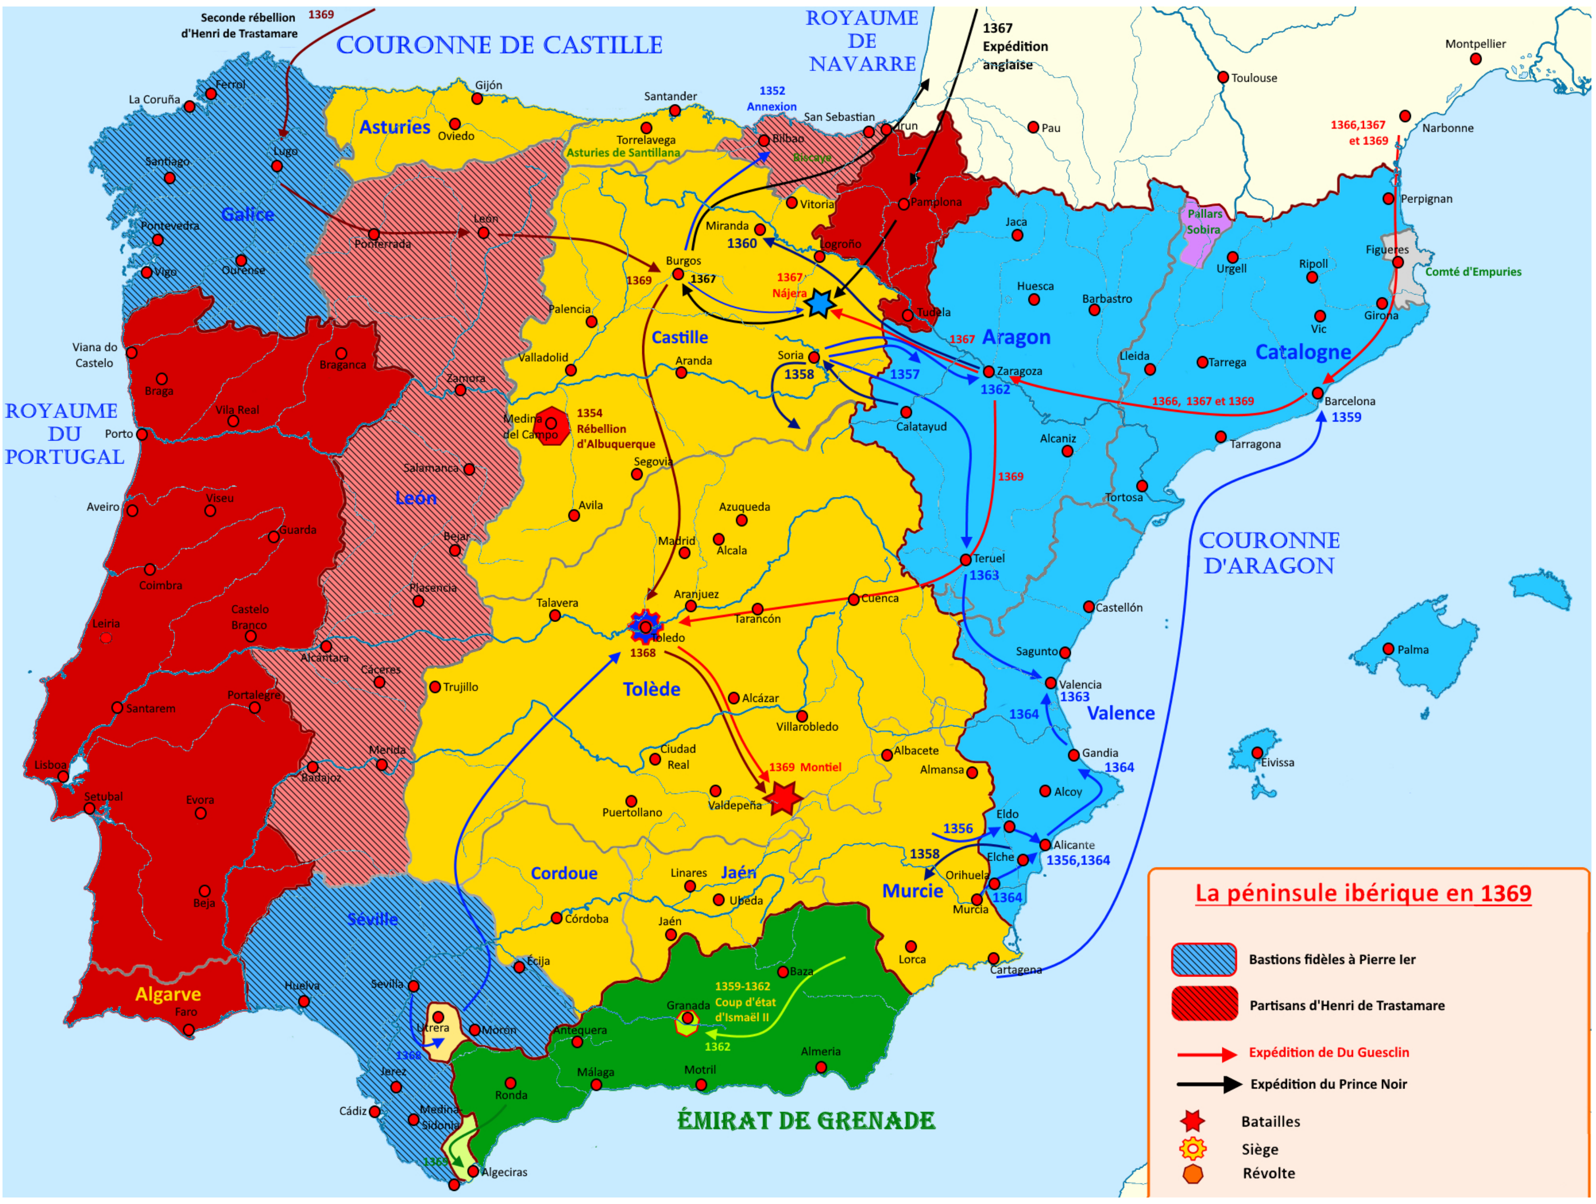
Eleanor's surviving children, collectively known as the House of Trastamara, coexisted with Peter under an agreement but nursed deep grudges against him. One of Eleanor's sons, Henry, born shortly before Peter, would play a pivotal role in the unfolding drama. Some argued that Henry, or Enirque, was a more legitimate heir to the throne. Over time, he and his brothers rebelled against Peter's rule, seeking vengeance for their mother's execution.

This familial strife ignited the Castilian Civil War, a conflict driven by the desire to claim the throne and avenge Eleanor's death. Peter initially quashed Henry's rebellion, but his repeated pardons of his brother allowed Henry to regroup and seek new allies with each uprising.

Meanwhile, the political landscape of Western Europe was undergoing significant changes. The Hundred Years' War between England and France, with their respective allies, raged on. Simultaneously, Castile, under Peter I, engaged in a border conflict with Aragon, led by Peter IV, known as the War of the Two Peters. The event is detailed in Chapter 19.17 on page Chapter 19.17. At the highest level, the Castilian Civil War raged between Peter and his half-brother, Henry de Trastamare. These conflicts became

---

[75] four graves, one containing his heart



COURONNE DE CASTILLE
ROYAUME DE NAVARRE
ROYAUME DU PORTUGAL
COURONNE D'ARAGON
ÉMIRAT DE GRENADE
Seconde rébellion d'Henri de Trastamare 1369
1367 Expédition anglaise
Asturies
Galice
León
Castille
Tolède
Cordoue
Jaén
Murcie
Séville
Algarve
Aragon
Catalogne
Valence
1352 Annexion
1354 Rébellion d'Albuquerque
1367 Nájera
1369 Montiel
1359-1362 Coup d'état d'Ismaël II
1366, 1367 et 1369
1366,1367 et 1369
Pallars Sobira
Comté d'Empuries
La péninsule ibérique en 1369
Bastions fidèles à Pierre Ier
Partisans d'Henri de Trastamare
Expédition de Du Guesclin
Expédition du Prince Noir
Batailles
Siège
Révolte

Figure 19.41: Map of the Iberian Peninsula in 1369 during the war between Peter the Cruel and Henry of Trastámara. Courtesy of Elryck, who made this work and published it on Wikimedia Commons, under Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 international.

NICO HOTEL 70
MARIN

Figure 19.42: 1979, the author with his father Maurice Declercq and his grandfather René Vangheluwe at Pico Veleta, in the Sierra Nevada Mountains of Spain. The image right was taken in 1978, during a short fuel stop at 'Nico Hotel 70' . The place still exists and is now called 'Hotel Restaurante Nico' . It is located at 'Autovia del Nordeste' junction with 'Autovia de Navarra' at Service Station Jacinto Manuel Miguel Santander. At the intersection, one can drive north to Soria (70km), North-East to Zaragoza or South-West to Guadalajara and Madrid. A 2022 view is shown in Figure 19.43. From left to right: Maurice A. Declercq, René Vangheluwe, Nico F. Declercq and Anna Den Dauw, a snapshot from a moving image taken by Nelly M. Vangheluwe. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

EN RECUERDO A NICOLASA CORTES
DE MIGUEL
ESPOSA, MADRE EJEMPLAR
Y MUJER LABORIOSA
NICO HOTEL

Figure 19.43: In 1979, shown in Figure 19.42, the author visited Hotel Nico and returned with his family in 2022. The junction is located in Medinaceli, a place of great historical importance for Spain. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 19.44: Left is a Flamenco dancer in Granada in June 2003. Right is the author, also in 2003, at the Congress Center of Granada with its famous wooden interior design. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 19.45: Left is the House at Mont Saint Michel where it is believed that Bertrand Du Guesclin resided before his departure for Spain. Right is the author's eldest son Benjamin in Zaragoza in 2002. The Catedral-Basílica de Nuestra Señora del Pilar is visible in the background. The city was constructed on the Ebro River. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 19.46: The Catedral-Basílica de Nuestra Señora del Pilar in 2022 with the statue of Nuestra Señora del Pilar. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 19.47: Left is the Shield of Du Guesclin at Saint-Laurent du Puy-en-Velay, France: 'd' argent à l' aigle bicéphale éployée de sable becquée et membrée de gueules, à la cotice du même brochant sur le tout.' Right is the Coat of Arms of the du Guesclin family, Chapelle Notre-Dame-du-Temple, Pléboulle (second half of the XIVth century - Pierre III du Guesclin Lord of Plancoët)(Courtesy of R. Grouazel-Krauss). The shield is also shown in Figure 19.20 on page 175. The use of the gryphon on the coat of arms of the Desclergues may have been inspired by the coat of arms of Du Guesclin. Examples are given in Figure 23.1 on page 247, and in Figure 23.4 on page 249. An explanation of this probably inspiration is depicted in Figure 23.5 on page 250. The gryphon, shown in Figure 9.1 on page 79, was also popular in Phocaea from where the greeks migrated to Empúries, where they married our patrilineal ancestor.

intricately intertwined, drawing in various European powers.

In 1362, Peter I sought to break the War of the Two Peters stalemate by forming alliances with Navarre, England, and Portugal. Together, they launched a full-scale invasion of Aragon, catching Peter IV off guard while conducting diplomacy in France. Castilian forces rapidly captured border territories, but the dynamics changed when Aragon allied with France and Henry de Trastamare joined the conflict.

Henry, a skilled strategist, employed guerrilla tactics that inflicted casualties on the Castilian forces. Their conflict culminated at the Battle of Najera in 1367, a brutal engagement that saw significant losses on both sides. Despite his army's defeat, Henry managed to escape, leaving Peter in a precarious position, and the Castilian Civil War continued.

Peter eventually regained the Castilian throne and allied with Muhammad V of Granada. However, internal turmoil, financial difficulties, and Peter's ruthless actions eroded his popularity, earning him the infamous epithet "Peter the Cruel." His brutal methods, including the execution of disloyal subjects and even members of his own family, further alienated his subjects.

As Peter's grip on the kingdom weakened, Henry of Trastamare prepared for another rebellion. In 1366, Bertrand Du Guesclin, a renowned Breton knight, embarked on an expedition to Spain to support Count Enrique of Trastámara against Pedro I of Castile. This expedition marked a critical turning point in the ongoing conflict.

Du Guesclin, accompanied by soldiers who had been pillaging France after the Treaty of Brétigny, laid siege to several fortresses, including Magallón, Briviesca, and the capital city of Burgos. After being crowned at Burgos, Enrique proclaimed Du Guesclin the "Count of Trastámara" and "King of Granada," although the Nasrids still ruled Granada at the time. This coronation took place between March 16 and April 5, 1366.

In 1369, Henry, backed by France, invaded Castile, leading to the pivotal Battle of Montiel, as described in Chapter 19.21 on page 202. Bertrand Du Guesclin, serving as Henry's commander, played a crucial role in the conflict. Although Pedro I had defeated Enrique at Nájera in 1367 with the support of Edward, the English Black Prince, Du Guesclin had been imprisoned and later released after a ransom was paid by Charles V of France.

The English, victorious but weakened and suffering from dysentery, were unable to provide further support. This allowed Du Guesclin to organize a delayed counterattack with Enrique of Trastámara. Together, they faced Pedro I of Castile in the infamous Battle of Montiel in 1369, a brutal encounter described in detail in other sources. Henry emerged victorious, forcing Peter to flee and seek refuge within Montiel Castle.

Cornered within the castle's walls, Peter attempted to bribe Du Guesclin to help him escape, but he was ultimately betrayed by his half-brother, Enrique, and captured. In a dramatic turn of events, a conflict between the two half-brothers ensued, with Du Guesclin serving as a neutral bystander. As Pedro was about to kill Henry, Du Guesclin intervened, offering an advantage to Henry, who subsequently killed Pedro. Allegedly, Du Guesclin uttered the famous words, "Ni quito ni pongo rey, pero ayudo a mi señor" in Spanish, which translates to "I neither remove nor install a king, but I do help my sire" in English. This expression remains renowned in Spain and signifies someone who acts according to their duty, regardless of moral or justice considerations.

Following this pivotal moment, Du Guesclin received the title of Duke of Molina, marking the beginning of the Franco-Castilian alliance. Henry's ruthless act marked the end of the Castilian Civil War and the establishment of the Trastámara Dynasty. The political landscape of Castile shifted, and the relationship between Castile and Granada fluctuated over the years, with periods of hostility and warfare interspersed with treaty agreements.

In the early 15th century, Castile made territorial gains, but the Reconquista was temporarily deferred due to political instability. Only when Isabella I ascended to the Castilian throne in 1474 was a determined effort to complete the Reconquista launched. In less than two decades, Granada would fall, ending over 800 years of Muslim rule in Al-Andalus and decisively achieving the Reconquista.

However, Granada's survival during the preceding centuries was not solely due to Castile's incapacity. The kingdom's internal strife and external conflicts played a significant role in shaping its fate. While Granada experienced inner turmoil and factional power struggles, it managed to survive and expand its territory during Muhammad V's reign, marking a period of prosperity and diplomatic finesse.

Yet, upon Muhammad V's death in 1391, the Nasrid dynasty faced increasing discord and decline. Granada's internal disintegration intensified, leading to numerous rulers and a revolving door of reigns. Despite these challenges, Granada managed to persist, while Castile's ability to launch successful offensives remained uncertain.

Alfonso XI's innovations in artillery were significant, but Castile's rulers lacked the resolve for a full-scale invasion of Granada. However, with the ascension of Isabella, a determined queen, Granada's fate was sealed. In less than two decades, Castile's Reconquista efforts led to the fall of Granada, ending Muslim rule in Al-Andalus.

Isabella's reign marked the completion of the Reconquista, though the kingdom's decline had been a prolonged process. Al-Andalus, which had thrived for centuries, ceased to exist, forever altering the political and cultural landscape of the Iberian Peninsula.

19.26.2 Recorded places visited by Du Guesclin in Spain

Only some places Bertrand Du Guesclin visited are reported in the literature. However, it is possible to reconstruct his path based on what is registered. For instance, he came via Perpignan to Girona and Barcelona. He likely met Desclergues at that time relating to the financing of his endeavors because some of them were bankers. In contrast, others were notaries, had high ecclesiastic positions, and even held professorships. It is also where he must have met the Turró or de Torró family since he allied with a daughter of that family and would have children with her later in Soria.

We refer to the book by Michael Jones, 'Letters, Orders and Musters of Bertrand du Guesclin,' The Boydell Press, 2003.

While Du Guesclin was still reported at Montpellier on December 3, 1365, he appeared in Barcelona on January 1, 1366. Therefore, at some point between these two dates, he traveled to Spain. Jones further lists:

Barcelona (6 and 9 January 1366), Tarragona (2 and 6 February 1366), Zaragoza (February 20, 1366), the gates of Tudela (March 8, 1366), Calahorra (around March 16, 1366), San Vincente (March 24, 1366), Las Huelgas - Burgos (from March 29 until April 5, 1366), Estella (April 26, 1366), Toledo (May 5 1366), Sevilla (July 3, 1366), Albaterra (July 20 1366), Haro (January 2, 1367), Santa Cruz de Campezo (early January 1367), Zaragoza (around January 29 and around February 16, 1367), Lleida (24 and 27 February 1367), Banares (early March 1367), Zaragoza (on or before March 22, 1367), Battle of Najera (April 3, 1367), Najera (April 3, 1367).

Before December 7, 1367, he appeared in Bordeaux, France. Then he moved towards France's areas, such as the Provence, Montpellier, etc., to enter Spain again and cross Aragon (15 and 20 December 1368).

Furthermore, Jones lists the following places:

Borja (February 4, 1369), Orgaz (around March 10, 1369), the battle of Montiel (March 14, 1369, explained in Chapter 19.21 on page 202), in the areas around Montiel (March 16, 1369), Montiel (22-23 March 1369), Soria (June 26, 1369), Zamora, Galicia and Northern Portugal where he very likely took part in the sieges of Braganza and Guimares by Enrique de Trastámara (July-August 1369), Zaragoza (before September 11, 1369), Soria (around October 20, 1369), Soria (November 2, 1369), Toro (November 18, 1369), Soria (around December 18, 1369), Almazan (December 25, 1369), San Mateo (before February 15, 1370), Soria (February 19, 1370), a departure from Soria for Vozmediano (before April 1, 1370), Soria (April 26, 1370), Atienza (May 11, 1370), San Esteban de Gormaz (around May 24, 1370), Soria (June 20, 1370), Borja (June 23, 1370), Borja (June 26, 1370).

Then, Du Guesclin followed the route via Agreda, Tarrazona, Borja, Magallon, Tudela, Jaca, and across the Pyrenees back into France, during which he crossed the Ebro River around July 2, 1370.

He arrived in Moissac, in France, on July 26, 1370. His subsequent adventures all occur in France, with a close encounter with Spain on May 1, 1374, at Carcassonne, May 19, 1374, at Narbonne, and June 2, 1374, at Carcassonne.

The personal life of Du Guesclin is a tale of drama and intrigue. It is believed that in 1365, he resided at Mont-Saint Michel, shown in Figure 19.45, with his wife Tiphaine Raguenel, an astrologer of noble descent, whom he likely married in 1363. This was just before his fateful journey to Spain. However, the children he would have in Spain were not from his marriage but from an affair with his 'Dame de Torró de Soria.' The story takes a tragic turn with the passing of Tiphaine Raguenel in 1373, without having any children of her own.

19.26.3 The Presence and Liberation of Montblanc by Du Guesclin in the Records of 1366-1370

Despite the possibility that Du Guesclin visited Montblanc multiple times during his campaigns in Spain, our analysis is constrained to extant documents. Notably, from the summer of 1369 until the summer of 1370, Du Guesclin is documented to have been active west and southwest of Zaragoza. However, this does not exclude the possibility of his presence elsewhere, including Montblanc, though this remains speculative for this period. For other timeframes, our evidence is more concrete.

A significant document issued by King Pere IV of Aragon suggests Du Guesclin passed through Montblanc in 1365. As detailed in Chapter 19.26.2, Du Guesclin was recorded in Tarragona on February 2 and 6, 1366, and in Zaragoza on February 20, 1366. It is reasonable to infer that he may have been in Montblanc between these dates. Figures 19.45 and 19.46 provide images of Zaragoza.

The year 1370 offers a specific link between Du Guesclin and Montblanc, although his direct presence in the town that year is unlikely. A letter from Enrique II, dated June 10, 1370, indicates that Du Guesclin had already departed. Alfred Morel-Fatio corroborates this, noting that Du Guesclin and his troops left before June 10, 1370[76].

Michael Jones' compilation[77] reveals that Du Guesclin was in Moissac, France, on July 26, 1370, and had crossed the Ebro River by July 2, 1370, following a route that did not include Montblanc.

Additionally, a Corts assembly was held in 1370, starting in April and extending over several months in three cities, including Montblanc. Specifically, the Corts took place in Montblanc in October 1370[78]. Ferrer and Vives document that King Pere IV convened the Catalan Corts to prepare for Catalonia's defense against foreign mercenaries[79].

In the year prior, on June 25, 1369, defensive reinforcements for towns including Montblanc were ordered by Pere IV[80]. This directive aimed to fortify cities against threats, which was attributed to Du Guesclin's activities in the region. Correspondence from Pere IV to his son on June 25, 1369, highlights the urgency of these preparations due to Du Guesclin's perceived threat[81].

From these references, we can infer that Du Guesclin played a crucial role in the liberation or conquest of Montblanc on behalf of Enrique II. The timing of the Corts in Montblanc in October 1370, combined with Du Guesclin's presence in Spain until early June, supports the hypothesis that he was instrumental in Montblanc's liberation before his departure to France.

19.26.4 The Spanish format of Du Guesclin's name

The French format of Bertrand Du Guesclin's name is outlined in Chapter 75, where some versions closely resemble De Clergue or Desclergue. Here, we describe the appearances in Spain.

We again refer to Michael Jones[82]. Du Guesclin appears in many documents written by others, which gives an idea of what others used to call him. We are interested, however, in how he referred to himself. As can be seen below, the way he referred to himself is very close to 'DeClergue' (or Desclergue), which may have been yet another reason for the descendants from whom we stem from choosing the name Desclergue after their mother, rather than Torró after their father. Indeed, during his Spanish appearances (1365-1370), he appears in his own documents as follows (spelling is as is):

-'Bertran de Glesquin, conte de Longueville et signeur de la Roche Tesson' (December 22, 1365, document 133),

-'Bertran de Glerquin, duch de Trestamera, conte de Longevile et de Borges' (July 3, 1366, document 163),

-'Beltran de Claquin, duc de Molina, et Conde de Longavilla et de Borja et de Magallon, et Senor de Soria' (June 26, 1369, document 292),

-'Bertran du Guerclin, duc de Molines, conte de Longueville et de Bourges' (November 18, 1369, document 311),

-'Bertran du Guerclin, duc de Mouline, conte de Longueville, seigneur de Sorie et de la Roche Tesson' (April 26, 1370, document 329),

-'Nos don mosen Beltran, duc de Moljina, conde de Longavila, senor de Soria e de Borja e de Magallon' (May 11, 1370, document 331).

The Spanish name formats, as well as the French, are consistent with the theory that Bertrand Du Guesclin may have descended from a certain Aquin, who was actually a Desclergue, as exposed in Chapter 19.11.

19.26.5 Heraldry of the Du Guesclin family

The coat of arms of the Du Gesclin family is shwown in Figure 19.47 on page 207.

---

[76] Alfred Morel-Fatio, 'La donation du duché de Molina à Bertrand Du Guesclin,' Bibliothèque de l'école des chartes, tome 60, pp. 145-176, 1899.

[77] Michael Jones, 'Letters, Orders and Musters of Bertrand du Guesclin,' The Boydell Press, 2003.

[78] La corona catalanoaragonesa i el seu entorn mediterrani a la baixa edat mitjana: actes del seminari celebrat a Barcelona, els dies 27 i 28 de novembre de 2003.

[79] Maria Teresa Ferrer i Mallol and Josefa Mutgé Vives, 'La corona catalanoaragonesa i el seu entorn mediterrani a la baixa edat mitjana,' Editorial CSIC – CSIC Press, Catalonia, Spain, 2005.

[80] Bertrand Du Guesclin (Count of Longueville), 'Letters, Orders and Musters of Bertrand Du Guesclin, 1357-1380.'

[81] ACAragón, Reg. 1081 fo. 60r-v.

[82] Michael Jones, 'Letters, Orders and Musters of Bertrand du Guesclin' , The Boydell Press, 2003.

19.26.6 The seal of Du Guesclin upon his arrival in Spain: The Gryphon

Nobles sealed their letters and documents with wax, on which they pressed a stamp with their seal. Du Guesclin typically used only red wax. Several seals were used of different sizes, and of the ones that survived, only a handful are in satisfactory condition for examination.

Michael Jones lists the descriptions of these seals and how Du Guesclin appears on them. Here we focus only on his time of arrival in Spain.

On May 31, 1364, and August 22, 1365 (documents 67, 108, 109, and 159), he used the following seal:

'A small (17/19 mm) round seal or signet of arms couche, a crest, on a helmet, a gryphon's head between two wings erect, charged with a double-headed eagle, as in the shield; supporters, a wildman or standing female figure (dexter), a griffon (sinister), beaded borders, and with the legend: S B' TRAN DOU GUERCLIN.'[83].

The supporters of Du Guesclin's seal are of particular interest. The placement of a griffin on the sinister side and a wild man or standing female figure on the dexter side is not merely a design choice, but a deliberate symbol of a marital alliance. This alliance is further emphasized by Du Guesclin in his heraldic coat of arms, which he presents on the seal for his purposes in Spain. The gryphon, we may infer, is a reference to a Byzantine history of Du Guesclin's ancestry, while the female figure underscores the ideals of nobility, grace, and refinement, highlighting the high status and cultured nature of the Torró family. This deeper understanding of the symbolism enriches our analysis of Du Guesclin's seals.

The appearance of the Gryphon on the Helmet, equally visible in Figure 19.20 on page 175, with erected wings, is the one that appears on the Desclergues coat of arms on the house at Montblanc, shown in Figure 23.1.

Michael Jones, as mentioned above, does not show a picture of Du Guesclin's seal. Other seals more often showed an eagle than a gryphon as a helmet sign in different periods. In Figure 19.47, at Chapelle Notre-Dame-du-Temple, Pléboulle, France, reveals the coat of arms of the Du Guesclin family in the second half of the 14th century; in this case, an eagle as a helmet sign is used rather than a gryphon.

The use of the Gryphon by Bertrand Du Guesclin is a remnant of his link to the Borrell family, Counts of Barcelona, as explained in Chapter 19.13.3.

19.26.7 The shield of Du Guesclin as Count of Trastamara

The chevron with fleur-de-lis in a heraldic shield can symbolize several meanings. It might suggest a family's French heritage or ties to France, indicating a French connection. Additionally, it could represent an alliance or relationship with another family using fleur-de-lis in their heraldic shield, possibly through marriage or friendship. The fleur-de-lis often symbolizes purity, loyalty, and honor, so a chevron with fleur-de-lis may convey these virtues. Furthermore, depending on the historical and geographical context, the fleur-de-lis might also be a regional or cultural symbol, representing a connection to a specific area or culture.

To accurately interpret the meaning of a chevron with fleur-de-lis in a coat of arms, it is essential to consider the family's history, the context of the coat of arms' creation, and any documented explanations. Heraldic symbols often have layered meanings and histories that can vary significantly between different cases.

The inclusion of the Torró fleur-de-lis in Du Guesclin's Trastamara shield is, therefore, not necessarily indicative of a direct French connection.

Figure 23.6 on page 251 illustrates the genesis of the shield of Bertrand Du Guesclin as the Count of Trastamara. This shield combines his family crest, depicted in Figure 19.47 on page 207, with a chevron featuring three fleurs-de-lis from the Torró family, as shown in Figure 20.2 on page 216. This amalgamation signifies a new Spanish lineage initiated by Du Guesclin and his Dame de Soria, presumably a Torró family member. However, when Enrique de Trastamara lost power, Du Guesclin forfeited the title, and consequently, his descendants no longer used this shield. Instead, they continued under the Torró name, blending with their established Torró relatives.

19.27 DNA Analysis Exposing the Connection with Du Guesclin

19.27.1 DNA Evidence of Du Guesclin as the Originator of the Desclergues of Montblanc

The reader might decide to read Chapter 73.10.3.1, Chapter 73.10.4.3, and Chapter 73.10.4.7 first. The DNA analysis indicates a deeper Brittanic root that is more ancient than the detected Spanish roots. We have no access to the DNA of Bertrand Du Guesclin, but we did find, first, a person from nearby (R. Grouazel-Krauss, also described in Chapter 19.27.12) who has a Y-DNA Haplogroup separated from ours during the last 1500 years. It is indeed estimated that our common ancestor lived between 1000 and 1500 years ago. This person is from Ruca, the middle between Chateau de Glay (Saint Coulomb) and Broons (where Du Guesclin was born), i.e., 40 km from each. The three places are each located 20 km from Dinan. He has a paper trail at Ruca in 1584 when his paternal ancestor was born as an illegitimate son of Jeanne Groasel from a wealthy local family of church builders. The godparents are both members of the ancient Gueheneuc bloodlines of Bretagne, which suggests a biological father being either a Gueheneuc or another related ancient Briton bloodline, Boisguehenneuc or Uuethenoc. The coat of arms of Du Guesclin shows, through similarities and heraldic tradition, that both families have chivalric and likely blood ties. Traces of DNA are still found in the DNA of the Desclergues, which they have in common with ancient Breton families. This fact proves that the ancestral line must have lived and blended several generations in Brittany. The amount of such DNA is significantly smaller than the amount of DNA in common with Spanish families. It means that the Breton DNA dates further back in history (700- 1400) than the traces resulting from mixing with Spanish families in the period at Montblanc (1400- 1600) and the early period in Belgium when marriages with Spanish were preferred above local unions (1600- 1700). A more extensive DNA analysis is shown next, where we briefly describe the DNA connection between the Desclergues of Montblanc and a sample from Ruca in Brittany, i.e., that of R. Grouazel-Krauss, followed by other samples which are as good as 100% genetically imbedded in Brittany. More connections are found in the Chapter 73.10.4.3.

Later, the DNA of a Du Guesclin from France was also examined and it delivered the same Y-DNA Haplogroup as the author. We refer to Chapter 19.27.3 for the analysis.

In Chapter 19.27.2, we expose a link with the Royal House of Aragon and the Counts of Barcelona, indicating that the direct descendants of Bertrand Du Guesclin must have had good reasons to marry a Desclergue from Barcelona. In Chapter 19.27.4, the early study involving DNA of R. Grouazel-Krauss from Ruca in Brittany is described. Then, in Chapter 19.27.5, Chapter 19.27.6, and Chapter 19.27.7, we describe persons with whom we share autosomal DNA, who have a Du Guesclin as ancestor. In Chapter 19.27.11, a sample is described with deep roots in Bretagne (Côtes d'Armor), where, in Broons near Dinan, the birthplace of Bertrand du Guesclin, is found. This sample has autosomal DNA in common with Desclergue and Du Guesclin in Chapter 19.27.5. Other samples of particular interest are given in Chapter 19.27.8, Chapter 19.27.9, and Chapter 19.27.10.

---

[83] Michael Jones, 'Letters, Orders and Musters of Bertrand du Guesclin' , The Boydell Press, 2003, page XIII

Figure 19.48: Queen Petronila of Aragon and count Ramon Berenguer IV of Barcelona, oil canvas 1634 (Prado Museum). They are our ancestors, as outlined in Chapter 27.2 on page 301.

19.27.2 The Counts of Barcelona and the Royal House of Aragon

In Figure 19.16 on page 166, Figure 19.15 on page 165, Figure 18.11 on page 133, and Figure 34.156 on page 578, the reader can see how the Desclergues are related to the House of the Counts of Barcelona.

In section Chapter 73.5, a DNA connection was revealed between Desclergue and the Royal House of Aragon and the Counts of Barcelona through Ramon Berenguer IV. We assume such a link may be due to a yet-to-be-discovered marriage between a Desclergue from Barcelona and this family. A connection through our Cortés ancestors is established, as outlined in Chapter 27.2.

Ramon Berenguer IV (Barcelona, 1113 - Borgo San Dalmazzo, August 8, 1162), shown in Figure 19.48 on page 211, was a son of Count Ramon Berenguer III of Barcelona and his second wife Dulce of Provence. He succeeded his father as Count of Barcelona in 1131. He was also a count of Osona and Besalú. In 1137, he became Prince of Aragon through his betrothal to Petronila of Aragon (1136-1174), daughter of Ramiro II. Ramon Berenguer supported the Reconquista and succeeded in reconquering Almería in 1147. As Count of Barcelona, he fought against the Count of Toulouse and gained the lordship of Béarn. He was the father of Alfons II (1154-1196), Dolça (1159-1198), Pere (1161-1213), and Ramon Berenguer III of Provence (died in 1181). Dolça married Sancho I of Portugal (1154-1211) in 1175. Pere became King Peter II of Aragon and died in 1213 at the Battle of Muret. Ramon Berenguer III of Provence became the Count of Provence and died in 1181.

19.27.3 The Du Guesclin Haplogroup

Figure 19.49 shows that a sample, taken from a du Guesclin from France, examined anonymously after having been requested by Grouazel, has the same Y-DNA Haplogroup as the author, namely R-FGC46150, which proves that both have the same patrilineal ancestor. We further refer to Chapter 73.10.3.1 for more links to Brittany.

19.27.4 A sample of R. Grouazel-Krauss from Ruca in Brittany, male descendant of Guéhéneuc

The Haplogroup FGC46150 - R-FGC82424 of Grouazel-Krauss differs from other Grouazels in Brittany (mostly R-S16264), which confirms the speculation that they originate from Uuetgenoc and Boisguehenneuc as described before, instead of an ancient Grouazel ancestor. They split off from R-FGC46150 as R-FGC82424/FGC13015. A sub-branch of their Haplogroup even ended up in Germany in recent history.

This sample is essential in the context of our Y-DNA analysis and, therefore, the paternal ancestry leading to Bertrand Du Guesclin. Both subjects did the analysis and collaborated with the experts of YFull®, FamilyTreeDNA®, genebase®, Ysearch® and, in particular, Alex Williamson, Gareth Henson, and Stephen Parrish.

The considered DNA samples are of Nico F. Declercq, a patrilineal descendant of the Desclergues of Montblanc and, therefore, a patrilineal descendant of Bertrand Du Guesclin. His DNA is registered in FamilyTreeDNA® as sample 'IN22013' and 'YF13887' on YFull®; and of Romain Grouazel-Krauss, a patrilineal descendant of an ancient Breton family. His DNA is registered in FamilyTreeDNA® as sample '169843' and 'YF67901' on YFull®. The common Y-DNA Haplogroup of N.F. Declercq and of R. Grouazel-Krauss is R-FGC46150, on the genetic tree of humans M173 - M343(=R1b) - L754 - L389 - M297 - M269 - L23 - L51 - L151 - P312 - DF27 - Z195 - Z198 - ZS312 - Z267 - SRY2627(=RM-167) - Z202 - R-BY3266 - R-BY3265 - R-FGC46150. As indicated earlier, the Grouazel-Krauss Haplogroup differs as FGC82424/FGC13015 of the common R-FGC46150 Haplogroup. Their Y-DNA is not genetically identical because each has different mutations, which occurred later than the R-FGC46150 mutation. In other words, they have a paternal ancestor in common, whose DNA has undergone the R-FGC46150 modification.

According to YDNA results (111 STR values) as well as all 'BIG Y' SNP values of both individuals, Desclergues and Grouazel 's most distant common ancestor (MDCA) lived sometime between 700and 1300 (with the highest probability 1056 years ago, i.e. 963 AD). The estimation was based on an average value of 35.2 years per generation. Knowing that Brittany's legal custom to get married and pregnant in Medieval times was about 11 to 14 years old, we could expect a younger estimation.

Figure 19.49: FamilyTreeDNA has a sample of a du Guesclin from France who tested his DNA anonymously, after being requested by Grouazel, and ended up with the same Haplogroup as the author, namely R-FGC46150.

If we take a standardized approach, using MyMcGee®, applying the 'infinite allele mutation model' by using an average mutation rate of 0.0034 based on FamilyTreeDNA® data, and an average generation of 30 years, then we obtain the following results: It is 5% sure that a common ancestor lived less than 780 years ago (after 1240 AD), it is 50% certain that a common ancestor lived less than 1100 years ago (after 920 AD), and it is 95% sure that a common ancestor lived less than 1500 years ago (after 520 AD). Usually, the 50% value is used as an age estimate of the most recent common ancestor, with an error range of around 150 years. We can increase this uncertainty by approximately 40 years to account for the birthdate of the persons who provided samples. In other words, if we apply standard estimations, we can say that NFD and RGK had a common ancestor between 800 and 1100 with, given the typically young age of marriage in Brittany, as mentioned above, a common ancestor very likely around 1100 AD.
Given the story told about the ancestors of Du Guesclin, namely King Aquin, in Chapter 19.7, or alternative explanations given in Chapter 19.8, we must place these ages in the light of the reign of Charlemagne, who lived from 742until 814 AD. It means that the common ancestor of Grouazel-Krauss and Desclergue lived not long after the reign of Charlemagne and was likely a descendant of the Spanish conquerer of the castle of Glay on whom the legend of King Aquin is based. Desclergue also has distant DNA links to old Breton families, besides the vast presence of Spanish DNA, which confirms these conclusions.
The Haplogroup R-FGC46150, to which both Desclergue and Grouazel-Krauss belong, is a subclade of BY3266. When we check the database of FamilyTreeDNA® which shows a 'Public DNA Haplotree' based on the collected information by the Genographic Project of Nation Geographic®, we can see that of the known individuals who belong to BY3266 (and its subclades), 47% are Iberian (16% Portuguese and 31% Spanish), and 23% very likely have Iberian roots, while 30% are French. In other words, around 2/3 are Iberian, and 1/3 are from France. Unfortunately, we don't know which regions in France, but most are likely from near the Pyrenees regions because that's also where SRY2627 is most prevalent in France, though less outspoken than in Spain. Of the 30% French, 1/4 is due to Grouazel-Krauss; therefore, the French contribution is even more minor without this sample.
Using the Iain McDonald Method® , Big Tree® estimates that BY3266 originates (with 95% confidence) between 456 BC and 800 AD, most likely time 365 AD. Therefore, we can be confident that it formed before the era of Charlemagne and, because of the prevalence of Iberian, did so in Iberia before the Islamic influence from 711 onward.

19.27.5 A sample of Nadine Isabelle Ulrich, descendant of Robert II Du Guesclin

In the Geneanet® database, as sample is found of Nadine Isabelle Ulrich with 10.8 centiMorgan autosomal DNA in common with the author on Chromosome 12.
The genealogical connection between Robert II Du Guesclin and Nadine Isabelle Ulrich is found on Geneanet® and is as follows: Robert II Du Guesclin (around 1300 - around 1353) & 1319 Jeanne de Malesmains (around 1300 – around 1350) > Clemence Du Guesclin & Raoul II de Beauchamps > Guillemette de Beauchamps & Jean de Colombieres (1366-1403) > Olivier de Colombieres (dead around 1430) & Valentine de Villiers (married in 1413) > Jeanne de Colombieres (1415) & Jean III de Saint-Germain (dead in 1449) > Foulques de Saint-Germain & Maline d'Esquay > Fernand de Saint-Germain & Olive de Marguerye > Michel de Saint-Germain (dead around 1493) & Guillemette de L'Oraille (dead in 1525) > Anne de Saint-Germain & Jean II Du Mesnildot (born around 1470 and married in 1494) > Michel Du Mesnildot & Marie de Marigny > Louise Du Mesnildot & Cyprien Le Tresor (dead in 1595) > Jacques Le Tresor & Suzanne de Pierrepont (married in 1600) > Jacqueline Le Tresor (1623-1707) &1661 Jean Herouard (around 1607-1667) > Marie Herouard (around 1652-1713) & Olivier Germain (around 1649-1704, married in 1671) > Guillemette Germain & Gilles Vivier (around 1676-1746, married in 1713) > Gilles Michel Tanguy Vivier (1716-1766) & Charlotte Marie Vaultier (1727-1782, married in 1743) > Marie Anne Vivier (1758-1811) & Pierre Antoine Lemarquier (1758-1823, married in 1782) > Aimable Anne Louise Lemarquier (1797-1879) & Jean Francois Coudrey (1790-1856, married in 1818) > Apolline Desiree Coudrey (1821-1888) & Louis Edouard Le Bastard (1816-1875, married in 1844) > Eugene Auguste Le Bastard (1855-1888) & Eugenie Josephine Andre (1855-1900, married in 1878) > Albertine Apolline Louise Le Bastard (1885-1924) & Louis Ferdinand Ulrich (1883-1950, married in 1906) > Henri Lucien Emile Ulrich (1907-1972) & Lucienne Speurt (1907-1998, married in 1927) > Louis Ferdinand Ulrich (born in 1931) & Louise Suzanne Duclos > Nadine Isabelle Ulrich.

We further refer to Chapter 73.10.3.1 for more links to Brittany.

19.27.6 A sample of Marguerite Emma De Myttenaere, descendant of Robert II Du Guesclin

In the Geneanet® database, a sample is found of Marguerite Emma De Myttenaere with 7.9 centiMorgan autosomal DNA in common with the author on Chromosome 12. The genealogical connection between Robert II Du Guesclin and Marguerite Emma De Myttenaere is found on Geneanet® and is as follows:
Robert II Du Guesclin (around 1300 - around 1353) & 1319 Jeanne de Malesmains (around 1300 – around 1350) > Clemence Du Guesclin & Fraslin II de HUSSON > Henri III de Husson (1342-1395) & Thomasse de Hellande (born in 1345) > Jeanne de Husson (born around 1395) & Jean de Rantot > Guillemine de Rantot (dead in 1472) & Guillaume Le Berseur (born in 1424) > Thomas Le Berseur & Marie Le Chatel de Bruyeres > Cardette Le Berseur & Philippe Nicolas Lefebvre (dead around 1553) > Peronne Lefebvre (born around 1478) & Jean Baptiste des Tailleurs (born around 1475) > Jehanne des Tailleurs (around 1500 - around 1595) & Eliachim Lezaire (married around 1520) > Henry Ignace Lezaire (born around 1520) & Marie Marissal (born around 1525) > Jacques Lezaire (around 1555-1620) & Martine Petronille Du Castel (around 1565 - 1626, married around 1591) > Jacques Lezaire (1602-1626) & Gilette D'Halluin (born in 1607) > Charles Lezaire (1629-1694) & Marie Anne Heddebaut (born in 1634, married around 1653) > Catherine Lezaire (born in 1659 & Jacques Salembier (1661-1702) > Jacques Simon Salembier (1698-1738) & Marie Masure (around 1701-1752, married in 1730) > Marie Joseph Salembier (1737-1812) & Pierre-Joseph Niffle (1734-1805, married in 1757) > Jean-Baptiste Niffle (1770-1809) & Catherine Joseph Derzelle (1772-1801, married in 1794) > Catherina Josepha Niffle (1798-1884) & Joannes Baptista De Myttenaere (1797-1878, married in 1832) > Constantinus De Myttenaere (1842-1925) & Leonie-Maria Delroeux (1858-1934, married in 1884) > Marguerite Emma De Myttenaere 1894-1979 .
We further refer to Chapter 73.10.3.1 for more links to Brittany.

19.27.7 A sample of Vargas-Kolabukoff, descendant of Pierre III Du Guesclin

In the Geneanet® database, a sample is found of Vargas-Kolabukoff with 8.9 centiMorgan autosomal DNA in common on Chromosome 7 with the author.
The genealogical connection between Pierre III Du Guesclin and Margaret Vargas is found on Geneanet®, through her grandfather Marcel Elisee Duhem, and is as follows:
Pierre III Du Guesclin & Jeanne De Montfort > Thiphaine Du Guesclin (born in 1335) & Bertrand de Chateaubriand (1340-1398) > Philipotte de Chateaubriand (born in 1375) & Geoffroy de Chourses de Chourses (born in 1380) > Guy de Chourses (born around 1400) & Marie de Beaumont Bressuire (1407-1461) > Jean II de Chourses & Marie de Vivonne > André de Chourses (born in 1455) & 1474 Jeanne de Feschal > Pierre de Chourses & Jacqueline de la Chapelle > Madeleine de Souches (born in 1510) & Rolland de Mercastel (born in 1505) > Jeanne de Mercastel (born around 1550) & Adrien Mabille (born in 1540) > Anne Mabille 1603-1675 & Toussaint Staquet (1595-1675, married in 1625) > Andre Staquet (1640-1690) & Anne Deleau (born in 1640, married in 1663) > Gilles Staquet (1680-1750) & Marie André (1671-1761, married in 1703) > Anne Catherine Staquet (1708-1778) & Jean Simon Tison (1707-1765, married in 1730) > Martin Tison (1734-1810) & Marie Josephe Boulvin (1733-1809, married in 1759) > Joachim Joseph Tison (1764-1810) & Marie Antoinette Felix (born in 1772, married in 1790) > Adrien Joseph Tison (1796-1875) & Léonore Robasse (1800-1877, married in 1823) > Désirée Tison (1833-1907) & Louis Gosselin (1830-1889, married in 1858) > Juliette Gosselin (born in 1866) & Elisee Duhem (1866-1920, married in 1892) > Marcel Elisee Duhem (1895-1961) & Jeanne Marie Mollet (born in 1899, married in 1920)
We further refer to Chapter 73.10.3.1 for more links to Brittany.

19.27.8 A sample of F. Guézénnec

This sample shows that old DNA remains from Brittany are still found in our autosomal DNA. The name 'Guézénnec' is the West-Brittany form of the term 'Guéhéneuc.' This DNA sample has been made available through her son B. C. Desmortreux on Geneanet®. An autosomal comparison reveals two shared segments, 18.7 centiMorgans in total, the most extended segment being 11.2 centiMorgans. This sample represents Bretagne, given the ancestry tree, which almost wholly consists of family names associated with Brittany. Until Generation 4, we find the specific words Guézennec and Louédec. Further on the ancestry, the illustrious names from Brittany appear, such as: De Kerven de Kersulec, De Cornouaille, Le Manach Moyne, Le Trouadec, Braouezec, Le Bihan, Fouenec, Crechguen, Gueguen, le Grider, Coguen, Sourimant, le Bouédec, le Bellec, Quemener, Guézennec, Louédec, Deunff, Le Helchat, Goupil, Coat, Callarec, Kergoat, Rihouay, Le Guinezre, Jourdain, Cleach, Quere, Meriadec, Le Cotty, le Guilloux.
We further refer to Chapter 73.10.3.1 for more links to Brittany.

19.27.9 A sample of B. Chaix

This sample of B. Chaix, grandson of J. B. Rioux from Brittany, on Geneanet®, also shows that the old DNA from Brittany is still found in our autosomal DNA. However, there may also be some form of Catalonia because B. Chaix has two grandparents from the Alpes-Côte d' Azur area in France. We share 18.9 centiMorgans with this person, the most extended segment being 11.2 centiMorgans. His ancestry is mainly embedded around Morbihan in Brittany. Among his ancestors, we find, often in multiple branches, Guézénnec, Le Bihan, Guillo, Roperh, Giquel, Ollichon, Le Bris, Gallerne, Riant, Le Couedic, Raoul, Le Bot, Guingat, le Coq, Kervazol, Le Gall, Le Peru, Jegouic, Duault, Videlo, Le Chanony, Le Bigot, Le Couedic, Riant, Alliot, Le Drogo, Le Meur, Moizan, Hellart and Le Pottier.
We further refer to Chapter 73.10.3.1 for more links to Brittany.

19.27.10 A sample of M. Cariou

This sample, on Geneanet®, also shows that the old remains of DNA from Brittany are still found in our autosomal DNA. We share 12.7 centiMorgans with this person in one segment. Her ancestry is chiefly rooted in Finistère in Brittany. Among her ancestors, we find Cariou, Pernes, Frambourg, Daret, Struillou, Pernés, Lezervant, Le Tareau, Le Pape, Coupa, Le Calvez, Le Bec, Andro, La Palud, Le Cossec, Peron, Kernau, Pober, Le Bleis, Le Ballacon, Cadiou, Le Lay, Le Certen, Le Quemener, Falgoas, Le Cam, Le Facheux, Le Gars, Penizic, Folgoas, Andreau, Odiern, Compas, Deic, Chatalen and Routuler.
We further refer to Chapter 73.10.3.1 for more links to Brittany.

19.27.11 A sample of Cloarec-Le Prunennec-Le Parlouer

This sample, on Geneanet® (account laurie1312), with which we share 7.7 centiMorgan autosomal DNA on Chromosome 12, has deep roots in the corner of Brittany where Du Guesclin is from, namely in the Côtes d'Armor. In particular, the person's ancestor are Cloarec, Le Prunennec, Le Parlouer, but also Le Caodou, Le Patézour, Le Louam, Lescope, Le Guillou, Troadec, Derrien, l'Horset, Le Chevanton, Le Duff, Denes, Tugdual, Loas, Le Flem, Le Judec, Le Maignan, Kerbrat, Tual, Keranhoat, Le Guen, Le Coz, Le Moullec, Dornadic, and Boniec.

Interestingly, on Chromosome 12, this sample shares the same autosomal DNA with Desclergue as it shares with the sample of Chapter 19.27.5, who has Du Guesclin as an ancestor. The combination of these samples and the others described forms undisputable evidence that the Desclergues have autosomal DNA segments from Du Guesclin that are deeply rooted in Brittany. This knowledge, together with the Y-DNA Haplogroup, proves the patrilineal descendence.

We further refer to Chapter 73.10.3.1 for more links to Brittany.

19.27.12 The Brittanic Grouazel-Krauss family as Descendants of Uuethenoc and Boisguehenneuc

Figure 19.50: Ruca, February 13, 1584, the baptism of an illegitimate son of Jeanne Grouazel. Both godparents were 'Guéhéneuc' . The records transcribes as, 'Julien groasel [né] hors mariage de Janne groasel fut baptisé par Dom [Michel] Regnaud au dit jour et an parain fut Jullien gueheneuc marainne anne gueheneuc en Ruca Mi[chel] Regnaud Xxxxxxx'

We acknowledge R. Grouazel-Krauss on this matter and thank him for his help in searching links between the Desclergues and Du Guesclin. His expertise in Brittany's history and his passion for Celtic languages were inspirational for our investigations.

This branch descends from a Guehenneuc paternal ancestry line from Brittany's old Uuethenoc and Boisguehenneuc families. For this reason, genealogical records and Y-DNA analysis led to a paternal ancestor in common with Bertrand Du Guesclin. In what follows, we will briefly overview the genealogy of Romain Grouazel-Krauss.

Romain Grouazel (1981, St Brieuc) is the son of Alain Grouazel (1957, Plancoët) and N. Krauss, himself the son of Pierre Grouazel (1924, Pléboulle) and M.T. Quéméner, son of Edouard Grouazel (1889, Matignon) and M.J. Trotel, son of Jean Marie Grouazel (1852, Pluduno) and M.L.J. Ménier, son of François Grouazel (1807, Pluduno) and J. Fermal, son of François Grouazel (1778, Pluduno) and M.F. Josse, son of François Grouazel (1745, Ruca) and J.J. Morvan, son of Marc Grouazel (1703, Ruca) and C. Beaudouard, son of Jean Grouazel (1664, Ruca) and M. Betfer. From there, records are lacking, and we cannot be sure of the lineage upstream apart from the fact that the Grouazel Y-DNA revealed that his lineage resulted out of wedlock, and hence his Haplogroup does not match the common ones for Grouazel in Bretagne: Julien Grouazel (Ruca, 1584) son of Jeanne Grouazel (present at the birth; Julien Guéhéneuc –godfather, and Anne Guéhéneuc –godmother), herself a descendant of either Guillaume or Ollivier Grouazel the Master-builders of the church of Plancoët (1521).

We share an essential birth record in Figure 19.50, with godparents of Jullien Grouazel at Ruca, February 13, 1584, of an illegitimate son of Jeanne Grouazel. Both godparents were 'Guéhéneuc' .

Jullien Guéhéneuc (godfather of Julie Groassel) was born on January 9, 1542, in St Germain de Matignon and was the ancestor of the Lords of Leslen and Ville-es-Loin as well as the future seneschal of Matignon, Louis Guéhéneuc, Lord of Leslien.

Jullien Guéhéneuc was married to Guillemette de la Marre or Marque.

It is important to note that many Spanish troops were sent to Bretagne during the reign of Henri IV (1589-1610). The first contingent of 3000 soldiers arrived in 1590 to occupy Blavet and Crozon near Brest. The arrival was six years after the birth of Julien Grouazel, mentioned above. We may, therefore, exclude that he would have been the son of a Spanish soldier.

Chapter 20

The Torró Bloodline

20.1 Introduction

The interest in this family for our ancestry is that the Desclergues descend from the Torró and their links with Miquel and Ros. There are also indications that Bertrand Du Guesclin may have fathered children with a Torró. We refer to Chapter 19.15.1 on page 185. In Garcia Carraffa[2,3,4], we read the following explanation for Torró,
'At the beginning of the 15th century this surname already enjoyed notoriety in Catalonia. One of its branches passed to the kingdom of Valencia, remaining based in the town of Jávea, in the judicial district of Denia (Alicante). From this branch were Jaime Torró Yago Cruañez, a relative of the Holy Office of the Inquisition of Jávea, and Damián Torró, justice of the same town.'
About the heraldic shield, the book writes the following'
'In a field of gold, an azure tower, clarified with gold and supported by two azure fleurs-de-lis. (Shield 67). This is how they appear on a seal by Geraldo Torró, which dates from the year 1405 and is preserved in the Royal Heritage Archive in Barcelona. In another seal by Galcerán Torró, the year 1445, which is kept in the Municipal Archive of Barcelona, the same weapons are seen with the only difference that the fleurs-de-lys are replaced with two azure stars placed in the cantons of the leader. In the same Barcelona Municipal Archive, another seal from the year 1449 corresponds to the Torró family, which only contains the azure tower in the golden field.'[5]
The text and shield are shown in Figure 20.1 on page 216. We do not possess sufficient information to go further back in time and determine precisely when the tower was first used. It is clear that the family, while residing in France, used three fleurs de lys in gold placed on azur, but we do not know if they had already introduced a tower in France or did this from around 1400 onward. If they only used a tower from around 1400 onward, then this clearly indicates their wanting to connect with the tower symbol ('Torró' does not mean 'tower') as descendants of Du Guesclin ('De Tours'). In that case, it is natural that not every Torró line used the tower as a symbol. In other literature, we find the following information on the shield of Torró.
Of gold, a tower of azure, with pointed battlements, set with two stars, clarified and hammered with silver.[6,7]
Of gold, an azure tower, with pointed battlements, clarified and mashed with silver, supported by two azure stars.[8]
Of gold, a tower of azure, with pointed battlements, clarified with gold, hammered with saber, set with two stars of the same.[9,10,11,12]
Of gold, a tower of azure, lying with two arrowheads.[13]
Of gold, a tower of azure, lying on two azure fleurs-de-lys, crenelated tips.[14]
Of gold, an azure tower, with crenelated tips.[15]
The Chief Councilor of the Barcelona Municipal authorities was a historic position that came from the Barcelona institution of the Consell de Cent. The position disappeared with the New Plant Decree in 1714, along with the abolition of the Generalitat de Catalunya. The first Chief Councilor was Ponç d'Alest in 1257, while the last to hold the position was Rafael Casanova in 1713. Below is the list Chief Counselors of the Barcelona Municipal authorities[16] with names of interest to our family tree:

Torró / Turró:

1455-1456 Bertran Turró
1456-1457 Bertran Turró

Ferrer:

1514-1515 Bernat Ferrer
1580-1581 Francesc Ferrer i Despuig
1600-1601 Miquel Ferrer
1674-1675 Francesc Vidal i Ros
1690-1691 Miquel Ferrer

---

[2] A. Y. Garcia Carraffa, con la colaboracion de D. Armando de Fluvia y Escorsa, "El Solar Catalan, Valenciano y Balear", Primera Edicion, Tomo Cuarto, p. 272

[3] Nobilíari general 'Catalá, de Félix Domenech y Roura, cuaderno XXIII.

[4] La Heráldica dé Jávea, del barón de' San Petrillo, en la Revista de Historia y Genealogía Española, tomo II, segunda época, pág'. 559.

[5] F. of Sagarra; J. R. Vila

[6] E. Tamburini.

[7] J. del Corral

[8] "Aquest font conseller de barcha enlo any m.ccccLb and endit any will donate afaro Valensia." (sic) (Translation: He was Counselor of the city of Barcelona in the year 1453, and in the same year he gave aid to the kingdom of Valencia), described in B. de Llupià.

[9] Fr. de Alós

[10] Seal of Galceran Torró, Assessor of the County of Ampurias, year 1445; see also the work of F. of Sagarra.

[11] Seal of Galceran Torró, Assessor of the County of Ampurias, year 1445; see also the work of F. of Sagarra.

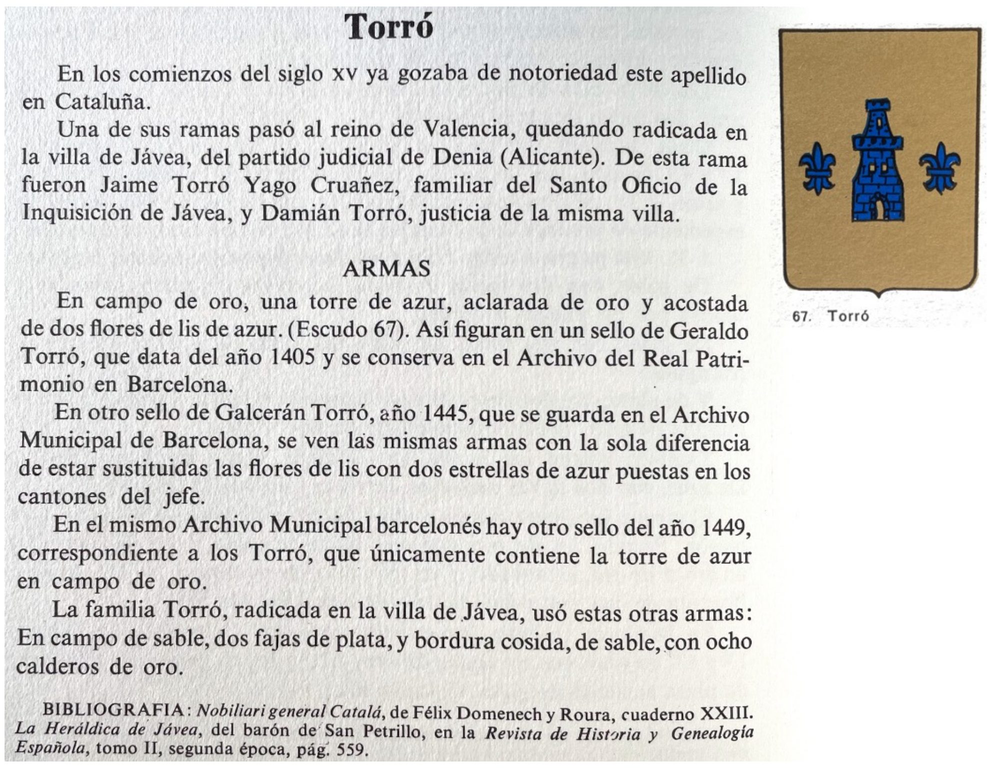
[12] see also the work of J. R. Vila.

[13] Blazon of Bertran Torró, the year 1476, the church of Sta. María del Mar, Barcelona. See also the work of J. M. de Alós i de Dou.

[14] Seal of Grau Torró, the year 1445, Municipal Archives of Barcelona. See also the work of Ll. Doménech i M.

[15] Seal of Galceran Torró, the year 1445, Municipal Archives of Barcelona. See also the work of Ll. Doménech i M.

[16] Barcelona. Autoritats municipals fins al 1714. rulers.cat



Torró

En los comienzos del siglo XV ya gozaba de notoriedad este apellido en Cataluña.

Una de sus ramas pasó al reino de Valencia, quedando radicada en la villa de Jávea, del partido judicial de Denia (Alicante). De esta rama fueron Jaime Torró Yago Cruañez, familiar del Santo Oficio de la Inquisición de Jávea, y Damián Torró, justicia de la misma villa.

ARMAS

En campo de oro, una torre de azur, aclarada de oro y acostada de dos flores de lis de azur. (Escudo 67). Así figuran en un sello de Geraldo Torró, que data del año 1405 y se conserva en el Archivo del Real Patrimonio en Barcelona.

En otro sello de Galcerán Torró, año 1445, que se guarda en el Archivo Municipal de Barcelona, se ven las mismas armas con la sola diferencia de estar sustituidas las flores de lis con dos estrellas de azur puestas en los cantones del jefe.

En el mismo Archivo Municipal barcelonés hay otro sello del año 1449, correspondiente a los Torró, que únicamente contiene la torre de azur en campo de oro.

La familia Torró, radicada en la villa de Jávea, usó estas otras armas: En campo de sable, dos fajas de plata, y bordura cosida, de sable, con ocho calderos de oro.

BIBLIOGRAFIA: Nobiliari general Català, de Félix Domenech y Roura, cuaderno XXIII. La Heráldica de Jávea, del barón de San Petrillo, en la Revista de Historia y Genealogía Española, tomo II, segunda época, pág. 559.

67. Torró

Figure 20.1: Citations from A. Y. Garcia Carraffa, con la colaboracion de D. Armando de Fluvia y Escorsa, "El Solar Catalan, Valenciano y Balear", Primera Edicion, Tomo Cuarto, p 272 and lamina 31. If the text can be interpreted as the tower being used with two fleurs de lys, rather than only three fleurs de lys starting around 1400, then this may be an indication of this line's forefather being Bertrand Du Guesclin. Indeed, the family used only three fleurs de lys, gold on azur, before they migrated to Gerona from Occitania. When they migrated, they inverted the colors on their shield, but there is no indication that they effectively replaced one fleur de lys immediately. In other words, the tower may come from Du Guesclin.

Figure 20.2: The use of 3 'flors de lys' in gold, on azure, is what the Torró family used when they were located in Occitania and were still called Turro. We do not know if alterations, shown in the top middle and right, occurred while this family resided in Occitania. When the family migrated to Girona and Barcelona, Turro became Torró, while the colors were inverted. From around 1400, and perhaps sooner, the shield sometimes had a tower placed in the middle, and sometimes the flowers were replaced by stars. Perhaps the three flowers contributed to forming the coat of arms of the count of Trastamara, Bertrand Du Guesclin, explained in Figure 23.6 on page 251. The oldest reference to a Torró shield with a tower in the middle dates from around 1400. If it is genuinely the first, then it may indicate that the descendants of Du Guesclin introduced the tower on the shield to distinguish their Torró line from the other Torró lines in this old noble family. More evidence would be required to acquire certainty. The reader is also directed to Figure 20.1 on page 216 to know what the literature tells. It may be that early members of this Torró family were responsible for old shields that can still be found today at the Sant Miquel church of Montblanc, as shown in Figure 25.2 on page 259. The shield of Turro, shown on the left, was also used by Castres in France, where this family stems. The image of the shield with a blue tower on gold comes from "Armorial Historic de Catalunya" por Ll. Doménec i Montaner (14th centrury). The shield in the lower right corner is that of the Blason of Bertran Torró on the tomb of his wife in 1476. The on in the upper right corner is the coat of arms of the Torró family on a pedestal at the entrance to the church of Santa María in Castelló d'Ampúries (Girona) and belongs to Galceran Torró.[1] (Courtesy of Fco. Lerena Aracil)

174r Dimars, a VIII. En aquest die vingué en consistori lo senyor deputat real. En aquest mateix die vingué en consistori fra Francesc Miquel, cavaller del hàbit de Sant Joan, capità de la galera capitana de la esquadra de les galeres del General, lo qual digué a ses senyorias que tenia uns esmarils que havia presos en la barca de moros que últimament prengueren les galeras de dit General devant Palamós, pretenent que dits esmerils eran seus per haver, segons digué, presos aquells ab bona guerra y estavan sobre la barca de dits moros. E com per ses senyorias li fonc manat restituir aquells al dit General, no obstant per ell al·legat en contrari, se offerí restituir-los, sens emperò prejudici dels drets li porien competir per qualsevol raons ab dits esmerils.

Disabte a XII. En aquest die Jaume Sala, // 174v // cap de esquadra de la galera patrona del dit General, restituí a la present casa de la Deputació sinquanta-un arcabussos y sinquanta-tres flascós y sinquanta-tres flasquillos.

Dijous, a XVII. Festa del gloriós sant Antoni.

Figure 20.3: Francesc Miquel, a knight of the order of Sant Joan and captain of the squadron of the General's galleys, asserts his authority and honor by returning captured goods despite dispute, showcasing his unwavering commitment to duty and integrity. Citation from Dietaris de la Generalitat de Catalunya, 1411-1714, Colleccio de 10 volums, Generalitat de Catalunya, 1997, year 1619, page 350.

Ros:

1427-1428 Joan Ros (2a vegada)
1430-1431 Joan Ros (3a vegada)
1478-1479 Jaume Ros
1490-1491 Jaume Ros
1501-1502 Jaume Ros
1549-1550 Jaume Ros
1611-1612 Galceran Ros
1622-1623 Joan Ros
1675-1676 Francesc Vidal i Ros (2a vegada)

Miquel:

1456-1457 Bernat Miquel
1508-1509 Dionís Miquel
1522-1523 Benet Miquel de Corbera

20.2 The Torró came from Occitania

One of the first known lords of Maurí, near Perpignan, at the end of the 11th century, was Bernat Torró, to whom the counts of Besalú had granted rights to Maurí and the castle of Fenollet. He, however, probably does not appear in the more distinguished Torró bloodline that married a 'de Bésiers' in the 12th century, from whom we descend.

The Torró lineage originates[17] from Occitania, like the Desclergues who arrived in Mallorca and later in Catalonia.

The Torró lineage passed from Occitania to the Catalan region during the heresy in Languedoc between 1190 and 1213. These first origins are found in a marriage between the Lord of Turre and Magdalena de Bésiers.

Magdalena de Bésiers was the daughter of Guilhen de Besièrs, son of Gaucelme or Galceran de Besièrs, and N. Trencavèl , the natural daughter of Raimon Trencavèl.

Bertrandus, the lord of Turre and the son of Bernat de Turre, was a vassal of the Count of Auvernhe. He married Magdalena de Bésiers.[18]

Bertrandus de Turre and Magdalena de Bésiers were the parents of Gaucelm de Turre, or Galceran as he would later be called in Catalan.

Gaucelm de Turre was the father of Guilhen de Turre, who, at the time of the severe conflict over heresy, left Béziers and moved to the Catalan region to settle in Girona.

Guilhen de Turre was the first to use the coat of arms as we know of the Torró family, i.e. à Campo de Oro , une tour d'azur, éclairée d'or et soutenue par deux fleurs de lys d'azur[19], which also involved a name change from 'de Turro' to 'de Torró,' or 'Torró,' Among Guilhen or Guillermo de Turre's children are Ramón de Torró and Bernat de Torró. Bernat de Torró was a monk scribe and notary at the monastery of Santa María de Poblet in 1232. Ramón de Torró was the continuator of the Torró lineage in Gerona.

20.3 Beltrán Torró (DT01)

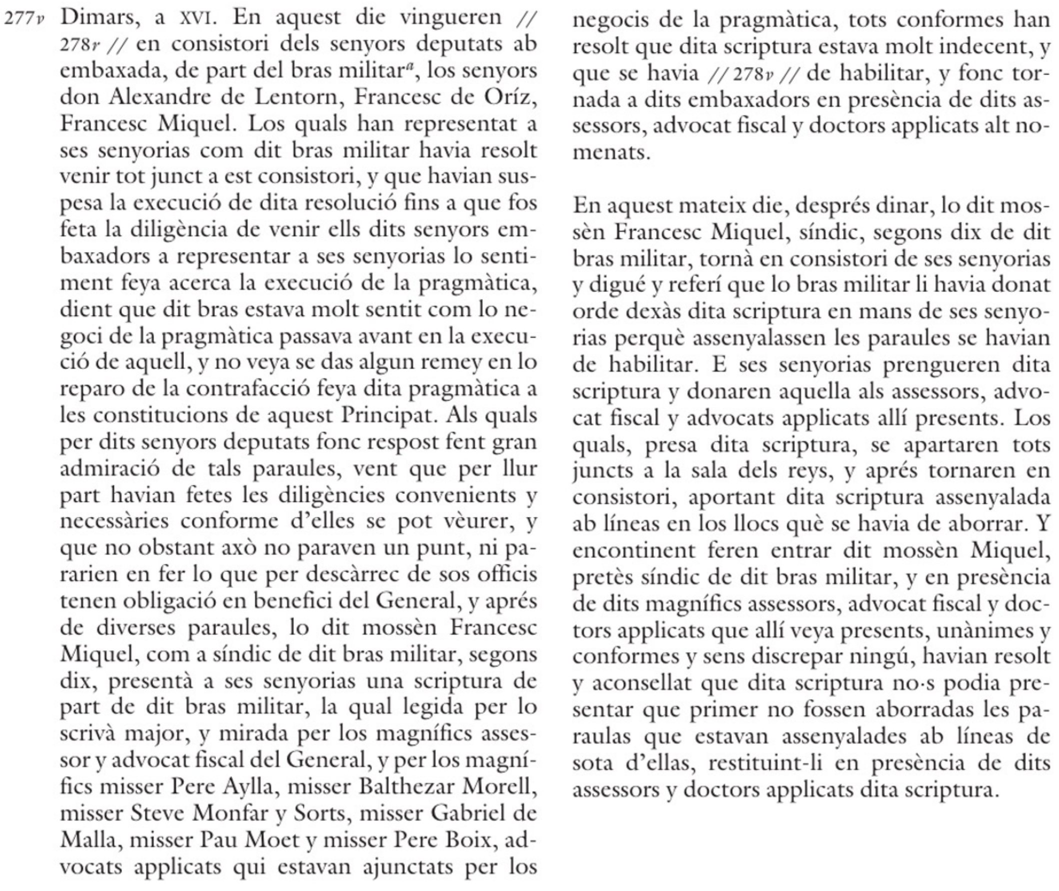
Torró individuals of prominence are found in the 13th century in different places in Catalunya, which indicates that some of the Turró or Torró branches must have originated in earlier times in Catalonia than the period of found documents. Of interest to our ancestry, however, is the branch from Empúries.

---

[17] The author is grateful to Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal for his help concerning the Torró Medieval Ancestry.

[18] This marriage took place in the 12th century, because we know that her grandson, Bernat, was a monk in 1232.

[19] Two azur fleurs de lys left and right of an azur tower, on a gold background, while, before that, the colors were reversed, i.e. gold fleurs de lys and tower on an azur background.



277*v* Dimars, a XVI. En aquest die vingueren // 278*r* // en consistori dels senyors deputats ab embaxada, de part del bras militar[a], los senyors don Alexandre de Lentorn, Francesc de Oríz, Francesc Miquel. Los quals han representat a ses senyorias com dit bras militar havia resolt venir tot junct a est consistori, y que havian suspesa la execució de dita resolució fins a que fos feta la diligència de venir ells dits senyors embaxadors a representar a ses senyorias lo sentiment feya acerca la execució de la pragmàtica, dient que dit bras estava molt sentit com lo negoci de la pragmàtica passava avant en la execució de aquell, y no veya se das algun remey en lo reparo de la contrafacció feya dita pragmàtica a les constitucions de aquest Principat. Als quals per dits senyors deputats fonc respost fent gran admiració de tals paraules, vent que per llur part havian fetes les diligències convenients y necessàries conforme d'elles se pot vèurer, y que no obstant axò no paraven un punt, ni pararien en fer lo que per descàrrec de sos officis tenen obligació en benefici del General, y aprés de diverses paraules, lo dit mossèn Francesc Miquel, com a síndic de dit bras militar, segons dix, presentà a ses senyorias una scriptura de part de dit bras militar, la qual legida per lo scrivà major, y mirada per los magnífics assessor y advocat fiscal del General, y per los magnífics misser Pere Aylla, misser Balthezar Morell, misser Steve Monfar y Sorts, misser Gabriel de Malla, misser Pau Moet y misser Pere Boix, advocats applicats qui estavan ajunctats per los negocis de la pragmàtica, tots conformes han resolt que dita scriptura estava molt indecent, y que se havia // 278*v* // de habilitar, y fonc tornada a dits embaxadors en presència de dits assessors, advocat fiscal y doctors applicats alt nomenats.

En aquest mateix die, després dinar, lo dit mossèn Francesc Miquel, síndic, segons dix de dit bras militar, tornà en consistori de ses senyorias y digué y referí que lo bras militar li havia donat orde dexàs dita scriptura en mans de ses senyorias perquè assenyalassen les paraules se havian de habilitar. E ses senyorias prengueren dita scriptura y donaren aquella als assessors, advocat fiscal y advocats applicats allí presents. Los quals, presa dita scriptura, se apartaren tots juncts a la sala dels reys, y aprés tornaren en consistori, aportant dita scriptura assenyalada ab líneas en los llocs què se havia de aborrar. Y encontinent feren entrar dit mossèn Miquel, pretès síndic de dit bras militar, y en presència de dits magnífics assessors, advocat fiscal y doctors applicats que allí veya presents, unànimes y conformes y sens discrepar ningú, havian resolt y aconsellat que dita scriptura no·s podia presentar que primer no fossen aborradas les paraulas que estavan assenyalades ab líneas de sota d'ellas, restituint-li en presència de dits assessors y doctors applicats dita scriptura.

Figure 20.4: Francesc Miquel: The Trusted Syndic and Advocate for Military Diplomacy. Citation from Dietaris de la Generalitat de Catalunya, 1411-1714, Colleccio de 10 volums, Generalitat de Catalunya, 1997, year 1613, p 104.

Diumenge, a XXI. En aquest die, després dinar, entre las dos y tres horas, constituït personalment Raphael Riera, notari de Barcelona deservint l'offici de procurador del General de Cathalunya per orde dels senyors deputats; en presència del senyor Francesc Miquel, cavaller de l'orde y milicià de Sant Joan de Hierusalem, capità de la galera capitana de dit General, personalment trobat en les cases del senyor Bernat Miquel, son germà, situadas en la present ciutat de Barcelona, devant la Font de Sant Joan; en presència de mi, Pere Pau Vidal, y de Andreu Gual, mallorquí, y de Armengol Serna, cathalà natural del lloc de Còsol, terme de Cerdanya, soldat de la dita galera, testimonis en açò cridats; dix dit Riera a dit senyor fra Francesc Miquel que ell era aquí de part de dits senyors deputats pera saber la causa per la qual havia deixat de executar // 83*v* // l'orde de dits senyors deputats li donaren estos dies proppassats de que se'n anàs ab les galeras del dit General a les parts se li eran estadas ordenadas. E lo dit senyor Francesc Miquel respongué que lo senyor príncep general del mar li dix que quant entenia anar-se'n y partir de la plaja de la present ciutat, y tornar a ella, perquè la real restaria sola, per ço que les galeras de Spanya se'n havian de anar a Mallorca, y que ell dix a dit sereníssim príncep que dins dos dies o tres lo més llarch estaria a punt. Y que sa altesa li respongué que quant tardaria de córrer la costa de levant y pèndrer en Palamós algunes provisions. Y que dit senyor príncep li tornà demanar que quant tornaria, y que ell dit Miquel li respongué que nou sabia, y que no li'n podia donar seguretat, y que procuraria tornar ab tota la brevetat possible. Y que dit senyor príncep li dix leshoras que, abans que no partís, li·n donàs raó. Y lo endemà sa altesa li envià un billet, lo qual és del tenor següent, ço és, en la direcció d'ell, «a Miquel Pol, capitán de la galera capitana de Cathalunya», y lo de dintre diu «su alteza ha entendido la muerte del señor don Ramon Doms, y me ha mandado ordene a vuestra merced de su parte que en el interim que mande otra cosa no admita vuestra merced novedad ninguna en essas galeras ni obedesca otras órdenes que las de su altesa, por convenir assí al servicio de su magestat. Guarde Dios a vuestra merced muchos años. En Barcelona a 17 de junio 1615. Pedro Coloma.» Y que per trobar-se indispost no ha pogut donar raó de dites cosas als senyors deputats.

Figure 20.5: Francesc Miquel, Knight of the Order and Captain of the General's Galley, faced inquiry regarding his deviation from orders. His pivotal role in naval affairs is underscored as he navigates the intricacies of command, loyalty, and duty amidst the directives of his superiors. Citation from Dietaris de la Generalitat de Catalunya, 1411-1714, Colleccio de 10 volums, Generalitat de Catalunya, 1997, year 1615, page 200.

11 "Diumenge [1 de febrero de 1456] qui comptavem lo primer de ffabrer del any mil CCCCLVI, fou celebrada solemnitat gran de la canonització de sanct Vicens Ferrer, del orde dels Preycadors, la qual solemnitat fou feta en la forma següent: çò és, que lo dit dia lo senyor rey de Navarra, loctinent del senyor rey, e los honorables consellers, ab diverses prohomens e homens de diverses staments, ajustats en multitud gran dins la Seu, hoiren aqui solemne offici e sermó, los quals feu lo reverent bisbe de Vich. E acabat lo dit offici, partiren de la Seu ab tot lo clero, processionalment, precedent sis trompetes o trompodors trompants e un tabaler, ab sobrevestes de las insignies de la Ciutat, ab una ymatge d'argent representant la figura del maestre Vicent Ferrer, la qual portava lo dit reverent bisbe en les mans, sots I pali, ab sis bordons, dels quals portava lo dit mig a part dreta lo dit senyor rey de Navarra, e a part squerra mossén Bertran Torró, conseller en cap; e al denant, a part dreta, mossén Johan Ça Rovira, conseller seguon, e a la part squerra mossén Ffrancí de Perearnau, conseller terç; e als detrás, a part dreta, mossèn Narcis Quintana, conseller quart e a part squerra mossèn Ffrancesch Gallart, conseller quint. E proseguint la dita processó, isqueren per lo portal maior de la dita Seu, dreçant per lo palau episcopal, tirant dret a la plaça de Sanct Jacme, e prenent per lo carrer dels Speciers, per la plaça del Blat e per la plaça de la Boria, per la volta, dret camí, intrant en la sglesia dels Preycadors. E de aquí, exint per l'altre portal, dreçà al carrer dels Mercaders e per lo carrer d' en Avellá, tirà deiús lo palau; e per la Corrubia, passant per la plaça Nova, retornà dins la Seu". Llibre de les solemnitats de Barcelona: edició completa del manuscrit de l'Arxiu Històric de la Ciutat per A. Duran i Sanpere i Josep Sanabre, Barcelona, 1930, p. 218. Sobre la imagen del plata portada en el procesión, O. Calvé Mascarell, La configuración de la imagen de san Vicente Ferrer en el siglo XV, Tesis doctoral inédita. Universitat de València, 2016, p.446.

Figure 20.6: Bertran Torró, playing an important role in a procession in 1456, and being referred to as Mossen Bertrand Torró, indicating his high status. Citation from Emilio Callado Estela, "Tiempos de reforma: Pensamiento y religión en la época de Carlos V", 2022, Page 459.

Fontanella trae a colación una sentencia de la Real Audiencia de Cataluña de 22 de agosto de 1603[17] (17), en la que se planteaba la problemática siguiente: Se discutía sobre la condición de heredero de la herencia y bienes de Mariana de Montagut, que había sido la esposa de Miguel Montagut. Éste donó los bienes de su mujer, Mariana, ya difunta, a Pedro Galcerán Torró. El Ecónomo del Monasterio de la Santísima Trinidad interpuso pleito. Contra las pretensiones de dicho Ecónomo, Jerónimo Astor de la Real Audiencia se pronuncio a favor de dicho Miguel de Monragut en el sentido de que el acto de la donación presuponía la adición de la herencia y que, por lo tanto, Miguel de Monragut tenía que considerarse heredero de los bienes donados. El Actuario Martín Juan Carmona falló en este sentido declarando que Miguel de Montagut tenia que considerarse heredero de tales bienes porque la donación presupone la adición de la herencia[18].

Fontanella añade que, en la misma línea que la decisión de la Real Audiencia, hay otra de la Rota Romana donde se declara, declaratum legitur, que se considera que ha aceptado la herencia quien alienó los bienes que la constituían.

Figure 20.7: An inheritance dispute involving Pere Galceran Torró in 1603. Citation from Ortuño Pérez, María Eugenia, "Contribuciones al Derecho Romano de Sucesiones y Donaciones", Dykinson, 2015, from p. 114-115.

Torró

Pedro Galcerán de Torró.
Caballero, natural de Balaguer, Doctor en Derecho.
Cortes 1599.

Francisco de Torró y Desclergues.
Caballero, hijo del anterior.
Cortes 1626

Figure 20.8: Pere Galceran de Torró and Francesc de Torró y Desclergue in Francisco José Morales Roca, "Próceres habilitados en las Cortes del Principado de Cataluña, siglo XVII (1599-1713)", Ediciones Hidalguia, 1983, p. 126.

Hay dos manresanos que han recibido el testimonio de sus padres y de sus abuelas. Estas últimas son del grupo de mujeres que acogieron a Ignacio en Manresa: Brianda de Paguera y Juana Dalmau. Pablo y Pedro Pla hablan de su padre Simón Juan, médico, que conoció y trató al P. Ignacio muchas veces. Lo mismo dice Pedro Galcerán de Torró hablando de su padre Pedro Torró de Hostalrich, contemporáneo y amigo de Ignacio. José Ferrer cuenta que también sus padres, Francisco Simón Ferrer y Ana de Paguera le conocieron, y su tía era Isabel Roser. La última sorpresa es la de Jerónima Colona, hija de Ascanio Colona y Juana de Aragón, que se carteó con Ignacio, que lograron hacer salir a Ignacio de Roma para hablar con ellos por encargo del Papa por si podía arreglar su matrimonio.

Figure 20.9: Story of 1595 in Manresa, a citation showing that Pere Galceran Torró was the son of Pere Torró y Hostalrich, in Ignacio Vila Despujol, "La Compañía de Jesús en Barcelona en el siglo XVI: El colegio de Nuestra Señora de Belén", Universidad Pontificia Comillas, 22 nov. 2010, p. 50.

DOCUMENTO N. 6

Colliure, 1 de agosto de 1457 – A.H.C.B., C.C.O., 1457, ff. 175, 175v.
Dificultades presentes en las operaciones de la concesión de la tripulación de una galera guardacostas barcelonesa.

«Mossenyors molt magniffichs e de gran prudencia. Nosaltres segons vostra ordinació e segons informació de mossen Bertran Torro som partits d. aquexa insigna ciutat per acordar moriners e servicials per la bona nau de Barchinona e de fet havem discorreguda la costa e en cascun loch havem haut star segons lo temps ha request entremetent nos ab summa diligencia e treballant en haver la dita gent e havem fet lo que havem pogut. Es ver que.n havem assabentada tota la costa e ab molts ne havem praticat, los quals son romasos d.acort ab nosaltres d'anar aqui per acordar se. E d.aço n ehavme scrit ab algunes letres al dit mossen Bertran e al senyor en Franci ces Corts, patró de la dita nau, e crehem que molta gente per lo dit sguart será arribada aquí es será acordada ab la dita nau, car molts ni ha qui han dit que aqui irien per fer lo acordament.

Figure 20.10: Bertran Torro (DT03f) in a document of August 1, 1457. Citation from Anna Unali, "Marineros, piratas y corsarios catalanes en la Baja Edad Media", Editorial Renacimiento, 2007, p. 233.

(464)

e aquest se fa fort en lo dit castell e hi met la mes gent forastera que pot. E per lo semblant stableix les valls Dandorra e te a ma sua lo pont o pas de Camlo per lo qual pot metre tanta gent quant li plaura. E per quant lo dit castell de Ciutat sta a manco de una ballestada de aquesta ciutat e sab ell que som nosaltres desmurats e pocha gent nos tramet cascun dia a menaças per forma quens mostra es a ma sua la nostra destruccio tota hora e quant be li vingua segons que aquest negoci mes amplament ha sabut vostre comissari mossen Franci Torro ciutada daquexa ciutat lo qual havem pregat vos scriva e informe de les occorrencies e necessitats nostres e de la gran voluntat que tots nosaltres havem a la unio de aquest Principat e de viure e morir ab la delliberacio de aquex notable concell. Per tant pregam a vostres reverencies nobleses e honorables savieses queus placia subvenir nos en aquesta tanta necessitat de alguns centenars de homens e de algunes armes e no lexar nos perir. E mes vos placia als dits e letres de vostre comissari e a tot quant per nostra part vos dira e scriura donar plena fe e crehença axi propiament com si nosaltres vos ho recitavem. E sia la Sancta Trinitat continua guarda vostra. Scrita en la ciutat Durgell a X de juliol del any Mil CCCCLXII. — A tota ordinacio e honor de vostres reverencies senyories nobleses e honorables savieses prests los consols e prohomens de la ciutat de la Seu Durgell.

Figure 20.11: Francesc Torró, appearing in Urgell, 1462, in a document in Colección de documentos inéditos del Archivo General de la Corona de Aragón. Espagne: J.E. Montfort, 1861, p. 464.

60

1233 gener 16

Berenguer de Tàrrega, rector de Montblanc, reconeix haver rebut de Pere de Tàrrega, prior de Poblet, 100 sous per raó de la renúncia als seus drets sobre el censal llegat al monestir per Bernat Amill. També reconeix no tenir cap dret sobre els censals llegats per Guillem de Castellfollit i la seva muller, i renuncia a qualsevol nova reclamació sobre les deixes i els drets funeraris de la gent de Montblanc per al monestir.

Actum est hoc XVII^{o} kalendas februarii, anno Domini M^{o}CC^{o}XXXII^{o}.

Poblet. Montblanc.

Bernat Torró, monjo i escrivà de Poblet. Pere de Tàrrega, prior de Poblet. Berenguer de Tàrrega, rector de Montblanc i germà de Pere. Vidal d'Alguaire, abat de Poblet. Arnau de Sores, prior de Poblet. Guillem de Castellfollit. Arnau Guillem. Bernat Amill.

Figure 20.12: Bernat Torró in a document in 1233. Citation from Josep Torné i Cubells, "Catàleg de pergamins de l'actual arxiu del monestrir de Poblet", 2007, p. 37.

61

1233 abril 29

Berenguer d'Anglesola, cavaller, i Berenguera, muller seva, venen al monestir de Poblet un alou a Barbens tocant a la granja del monestir per 280 sous barcelonesos. Reconeixen haver rebut íntegrament el preu de la venda, assenyalen les afrontacions de la peça de terra i donen per fermances Ramon de Cervera, d'Anglesola, Guillem de Nau i Bernat Ferrer.

Actum est hoc III^{o} kalendas maii, anno Domini M^{o}CC^{o}XXX^{o}III^{o}.

Llatí. 305 × 207 mm.

Poblet. Barbens. Ivars d'Urgell. Anglesola. «Lapenia» (Barbens).

Bernat Torró, monjo i escrivà de Poblet. Berenguer d'Anglesola, fill de Bernat d'Anglesola. Berenguera, muller de Berenguer d'Anglesola. Arnau d'Anglesola. Vidal d'Alguire, abat de Poblet. Arnau de Manresana, monjo de Poblet. Arnau de Peramola, monjo de Poblet. Ramon d'Olivers, cavaller. Bord d'Anglesola. Guillem Guerau. Guillem Cortit. Alqueximí. Guillem de Forn. Bernat de Sala. Ramon de Cervera, d'Anglesola. Bernat Ferrer. Guillem de Nau.

Figure 20.13: Bernat Torró in a document in 1233. Citation from Josep Torné i Cubells, "Catàleg de pergamins de l'actual arxiu del monestrir de Poblet", 2007, p. 38.

63

1235 novembre 29

Bernat de Guàrdia renuncia a favor del monestir de Poblet a tots els seus drets sobre els honors, terres, censos i quartes de la granja de Barbens.

Actum est hoc IIIº kalendas decembris, anno Domini MºCCºXXXºVº.

Llatí. 180 × 182 mm.

Poblet. Barbens. Anglesola.
Bernat Torró, monjo i escrivà de Poblet. Bernat de Guàrdia, d'Anglesola. Bartomeu Ern. Pere Antolí. Vidal d'Alguaire, abat de Poblet. Arnau Narbonès, monjo de Poblet. Ramon de Térmens, monjo de Poblet.

Figure 20.14: Bernat Torró in a document in 1235. Citation from Josep Torné i Cubells, "Catàleg de pergamins de l'actual arxiu del monestrir de Poblet", 2007, p. 39.

66

1237 octubre 27

Ramon Chel i Timoret, germà seu, fills del difunt Ramon Chel venen al monestir de Poblet, un tros d'un alou a la granja de Barbens sots domini del mateix monestir, adquirit de Guillem, Bernat i Pere Huguet de Màger. N'assenyalen les afrontacions i reconeixen haver rebut 300 sous jaquesos i 20 mitgeres de blat per la venda. Confirmen també la venda del mateix tros feta per la seva germana Berenguera al monestir, amb la fermança dels oncles Bernat i Guillem de Castluz.

Actum est hoc VI kalendas novembris, anno incarnacione Domini MCCXXXVIIº.

Llatí. 200 × 407 mm.

Poblet. Barbens. Juneda.
Joan Vinader, escrivà. Ramon Chel. Timoret, germà de Ramon Chel. Berenguera, germana de Ramon Chel. Ramon Chel, pare de Ramon Chel. Ramon de Castluz, oncle de Ramon Chel. Pere de Llor, prior de Poblet. Guillem de Màger. Bernat de Màger. Pere Huguet, fill de Bernat de Màger. Arnau de Talladell. Bernat de Castluz, oncle de Ramon Chel. Guillem de Castluz, oncle de Ramon Chel. Pere d'Osca, sastre. Bernat Torró, monjo i escrivà de Poblet. Pere Ros, de Juneda. Guillem d'Almassor, de Juneda. Guillem de Solans. Ferrer de Solans, fill de Guillem. Joan Serradors.

Figure 20.15: Bernat Torró in a document in 1237. Citation from Josep Torné i Cubells, "Catàleg de pergamins de l'actual arxiu del monestrir de Poblet", 2007, p. 40.

5.10.1420: Pere Ventosa, notari, substitueix per mort Francesc Richsen en el càrrec d'ajudant segon de l'escrivania. Pere Torró substitueix Pere Ventosa, que havia estat ascendit, en el càrrec de ajudant tercer de l'escrivania.

19.9.1422: Pere Ventosa és constituït en ajudant primer de l'escrivania i, correlativament, Pere Torró passa a ajudant segon de l'escrivania.

2.11.1444: Mor Pere Torró, segon ajudant de l'escrivania major.

98. «[5.7.1440] En aquest dia los senyors deputats e oïdors dels comptes del dit General a suplicació d'en Pere Torró, notari, ajudant segon de l'escrivania del offici de la Deputació del dit General, al·legant-se indispost per sa senectut e indisposició, arbitrada la dita indisposició, de consell dels advocats ordinaris del dit General donaren e crearen adjunct al dit Pere Torró e a son ofici en Jacme Çafont, scrivent, ciutedà de Barchinona, axí emperò que lo dit Pere Torró, vivint, romangue en son dit ofici ab tota sa integritat e haje íntegrament son salari ordinari, e lo dit Jacme Çafont se haje envers ell ab tota honor a son president, e lo dit Jame de vida del dit Pere Torró no haje del General algun salari.» (Dietaris, p. 78 i 79.)

99. «[21.3.1441] Los deputats attenents que Jacme Çafont, notari, era stat donat per adjunct al discret en Pere Torró, notari, segon ajudant en la scrivania de la Deputació del General de Cathalunya, ab condició que lo dit Pere Torró, mentre visqués, hagués íntegrament tot son salari de L lliures, e lo dit Jacme Çafont no hagués algun salari; e stiga en veritat que huy tot lo servey fa e soporte lo dit Jacme Çafont, e sie molt rahonable que qui servey fa sie remunerat o haja salari, per ço provehiren e volgueren de consell dels advocats que lo dit Jacme Çafont haja tot lo dit salari de L lliures, e lo dit Pere Torró haje solament XXV lliures, segons forma del capítol de Cort, e que lo dit salari començ a comptar a quascú d'ells lo primer die del corrent mes de març.» (Dietari o Llibre de Jornades..., p. 42.)

100. «Dels arrendaments o comandes fahedores cascun trienni: Los deputats per virtut de Capitol cacun trienni en lo mes de Maig del darrer any fan fer encantar les generalitats de Bolla e de les joyes e de les entrades e exides [...] e dels dits arrendaments o comandes es fet cascun trienni un manual per lo scriva major e aquell resta a la scrivania en poder seu.» (A.L., f. 29 v i 30 r.)

113. «[5.7.1440] En aquest dia los senyors deputats e oïdors dels comptes del dit General, a suplicació d'en Pere Torró, notari, ajudant segon de la scrivania del ofici de la Deputació del dit General, al·legant-se indispost per sa senectut e indisposició, arbitrada la dita indisposició, de consell dels advocats ordinaris del dit General, donaren e crearen en adjunct al dit Pere Torró e a son ofici en Jacme Çafont, scrivent, ciutedà de Barchinona.» (Dietaris, p. 78).

Figure 20.16: Some facts in the life of Pere Torró. The citations come from Isabel Sánchez de Movellán Torent, "La Diputació del General de Catalunya (1413-1479)", 2004, p. 192, 200 and 204.

En el nostre apèndix hem incorporat els següents juristes: Pere de Rajadell, llicenciat en drets († 1396, doc. I); Pere Sesdeus, llicenciat en dret civil i alhora canonge de la Seu († 1405, docs. II-III); Francesc Castanyer, professor en ambdós drets, canonge de la Seu i ardiaca del Vallès († 1407, doc. IV); Martí Moliner, batxiller en dret canònic, canonge i degà de la Seu (1412, docs. V-VI); Pere Vila, batxiller en dret canònic i vicari perpetu de l'església de Santa Maria del Mar († 1420, doc. VII); Jaume de Vallseca, jurista († 1430, doc. VIII); Bartomeu Sirvent, doctor en dret civil († 1430, doc. IX); Pere Girona, llicenciat en dret civil († 1432, doc. X); Jaume Callís, jurista († 1434, doc. XI); Guillem Burrull, llicenciat en dret canònic († 1434, doc. XII); Pere de Coll, doctor en dret civil († 1437, doc. XIII); Joan de Bellafilla, llicenciat en drets († 1447, doc. XIV); Galceran Torró, doctor en dret civil († 1454, doc. XV); Francesc Blanc, doctor en dret canònic († 1464, docs. XVI-XVII); Francesc Pujades, doctor en dret civil († 1466, docs. XVIII-XIX); Lluís Destorrent, doctor en dret civil († 1466, doc. XX); Bernat Despont senior, jurista († 1468, doc. XXI) i, finalment, Gaspar Mieres, llicenciat en dret civil († 1475, doc. XXII), fill de l'il·lustre jurista Tomàs Mieres.[6]

Figure 20.17: Galceran Torró, Doctor in Civil Law, appears alongside a cadre of learned individuals, each bearing their own expertise and scholarly achievements. Citation from El món urbà a la Corona d'Aragó del 1137 als decrets de nova planta, Volume 2, Edicions Universitat Barcelona, 2003, p. 730.

Els anys immediatament posteriors i fins al 1415, són força interessants des del punt de vista documental, ja que abunden les notícies relatives a la construcció de l'edifici incloses en els manuals del notari Joan Torró.[26] En canvi a partir d'aquest any, les referències són molt més puntuals, per la qual cosa cal pensar que l'edifici estava finalitzat en la seva primera fase i que ja disposava de les infrastructures mínimes per a poder funcionar amb suficients garanties. Així tans sols dos anys més tard, el 1417, es van aprovar les Ordinacions de l'hospital general de la Santa Creu, de les quals J.Mª Roca en va publicar la transcripció íntegra el 1920.[27] Es tracta del reglament intern de la institució, on s'especificaven les com-

Figure 20.18: Joan Torró, notary, is mentioned in the Ordinances of the General Hospital of the Holy Cross in 1417. Citation from El món urbà a la Corona d'Aragó del 1137 als decrets de nova planta, Volume 2, Edicions Universitat Barcelona, 2003, p. 541.

XV (262)
1454, juliol, 17. Barcelona

Testament de Galceran Torró, doctor en dret civil i ciutadà de Barcelona, en el qual reconeix que Margarida Torrelles, monja del monestir de Jonqueres, Joan de Gualbes, Antònia, vídua del mercader Ramon Serra, i Joan de Bellafilla, doctor en dret civil, tenen en penyora diversos llibres seus.

AHPB. 179/26. Francesc Matella, Primus liber testamentorum et aliarum ultimarum voluntatum, 1441, juny, 23-1468, març, 18, fols. 62v-65.

Figure 20.19: Galceran Torró's testament, dated July 17, 1468. Citation from El món urbà a la Corona d'Aragó del 1137 als decrets de nova planta, Volume 2, Edicions Universitat Barcelona, 2003, p. 740.

260....1453, novembre, 27: Inventari Bernat Cadireta, corredor de pelfa.
*1454, gener,16: Inventari parcial Jaume Casafranca, mercader.
1454, juliol, 17: Testament Galceran Torró, Doctor en lleis.
1454, agost, 31: Inventari Joana, vídua d'en Pere Ribalta, ciutadà.
1456, novembre, 1: Testament de Llorenç de Coll, notari.

Figure 20.20: Galceran Torró, referred to as a Doctor in Civil Law, in a document of 1454.

The six manuals of the notary Joan Torró (1401-1444) covering the period of his life, part of the collection known as Escrivania de l'Hospital de la Santa Creu.

Figure 20.21: Joan Torró in the Bibliography list, under the sources from Barcelona, in Jill Rosemary Webster, "Carmel in Medieval Catalonia", 1999.

Figure 20.22: Joan Torró's handwriting. Arxiu de l'Hospital de la Santa Creu i Sant Pau, Manual primer de Joan Torró, f. 11v-bis. Afermament de Daniel. Edició, doc. 4.

One Torró branch, despite its blood relation to the others, remains a puzzle in our understanding of Torró ancestry. The brothers Joan Torró and Jaume Torró from the Castle of Empúries, as described by Batlle i Gallart, offer intriguing and valuable information that we have yet to comprehend fully. [20]

Our genealogical journey begins with the couple Bertrand du Guesclin and Dona Torró, also known as Dame de Soria in the literature. Their lineage, intricately connected to ours, forms a crucial part of our research.

They had two children, Beltran Torró (DT01) and Geraldo (or Guérech or Guerau) Torró (DT01b). Both were born around 1358. Guerau Torró used the shield with two fleurs de lys and a tower in 1405. Beltrán Torró (DT01) had a son, Galceran Torró (DT02), described in Chapter 20.4.

The first three generations of descendants of Bertrand Du Guesclin are shown in Figure 20.27, on page 226.

The descendants of Beltrán Torró (DT01) are shown in Figure 20.28 on page 227.

20.3.1 Guerau Torró (DT01b), Brother of Galceran Torró (DT02)

Guerau Torró (DT01b), who used the shield with two fleurs de lys and a tower in 1405, had two children, Guerau Torró (DT02b), who married Margarida; and Nicolau Torró (DT02c), who died in 1431 and is described in Chapter 20.3.2.

Nicolau Torró (DT02c) was married twice. With Dona d'Estapera, the daughter of Antoni d'Estapera, he had three children, Antoni Torró (DT03c), Francesc Torró (DT03d), and Joan Torró (DT03e).

With Francesca, Nicolau Torró (DT02c) had two children, Galceran Torró (DT03g), who lived and worked as a judge in Tortosa in 1391 and died in 1454 in Barcelona; and Bertran Torró (DT03f), who, in 1455, appears in the chronicles as Betrán Turró, and who is described in Chapter 20.7.8.

Bertran Torró (DT03f) married Sibilla Miquel, from Girona, who died in 1476. The latter couple had a son, Nicolau Torró i Miquel, who died in 1469. Their appearance in the Miquel family is shown in Figure 19.25 on page 191, while the Miquel clan is described in Chapter 20.8. The descendants of Guerau Torró (DT01b) are shown in Figure 20.29 on page 227.

20.3.2 Nicolau Torró

He was the son of Guerau Torró (DT01b), described in Chapter 20.3.1. Batlle i Gallart provides valuable information.[21]

Nicolau Torró, a pioneering member of the Torró family in Barcelona, contributed significantly to the city's economic and social fabric during the late medieval period. He became a money changer, a profession integral to Barcelona's burgeoning mercantile economy.

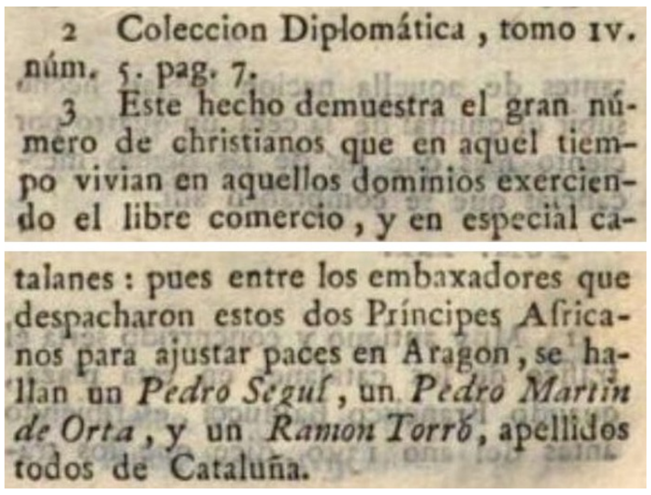
Nicolau's migration from Castelló d'Empúries to Barcelona mirrored the broader trend of rural-urban migration, indicative of the city's growing prominence as a commercial hub. Following the death of his first wife, his marriage to Francesca underscored his familial ties within Barcelona's merchant circles.

As a money changer, Nicolau was crucial in facilitating trade and financial transactions, contributing to the city's economic prosperity. His legacy endured through his descendants, who continued to shape Barcelona's socio-economic landscape for generations

---

[20] Batlle i Gallart, Carmen. 'Una família barcelonesa: los Torró.' Annals de l'Institut d'Estudis Gironins, 1974, Vol. 22, p. 203-210.

[21] Batlle i Gallart, Carmen. «Una família barcelonesa: los Torró». Annals de l'Institut d'Estudis Gironins, 1974, Vol. 22, p. 203-210.



2 Coleccion Diplomática, tomo IV. núm. 5. pag. 7.

3 Este hecho demuestra el gran número de christianos que en aquel tiempo vivian en aquellos dominios exerciendo el libre comercio, y en especial catalanes: pues entre los embaxadores que despacharon estos dos Príncipes Africanos para ajustar paces en Aragon, se hallan un Pedro Seguí, un Pedro Martin de Orta, y un Ramon Torrò, apellidos todos de Cataluña.

Figure 20.23: Ramon Torró in Antonio de Capmany Surís y de Montpalau, "Memorias historicas sobre la marina, comercio, y artes de la antigua ciudad de Barcelona. Publicadas... Y dispuestas por d. Antonio de Capmany, y de Monpalau", la imprenta de Sancha, 1792, p. 200.

El 19 de novembre de 1403 l'especier Llorenç Bassa estén una àpoca al prevere Pere Cardona, prior de l'Hospital (11). En aquesta àpoca Llorenç Bassa reconeix que el prior, per mà del seu procurador Joan Gerona, de la casa del rei, li ha pagat 118 lliures de les 178 lliures que l'Hospital li deu per diverses medicines preses per als malalts de l'Hospital. Aquests medicaments havien estat comprats a l'obrador d'en Bassa mentre era prior de l'Hospital el prevere Guillem Torró. Es tracta, doncs, d'una compra realitzada entre 1401 i 1402, període en què és prior mossèn Guillem Torró. Com que sabem que to come.

Figure 20.24: Guillem Torró was the first Presbyter of the Hospital in Barcelona established by his brother, notari Joan Torró. Citation from Carles Vela i Aulesa, "La Primera Especieria de l'Hospital de La Santa Creu de Barcelona, 1401-1414", p. 54.

20.4 Galceran Torró (DT02)

He was the son of Beltrán Torró (DT01), shown in Chapter 20.3 and the grandson of Bertrand du Guesclin.

Galceran Torró (DT02) was the father of Nicolau Torró (DT03b), father of Galceran Torró (DT04c). Another son of Galceran Torró (DT02) was Pere Torró (DT03), a notary, described in Chapter 20.5.

Galceran Torró (DT02) appears in 'Quaderns d'Historia Tarraconense V,'[22] concerning an event in 1391, a document detailing a legal dispute involving the Jewish community in Tortosa in the aftermath of the pogroms of 1391. At the center of this dispute is the refusal of Vital Astruc and his son Astruc Bonsenyor to financially support the expenses incurred by the Jewish community for their protection during times of unrest.

Galceran Torró (DT02), also known as Galcerà Turró in the text, plays a significant role as a legal expert in arbitrating the dispute. Alongside other legal experts such as Joan de Naters, he is tasked with resolving the conflict between the Jewish community, represented by Salomó Alfauhell and Bonjuha Aleva, and Vital Astruc and Astruc Bonsenyor.

Galceran Torro's role is primarily that of a judge or legal adjudicator entrusted with interpreting the agreement terms between the parties and delivering a verdict based on legal principles and evidence presented. His involvement suggests that he is a respected legal figure in the community, capable of impartially evaluating complex legal matters.

In the resolution delivered by Galceran Torró (DT02) and Joan de Naters, Vital Astruc and Astruc Bonsenyor are not obligated to contribute financially to the expenses incurred by the Jewish community for their protection. The decision is reached after carefully considering the arguments both parties presented and examining relevant legal documents, including a letter of agreement.

20.5 Pere Torró (DT03) & Eulalia Miquel

Pere Torró (DT03) married twice. He married Dona Safont and had a son, Jaume Torró y Safont, also known as Jaume Safont (DT04d).

Pere Torró (DT03) and Eulalia Miquel had two children, Francesc Torró y Miquel (DT04), described in Chapter 20.6, a Royal Secretary who married Clementa Desclergue, and Joan Torró y Miquel (DT04b), who married Dona Hostalric. Joan Torró y Miquel (DT04b) appeared as a notary in Barcelona in 1444, and he only had daughters. He was involved in the administration of the Temple and the Hospital General de Santa Creu de Barcelona.

20.5.1 Pere Torró

He was a notary. He was the son of Galceran Torró, described in Chapter 20.4 and married to Eulalia Miquel, described in Chapter 20.5.2.

20.5.2 Eulalia Miquel

She was married to Pere Torró, given in Chapter 20.5.1. Her father was Antoni Miquel, a notary.

20.6 Francesc Torró i Miquel (DT04) & Clementa Desclergue

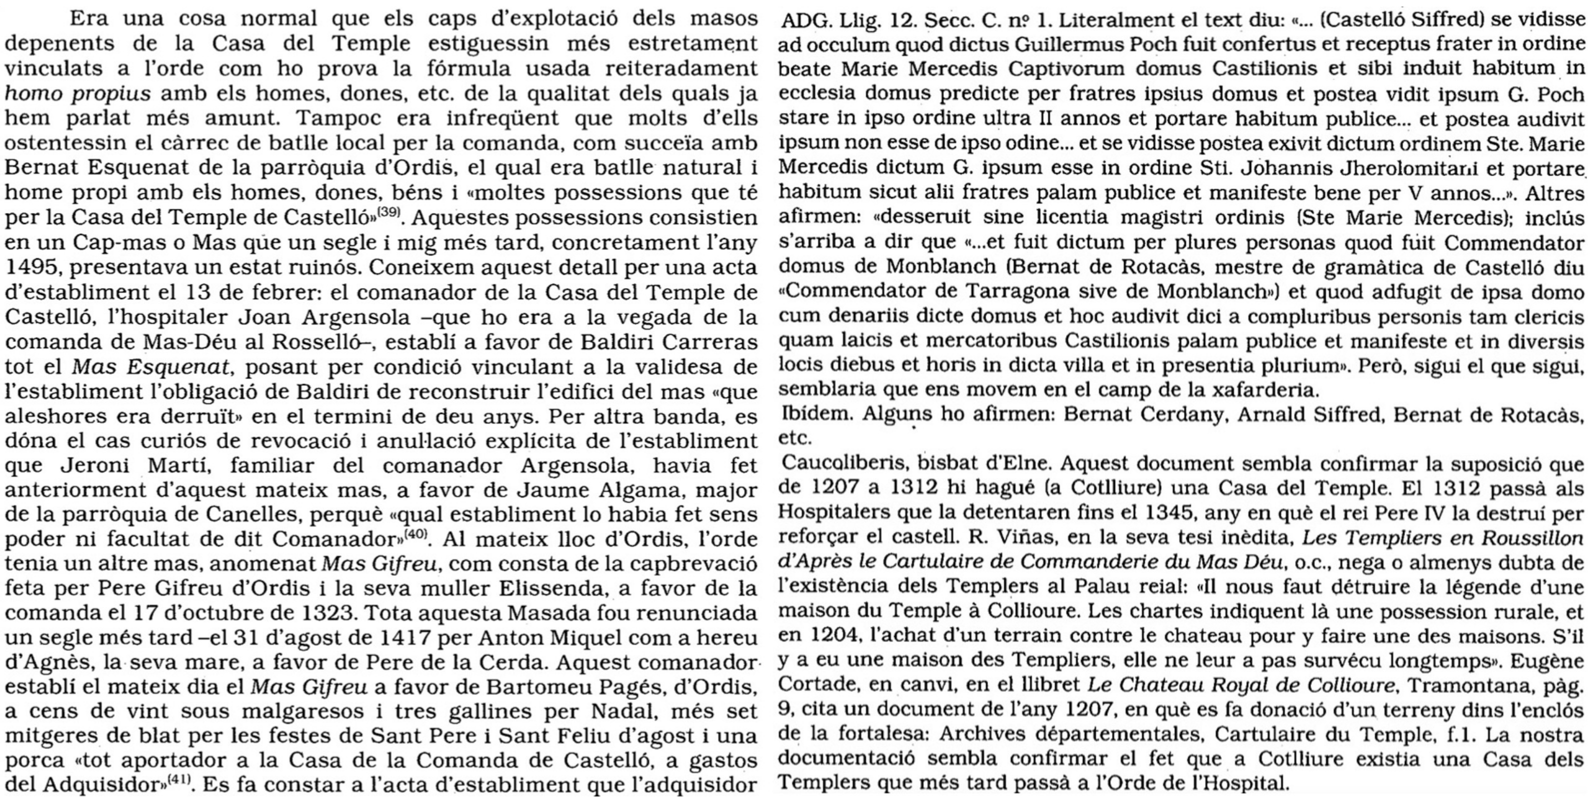
Francesc and Clementa had two daughters, Francina and Eulalia, and two sons, Galceran Torró y Desclergue, described in Chapter 20.6.3, and Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), described in Chapter 20.6.4 and Chapter 25.

20.6.1 Francesc Torró i Miquel (DT04)

He was a Royal Secretary of Pedro of Portugal and Catalonia in 1464-1466, and he was married to Clementa Desclergue, described in Chapter 20.6.2.

---

[22] Quaderns d'Historia Tarraconense V, Institut d'estudis Tarraconenses Ramon Berenguer IV, EXCMA. Diputacio de Tarragona, 1985, p. 10-14.



Era una cosa normal que els caps d'explotació dels masos depenents de la Casa del Temple estiguessin més estretament vinculats a l'orde com ho prova la fórmula usada reiteradament homo propius amb els homes, dones, etc. de la qualitat dels quals ja hem parlat més amunt. Tampoc era infreqüent que molts d'ells ostentessin el càrrec de batlle local per la comanda, com succeïa amb Bernat Esquenat de la parròquia d'Ordis, el qual era batlle natural i home propi amb els homes, dones, béns i «moltes possessions que té per la Casa del Temple de Castelló»(39). Aquestes possessions consistien en un Cap-mas o Mas que un segle i mig més tard, concretament l'any 1495, presentava un estat ruinós. Coneixem aquest detall per una acta d'establiment el 13 de febrer: el comanador de la Casa del Temple de Castelló, l'hospitaler Joan Argensola –que ho era a la vegada de la comanda de Mas-Déu al Rosselló–, establí a favor de Baldiri Carreras tot el Mas Esquenat, posant per condició vinculant a la validesa de l'establiment l'obligació de Baldiri de reconstruir l'edifici del mas «que aleshores era derruït» en el termini de deu anys. Per altra banda, es dóna el cas curiós de revocació i anul·lació explícita de l'establiment que Jeroni Martí, familiar del comanador Argensola, havia fet anteriorment d'aquest mateix mas, a favor de Jaume Algama, major de la parròquia de Canelles, perquè «qual establiment lo habia fet sens poder ni facultat de dit Comanador»(40). Al mateix lloc d'Ordis, l'orde tenia un altre mas, anomenat Mas Gifreu, com consta de la capbrevació feta per Pere Gifreu d'Ordis i la seva muller Elissenda, a favor de la comanda el 17 d'octubre de 1323. Tota aquesta Masada fou renunciada un segle més tard –el 31 d'agost de 1417 per Anton Miquel com a hereu d'Agnès, la seva mare, a favor de Pere de la Cerda. Aquest comanador establí el mateix dia el Mas Gifreu a favor de Bartomeu Pagés, d'Ordis, a cens de vint sous malgaresos i tres gallines per Nadal, més set mitgeres de blat per les festes de Sant Pere i Sant Feliu d'agost i una porca «tot aportador a la Casa de la Comanda de Castelló, a gastos del Adquisidor»(41). Es fa constar a l'acta d'establiment que l'adquisidor

ADG. Llig. 12. Secc. C. nº 1. Literalment el text diu: «... (Castelló Siffred) se vidisse ad occulum quod dictus Guillermus Poch fuit confertus et receptus frater in ordine beate Marie Mercedis Captivorum domus Castilionis et sibi induit habitum in ecclesia domus predicte per fratres ipsius domus et postea vidit ipsum G. Poch stare in ipso ordine ultra II annos et portare habitum publice... et postea audivit ipsum non esse de ipso odine... et se vidisse postea exivit dictum ordinem Ste. Marie Mercedis dictum G. ipsum esse in ordine Sti. Johannis Jherolomitani et portare habitum sicut alii fratres palam publice et manifeste bene per V annos...». Altres afirmen: «desseruit sine licentia magistri ordinis (Ste Marie Mercedis); inclús s'arriba a dir que «...et fuit dictum per plures personas quod fuit Commendator domus de Monblanch (Bernat de Rotacàs, mestre de gramàtica de Castelló diu «Commendator de Tarragona sive de Monblanch») et quod adfugit de ipsa domo cum denariis dicte domus et hoc audivit dici a compluribus personis tam clericis quam laicis et mercatoribus Castilionis palam publice et manifeste et in diversis locis diebus et horis in dicta villa et in presentia plurium». Però, sigui el que sigui, semblaria que ens movem en el camp de la xafarderia.

Ibídem. Alguns ho afirmen: Bernat Cerdany, Arnald Siffred, Bernat de Rotacàs, etc.

Caucoliberis, bisbat d'Elne. Aquest document sembla confirmar la suposició que de 1207 a 1312 hi hagué (a Cotlliure) una Casa del Temple. El 1312 passà als Hospitalers que la detentaren fins el 1345, any en què el rei Pere IV la destruí per reforçar el castell. R. Viñas, en la seva tesi inèdita, Les Templiers en Roussillon d'Après le Cartulaire de Commanderie du Mas Déu, o.c., nega o almenys dubta de l'existència dels Templers al Palau reial: «Il nous faut détruire la légende d'une maison du Temple à Collioure. Les chartes indiquent là une possession rurale, et en 1204, l'achat d'un terrain contre le chateau pour y faire une des maisons. S'il y a eu une maison des Templiers, elle ne leur a pas survécu longtemps». Eugène Cortade, en canvi, en el llibret Le Chateau Royal de Collioure, Tramontana, pàg. 9, cita un document de l'any 1207, en què es fa donació d'un terreny dins l'enclós de la fortalesa: Archives départementales, Cartulaire du Temple, f.1. La nostra documentació sembla confirmar el fet que a Cotlliure existia una Casa dels Templers que més tard passà a l'Orde de l'Hospital.

Figure 20.25: The description of documents highlighting the role of Anton Miquel in the Order of the Temple. The right column are footnotes. The citations are taken from Miquel Pujol i Canelles,"Els Templers a l'Empordà - la comanda del Temple de Castelló d'Empúries, primera part", p. 65, 69, 90.

20.6.2 Clementa Desclergue

Clementa Desclergue was married to Francesc Torró i Miquel, described in Chapter 20.6.1. Her father was Brenguer Desclergue, son grandson of Bernat Desclergue and great-grandson of Guillem Desclergue. Guillem. The ancestry of Clementa Desclergue is described in Chapter 25.0.1. In Chapter 25.0.1, the brother of Clementa Desclergue is described as Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, in Chapter 25.0.1.2, while her ancestors through her grandmother's side, D'Anguera, equally descending from Raymond Desclergue, are similarly outlined.

20.6.3 Galceran Torró y Desclergue (DC01b)

Galceran Torró y Desclergue (DC01b), alias Galceran Desclergue, was the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue. He appears with his brother Pere (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of August 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt.

20.6.4 Pere Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01)

Pere Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01), alias Pere Desclergue, is described in Chapter 25. He was the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue. He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore, we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of August 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father, Francesc Torró i Miquel, died.

20.7 Other Members of the Torró clan

In Catalan history, archival records from 1180 reveal the presence of Turró Knights Templars. While their mention is relatively scarce in the literary works of both ancient and contemporary chroniclers, it is noteworthy that their lineage boasts far greater antiquity and nobility than any known Torres lineage within the Spanish domain.

In modern works, the Torró is usually referred to in later eras in the context of the Knights Templars. In such works, we read that the Torró surname, alternatively spelled Turró, represents an enduring lineage in Catalan history, primarily concentrated in the regions of Girona and Barcelona. Lesser concentrations of this surname are dispersed throughout Lleida, Tarragona, Valencia, and the Balearic Islands. As early as the late 14th century, a notable lineage bearing the Torró surname was established in Torroella de Montgrí, in the province of Girona.

Descended from this lineage was Joan Torró, holding the esteemed positions of Burgher and Trustee of Torroella de Montgrí. His significance was underscored by his representation at the Catalan Cortes of 1410 through the Real Arm. In subsequent centuries, another distinguished family lineage bearing the Torró surname emerged in Barcelona during the 15th century. Notable among its descendants was Bertrán Torró, who held the esteemed position of Councilor in Cap within the city.

His active participation in the Catalan Cortes of 1454, 1456, and 1460, representing the Royal Arm, further solidified the prominence of the Torró lineage in Catalan political affairs. The Torró lineage continued to contribute significantly to Catalan society and governance in later centuries.

Pere Galcerán de Torró, hailing from Balaguer in Lleida, exemplified this legacy as a Knight of the Principality of Catalonia and a Doctor of Law. His representation at the Cortes of 1599, representing the Military Arm, attested to his esteemed status within Catalan political circles.

The modern chroniclers also refer to Francesc de Torró i Desclergues, the son of Pere Galcerán de Torró, who maintained the family's tradition of civic engagement by attending the Cortes of 1626, also representing the Military Arm.

Furthermore, they write that the Torró lineage's presence is further evidenced by the Catalan census of 1553, which documents the residences of various individuals bearing the surname. Among them, Joan Torró resided in "Mollet y Parets (del Vallès)," another

Figure 20.26: Apoca of Na Gabriela, alias Valletas, wife of the notable Francesc Miquel, and Joan Miquel, student, son of the couple, both residents of San Mateo, for the amount of 6000 Valencian salaries. The document dates from 21 February 1460 and is written by notary Johannes Pasqual. Escrit en Llatí. Tamany del pergamí. Sant Mateu. Repositori Universitat Jaume I.

Joan Torró in Anglés (Girona), and Pere Torró in the "loch de Canet" (Girona).

The Torró family constitutes a lineage entrenched in commercial endeavors, particularly in rental markets and financial transactions, enjoying notable prominence across Barcelona, Lleida, and Girona. This familial association is underscored by legal and notarial professions, which likely facilitated a closer interconnection between the respective families.

20.7.1 Ramon Torró

In the Gerona area, we find Torrò in 1300-1400. Guillem Torró was a Royal Mayor ('batlle real'), and his widow, Saura, was found in documents in 1311.

Their son was Ramón Torró, and he received the Mayorship.

Ramon Torró lived in 1309, in a time when diplomats were of crucial importance in negotiating and trading between the Catholic rulers and the Muslim Caliphate in Iberia, and he is found in 20.23 on page 223.

Furthermore, there was a Jaume Torró, who was a Royal Mayor ('batlle real') in 1341, while Ramón Torró was the procurator of Jaume Torró and also his father. It is, however, not known if both Ramón Torró are the same.

20.7.2 Aynard Torró

Aynard Torró, a figure of religious significance, is referenced in a Latin document dated 1350 as 'magnifico Domino Aynardo de Turre,' alongside Petrus Torró. It is notable that while Turre was the ancient Occitanian rendition of Torró, French chroniclers, as evidenced at the outset of the citation, depicted in Figure 20.30 on page 227, chose to translate the name Turre or Torró as 'de la Tour.' This translation underscores that Turre and Torró were not perceived as inherently French names, consequently allowing their designation to be subject to translations and misinterpretations by chroniclers. This phenomenon is exemplified by chroniclers who recounted the lineage of Bertrand Du Guesclin in Spain in Chapter 19.15.7, unaware that their surname was 'Torró' rather than 'Thorreux' or 'de Torres.'

20.7.3 Galceran Torró

Batlle i Gallart provides valuable information.[23]

Galceran Torró, a pivotal figure in the Torró family of Barcelona, emerged as a prominent citizen during the late medieval period. Born around 1370, he hailed from Castelló d'Empúries and established himself in Barcelona alongside his brother, Nicolau. Galceran's marriage to Estapera, sponsored by Antònia, wife of the Barcelona merchant Pere Morer, solidified his ties within the city's merchant class.

Galceran's pursuit of legal education at the Lérida Study and subsequent studies at the Universities of Toulouse and Montpellier culminated in his title of Doctor of Law. Despite accruing debts in Toulouse, Galceran forged professional alliances, notably with the jurist Joan Agulló, furthering his legal career.

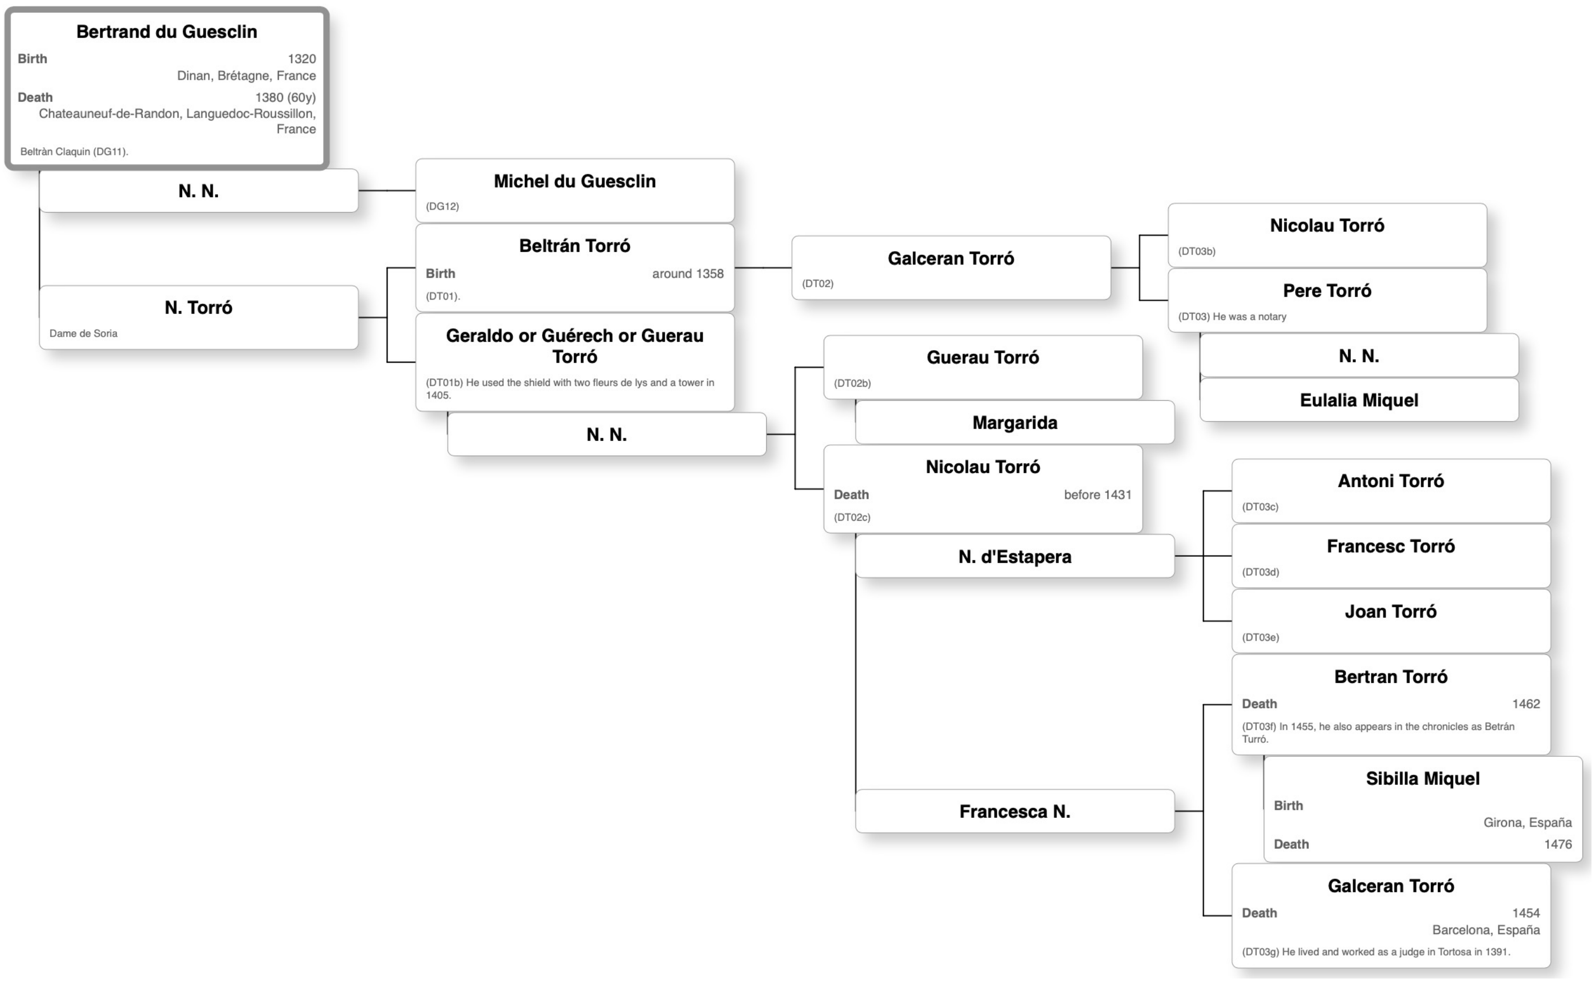
Throughout his life, Galceran navigated financial challenges, evidenced by the pawning of his jurist's library to secure loans. His fortunes fluctuated, yet his status as an esteemed legal practitioner and scion of the Torró family ensured his enduring presence in Barcelona's socio-political landscape.

20.7.4 Joan Torró

During his active years spanning the late 14th and early 15th centuries, Joan Torró played a pivotal role in the administrative landscape as a notary. His responsibilities were paramount in documenting the legal and bureaucratic proceedings of the time,

---

[23] Batlle i Gallart, Carmen. «Una família barcelonesa: los Torró». Annals de l'Institut d'Estudis Gironins, 1974, Vol. 22, p. 203-210.



Bertrand du Guesclin
Birth 1320
Dinan, Brétagne, France
Death 1380 (60y)
Chateauneuf-de-Randon, Languedoc-Roussillon, France
Beltràn Claquin (DG11).
N. N.
Michel du Guesclin
(DG12)
N. Torró
Dame de Soria
Beltrán Torró
Birth around 1358
(DT01).
Geraldo or Guérech or Guerau Torró
(DT01b) He used the shield with two fleurs de lys and a tower in 1405.
N. N.
Galceran Torró
(DT02)
Nicolau Torró
(DT03b)
Pere Torró
(DT03) He was a notary
N. N.
Eulalia Miquel
Guerau Torró
(DT02b)
Margarida
Nicolau Torró
Death before 1431
(DT02c)
N. d'Estapera
Antoni Torró
(DT03c)
Francesc Torró
(DT03d)
Joan Torró
(DT03e)
Bertran Torró
Death 1462
(DT03f) In 1455, he also appears in the chronicles as Betrán Turró.
Sibilla Miquel
Birth
Girona, España
Death 1476
Francesca N.
Galceran Torró
Death 1454
Barcelona, España
(DT03g) He lived and worked as a judge in Tortosa in 1391.

Figure 20.27: Three generations of descendants of Bertrand Du Guesclin. The descendants of his grandchildren, Beltran Torró (DT01) and Guerau Torró (DT01b), are shown in Figures 20.28 and 20.29, respectively.

thereby providing a detailed account of the city's transformation.

Figure 20.18 on page 221 underscores Joan Torró's significance in constructing a grand and notable building, marking a significant landmark in the city.

The approval of the Ordinances of the General Hospital of the Holy Cross in 1417 further emphasizes Torró's importance. This approval marks a milestone in establishing institutional frameworks, highlighting Torró's role in shaping the city's governance structures.

Belonging to the class of notaries, Torró was closely associated with the city's elite, catering to the needs of nobles, merchants, and the burgeoning administrative apparatus.

Joan Torró served as a notary in Barcelona from 1401 until 1444, with his documents preserved in the archives of the Santa Creu Hospital of Barcelona, as indicated in Figure 20.21 on page 222.

Salvator Marino's work, "El Memorial dels Infants," published in Barcelona in 2019, presents a compelling exploration of childhood in 15th-century Barcelona. Marino extensively references Joan Torró's documentation, shedding light on the operations of the Santa Creu Hospital in Barcelona. The hospital's founding act, initially penned by Bonanat Gili, coincided with Torró's tenure as a clerk. Gabriela Piccinni's analysis in "I modelli ospedalieri" delves into the ethical tensions inherent in the foundational documents of hospitals, highlighting the societal dichotomy between unrest and wealth distribution. Moreover, Piccinni argues that these documents outline an assistance system primarily geared towards the impoverished, encompassing diverse groups such as orphans, widows, and the destitute. Joan Torró's handwriting, as a notary, is exemplified in Figure 20.22 on page 222.

As described in Chapter 18.11.1, Joan's brother, Guillem, was the first presbyter of the Hospital.

20.7.5 Pere Torró

Pere Torró's life unfolds, based on Figure 20.16 on page 221, through a series of administrative appointments and events documented in historical records. Born around the late 14th or early 15th century, Pere Torró lived during a period marked by significant political and administrative changes in Catalonia.

In October 1420, Pere Torró began his career as the third desk assistant, replacing Pere Ventosa, who had been promoted following the death of Francesc Richsen. This marks the beginning of Torró's journey within the bureaucratic machinery of the General Deputation of Catalonia, an administrative body responsible for managing the region's affairs.

As the years pass, Torró's career within the bureaucracy flourishes. In September 1422, he achieved the position of second desk assistant, a testament to his unwavering commitment and exceptional skills, as Pere Ventosa was promoted to the role of first assistant. This advancement underscores Torró's competence and dedication to his duties.

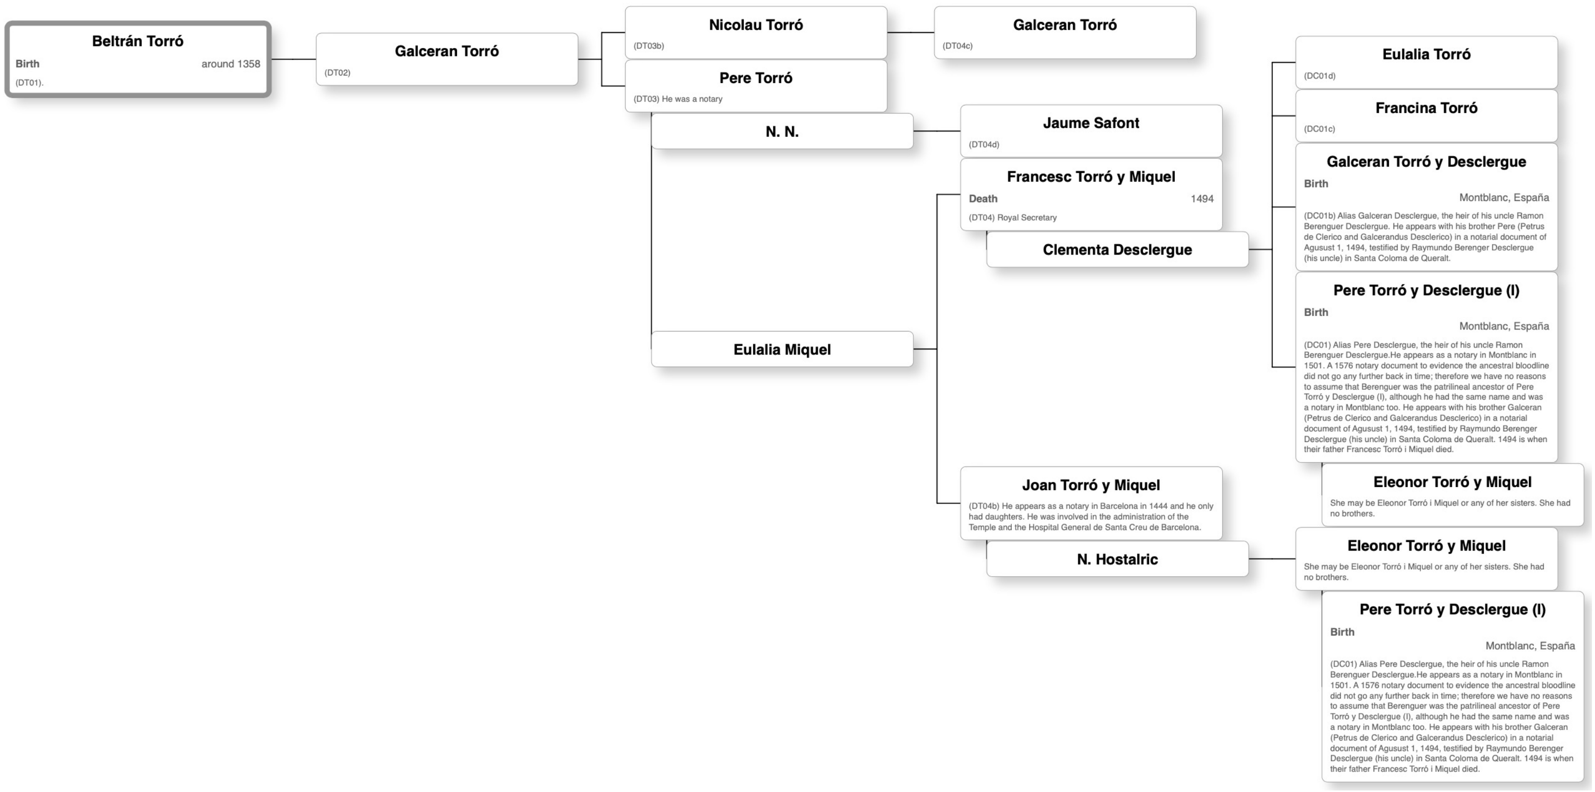
However, tragedy strikes in November 1444 when Pere Torró passes away. His death marks the end of a long and distinguished career serving the General Deputation of Catalonia. Yet, Torró's contributions to the administration are acknowledged and honored even in death.

In July 1440, Pere Torró, feeling the effects of old age and indisposition, requests relief from his duties. In response, the deputies and auditors of the General's accounts unanimously appointed Jacme Çafont as his deputy. This decision not only underscores the trust and respect Torró commanded among his peers but also highlights his pivotal role within the administration.

Interestingly, a dispute arises regarding the allocation of salaries between Torró and Çafont. While Torró is granted his full wage, Çafont initially receives no compensation despite assuming additional responsibilities. This disparity reflects the complexities of bureaucratic arrangements and the negotiations involved in distributing resources.

The historical records also shed light on the administrative practices of the time. The mention of leases or binding orders every three years highlights the meticulous record-keeping and periodic reviews undertaken by the General Deputation to ensure the smooth functioning of governance.

In summary, Pere Torró's life story offers a glimpse into the intricate workings of administrative institutions during the late medieval



Beltrán Torró
Birth around 1358
(DT01).
Galceran Torró
(DT02)
Nicolau Torró
(DT03b)
Pere Torró
(DT03) He was a notary
Galceran Torró
(DT04c)
N. N.
Jaume Safont
(DT04d)
Francesc Torró y Miquel
Death 1494
(DT04) Royal Secretary
Clementa Desclergue
Eulalia Miquel
Eulalia Torró
(DC01d)
Francina Torró
(DC01c)
Galceran Torró y Desclergue
Birth Montblanc, España
(DC01b) Alias Galceran Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue. He appears with his brother Pere (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt.
Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth Montblanc, España
(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.
Joan Torró y Miquel
(DT04b) He appears as a notary in Barcelona in 1444 and he only had daughters. He was involved in the administration of the Temple and the Hospital General de Santa Creu de Barcelona.
N. Hostalric
Eleonor Torró y Miquel
She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.
Eleonor Torró y Miquel
She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.
Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth Montblanc, España
(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.

Figure 20.28: The descendants of Beltran Torró (DT01). His place on the family tree of Bertrand Du Guesclin is shown in Figure 20.27.

Geraldo or Guérech or Guerau Torró
(DT01b) He used the shield with two fleurs de lys and a tower in 1405.
N. N.
Guerau Torró
(DT02b)
Margarida
Nicolau Torró
Death before 1431
(DT02c)
N. d'Estapera
Francesca N.
Antoni Torró
(DT03c)
Francesc Torró
(DT03d)
Joan Torró
(DT03e)
Bertran Torró
Death 1462
(DT03f) In 1455, he also appears in the chronicles as Betrán Turró.
Sibilla Miquel
Birth Girona, España
Death 1476
Nicolau Torró i Miquel
Death 1469
Galceran Torró
Death 1454
Barcelona, España
(DT03g) He lived and worked as a judge in Tortosa in 1391.

Figure 20.29: The descendants of Guerau Torró (DT01b). His place on the family tree of Bertrand Du Guesclin is shown in Figure 20.27.

2e Acte de 1350; accord entre des Juifs de Vinay, dans lequel Aynard de la Tour, seigneur de Vinay, fait un paiement pour le compte de Pierre de la Tour, Damoiseau, châtelain d'Oulx son oncle.

« A. DE RUPPE. — In nomine Domini amen. Anno a nativitate ejusdem domini millesimo trecentecimo quinquagesimo, die decima mensis Januarii, per hoc presens publicum instrumentum cunctis presentibus et futuris appareat evidenter quod constituti personaliter in presentia mei notarii publici et testium subscriptorum Morellus de Ponte judeus habitator Vignayci nomine suo et suorum ex unâ parte, ac Aquinetus et Aramus de Ponte judei fratres filiique dicti Morelli heredes quod pro duabus partibus ut asserunt Ambrammi et Jassoncti del Lalben quondam fratrum judeorum pro.... et Falvius Cohene judeus habitator Tollini heres parte ut asserit eorumdem Abrammi et lassoneti quondam fratrum judeorum pro et suis etiam ex parte tertia. Dicti, inquam, judei Morellus, Aramus, Aquinetus et Falvius non vi, non dolo, non metu ad hoc inducti, non errantes in juribus suis nec in factis sed de ipsis certiorati penitùs et instructi scientes quod et sponte ut dicebant et ex verbis suis liquide poterat apparere omnes ipsi et eorum quilibet prout eos tangit juxtà et secundum suprà et infrà scripta unanimi voluntate et consensu inter se ad invicem amicabiliter et concorditer nominibus predictis quod cum dictus Morellus et dicti Aramus et Aquinetus de Ponte fratres de auctoritate et licentiâ dicti Morelli eorum patris fecerunt, inhierunt et celebrarunt contractum qui sequitur per modum et formam inferius annotatos.

In primis enim voluerunt convenerunt et ordinaverunt dicte partes nominibus predictis quod cum dictus Morellus de Ponte, quam plurima debita de debitis dictorum Abrammi et Jassoneti de Lalben quondam fratrum Judeorum à pluribus et diversis personis et debentibus exigerit et recuperaverit videlicet à Viro potente et magniffico Domino Aynardo de Turre, Domino Vignayci, solvente nomine nobilis viri Petri de Turre, Domicelli tunc castellani Ultii ejus avunculi summam sex viginti et novem florenorum auri, item summam quinquaginta florenorum auri à nobili Guigone Bertrandi alias Veyoni de Moyrenco, item summam florenorum auri à Vincentio de Burgo Chapuysio. .

. . . .

Titre original en parchemin, dont copie authentique a été déposée en 1819 à la Bibliothèque royale et aux Archives du royaume.

Figure 20.30: This is a document from 1350, detailing an agreement involving Jews from Vinay. It involves a payment arrangement made by Aynard de la Tour, the lord of Vinay, on behalf of his uncle Pierre de la Tour, who is the castellan of Oulx. The notarial act is witnessed by Morellus de Ponte, a Jew from Vignay, and other parties including Aquinetus and Aramus de Ponte, who are the heirs of Morelli, along with Flavius Cohene from Tollini.

period in Catalonia. His career trajectory, marked by diligence, promotions, and eventual retirement due to illness, contributes to our understanding of bureaucratic systems and the individuals who navigated them.

20.7.6 Elionor Torró

Batlle i Gallart provides valuable information.[24]

Elionor Torró, a lesser-known member of the Torró family, represents an intriguing figure in late medieval Barcelona's social tapestry. Sponsored by her relative Galceran Torró, Elionor's familial connections underscored her integration into the city's merchant elite. While details regarding Elionor's life remain elusive, her association with Galceran suggests her involvement in Barcelona's commercial and social spheres. Her presence within the broader Torró network reflects the interconnectedness of familial ties in shaping the city's socio-economic dynamics.

Though overshadowed by more prominent figures within the Torró lineage, Elionor's inclusion highlights the diverse individuals contributing to Barcelona's vibrant urban landscape during the late Middle Ages.

20.7.7 Galceran Torró (DT03g)

Galceran Torró (DT03g) was the son of Nicolau Torró (DT02c) and Francesca, described in Chapter 20.3.1. He was the brother of Bertran Torró (DT03f), described in 20.7.8.

He studied Law at Lérida first and then at the universities of Toulouse and Montpellier

Galceran Torró (DT03g) lived and worked as a judge in Tortosa in 1391 and died in 1454 in Barcelona.[25][26][27][28][29]

Galceran Torró, a figure shrouded in medieval Catalonia's legal and societal landscape, emerges as a multifaceted persona of noble lineage and scholarly pursuits. He was an honorable citizen, a doctor, a jurist, and a judge. Galceran Torró's presence resonated notably in 1391 when he served as a judge in Tortosa. His judicial endeavors were entwined with the complex case concerning the Jewish community of the Aljama, wherein he collaborated with fellow Tortosa judge Joan de Naters. While his exact origins remain debated, it is conjectured that Torró hailed from a distinguished family in Castelló d'Empúries, with ties reaching into the urban fabric of Barcelona.

The familial lineage of Torró unfolds with his father, the money changer Nicolau Torró, who, alongside his brother Guerau, established close affiliations with King Ferdinand I of Antequera. Notably, Galceran's baptismal obligations extended to Eleanor, the daughter of Joan Torró, emblematic of familial ties deeply embedded within societal structures of the time. Educationally, Torró's journey led him through the corridors of legal scholarship at prestigious institutions such as the universities of Lleida, Toulouse, and Montpellier, culminating in a doctorate in law. In 1445 and 1451, he was engaged as an advisor to the procurator of Barcelona, reflecting his active involvement in the legal governance of the county of Empúries.

An insight into Torró's intellectual pursuits unveils glimpses of his legal library, shedding light on the scholarly resources that enriched his legal acumen. Torró inscribed his final wishes on the testamentary grounds on July 17, 1454, marking the denouement of a life dedicated to legal scholarship and civic duty.

Intriguingly, Torró's narrative intertwines with linguistic remnants preserved through a diet prescription, possibly dating back to circa 1420. This artifact, bearing linguistic nuances reflective of the Tortosa region, hints at interpersonal connections, perhaps with figures like Joan de Naters, resonating with Torró's societal engagements.

Moreover, a manuscript bearing an Aljami inscription in Hebrew, discovered alongside a legal codex fragment in Latin, alludes to Torró's potential interactions with a prior owner—potentially a Jewish physician. This serendipitous encounter with historical artifacts unveils the intricacies of Torró's societal milieu, offering glimpses into his engagements beyond the realms of jurisprudence.

20.7.8 Bertran Torró (DT03f)

He died in 1462 and was the son of Nicolau Torró and Francesca, described in Chapter 20.3.1. He was married to Sibilla Miquel, described in Chapter 20.7.13, born in Girona and who died in 1476. Bertran Torró (DT03f) was the brother of Galceran Torró (DT03g), described in 20.7.7.

A citation is shown in Figure 20.6 on page 218.

There is a document, dated August 1, 1457, and shown in Figure 20.10 on page 219, that recounts the challenges faced in organizing the crew for a Barcelona guardacoslas galley. Bertran Torro, a key figure in the narrative, is mentioned as a source of information guiding the efforts to recruit sailors and crew members for the ship. The document describes the diligent efforts undertaken, including traveling along the coast to identify and engage potential crew members. Bertran Torro appears to have played a pivotal role in facilitating these operations, with individuals being dispatched to various locations to secure personnel for the ship. However, complications arise when the captain of Cobliure, Berenguer d. Olms, intervenes, expressing concerns about the potential vulnerability of the town to impending attacks by Genoese galleys. Despite attempts to persuade Berenguer to release the recruited men for service on the Barcelona ship, he remains steadfast in his decision to retain them for the town's defense.

The narrative underscores the diplomatic efforts made to navigate the situation, appealing to Berenguer's sense of duty to the King and country and emphasizing the importance of the Barcelona ship's mission. Despite these efforts, Berenguer refused to release the recruited men. Consequently, the writers of the document expressed their inability to proceed further without instructions from higher authorities, seeking guidance on how to proceed with the situation.

Batlle i Gallart provides valuable information.[30] Bertran Torró, a prominent figure in late medieval Barcelona, hailed from the town of Castelló d'Empúries, branching from the Torró family. Born around 1400, he was the son of Nicolau, a money changer, and his second wife, Francesca. Bertran's elder half-brother, Galceran Torró, pursued legal studies in Lérida, Toulouse, and Montpellier, eventually earning a doctorate of law. Meanwhile, Bertran, destined for business, received a standard education befitting his family's status as honest citizens.

Following their father's death before 1431, Bertran and Galceran maintained a close relationship, sharing their father's residence in

---

[24] Batlle i Gallart, Carmen. «Una família barcelonesa: los Torró». Annals de l'Institut d'Estudis Gironins, 1974, Vol. 22, p. 203-210.

[25] Batlle i Gallart (1974), "Una família barcelonesa: los ...", pp. 203-204 i quadre genealògic (Torró de Girona-Barcelona)

[26] Grau i Monserrat (1985), "Vendes de seients de la Sinagoga ...", pp. 10, 12-13 i 18 (Tortosa)

[27] Iglesias Fonseca (1996), Llibres i lectors a la Barcelona ..., doc. 262 (llibres al testament)

[28] Iglesias Fonseca (2003), "Els llibres dels juristes: un ...", pp. 730 i 740, doc. XV (llibres al testament)

[29] Raufast Chico (2008), "Ceremonia y conflicto: entradas ...", p. 1043n (assessor, 1451)

[30] Batlle i Gallart, Carmen. «Una família barcelonesa: los Torró». Annals de l'Institut d'Estudis Gironins, 1974, Vol. 22, p. 203-210.

El Borne.[31] After inheriting his father's wealth, Bertran initially engaged in mercantile ventures before shifting his focus to municipal politics. His tenure in the Council of Hundred spanned over two decades, during which he rose to prominence, particularly during the Busqueris' governance.

Bertran's political career peaked when he served as city trustee in the Cortes, a position he held from October 1454. Despite his dedication and re-election in May 1455, his affiliation with the Busqueris drew the ire of their adversaries, leading to his tragic demise. Engaging in conspiracies favoring King John's return, Bertran was sentenced to death alongside fellow conspirator Martí Solzina on May 19, 1462. Their execution followed swiftly, with their bodies displayed in the Plaza del Rey.

Bertran's death, recorded in the death register of Santa Maria del Mar, marked the end of a tumultuous era. His estate, including a significant inheritance and conflicts over assets, passed to his widow, Sibilla Miquel, a scion of the influential Miquel family of Gerona. Bertran's legacy, entwined with political upheavals and familial disputes, left a lasting impact on Barcelona's socio-political landscape. The brother-in-law of Bertran Torró (DT03f) is described in Chapter 20.7.12.

20.7.9 Francesc Torró

Figure 20.11 on page 220 shows Francesc Torró, appearing in Urgell, 1462.

20.7.10 Francesc de Torró y Desclergue

Figure 20.8 on page 219 shows that Francesc de Torró y Desclergue, the son of Pere Galceran de Torró, was a Knight and attended the Corts in 1626.

20.7.11 Pere Galceran Torró

Pere Galceran Torró was the son of Pere Torró y Hostalrich, as shown in Figure 20.9 on page 219. It concerns Saint Ignatius of Loyola's canonization process, in which Pedro Galcerán de Torró's testimony holds particular significance. His account vividly connects to Ignatius's life and times, as he speaks at length about his father, Pedro Torró de Hostalrich, a contemporary and close friend of Ignatius.

Pedro Galcerán de Torró's testimony was part of a broader collection gathered in Barcelona, representing a wide spectrum of social classes. Galcerán's father, Pedro Torró de Hostalrich, had known Ignatius personally, adding a layer of authenticity and intimacy to his son's account.

Pere Galceran Torró (DC02by) was a Knight and born in Balaguer. He was a doctor in law and participated in the Corts of 1599. He married a Desclergue and was the father of Francesc Torroó y Desclergue (II) (DC02byy), a Knight who attended the Corts of 1626. Pere Galceran Torró was the son of Pere Torró i Hostalric (I)(DC02b), also known as Pere Desclergue and as Pere Desclergue y Torró. Pere Torró i Hostalric was the son of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01) and Eleonor Torroó y Miquel.

In 1603, Pere Galceran Torró became embroiled in a legal battle over the rightful ownership of the inheritance and property previously belonging to Mariana de Montagut. Despite Miguel Montagut's donation, the Monastery's Bursar called into question the legality and validity of this transfer, ultimately leading to a legal ruling in favor of Miguel Montagut as the rightful heir. In Figure 20.7 on page 219, Fontanella introduces a legal case from August 22, 1603, originating from the Royal Court of Catalonia. The case revolves around the inheritance and property of Mariana de Montagut, who was married to Miguel Montagut.

After Mariana's passing, Miguel donated her assets to Pedro Galceran Torró. However, the Bursar of the Monastery of the Holy Trinity contested this donation, leading to a lawsuit. In this legal dispute, Pere Galceran Torró is the recipient of the disputed assets through the act of donation made by Miguel Montagut, Mariana's husband. However, the Bursar of the Monastery of the Holy Trinity challenges this donation, claiming that Miguel Montagut should be considered the rightful heir to Mariana's property since the donation implies the addition of the inheritance. The decision of the Royal Court, supported by Jerónimo Astor and Actuary Martín Juan Carmona, favors Miguel Montagut's claim, asserting that the donation presupposes the addition of the inheritance, thus making Miguel the heir of the donated property.

Fontanella further reinforces this legal standpoint by referring to a similar decision from the Roman Rota, stating that the individual who disposed of the assets forming part of the inheritance is deemed to have accepted the inheritance.

Figure 20.8 on page 219 shows that Pere Galceran de Torró, the father of Francesc de Torró y Desclergue, was a Knight, born in Balaguer and Doctor in law. He attended the Cors in 1599.

20.7.12 Dionís Torró (alias Miquel)

Batlle i Gallart provides valuable information.[32]

Dionís Torró, also known as Dionís Miquel, emerged as a significant figure in late medieval Barcelona, inheriting the legacy of his brother-in-law Bertran Torró, described in Chapter 20.7.8. Born around 1450, Dionís entered religious life, becoming a hospital canon in Pamplona. However, he later abandoned his ecclesiastical career to fulfill his sister's will, adopting the surname Torró.

In 1479, Dionís married Francina Ros, the daughter of Joan Ros, a respected doctor of law in Barcelona. This union solidified his position within the city's elite circles, bolstered by his inheritance from Bertran, primarily consisting of public and private censuses. Following Francina's death in 1490,[33] Dionís remarried Isabel de Cabrera, though they had no children. He continued his involvement in municipal governance, serving as a councilor in 1507 and appointed consul of the Catalans in Malta in 1510.[34] Despite perhaps not assuming the latter role due to his wife's demise, Dionís remained a prominent figure until his passing, documented after 1511.

Dionís' legacy, intertwined with familial ties and civic duties, reflected the complexities of late medieval Barcelona's socio-political fabric. His contributions to governance and his adaptation of the Torró name underscored the enduring influence of family connections in shaping the city's trajectory.

---

[31] Alós, La heràldica, pàg. 37.

[32] Batlle i Gallart, Carmen. «Una família barcelonesa: los Torró». Annals de l'Institut d'Estudis Gironins, 1974, Vol. 22, p. 203-210.

[33] Francina otorgó testamento ante el notario Miquel Carbonell el 22 de abril de 1490. (José M. de Alós yde Dou, La heràldica en la basílica de Santa Maria del Mar, «Boletín de la Sociedad de Atracción de Forasteros» (Barcelona), 1924, pàgs. 37.38).

[34] Antonio Capmany y de Monpalau, Memorias históricas sobre la marina, comercio y artes de Ui antigua ciudad de BarceUina, reed. Barcelona, II, 1961-1963, pàgs. 857 y 1.029.

20.7.13 Sibilla Miquel

Batlle i Gallart provides valuable information.[35]

Sibilla Miquel, a scion of the esteemed Miquel family of Gerona, played a pivotal role in late medieval Barcelona's social milieu. Born around 1420, she was the daughter of Narcís Miquel and Sibilla Sampsó,[36] both revered citizens of Gerona. Raised in a family steeped in tradition and influence, Sibilla married Bertran Torró, described in Chapter 20.7.8, a key figure in Barcelona's political landscape.

During their marriage, Sibilla bore Bertran a natural son, Nicolau, while immersing herself in familial and religious endeavors. Following Bertran's demise in 1462, Sibilla became embroiled in disputes over inheritance, particularly regarding significant censuses on the kingdoms of Aragon and Mallorca.

After Bertran's death, Sibilla's life centered on managing his estate and navigating familial conflicts. Her involvement in legal proceedings, including arbitration over contested assets, exemplified her determination to uphold her family's legacy amidst challenges.

Sibilla's passing in 1490 marked the end of an era, leaving behind a legacy intertwined with the Torró family's fortunes and the broader socio-political dynamics of late medieval Barcelona. Her descendants would continue to shape the city's narrative, perpetuating the enduring influence of the Miquel-Torró lineage.

20.7.14 Galceran Torró

Galceran Torró was a prominent person in the legal landscape of his time, as can be seen in Figure 20.17 on page 221 where he appears within a list of esteemed lawyers.

During the mid-15th century, when Galceran Torró graced the legal fraternity with his presence, the halls of jurisprudence pulsated with intellectual fervor. It was an era characterized by the pursuit of knowledge, where legal minds converged to navigate the intricate tapestry of civil and canon law. In an age where legal scholarship was revered, Galceran Torró, adorned with the title of Doctor in Civil Law, stood as a beacon of erudition. His presence among the luminaries of his time underscores his significance and contribution to the legal discourse of the period.

Galceran Torró's testament, shown in Figure 20.19 on page 221, dated July 17, 1468, reveals his acknowledgment of indebtedness to several individuals, including Margarida Torrelles, Joan de Gualbes, Antónia (widow of Ramon Serra), and Joan de Bellafilla. These individuals hold some of Torró's books as pledges. The testament offers insights into the financial arrangements and social networks of fifteenth-century Barcelona, shedding light on the legal and economic practices of the time.

The testament also shows that Galceran Torró was a civil law doctor and a citizen of Barcelona. He is also referred to as such in Figure 20.20 on page 221.

20.7.15 Bernat Torró

Bernat Torró, identified as a monk and scribe from the monastery of Poblet, plays a significant role in documenting various transactions and agreements involving land and property rights.

In the document dated January 16, 1233, in Figure 20.12 on page 220, Berenguer de Tàrrega, rector of Montblanc, acknowledges receipt of 100 sous from Pere de Tàrrega, prior of Poblet. This transaction involves renouncing rights on a census bequeathed to the monastery by Bernat Amill. Berenguer de Tàrrega also renounces any claims on censuses from other individuals and funeral rights of the people of Montblanc for the monastery. Bernat Torró is involved as the monk and scribe from Poblet who documents this transaction.

The document dated April 29, 1233, in Figure 20.13 on page 220, records the sale of land in Barbens to the monastery of Poblet by Berenguer d'Anglesola and his wife, Berenguera. Bernat Torró, a monk and scribe from Poblet, is present during this transaction to record the sale details. Other notable individuals mentioned include Arnau d'Anglesola and Ramon de Cervera.

Dated November 29, 1235, the document, in Figure 20.14 on page 221, records Bernat de Guàrdia's renunciation of his rights over honors, lands, censuses, and quarters of the farm of Barbens in favor of the monastery of Poblet. Bernat Torró, a monk and scribe from Poblet, documents this renunciation agreement. Notable individuals mentioned in this document include Bartomeu Ern and Peter Antolí.

Finally, the document, in Figure 20.15 on page 221, dated October 27, 1237, involves the sale of a piece of land in Barbens to the monastery of Poblet by Ramon Chel and his brother, Timoret. Bernat Torró is again present during this transaction, fulfilling his role as a monk and scribe from Poblet, likely to document the sale. Other individuals mentioned in this document include Pere de Llor, Guillem de Máger, and Pere Huguet.

20.7.16 Guillem Torró

Guillem Torró was, as can be read in Figure 20.24 on page 223, the first presbyter of the Hospital established by his brother, notary Joan Torro, described in Chapter 20.7.4.

20.7.17 Jaume and Joan Torró

Batlle i Gallart provides valuable information.[37]

Jaume and Joan Torró, members of a branch of the Torró family originating from Castelló d'Empúries, played significant roles in Barcelona's urbanization during the late medieval period. While specific details regarding their lives remain scarce, their association with the city's merchant circles underscores their economic influence.

Operating in tandem with the broader Torró network, Jaume and Joan facilitated the migration of rural inhabitants to Barcelona, contributing to the city's demographic growth. Their ties to Galceran Torró further solidified their integration into Barcelona's commercial and social network

Despite their relative obscurity in historical records, Jaume and Joan's contributions exemplify the collective efforts of families like the Torrós in shaping Barcelona's transformation into a bustling urban center during the late Middle Ages.

---

[35] Batlle i Gallart, Carmen. «Una família barcelonesa: los Torró». Annals de l'Institut d'Estudis Gironins, 1974, Vol. 22, p. 203-210.

[36] AHPB, Joan Franch major, leg. 15, Segundo libro de testamentos 1434-1444, 30 de mayo de 1439

[37] Batlle i Gallart, Carmen. «Una família barcelonesa: los Torró». Annals de l'Institut d'Estudis Gironins, 1974, Vol. 22, p. 203-210.

20.8 Members of the Miquel clan

The descendants of Bernat Miquel are shown in Figure 19.25 on page 191.

His clan intermarried with Torró and Desclergue. One such marriage is that of Bertrand Torró and Sibillia, and they gave birth to Nicolau Torró,[38] described in Chapter 20.3.1. In this chapter, we describe several Miquels that may interest our ancestry.

20.8.1 Berenguer de Miquel

Don Berenguer de Miquel was a native of Girona, a Knight of the Order of the Temple, and a doctor of Law. He was an Ambassador of the King of Aragon, Don Pedro II, in 1203 in Montpellier and in 1204 before the Pope in Rome.

20.8.2 Pere Miquel

Pere Miquel was a figure of significance in Girona's history. Born in medieval Catalonia, his life unfolded against societal transitions and ecclesiastical duties. He was a native of Girona, Knight of the Order of the Temple, and went with King James I of Aragon to the conquest of Valencia.

At Girona's Hospital de la Seu, Pere Miquel held sway as an administrator,[39][40][41][42][43][44] a steward entrusted with the well-being of both body and soul. From 1327 to 1342, he navigated the complexities of managing the hospital, a sacred institution intertwined with the cathedral chapter's patronage. His tenure was marked by diligent oversight, ensuring the smooth operation of the hospital's affairs.

Yet, Pere Miquel's influence extended beyond the confines of administrative duties. A man of multifaceted talents, he was not merely a bureaucrat but also a custodian of knowledge and a charity conduit. At the behest of the bishop, he cataloged the hospital's possessions, an endeavor that underscored his commitment to meticulous stewardship.

His involvement in the ecclesiastical sphere went beyond the walls of the hospital. Pere Miquel likely served as the bishop's butler, a role that afforded him proximity to the corridors of power and the inner workings of the Church. Through his service, he navigated the intricate web of ecclesiastical politics, earning the trust and respect of his superiors.

However, Pere Miquel's story is not confined solely to his professional endeavors. The scattered fragments of historical records hint at a broader narrative; one intertwined with familial ties and spiritual legacies. While his precise lineage remains shrouded in obscurity, tantalizing glimpses suggest connections to benefices and chapels, each thread weaving a tapestry of his familial and spiritual affiliations.

Tragically, Pere Miquel's journey met its denouement in the shadows of mortality. By 1362, his name graced the inventory of the deceased, a testament to the ephemeral nature of human existence. Yet, his legacy endured, etched into the annals of Girona's history as a paragon of service and stewardship.

20.8.3 Anton Miquel

Anton Miquel, as shown in the historical record described in Figure 20.25 on page 224, emerges as a notable figure within the administrative apparatus of the Order of the Temple at Empúries during the medieval period. Contextualized within the rural landscape of Catalonia, Miquel's significance is discerned primarily through his involvement in land transactions, notably concerning Mas Gifreu, a Templar-managed farmhouse situated within the territorial jurisdiction of the House of the Temple.

Miquel's association with Mas Gifreu is documented in a deed dated August 31, 1417, wherein he is identified as the heir of Agnes, his mother, and thus vested with proprietary interests in the property. This document serves as a testament to Miquel's familial lineage and entanglement within the Templar network as a beneficiary of inherited land tenure rights. Notably, his subsequent actions within this transactional context shed light on his agency and role within the order's estate administration.

In the deed, Miquel relinquishes his hereditary claims to Mas Gifreu in favor of Pere de la Cerda, thereby effectuating a transfer of property rights within the Templar hierarchy. This act of renouncement underscores Miquel's compliance with the institutional protocols governing succession and land tenure within the Order of the Temple. Moreover, his relinquishment of Mas Gifreu denotes his surrender to the order's directives, highlighting his commitment to the collective interests of the institution over individual prerogatives.

Furthermore, Miquel's involvement extends beyond mere renouncement to a proactive role in establishing Mas Gifreu under a new custodian, Bartomeu Pages. Through this transaction, documented in the same deed, Miquel assumes the mantle of authority, orchestrating the transfer of property rights by institutional norms and customary practices. The stipulations outlined within the deed, including pecuniary considerations and agricultural obligations, underscore Miquel's meticulous adherence to the procedural intricacies of Templar land tenure practices and his thoroughness and attention to detail.

Readers interested in historical debate, particularly inquisitive in Tarragona and Montblanc, may read the text in the right column in Figure 20.25 on page 224 from the same source or the work of Miquel Pujol i Canelles for more information.[45]

Anton Miquel's mother was Agnes, the daughter of Joan Torró and Geraldona.[46]

20.8.4 Joan Miquel

Joan Miquel, a student and the son of notable Francesc Miquel (residing in San Mateo), appears in a document of 1460, shown in Figure 20.26 on page 225.

---

[38] Batlle i Gallart, Carmen. «Una família barcelonesa: los Torró». Annals de l'Institut d'Estudis Gironins, 1974, Vol. 22, p. 203-210.

[39] Batlle i Prats (1934), "Inventari dels béns de ...", p. 74 (un llibre de medicina en català que li pertangué).

[40] Castells - Puigdevall - Reixach (1989), L'Hospital de Santa Caterina, p. 20 (llista d'hospitalers amb les dates 1329-1353).

[41] Gironella i Delgà (2001), "La cultura de la caritat ..." (inventari).

[42] Conejo da Pena (2013), «Domus seu hospitale»: espais d ..., pp. 35 i 83.

[43] Girona - ADG – Manuals de col·lacions beneficials, vol. D-161, ff. 93r-109r – Inventari, Notarial – 10 gener 1362.

[44] Girona - AHG - Hospital de Santa Caterina – perg. 684 – Inventari, Notarial – 31 gener 1342.

[45] Miquel Pujol i Canelles,"Els Templers a l'Empordà - la comanda del Temple de Castelló d'Empúries, primera part", p. 65, 69, 90.

[46] Apothecary of Tarragona. The inventory of his goods (10/04/1360) is preserved, made at the request of his widow Geraldona, guardian of the common daughter Agnès.

20.8.5 Gabriel de Miquel

Fray Gabriel de Miquel was the Prior of Cerviá and attended the Cortes of Barcelona for the Religious Arm in 1493.

20.8.6 Guillermo Torró de Miquel

Guillermo Torró de Miquel, or Guillem Turró de Miquel, was a Knight of the Order of Saint John. He was Commander and Prior at the Hospital of the Holy Cross and Saint Paul in Barcelona.

20.8.7 Gerónimo de Miquel i Torró

Don Gerónimo de Miquel i Torró was a Trustee of Barcelona, a Doctor of Laws, a Councilor of Barcelona, and an Honored Citizen of Barcelona. He attended the Cortés Catalanas of Barcelona in 1599 by the Royal Arm.

20.8.8 Francesc Miquel

Francesc Miquel is found as Knight of the Saint John's order of Jerusalem Figure 20.4 on page 218, in 1613, in Figure 20.5 on page 218, in 1615 and in Figure 20.3 on page 217, in 1619.

More information can be found about Francesc Miquel in 1615[47]

There, in Catalunya's history during the early 17th century, amidst the intricate webs of political and maritime affairs, one figure emerges prominently—Francesc Miquel. As a knight of the esteemed Order and Militia of Sant Joan de Hierusalem, Miquel held a position of honor and responsibility, further elevated by his role as captain of the galley of the General of Catalonia.

The events of June 17, 1615, stand as a testament to Miquel's pivotal role in the maritime operations of Catalunya. On this day, Raphael Riera, acting as the attorney of the General of Catalonia by order of the senior deputies, confronted Miquel regarding his alleged failure to execute the directives of the said deputies. Positioned before the Font de Sant Joan in the bustling city of Barcelona, Miquel faced scrutiny amidst the presence of witnesses.

Miquel's response revealed his position's complex interplay of authority and pragmatism. He relayed the instructions he received from the Serene Prince General of the Sea, emphasizing the necessity of complying with higher commands. Despite the pressures and uncertainties of maritime logistics, Miquel demonstrated a steadfast commitment to his duties, assuring prompt readiness for forthcoming voyages.

Central to Miquel's narrative is the message dispatched by the Highness, underscoring the gravity of the situation. Addressed to "Miquel Pol, captain of the captain galley of Catalonia," the message conveyed the Highness's directive in clear terms. Miquel was urged not to entertain deviations from the established orders, reaffirming his allegiance to his majesty's service.

Yet, amidst the weighty responsibilities thrust upon him, Miquel was hindered by indisposition, impeding his ability to convey crucial developments to the senior deputies. This unforeseen setback serves as a poignant reminder of the human element woven into the fabric of historical events, highlighting Miquel's vulnerability despite his unwavering dedication.

Information of 1619[48] concerning Francesc Miquel, further encompasses his diplomatic and logistical undertakings in service of the General of Catalonia. As the consistory of the royal delegation convened on Dimars to viii, Miquel, adorned with the esteemed habit of Sant Joan, assumed his role as captain of the galley squadron with characteristic poise and diligence.

In this gathering, Miquel brought forth a matter of pressing concern—Esmarils held captive in the clutches of a Moorish vessel recently encountered by the General's galleys near Palamós. With a steadfast resolve to uphold the honor and rights of the General, Miquel apprised the assembly of the exigency to secure the release of these prisoners of war. Despite encountering resistance, Miquel remained undeterred, pledging to effect the restitution of the Esmarils to the General, thus fulfilling his duty with unwavering fidelity.

The subsequent days bore witness to Miquel's unwavering commitment to the operational readiness of the squadron under his charge. As the demands of military logistics unfurled, Miquel orchestrated the return of armaments and provisions essential for the fleet's sustenance and efficacy. His meticulous attention to detail and committed execution underscored his indispensability within the hierarchical framework of Catalunya's maritime apparatus.

On 12 Disabte, amidst Jaume Sala's case, Miquel facilitated the return of fifty-one harquebusses and fifty-three flasks, ensuring the replenishment of vital resources critical for the squadron's operational tempo. This transaction bore testament to Miquel's astute stewardship and unwavering commitment to the logistical imperatives underpinning Catalunya's naval endeavors.

As the calendar turned to 17 Dijous, Miquel's endeavors intersected with the auspicious Feast of the Gloriosa Sant Antoni, a poignant reminder of the symbiotic relationship between faith and duty woven into the fabric of Miquel's existence. Amidst the occasion's solemnity, Miquel's presence resonated as a beacon of steadfast devotion to his calling, and his actions were symbolic of the courage and resolve of Catalunya's maritime heritage.

---

[47] Dietaris de la Generalitat de Catalunya, 1411-1714, Colleccio de 10 volums, document 82, page 200

[48] Dietaris de la Generalitat de Catalunya, 1411-1714, Colleccio de 10 volums, document 174r, page 350

Part VII

The Desclergues in Montblanc

Chapter 21

Earliest Desclergues in Montblanc - Matrilineal Connection

Letra de don P.º Tercero Rey de Aragon ſobre la milicia de los Dezclergues.

Figure 21.1: Back side of the 1494 (August 7) copy of the 1383 (December 8) notary document testifying the military 'Bernat D'Anguera, alias Desclergue,' and his father, Guillem D'Anquera, stationed in Montblanc. The label refers to Don Pedro III of Aragon, but this is an error. The dates in the document clarify that it concerned Don Pedro IV of Aragon. (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

The Desclergue family's tale in Mediterranean trade history is a fascinating account of migration, cultural interchange, and business ventures. During the height of economic success in Barcelona and Mallorca, the Desclergues were deeply involved in the thriving business activities of these essential port cities, with their family history being connected to the dynamics of commerce and banking. The Desclergues did not live isolated in Mallorca but were continuously in contact with Barcelona, Valencia, Zaragoza, Huesca, and even Occitania, where they originated from.

Though lacking the cosmopolitan allure of coastal cities, Montblanc became the canvas for the Desclergue family's lasting influence. Initially, Montblanc may have seemed an unlikely choice for a family accustomed to Barcelona's luxury and Mallorca's wealth. However, the Desclergues, with their refined preferences in art and architecture, transformed Montblanc into a sophisticated and alluring destination. Their prestigious mansion on the Plaza Mayor stands as a testament to their ability to shape their environment.

Yet, the Desclergue family's influence extended far beyond the cobblestone streets of Montblanc. As Catalan traders, their commercial ventures reached the shores of distant lands far beyond the Iberian Peninsula. The allure of Sevilla, the gateway to the Americas, beckoned to the Desclergues' adventurous spirit. Amidst the bustling port and labyrinthine streets, they firmly established themselves in transatlantic trade, further bolstering their wealth.

Francesc Torró y Miquel and Clementa Desclergue had four children: Eulalia Torró (DC01d), Francina Torró (DC01c), Galceran Torró y Desclergue (DC01b), and Pere Torró y Desclergue (DC01). In a notarial document of 1494, Galceran and Pere appear under the names Galceran Desclergue and Pere Desclergue. The different spelling, i.e., 'Petrus de Clerico' and 'Galcerand Desclerico,' in the document is evidence that their family name was not immutable, even though they are explicitly mentioned as brothers.

The notary document is the oldest reliable reference of the Desclergues of Montblanc, and it dates from October 1383 and was copied on August 7, 1494, and testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue of Santa Coloma de Queralt. The 1494 copy was written to allow our patrilineal ancestor, Pere de Torró y Desclergue, also known as Pere Desclergue (DC01), and his brother Galceran Desclergue (DC01b) to establish their careers. It was the year their father, Francesc Torró i Miquel, died, and they needed evidence of their Desclergue military ancestry.

The original 1383 document had been written under the reign of Don Pedro IV of Aragon[1]

The notary document refers to 'Bernat D'Anguera, alias Desclergue,' and his father, Guillem D'Anquera, who were military stationed in Montblanc during the 100-year war in the 14th century. The document highlights that they stem from a bloodline of the military. Since the document dates from 1383, there is no information about the later period, in which, through other documentation, we found Berenguer Desclergue, who was a man of the law in 1440 and whose daughter Clementa married Francesc Torró i Miquel.

The notary document is shown in Figures 21.1, 21.2, 21.3, and 21.4. Pere de Torró y Desclergue, also known as Pere Desclergue (DC01), is described in Chapter 22 and Chapter 25.

The 1383 document describing Bernat D'Anguera, alias Desclergue, and his father Guillem D'Anguera does not provide details on how, in 1494, they were connected to Pere Torró y Desclergue (DC01) because the connection was not patrilineal. Indeed, the grandsons of Bernat D'Anquera, alias Desclergue, were Berenguer Desclergue and Francesc Desclergue. The daughter of Berenguer Desclergue was Clementa Desclergue, and she married Francesc Torró y Miquel, the parents of Pere Torró y Desclergue (DC)1), our forefather.

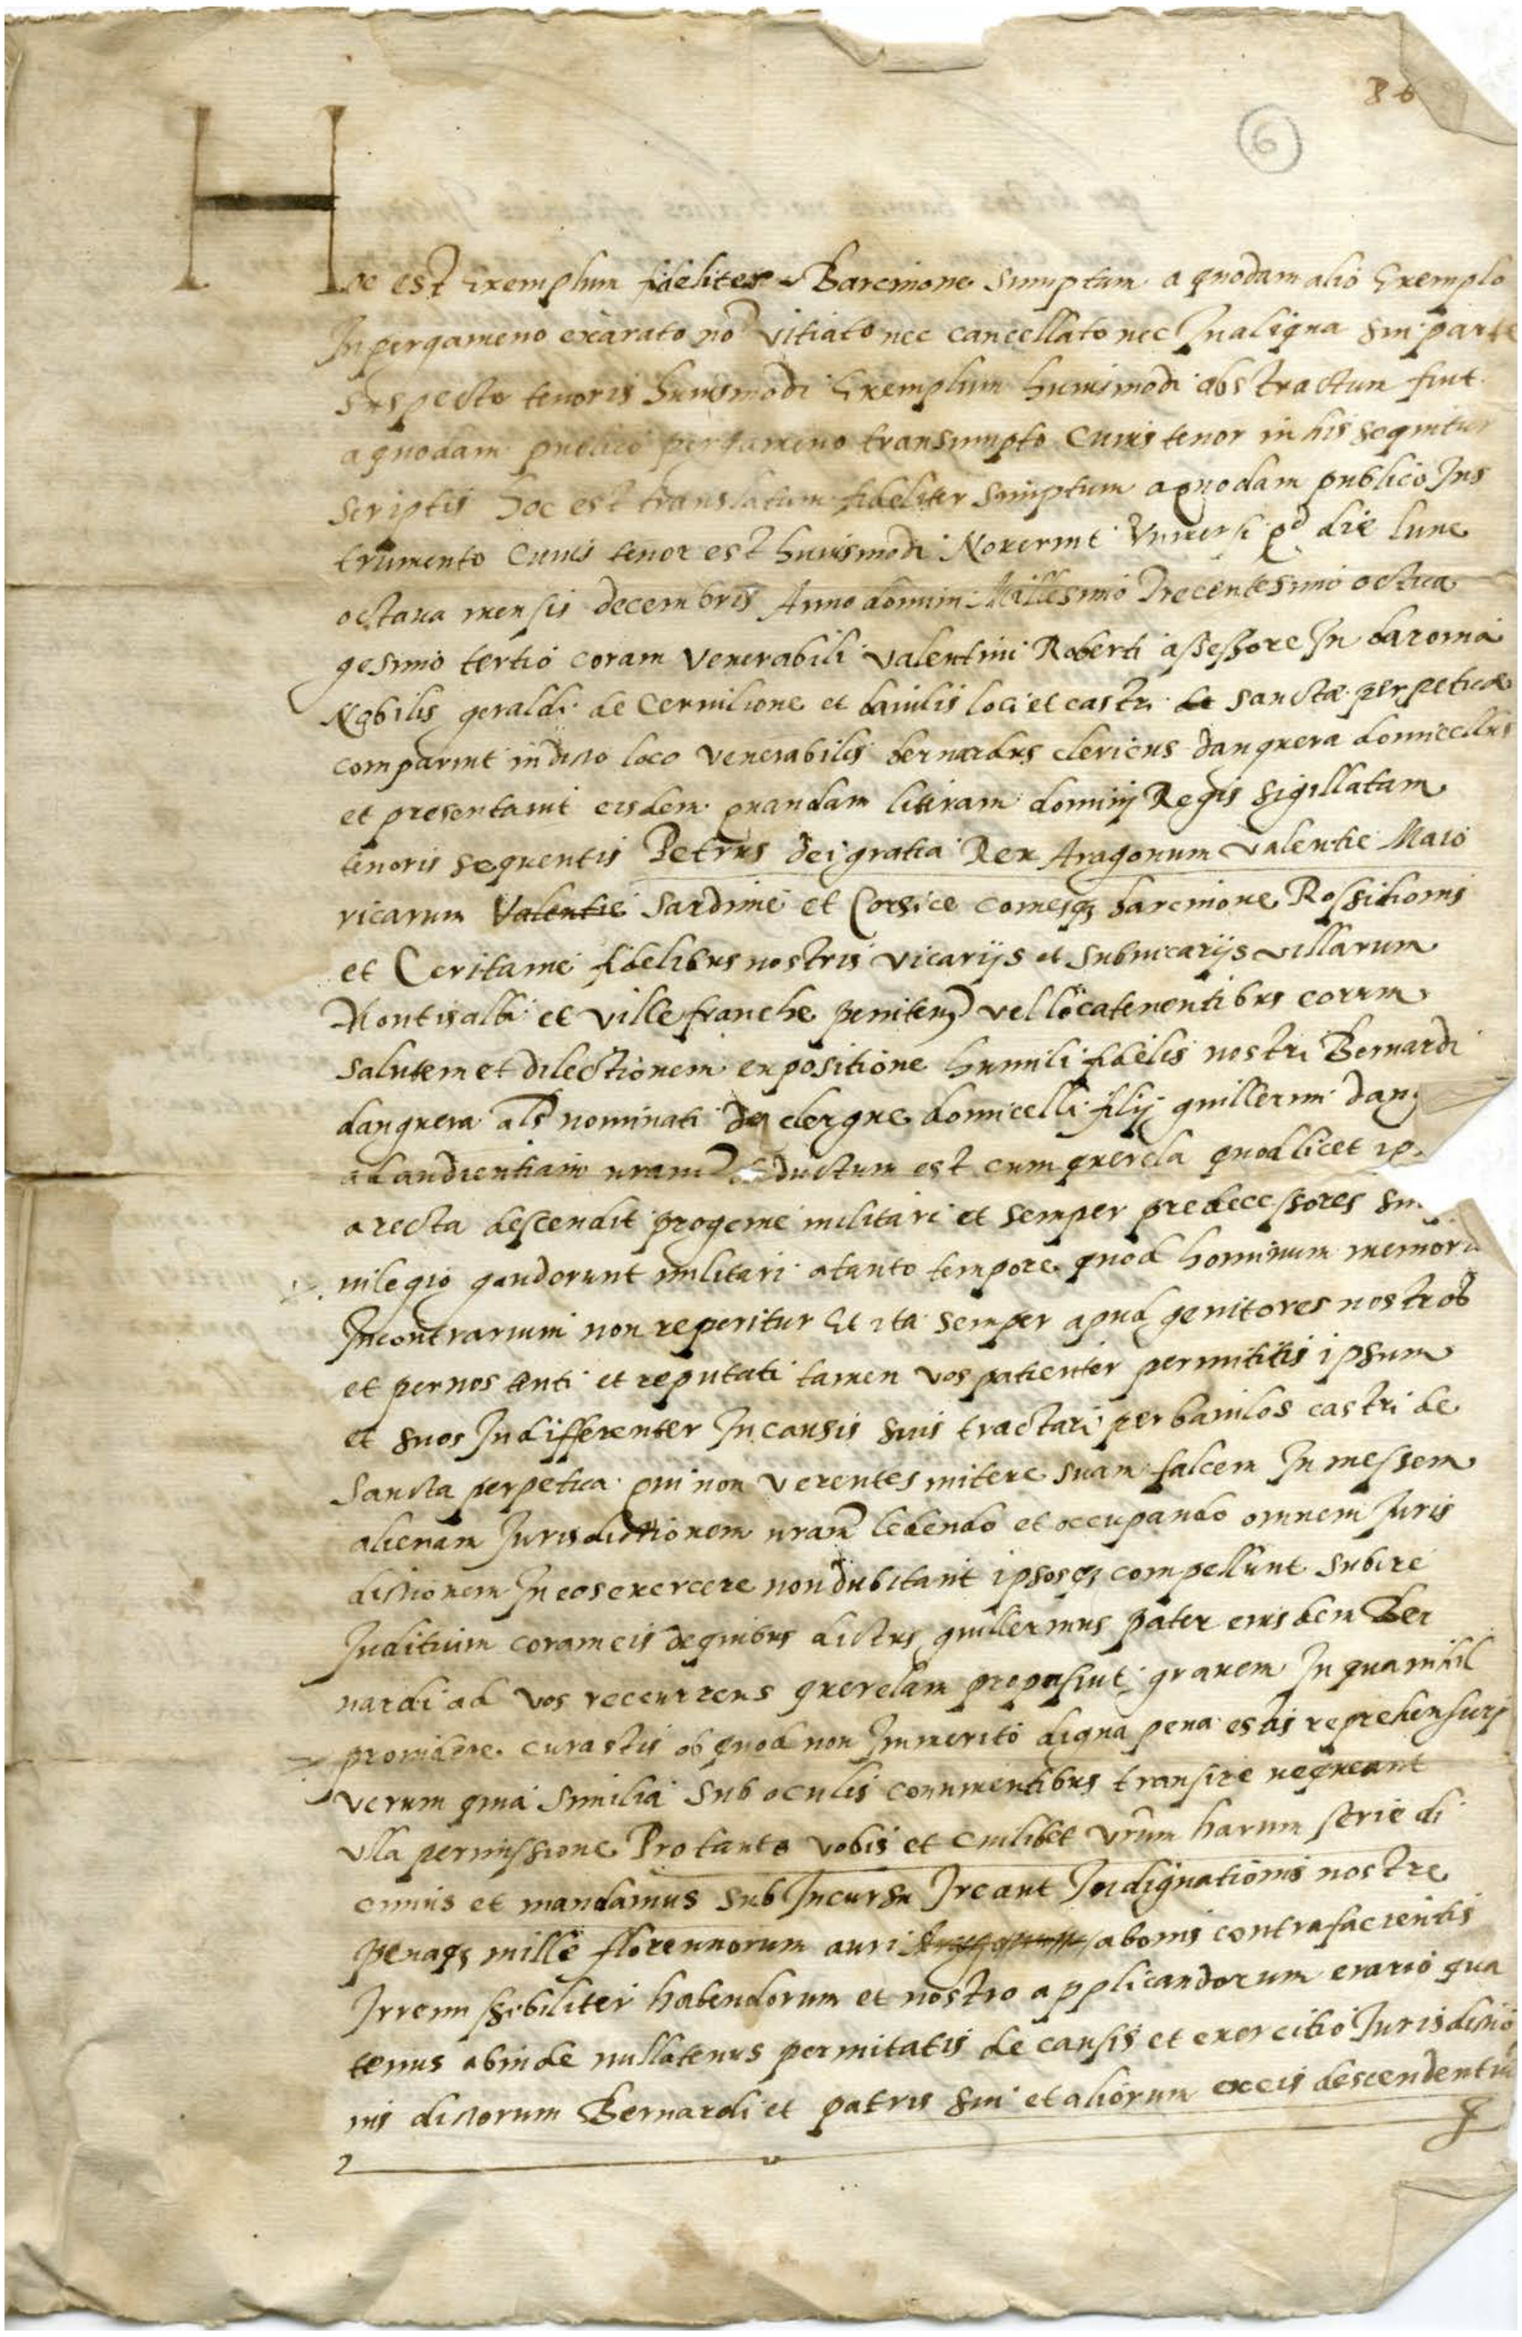
This is evidence that the name Desclergue was only transmitted father-to-son from Pere Torró y Desclergue (DC01) onward. Before his generation, the name was sometimes transmitted through the mother. In other words, to discover our patrilineal ancestry, we should look beyond the family name, which is what we did in this study. More details are provided in Part VI, and in Chapters 19.3, 19.15, 19.15.3, 19.15.4, and 19.15.6.

---

[1] This can be verified by the mentioned dates, although on the back of the letter, Pedro III is mentioned, which is an error.

Therefore, although we do not descend patrilineally from the oldest Desclergues of Montblanc, they are our ancestors, and they were matrilineal ancestors of the Desclergues of Montblanc who established the famous Casal Dels Desclergue on the Plaza Major. The Desclergues were keenly aware of this, which is why the 1383 document does not state patrilinearity and why none of the Desclergues were ever named Guillem or Bernat. Had they been patrilinear ancestors, their names would have been reused to honor their legacy.

The wife of Guillem D'Anguera was the daughter of Guillermo Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.12, son of Francesc Desclergue, and the daughter of Guillem Borrell, described in Chapter 18.11.3. Francesc Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.11, was the son of Raymond Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.10.



86

(6)

Hoc est exemplum fideliter Barcinone sumptum a quodam alio exemplo in pergameno exarato non viciato nec cancellato nec in aliqua sui parte suspecto tenoris huiusmodi Exemplum huiusmodi abstractum fuit
a quodam publico pergameno transumpto cuius tenor in his sequitur
scriptis Hoc est translatum fideliter sumptum a quodam publico ins
trumento cuius tenor est huiusmodi Noverint universi quod die lune octava mensis decembris Anno domini Millesimo trecentesimo octua
gesimo tertio coram venerabili Valentini Roberti assessore in baronia Nobilis geraldi de Cervilione et baiulis loci et castri de sancta perpetua comparuit in dicto loco venerabilis bernardus clericus danquera domicellus et presentavit eisdem quandam literam domini Regis sigillatam
tenoris sequentis Petrus dei gratia Rex Aragonum Valentie Maio
ricarum ~~Valentie~~ Sardinie et Corsice comesque barcinone Rossilionis et Ceritanie fidelibus nostris vicariis et subvicariis villarum
Montisalbi et ville franche penitensis vel locatenentibus eorum
Salutem et dilectionem expositione humili fidelis nostri Bernardi danquera alias nominati desclergue domicelli filii guillermi danq ad audientiam nostram deductum est cum querela quod licet ip a recta descendat progenie militari et semper predecessores sui privilegio gaudeunt militari a tanto tempore quod hominum memoria in contrarium non reperitur et ita semper apud genitores nostros et per nos tenti et reputati tamen vos patienter permittitis ipsum et suos indifferenter in causis suis tractari per baiulos castri de Sancta perpetua qui non verentes mittere suam falcem in messem
alienam jurisdictionem nostram ledendo et occupando omnem juris dictionem in eos exercere non dubitant ipsosque compellunt subire
judicium coram eis de quibus dictus guillermus pater eius dicti Ber nardi ad vos recurrens querelam proposuit gravem in qua nihil providere curastis ob quod non immerito digna pena estis reprehensuri verum quia similia sub oculis conniventibus transire nequeant
ulla permissione Pro tanto vobis et cuilibet vestrum harum serie di cimus et mandamus sub incursu ireque indignationis nostre penaque mille florenorum auri ~~[illegible]~~ a bonis contrafacientis
irremissibiliter habendorum et nostro applicandorum erario qua tenus abinde nullatenus permittatis de causis et exercitio jurisdictio nis dictorum Bernardi et patris sui et aliorum ex eis descendentium

2

Figure 21.2: Page 1 of the 1494 (August 7) copy of the 1383 (December 8) notary document testifying the military 'Bernat D'Anguera, alias Desclergue,' and his father, Guillem D'Anquera, stationed in Montblanc. (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

per dictos baiulos nec alios officiales intromittere neque in eos et bona eorum aliquam exercere iurisdictionem nisi tantum per vos et officiales nostros quibus pertinet ex speciali regalia et prerogativa diadematis nostri. Immo omnia in contrarium at temptata per quospiam officiales et alios illico revocent et ad
pristinum statum reducant et ea nomine nostro reducere et revo
care faciatis quoniam nos totum id et quidquid in contrarium
fuerit attemptatum irritum et inane ac nullius efficacie seu valoris cum nullitatis decreto decernimus ipsosque officiales et ba iulos de Sancta Perpetua et alios etiam expresse inhibentes quod
abinde de personis et bonis dicti domicelli nullatenus se intromi ttant. Alis contra eos tanque occupatores et perturbatores Regie iu risdictionis viriliter procedatis et cauteletis taliter quod sentiat condignam disciplinam. Dat. in Montesono quinta die octobris an no domini Millesimo trecentesimo octuagesimo tertio. P. d. Canella Et cum fuerit presentata dictis venerabilis bernardus de An guera alias dezclergue dixit queja la havie presentada al vegue
r regrerie qui dava libre feta charta et respondit dictus Assessor que ell rebia asso ab gran Reverentia offerint se fer lo manament del Rey et dicti baiuli dixerunt que si no per les quisties no l'havien agrenzat pero que deassi havant faran al veguer pinxani es
Sunt testes berengarius oller et berengarius vedell de Sancta
Perpetua die et anno predictis in dicto loco. Sig+num mei q.
Franc. rectoris ecclesie Sancte Perpetue et notarii publici eius dem qui hec scribi feci et claus. die et anno predictis. Sig+num Petri Franquesa auctoritate Regia notarii publici per totam terram et dominationem Excellentissimi Principis domini Castelle et Ara
gonum Regis testis. Sig+num Stephani Solanelles habitatoris ville Agualate Regia auctoritate notarii publici testis. Sig+num Petri
Pauli Solanelles habitatoris ville Agualate. Auctoritate Ill.mi do mini Regis Aragonum notarii publici per totam eius terram et do minationem qui hoc translatum a bonis originali fideliter sumptum et cum eodem veridice comprobatum testificatumque ut supra patet scribi fecit instante et requirente venerabili et discreto Ray mundo berengario dezclergue notario ville Sancte columbe de
2

Figure 21.3: Page 2 of the 1494 (August 7) copy of the 1383 (December 8) notary document testifying the military 'Bernat D'Anguera, alias Desclergue,' and his father, Guillem D'Anquera, stationed in Montblanc. (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

87.

Oneralto clausit cum supraposito in linea sexta ubi legitur vos
Sig—num mei francisci de Angularia ville Montisalbi habita
toris Regia auctoritate notarij publici per totam terram et do
minationem preexcellentissimi Aragonum Castelle Regis testis
Sig—num Jacobi Alays auctoritate Regia notarij publici per to tam terram et dominationem Serenissimi et Invictissimi domi ni Castelle et Aragonum Regis testis Sig—num ~~[illegible]~~ mei Bartholomei Coloma vicini et [illegible] ville Montisalbi Regia auctoritate notarij publici per omnem terram et dominationem Serenissimi domini
Regis qui hoc translatum sive exemplum ab alio transumpto sive
exemplo superius descripto fideliter sumptum et cum eodem ut convenit comprobatum convenientibus dictis testibus et per alium scriptum de mei voluntate ad requisitionem venera
bilis petri de clerico et galcerandi desclerico fratrum ville
predicte Montisalbi clausi die septima mensis Augusti Anno a nat
domini Millesimo quadringentesimo nonagesimo quarto

Sig—num Antonij costalbo aucte regia not. pub.ci huic testis
Sig—num Mathei Carbonell D[illegible] aucte not. pub.ci huic testis

Sig—num meum Petri fitor aucte regia not. publici Barcinone qui hunc exem plum a dicto eius originali fideliter sumptum et cum eodem adver tum veraciter comprobatum testificatumque ut supra pater scrib feci et clausi rogatus vicesima quinta mensis May anno a nat domini Millesimo quingentesimo septuagesimo sexto

Figure 21.4: Page 3 (last) of the 1494 (August 7) copy of the 1383 (December 8) notary document testifying the military 'Bernat D'Anguera, alias Desclergue,' and his father, Guillem D'Anquera, stationed in Montblanc. (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

Chapter 22

Summary of the Desclergue Paternal Ancestry Line

When we investigate our ancestry and the frequency of first names, the names Antoni and Joan stem from the Miquel and Torró families, the names Pere, Francesc, and Galceran from Torró, Gabriel and Bernard from Miquel, and the name Beltrán or Bertran or Bertrand stem from the Du Guesclin ancestors.

Preserving the ancestral overview is challenging when writing a book about a person's genealogy. Throughout the book, sections of the ancestry tree are shown as appropriate. The entire ancestry tree is also published on the internet. Here, we present the patrilinear ancestry line from the author to Richer Guarplic, the earliest known ancestor of Bertrand Du Guesclin. Four lines connect the author with this eldest known ancestor. The primary is solely patrilineal, but two side paths through a maternal ancestor bind them. We present the ancestry lines from Richer de Guarplic to the author in different sections for presentation purposes.

Figures 22.2 and 22.3 assist in situating each individual within the context provided. It is anticipated that the author's descendants, some of whom are depicted in Figure 22.1, will, in due course, come to value the significance of this comprehensive work.

Figure 22.1: The author, his wife, and the two youngest children in Barbera de la Conca, a few kms from Montblanc, October 30, 2018.

Hakin
In legends, he is called King Aquin, but that is not reasonable, hence our study to propose 'Hakin', which stands for 'Clergue' as ancestor.
Olivier de Glaquin
Birth around 790
(possibly a legendary person)
Several Generations de Guarplic or du Glay Aquin or de Glaquin
Richer de Guarplic
Birth Brétagne, France
(DG01)
Clamaroch de Guarplic
Birth Brétagne, France
(DG02)
Marie de Dinan
Bertrand I de Guarplic
Birth Brétagne, France
(DG03)
Florida de Landal
Geoffroy de Guarplic
Birth Brétagne, France
Death Holy Land, Israel
(DG04)
Bertrand II du Guesclin
Birth Brétagne, France
(DG05)
Pierre du Guesclin
Birth Brétagne, France
(DG06)
Bertrand III du Guesclin
Birth 1200 Brétagne, France
Death 1260 (60y)
(DG07)
Mahaut de Dol
Bertrand IV du Guesclin
Birth Brétagne, France
(DG08)
Jeanne de Broons
Bertrand IV du Guesclin
Birth Brétagne, France
(DG08)
Jeanne de Broons
Guillaume du Guesclin
Birth Brétagne, France
(DG09)
Julienne de Beaumont de Guitte
Robert II du Guesclin
Birth 1300 Brétagne, France
Marriage 1319 (19y) Jeanne de Malemains
(DG10)
Jeanne de Malemains
Marriage 1319 Robert II du Guesclin
Bertrand du Guesclin
Birth 1320 Dinan, Brétagne, France
Death 1380 (60y) Chateauneuf-de-Randon, Languedoc-Roussillon, France
Beltrán Claquin (DG11).
N. Torró
Dame de Soria
Beltrán Torró
Birth around 1358
(DT01).
Galceran Torró
(DT02)
Pere Torró
(DT03) He was a notary
Eulalia Miquel
Francesc Torró y Miquel
Death 1494
(DT04) Royal Secretary
Clementa Desclergue
Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth Montblanc, España
(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.
Eleonor Torró y Miquel
She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.
Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Birth 1507 Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Marriage Isabel Simón Valencia
(DC02d) Some literature assumes there was a Galceran I and a Galceran II, father and son, while, in fact, it was one and the same person who was active for many years.
Ana de Villavicencio
Birth Jerez de la Frontera, España
Death 1537
Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.
Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death Montblanc, España
(DC04)
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Birth 1566 Montblanc, España
Marriage Felipa de Montoya Montblanc, España
Death 1604 (38y) Oostende, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05). He also appears as Joan Jeroni, Jeroni and Joan

Figure 22.2: Patrilinal connection between Richer de Guarplic and Pere de Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01). In addition, we can also see the patrilineal connection between Pere de Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01) and Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), and the matrilineal connection between Pere de Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01) and Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05).

Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Felipa de Montoya
Antoni Desclergue (II)
Beatrice Declercq
Antoni Declerque (III)
Martina de la Cruz
Pere Declercgz (II)
Marie Prienne
Joan Declercq (II)
Marie Montaigne
Renier Declercq
Marie Anne Thérèse Lombaerde
Pierre Joseph Declercq
Barbara Thérèse d'Hont
Leo Bernard Declercq
Thérèse Loncke
Ivo Declercq
Mathilde Van den Broucke
Ernest Constant Declercq
Marie Elodie Devenyn
Michel A. R. Declercq
Irma Helena Lesage
Maurice A. Declercq
Nelly-Maria Vangheluwe
Nico Felicien Declercq
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Felipa de Montoya
Antoni Desclergue (II)
Beatrice Declercq
Antoni Declerque (III)
Martina de la Cruz
Joana Catharina Declercgz
Joannes de Vos
Petrus de Vos
Hendrica Theresia de Poortere
Petrus Franciscus Josephus de Vos
Maria Catharina Josepha de Vos
Petrus Franciscus de Vos
Marie Agnes Vanhaezebrouck
Louis de Vos
Eugenie Libbrecht
Marie Louise de Vos
Theophile Verhaeghe
Zozyma Zulma Verhaeghe
Gerard Vangheluwe
René Vangheluwe
Anna Den Dauw
Nelly-Maria Vangheluwe
Maurice A. Declercq
Nico Felicien Declercq

Figure 22.3: Patrilineal connection between Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) and the author (DC17); and also the matrilineal connection between Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) and the author (DC17).

Chapter 23

Coat of Arms: Links to Du Guesclin and Cortés de Monroy

23.1 The Shield

In heraldic studies, the analysis and comparison of shields often convey their meanings inherently. We therefore refer the reader to Figure 17.9 on page 127, Figure 19.47 on page 207, Figure 23.1 on page 247, Figure 23.2 on page 248, Figure 23.5 on page 250, Figure 23.3 on page 249, Figure 23.6 on page 251, Figure 23.4 on page 249, Figure 23.7 on page 251, Figure 46.67 on page 877, and Figure 23.8 on page 252.

The pattern in the shield of Desclergue is used as a border around Nico F. Declercq and his descendants' shield. The other heraldic elements stem from de Patin and other sources, as described in Chapter 4.1.

Note that late 17th century, there was also a family in Catalonia, named Sesclergues, who have used heraldic shields,[2][3][4] of which Desclergue from Montblanc has inspired one. However, from a Heraldic point of view, they are not related. Also, from a genealogy point of view, they are unrelated.

23.2 The Helmet

The Desclergues were of ancient nobility, often referred to as having ’purple blood,’ or, ’purpura de la Patria,’ in chronicles of the 13th and 14th centuries, signifying their esteemed and long-standing lineage. Modern reports sometimes refer to them as ’hidalgos de sangre,’ indicating that the authors found sufficient indications of ancient nobility, based on more recent observations in the 16th and 17th centuries. Their status, rooted in antiquity, often surpassed that of other nobles not through specific power but through their venerable heritage—a crucial factor in the aristocratic hierarchy.

Securing particular noble titles would not have elevated their noble status. Still, it would have had practical implications, particularly concerning taxes they could levy or were obligated to pay to the Crown. Historical documents reveal that some members of the Desclergues family sought and successfully obtained noble titles, even while in Flanders.

Due to their independence from specific titles and high regard due to their ancient lineage, the Desclergues did not display particular titles on their coat of arms. This is evident from the coat of arms on their residence in Montblanc, which lacks any insignia indicating specific noble ranks on the helmet.

23.3 The Gryphon on the Helmet

To comprehend the origins of the Gryphon in the Coat of Arms of the Desclergues of Montblanc, it is instructive to examine Figure 23.5 on page 250. This figure reveals a significant connection to Miquel and Du Guesclin. Furthermore, one can trace the lineage back to Borell, as depicted in Figure 18.4 on page 130, or even to the ancient Greeks, as illustrated in Figure 9.1 on page 79.

In heraldry, the Gryphon's amalgamation of a lion and an eagle represents courage and boldness. It is used to denote strength, military courage, and leadership. Gryphons are portrayed with a lion's rear body, an eagle's head with erect ears, a feathered breast, and the forelegs of an eagle, including claws. These features indicate a combination of intelligence and strength.

From Dr. Luis Valero de Bernabé y Martín de Eugenio[5], we learn that Enrique II of Castile was the first King of the Trastámara dynasty to apply the Gryphon as a Helmet sign,

’Enrique II de Castilla (1369/1379), el primer monarca de la dinastía Trastámara, adoptó el Grifo como emblema durante la guerra contra el rey legítimo Pedro I, al que disputaba el trono, adornando su yelmo con un grifo dorado y alado.’

His son and successor used it too. Subsequent successors did not further use it on their heraldic helmets because of a marriage with Princess Dona Catalina, granddaughter of Peter I, therefore merging the two rival dynasties again under the original coat of arms, whence the Gryphon disappeared after 1400.

In December 1368, Du Guesclin had been sent to Spain to assist Enrique II in his battle against his half-brother Peter the Cruel. It was from Enrique II that Du Guesclin would receive noble titles in Spain. The coat of arms of the Desclergues at Montblanc may refer to Enrique II by applying his Gryphon as a heraldic helmet sign.

However, more likely, it refers to Bertrand Du Guesclin himself because, as described in Chapter 19.26.6, his seal, upon arrival in Spain, which expressed his coat of arms, had the same helmet sign and even used a Gryphon as a supporter.

The origin of the Gryphon on the Helmet of the coat of arms of Du Guesclin dates back to Bertrand III Du Guesclin, who married Mahaut de Dol. Indeed, she descended from the Borrell family, among others, of Barcelona. The Borrell shield is shown in Figure 18.4 on page 130. The Borrell family also enters our ancestry through Chapter 18.11.3.

---

[2] Moisés Selfa, Universitat de Lleida, Spain, "about the concept of onomastic identity: the privileges' parchments of the city of Balaguer (1211-1352)"

[3] Luis Valero de Bernabé y Martín de Eugenio, Análisis de las características generales de la Heráldica Gentilicia Española y de las singularidades heráldicas existentes entre los diversos territorios históricos hispanos, Tesis Doctoral, Universidad Complutense de Madrid, Facultad de Historia, Directora: Doctora Doña Ana Belén Sánchez Prieto, 2007.

[4] We suspect that in certain situations, Desclergue and Sesclergue refer to the same family and are only a spelling issue. An illustration is found on page 27 and page 386 in Fundació Noguera, Textos i Documents, El primer llibre d'inventaris i encants del notari de Tarragona Bernat Gendre (1577-1597), Barcelona, 2015.

[5] Luis Valero de Bernabé y Martín de Eugenio, Marqués de Casa Real, Director de Colegio Heráldico de España y de las Indias, ’El Grifo en la Heráldica Española’

Therefore, the Gryphon may refer to Borrell, Miquel, or the ancient ancestry in Greek Empuries in one way or another. However, only Du Guesclin emphasized it so much by having it as a helmet sign and a supporter in his coat of arms while in Spain.

23.4 Three Military Flags

Each of the three flags depicts the 'Cruz de Borgoña' or the Cross of Burgundy, a historical military ensign utilized by the Spanish Army of Flanders. This emblem signifies the military service of the three sons of Bonaventura Desclergue who served as soldiers in Flanders: our ancestor Jeroni Joan (DC05), alongside his brothers Antoni (I) (DC05b) and Enric (DC05c).

23.5 The Fleurs de Lys

Three Fleurs de Lys (Flor de Lis) are visible on the coat of arms, exposed in Figure 23.8. They are remains (worn by time) of 3-dimensional representations of the Fleur de Lys, which only appear exceptionally on top of the French royal crown. On the contrary, in most cases, one can only see a projected representation of this symbol. The Desclergues, who had the coat of arms designed for their new home early in the 1600s, were conscious of their noble ancestors' rank.

The use of 3 such flowers comes from Du Guesclin, as is found on his shield as the Count of Trastámara, shown in Figure 23.8. It is also seen as the symbol of the French Monarchy (1380 onwards).

Three Fleurs de Lys were likely input from the Dame de Soria, a daughter from the Torró family, as indicated in Figure20.2 on page 216. Other heraldic connections have been shown above in the description of the shield of Desclergues, in Chapter 23.1.

Figure 23.1: Coat of arms of the Desclergues of Montblanc (Montblanc, August 2018). On the Helmet is a gryphon holding three flags. Note the fleurs de lys in the three corners of the shield and the little roses on the border. It is assumed that the gryphon refers either to Miquel, a family with whom the Desclergues allied and stemmed from, or Du Guesclin. In contrast, the roses refer to the shield of Ros, equally a family with whom the wider Desclergue family allied. Antoni Desclergue also applied roses as ornaments in the polychrome panels he brought from Spain, shown in Figure 49.33 on page 1001. The fleurs de lys either refer to Torró, shown in Figure 20.2 on page 216, or Du Guesclin, explained in Figure 23.6 on page 251, or both. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 23.2: The modern shield of Nico F. Declercq and his descendants consists of a border that constitutes a memory of the old Desclergue shield in Montblanc, shown in Figure 23.1 on page 247, in Figure 23.4 on page 249, with a heraldic genesis depicted in Figure 17.9 on page 127. The other symbols in the modern shield of Declercq are described in Chapter 4.1. The top left is one of the forms of the Torró shield, the one on the top right is that of the Desclergues of Montblanc, the lower left is that of de Patin, while the one on the bottom right is the modern shield of the author and his children. (Declercq de Silva Archive) Figure 23.3 makes a comparison with the shield of Hernán Cortés, equally visible in Figure 27.4 on page 297.

Figure 23.3: The modern shield of Nico F. Declercq and his descendants is shown in Figure 23.2 and right on this figure. Left is that of Hernán Cortés, a relative of the Desclergues, created for him and his descendants and exposing the old Cortés de Monroy, referring to the Aragonese noble blood, in the middle. The appearance of yellow squares on the border of Declercq's shield in the same location as the heads of Hernán Cortés may seem curious, but it is a mere coincidence.
The shield of Cortés, also shown in Figure 27.4 on page 297, is described as follows: Quarterly: 1st, Argent, an eagle double-headed Sable; 2nd, Sable, three crowns 1 and 2 Or; 3rd, Gules, a lion rampant Or; 4th, Azure, the city of Tenochtitlan rising from the lake proper; all within a bordure Or charged with a locked chain linking seven Indians' heads proper, and en surtout an inescutcheon Or thereon four pallets Gules within a bordure Azure charged with eight crosses patty Argent. The interpretation is as follows. The eagle emblem represents the Habsburg empire, while the crowns symbolize the Aztec emperors, Moctezuma, Cuitláhuac, and Cuauhtémoc, whom Cortés overthrew. The lion in the emblem signifies attributes like strength, constancy, and courage. Additionally, the reference to the city of Tenochtitlan serves as a reminder of Cortés' conquest and is considered a significant accomplishment in his endeavors. The chained skulls shown on the bordure symbolize the defeat of seven vassals of Moctezuma by Cortés, while the central portion showcases his family coat of arms. The motto means: The Lord judged them in their deeds and strengthened my arm. More information about Cortés and how we are related can be discovered in Chapter 27.2 on page 301 (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 23.4: The arms of the Desclergues of Montblanc, found on a document in 1653[1]. It can be compared with Figure 23.1 on page 247, with an explanation in Figure 23.5 on page 250. The addition of 3 flags held by the gryphon only occurred after 3 sons of the Desclergues, Jeroni, Antoni, and Enric, had become soldiers in Flanders and was, therefore, not yet visible in this old document.

Figure 23.5: The genesis of the Coat of Arms of the Desclergues on their House in Montblanc. The shield is Desclergue, established in Figure 17.9 on page 127. The flors de lys are from Torró, as shown in Figure 20.2 on page 216, possibly with a hint to Du Guesclin, as explained in Figure 23.6 on page 251. The little roses on the side refer to Ros, a family that the Torró and Miquel families frequently allied with, and possibly also the Desclergues themselves. The gryphon refers to Miquel and possibly also to Du Guesclin, shown in Figure 19.20 on page 175, and in Figure 19.47 on page 207. However, the Gryphon can also refer to Borrell, equally ancestors, described in Chapter 18.11.3, with shield shown in Figure 18.4 on page 130. Roses were also used as ornaments in the panels in Deerlijk, shown in Figure 49.33 on page 1001. The gryphon, shown in Figure 9.1 on page 79, was also popular in Phocaea from where the Greeks migrated to Empúries, where they married our patrilineal ancestor.

Figure 23.6: The genesis of the Conde de Trastamara shield of Bertrand Du Guesclin, being his own family shield, shown in Figure 19.47 on page 207, covered by a chevron with the three flors de lys of the Torró family, shown in Figure 20.2 on page 216. The shield, therefore, reflected a new Spanish bloodline initiated by Du Guesclin and his Dame de Soria, who must have been a Torró. Unfortunately, Du Guesclin lost the title when Enrique de Trastamara lost power, and his descendants would no longer use the shield. Instead, they lived on as Torró, among their other Torró relatives of the Torró blood already well established before the arrival of Du Guesclin in Spain.

Figure 23.7: Left is 1979, a snapshot of a moving image of the author climbing the Pico Veleta in the Sierra Nevada near Granada. The lower inserts form a study of the three flags in the coat of arms on the House of Desclergue, revealing the Cruz Borgoña on each. Right is Granada in 1978. The author was bathing in (assisted by Maurice A. Declercq) and playing around the fountains of the Alhambra. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 23.8: Top: the three fleurs de lys that appear on the coat of arms of Desclergue at Montblanc. Middle: 3 examples of Fleur de Lys on French royal crowns. Bottom-right: a gate in Versailles, exposing three fleurs de lys as a symbol of French Royalty. (Declercq de Silva Archive) The bottom-left shows the Shield of Beltran Claquin (Bertrand Du Guesclin) as the Count of Trastámara, a title which he has had for a short time[a]. As indicated in Figure20.2 on page 216, the 3 flors de lys in the coat of arms of the Desclergues were probably mainly originating from Torró. Still, they may also have been inspired by Du Guesclin ancestry, keeping in mind Figure 23.6 on page 251.

---

[a] Alonso López de Haro (criado de su Majestad, y Ministro en su real Consejo de las Ordenes), 'Nobiliario genealógico de los reyes y títulos de España. Dirigido a la Magestad del Rey Don Felipe Quarto nuestro señor.' , printed (con privilegio) in Madrid, by Luis Sánchez Impresor Real, in 1622.

Chapter 24

Settlement of our Desclergues at Montblanc

In Part IV, the ancient history of our ancestors is presented, ranging from the Greek over the Roman and Visigoth era through the Byzantine and Muslim eras and the Reconquista of Catalunya and the Conquest of Mallorca. At the same time, in the era of Charlemagne, a branch landed in Brittanny and would later return to Spain.

In Part VI, the patrilineal origins of the Desclergues family of Montblanc, renowned for constructing the famous house on the Main Square, are elucidated. Their lineage traces back to Bertrand Du Guesclin.

Chapter 73 presents compelling DNA evidence supporting our descent from the Du Guesclin family, progressing through the Torró, Desclergue, and Declercq lines. This heritage is meticulously documented from the era of Charlemagne to the present. Utilizing a comprehensive paper trail, we focus on our Desclergues ancestors in Montblanc, detailing their extensive history up to the current generation.

Part VI demonstrates that the Desclergues of Montblanc are descendants of Du Guesclin, adopting the Desclergue name through a female ancestor to perpetuate the notarial dynasty bearing this name. Still, Du Guesclin himself also descended from the Desclergues through a nomenclature passage in Muslim Spain as Hakin.

The descendants were predominantly based in Barcelona and maintained continuous connections with the city and province. Our documented genealogical tree of the Declercq family begins with Pere de Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01). Jose Sanchez Real[1] did not construct an ancestry tree preceding (DC01) but identified individuals through archival research and literature. Subsequent scholars, including Santiago Alberti[2] and Salvador J. Rovira i Gómez[3], developed genealogies commencing with Pere de Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01), referred to as 'Pere Desclergue.' Gener Gonzalvo i Bou[4] provides extensive information on the Desclergue family, particularly the Pedrolo and Pedrolo y Desclergue branches. On page 172 of his report, he describes the Desclergue family of Montblanc as an aristocratic lineage, noting their preservation of an extraordinary archive, partially conserved in the T'arrega County Archive, and passed down through the Pedrolo family. The earliest known ancestor, Pedro Desclergue (DC01), also known as Pere de Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01), held a knightly rank.

Emperor Charles I of Spain (Charles V, also known as Charles Quint) confirmed the family's heraldic symbols. Bonaventura Desclergue (DC04) is documented as attending the General Court of Catalonia in 1599 to receive a personal nobility privilege.

The historical context of the Dukes of Montblanc adds depth to the Desclergues' narrative. The Trastámara dynasty, a significant ruling family, governed the Duchy of Montblanc from 1412 until 1458, following the House of Barcelona (1387-1396) and preceding the Habsburgs (1516-1700), with the Bourbons assuming control from 1996 onwards. The Trastámara dynasty's influence on Montblanc during this period is crucial to understanding the Desclergues' settlement there.

Joan I de Montblanc, also known as Joan el Gran, ruled from 1412-1458, a time marked by significant historical events. He was succeeded by Ferran I de Montblanc (Ferran el Catòlic) from 1458-1462. The Catalan Civil War (1462-1472) disrupted his rule, but he resumed his position in 1472 until 1479.

These events provide a coherent framework for the Desclergues' history. Joan I de Montblanc, or Joan I of Aragon, was the son of Ferran I d'Aragon (Ferdinand I of Aragon) and Elionor d'Albuquerque (Eleonora Urraca of Castile). Ferdinand I of Aragon was the son of Joan I of Castile and Eleonor of Aragon and Sicily. Joan I of Castile, in turn, was the son of Henry II of Castile and Joanna Emmanuella of Castile. Henry II of Castile, known as Henry II of Trastámara, supported Aragon in efforts to depose Peter I, relying on military aid from allies, including Bertrand Du Guesclin.

Figure 24.1: Anna-Laura Declercq and Lambert Declercq in Montblanc, 2018. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

---

[1] Jose Sanchez Real, 'La Casa Desclergue de Montblanc,' 1974

[2] Santiago Alberti, 'Esquema històric del llinatge Pedrolo,' 1995

[3] Salvador J. Rovira i Gómez, 'La baixa noblesa de la Conca de Barber'a a l' edat moderna,' 2005

[4] Gener Gonzalvo i Bou, Fons documentals de Montblanc a l'Arxiu comarcal de T'arrega

Figure 24.2: Montblanc, view on the beautiful Iglesia de Santa Maria la Mayor and a view on the old bridge and the town, also shown in Figure 24.3, from across the Francoli River. (around 1900, 🅮)

Figure 24.3: Montblanc, 2023, the repaired bridge, locally known as Pont Vell, after it had been damaged by a severe flood. Courtesy of Ramper.

It is plausible that our Desclergues ancestors, responsible for constructing the House of Desclergue on Montblanc's Main Square and possessing historical ties to the House of Trastámara, settled in Montblanc between 1412 and 1458, during Joan el Gran's tenure as Duke of Montblanc, shown in Figure 24.4. Notably, the Cortes Generales Catalanas convened at Montblanc in 1414, summoned by Ferdinand. This timeline aligns with the absence of known Desclergues records in Montblanc before 1450, specifically before 1412. For further context, refer to Chapter 25.0.2.1 on the 1359 census of Montblanc.

Figure 24.4: Joan II of Aragon (Medina del Campo 1398 - Barcelona 1479), better known as Joan el Gran, was the Duque of Montblanc from 1412 until 1458. He was also the Prince of Girona and the Count of Barcelona. His parents were Ferdinand I of Aragon and Eleanor de Albuquerque.

Chapter 25

Don Pere Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01)

Don Pere Torró y Desclergue (DC01), was from Barcelona and married a Barcelonese. He must have decided to continue as Desclergue because he was a notary, just like his grandfather on his mother's side. More importantly, he was the heir of his uncle, Ramon Berebguer Desclergue, a notary, and must have either felt or been contractually obliged to use his name. He established a family line of notaries at Montblanc, ancestors of the author and descendants of Du Guesclin. However, Barcelona's connection has always remained, and several descendants lived either at Barcelona or Montblanc, or both. He is described in Chapter 25.0.2, as the earliest Desclergue in our paternal family line.

He had four sons, namely Antich Desclergue (I), Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02), Pere Desclergue (DC02b) and Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d). The notary document, shown in Figures 25.3, 25.4, and 25.5, from 1494 mentions several Desclergues, including Pere Desclergue (DC02b) and Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d). The notary spells their names as Petrus De Clerico and Galcerand Des Clerico and explicitly states that they are brothers living in Montblanc. Elsewhere in the document, he refers to other Desclergues as 'Bernardo De Clergue' and 'Bernardo Desclergue' and 'Raymundo Berengario Desclergue' (notary from Santa Coloma Queralt. Santa Coloma de Queralt is also decribed in Chapter 29.4). Name differentiation confirms that our ancestors, who used the name Desclergue, were not immediately related to the other Desclergue families. In Chapter 25.0.2 we show more evidence. Pere Torró y Desclergue (DC01) was married to Eleonor Torró i Miquel, and both are described in Chapter 25.

Pere Desclergue appears in two historical records[2] from April 21, 1501, primarily concerned with the administrative and ecclesiastical proceedings of the Poblet Monastery, located in the Tarragona region of Spain, under the Cistercian Order.

The first document, a significant historical record, chronicles the election of Antoni Boada as the Abbot of Poblet and the subsequent appointment of Domènec Porta, a monk of the same monastery, as his procurator. Porta's assignment was to secure the confirmation of Boada's election from the Holy See, headed by Pope Alexander VI at the time. This process, a standard ecclesiastical procedure, was crucial to ensure the validity of such an election, reflecting the significant influence and control exercised by the papacy over monastic appointments during this era.

The second document details the monastery's administrative actions following the election. This document describes the chapter conventual of Poblet appointing Jaume Peris, the sub-prior, as another procurator alongside Domènec Porta. Peris was charged with the dual responsibilities of obtaining papal confirmation for Abbot Boada and negotiating financial obligations such as paying annotates (a form of ecclesiastical tax) and managing financial instruments known as canals.

Pere Desclergue, the notary from Montblanc, emerges as a central figure in these documents, playing a pivotal role in the procedures. As a notary, Desclergue's responsibility was not merely to record these proceedings, but to ensure their accuracy, legal standing, and official acknowledgment. His involvement was not just important, but crucial for the validity of these documents in both secular and ecclesiastical realms. The mention of his role in multiple related documents underscores his significance in maintaining the legal framework and documentation integrity necessary for the monastery's operations within the broader ecclesiastical hierarchy and its interactions with the Holy See in Rome.

These documents, rich with details of the ecclesiastical administration and the involved parties from various locales like Montblanc, Sanaüja, Xàtiva, and Rome, vividly illustrate the intricate and complex processes of church governance during the early 16th century. This complexity, highlighted by the interconnectedness of local monastic practices with the overarching authority of the papacy, provides a deeper understanding of the historical context, inviting the reader to delve into the intricacies of this fascinating period. The reader may be interested in looking at Figure 25.1 on page 258, and Figure 25.2 on page 259.

25.0.1 Ancestry of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01) on his Mother's Side

25.0.1.1 Clementa Desclergue, the Mother of Pere Torró y Desclergue (DC01)

Clementa Desclergue was the sister of Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.2, and she married Royal Secretary Francesc Torró y Miquel, described in Chapter 20.6.1. Her husband's ancestry is described in Chapter 20.

Clementa Desclergue's father was Berenguer Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.4. She equally appears in Chapter 18.20.

25.0.1.2 Ramon Berenguer Desclergue

Alberto Reche Ontillera[3] cites a notarial record, by Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, in 1485:

1485, maig, 5. Constança d'Erill, dona de Joan de So, senyor del castell de Talavera, fa donació al seu marit del censal de 6.000 sous i pensió de 20 lliures que té sobre la baronia de Centelles. A. AMMV, Speculo..., fol. 114v. Insolutum donacio feta per la señora Constansa d'Eril, muller del noble Joan de So, señor del castell de Talavera, y altres, a dit son marit de tot aquell censal de preu de 6.000 sous y penció 20 lliures, ab las pencions degudas que li corresponian tots anys lo señor Ramon de Centelles, ab lo qual censal hi fou obligada dita baronia de Centellas. Consta en poder de Ramon Barenguer Desclergue, notari de Barcelona, als 5 de maig de 1485.

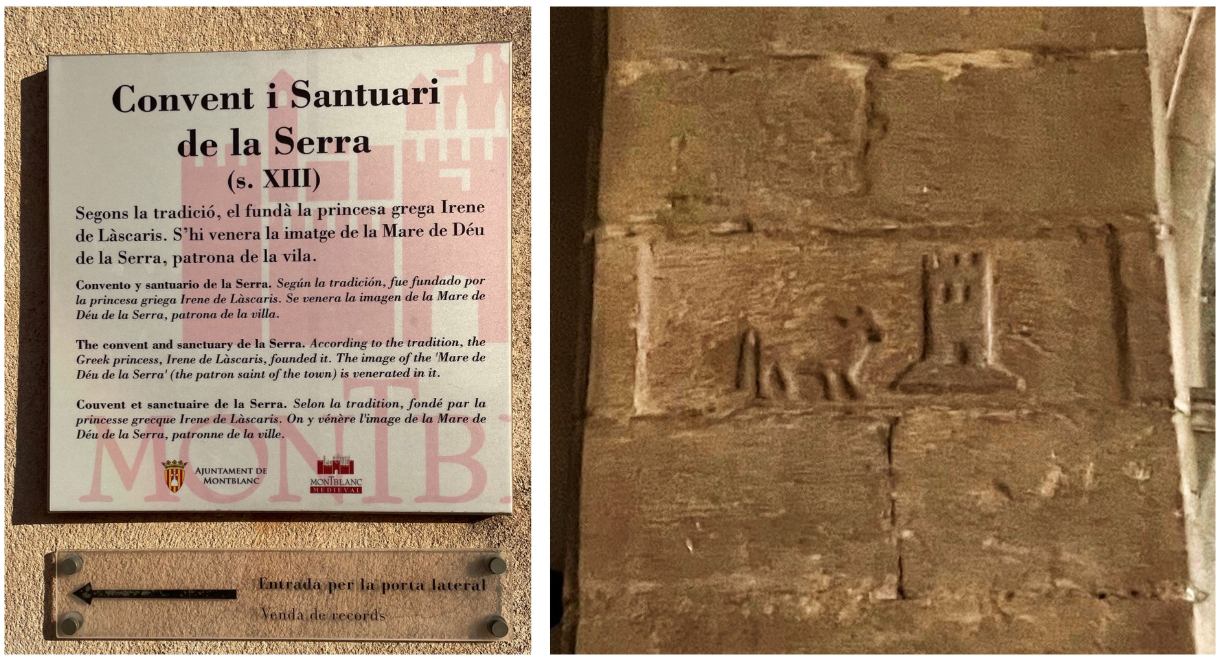
He was a notary in Barcelona in 1485, in Santa Coloma de Queralt in 1488 and 1494, described below and in Chapter 21 and shown in one of his own documents in Figure 21.1 on page 235, in Figure 21.2 on page 237, in Figure 21.3 on page 238, and in Figure 21.4 on page 239, and in Barcelona in 1508, described in Chapter 25.0.1.3.

He had no children who were heirs and therefore appointed his sister's, Clementa Desclergue, sons, Galceran Torró y Desclergue

---

[2] Josep Torné i Cubells, "Catàleg de Pergamins de l'actual Arxiu del Monestir de Poblet", Item 70 and 71, p. 42-43.

[3] Alberto Reche Ontillera, "L'Speculo de 1764: Una aproximació documental al Montornès medieval", ajuntament de Montornès del Vallès publicacions de l'Abadia de Montserrat 2014, ISBN 978-84-9883-659-2, page 242, entry 399.



Convent i Santuari de la Serra
(s. XIII)
Segons la tradició, el fundà la princesa grega Irene de Làscaris. S'hi venera la imatge de la Mare de Déu de la Serra, patrona de la vila.
Convento y santuario de la Serra. Según la tradición, fue fundado por la princesa griega Irene de Làscaris. Se venera la imagen de la Mare de Déu de la Serra, patrona de la villa.
The convent and sanctuary de la Serra. According to the tradition, the Greek princess, Irene de Làscaris, founded it. The image of the 'Mare de Déu de la Serra' (the patron saint of the town) is venerated in it.
Couvent et sanctuaire de la Serra. Selon la tradition, fondé par la princesse grecque Irene de Làscaris. On y vénère l'image de la Mare de Déu de la Serra, patronne de la ville.
Ajuntament de Montblanc
Montblanc Medieval
Entrada per la porta lateral
Venda de records

Figure 25.1: An engraving on the wall inside the Convent I Santuari de la Serra in Montblanc depicts a cow and a tower. It is not a heraldic shield because the cow points in the wrong direction. Possibly, the engraving was ordered by the families Cabeza de Vaca Mejías and Torró (i.e., Torró y Desclergue), although they should most likely only be interpreted as monastic symbols. Torró is, for instance, also found in Figure 25.11 on page 278.

(DC01b) and Pere Torró y Desclergue (DC01) his heirs.

In the Historical Archive of Protocols of Barcelona, there are two manuscripts belonging to this Desclergue, a notary from 1486 to 1490[4]. He also appears as Ramon Berenguer de Clericó in 1488. He is listed in 'Relació cornològica dels notaris de Santa Coloma de Queralt Segles XIII-XX' in the article 'Els notaris de Santa Coloma de Queralt (Segles XIII-XX). Els retorn dels protocols notarials anteriors al segle XIX' by Josep M. Porta i Balanyà.

Figure 25.20 on page 281 shows the appearance of Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, with chronological connections to Pere Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.5 and Berenguer Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.4, in Santa Coloma de Queralt. Their ancestral connections are shown in Figure 25.21 on page 282.

In Figure 25.23 on page 282, additional evidence is given that Ramon Berenguer Desclergue was a notary in an unspecified period between 1487 and 1490.

25.0.1.3 Support and Patronage of Church Retables

Across generations, as seen in Chapter 49, our family has recognized the profound significance of Church Retables, not only as expressions of faith but also as embodiments of cultural heritage and artistic mastery. With their intricate designs and spiritual narratives, retables serve as focal points within sacred spaces, inviting contemplation and reverence.

Understanding the resource-intensive nature of creating such monumental works, we have made it a custom to provide financial support to ensure the realization of these projects. Our commitment extends beyond mere philanthropy; it is a testament to our belief in the power of art to inspire, uplift, and unite communities.

By investing in the creation of church retables, we honored our familial tradition and contributed to the preservation and enrichment of our shared cultural heritage. Our patronage empowered talented artists to continue their craft and leave a lasting legacy that transcends generations.

Notary Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, for instance, supported Joan Barceló in making a retable at Santa Maria del Pi in Barcelona. Mauro Salis,[5] describes the events as follows.

In 1508 there was an interruption in the series of news relating to the Sardinian events of Joan Barceló: on 11 December, he signed a contract with the obrieri and the parishioners of the church of Santa Maria del Pi in Barcelona in which he committed himself to paint, within five years starting from Christmas 1510, the retable for the main altar of the church. At the time of signing, the obrers are represented by the donzell Galceran de Corrego, the notary Ramon Berenguer Desclergue and the fuster Climent Carbonell, while Joan Barceló is supported by the revenedor Matheu Sanç. Witnesses are the priests Cristophol Planes, prior of the church of San Giovanni, Pere Ponç, beneficiary and començal of the same church, Jaume Mani, beneficiary of the church of Pi, and the parayre Jaume Osona.

25.0.1.4 Berenguer Desclergue

He was the father of Clementa Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.20, Chapter 20.6.2 and Chapter 25.0.1, who was married to Francesc Torró y Miquel, described in Chapter 20.6.1, and also of Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.2. The brother of Berenguer Desclergue was Francesc Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.2.

Before being a notary and having other prominent positions during his long career, he started as a scriptor. He appears as 'Berengarius de Clerico, scriptor' on July 19, 1417, in Santa Coloma de Queralt. The document is about a power of attorney granted by Avraham Barukh, a Jew from Santa Coloma de Queralt, in the person of his brother, Joan Bosc, a convert from Tàrrega, to recover unpaid debts.[6][7]

He was a man of the law, and in 1439, he held the position of local deputy of Montblanc and its ward, which he resigned on January 26, 1440. He must have been well connected with the courtly circles since, on October 5, 1451, and from Tudela, the infant Joan,

---

[4] J. M. Madurell Marimón, Indice cronológico alfabético. Archivo General de Protocolos de Barcelona. Sección Histórica I. Barcelona. Pág. 74.

[5] SALIS, Mauro. 3. Artisti, opere, e committenti. Casi studio In : Rotte mediterranee della pittura : Artisti e committenti tra Sardegna e Catalogna nella prima età moderna [en ligne]. Perpignan : Presses universitaires de Perpignan, 2015 (généré le 12 mars 2024).

[6] 19.07.1417 (24.1), in Josep Xavier Muntané santiveri, "Ex nactione Judayca ad Fidem Christianam Noviter Conversi: Conversos Jueus de Tàrrega i de Poblacions Veïnes"

[7] ACCB, FN, Sta Coloma de Queralt, Bernat Giner, Llibre de notes (1417-1418), f. 4v-5r.

Figure 25.2: When the shields in Figure 20.2 are compared to ornaments inside the Sant Miquel church of Montblanc, some exciting features may or may not be relevant. Heraldry plays a notable role among the varied decoration of Sant Miquel's teginat. Leaving aside the background decoration of the beams, painted lengthwise with strips of the yellow and red colors of the House of Barcelona, many heraldic signs adorn the beams, corbels, and some tablets. The heraldry of this teginate of Sant Miquel is probably early, possibly close to the middle of the 13th century, just like the estimated construction era of the building. Proof of this would be that Montblanc's coat of arms still does not include the gold bars and gules of the Barcelona count house. Indeed, at the beginning of Catalan municipal heraldry in the second half of the 13th century, royal towns such as Barcelona, Girona, Lleida, Cervera, or Montblanc did not have the definitive coats of arms, i.e., within their shields, the combination of the municipal sign with the royal coat of arms had not yet occurred. Left is Section D, left side, beam 2, bracket 4. Right is Section E, left side, beam 2. Presumably, these are early heraldic signs, probably related to names referring to 'tower' (Torres, Torrelles, Torrell...). In particular, the one on the right is very close to Torró, shown in Figure 20.2 on page 216; if the colors are ignored, the family that the Desclergues stem from and remain closely connected to the Desclergues for several generations due to mixed marriages. The Desclergue shield is not found in this church because the Desclergues were still thriving in Barcelona and Mallorca at the time of its construction.
1

Duke of Montblanc, appointed him general curator of the Duchy of Montblanc.

His father was Francesc Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.18. His mother was from Barcelona and was the daughter of Bernat D'Anguera, alias Bernat Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.6.

Figure 25.20 on page 281 shows the appearance of Berenguer Desclergue, with chronological connections to Pere Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.5 and Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.2, in Santa Coloma de Queralt. Their ancestral connections are shown in Figure 25.21 on page 282.

Isabel Sánchez de Movellán Torent[8], elucidates the entitlements accorded to local deputies within the context of their roles. Local deputies enjoyed certain fiscal immunities and entitlements comparable to their counterparts serving in broader administrative capacities. Specifically, they and their immediate family members were absolved from the obligation of remitting fees associated with bars and tolls. Furthermore, they were permitted to bear arms, primarily for personal defense and security, a prerogative particularly exercised during the discharge of their official duties. Noteworthy is the provision that allowed local deputies to tender their resignation while actively serving, necessitating the appointment of a successor by the general deputies during the incumbent's tenure. Berenguer Desclergue was an example of such a deputy who resigned.

Indeed,[9] in January 1440, the town of Montblanc saw a notable event documented in a notarial text shown in Figure 25.22 on page 282: the resignation of Berenguer Desclergue from his position as local deputy. This act occurred on January 26th, coinciding with the passing of Galceran de Mataró, the manager of the General's accounts.

Berenguer Desclergue's resignation marked a significant moment in Montblanc's administrative landscape. As a local deputy, he held a position of authority and responsibility within the town and its surrounding village. His decision to resign from this role was formally communicated to the honorable Deputation, indicating a voluntary relinquishment of his duties.

The notarial text also records the arrival and departure of various individuals during January. This includes the movements of priests such as Phelipp de Sentceloni, Guillem de Santcliment, and Philip de Santceloni, as well as the prior of Tarragona, Bernat Guillem de Çamasó. Additionally, the text documents administrative decisions made by the Deputation during this time. On January 27th, it was determined that books, paper, and pamphlets necessary for the affairs of the Deputation of the General of Catalonia would be procured from Anthoni Ramon, the librarian of the said General.

25.0.1.5 Pere, the brother of Berenguer Desclergue

Figure 25.20 on page 281 shows the appearance of Pere Desclergue, with chronological connections to Berenguer Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.4 and Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.2, in Santa Coloma de Queralt. Their ancestral connections are shown in Figure 25.21 on page 282.

Pere Desclergue was a notary at Santa Coloma de Queralt from 1445 until 1461. While his brother, Berenguer, was stationed in Barcelona, Pere established notarial activities in Santa Coloma de Queralt that would later be inherited by Berenguer and later by Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.0.1.2. He also appears in the literature as Pere de Clerico.

25.0.1.6 Bernat D'Angera, alias Desclergue

He is also described in Chapter 18.19. He was the grandfather of Berenguer Desclergue, in Chapter 25.0.1.4, and he was the son of Guillem D'Angera, described in Chapter 25.0.1.7 and of Doña N. Desclergue shown in Chapter 25.0.1.8. He resided at Çavit in Barcelona in 1358.[10]

There is a reference to him in the year 1383 in a notary document of 1494 in Figure 21.1 on page 235, in Figure 21.2 on page 237, in Figure 21.3 on page 238, and in Figure 21.4 on page 239 and also to his father Guillem. He was once a military, located in

---

[8] Isabel Sánchez de Movellán Torent, La Diputació del General de Catalunya (1413-1479), Institut d'Estudis Catalans, 2004, p. 224, reference 215 (26.1.1440)

[9] Josep Maria Sans i Travé, "Dietaris de la Generalitat de Catalunya, Volum I, Anys 1411-1539," folio 60-62, p. 76-77.

[10] Suma dels fochs de Çavit IX , p. 414, item 85 v. Listed in J. M. Pons Guri, "un fogatjament desconegut de l'any 1358."

Montblanc.
The family d'Anguera often appears in works containing descriptions of military campaigns in the 14th, 15th, and 16th centuries. We found the appearance of names, such as Bernat de Anguera, Joan d'Anguera, Pere d'Anguera, Guillem d'Anguera and Ramón de Anguera. However, we were unable to track their family ties. The mentioned notary document of 1494 also claims they are from a military bloodline.
In 1421, Bernat Desclergue was a grocer at Cervera, as can be read in Figure 25.24 on page 282.
It is reasonable to assume that Geronimo Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.23.3, and Joan Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.23.2, are also his descendants.
Clarity is provided in Figure 25.25 on page 282.

25.0.1.7 Guillem D'Anguera

He was a military and was the father of Bernat D'Angera, alias Desclergue, in Chapter 25.0.1.6. In Chapter 25.0.1.8, his wife was a daughter of Guillermo Desclergue, in Chapter 18.12.
The descendants of Guillem D'Anguera and N. Desclergue, are provided in Figure 25.25 on page 282.

25.0.1.8 N. Desclergue

Her father was Guillermo Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.12. She was the sister of Geronimo Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.16. Guillermo Desclergue's father was Francesc Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.11, son of Raymond Desclergue, described in Chapter 18.10 She is also described in 18.15.2

25.0.2 Pere Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01) was a Notary

Pere Desclergue appears as a respected inhabitant of Montblanc in the report of the February 1450 visit of Pedro Ximénez de Urrea i de Bardaxi (1445-1489), as found in Podall.[11]
We find 'Desclergue Pere' in 1501 as notary at Montblanc in Josep Torné i Cubells.[12]
On pages 179-180 of URTX índex onomàstic Personatges històrics, we find 'DESCLERGUE, Pere (noble): VII, 66' .
A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore, we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. Indeed, Berenguer was Clementa's father and, therefore, the father-in-law of Pere Torró y Desclergue (DC01).
He appears with his brother Galceran as 'Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico' in a notarial document of August 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue of Santa Coloma de Queralt, their mother's brother. 1494 is when their father, Francesc Torró y Miquel, died.
Pere Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01), also known as Pere Desclergue (DC01), was introduced in Chapter 25. His position in our ancestral tree is shown in Figure 25.7 and Figure 25.7. He was a Doncel and a Notary in Montblanc. The literature states that he stems from an old noble family. Earlier genealogists found several people in ancient documents that were probably distantly related to Don Pere Desclergue (I) (DC01). Still, the fragmented knowledge was insufficient to unravel the mutual family ties. A summary is provided in Part V.
In this book, as described in Part VI and Chapter 25, we have been able to form a link between this Pere Desclergue (DC01) from Montblanc, with his Desclergue, Torró and Miquel relatives.
His family name, Desclergue, came from his mother, Clementa Desclergue, the daughter of Berenguer Desclergue, while his father was Francesc Torró y Miquel. We know this because his descendant, Bonaventura Desclergue, a couple of generations later, did not make any reference to a patrilinear Desclergue lineage before Don Pere Desclergue (I) (DC01), when he established his own Desclergue ancestry to obtain a Noble title. Indeed, to get a noble title, Bonaventura Desclergue would have included earlier ancestors if they had been paternal and carried the same family name.
In other words, the Desclergue patrilineal ancestry began with Pere Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01). Before him, there were Desclergues on his mother's side and Torró on his father's side. Still, when going back sufficiently far, surpassing the ancestry of Du Guesclin, the line sprout from Desclergue.
Pere's (DC01) father was Francesc Torró y Miquel, a patrilineal descendant of Beltran Claquin (Bertrand du Guesclin). Pere Desclergue's (DC01) brother was Galceran Torró y Desclergue.
Josep Maria Grau i Pujol[13] and Francesc Badia i Batalla state,
'Desclergue, Pere de. Notari de la vila (1499).'
He was Burgués Honrado of Manresa, and Trustee of Prats del Rey, in 1533. Pere Desclergue (DC01) appears at the end of the 16th century as a notary, referred to by Palau i Dulcet[14], who states that he is known to have been Burgués Honorado of the city of Manresa (Barcelona), a native of Montblanc, and a Trustee of Manresa in 1528 and 1537.
The year 1576 was revolutionary in Flanders: The death of Requesens, a coup d' état by Willem van Oranje, the Spanish mutiny in Antwerp, the Pacification of Ghent, etc. A Spanish notary document in Montblanc ('Montisalbi') dating from 1576 and shown in Figures 25.12, 25.13, 25.14, 25.15, 25.16, 25.17 and 25.18 lists testimonies concerning the descendants of Pere Desclergue (DC01), in particular our ancestors Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02), Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03) and Bonaventura Desclergue (II) (DC04), who are also described in this Chapter 24.
It is essential to understand that this document was made during the reign of H.M. King Felipe II amidst the rise of Protestantism in Europe.
In particular, France, with the rise of Calvinism and the Huguenot reign in many areas, followed by several civil wars, especially near the Spanish border, threatened the Spanish catholic power. The fear was real as resurrections had also taken place in the German areas of the empire, followed by the Dutch revolt. The Belgians still mention the 'Spanish fury' in their history books in school, as in Figure 25.10.
The Spanish King Felipe II and his regime were wary of its threat to the Spanish Empire. Liaisons with France were out of the

---

[11] Podall, 'Visites pastorals a Montblanc durant l' època medieval (segle XV),' 2016, 20

[12] Josep Torné i Cubells, 'Catàleg de Pergamins de l' actual arxiu del monestir de Poblet'

[13] Josep Maria Grau i Pujol and Francesc Badia i Batalla, 'Diccionari biogràfic històric de Montblanc (1155-1920)' , Fundació Martí l' Humà. Tot Conca. Carrer Josa, 6, Montblanc, 2008.

[14] A. Palau y Dulcet, Guía, Ob. cit. Lugar citado question for persons seeking to rise in the administration and the nobility. In that period, it would have been unfortunate for the Desclergues to reveal their foreign, French patrilinear bloodline.

It is, therefore, not surprising that the ancestry exposed at that time does not go further back, patrilinearly, than Pere Desclergue (DC01). Revealing his full name, 'Torró y Desclergue,' or his ancestors, 'Torró,' and earlier, even 'Claquin' or 'Du Guesclin,' would not have been beneficial.

Still, the notary document was signed by 'altissima F Torró,' who was Francesc Torró y Desclergue, described in Chapter 27.21.1, the cousin of Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (DC04).

A possible exciting indication of de Torró is found in Figure 25.1 on page 258.

In Chapter 25, we already showed the proof that our earliest Desclergue ancestors descended from a 'Torró' bloodline with Du Guesclin origins. Therefore, a notary in 1494 made a distinction in the name spelling, as shown in Chapter 25, in particular Figures 25.3, 25.4, and 25.5.

Pere Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01) was married to his first cousin, Eleonor Torró y Miquel, described in Chapter 25.0.3.

25.0.2.1 Note on the Census in Montblanc of 1359

In Lluis Paris i Bou and Josep M. Sans i Travé,[15][16] we find that, in the census, or fogatge, of 1359 at Montblanc, ordered by H.M. King Pere III of Aragon, a certain Pere Desclergue is enlisted as an inhabitant inside the town's walls. Even the street, Calle Mayor (the Main Street), is supposedly given.

We cannot exclude that a certain Pere Desclergue lived in Montblanc in 1359, but he cannot have been the patrilineal ancestor of the Desclergues who later constructed the famous house on the Plaza Mayor. Furthermore, after discussing with several historians, including Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal, who was very supportive of uncovering new information about the ancestry of the Desclergues and the different branches overlapping with his ancestry, we must conclude that the Census of 1359 referred to in the literature, contains data of a later century.

First of all, the street name, Calle Mayor, is, according to historians, younger than the 14th century. Furthermore, documents from that period are typically meager and fragmented, and it would be implausible that so much information would have appeared in one authentic document from 1359. A later chronicler would have been tempted to complete data based on expectations and known facts from the time of the chronicler but not from 1359. Not even in the 16th century would such a detailed census have been made. Not even in Toledo, Burgos, Seville, Córdoba, Granada, Valencia, or Barcelona did such a detailed census exist in 1359, and it would be implausible for Monblanc to beat these cities in that respect.

Our Desclergues ancestors, in 1359, were still involved in Mallorca, and it would be unthinkable that so soon after James III of Mallorca and during the reign of Peter IV of Aragon, the Desclergues would have moved to Montblanc. The Desclergues left Mallorca in the 1370s of the 14th century, as described in Chapter 18.

Medievalist Cortés Rosal made the following observation:

Analyzing economic aspects in Mallorca, and the metropolises Valencia and Barcelona, in terms of links with Mallorca, I see it as illogical in the mentality of a consolidated merchant to emigrate from Mallorca at the time of the confrontation and tension between Jaime and Pedro or immediately after the events of 1349. The Balearic Islands were thriving, which is why Aragon resisted losing them since its autonomy and very prosperous economy marked that course. In addition, the structure of a census of those years in a town or city done in the way supposedly done in the mentioned 1359 census is inconceivable. It was something one would only expect in such a format centuries later. Another point is the doubtful existence of documents of such a census in that century. The form of the alleged census stands out as something unusual in those times and is discordant with the Administrative Law of the Councils of the time.

So, a merchant house such as Desclergue would not have left Mallorca for a town like Montblanc, which was much less commercially attractive. The Desclergues migrated in the 1370s because of Mallorca's disadvantageous fiscal policy.

Cortés Rosal states that

Looking at the economic behavior of Barcelona, it is actually from the 15th century onwards that Montblanc becomes an attractive place for a merchant who has a strategy of penetration and competition in a region monopolized by the central city, Barcelona.

When the Desclergues arrived in the 1370s, due to a disadvantageous fiscal regime implemented in Mallorca, they settled first in Penedés, not yet in Montblanc. Their merchant partners were, most likely, wealthy Jewish merchants, and the circumstances became difficult for Jews in Mallorca at that time, which must have been another reason to leave the island and settle on the mainland. The Desclergues served as leads of the Jews wanting to settle on the mainland, and the Jews, highly experienced in trade, would, at that time, never have decided to settle their businesses in Montblanc, but instead in Penedés and, later, Barcelona.

25.0.3 Eleonor Torró y Miquel, the Wife of Don Pere de Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01)

Eleonor Torró y Miquel was the Spouse of her first cousin, Don Pere de Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01), described in Chapter 25.0.2. In fact, she may be Eleonor Torró y Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers. We only know the family where she originated from and found no other husband of Eleonor, whence it is reasonable that she was the one.

Pere de Torró y Desclergue (DC01) had four sons: Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02), who established his family and offspring at Montblanc, Pere Torró y Hostalric (DC02b), Antich Desclergues (DC02c), who founded their families in Manresa, and Galceran Desclergue (DC02d) (I=II), who established a Barcelona branch.

The parents of Eleonor Torró y Miquel were Joan Torroó y Miquel and Doña Hostalric. Her grandparents were Pere Torró and Eulalia Miquel. The latter were also the parents of Francesc Torró y Miquel, described in Chapter 20.6, the father of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01).

Eleonor Torró y Miquel was a very distinguished and noble lady, carrying the blood of Miquel, Torró, and Hostalric, allied with the Requesens.[17]

The etymology and significance of the Hostalric surname, allied with Torró, have historical ties to Catalonia. Originating from the town of Hostalric, named after the same locality, it belongs to the judicial district of Santa Coloma de Farners within the province of Gerona. Notably, Ramón de Hostalric crossed paths with Ramón Berenguer, the Count of Barcelona, during the conquest of [15] Lluis Paris i Bou, 'El creixement de Montblanc medieval i un fogatge de finals del s. XVI' , Aplex de Treballs, vol 1 (1978), p 145-152.

---

[16] Josep M. Sans i Travé, 'El Fogatge de Pere III - El de Montblanc,' in 1359.

[17] Barcelona, 4 February 1531, Testament de Joana Montbui i d'Hostalric, vidua de Joan d'Hostalric Sebastida, cavaller, domiciliat a Barcelona, governador dels comtats dels Rosselló i de la Cerdanya,.. vidua de Dirmes de Requesens, ... etc. Testament registered by Pere Fito notari public de Barcelona, en non i en lloc d'Antoni Anglés, son of the procurador of Jeronima de Requesens i d'Hostalric, li dóna forma publica el 1571, gener, 8; Trasllat de Pere Mambla, notari public de Barcelona de 1571, gener 10.

Mallorca, and both figures also maintained a residence in Sabastida.
The family crest of the Hostalric surname is characterized by a silver background adorned with three vibrant red wavy bars. Meanwhile, the Sabastida branch features a silver shield embellished with red sparkles.
The symbolism of the Hostalric surname's heraldic coats of arms encompasses silver and gules to signify purity and courage, respectively, with specific associations with various celestial, elemental, and seasonal aspects.
We can, for instance, also mention Ramón de Hostalric, the Abbot of the Monastery of Poblet in 1222 near Montblanc. The Hostalrics connected with the Torró. In the same monastery, we also find Ferrer and Ratera in 1342—the Hostalrics, Ratera, and Ferror allied with Montblanc's Desclergues and their ancestors.
The Hostalric Castle in Girona is shown in Figure 25.19.

25.1 Descendants of Pere Desclergue (I) (DC01)

25.1.1 Pere Desclergue (DC02b), a Mercador

He was a son of Pere de Torró y Desclergue (DC01) and is described by Francisco José Morales Roca[19].
Miguel Royano Cabrera[20] also mentioned Pere Desclergue (DC02b) as a brother of Mercador Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d). Apparently Pere Desclergue (DC02b) was involved in the business that was setup by Galceran (DC02d), while he resided in Sevilla in the period 1524-1552.
An impression of Sevilla's beauty is given in Figure 25.28.
Pere Desclergue (DC02b), as a brother of Galceran (DC02d), is also referred to as factor ('Pedro Desclergue') for his brother, for the collection of debts in 1548, in the city of Veracruz[21], shown in Figure 25.26.

25.1.2 Antich Desclergue (DC02c)

He was a son of Pere de Torró y Desclergue (DC01) and was a Burgués Honrado de Manresa, and Trustee of Manresa, in 1563. According to Francisco José Morales Roca[22], he is indeed a son of Pere de Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01) (Pere Desclergue).
There is a reference to Antich, whose identity remains uncertain. Given the connection to Lleida during the same period, it is plausible that Antich is the same person. This Antich Desclergue is included in Chapter 18.24.1 for thorough documentation.

25.1.3 Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) & Ana de Villavicencio

25.1.3.1 Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d), a Mercador

In the inaugural iteration of this treatise, a mention was made of a Galceran Desclergue (II), who was purportedly the progeny of Galceran Desclergue (I). This assertion, stemming from antecedent scholarly works, regrettably constituted an inadvertent error. Such an erroneous attribution emanated from the misapprehension that Galceran Desclergue's longevity in his field warranted the presumption of a filial relationship between the two individuals. Nevertheless, in the annus mirabilis of 2023, a momentous discovery was made by Miguel Royano Cabrera, which unveiled the verity that both entities were, in actuality, one and the same individual. This revelatory revelation upended the previous misconceptions and rectified the historical record.[23]
Rather than uncritically endorsing Cabrera's findings, the author undertook a thorough reassessment of the work of Galceran Desclergue, enlisting the expertise of Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal to contextualize Cabrera's recent discoveries within the genealogical frameworks of the pertinent families of the historical period. These investigations yielded a trove of compelling new insights pertaining to Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio, whose prior erroneous identification as 'Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda' in the inaugural edition and earlier publications warranted correction. This endeavor not only rectified her nomenclature but also shed light on her lineage and familial connections. The ensuing findings represent a noteworthy contribution to the field of genealogical research.

---

[19] Francisco José Morales Roca, 'Ciudadanos y burgueses honrados habilitados como síndicos del brazo real en las Cortés del Principado de Cataluña. Dinastias de Trastámara y de Austria. Siglos 15 y 16 [1410-1599]' , Ediciones Hidalguia, 1995

[20] Miguel Royano Cabrera, 'La comunidad mercantil de la Corona de Aragón afincada en Sevilla durante el reinado de Carlos I - el caso de Galcerán Desclergue' , El legado hispánico: manifestaciones culturales y sus protagonistas / Abel Lobato Fernández (ed. lit.), Esperanza de los Reyes Aguilar (ed. lit.), IRené Pereira García (ed. lit.), Cristina García González (ed. lit.), Vol. 1, 2016, ISBN 978-84-9773-769-2, págs. 415-432.

[21] Historical Archive of Protocols of Seville, Notarial Protocols of Seville, Legajo 9.823, f .342 r. (29 - 4 - 1547)

[22] Francisco José Morales Roca, 'Ciudadanos y burgueses honrados habilitados como síndicos del brazo real en las Cortés del Principado de Cataluña. Dinastias de Trastámara y de Austria. Siglos 15 y 16 [1410-1599]' , Ediciones Hidalguia, 1995.

[23] Royano Cabrera, Miguel (2023): La comunidad mercantil de la corona de Aragón en la Baja Andalucía (1516-1556). Sevilla: Editorial Universidad de Sevilla (Colección Historia, n. 401).

Miguel Royano Cabrera summarized what he deemed important about Galceran Desclergue (I=II) as follows.[24][25][26] [27][28][29][30][31][32][33][34][35][36][37][38][39][40]

---

[24] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 415. (Otte 1967: 469). y AGI, J., leg. 733, n.o 1, ff. 58r-230r (en declaraciones de 25-6-1539 a 7-9-1540).

[25] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 416. Como lo indica que su hermano Pedro Desclergue fuese factor suyo para el cobro de deudas en 1548 en la ciudad de Veracruz Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9823, f. 342r (29-4-1547). Y la fe- cha aproximada de su fallecimiento en Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9162, f. 83r (7-1-1548), así como Lluis Desclergue en Cádiz (AHPCa, PNC, leg. 4355, ff. 81v-82v (10-2-1546); (Martínez Shaw 1980: 234). Felipe Desclergue en Cádiz: AGI, J., leg. 889, n. 5, ff. 15v-20v (de 18-5-1569 a 9-8-1569).

[26] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 417. Como apuntan los diferentes autores Armenteros Martínez 2012: 149-271; Bello León 2010: 115-117; Madurell Marimón 1955: 569-570; Otte 1967: 469-480; Otte 2008: 132-311.

[27] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 418. AGI, J., leg. 889, n. 5, ff. 32r-32v (18-5-1569 y 9-8-1569); AHPCa, PNC, leg. 4336, ff. 641v-642v (5-10-1547); ACA, Diversos, Monistrol, Pergaminos, n.o 1.115, f. 1r (17-6-1567).

[28] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 419. (Declerq 2021: 100-200). El autor confunde a Galcerán Desclergue como un hijo homónimo. En realidad, tanto los dos que describe son la misma persona ya que vive más de 60 años.

[29] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 420. AMS, Sección de estadística. Padrón municipal de habitantes. Índice de padrones anteriores a 1865 (1384-1857). Padrón de vecinos de 1533. Microfilm (en adelante, M) 1714, 1715 y 1716.

[30] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 421. (Otte 1967: 467).

[31] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 422. Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 3309, ff. 986v-988v (20-3-1535).

[32] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 423. AGI, Contaduría, leg.1051, CuentasdeAlonsodelaTorre.TambiénenOtte1967:471.

[33] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 424. Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 3323, f. 1092r (2-8-1537).

[34] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 425. En 31 de mayo de dicho año. Véase en Otte 1967: 461 y AGI, J., leg. 733, n.o 1.

[35] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 426. (Otte 1990: 119-121).

[36] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 427. (Madurell Marimón 1955: 569-570). Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 3323, f. 1092r (2-8-1537).

[37] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 428. Inicio de las compañías con Desclergue en AGI, Santo Domingo, leg. 868, libro 2, f. 295r (1540); (Otte 1967: 469). Fallecimiento de Llenes en Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9162, f. 906r (28- 4-1548). Será cónsul catalán en Nápoles, donde residirá con su esposa (1517-1524) hasta su tras- lado a Sevilla: Vaquero Piñeiro 1993: 290 (a inicios de 1517); (Mañé i Mas y Rovira i Solà 2010: 240); (Durán i Pujol y Feliu i Monfort 2005: 1228), entre 1519 y 1524.

[38] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 429. (Otte 1967: 469-474).

[39] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 430. Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9164, ff. 978v-979r (8-5-1549), leg. 9168, f. 786v (1-7-1551), leg. 9169, f. 2117r (3-11-1551), f. 2072v (28-11-1551); (Otte 1967: 469).

[40] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 431. Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9168, f. 786r (1-7-1551), leg. 9169, f. 2117r (3-11-1551); (Otte 1967: 469).

[41] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 432. AHPC, PNC, leg. 4343, ff. 637v-638r (11-7-1555).

[42] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 433. (Madurell Marimón 1955: 569-570); (Otte 2008: 469); AGI, Contratación (en adelante CT), leg. 4948 B. (1542).

[43] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 434. (MadurellMarimón1955:569-570);(Otte1967:477);AGI, IG, leg.1802(1544-1545).

[44] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 435. (Otte 2008: 146).

[45] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 436. (Otte 2008: 132). Concretamente en la villa de Marchena (1546-1547).

[46] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 437. Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 12 316, f. 1551r (9-9-1544).

[47] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 438. (Madurell Marimón 1955: 569-570); (Otte 1967: 477); AGI, J, leg. 733, n.o 1, ff. 107r-115r (en declaración de 18-7-1539).

[48] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 439. (Otte 1967: 469); AGI, CT, leg. 4948 B. (1542).

[49] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 440. (Madurell Marimón 1955: 569-570); (Otte 2008: 69-311). (Ejemplos de Desclergue, Dalmao Ros, Juan Bonet, etc.); o los casos que se ofrecen de diferentes mercaderes catalanes y valencianos como Dalmao Ros para pescado, cueros, etc. Véase en Ferrer i Mallol 1997: 306-314.

[50] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 441. Venta en Indias del arroz Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9823, f. 342r (29-4-1547), leg. 10573, f. 1357r (24-5-1547), leg. 10 573, f. 1416v (2-6-1547); (Otte 2008: 311); (solo para Desclergue); (Armenteros Martínez 2012: 155-158), entre otros, véase para comprobar la venta de arroz en Sevilla y Andalucía occidental.

[51] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 442. Para paños: Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9156, f. 224r (6-10-1542), f. 240r (12-10-1542), f. 316r (21-10-1542), leg. 9164, f. 659r (28-3-1549), leg. 1547, f. 649r (10-7-1549). Para cordellates: Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla,

In the first half of the 16th century, Galcerán Desclergue emerged as a prominent figure in Seville's commerce field. Born in 1507 into a merchant family from Barcelona, he was part of a lineage that included his brothers and relatives, such as Berenguer Desclergue, Antich, and Pere. The family originated from Barcelona and connected with the Aragonese Simón family. Galcerán married Isabel Simón in Valencia and eventually settled in Seville, later remarrying the daughter, mentioned in Chapter 25.1.3.2, of Doña Catarina Cabeza de Vaca Mejía and Pedro Núñez de Villavicencio from Jerez de la Frontera. He also had an illegitimate relationship, resulting in the birth of Luis, Felipe, and Maria Anna Desclergue in 1551.

Galcerán's journey to Seville in 1533 marked the beginning of his career there, likely influenced by his mercantile apprenticeship in Barcelona or Valencia. Initially, he served as a representative or factor for the Catalan merchant Jaime Planes, who had been operating in Santo Domingo since 1535. Galcerán also engaged in independent ventures, including sending shipments to Cartagena de Indias and investing in Santo Domingo in 1536, despite facing challenges like royal officials' confiscation due to forced loans to Charles V. He continued his trade in the Indies in subsequent years, involving the export of hides among Puerto Rico, Seville, and Barcelona.

A turning point in Galcerán Desclergue's career occurred with the death of his partner, Jaime Planes, in Santo Domingo in 1537. This event signaled a period of change within the Aragonese mercantile group in Seville, leading Galcerán to fill the void left by Planes. He joined forces with Valencian merchants Toribio Manzano, Gabriel Feristre, and Jaime Torregrosa, solidifying his position within the mercantile community.

Diverse market engagements and geographical diversification characterized Galcerán's commercial activities in Seville. He sourced agricultural products like cereals, wine, and oil from the Andalusian region. He also acquired livestock products, such as bovine leather from Marchena, and fisheries products, including sardines from the Algarve and the Huelva coast. These goods were destined for Santo Domingo and various Spanish cities, including Barcelona, Alicante, Valencia, and Tarragona.

Valencia contributed to rice exports and manufactured items, primarily cloth, which were transported to Seville and the Indian market. Catalonia, particularly Barcelona and Tarragona, provided hemp for cordonería and Perpignan, essential commodities in Seville. Galcerán also participated in the sugar trade. Additionally, strategic locations such as Cádiz, Malaga, Granada, the Canary Islands, and the Portuguese and Huelva Algarve played vital roles in his commercial endeavors, facilitating trade in various goods, including slaves, precious metals, hides, and fish.

Galcerán Desclergue's economic activities extended beyond commerce during his tenure in Seville. He engaged in various businesses, such as providing loans of varying sizes, intermediating financial transactions with the order of Montesa and the Sevillian military, investing in ships for commercial purposes, and participating in insurance policies for precious metals, hides, and New World fish. He also ventured into real estate by acquiring houses and estates. This multifaceted involvement established him as a financial leader within the Crown of Aragon community and emphasized his long-term strategy, always considering the New World.

Furthermore, Galcerán maintained close ties with fellow community members in Seville, as evidenced by his assistance to the daughters of his former partner, loans extended to individuals like Felipe Ribas, and his appointment as executor of Perot Rabaza's will. These connections endured even after he died in Barcelona in 1567, with his son Jerónimo Luis assuming guardianship of his former factor in Cádiz, Francisco Solsona, along with Solsona's widow.

In summary, Galcerán Desclergue's presence in Seville during the 16th century marked a significant chapter in commerce and mercantile networks, characterized by his diverse trade activities, financial leadership, and enduring community relationships.

Cabrera was, however, not the first investigator to work on the importance of Galcerán Desclergue (I=II). In the first edition of this work, numerous facts have already been described, summarized below.

He was a son of Pere de Torró y Desclergue (DC01) and an ancestor, though not along a direct paternal line. His descendants are shown in Figure 25.29, and his connection, through his daughter Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio, with Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), our forefather, is shown in Figure 25.33. This connection is situated in the same era as the presence of Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d), son of Pere de Torró y Desclergue (DC01) in Andalusia. Another Pacheco connection is described in Chapter 27.2 on page 301.

Below, we describe a request made by him on December 19, 1539, which proves that the family name 'Desclergue' came from a

---

PNS, leg. 6704, s. f., en 2 de junio (2-6-1547). Para chapines: Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9163, f. 294r (4-8-1548); (Otte 2008: 208-311).

[52] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 443. Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9163, f. 262r (30-7-1548). La retribución se contaba por arrobas de cáñamo, y los precios a principios del siglo XVI se consolidaron en torno a los 32-35 mrs/a. Tanto los productores como los compradores eran los cordoneros de Sevilla y de otros lugares de Andalucía.

[53] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 444. Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 12 335, f. 736r (26-8-1549).

[54] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 445. Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9156, ff. 224r-224v (6-10-1542). Véase la envergadura del comercio de perpiñanes en Sevilla y Andalucía en Ferrer i Mallol 1997: 315-334; (Otte 2008: 208).

[55] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 446. Registro de venida de navíos entre 1539-1551 en AGI, Indiferente General, leg. 1801 y 1802 (de 1539 a 1556); Contaduría, leg. 1051, cuentas de Alonso de la Torre; Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9164, f. 1178r (3-6-1549). (Otte 1967: 471-480).

[56] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 447. AGI, Indiferente General, leg. 1801 y 1802 (de 1539 a 1556). (Otte 1967: 475); (Otte 1977: 79).

[57] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 448. De las Indias sin concretar: Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9156, ff. 248r-248v (13-10-1542). De Santo Domingo: Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9825, f. 857v (21-8-1549). De Puerto Rico: Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 10 569, f. 421r (20-8-1545).

[58] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 449. Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9824, en cuaderno del 23 de agosto (22-8-1548).

[59] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 450. Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9162, f. 973r (8-5-1548).

[60] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 451. Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, AAT, leg. 29180, exp. 2, f. 7r (en declaraciones de F. Remón de Llenes de 29-10-1544).

[61] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 452. AHPCa, PNC, leg. 4335, ff. 330v-331r (7-5-1546).

[62] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 453. (Martínez Shaw 1980: 234).

[63] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 454. Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9157, f. 311r (26-2-1543), f. 715r (27-2-1543); (Otte 2008: 79).

[64] See also Cabrera (2023), p. 119-124, ref. nr. 455. Archivo Histórico Provincial de Sevilla, PNS, leg. 9163, f. 262r (30-7-1548).

female ancestor and was first carried by Pere Desclergue (I) (DC01) (i.e., Pere de Torró y Desclergue). Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) was involved early on with trade between Spain, Hispaniola, and Mexico, and he visited various places, such as Santo Domingo, Veracruz, and Andalucia. However, we have not found documents proving his involvement in the military conquest of the New World (the Conquista), unlike our other blood-relative Hernán Cortés de Monroy, described in Chapter 27.20. For instance, he does not appear in Manuel Orozco y Berra's list of conquistadors[65]. Therefore, we may conclude that he was involved in trade, not warfare.

He is our ancestor but not our paternal ancestor, unlike his brother Berenguer Desclergue (DC02). Indeed, his daughter Maria Anna Desclergue (DC02dx1), who married Don Bonaventura Desclergue (II) (DC04) y Cortés, our paternal ancestor, is an ancestor. Hence, Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) is also an ancestor, as illustrated in Figure 25.30. His branch was geographically linked to Barcelona with its architectural marvels, as shown in Figure 25.27, though it always maintained a bond with Montblanc.

Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) was married to Isabel, and the couple had one child, Jerónimo Desclergue (DC02dy2). Besides his marriage, Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) had two illegitimate children whom he legitimized later, with Ana de Villavicencio from Jerez, described in Chapter 25.1.3.2, namely Luis Desclergue y Villavicencio (DC02dy1) and Maria Ana Desclergue y Villavicencio (DC02dx1). Figures 25.31 and 25.32 provide clarification.

Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio (DC02dx1) was hence a daughter of Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) and married her cousin Don Bonaventura Desclergues (II) (DC04) y Cortés. The couple had two children: our ancestor Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) y Cortés and Enric Desclergue (DC05c) y Cortés. Evidence shows that 'Mariana Dezclergue' was 'esposa de Bonaventura Dezclergue' in a paragraph mentioning 'Francesc Picaire (1603), médico. Testigo en la venta de una viña, realizada por Mariana Dezclergue, esposa de Bonaventura Dezclergue, 22 agosto 1603. Protocolo del año correspondiente. A.P. de Montblanc' on page 159 of Jose Sanchez Real's book[66]. This Mariana was Maria Ana (DC02dx1), daughter of Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) and Ana de Villavicencio, described in Chapter 25.1.3.2.

On pages 179-180 of URTX índex onomàstic Personatges històrics, we find,
'Desclergue, Galceran (noble): VII, 66.'
In 1502, Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) of Montblanc completed his studies in Lleida and Tolosa, allowing him to support himself. He received his canon and civil law doctorate, granted after examination and verification of his life and customs[67]. Other sources mention that he was a doctor of law. Being the son of Pere de Torró y Desclergue (DC01) of Montblanc and brother of Bonaventura Desclergue senior (DC02), who established his family and offspring in Montblanc, Galcerán Desclergue (DC02d), a Squire, founded a Barcelona branch of the Desclergue family, although born in Montblanc. The constituents in Barcelona and Montblanc were not separated; members moved between the cities. As described earlier in this book, the Desclergues formed a dynasty of notaries in Barcelona, Montblanc, and other significant Catalonian places, predating the arrival of Bertrand Du Guesclin in Spain. A descendant of Du Guesclin took the name of Desclergue after his mother because he established himself professionally as a notary, making the name advantageous.

Josep Maria Grau i Pujol and Francesc Badia i Batalla[68] write,
'Desclergue, Galcerà II de. Doctor en drets canònic i civil, veí de la vila (1502). Estudià a Lleida i a Tolosa.'
They also mention that on December 19, 1539, he asked the Council of Aragon to recognize the condition of generosity and militia of the two preceding generations of Desclergue, which was resolved favorably and confirmed the use of the family heraldic weapons[69]. Since he refers only to two generations, the third generation before him carried a different name, as outlined in Chapter 25.0.2. Indeed, his grandfather was Francesc Torró y Miquel, described in Chapter 20.6.1.

Francesc J. Morales Roca[70] states that Galcerán Desclergue (DC02d) was a Squire of Montblanc and a doctor in law. On page 214 of Eufemio Lorenzo Sanz's book[71], Galcerán Desclergue is referred to as a resident of Sevilla in what is called, in the book, the Catalan colony of Sevilla.

He also appears in the works of Carlos Martinez Shaw[72] and Juan Manuel Bello León[73] of Universidad de la Laguna. In the Catalan encyclopedia, which appears online as 'enciclopedia,' Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) appears in an article titled 'Participació Catalana en el tràfic colonial' (Catalan participation in colonial traffic),
'In Seville, the most significant Catalan merchants, towards the second and third decades of the 16th century, were the brothers Tries, Jeroni Aimeric, Galcerán Desclergue, and Els Planes. Some of these manufacturers and merchants soon jumped to Santo Domingo or La Española, and later, Cuba, Puerto Rico, and Mexico. In the Antilles, these merchants were mainly dedicated to importing Spanish wines and flours. In return, they returned sugar, leathers, pearls, and precious metals.'
This trade was dramatically enhanced by the Conquista of Hernán Cortés de Monroy, who was of the same generation and whose cousin Anna Cortés de Monroy (our ancestor) married Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03) (our ancestor), cousin of the described Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d).

In Maximo Garcia Fernandez's book[74], Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) appears in a section on the Catalan-Valencian Mercantile Community. The author points out that in the 15th century, Catalonia and Valencia's regions appointed certain people

---

[65] Manuel Orozco y Berra, 'Los Conquistadores de Mexico,' Editorial Pedro Robredo, Calle de Justo Sierra No. 41, Mexico, D. F., 1938.

[66] Jose Sanchez Real, 'Médicos y cirujanos de Montblanc, Siglos XV-XVIII'

[67] Reg. 3578 (1502) Fol. 103, Archivo de la Corona de Aragón, Barcelona. This note was delivered to Jose Sanchez Real by doña Mercedes Costa.

[68] 'Diccionari biogràfic històric de Montblanc (1155-1920), Fundació Martí l' Humà. Tot Conca. Carrer Josa, 6, Montblanc, 2008.

[69] Arxiu Comarcal de Tàrrega, Fons Pedrolo, Fons Pedrolo, sign. top. 6.

[70] Francesc J. Morales Roca, 'Próceres habilitados en las Cortés del Principado de Cataluña .., Volume 2,' page 218

[71] Eufemio Lorenzo Sanz, 'Comercio de España con América en la época de Felipe II, Tomo I, Los Mercaderes y el Tráfico Indiano,' published by Institution Cultural Simancas, 1979 and edited by Servicio de Publicaciones de la Diputación Provincial de Valladolid, Angustias, 50, Valladolid. Depósito legal VA 32-1979, ISBN 84-500-3065-X, Imprime: Server-Cuesta. Prado, 10. Valladolid, 1979.

[72] Carlos Martinez Shaw, 'Cataluña y el comercio con America. El fin de un debate.'

[73] Juan Manuel Bello León, 'The Catalan Presence in the Western Andalusia at the end of the middle ages' in Annuario de Estudios Medievales (AEM), 40/1, enero-junio de 2010, pages 93-127, ISSN 0066-5061; in 'Tabla VI : Mercaderes Catalanes Localizados en la Documentacion Sevillana (1489-1525)'

[74] 'Familia, Cultura material y formas de poder en la España Moderna,' chapter 3 Encuentro de Jóvenes Investigadores en Historia Moderna, by Maximo Garcia Fernandez (editor), Valladolid 2 y 3 de julio del 2015, ISBN 978-84-938044-6-6.

in business as representatives of the regional business people in Seville. They had to do this as there were no ambassadors for areas then. He mentions that,
'In a second step, other merchants such as Galcerán Desclergue would be located, followed by Toribio Manzano, Miguel Izquierdo, Rafael Codina, etc. On the other hand, the Catalan-Valencian nation stood out among the rest of foreign mercantile communities settled in Seville.'
Further, the author writes about 'an episode of frustrated social promotion' of the Catalan merchant Juan Oto Soldevila and explains how Santo Domingo and Mexico were involved in his life story. Then, he mentions that others did not use their economic power for social promotion. In the list, he mentions Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d),
'However, we have observed that other members of the community did not attempt to climb in the Sevillian or Colonial society, as is the case of Galcerán Desclergue, who returned to Barcelona, or for instance Felipe de Ribas, who still kept his house in the county city on the street de las Ginas, although he could not return to it since he was surprised by death before reaching the age of 35.'

Several other documents refer to Galcerán Desclergue[75][76][77][78][79][80][81]. Miguel Royano Cabrera[82] also writes,
'However, we have observed that other members of the community did not attempt to climb in the Seville or colonial society, as is the case of Galcerán, who revealed that he returned to Barcelona in 1551.'
Galceran Desclergue is also mentioned in Carles Camp[83] as a member of the Catalan Society who traded with and traveled to Santo Domingo in Cuba, via Andalusia.

Below are citations from an agreement document from 1536, related to trade with Santo Domingo and Catalan merchants, whose entire transcript was published in 2016 by Carles Camp[84]. The citation shows that Galceran Desclergue played a prominent role in the trade of wine and flour between Iberia and Santo Domingo and indicates that the contract language reads like a mixture of Castilian and Catalan.

Die lune II mensis junii amo predicto M.D.XXXVI II I0.
Instrumentum capitulorum Cactorum et firmatorum per et inter honorabilem Petrum Bernardum Codina, Franciscum Xifre, Jacobum Casademunt et Jacobum Codina, mercatores, cives Barchinone, super societate ex causa unius viagii rotundi ad Insulam Sancti Dominici per dictum Jacobum Codina faciendi, prout est large in scedula.
Testes in scedula.
Die lune II mensis januarii anno a Nativitate Domini MDXXXVI II I.
Lo nom de Nostre Senyor Déu Jhesu Christ y de la gloriosa Verge María Mare sua, humilment invocats, Sobre la Companyia per causa de ter un viatge rodó en la Illa de Sancto Domingo, desliberada a ser feta, per y entre lo honorable en Pere Bernat Codina, Francesch Xifre, Jaume Casademunt e Jaume Codina, mercaders, son stats, pactats hi concordats los capítols següents:
...
E més havant és pactat y concordat, per y entre les dites parts, que lo dit Jaume Codina se haja a partir per Civilla lo més prest sia possible, y com Déu vulla sia allí, compre tants vins y farines, ho forments perfer ferines, com per Galceran dez Clergue li sera concellat, per un viatge della suma sobredita li aparés se dega esmersar en semblants mercaderies de vi y ferines y, aquells compre a tot son consdl y horde de dit Galceran dez Clergue, e los fassa portar en Civilla ho ahont per dit Clergue li sera dit y, finalment, metreho hen horde hen les botes ho pipes per carregar, com per lo dit dez Clergue li sera dit, tenint diligencia en aver principalment la mercaderia bona y aprés trehallant d' avantatgar lo que's porà.
E més avant és pactat y concordat, que lo dit Francesch Xifre don cornisió al dit Galceran dez Clergue, de donar al dit Jaume Codina, los dinés que per a lla compra de dits vins y farines seran menester, donanthi horde s' en valega de la part per hont millor li haparrà.
E més havant és pactat y concordat, que lo dit Jaume Codina, aja a tenir lo compte de la compra de dits vins y farines, lo qual acabat que haja de comprar y metre hen horde per carregar ans que pertesca per Santo Domingo, aja a cloure 19 dit compte de compre y despesses y aquel trametre al dit Francesch Xifre y, aprjs lo com.pte corrent dells diners li haura, donats lo dit dez Clergue y, lo compte de totes les despesses que fin[a] en aquella hora haura fetes ha tall, que ans que per dit loch de sancto Domingo pertesca se sapia lo cost y si serà tomador dells diners haurà rebuts ho no.
...
E més havant és pactat y concordat, que lo que serà esmerzat per dit Francesch Xiifre o per sa comissió hen Vallensia ho Perpinya o altre loch, per ell serà fet esmerzar per la via que millor li apparrà dega fer portar en Civilla, ramés tot al dit Jaume Codina y, anant per mar aja fer asegurar fins ha Civilla, fins los tres quarts o més, si més li haparrà.
E més havant és pactat y concordat, que lo dit Jaume Codina, com los dits vins hi farines seran hen horde, he la roba sera haribada en Civilla ab tot lo dit hesmerzs, a la hora que per lo dit Galceran dez Clergue li serà haconsellat, dega carregar totes les susdites mercaderies per dit lloch de Sancto Domingo, hen un ho més pasatges, y lo dit Jaume Codina aja de anar ab la hu d' ells, y que se fassa lo consignament a ell y per sa absència al qui lo dit Galceran dez Clergue li dirà.
E mes avant és pactat y concordat, que lo dit Francesch Xifre, axí en Barchinona ho hen Càliz, dega fer asegurar alla hont miilor li apparrà a risch de dites mercaderies ho avers, de Sivilla a Sancto Domingo, entrada ab exida, ço és, s' is fa en Barchinona mil y set cents ducats y si's fa en Càliz tots los dos milia ducats.
E més avant és pactat y concordat, que lo dit Jaume Codina prengue en Civilla recort del dit Galceran des Clergue, del que te a fer en Sancto Domingo y, que estigue a tot lo que ell li hordonorà per dit recort y, que prengue letres de recomendacions per dit loch de

---

[75] Dalmao Ros, Galcerán Desclergue and Francesc Remón de Llenes, in AHPSe, PNS, leg ff.235r.-v.

[76] Statements by Galcerán Desclergue, Felipe de Ribas, and Jerónimo Pedrálvarez about the life of Jaime Planes, in Archivo General de Indias, Judicia, leg.733, nº1, ff.54 r.-66 r.

[77] Statements by Galcerán Desclergue, Felipe de Ribas, and Atanasio Navarro on the life of Jerónimo Mayor, in AHPSe, AAT, exp.2, leg, ff.22 v r., 24 r.

[78] Galcerán Desclergue as executor of Nicolás Terreu in AHPSe, PNS, leg.9.162, f. 58 r., Leg.9.164, f.663 r.

[79] The merchants Perot Forcadell, Jaime Codina, Galcerán Desclergue, Felipe de Ribas, and Jerónimo Pedrálvarez knew the daughters and lover of Jaime Planes, in Archivo General de Indias, Judicia, leg.733, nº1, ff.49 r.-70 r.

[80] Perot Forcadell, Galcerán Desclergue, and Bernal Minguella knew the relatives of Planes in Barcelona, in Archivo General de Indias, Judicia, leg.733, nº1, ff.231 r.-330 r.

[81] Francesc Remón de Llenes, Felipe de Ribas, and Galcerán Define the relatives of Jerónimo Mayor in Valencia, in AHPSe, AAT, leg, exp.2, f.7 r.-23 r.

[82] Miguel Royano Cabrera of Universidad de Sevilla, 'The Catalan mercantile community,' Chapter III of 'Meeting of Young Researchers in Modern History,' University of Valladolid, Spanish Foundation for Modern History, 2015, page 125

[83] Carles Camp, 'Catalans a Amèrica al segle XVI,' Fundació d'Estudis Històrics de Catalunya, ART01844

[84] Carles Camp, President de la Fundació d'Estudis Històrics de Catalunya, 'Un exemple (més) de l'activitat comercial entre Catalunya i Amèrica durant el segle XVI,' published on the online portal of Fundació d'Estudis Històrics de Catalunya. (ART02860).

Sancto Domíngo.

E més havant és pactat y concordat, que cont Déu vulla sia junt lo dit Jaume Codina en Sancto Domingo, segesca, com per lo dit Galceran dez Clergue li serà hordenat, aurà de fer del que s' en porterà y largament vendreho tot, axí a temps com de comptans baretar ab cuyrons y alguna part de sucres y algunes haltres mercaderies, si per dit des Clergue li serà dit, tenint en son libre la venda per manut del que vendrà y compta del que y comprarà, y com venés de comptans, aqui mateix tornar hesmerzar en. dits cuyros, sucres y altres coses hordenades per dit des Clergue, en cars que venés ha temps baretar las dites ab les dites mercaderies ho havers e corn no's pugés fer esperar lo tempse rebut esmersar en dites mercaderies ho avers.

E més havant és pactat y concordat, que lo dit Jaune Codina, tantost com tenga alguna mercaderia, per poqua que sia, per trametre, encara que no sia despedit haventy pasatge per Civilla o Càliz, dega carregar tot lo que tindra lo més prest porà per Civilla o Càliz. Y finalment, en una ho més partides, ho dega tot carregar per Civilla o Càliz, consignat cont ell vindrà a ell, e per sa absènsia a Rafel Codina, y corn ell no vindrà, tant sollament, consignant al dit dez Clergue en Civilla o al dit en Rafel Codina en Càliz, per seguir l' orde de dit Xifre.

E més avant és pactat y concordat, que lo dit Jaume Codina no s' en dega venir de Sancto Domingo fins se meta devanter tot lo proseyt del present viatge, si donques no y restàs, collqua cossa que fos perduda, só que Déu no vulla, avent emperò tramés hi carregat lo proceyt del dit viatge, aja y sia tingut venir en Civilla y allí dar avís al dit Xifre de tota cossa aurà feta y portada y esperar horde del dit Xifre del que haurà de fer.

E mes havant és pactat y concordat, que lo proceyt que vindrà de dit loch de Sancto Domingo, lo dit Xifre puga fer vendre en Civilla ho Càliz, si li appar fer, per portar así o en Nàpols, o fer vendre part en Civilla ho Càliz y part en Nàpols, o part portar así, ahont millor apparrà, y axi en Civilla, ací o Nàpols vendre ho fer vendre a temps, de comptans com millor li apparrà.

...

E axi u juren hen animes lurs a Nostre Senyor Déu e alls seus quatre Sancts Evangelis corporalment toquats.

E finalment, vollen les dites parts que dells presents capitolls y de les coses en aquells contengudes e de quiscuna de aquelles sien fetes he hordenades a les dites parts e quiscuna de aquelles liurades, tantes cartes com demanades y requestes seran per lo notari devall escrit, ab totes les clàusulles desus hoportunes e nesesàries, ha coneguda del dit notari, substància dell fet principall no mudada.

Testes firmarum dictorum Petrum qui firmarunt dicto die lune .II mensis junii amo predicto a Nativitate Domini M.D.XXXVIIII sunt: Franciscus Perez, mercator, et Franciscus Catarro, parator pannorum lane, cives Barchinone.

The above text comes from Pedro Celitons[85]

In what follows, we present a summary of two extensive works about Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d), by historian Miguel Royano Cabrera in 2015[86], and in 2016[87]. The works are based on Cabrera's Master's thesis[88].

To the reader who is not very familiar with the history of Europe, it is interesting to highlight that Andalucia, and in particular Seville, had been a trading hub for a long time, connecting the Mediterranean with the Atlantic coast and even the north of Europe. Seville's importance rose significantly after the discovery of America. Therefore, many merchants from Catalonia established themselves in Seville to pursue their trading interests, both in the Mediterranean and, during periods of increased competition, along the Atlantic coast and the Americas.

Galcerán Desclergue (DC02d) was born in 1507, between March 16 and June 25[89]. His age and origins can also be deduced from the fact that he had a brother, Pere Desclergue (DC02b), who acted as his factor for debt collection in Veracruz in 1548[90]. The approximate date of his death can be found in the Historical Archive of Protocols of Seville[91]. The presence of Lluis Desclergue (Lluis Desclergue y Cortés (DC04d)) in Cádiz is documented by C. Martínez Shaw[92]. More information is provided by various authors, including I. Armenteros Martínez[93], J. M. Bello León[94], J. M. Madurell Marimón[95], Enrique Otte[96], and in the Archivo General de Indias[97].

Galcerán (DC02d) was likely in Seville for the first time during 1533-1534 and had strong connections with Catalan merchants such as Jaime Planes, Valencian merchants like Jerónimo Padrálvarez, and Burgos merchants such as Alvaro de Briones. Galcerán had known Jaime Planes since he was 17 years old, i.e., since 1524[98]. Planes moved to Seville in 1526[99]. Initially, Galcerán (DC02d) may not have been registered as a resident of Seville but maintained his presence there to facilitate trade. He likely learned his trading skills as an apprentice in Barcelona before moving to Seville. Galcerán (DC02d) likely acted as a representative for Jaime Planes from 1535 onwards, as this was when the latter moved to Santo Domingo[100]. In 1539, Galcerán (DC02d) referred in a written statement to his negotiations with Jaime Planes[101]. Galcerán (DC02d) also visited and invested in Santo Domingo, as indicated by documents from 1536. He even loaned money earned in Santo Domingo to Charles V. He was also involved in the leather trade between Puerto Rico, Seville, and Barcelona[102][103][104].

---

[85] AHFB. Pedro Celitons, leg. 2 'prothoc. sive man' , años 1539-1540; Caja VI, pliego suelto de Compañías.

[86] Miguel Royano Cabrera, 'La comunidad mercantil catalano-valenciana afincada en la Sevilla de la primera mitad del siglo XVI,' pages 121-130, in Máximo García Fernández (Editor), Familia, Cultura Material y Formas de Poder en la España Moderna, Valladolid, July 2-3, 2015, III Encuentro de Jóvenes Investigadores en Historia Moderna (ISBN 978-84-938044-6-6).

[87] Miguel Royano Cabrera, 'La comunidad mercantil de la Corona de Aragón afincada en Sevilla durante el reinado de Carlos I - el caso de Galcerán Desclergue,' in El legado hispánico: manifestaciones culturales y sus protagonistas, Abel Lobato Fernández (ed. lit.), Esperanza de los Reyes Aguilar (ed. lit.), Irene Pereira García (ed. lit.), Cristina García González (ed. lit.), Vol. 1, 2016, ISBN 978-84-9773-769-2, pp. 415-432.

[88] Miguel Royano Cabrera, 'Galcerán Desclergue: Un mercader Catalán en la Sevilla de mediados del siglo XVI y su red de relaciones mercantiles,' Master Thesis in Estudios Históricos Avanzados en Historia Moderna, Universidad de Sevilla, 2015.

[89] Enrique Otte, 'Los comienzos del comercio catalán con América,' p.469, and Archivo General de Indias, Justicia, Legajo 733, nº1, f. propia 58-230; En declaraciones de 25-6-1539 a 7-9-1540.

[90] Historical Archive of Protocols of Seville, Notarial Protocols of Seville, Legajo 9.823, f.342 r. (29-4-1547).

[91] Historical Archive of Protocols of Seville, Notarial Protocols of Seville, File 9.162, f. 83 r. (7-1-1548).

[92] C. Martínez Shaw, 'Cataluña y el comercio con América. El fin de un debate,' Boletín Americanista, nº 30, 1980, p.234.

[93] I. Armenteros Martínez, 'Cataluña en la era de las navegaciones: la participación Catalana en la Primera economía atlántica (c.1470-1540),' Vilassar de Mar, Barcelona, Fundació Ernest Lluch, Lleida, Milenio, 2012, pp. 149-227.

[94] J. M. Bello León, 'La Presencia Catalana en Andalucía Occidental a finales de la Edad Media,' Anuario de Estudios Medievales, nº 40/1, January-June 2010, pp. 115-117.

[95] J. M. Madurell Marimón, 'Notas Sobre el Antiguo comercio de Barcelona con las Islas Canarias y de Santo Domingo,' Anuario de Estudios Atlánticos, nº3, Cabildo Insular de Gran Canaria, Madrid, pp. 569-570.

[96] Enrique Otte, 'Los comienzos del comercio Catalán con América,' pp. 469-480.

[97] Seville, XVI century, pp. 132-311. Archivo General de Indias, Justicia, File 733, nº1, p. 58-230.

[98] Archivo General de Indias, J, Legajo 733, nº1, f. propia 220-231. En declaraciones de 22-11-1539; Archivo General de Indias, J, Legajo 733, nº1, f. propia 256-271. En declaraciones de 22-11-1539 a 28-11-1539.

[99] Enrique Otte, 'Los comienzos del comercio catalán con América,' p. 467.

[100] Enrique Otte, 'Los comienzos del comercio catalán con América,' p.467.

[101] Archivo General de Indias, J, Legajo 733, nº1, f. propia 225-230; 22-11-1539.

When Jaime Planes passed away in 1537, Galcerán Desclergue (DC02d) attained complete independence on May 31 of that year[105]. Even before this, Galcerán had significant economic assets, evidenced by the fact that Planes owed him substantial money for handling merchandise from Seville to Santo Domingo[106][107][108].

Galcerán Desclergue (DC02d) was involved in various trading companies, including Barcelonese companies[109][110], trying to monopolize different trade sections between the Americas and Iberia. He had several trading partners, including Francisco Remón de Llenes from Valencia[111][112][113] and Alvaro de Briones from Seville[114]. The last partner he worked with before his definitive return to Barcelona in 1551 was Jeronimo Fenol from Valencia.

An important set of products that Galcerán (DC02d) traded included cereals, flour, wine, oil, bovine hides, and sardines. Wine and wheat, in particular, were destined for the growing population of Santo Domingo[115][116][117]. Most products sold in Iberia were destined for H.M. the King's armies[118][119] and also for the Crown of Aragon, including the cities of Barcelona, Alicante, Valencia, and Tarragona[120][121][122].

Galcerán Desclergue (DC02d) had an elder brother, Berenguer Desclergue (DC02), our ancestor. The latter had a grandson, Lluis Desclergue y Cortés (DC04d), already mentioned above and shown in Figures 25.31 and 25.32, half-uncle of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05). Luis (DC04d) resided in Cadiz[123] and was also involved in the tradesmanship of his granduncle Galcerán Desclergue (DC02d).

Cabrera also mentions that Galcerán Desclergue (DC02d) was active as a merchant in Malaga and Granada. One of his trades was in Mexican silver, which he transformed in Spain by local silversmiths. He also traded with the Canary Islands. Equally interesting is that Galcerán (DC02d) traded with Extremadura, specifically 'Regenal de la Sierra,' not far from the birthplace of Hernán Cortés de Monroy[124].

In Catalonia's trade, Galcerán (DC02d) received help from his brother Pere Desclergue (DC02b). Galcerán (DC02d) often reinvested his profits in insurance companies and real estate.

Cabrera points out that Galcerán Desclergue (DC02d) was focused on making money and showed a lot of solidarity with people in need. He helped, among others, the daughters of Planes after the latter had died and Felipe Ribas with several loans. In some written statements, Galcerán (DC02d) also warned others to be friendly to some of his close connections. His circle of friends consisted mainly of Catalans, Aragonese, and Valencians. Galcerán (DC02d) considered merchandising in Seville a temporary activity, not his final goal in life. Therefore, in 1551, he returned to his home. Galcerán's inner circle of friends, such as Jaime Planes, Monserrat[125][126], and Felipe Ribas, shared these sentiments and sometimes even planned their burials in Barcelona. In those days, the death often came unexpectedly, and Jaime Planes, Pere Desclergue (DC02b), and Felipe Ribas died before returning to the Crown of Aragon. The connection with Monserrat is not surprising, as we see that Francesc Desclergue y Ratera (DC05e), a son of Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (DC04) and Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio (DC02dx1), married Catalina Tous y Monserrat. This means that she was the sister-in-law of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05). A clarification is shown in Figure 25.30.

Cabrera explains that by age 45, Galcerán (DC02d) had already had a long and very active career, and aging may have contributed to his decision to return to Catalonia. Whether intentional or consequential, his return to the Principality also had beneficial consequences for Catalonia, as he brought wealth back to his home region. His economic connections with the Americas made him a wealthy man with valuable connections. Simultaneously, the trade axis Genoa-Barcelona was re-established. Below, we cite the valuable bibliography collected by Miguel Royano Cabrera in his work mentioned above for referential reasons.

I. Armenteros Martínez, 'Cataluña en la era de las navegaciones: la participación catalana en la primera economía atlántica (c.1470 - 154 0)' , Vilassar de Mar, Barcelona, Fundació Ernest Lluch, Lleida, Milenio, 2012.

J. M. Bello León & M. Del C. Gonzalez Marrero, M. Del C., 'Los otros extranjeros: catalanes, flamencos, franceses e ingleses en la sociedad canaria de los siglos XV y XVI (primera parte)' , en Revista de Historia Canaria , nº180, 1998, pp. 11 - 71.

J. M. Bello León, 'La presencia catalana en Andalucía Occidental a finales de la Edad Media' , Anuario de Estudios Medievales , nº 40/1, enero - junio de 2010, pp. 93 - 127.

J. M. Bello León, R. J. González Zalacain, 'Los catalanes en la documentación notarial de Tenerife (1505 - 1525)' , Estudis històrics i documents dels arxius de protocols , nº29, 2011, pp. 63 - 186 .

M. Cachero Vinuesa, 'Redes mercantiles en los inicios del comercio atlántico. Sevilla entre Europa y América, 1520 - 1525' en Redes y negocios globales en el mundo ibérico, siglos XVI - XVIII , N. Böttcher, B. Hausberger, A. Ibarra (coords.) , Biblioteca Ibero - americana, Publicaciones del instituto Ibero - Americano, Fundación Patrimonio Cultural Prusiano, vol. 137, Iberoamericana vervuert, El colegio de México, 2012, pp. 25 - 50.

---

[102] Archivo General de Indias, Contaduría, Legajo 1.051, Cuentas de Alonso de la Torre.

[103] Enrique Otte, 'Los comienzos del comercio catalán con América,' p.471.

[104] Historical Archive of Protocols of Seville, Notarial Protocols of Seville, Legajo 3.323, f.1092 r.; 2-8-1537

[105] Enrique Otte, 'Los comienzos del comercio catalán con América,' p. 461 and Archivo General de Indias, J, 733, nº1.

[106] Archivo General de Indias, Judicia, Legajo 733, nº1, f. propia 107-115. (en declaración de 18-7-1539)

[107] Historical Archive of Protocols of Seville, Notarial Protocols of Seville, Legajo 9.147, f.1480

[108] Enrique Otte, 'Los comienzos del comercio catalán con América,' p.469. El total ascendía a 377 pesos y medio de oro; 109.092 mrs.

[109] J. M. Madurell Marimón, 'Notas sobre el antiguo comercio de Barcelona con las Islas Canarias y de Santo Domingo,' Anuario de Estudios Atlánticos, nº3, Cabildo Insular de Gran Canaria, Madrid, pp. 569-570.

[110] Historical Archive of Protocols of Seville, Notarial Protocols of Seville, Legajo 3.323, f.1092 r. (2-8-1537).

[111] Inicio de las compañías con Desclergue en Archivo General de Indias, Santo Domingo, Legajo 868, Libro 2, f. 295 (1540)

[112] Enrique Otte, 'Los comienzos del comercio catalán con América,' p.469.

[113] Fallecimiento de Llenes en Historical Archive of Protocols of Seville, Notarial Protocols of Seville, Legajo 9.162, f.906 r.; 28-4-1548)

[114] Enrique Otte, 'Los comienzos del comercio catalán con América,' pp.469-474.

[115] J. M. Madurell Marimón, 'Notas sobre el antiguo comercio de Barcelona con las Islas Canarias y de Santo Domingo,' Anuario de Estudios Atlánticos, nº3, Cabildo Insular de Gran Canaria, Madrid, pp.569-570.

[116] Enrique Otte, 'Los comienzos del comercio catalán con América,' p.477.

[117] Archivo General de Indias, Justicia, Legajo 733, nº1, f. propia 107-115. (en declaración de 18-7-1539)

[118] Enrique Otte, 'Los comienzos del comercio catalán con América,' p.469

[119] Archivo General de Indias, Contratación, Legajo 4948 B. (1542)

[120] J. M. Madurell Marimón, 'Notas sobre el antiguo comercio de Barcelona con las Islas Canarias y de Santo Domingo,' Anuario de Estudios Atlánticos, nº3, Cabildo Insular de Gran Canaria, Madrid, pp.569-570.

[121] Enrique Otte, Seville, siglo XVI, pp.69-311 (Examples from Desclergue, Dalmao Ros, Juan Bonet, etc.)

[122] the cases offered by different Catalan and Valencian merchants such as Dalmao Ros for fish, leather, etc. See M. T. Ferrer i Mallol, 'El comerç català a Andalusia al final del segle XV,' Acta historica et archaeologica mediaevalia, nº18, 1997, pp.306-314.

[123] C. Martínez Shaw, the cited work, p.234.

[124] Historical Archive of Protocols of Seville, Notarial Protocols of Seville, Legajo 10.569, f.421 r. (20-8-1545).

[125] Archivo General de Indias, Justicia, Legajo 733, nº1.

[126] Enrique Otte, 'Los comienzos del comercio catalán con América,' p. 461.

H . Chaunu, P. Chaunu, 'Séville et l´Atlantique (1504 - 1650) , S.E.V.P.E.N. , 12 vol., París, 1955 - 1960.

M. Del Treppo, 'Els mercaders catalans i l´expansió de la Corona catalano - aragonesa al segle XV' , Trad. Jaume Riera i Sans, Documents de Cultura, Curial Edicions Catalanes, Barcelona, 1976.

P. Desportes Bielsa, 'Aragón en el comercio con Flandes (Siglo XVI) ' , Revista de Historia Jerónimo Zurita, nº 74, 1999, pp. 175 - 200.

P. Desportes Bielsa, 'El Consulado ca talán de Brujas (1330 - 1488)' , Aragón en la Edad Media , nº14 - 15, 1, 1999, pp. 375 - 390.

M. Diago Hernando, 'Relaciones comerciales de la Corona de Aragón con la Andalucía Atlántica durante el siglo XIV y primera mitad del XV' , Historia, instituciones, documentos , nº 27, Universidad de Sevilla, 2000, pp. 19 - 54.

J. H. Elliot, 'El Viejo Mundo y el Nuevo' , 1492 - 1650, Alianza, Madrid, 1984.

L. Febvre, 'Combates por la historia' , Ariel, Barcelona, 1982.

M. F. Fernandez Cháves, R. M. Pêrez García, 'Las redes de la trata negrera: Mercaderes portugueses y el tráfico de esclavos en Sevilla (C.1560 - 1580)' , en La esclavitud negroafricana en la historia de España. Siglos XVI y XVII, A. Martín Casares, M. García Barranco (coords.), Comares, Granada, 2010, pp. 5 - 34.

M. T. Ferrer i Mallol, 'El comerç català a And alusia al final del segle XV' , Acta historica et archaeologica mediaevalia , nº 18, 1997, pp. 301 - 334.

R. Franch Benavent, 'El comercio en el mediterráneo es pañol durante la Edad Moderna: Del estudio del tráfico a su vinculación con la realidad pro ductiva y su contexto social' , Obradoiro Historia. Moderna , n º17, 2008, pp.77 - 102.

D. Igual Luis, 'Valencia e Italia en el siglo XV. Rutas, mercados y hombres de negocios en el espacio económico del Mediterráneo Occidental' , Bancaixa i Fundacio Caixa Castello, Castello de la Plana, 1998, pp. 261 - 322.

E. Lorenzo Sanz, 'Comercio de España con América en la época de Felipe II , T.I: Los mercaderes y el tráfico indiano, Diputación Provincial de Valladolid' , Institución Cultural Simancas, Valladolid, 1986

J. M. Madurell Marimó N, 'Notas sobre el antiguo comercio de Barcelona con las Islas Canarias y de Santo Domingo' , Anuario de Estudios Atlánticos , nº3, Cabildo Insular de Gran Canaria, Madrid; Las Palmas, 1957, pp. 563 - 592.

C. Martínez Shaw, 'Cataluña y el comercio con América. El fin de un debate' , Boletín Americanista , nº 30, 1980, pp.223 - 236.

E. Otte, 'Los comienzos del comercio catalán con América' , en Homenaje a Jaime Vicens Vives, J. Maluquer de Motes (ed.) , vol.2, Universidad de Barcelona, Facultad de Filosofía y letras, Barcelona, 1967, pp.459 - 480.

E. Otte, 'Las perlas del Caribe, Nueva Cádiz de Cubagua' , Fundación John Boulton, Caracas, 1977.

E. Otte, 'Los mercaderes transatlánticos bajo Carlos V' , Anuario de Estudios Americanos , nº47, Sevilla, 1990, pp. 96 - 121.

E. Otte, 'Sevilla y sus mercaderes a fines de la Edad Media' , A. M. Bernal, y A. Collantes de Terán eds., Universidad de Sevilla, Vicerrectorado de Relaciones Institucionales y Extensión Cultural [etc.], Sevilla, 1996.

E. Otte, 'Sevilla, siglo XVI: Materiales para su historia económica' , Centro de Estudios Andaluces, Consejería de la Presidencia, Sevilla, 2008.

M. J. Peláez, 'Catalunya després de la guerra civil del segle XV. Institucions, formes de govern i relacions socials i econòmiques (1472 - 1479)' , Curial, Barcelona, 1981.

L. De Peraza, 'Historia de la ciudad de Sevilla' , S. M. Pérez González (ed.) , Área de Cultura del Excmo. Ayuntamiento de Sevilla, Sevilla, vol. 2, 1997.

J. M. Ruiz Povedano, 'El consulado catalán de Málaga en época de los Reyes Católicos' , La Ciudad Hispánica, siglos XIII al XVI , edit. Universidad Complutense, Madrid, 1987, pp. 419 - 444. E. Salvador Esteban, 'En torno al comercio y a la economía valenciana del Quinientos ,' Estudis: Revista de historia moderna, n º 1, 1972, pp.25 - 42.

R. M. Serrera Contreras, 'La América de los Habsburgo (1517 - 1700)' , Universidad de Sevilla, Secretariado de publicaciones, Sevilla, 2013.

V. Vázquez de Prada, 'La colonia mercantil valenciana en Amberes, en la época de Carlos V' en Homenaje a Jaume Vicens Vives , J. Maluquer de Motes (ed.), vol.2, Universidad de Barcelona, Facultad de Filosofía y letras, Barcelona, 1967, pp. 733 - 754.

M. Zambrano Pérez, 'Piratas, piratería y comercio ilícito en el Caribe: la visión del otro' , Historia Caribe , nº12, Universidad del Atlántico, Barranquilla, Colombia, 2007, pp.23 - 56.

Galcerán and Isabel had one child, Jerónimo Desclergue (DC02dy2). Besides his marriage, Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) had two illegitimate children, whom he later legitimized with Ana de Villavicencio, as described in Chapter 25.1.3.2. These children were Luis Desclergue (DC02dy1) and Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio (DC02dx1), who died in 1537.

Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio (DC02dx1), described in Chapter 25.1.3.4, was a daughter of Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) and married her distant cousin Don Bonaventura Desclergues (II) (DC04) y Cortés, our ancestor. The couple had two children: our ancestor Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) y Cortés and Enric Desclergue (DC05c) y Cortés. Jeroni Desclergue (DC02dy2) probably died in 1633 in Barcelona, as indicated below. His descendants established the Rui y Desclergue branch of the family in Vich.

Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) appears as 'Senior Galzeran Desclerga' in the works of Damià Martínez Latorre[127], and Jaume Bassa[128]. A person named 'Galceranus Desclergue' is listed as a doctor medicus Spirae in the year 1570[129]. His son Luis Desclergue (II) (DC02dy1) is referred to as 'Lluís Esclergue' in the work of Carlos Martinez Shaw[130].

Notably, Galcerán Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) assumed the role of father-in-law to Bonaventura Desclergue (II) (DC04) y Cortés, a connection that was forged through the marriage of his daughter Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio (DC02dx1). This intricate web of relationships reveals that both Galcerán and Bonaventura are our ancestors, linked through their grandson Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05). The latter, a fascinating blend of conquistadors, merchants, and notaries, inherited the bloodlines of both his parents.

25.1.3.2 Ana de Villavicencio

Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) was first married to Isabel. He was a citizen of Barcelona, remained for some time in Seville, and, from his relation with Ana de Villavicencio, an unmarried woman, Ana de Villavicencio, he had two children: Luis and Maria Ana, whom he legitimized for the second time in 1551, in the Crown of Aragon, although they had already been legitimized in Andalusia before.[131] [132]

Ana de Villavicencio was the daughter of Catarina Cabeza de Vaca Mejias and Pedro Núñez de Villavicencio. The latter was the son of Alfon de Villavicencio and Ana Sánchez Cortés, who married in Jerez de Badajoz. Ana Sánchez Cortés was the aunt of Cristóbal and Pedro Sánchez Cortés, Alcalde de la Santa Hermandad. She was the daughter of Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy and Ana Sánchez de Badajoz. The latter couple married in 1431, and their ancestry is described in Chapter 27.2. Ana Sánchez de Badajoz was a native of Jerez de Badajoz or Jerez de los Caballeros. She was the daughter of Cristóbal Sánchez de Badajonz, a Knight of Jerez de Badajoz.

---

[127] Damià Martínez Latorre, 'El testament de l'enginyer militar Giovan Battista Calvi (1556),' Locus Amoenus 5, 2000-2001, 195-203.

[128] Jaume Bassa, 'El senyor de Sant Jordi i la fortificació de les Medes,' 2009, Llibre Festa Major, 37.

[129] Reference 673 in 'Le cinquecentine della Biblioteca provinciale Cappuccini di Trento, catalogo di p. Lino Mocatti - Silvana Chiste, A cura di Anna Gonzo, Presentazione di Marielisa Rossi, In aggiunta Le edizioni del secolo XV di M Cristina Bettini,' published by Provincia Autonoma di Trento - Servizio beni librari e archivistici, 1993.

[130] Carlos Martinez Shaw, 'Cataluña y el comercio con América. El fin de un debate.'

[131] Registro 3 995 (1551) Fol. 261, A.C.A., Barcelona.

[132] The literature in the past sometimes referred to Ana de Villavicencio as 'Beatriz de Ojeda,' which is an error. It is caused by misinterpreting a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. Ana de Villavicencio died in 1537 and her children were raised by her aunt Brinda de Villavicencio.

Ana de Villavicencio was named 'Ana' because that was also the name of her Grandmother Ana Sánchez Cortés and her great-grandmother Ana Sánchez de Badajoz. When she was orphaned, she was raised by her maternal aunt and Godmother, Brianda de Villavicencio, who also left her an inheritance.

In fact, Ana de Villavicencio emerged as a luminous figure, embodying the grace and allure of her lineage. Born to the illustrious union of Doña Catarina Cabeza de Vaca Mejía and Pedro Núñez de Villavicencio de Jerez de la Frontera, her ancestry bore the weight of prestige and heritage.

Ana's radiant beauty was renowned far and wide, a testament to the exquisite charm that graced the 'Sánchez de Badajoz' and 'Vega Bazán' lineages, enchanting the hearts of the affluent and noble alike. Among these distinguished suitors, Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d), a merchant of Seville, found himself captivated by Ana's allure.

In the wake of the discovery of the Americas, Seville burgeoned into a colossal financial and commercial epicenter, rivaling even the zenith of New York in its heyday. Gold flowed like a boundless river, luring merchants and adventurers from every corner of the globe to its gates. Along with its bustling ports, the city commanded the crossroads of maritime trade routes to the Atlantic, rendering it an indispensable nexus of commerce.

For Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d), Seville was not merely a city of opportunity but a realm of boundless prosperity. His endeavors as a merchant flourished amidst the burgeoning trade routes, where fortunes were made and lost with each tide. The discovery of the silver route to Castilla and Portugal further solidified Seville's position as the linchpin of international trade.

Within commerce and ambition, Ana and Galceran forged their union, a union steeped in the legacy of their lineage and the promise of a future entwined with the riches of distant shores. Their journey mirrored the grandeur of their era, where love and ambition intertwined amidst the opulence and intrigue of a world in transformation. Moreover, as they embarked on their voyage together, they carried with them the legacy of generations past, navigating the seas of destiny with the steadfastness of those who dared to dream amidst the upheaval of history.

Ana de Villavicencio, just like Maria Ana Cortes de Monroy y Vega Bazan, exposed in Chapter 27.2 and blood-relative of Conquistador Hernán Cortés, described in Chapter 27.20, as our ancestor, is important in understanding an archaeological artifact at the chapel of Deerlijk, as outlined in Chapter 49.4.2.

Her ancestors are shown in Figure 25.36, while her connection with Hernán Cortés de Monroy is shown in Figure 25.35.

As shown in Chapter 33.3.3, Captain Don Lorenzo Villavicencio, an infantry sergeant major in the Spanish tercio of Maestro de Campo Don Juan de Meneses, attested in Ostend on October 29, 1604, the qualities of Enric Desclergue (DC05c) as military. Both were distant cousins.

Military Manuel de Vega Cabeza de Vaca was related to Ana de Villavicencio's mother, Catarina Cabeza de Vaca Mejias. He fought with our forefather, Jeroni Desclergue (DC05), in Bergen op Zoom in 1588, as described in Chapter 29.5.5. Furthermore, from Santiago, Manuel de Vega Cabeza de Vaca certified in Brussels on January 20, 1598 the qualities of Jeroni Desclergue (my forefather) as a military, as explained in Chapter 29.5.25 and shown in Figures 29.93 on page 413, and 29.94 on page 414.

25.1.3.3 Jerónimo Desclergue (DC02dy2), the son of Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) a servitor of the Marquis of Aytona

This Jerónimo Desclergue (DC02dy2), son of Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) must not be confused with Galceran's grandson (through his daughter Maria Anna Desclergue who married Bonaventura Desclergue (II) (DC04) y Cortés) Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) y Cortés. Confusion, however, is found here and there in the literature. Nevertheless, he must have been the godfather of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05).

From his will, extended on November 11, 1633, we know that he had served for twenty-four years to the Marquis of Aytona. He died confident that the Marquis would make a dignified burial and pay him masses for his soul, thanks to the wages he owed him. He arranged his tomb in the cathedral's cloister, in Barcelona, in front of the chapel of S. Blay, where his parents' grave was located[133].

A daughter of Jerónimo Desclergue (DC02dy2), Cecilia (DC02dy2x1) married a certain Riu, and a son of this union was José Riu y Desclergue (DC02dy2x1y1), a bourgeois of Perpignan, who was constituted as heir, as the grandson, of Jerónimo Desclergue (DC02dy2). Figure 25.34 shows how he is connected to Antoni Desclergue (DC06), our ancestor, to illustrate his position in our ancestry. José Riu y Desclergue (DC02dy2x1y1) was captain of the infantry in Roussillon from 1637 to 1640. It is in this period that he may have met his distant cousin Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06) (our ancestor in Belgium) when the latter went to Spain, as described in Chapter 34.5.11. In 1652, for loyalty, he moved with his family to Vich, where he confiscated a property[134]. In 1654, he applied for the privilege of nobility. The Council's information on his request is preserved. At the end of the year, he was granted a military privilege[135].

The cited documents refer to José Montalt Riu y Desclergue (DC02dy2x1y1), and he is the grandson of Jerónimo Desclergue (DC02dy2). Figure 25.37 on page 290 shows the descendants of Galceran Desclergue (I=II) and Isabel Simón and the link with José Montalt Riu y Desclergue (DC02dy2x1y1).

We should, in this framework, also mention the appearance of a nun, called Cecilia Desclergue, appearing in 'La lista dels confrares que ingressen l' any 1587' [136]. It is not known if she was related. The Monestir de Vallbona de les Monges is located 30 km from Montblanc and approximately 100 km from Barcelona and Manresa. As mentioned, Jerónimo Desclergue (DC02dy2) had a daughter Cecilia Desclergue (DC02dy2x1), who married Joan Riu u Ardit ('Burges Honrat de Perpignan') around 1600, perhaps the mentioned nun is the same person or at least a relative.

A son of Jerónimo Desclergue (DC02dy2), was, according to Francisco J. Morales Roca[137], Gerónimo Desclergue y de Amat (DC02dy2y1), Caballero, and was authorized by the Brazo Militar in the Corts of the Principality of Catalonia in 1626.

---

[133] Third Book of Testaments (1610-1634) of the notary Antonio Estalella. Folio. 181 v. Historical Archive of Protocols of Barcelona. Real had the text thanks to the search and transcription made by Amadeo J. Soberanas Lleó.

[134] Consejo de Aragón. (1654) Legajo 307. A.C.A. Barcelona.

[135] Consejo de Aragón (1654) Cámara. Vol. 69, fol. 134 v. A.C.A. Barcelona.

[136] 'La lista dels confrares que ingressen l' any 1587' , on page 239 of section 'Noms de monges i servidors delmonestir de Vallbona ,' published by Josep-Joan Piquer i Jover, in Analecta sacra Tarraconension, Vol XLVII of the year MCMLXXIV (1974).

[137] Francisco J. Morales Roca, 'Próceres habilitados en las Cortés del Principado de Cataluña, siglo XVII: 1599-1713, Volume 2' , Ediciones Hidalguia, 1983

Another son of Jerónimo Desclergue (DC02dy2) was Luis Desclergue y de Amat (DC02dy2y2), a Knight, and, according to Francisco J. Morales Roca[138], authorized by the Brazo Militar in the Corts of the Principality of Catalonia in 1599. Luis Desclergue y de Amat (DC02dy1) on February 16, 1581, was recognized by the judge of Montblanc who, through Joan de Valls, had given him a pedrenyal[139].

Further appearances of Montalt in Perpignan and in their original city of Barcelona are shown in Figure 25.38 on page 290, Figure 25.39 on page 290, and Figure 25.40 on page 290.

Concerning Gerónimo Desclergue y de Amat (DC02dy2y1), an interesting reference is found in Figure 26.6 on page 293. The reference, originating from 17th-century records of the Ordinary Municipal Council of Cervera, delves into a legal case involving the alleged production of counterfeit coins and other criminal activities. The narrative unfolds within a context where local authorities are tasked with adjudicating the case of Pere Mas, also known as 'cap pelat' (translated as 'bald head'), accused of manufacturing fake Agramunt coins. The story presents the legal proceedings and highlights the intricate dynamics between different municipalities and their respective councils. One prominent figure in this narrative is Gerónimo Desclergue y de Amat (DC02dy2y1) ('Hyerónim dez Clergue'), who holds the title of veter y balle, denoting a position of authority within the local governance structure. As a member of the Ordinary Municipal Council of Cervera, Gerónimo Desclergue y de Amat (DC02dy2y1) plays a pivotal role in the decision-making process concerning the fate of Pere Mas. His presence in the council chamber signifies his significance in the municipal hierarchy and involvement in crucial matters of justice and governance. In the events unfolding, Gerónimo Desclergue y de Amat (DC02dy2y1) and other council members are presented with evidence implicating Pere Mas in producing counterfeit currency. The text describes how the Council deliberates on the appropriate course of action, ultimately handing over Pere Mas to the authorities of Agramunt for trial.

Gerónimo Desclergue y de Amat's (DC02dy2y1) presence in this decision-making process underscores his responsibility to uphold justice and ensure the smooth functioning of legal proceedings within the municipality.

25.1.3.4 Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio (DC02dx1), our ancestor and the daughter of Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d)

Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio (DC02dx1) and Luis Desclergue y Villavicencio (II) (DC02dy1) were children of Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d), described in25.1.3.1 and Ana de Villavicencio, described in Chapter 25.1.3.2. [140]

Central to our narrative, as detailed in Chapter 28.4, is Maria Anna's union with Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04), our esteemed forefather. This union bore fruit in the form of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), our paternal ancestor, and Enric Desclergue y Cortés (DC05c). The fact that she adopted the Desclergue name for the remainder of her life and married her cousin Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04) would have been highly improbable had she been an illegitimate child.

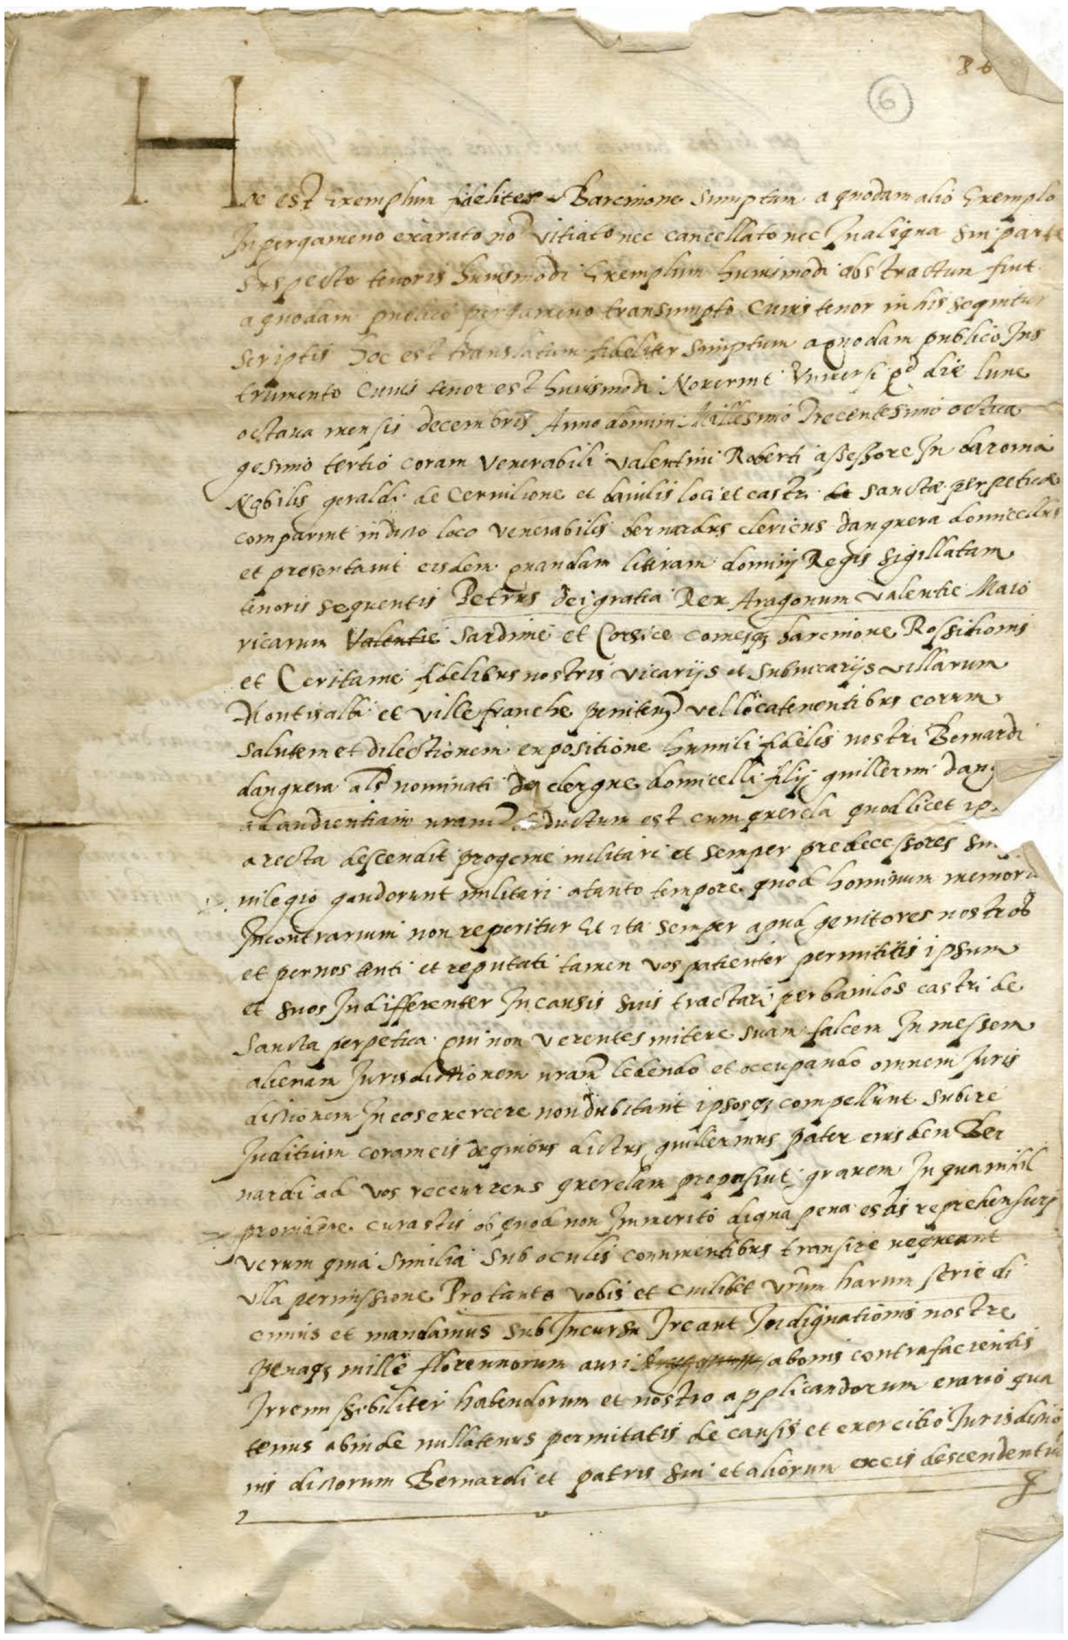
Galceran legitimized Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio to avoid inheritance issues in the Crown of Aragon because she was born and raised by her aunt in Andalusia, not Catalonia. There are indications that Galceran Desclergue also had other bastard children that he did not legitimize.

---

[138] Francisco J. Morales Roca, 'Próceres habilitados en las Cortés del Principado de Cataluña, siglo XVII: 1599-1713, Volume 2' , Ediciones Hidalguia, 1983.

[139] Arxiu Històric de Tarragona, Fons notarial de Montblanc, reg. 3508, s/p.

[140] In the literature, the mother of Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio is sometimes erroneously referred to as 'Beatriz de Ojeda,' while she was, in reality, Ana de Villavicencio. It also means that Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio is sometimes erroneously referred to as 'Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda.' It is because a 'Beatriz de Ojeda' is mentioned in the notarial document of 1551, but she was not the mother. Gonzalo Miguel Ojeda describes the Ojeda family de Ojeda in : Gonzalo Miguel Ojeda, 'El hidalgo Alonso de Ojeda,' Boletín americanista, 1959, 2, pp. 83-91. The notarial document of 1551 is found in Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. Sanchez Real first investigated A.C.A. Barcelona, and others later copied his misinterpretation in the first edition of his book and earlier papers, including this author. De Ojeda or Hojeda's family was not noble. Therefore, it is hardly possible any Desclergue would have married one or had a relationship with one.



Hoc est exemplum fideliter Barcinone sumptum a quodam alio exemplo
in pergameno exarato non viciato nec cancellato nec in aliqua sui parte
suspecto tenoris huiusmodi Exemplum huiusmodi abstractum fuit
a quodam publico pergameno transumpto cuius tenor in his sequitur
scriptis Hoc est translatum fideliter sumptum a quodam publico ins
trumento cuius tenor est huiusmodi Noverint universi quod die lune
octava mensis decembris Anno domini Millesimo trecentesimo octua
gesimo tertio coram venerabili Valentini Roberti assessore in baronia
Nobilis geraldi de Cervilione et baiuli loci et castri de sancta perpetua comparuit in dicto loco venerabilis Bernardus clericus danguera domicellus et presentavit eidem quandam literam domini Regis sigillatam
tenoris sequentis Petrus dei gratia Rex Aragonum Valentie Maio
ricarum ~~Valentie~~ Sardinie et Corsice comesque Barcinone Rossilionis et Ceritanie fidelibus nostris vicarijs et subvicarijs villarum
Montisalbi et ville franche penitensis vel locatenentibus eorum
Salutem et dilectionem Expositione humili fidelis nostri Bernardi danguera alias nominati des clergue domicelli filij guillermi dang
ad audientiam nostram deductum est cum querela quod licet ip a recta descendit progenie militari et semper predecessores sui milegio gaudverunt militari a tanto tempore quod hominum memoria
in contrarium non reperitur et ita semper apud genitores nostros et per nos habiti et reputati tamen vos patienter permittitis ipsum et suos indifferenter in causis suis tractari per baiulos castri de Sancta perpetua qui non verentes mittere suam falcem in messem
alienam jurisdictionem nostram ledendo et occupando omnem juris
dictionem in eos exercere non dubitant ipsosque compellunt subire
judicium coram eis de quibus dictus guillermus pater eius dicti Ber
nardi ad vos recurrens querelam proposuit gravem in qua nihil providere curastis ob quod non immerito digna pena estis reprehensurj
verum quia similia sub oculis conniventibus transire nequeant
ulla permissione Pro tanto vobis et cuilibet vestrum harum serie di cimus et mandamus sub incursu ire et indignationis nostre
penaque mille florenorum auri ~~[illegible]~~ a bonis contrafacientis
irremissibiliter habendorum et nostro applicandorum erario qua tenus abinde nullatenus permitatis de causis et exercitio jurisdictio
nis dictorum Bernardi et patris sui et aliorum ex eis descendentium

Figure 25.3: This is a fragment of '1494 una lletra de Pere III sobre els fets d' armes dels Desclergue' (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 6 page 1; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

per dictos baiulos nec alios officiales intromittere neque in eos et bona eorum aliquam exercere jurisdictionem nisi tantum per vos et officiales nostros quibus pertinet ex speciali regalia et prerogativa diadematis nostri. Immo omnia in contrarium at-temptata per quospiam officiales et alios illico revocent et ad
pristinum statum reducant et ea nomine nostro reducere et revo-
care faciatis quoniam nos totum id et quidquid in contrarium
fuerit attemptatum irritum et inane ac nullius efficacie seu
valoris cum nullitatis decreto decernimus ipsosque officiales et baiulos de Sancta Perpetua et alios etiam expresse inhibentes quod
abinde de personis et bonis dicti domicelli nullatenus se intromitant alias contra eos tanquam occupatores et perturbatores regie iu-risdictionis viriliter procedatis et eam teneatis taliter quod a sentiat condignam disciplinam. Dat. in Montesono quinta die octobris anno domini millesimo trecentesimo octuagesimo tertio. [illegible] canc.
et cum fuerit presentata dictis venerabilis Bernardus de Anguera dicto de Zclergue dixit que ja la havie presentada al vegue-r e regent que ara [illegible] feta charta et respondit dictus [illegible] que ell rebia asso ab gran reverentia offerint se fer lo manament del Rey et dicti baiuli dixerunt que sino per les quisties no l'han agenzat pero que de asi havant faran al veguer [illegible] es
Sunt testes Berengarius Oller et Berengarius Vedell de Sancta
Perpetua die et anno predictis in dicto loco. Sig+num mei G.
Francs rectoris ecclesie Sancte Perpetue et notarij publici cuius tem qui hec scribi feci et claus die et anno predictis Sig+num Petri Franquesa auctoritate Regia notarij publici per totam terram et dominationem Excellentissimi Principis domini Castelle et Ara-gonum Regis testis Sig+num Stephani Solenelles habitatoris ville
Agualate Regia auctoritate notarij publici testis Sig+num Petri
Pauli Solanelles habitatoris ville Agualate auctoritate Ill.mi domini Regis Aragonum notarij publici per totam eius terram et dominationem qui hoc translatum a bonis originali fideliter sumptum
et cum eodem veridice comprobatum testificatumque ut supra patet
scribi fecit instante et requirente venerabili et discreto Raymundo Berengario Desclergue notario ville Sancte Columbe de
2

Figure 25.4: This is a fragment of '1494 una lletra de Pere III sobre els fets d' armes dels Desclergue' (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 6 page 2; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

87.

Geraldo clausit cum suprapposito in linea sexta ubi legitur vos
Sig—num mei francisci de Angularia ville Montisalbi habita
toris Regia auctoritate notarij publici per totam terram et do
minationem preexcellentissimi Aragonum Castelle Regis testis
Sig—num Jacobi Alays auctoritate Regia notarij publici per to tam terram et dominationem serenissimi et invictissimi domi ni Castelle et Aragonum Regis testis Sig—num ~~[illegible]~~ Bartholomei
Coloma vicini et [illegible] ville Montisalbi Regia auctoritate
notarij publici per omnem terram et dominationem serenissimi domini
Regis qui hoc translatum sive exemplum ab alio transumpto sive
exemplo superius descripto fideliter sumptum et cum eodem
ut convenit comprobatum convenientibus dictis testibus et per alium scriptum de mei voluntate ad requisitionem venera
bilis petri de clerico et galcerandi desclerico fratrum ville
predicte Montisalbi clausi die septima mensis Augusti Anno a nat.
domini Millesimo quadringentesimo nonagesimo quarto

Sig—num Antonij [illegible] auctoritate regia not. pub.ci [illegible] testis

Sig—num Mathei Carbonell [illegible] auctoritate not. pub.ci [illegible] testis

Sig—num meum Petri [illegible] auctoritate regia not. publica Barcinone qui hoc exemplum a dicto eius originali fideliter sumptum et cum eodem adverbum veraciter comprobatum testificatumque ut supra pater scribi feci et clausi rogatus vicesima quinta mensis May anno domini Millesimo quingentesimo septuagesimo sexto

Figure 25.5: This is a fragment of '1494 una lletra de Pere III sobre els fets d' armes dels Desclergue' (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 6 page 3; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

N. Clergue or des Clergue
Francesc Clergue or des Clergue
Birth
Albi, Toulouse, France
Raymond Desclergue
Birth
Albi, Toulouse, France
Juror of the Council of Mallorca.
Guillem Borrell
Birth
Girona, España
Guillem Borrell stemmed from the House of the Counts of Barcelona.
Francesc Desclergue
Birth
Girona, España
He was born in Girona or in Mallorca. Juror of the Council of Mallorca.
N. Borrell
Birth
Barcelona, España
Guillermo Desclergue
Birth
Mallorca, Spain
He was a Knights Templar and was arrested in 1308, after which he was exiled to Aragon.
Pere Desclergue
Birth
Mallorca, Spain
He appears in the Minutes of a session of the General Council of Tàrrega, near Barcelona and Santa Colom de Queralt, in which it is decided how to finance the work on the walls, on April 27, 1369.
Guillem D'Anguera
Military.
N. Desclergue
Birth
Mallorca, Spain
Death
Barcelona, España
Likely she was born in Mallorca or in the area Barcelona-Santa Coloma de Queralt-Tàrrega
Bernat D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He resided at Çavit in Barcelona in 1358. There is reference to him in the year 1383 in a notary document of 1494 and also to his father Guillem. He was once a military, located in Montblanc. In 1421, he was a merchant in Cervera.
N. D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
From Barcelona.
N. Clergue or des Clergue
Francesc Clergue or des Clergue
Birth
Albi, Toulouse, France
Raymond Desclergue
Birth
Albi, Toulouse, France
Juror of the Council of Mallorca.
Guillem Borrell
Birth
Girona, España
Guillem Borrell stemmed from the House of the Counts of Barcelona.
Francesc Desclergue
Birth
Girona, España
He was born in Girona or in Mallorca. Juror of the Council of Mallorca.
N. Borrell
Birth
Barcelona, España
Guillermo Desclergue
Birth
Mallorca, Spain
He was a Knights Templar and was arrested in 1308, after which he was exiled to Aragon.
Pere Desclergue
Birth
Mallorca, Spain
He appears in the Minutes of a session of the General Council of Tàrrega, near Barcelona and Santa Colom de Queralt, in which it is decided how to finance the work on the walls, on April 27, 1369.
Gerónimo Desclergue
Birth
Mallorca
Death
Santa Perpetua de Moguda, Barcelona, Spain
In 1358, he resided in Bellmunt, near Montserat and Girona.
By the year 1391, Gerónimo Desclergue, a native of Mallorca, was a resident of Santa Perpetua de Moguda, near Barcelona.
Ramon Desclergue
Birth
Death
Barcelona, España
Francesc Desclergue
He was notary of Barcelona, who played a role for the Bank of Barcelona on march 28, 1443.
Berenguer Desclergue
He was a scriptor in Santa Coloma de Queralt in 1417.
He was a man of the law and in 1439 he held the position of local deputy of Montblanc and its ward, which he resigned on January 26, 1440.
He must have been well connected with the courtly circles, since, on October 5, 1451 and from Tudela, the infant Joan, Duke of Montblanc, appointed him general curator of the Duchy of Montblanc.
He was a notary at Santa Coloma de Queralt from 1467 until 1483, together with his son, Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, who was a notary at the same location from 1471 until 1477.
Clementa Desclergue

Figure 25.6: The ancestry of Clementa Desclergue. Her sons were the heirs of her brother, Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, a notary. Hence, they took the family name Desclergue rather than Torró y Desclergue. The eldest known patrilineal ancestor of Clementa Desclergue is Raymond Desclergue. His descendants, until Clementa and including Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, are shown in Figure 18.6 on page 132.

Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.

Eleonor Torró y Miquel
She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.

Antich Desclergue (I)
(DC02c)

Joan Berenguer Desclergue
Death after 1503
(DC02) He appears in the fogatge of Montblanc in 1515.

N. Prunera y Ferrer
Birth
Tàrrega, España

Pere Torró i Hostalric (I)
(DC02b) He is also known as Pere Desclergue and as Pere Desclergue y Torró

N. N.

Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Birth 1507
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Marriage
Isabel Simón
Valencia
(DC02d) Some literature assumes there was a Galceran I and a Galceran II, father and son, while, in fact, it was one and the same person who was active for many years.

Isabel Simón
Marriage
Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Valencia

Ana de Villavicencio
Birth
Jerez de la Frontera, España
Death 1537

Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death after 1579
Montblanc, España
(DC03)

Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortès. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.

Elisabeth Monseny

Francesc Desclergue
(DC03b) He was a notary in Barcelona from 1536 until 1544.

Pere Joan Desclergue
(DC03c)

Pere Galceran Torró
(DC02by) He was a Knight and born in Balaguer. He was a doctor in laws and participated in the Corts of 1599.

N. Desclergue

Jerónimo Galceran Torró y Desclergue
(DC02dy2). In 1630, he appears in a document erroneously as Galceran Tono i Desclergue, in a payment he had to receive from his cousin Francesc Desclergue.

N. de Amat

Felipe Desclergue
(DC02dy3)

Luis Desclergue (II)
(DC02dy1)

Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.

Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death
Montblanc, España
(DC04)

Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death
Montblanc, España
(DC04)

Elisabeth Anna de Ratera

Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.

Luis Desclergue y Cortés (I)
(DC04d)

Maurice Desclergue y Cortés
(DC04e)

Bonaventura Torró y Desclergue
(DC04c)

Francesc Torró y Desclergue (I)
(DC04b). He was a doctor in canon law (obtained the degree in Rome in 1586) and was an abbot and signed as altissima F. Torró in 1576 in a document for his half-brother Bonaventura Desclergue. He also appears as Francesc Desclergue y Monsteny in modern articles because his father was Desclergue and his mother Montseny.

N. Desclergue

Antich Desclergue
(DC03cy1)

Pere Desclergue
(DC03cy2)

Francesc Torró y Desclergue (II)
(DC02byy) He was a Knight and attended the Corts of 1626.

Cecilia Desclergue y de Amat
(DC02dy2x)

N. Montalt y Riu

Géronimo Desclergue y de Amat
(DC02dy2y1)

Luis Desclergue y de Amat (III)
(DC02dy2y2)

Enric Desclergue y Cortés
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death 1631
Wingene, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05c)

Anna Pacheco

Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Birth 1566
Montblanc, España
Marriage
Felipa de Montoya
Montblanc, España
Death 1604 (38y)
Oostende, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05). He also appears as Joan Jeroni, Jeroni and Joan

Felipa de Montoya
Marriage 1611
Jan T. Declercq
Marriage
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Montblanc, España
Death 1628
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
She appears as Felipa, Philippa, Phillippe, Phlypothe , while her family name in her case and that of her relatives appears as Montoya, Montoye, Montoie, Montoi, Du Toi, Du Thoy, Thoy, Toi, de Thoo, ...

Figure 25.7: Three descending generations of Don Pere de Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01)

Bertrand III du Guesclin
Birth 1200 Brétagne, France
Death 1260 (60y)
(DG07)
Mahaut de Dol
Robert de Broons
Birth 1210 Broons, Bretagne, France
He is also known as Robert Guillaume de Broons, was the Lord of Broons, a crusader who joined Saint Louis on the seventh crusade.
Orphaise de Dol
Bertrand IV du Guesclin
Birth Brétagne, France
(DG08)
Jeanne de Broons
Guillaume du Guesclin
Birth Brétagne, France
(DG09)
Julienne de Beaumont de Guitte
Robert II du Guesclin
Birth 1300 Brétagne, France
Marriage 1319 (19y) Jeanne de Malemains
(DG10)
Jeanne de Malemains
Marriage 1319 Robert II du Guesclin
N. Torró
Bertrand du Guesclin
Birth 1320 Dinan, Brétagne, France
Death 1380 (60y) Chateauneuf-de-Randon, Languedoc-Roussillon, France
Beltràn Claquin (DG11).
N. Torró
Dame de Soria
Raymond Desclergue
Birth Albi, Toulouse, France
Juror of the Council of Mallorca.
Guillem Borrell
Birth Girona, España
Guillem Borrell stemmed from the House of the Counts of Barcelona.
Raymond Desclergue
Birth Albi, Toulouse, France
Juror of the Council of Mallorca.
Guillem Borrell
Birth Girona, España
Guillem Borrell stemmed from the House of the Counts of Barcelona.
Francesc Desclergue
Birth Girona, España
He was born in Girona or in Mallorca. Juror of the Council of Mallorca.
N. Borrell
Birth Barcelona, España
Francesc Desclergue
Birth Girona, España
He was born in Girona or in Mallorca. Juror of the Council of Mallorca.
N. Borrell
Birth Barcelona, España
Guillermo Desclergue
Birth Mallorca, Spain
He was a Knights Templar and was arrested in 1308, after which he was exiled to Aragon.
Guillermo Desclergue
Birth Mallorca, Spain
He was a Knights Templar and was arrested in 1308, after which he was exiled to Aragon.
Pere Desclergue
Birth Mallorca, Spain
He appears in the Minutes of a session of the General Council of Tàrrega, near Barcelona and Santa Colom de Queralt, in which it is decided how to finance the work on the walls, on April 27, 1369.
Pere Desclergue
Birth Mallorca, Spain
He appears in the Minutes of a session of the General Council of Tàrrega, near Barcelona and Santa Colom de Queralt, in which it is decided how to finance the work on the walls, on April 27, 1369.
Guillem D'Anguera
Military.
N. Desclergue
Birth Mallorca, Spain
Death Barcelona, España
Likely she was born in Mallorca or in the area Barcelona-Santa Coloma de Queralt-Tàrrega
Gerónimo Desclergue
Birth Mallorca
Death Santa Perpetua de Moguda, Barcelona, Spain
In 1358, he resided in Bellmunt, near Montserat and Girona.
By the year 1391, Gerónimo Desclergue, a native of Mallorca, was a resident of Santa Perpetua de Moguda, near Barcelona.
Beltrán Torró
Birth around 1358
(DT01).
Ramon Desclergue
Birth
Death Barcelona, España
Galceran Torró
(DT02)
Antoni Miquel
notary
Bernat D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He resided at Çavit in Barcelona in 1358. There is reference to him in the year 1383 in a notary document of 1494 and also to his father Guillem. He was once a miltary, located in Montblanc. In 1421, he was a merchant in Cervera.
Pere Torró
(DT03) He was a notary
Eulalia Miquel
Francesc Desclergue
He was notary of Barcelona, who played a role for the Bank of Barcelona on march 28, 1443.
N. D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
From Barcelona.
Berenguer Desclergue
He was a scriptor in Santa Coloma de Queralt in 1417.
He was a man of the law and in 1439 he held the position of local deputy of Montblanc and its ward, which he resigned on January 26, 1440.
He must have been well connected with the courtly circles, since, on October 5, 1451 and from Tudela, the infant Joan, Duke of Montblanc, appointed him general curator of the Duchy of Montblanc.
He was a notary at Santa Coloma de Queralt from 1467 until 1483, together with his son, Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, who was a notary at the same location from 1471 until 1477.
Francesc Torró y Miquel
Death 1494
(DT04) Royal Secretary
Clementa Desclergue
Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth Montblanc, España
(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.

Figure 25.8: Ascending generations of Don Pere de Torró y Desclergue (I) (DC01)

Figure 25.9: Montblanc, Calle mayor (around 1900, 🅮)

Figure 25.10: A painting depicting the Spanish fury of Antwerp in 1576. The scene may be an exaggeration of the events because the painter and his intentions are unknown. (around 1585, 🅮)

Altissima F

torro

Figure 25.11: In the first edition of this book, the author made a mistake by interpreting this handwritten note as 'altissima es torro.' In reality, it is 'Altissima F. Torró,' the signature of Fransesc Torró y Desclergue. It can be found in Figure 25.13 on page 278. It was, however, this text that, in 2023, with the help of Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal, led to the completed genealogy of the Desclergues. A similar indication of de Torró is found in Figure 25.1 on page 258. F. Torró is described in Chapter 27.21.1

Nouerint vniuersi q Anno a nat domini Millesimo quingete
.simo septuagesimo sexto die vero decima quarta mensis aprilis
Intitulata coram magnifico Joanne Roig et de castelleni domicello vicario ville et vicarie Montisalbi pro sacra catholica et Regia magestate Intus Curiam diste vicarie personaliter reperto et ereis tenté comparuit magnificus bonauetura desclergue In dicta villa Montisalbi domiciliatus qui eide magnifico domino vicario ob tulit et presentauit quandam In scriptis papiri supplicatione et In terrogatoria tenoris sequentis

Molt magnifich senor veguer

Bonauetura desclergue dela pnt vila de Monblanch per que en al gun temps nos puque Ignorar ser ell persona generosa y de genere mi litar y altrament per certs fins y effectes te necessitat que certs testi monis ad futura rei memoriam et als sobre los Interrogatoris deuall scrits sien Interrogats y axi supplique a vra merce los testimonis per ell exhibidors sien Interrogats sobre los Interrogatoris seguents

Et primo pose que dit bonauetura desclergue es fill legittim y natural de mosse bonauetura desclergue de dita vila y com a fill legittim y na tural de aquell tengut tractat y reputat y es ver

Pose que dit bonauetura desclergue pare de aquest bonauetura descler gue ere fill legittim y natural de mosse Joan berenguer desclergue de dita villa y com a fill legittim y natural de aquell es estat tostep tengut agut y reputat y es ver

Pose que dit Joan berenguer desclergue y micer galcera desclergue ger mans eren tots fills legittims y naturals de mosse pere desclergue de dit vila y com a germans y fills legittims y naturals dedit mosse pere descle gue heren tenguts haguts y reputats y es ver

Pose que dit micer galcera desclergue germa dedit Joan berenguer des clergue entre altres fills legittims y naturals seus tingue a mosse galse desclergue quondam y com ha fill legittim y natural de aquell tengut y reputat y es ver

Pose que a sinch dies del mes de octubre del any mil tres tres cents vuytanta tres bernat desclergue obtingue vna possessio del seremissimo Rey don pedro ab la qual
manaue als veguers dela vilas de Monblanch y de vilafranca de panedes no permetesse dela persona y bens dedit bernat desclergue ni de son fill ni altre de sos descendents ningu balle ni altre qualseuol offisial de baro conegues dells com fosse de genere militar detant temps que noy agues memo ria de homens en contrari y es ver

Pose que a de nou dies del mes de setebre del any dela nativi tat de nre senor deu Jesu christ mil sinch cents trenta y nou la Sacra cesarea Catholica y Real magestat de don Carlos primer emperador de Romans Rey y senor nre de gloriosa memoria en ~~[illegible]~~ y conforme ala predita provisio per dit seremissimo Rey don pedro concedida a supplicatio dedit galsera desclergue fill dedit micer galsera desclergue
y net de dit pere desclergue besauy de aquest bonauentura desclergue supplicant declara dit descler gue y tota sa progenia axi nada com naxedora esser ge nerosa y de genere militar y li confirma les armes y Insignies que ja dits desclergues solien fer y encara de nou a Justa en aquelles com mes llargamet ab la carta de dita declaratio de generosidad se conte y es ver

Pose que dit bonauentura desclergue supplicant besnet dedit pere desclergue avi de dit galsera desclergue a succehit y com a besnet legittim y natural per dreta linea de aquell per avuy te y possehexi algunes dels bens ere de dit pere desclergue y en la sepultura ha hon lo cors dedit pere desclergue la qual es en la s glesia del monestir de sant francesch dela pnt vila esta sepul tat ha fet ell dit desclergue sepultar los cossos de son pare y fills li son morts y es ver

Figure 25.12: A handwritten text with notary seal '1576 Mérits del llinatge Desclergue' (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 5 page 2 view 2, and page 3 view 1; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family.

Losquals Interrogatoris donex exhibeix dit bonauetura desclergue demanat y supplicant ser aquells admesos per vra merce y los testimonis per sa part exhibidors y nomenadors ser manats citar y sobre dits Interrogatoris Interrogar y examinar y copia deles depositions daxy lliu rar que licet ef

Altissima F

torro

Et dictus magnificus dominus vicarius de consilio magnifici petri Janer vtriusque Juris doctoris assidentis sui fecit provisio nem sequentem

oblata die decima quarta mensis Appellis anno a nat dni Millesimo quingetesimo septuagesimo sexto ad missis dictis supplicatione et Interrogatoriis capitulis dominus viccarius obtulit separatim testes ministrandos recipi eorumque depositio num copiam tradere comittendo eorum examinationem et Juramenti receptionem scribe Curie

Vigore cuiusquidem provisionis processum per me Josephu Joan Regia auctoritate notarium publicum ac curie predicte scribam ad dictos testes examinandos et recipiendos In hunc qui sequitur modum

Die decima quarta mensis aprilis anno a nat dni domini Mille simo quingetesimo septuagesimo sexto

Discretus petrus bellisse notarius ville Montisalbi testis qui Jurauit ad dominum deum et eius Sancta quatuor Euangelia
In manu et posse mei dicti et Infra notarii dicere et deponere omne quam sciat veritate In et super quibus fuerit Interrogat

Et primo fuit Interrogatus ipse testis sup primo ex dictis In terrogatoriis perpsum met testem lecto Et dixit contentu In dicto Interrogatorio fore vera y asso diu saber ell testimoni per quant ha conegutt lo pare y mare dedit bonauetura desclergue en dit article nomenat y lo dit son pare sedeye bonauetura desclergue y la mare Catharina desclergue

y sempre ha vist que lo dit bonauetura desclergue es estat tingut per fill legittim y natural dels predits Conuges descler gues y per tal lo ha tingut y te y repute ell testimoni

Super secundo Interrogatorio per ipsum met testem lecto
Interrogatus Et dixit contenta In dicto articulo fore vera per quant ell testimoni ha conegut lo pare y mare de dit bonauetura desclergue lo qual sedeye Joan berenguer desclergue y la muller de aquell ere dela vila de tarrega ques deye Prunera y veu y a vist que lo dit bonauetura desclergue en dit Interrogatori nomenat ere fill legittim
y natural dels dit Joan berenguer desclergue y + prunera muller sua y per tal lo tenia y te y repute ell testi moni

Super tertio Interrogatorio perpsum met testem lecto In terrogatus et dixit contenta in dicto articulo fore vera y asso diu saber per quant ell testimoni te o va per los vuytanta anys y ha conegut lo dit pere desclergue en dit Interrogatori nomenat y tambe ha conegut ell tes timoni lo dit Joan berenguer desclergue comte dit y ha micer galcera desclergue que estaue a barcelona ger mans fills del dit pere desclergue legittims y naturals y per tals tenguts y reputats y ell testimoni los te y repute per tals al qual pere desclergue ha conegut que tenie altros dos fills legittims y naturals los quals sedeyen la hu francesch y laltre hieronim

Super quarto Interrogatorio per dictum met testem lecto
Interrogatus Et dixit contenta In dicto articulo fore vera y asso diu saber per quant com dit te ell testimoni los ha coneguts molt be als tots en dit Interrogatori mentio nats y lo dit mosse galsera desclergue fill legittim y natu ral dedit micer galsera desclergue y per fill legittim y natu ral de aquell lo ha tingut y reputat y te y repute ell testimoni

Figure 25.13: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 5 page 3 view 2, and document 5 page 4 view 1. We also refer to Figure 25.11 on page 278.

Figure 25.14: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 5 page 4 view 2, and document 5 page 5 view 1.

Figure 25.15: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 5 page 5 view 2, and document 5 page 6 view 1.

Figure 25.16: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 5 page 6 view 2, and document 5 page 7 view 1.

Figure 25.17: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 5 page 7 view 2, and document 5 page 8 view 1.

originali processu in curia magnifici domini vicarij ville et vicarie montisalbi actitato Et cum eodem veridice comprobata per me Josephum Joan dicte ville montisalbi regia auctoritate notarium publicum ac dicte
Curie scribam Ut igitur premissis aliena manu scriptis in judicio et ex tra fides ab omnibus impendatur sigillum dicte curie hic affixi et meum solitum artis notarie apposui
Signum Cum suprapositis in lineis desimanona pagine secunde primi folei ubi legitur besany de aquest bonaventura descler gue Et in lineis quarta et quinta prime pagine folei quarti entre altres fills tingue a mossen galceran desclergue
Et in linea trigessima secunde pagine eiusdem folei mossen Et in linea quarta pagine secunde folei quinti lo qual. f.

Figure 25.18: Last page of a handwritten text with notary seal '1576 Mérits del llinatge Desclergue' . (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 5 page 8 view 2; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

Figure 25.19: The castle of our Hostalric ancestors, described in Chapter 25.0.3. Credit of the Reverend Josep Maria Viñolas Esteva (modified). The historic military fortress atop volcanic rock, guarding strategic routes between Barcelona and France was built on the location of our ancestor's castle. Initially built in the 18th century, it replaced our ancestor's medieval castle, which French troops had demolished. Declared a national asset, the modern fortress boasts Vauban-inspired defenses and offers stunning panoramic views. Now partly a restaurant, it is a testament to centuries of military history and strategic importance.

1445 - 1461	CLERICÓ, Pere de
1455 - 1467	COLOM, Jaume
1459	ROSSANES, Joan
1467 - 1483	CLERICÓ, Berenguer de
1471 - 1477	DESCLERGUE, Ramon Berenguer
1483 - 1504	IGUALADA, Antoni d'
1487 - 1496	FERRER, Andreu
1488	CLERICÓ, Ramon Berenguer de

Figure 25.20: This document[a] presents observations in Santa Coloma de Queralt in agreement with the three Generations of Notaries: Pere, Berenguer, and Ramon Berenguer Desclergue. Active in Santa Coloma de Queralt and Barcelona from the mid-15th to early 16th century. In Santa Coloma de Queralt, Pere served from 1445 to 1461, followed by his brother Berenguer from 1467 to 1483 and Berenguer's son, son Ramon Berenguer from 1471 to 1477. The latter served later in Barcelona in 1485 and again in Santa Coloma de Queralt in 1488 and 1494. Their familial ties shaped their legal careers, with Berenguer's court connections evident in his appointment as general curator of the Duchy of Montblanc. Pere Torró y Desclergue (DC01) was Ramon Berenguer Desclergue's heir, his sister's, Clemeta Desclergue, son with Francesc Torró y Miquel. The relationships are shown in Figure 25.21 on page 282.

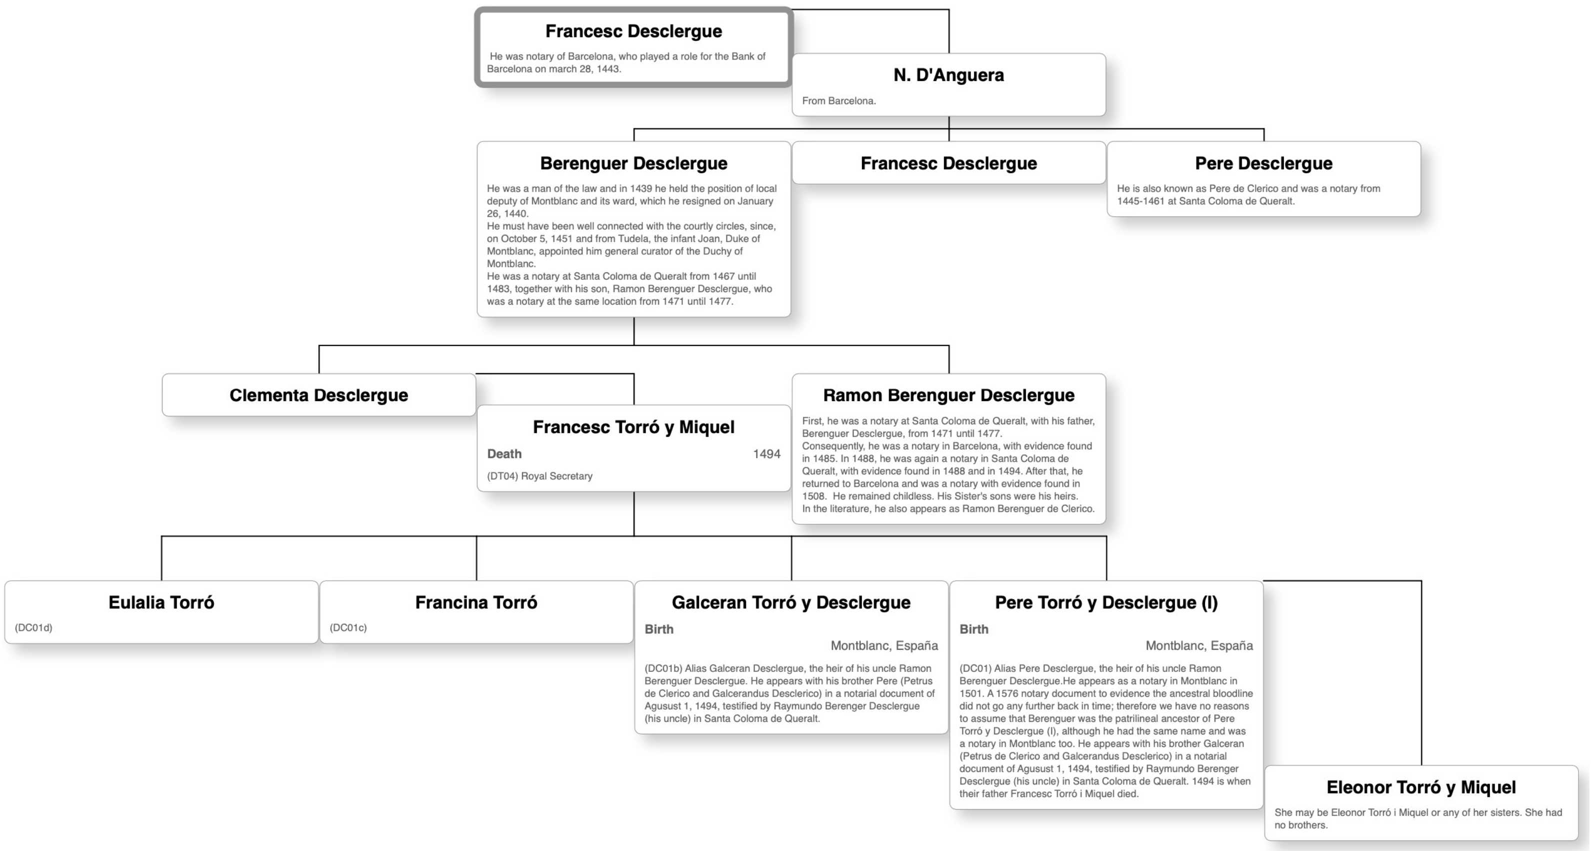
---

[a] Josep M. Porta i Balanyà, "Els notaris de Santa Coloma de Queralt (segles XIII-XX), el retorn dels protocols notarials anteriors al segle XIX", p. 145.



Francesc Desclergue
He was notary of Barcelona, who played a role for the Bank of Barcelona on march 28, 1443.

N. D'Anguera
From Barcelona.

Berenguer Desclergue
He was a man of the law and in 1439 he held the position of local deputy of Montblanc and its ward, which he resigned on January 26, 1440.
He must have been well connected with the courtly circles, since, on October 5, 1451 and from Tudela, the infant Joan, Duke of Montblanc, appointed him general curator of the Duchy of Montblanc.
He was a notary at Santa Coloma de Queralt from 1467 until 1483, together with his son, Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, who was a notary at the same location from 1471 until 1477.

Francesc Desclergue

Pere Desclergue
He is also known as Pere de Clerico and was a notary from 1445-1461 at Santa Coloma de Queralt.

Clementa Desclergue

Francesc Torró y Miquel
Death 1494
(DT04) Royal Secretary

Ramon Berenguer Desclergue
First, he was a notary at Santa Coloma de Queralt, with his father, Berenguer Desclergue, from 1471 until 1477.
Consequently, he was a notary in Barcelona, with evidence found in 1485. In 1488, he was again a notary in Santa Coloma de Queralt, with evidence found in 1488 and in 1494. After that, he returned to Barcelona and was a notary with evidence found in 1508. He remained childless. His Sister's sons were his heirs.
In the literature, he also appears as Ramon Berenguer de Clerico.

Eulalia Torró
(DC01d)

Francina Torró
(DC01c)

Galceran Torró y Desclergue
Birth Montblanc, España
(DC01b) Alias Galceran Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue. He appears with his brother Pere (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt.

Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth Montblanc, España
(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.

Eleonor Torró y Miquel
She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.

Figure 25.21: The descendants of Francesc Desclergue to show the relationship between Pere Desclergue, Berenguer Desclergue, and Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, as they appear in Figure 25.20 on page 281.

60v Janer del any mil CCCC XXXX

Digmenge, a III de janer. Aquest dia vench lo senyor en Johan de Navel de Manresa.

Dijous, a VII de janer. Aquest jorn hic partí lo honorable mossèn Phelipp de Sentceloni per anar a Gerona.

61v Digmenge, a XVII de janer. Aquest dia partí lo honorable mossèn Guillem de Santcliment per anar a Blanes.

Dimarts, a XVIIII^{o} de janer. Aquest dia vench lo honorable mossèn Philip de Santceloni de Gerona.

Dimecres, a XX de janer. Aquest dia partí en Johan Martí, porter, per anar vers les parts de Leyda.

62r Digmenge, a XXIIII de janer. Aquest dia vench lo honorable mossèn Guillem de Santcliment.

Dimarts, a XXVI de janer. Aquest dia passà de aquesta vida en Galceran de Mataró, regent los comptes del General. En aquest dia en Berenguer Dezclergue, deputat local en la vila e vegueria de Montblanch, resignà en mans dels honorables Deputació lo dit ofici de deputació local.

62v Dimecres, a XXVII de janer. En aquest dia los senyors deputats, provehints, digueren que volien e ordonaven que los libres, paper e pregamins que han a servir a la casa de la Deputació del General de Cathalunya e per afers de aquella, e per los drets de les generalitats qui no són o no seran arrendats, e axí dins com fora la dita casa, façe n'Anthoni Ramon, librater del dit General, e los dits libres, paper e pregamins se hajen e·s compren del dit Anthoni Ramon.

Dijous, a XXVIII de janer. En aquest dia vingué mossèn Bernat Guillem de Çamasó, prior de Terrachona.

Dissapte, a XXX de janer. En aquest dia hic partí mossèn Bernat Guillem de Çamasó, prior de Terrachona.

Figure 25.22: The resignation of Berenguer Desclergue of Montblanc in 1440 from his position as a local deputy.[a]

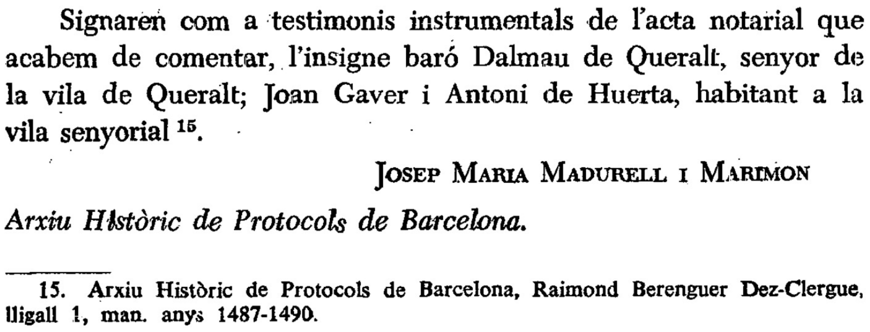
[a] Josep Maria Sans i Travé, "Dietaris de la Generalitat de Catalunya, Volum I, Anys 1411-1539," folio 60-62, p. 76-77.



Signaren com a testimonis instrumentals de l'acta notarial que acabem de comentar, l'insigne baró Dalmau de Queralt, senyor de la vila de Queralt; Joan Gaver i Antoni de Huerta, habitant a la vila senyorial [15].

JOSEP MARIA MADURELL I MARIMON

Arxiu Històric de Protocols de Barcelona.

15. Arxiu Històric de Protocols de Barcelona, Raimond Berenguer Dez-Clergue, lligall 1, man. anys 1487-1490.

Figure 25.23: Ramon Berenguer Desclergue served as the notary, in Barcelona, in the period 1487-1490, for a document on which the baron Dalmau de Queralt, lord of the town of Queralt, was a witness.[a]

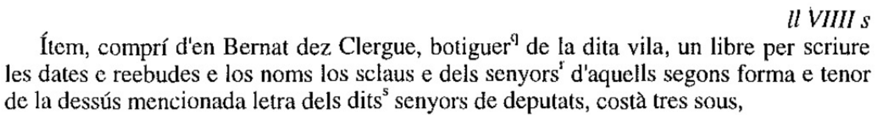
[a] Josep Maria Madurell i Marimonn, "El Castll de Turlada, feu de Santes Creus", Santes Creus Boletin del archivo bibliografico 31, Vol IV, 1970, p.71-76.



ll VIIII s

Ítem, comprí d'en Bernat dez Clergue, botiguer[q] de la dita vila, un libre per scriure les dates e reebudes e los noms los sclaus e dels senyors[r] d'aquells segons forma e tenor de la dessús mencionada letra dels dits[s] senyors de deputats, costà tres sous,

Figure 25.24: This citation mentions Bernat Desclergue, a grocer at Cervera, in 1421.[a]

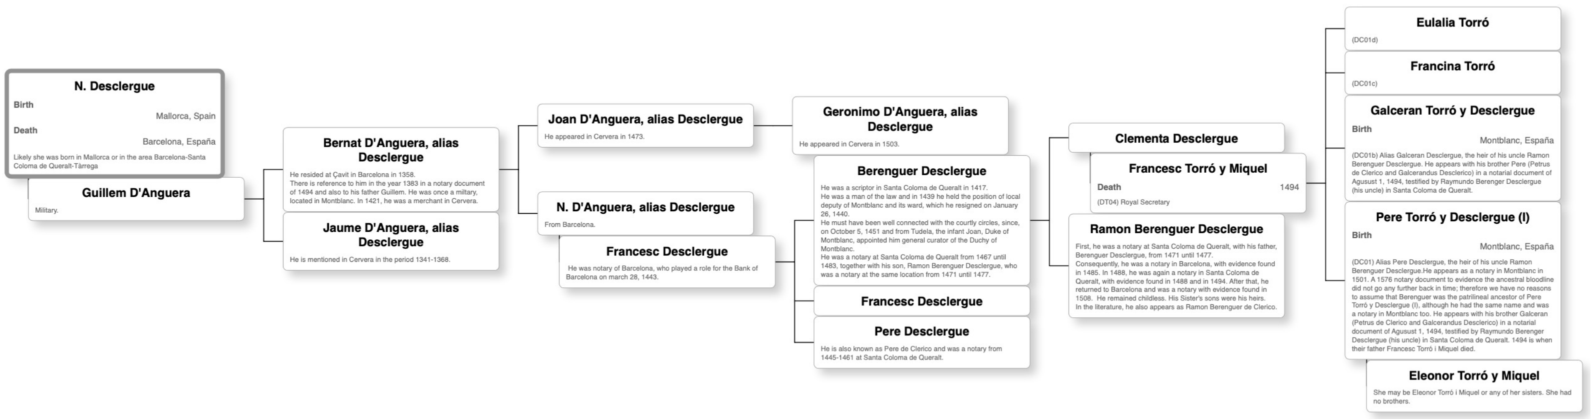
[a] Roser Salicrú Lluch, "Esclaus assegurats contra fuga a la Vegueria de Cervera: el compte de la guarda de 1421", Miscélainia Cerverina 12 (1998) 135-147, p. 145.



N. Desclergue
Birth Mallorca, Spain
Death Barcelona, España
Likely she was born in Mallorca or in the area Barcelona-Santa Coloma de Queralt-Tàrrega

Guillem D'Anguera
Military.

Bernat D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He resided at Çavit in Barcelona in 1358.
There is reference to him in the year 1383 in a notary document of 1494 and also to his father Guillem. He was once a miltary, located in Montblanc. In 1421, he was a merchant in Cervera.

Jaume D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He is mentioned in Cervera in the period 1341-1368.

Joan D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He appeared in Cervera in 1473.

N. D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
From Barcelona.

Francesc Desclergue
He was notary of Barcelona, who played a role for the Bank of Barcelona on march 28, 1443.

Geronimo D'Anguera, alias Desclergue
He appeared in Cervera in 1503.

Berenguer Desclergue
He was a scriptor in Santa Coloma de Queralt in 1417.
He was a man of the law and in 1439 he held the position of local deputy of Montblanc and its ward, which he resigned on January 26, 1440.
He must have been well connected with the courtly circles, since, on October 5, 1451 and from Tudela, the infant Joan, Duke of Montblanc, appointed him general curator of the Duchy of Montblanc.
He was a notary at Santa Coloma de Queralt from 1467 until 1483, together with his son, Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, who was a notary at the same location from 1471 until 1477.

Francesc Desclergue

Pere Desclergue
He is also known as Pere de Clerico and was a notary from 1445-1461 at Santa Coloma de Queralt.

Clementa Desclergue

Francesc Torró y Miquel
Death 1494
(DT04) Royal Secretary

Ramon Berenguer Desclergue
First, he was a notary at Santa Coloma de Queralt, with his father, Berenguer Desclergue, from 1471 until 1477.
Consequently, he was a notary in Barcelona, with evidence found in 1485. In 1488, he was again a notary in Santa Coloma de Queralt, with evidence found in 1488 and in 1494. After that, he returned to Barcelona and was a notary with evidence found in 1508. He remained childless. His Sister's sons were his heirs.
In the literature, he also appears as Ramon Berenguer de Clerico.

Eulalia Torró
(DC01d)

Francina Torró
(DC01c)

Galceran Torró y Desclergue
Birth Montblanc, España
(DC01b) Alias Galceran Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue. He appears with his brother Pere (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt.

Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth Montblanc, España
(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.

Eleonor Torró y Miquel
She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.

Figure 25.25: The descendants of Guillem D'Anguera and N. Desclergue.

Figure 25.26: San Juan de Ulua, a Spanish fortress in Veracruz, Mexico.

Figure 25.27: Architecture in barri gòtic of Barcelona.

Figure 25.28: Sevilla, La Catedral, Tarjeta Postal, Union Postal Universal, España (1920).

Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Birth 1507
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Marriage
Isabel Simón
Valencia
(DC02d) Some literature assumes there was a Galceran I and a Galceran II, father and son, while, in fact, it was one and the same person who was active for many years.

Isabel Simón
Marriage
Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Valencia

Ana de Villavicencio
Birth
Jerez de la Frontera, España
Death 1537

Jerónimo Galceran Torró y Desclergue
(DC02dy2). In 1630, he appears in a document erroneously as Galceran Tono i Desclergue, in a payment he had to receive from his cousin Francesc Desclergue.

N. de Amat

Felipe Desclergue
(DC02dy3)

Luis Desclergue (II)
(DC02dy1)

Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.

Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death
Montblanc, España
(DC04)

Cecilia Desclergue y de Amat
(DC02dy2x)

N. Montalt y Riu

Géronimo Desclergue y de Amat
(DC02dy2y1)

Luis Desclergue y de Amat (III)
(DC02dy2y2)

Enric Desclergue y Cortés
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death 1631
Wingene, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05c)

Anna Pacheco

Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Birth 1566
Montblanc, España
Marriage
Felipa de Montoya
Montblanc, España
Death 1604 (38y)
Oostende, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05). He also appears as Joan Jeroni, Jeroni and Joan

Felipa de Montoya
Marriage 1611
Jan T. Declercq
Marriage
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Montblanc, España
Death 1628
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
She appears as Felipa, Philippa, Philippe, Phlypothe , while her family name in her case and that of her relatives appears as Montoya, Montoye, Montoie, Montoi, Du Toi, Du Thoy, Thoy, Toi, de Thoo, ...

Figure 25.29: Two descending generations of Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d)

Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
Eleonor Torró y Miquel
Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Birth
1507
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Marriage
Isabel Simón
Valencia
Ana de Villavicencio
Birth
Jerez de la Frontera, España
Death
1537
Joan Berenguer Desclergue
Death
after 1503
N. Prunera y Ferrer
Birth
Tàrrega, España
Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death
after 1579
Montblanc, España
(DC03)
Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death
Montblanc, España
(DC04)

(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.

She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.

(DC02d) Some literature assumes there was a Galceran I and a Galceran II, father and son, while, in fact, it was one and the same person who was active for many years.

(DC02) He appears in the fogatge of Montblanc in 1515.

(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.

She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.

Figure 25.30: Blood-relationship between Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio (DC02dx1) and Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04) (I)

Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death
after 1579
Montblanc, España
(DC03)
Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.
Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death
Montblanc, España
(DC04)
Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.
Luis Desclergue y Cortés (I)
(DC04d)
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Birth
1566
Montblanc, España
Marriage
Felipa de Montoya
Montblanc, España
Death
1604 (38y)
Oostende, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05). He also appears as Joan Jeroni, Jeroni and Joan
Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.
Eleonor Torró y Miquel
She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.
Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Birth
1507
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Marriage
Isabel Simón
Valencia
(DC02d) Some literature assumes there was a Galceran I and a Galceran II, father and son, while, in fact, it was one and the same person who was active for many years.
Ana de Villavicencio
Birth
Jerez de la Frontera, España
Death
1537
Joan Berenguer Desclergue
Death
after 1503
(DC02) He appears in the fogatge of Montblanc in 1515.
N. Prunera y Ferrer
Birth
Tàrrega, España
Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.
Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death
Montblanc, España
(DC04)
Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death
after 1579
Montblanc, España
(DC03)
Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Birth
1566
Montblanc, España
Marriage
Felipa de Montoya
Montblanc, España
Death
1604 (38y)
Oostende, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05). He also appears as Joan Jeroni, Jeroni and Joan
Luis Desclergue y Cortés (I)
(DC04d)

Figure 25.31: Blood-relationship between our ancestor, Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), and Luis Desclergue y Cortés (I) (DC04d).

Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
Eleonor Torró y Miquel
Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Birth
1507
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Marriage
Isabel Simón
Valencia
Joan Berenguer Desclergue
Death
after 1503
N. Prunera y Ferrer
Birth
Tàrrega, España
Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death
after 1579
Montblanc, España
(DC03)
Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
Luis Desclergue y Cortés (I)
(DC04d)

(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.

She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.

(DC02d) Some literature assumes there was a Galceran I and a Galceran II, father and son, while, in fact, it was one and the same person who was active for many years.

(DC02) He appears in the fogatge of Montblanc in 1515.

She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.

Figure 25.32: Blood-relationship between Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) and Luis Desclergue y Cortés (I) (DC04d).

Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.
Eleonor Torró y Miquel
She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.
Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Birth
1507
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Marriage
Isabel Simón
Valencia
(DC02d) Some literature assumes there was a Galceran I and a Galceran II, father and son, while, in fact, it was one and the same person who was active for many years.
Joan Berenguer Desclergue
Death
after 1503
(DC02) He appears in the fogatge of Montblanc in 1515.
N. Prunera y Ferrer
Birth
Tàrrega, España
Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.
Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death
after 1579
Montblanc, España
(DC03)
Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Birth
1507
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Marriage
Isabel Simón
Valencia
(DC02d) Some literature assumes there was a Galceran I and a Galceran II, father and son, while, in fact, it was one and the same person who was active for many years.
Ana de Villavicencio
Birth
Jerez de la Frontera, España
Death
1537
Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death
Montblanc, España
(DC04)
Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.
Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.
Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death
Montblanc, España
(DC04)
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Birth
1566
Montblanc, España
Marriage
Felipa de Montoya
Montblanc, España
Death
1604 (38y)
Oostende, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05). He also appears as Joan Jeroni, Jeroni and Joan
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Birth
1566
Montblanc, España
Marriage
Felipa de Montoya
Montblanc, España
Death
1604 (38y)
Oostende, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05). He also appears as Joan Jeroni, Jeroni and Joan

Figure 25.33: Blood-relationship between Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) and our ancestor, Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05).

Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Birth 1507 Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Marriage Isabel Simón Valencia
(DC02d) Some literature assumes there was a Galceran I and a Galceran II, father and son, while, in fact, it was one and the same person who was active for many years.
Ana de Villavicencio
Birth Jerez de la Frontera, España
Death 1537
Jerónimo Galceran Torró y Desclergue
(DC02dy2). In 1630, he appears in a document erroneously as Galceran Tono i Desclergue, in a payment he had to receive from his cousin Francesc Desclergue.
N. de Amat
Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.
Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death Montblanc, España
(DC04)
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Birth 1566 Montblanc, España
Marriage Felipa de Montoya Montblanc, España
Death 1604 (38y) Oostende, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05). He also appears as Joan Jeroni, Jeroni and Joan
Felipa de Montoya
Marriage 1611 Jan T. Declercq
Marriage Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés Montblanc, España
Death 1628 Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
She appears as Felipa, Philippa, Philippe, Phlypothe , while her family name in her case and that of her relatives appears as Montoya, Montoye, Montoie, Montoi, Du Toi, Du Thoy, Thoy, Toi, de Thoo, ...
Cecilia Desclergue y de Amat
(DC02dy2x)
N. Montalt y Riu
Antoni Desclergue (II)
Birth 1602 Barcelona, España
Christening 1602 Tournai, Hainaut, Belgium
Marriage before 1624 (22y) Beatrice Declercq
(DC06)
José Montalt Riu y Desclergue
(DC02dy2xy)
Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth Montblanc, España
(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.
Eleonor Torró y Miquel
She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.
Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Birth 1507 Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Marriage Isabel Simón Valencia
(DC02d) Some literature assumes there was a Galceran I and a Galceran II, father and son, while, in fact, it was one and the same person who was active for many years.
Isabel Simón
Marriage Galceran Desclergue (I=II) Valencia
Joan Berenguer Desclergue
Death after 1503
(DC02) He appears in the fogatge of Montblanc in 1515.
N. Prunera y Ferrer
Birth Tàrrega, España
Jerónimo Galceran Torró y Desclergue
(DC02dy2). In 1630, he appears in a document erroneously as Galceran Tono i Desclergue, in a payment he had to receive from his cousin Francesc Desclergue.
N. de Amat
Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Birth Montblanc, España
Death after 1579 Montblanc, España
(DC03)
Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.
Cecilia Desclergue y de Amat
(DC02dy2x)
N. Montalt y Riu
Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death Montblanc, España
(DC04)
Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.
José Montalt Riu y Desclergue
(DC02dy2xy)
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Birth 1566 Montblanc, España
Marriage Felipa de Montoya Montblanc, España
Death 1604 (38y) Oostende, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05). He also appears as Joan Jeroni, Jeroni and Joan
Felipa de Montoya
Marriage 1611 Jan T. Declercq
Marriage Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés Montblanc, España
Death 1628 Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
She appears as Felipa, Philippa, Philippe, Phlypothe , while her family name in her case and that of her relatives appears as Montoya, Montoye, Montoie, Montoi, Du Toi, Du Thoy, Thoy, Toi, de Thoo, ...
Antoni Desclergue (II)
Birth 1602 Barcelona, España
Christening 1602 Tournai, Hainaut, Belgium
Marriage before 1624 (22y) Beatrice Declercq
(DC06)

Figure 25.34: Blood-relationship between José Montalt Riu y Desclergue (DC02dy2xy) and Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06)

Martín Cortés y Paz
Knight of the Golden Spur.
Great-great-grandfather
Leonor de Monroy y Almarez
Death 1450s
Great-great-grandmother; Fourth cousin three times removed up (f)
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
Marriage 1431
Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Great-grandfather; Fifth cousin twice removed up (m)
Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage 1431
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
She was a native of Jerez de Badajoz or Jerez de los Caballeros.
Great-grandmother
Garcia Martin Cortés de Monroy
Birth 1446
Great-great-uncle; Fifth cousin twice removed up (m)
Catalina Pizarro Altamirano
Ana Sánchez Cortés
Marriage
Alfon de Villavicencio
Jerez de Badajoz, España
She was the aunt of Cristóbal and Pedro Sánchez Cortés Alcalde de la Santa Hermandad
Grandmother; Sixth cousin once removed up (f)
Alfon de Villavicencio
Marriage
Ana Sánchez Cortés
Jerez de Badajoz, España
Grandfather
Hernàn Cortés de Monroy
Birth 1485
Medellín, Extremadura, Castilla, Spain
Death 1547 (62y)
Castilleja de la Cuesta, Castilla, Spain
First cousin twice removed up (m); Sixth cousin once removed up (m)
Pedro Núñez de Villavicencio
Father; Seventh cousin (m)
Catarina Cabeza de Vaca Mejías
Mother
Ana de Villavicencio
Birth
Jerez de la Frontera, España
Death 1537

Figure 25.35: Relationship between Ana de Villavicencio and Hernán Cortés de Monroy. The relationship through Anna Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazan is shown in Figure 27.6 on page 298, and is described in Chapter 27.2

Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya
Birth
Salamanca, Spain
He was a doctor of law and was at the king's court several times. He was a very aristocratic person.
Catalina de Boil
Birth
Kingdom of Aragon
Juan Rodríguez de las Varillas
Birth
Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Knight of the Order of the Band, and the most important man in the city of Salamanca in his time.
María Fernández de Monroy
Birth
Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Diego Gómez de Almaraz
Birth
Plasencia, Spain
Don Diego Gómez de Almaraz descended, along with his surname family line of Almaraz, from an ancient and noble Christianized Arab family that owned immense territories of land in the region of Cáceres in Extremadura. Note that only along the Almarez line does he descend distantly from an Arab family, several generations before him, not through other branches of his ancestry.
In fact, Al-Marash was the family name that, when the family converted to Christianity, was Spanishized as Almaraz, and that would later also take its territorial possessions as its name. This family, given its wealth and seniority in the region of Cáceres, and after supporting the cause of the Trastamara, raised its social and economic position due to the royal grants received, being able to connect with main Christian families in Extremadura, such as the Altamirano, Hinojosa, Orellana, Carvajal, Pizarro, Tapia and Bote among others.
María Blázquez de Tapia
Birth
Trujillo, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Alonso García Cortés
Birth
Kingdom of Aragon
Marriage
Inés de Paz y Boil
Salamanca, Spain
Knight of the Golden Spur in 1384 by the King of Aragón Pedro IV.
Don Alonso García Cortes (known as Alonso or Alfonso Garcia de Cortes or Garcia Cortes), who went from the Kingdom of Aragon to the kingdom of Castile to serve the causes of the Christian reconquest, married Inés de Paz in the city of Salamanca, daughter of Doctor Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya and Catalina Boil, who was his relative.
Inés de Paz y Boil
Marriage
Alonso García Cortés
Salamanca, Spain
Doña Inés de Paz was the daughter of doctor Don Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya and Doña Catalina de Boil, who had passed to the Kingdom of Castile in the entourage that Doña Leonor de Aragon carried when she married the infante Don Juan de Castilla in the year 1375. Her mother, Catalina de Boil, was a relative of her husband, Alonso García Cortés.
Fernán Rodríguez de Monroy
Birth
Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
The Lord of Monroy.
Isabel de Almaraz
Birth
Almaraz, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Martín Cortés y Paz
Knight of the Golden Spur.
Leonor de Monroy y Almarez
Death 1450s
Cristóbal Sánchez de Badajoz
Knight of Jerez de Badajoz
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
Marriage 1431
Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage 1431
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
She was a native of Jerez de Badajoz or Jerez de los Caballeros.
Alfon de Villavicencio
Marriage
Ana Sánchez Cortés
Jerez de Badajoz, España
Ana Sánchez Cortés
Marriage
Alfon de Villavicencio
Jerez de Badajoz, España
She was the aunt of Cristóbal and Pedro Sánchez Cortés Alcalde de la Santa Hermandad
Pedro Núñez de Villavicencio
Catarina Cabeza de Vaca Mejías
Ana de Villavicencio
Birth
Jerez de la Frontera, España
Death 1537

Figure 25.36: The ancestors of Ana de Villavicencio, a woman of high nobility, who married Galceran Desclergue (I=II). One of their children was Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio, who married Bonavenura Desclergue y Cortés (DC04), and they were the parents of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), our forefather.

Isabel Simón
Marriage
Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Valencia
Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Birth
1507
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Marriage
Isabel Simón
Valencia
(DC02d) Some literature assumes there was a Galceran I and a Galceran II, father and son, while, in fact, it was one and the same person who was active for many years.
Jerónimo Galceran Torró y Desclergue
(DC02dy2). In 1630, he appears in a document erroneously as Galceran Tono i Desclergue, in a payment he had to receive from his cousin Francesc Desclergue.
N. de Amat
Cecilia Desclergue y de Amat
(DC02dy2x)
N. Montalt y Riu
José Montalt Riu y Desclergue
(DC02dy2xy)
Géronimo Desclergue y de Amat
(DC02dy2y1)
Luis Desclergue y de Amat (III)
(DC02dy2y2)

Figure 25.37: The descendants of Isabel Simón and Galceran Desclergue (I=II).

135*r*// Deputats militars de la vegueria de Perpinyà
Mossèn Miquel Maduxer y Junyent.
A xv de juliol mdclviiii, per mort de dit mossèn Miquel Maduxer y Junyent, fonch insiculat mossèn Joseph Montalt Riu y Desclergue, qui ja estave insiculat en oydor.

Figure 25.38: Joseph Montalt Riu y Desclergue in Perpignan in 1659. [a]

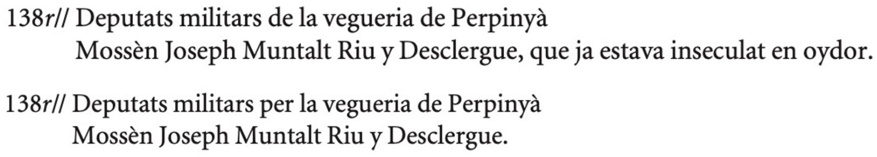
---

[a] Els llibres de l'ànima de la diputació del general de catalunya (1493-1714), p. 466-467, item 135r



138*r*// Deputats militars de la vegueria de Perpinyà
Mossèn Joseph Muntalt Riu y Desclergue, que ja estava inseculat en oydor.

138*r*// Deputats militars per la vegueria de Perpinyà
Mossèn Joseph Muntalt Riu y Desclergue.

Figure 25.39: Joseph Montalt Riu y Desclergue in Perpignan.[a]

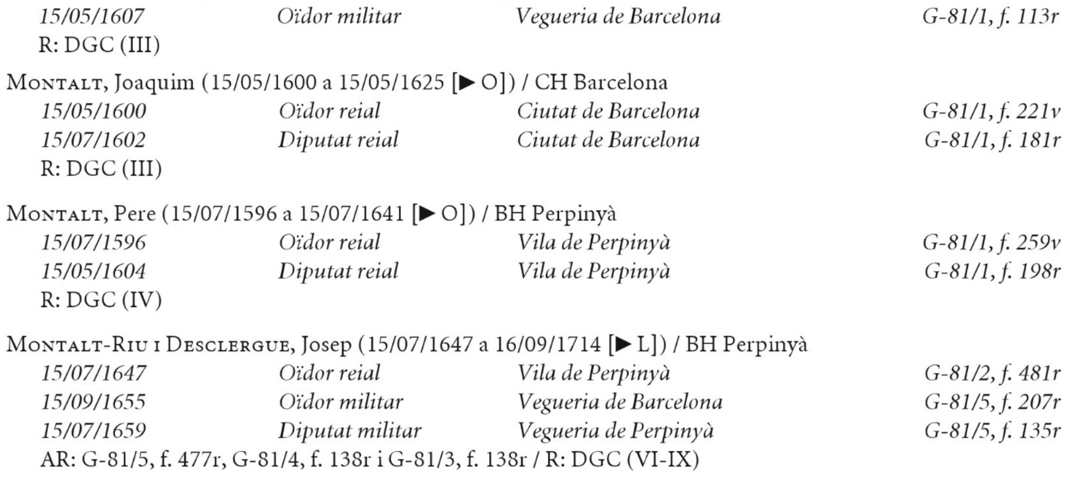
---

[a] Els llibres de l'ànima de la diputació del general de catalunya (1493-1714), p.546, item 138r.



Montalt, Francesc (15/05/1607 a 15/05/1610 [▶ O]) / Cavaller
15/05/1607	Oïdor militar	Vegueria de Barcelona	G-81/1, f. 113r
R: DGC (III)
Montalt, Joaquim (15/05/1600 a 15/05/1625 [▶ O]) / CH Barcelona
15/05/1600	Oïdor reial	Ciutat de Barcelona	G-81/1, f. 221v
15/07/1602	Diputat reial	Ciutat de Barcelona	G-81/1, f. 181r
R: DGC (III)
Montalt, Pere (15/07/1596 a 15/07/1641 [▶ O]) / BH Perpinyà
15/07/1596	Oïdor reial	Vila de Perpinyà	G-81/1, f. 259v
15/05/1604	Diputat reial	Vila de Perpinyà	G-81/1, f. 198r
R: DGC (IV)
Montalt-Riu i Desclergue, Josep (15/07/1647 a 16/09/1714 [▶ L]) / BH Perpinyà
15/07/1647	Oïdor reial	Vila de Perpinyà	G-81/2, f. 481r
15/09/1655	Oïdor militar	Vegueria de Barcelona	G-81/5, f. 207r
15/07/1659	Diputat militar	Vegueria de Perpinyà	G-81/5, f. 135r
AR: G-81/5, f. 477r, G-81/4, f. 138r i G-81/3, f. 138r / R: DGC (VI-IX)

Figure 25.40: Francesc Montalt, appears in Barcelona in 1607-1610, Joaquin Montalt appears in Barcelona in 1600-1625, Pere Montalt appears in Perpignan in 1596-1641, Josep Montalt-Riu y Desclergue apperas in Perpignan in 1646-1659.[18]

Chapter 26

Don Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02) & Doña Prunera y Ferrer

26.0.1 Don Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02), General Conservator of the Montblanc Dukedom

Figure 26.1 displays his signature, which includes an acronym indicating that his full name was Torró y Desclergue.
He is mentioned as a person from Montblanc in A. P. M.[2], and also in Jaume Felipe Sánchez.[3] In 1515, Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02) appears in Montblanc's census,[4] with his son Francesc Desclergue (DC03b).
He was married to Doña Prunera y Ferrer from Tàrrega in Spain, described in Chapter 26.0.2.
We have illustrated his descendants in Figure 26.2. He became a notary very young, probably helped by his good standing due to his infamous ancestors. He died after 1503 in his 80s or even older. He was a Doncel and was a Notary at Montblanc. We know that he was married to a Targarina (i.e., from Tàrrega) named Prunera and was the father of Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03) and the grandfather of Bonaventura Desclergue (II) (DC04).
We can cite 'Desclergue, Berenguer de. Notari de Montblanc (1440).' in Josep Maria Grau i Pujol and Francesc Badia i Batalla[5].
Don Berenguer Desclergue (DC02) can be found several times in old archives.
Palau y Dulcet, in his Guide, cites, in a list of notaries, this Berenguer Desclergue (DC02) with the date of 1438 AD[6].
Berenguer Desclergue (DC02) appears in 1440 as a law professional and town representative. Apparently, on this date, he resigned from his position. According to the Dietary of the Generalitat (vol IV, fol 62)'
'Tuesdays January 26, Berenguer Dez-Clergue, a local deputy in the town and neighborhood of Montblanc, resigned in the hands of the honorable and delegated his duties to this local council office.'
Indeed, in 1439, he was in charge of the local deputy of Montblanc and its court.
He must be well-related and linked to the middle-high nobility court since, on October 5, 1451, the infante Juan from Tudela, Duke of Montblanc, appointed him as the general conservator of the Montblanc Dukedom.
Santiago Alberti[7] writes,
'This Berenguer was to be welcomed in courteous ways by the data we know from 1452. Alfonso Alonso was then the Magnanimous, whose second brother Joan was the Duke of Montblanc as every second king's son. He could not take care of the duchess nor go there. Joan was retained in Navarre, where he was H.M., the King's consort. According to the privilege letter of October 5, 1452, signed in Tudela, Berenguer Desclergue (DC02) was appointed as the conservator of his property in the duchy of Montblanc.'
In URTX,[8] we find 'Desclergue, Berenguer (noble): VII, 66.'
Valentí Gial Vilá[9] writes that, in 1503, he was a witness of an event that took place at Montblanc.
In the Concordia volume, which is stored in the Museum Archive, there is an annotation referring to Berenguer Desclergue (DC02), notary, as the owner of some lands near the mill of Pas. The land limits on two sides with the road to Prenafeta, namely on one side with the path from Cantalosella, and on the other, with a vineyard of the same Desclergue[10].
Berengarius Dezclergue notarius dicte ville Montisalbis in termino dicte ville supra molendinus del Pas, apad crucem Guillermi Giner peciam terre seu mallol a duabus partibus cum camino per quem itur ad locum de Penafreta, ab alia parte cum camino que venit de Cantalosella, et ab alia parte cum quadam vinea eiusdem Berengarii. . . '.
Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02) is also mentioned, referring to 1502, in a document by the notary Bartomeu Joan Coloma of Montblanc in 1546, shown in Figure 29.113 on page 420. The relevance of this observation is described in Chapter 29.5.2, when Joan Berenguer Desclergue's great-grandson, Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), joins Carlos Coloma to Flanders. Both Colomas were relatives.

26.0.2 Doña Prunera y Ferrer, the wife of Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02)

Genetic evidence of our Ferrer ancestry is given in Chapter 73.10.4.6.3 on page 1597, and in Chapter 73.4 on page 1586. The wife of Don Berenguer Desclergue (DC02), described in Chapter 26.0.1, was N. Prunera y Ferrer, born at Tàrrega in Spain, the daughter of Juan Prunera and Catalina de Ferrer, daughter of Don de Ferrer.
Catalina de Ferrer was a noble lady. She was the sister of Don Luis de Ferrer, Lord of La Mora, and the Veguer (Doncel) of Tárrega.
Catalina de Ferrer's cousin was Don Mateo de Ferrer, a Knight of the Golden Spur and the Veguer (Doncel) of Tárrega.
Don Juan Prunera was a bourgeois and merchant.
Juan Prunera y Ferrer, the brother of N. Prunera y Ferrer, was 'Ingresó en la Cartuja de Santa María de Scala Dei.'
The Ferrers had land in Montblanc, and Catalina de Ferrer's dowry included some of these lands.

---

[2] Arxiu Parroquial de Montblanc (A. P. M.), reg. num. 1 fr,. foli 24r

[3] Jaume Felipe Sánchez, 'L' ermita i el retaule de Sant Joan Baptista de Montblanc (Segle XVI)

[4] Jordi Sotorra i Montblanch, 'El Fogatge de 1515, A la Conca de Barberà i la Baixa Segarra'

[5] Josep Maria Grau i Pujol and Francesc Badia i Batalla, 'Diccionari biogràfic històric de Montblanc (1155-1920), Fundació Martí l' Humà. Tot Conca. Carrer Josa, 6, Montblanc, 2008.

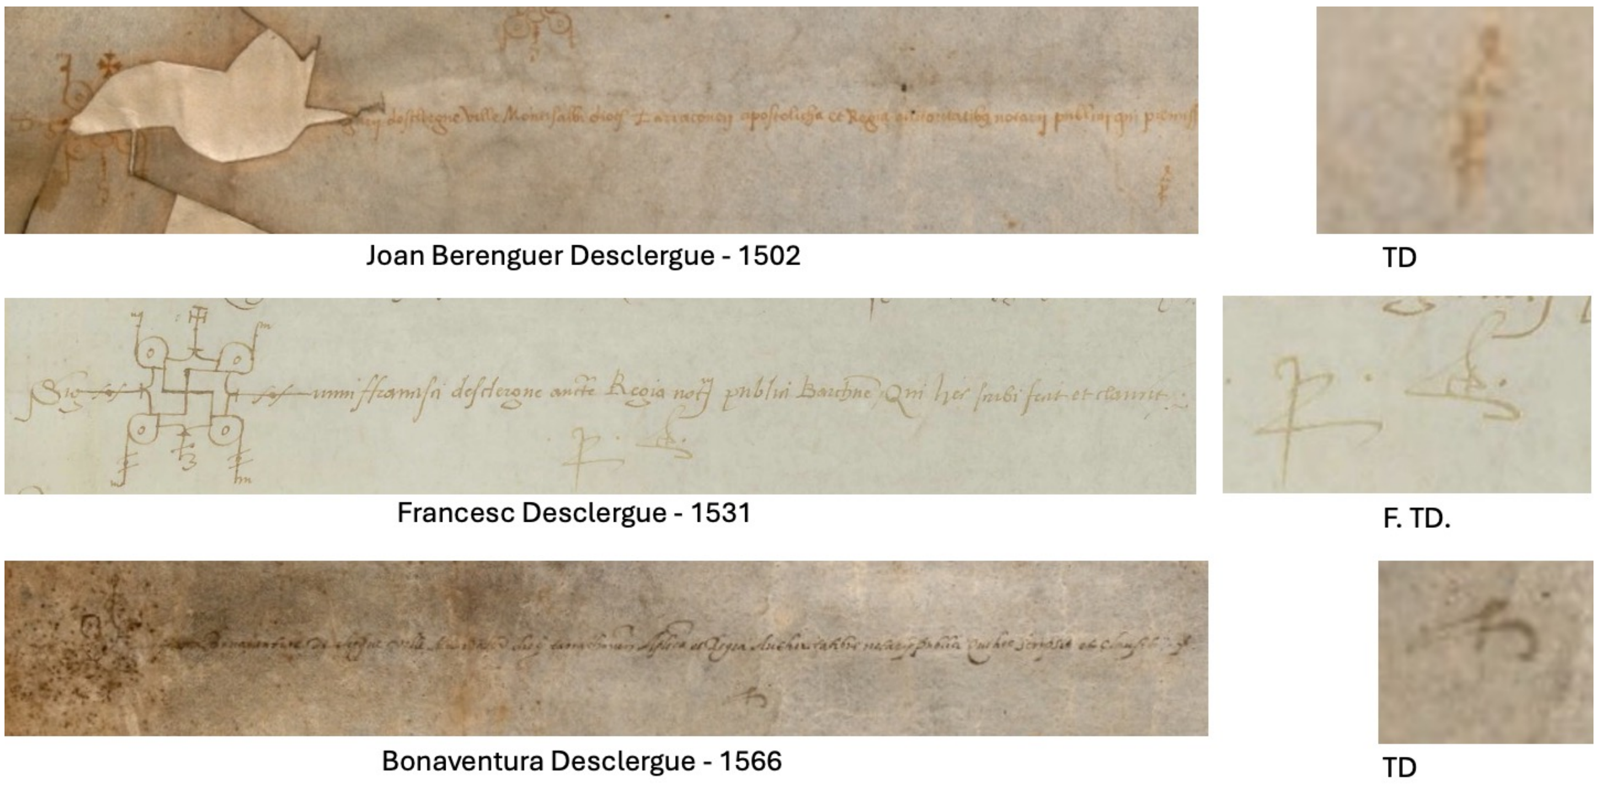
[6] A Palau y Dulcet. Guía de Montblanch. Barcelona, 1931. Pág. 94. (It does not say where it is taken from)

[7] Santiago Alberti, 'Esquema històric del llinatge Pedrolo' , page 49 – 88 of URTX Revista Cultural de l' Urgell, Num 7, 1995.

[8] Pages 179-180 of URTX índex onomàstic Personatges històrics

[9] Valentí Gial Vilá, 'Conflictes entre poblet i Montblanc per Prenafeta, Segles XV-XVi' , Aplec de Treballs (Montblanc) 19 (2001), 13-14, Centre d' Estudis de la Conca de Barberà.

[10] Concordia. Museo-Archivo de Montblanc. Fol. 28 v.



Joan Berenguer Desclergue - 1502
TD
Francesc Desclergue - 1531
F. TD.
Bonaventura Desclergue - 1566
TD

Figure 26.1: The Notary Seals and Signatures of Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02) in 1502, Francesc Desclergue (DC03b) in 1531 and Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03) in 1566. They are located on our ancestry tree in Figure 26.2. Their signatures consist of the acronym TD, meaning Torró y Desclergue, despite their appearance as notaries under the name Desclergue. Joan Berenguer is described in Chapter 26.0.1, Bonaventura Desclergue in Chapter 27.1.[1]

Joan Berenguer Desclergue
Death after 1503
N. Prunera y Ferrer
Birth Tàrrega, España
Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Birth Montblanc, España
Death after 1579 Montblanc, España
(DC03)
Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
Elisabeth Monseny
Francesc Desclergue
Pere Joan Desclergue
(DC03c)
Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death Montblanc, España
(DC04)
Elisabeth Anna de Ratera
Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
Luis Desclergue y Cortés (I)
(DC04d)
Maurice Desclergue y Cortés
(DC04e)
Bonaventura Torró y Desclergue
(DC04c)
Francesc Torró y Desclergue (I)
N. Desclergue
Antich Desclergue
(DC03cy1)
Pere Desclergue
(DC03cy2)
Antoni Desclergue y Ratera
Birth Montblanc, España
Death 1634 Ghent, East Flanders, Belgium
(DC05b)
Anna
Death 1618 Antwerp, Belgium
Francesc Desclergue y Ratera
Marriage 1587 Catarina Tous y Monserrat
Death around 1648
(DC05e)
Catarina Tous y Monserrat
Marriage 1587 Francesc Desclergue y Ratera
Francisca Desclergue y Ratera
(DC05d)
Mr Estalella
Birth Tàrrega, España
Enric Desclergue y Cortés
Birth Montblanc, España
Death 1631 Wingene, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05c)
Anna Pacheco
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Birth 1566 Montblanc, España
Marriage Felipa de Montoya Montblanc, España
Death 1604 (38y) Oostende, West Flanders, Belgium
Felipa de Montoya
Marriage 1611 Jan T. Declercq
Marriage Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés Montblanc, España
Death 1628 Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
Galceran Torró
(DC04cy) Knight

(DC02) He appears in the fogatge of Montblanc in 1515.

She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.

(DC03b) He was a notary in Barcelona from 1536 until 1544.

(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.

(DC04b). He was a doctor in canon law (obtained the degree in Rome in 1586) and was an abbot and signed as altissima F. Torró in 1576 in a document for his half-brother Bonaventura Desclergue. He also appears as Francesc Desclergue y Monsteny in modern articles because his father was Desclergue and his mother Montseny.

(DC05). He also appears as Joan Jeroni, Jeroni and Joan

She appears as Felipa, Philippa, Philippe, Phlypothe , while her family name in her case and that of her relatives appears as Montoya, Montoye, Montoie, Montoi, Du Toi, Du Thoy, Thoy, Toi, de Thoo, ...

Figure 26.2: Three descending generations of Don Berenguer Desclergue (DC02)

60

1233 gener 16

Berenguer de Tàrrega, rector de Montblanc, reconeix haver rebut de Pere de Tàrrega, prior de Poblet, 100 sous per raó de la renúncia als seus drets sobre el censal llegat al monestir per Bernat Amill. També reconeix no tenir cap dret sobre els censals llegats per Guillem de Castellfollit i la seva muller, i renuncia a qualsevol nova reclamació sobre les deixes i els drets funeraris de la gent de Montblanc per al monestir.

Actum est hoc XVIIº kalendas februarii, anno Domini MºCCºXXXIIº.

Figure 26.3: Josep Torné i Cubells, "Catàleg de pergamis de l'actual arxiu del monastir de Poblet." Page 37, item 60, Montblanc. We notice Bernat Torró, monk and scribe, and Berenguer de Tàrrega, rector of Montblanc and brother of Pere.

61

1233 abril 29

Berenguer d'Anglesola, cavaller, i Berenguera, muller seva, venen al monestir de Poblet un alou a Barbens tocant a la granja del monestir per 280 sous barcelonesos. Reconeixen haver rebut íntegrament el preu de la venda, assenyalen les afrontacions de la peça de terra i donen per fermances Ramon de Cervera, d'Anglesola, Guillem de Nau i Bernat Ferrer.

Actum est hoc IIIº kalendas maii, anno Domini MºCCºXXXºIIIº.

Figure 26.4: Josep Torné i Cubells, "Catàleg de pergamis de l'actual arxiu del monastir de Poblet." Page 38, item 61, Barbens. We notice Bernat Torró, monk and scribe, and Bernard Ferrer.

Año 1551.
Juan Luis Lull.
Guillen Oliver.
Galceran Pablo Lull.
Clemente Jordá, Mercader.
Francisco Desclergue, Notario.

Figure 26.5: Francisco Desclergue on page 109 of 'Appendice de varios documentos y noticias para el suplemento a las memorias históricas del antiguo Comercio, Marina y Artes de Barcelona' , in 'Memorias Historicas Sobre La Marina Comercio Y Artes De La Antigua Ciuidad De Barcelona, Volume 4' , En La Imprenta De D. Antonio De Sancha, 1792.

1604, novembre, 17. Cervera

El Consell municipal ordinari de Cervera acorda que Pere Mas, acusat de fabricar menuts falsos d'Agramunt i d'altres delictes, sigui lliurat a les autoritats d'aquesta població per tal de ser jutjat.

ACSG, Cervera, Fons Municipal, Consells, 1604, f. 41*v*.

...
dits robos y los còmplices de dits delictes. E, encontinent, feta dita determinació, foren en lo present Consell lo il·lustre senyor Hyerònim dez Clergue, veguer y balle, y micer Hyerònim Viladot, son assessor, los quals aderiren a dita determinació y consentiren que la persona de dit Mas sie donada y lliurada en lo modo predit.

Figure 26.6: Gerónimo Desclergue y de Amat (DC02dy2y1) in 1604 in Cervera.[a]

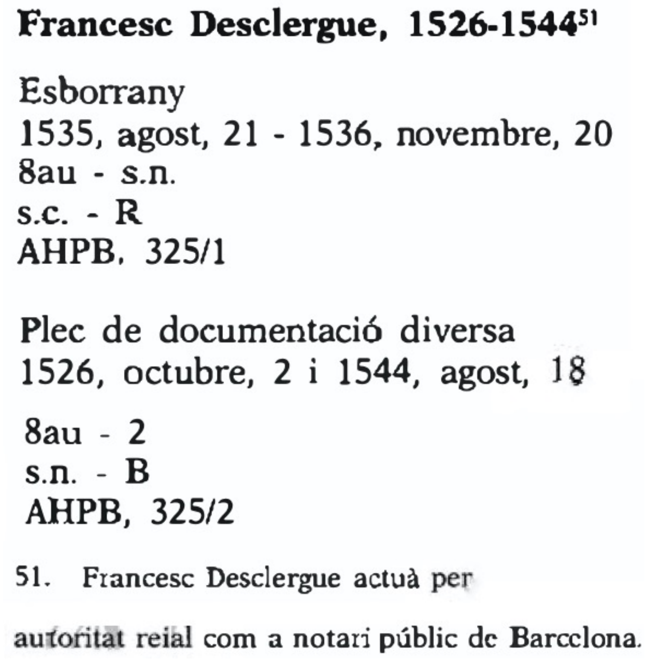
---

[a] Document 8, pagina 109-110, in J. M. Llobet i Portella, "Moneda falsa a la vegueria de Cervera (1479-1634)."



Francesc Desclergue, 1526-1544[51]

Esborrany
1535, agost, 21 - 1536, novembre, 20
8au - s.n.
s.c. - R
AHPB, 325/1

Plec de documentació diversa
1526, octubre, 2 i 1544, agost, 18
8au - 2
s.n. - B
AHPB, 325/2

51. Francesc Desclergue actuà per autoritat reial com a notari públic de Barcelona.

Figure 26.7: Francesc Desclergue (DC03b) was a notary in Barcelona from 1536 until 1544.[a]

---

[a] Lluisa Cases i Loscos, "Inventari de l'arxiu historic de protocols de Barcelona, 2. Segle XVI", Fundacio Noguera, barcelona, 2003, p. 96.

[378] Los Consellers de 1551-1552 eran "Joan Luis Lull, Guillem Oliver, Galceran Pau Lull, Climent Jordá, Mercader, y Francesch Desclergues, Notarius" [Arxiu Històric Municipal de Barcelona, 1B II, Registre de Deliberacions del Consell de Cent; n. 62, p. 1]; y los de 1552-1553, "Galceran Lull, Dionis de Clariana, Miquel Bastida, Antonio Gori, Mercader, y Miquel Boygues, Argenter [n. 63, p. 1]. Hay un listado completo en Antonio de Capmany y de Monpalau, Memorias Históricas (Sobre Marina, Comercio y Artes de la Antigua Ciudad de Barcelona), II-2, apéndice num. XVI, p. 109.

Figure 26.8: Francesc Desclergue (DC03b) was still a notary in 1551 and he was, as his ancestors, connected to the family Llull. Citation from Ignacio Vila Despujol, "La Compañía de Jesús en Barcelona en el siglo XVI: El colegio de Nuestra Señora de Belén", Universidad Pontificia Comillas, 22 nov. 2010, p. 156-157.

In 1408 and later, the chronicles show that Juan de Ferrer, ancestor of Doña Prunera y Ferrer was Veguer de Tárrega and of Urgel in 1452. He was a Doncel of Tárrega, Lord of la Mora and the son of Guillerma de Ferrer. The latter was also the Lord of la Mora and was the Veguer of Montblanc. Juan de Ferrer was enobled by King Alfonso V of Aragon and he participated in the Corts of Perpignan in 1449. He had lands in Montblanc. The Ferrers had relatives in Mallorca, Valencia, and Barcelona.

The Ferrer family, the Torró family, in Montblanc and Tárrega were intertwined, as can be seen in Figure 26.3, on page 293 and Figure 26.4, on page 293.

Among the Prunera Ancestors in Verdu, north of Montblanc, around 1440,[11] we found Berenguer Prunera and his wife Simoneta, and Joan Prunera and his wife Catarina, but also Antoni Prunera and Pere Prunera.

26.0.3 Children of Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02)

Two of Joan Berenguer Desclergue's (DC02) children were notaries, Don Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03) in Monbtblanc, described in Chapter 27.1, and Francesc Desclergue (DC03b), described in Chapter 26.0.3.1.

26.0.3.1 Francesc Desclergue (DC03b)

Francesc Desclergue (DC03b) is shown in Figure 26.1 on page 292, and in Figure 26.5 on page 293. In 1515, Francesc Desclergue (DC03b) appeared (as 'Franci Delicer') in the census of 1515[12] with his father Joan Berenguer Desclergue Desclergue (DC02).

In 1519, this Desclergue appeared as a witness in a document, as scribe,[13] and years later, he appeared as a notary, of whom a manuscript is kept in the Historical Archive of Protocols of Barcelona[14].

Francesc Desclergue, who also had the office of the Consulate of the Sea of Barcelona, had an employee, Gabriel Garau, who was considered undesirable by the Priors of the College of Notaries. Francesc was required to expel him from his office[15].

He was Prior of the College of Notaries in 1541, 1548, and 1522[16].

Francesc Desclergue (DC03b) was, according to Figure 26.7 on page 293 a notary in Barcelona from 1536 until 1544.

In a later reference from 1551-1552, Francesc Desclergue is still identified as a notary, as depicted in Figure 26.8. Interestingly, the Llull family, with whom the Desclergues had a long-standing connection, is still mentioned in relation to the Desclergues in 1151.

Francesc Desclergue is also mentioned in 1534, on November 5, in Barcelona, in a document, shown in Figure 29.113 on page 420, about the sale of a property.[17]

Francesc Desclergue also appears as a public notary in a document of December 7, 1535, in Barcelona[18]

The documents shown, for instance, in Figure 26.5 referring to Barcelona in 1551, remind us that the notarial Dynasty of the Desclergues continued in Barcelona, with co-existence at Montblanc. We found one case where Desclergues at Montblanc and Barcelona were mixed up because of existing homonyms[19].

---

[11] Josep Torné i Cubells, "Catàleg de pergamis de l'actual arxiu del monastir de Poblet," page 151.

[12] Jordi Sotorra i Montblanch, 'El Fogatge de 1515, A la Conca de Barberà i la Baixa Segarra'

[13] J. M. Madurell and J. Rubió, Documentos para la historia de la imprenta y libreria en Barcelona (1474-1553). Barcelona 1955. Pago 606.

[14] J. M. Madurell Marimón. Indice ... Ob. cit. Pág. 237.

[15] R. Noguera and J. M. Madurell, Centenario de la Ley del Notariado. Sección IVa. Vol. II. Tomo I. Barcelona 1965, Página 312.

[16] R. Noguera and J. M. Madurell, Centenario. Ob. cit. Página 566.

[17] Sale of "Violari", Can Falguera ACBL50-41-T2-86, Baix Llobregat Regional Archive, 1534, November, 5. Barcelona. Perot Mollet of Barcelona sells to the nobleman Ferran Albert, lord of Ponts, of Maldà and Maldanell, a violary worth 115 ll, pension 15 ll, annually, to which must be added outstanding debts and other amounts, which to him it is made by the noble Jerónimo de Cardona as principal together with his wife Angela and Joan de Geultrude. This "violari" must be paid during the natural life of the nobleman Joan Mora d'Arbeca and his wife Aldonça. This property belonged to the said seller due to the donation made to him by Caterina Rodés, a nun of the monastery of St Jerónimo in Barcelona, with the consent of the abbess. Joan Mora gave it to her, and Jerónimo de Cardona sold it to him and on the properties of this property called "violari." The sale price is 193 pounds 12 sous. Notary: Joan Vilar, from Barcelona, who replaced Joan Janina and had the deeds of deceased notary Pere Ripoll.

[18] Reference 2057 on page 72 of 'Catàleg dels pergamins municipals de Barcelona, Anys 1531-1559 (Volum VI)' , edited by Maria Cinta Mañé i Mas, Ajuntament de Barcelona, Institut de Cultura. Arxiu Històric de la Ciutat de Barcelona, 2011, ISBN 978-84-9850-367-8.

[19] Francisco J. Morales Roca, 'Próceres habilitados en las Cortés del Principado de Cataluña, siglo XVII: 1599 - 1713, Volume 2' .

Chapter 27

Don Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03) & Maria Anna Cortés de Monroy

27.1 Don Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03), a Notary and Local Deputy

His signature, with evidence in his acronym that his full name was Torró y Desclergue, is shown in Figure 26.1 on page 292. He is also known as Buenaventura Desclergues (DC03), he was the son of Don Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02) and Dona Prunera y Ferrer, described in Chapter 26, and he is our ancestor. Dona Prunera y Ferrer was the daughter of Juan Prunera and Catalina de Ferrer, daughter of Don de Ferrer, she is described in Chapter 26.0.2.

Buenaventura Desclergues' (DC03) descendants are shown in Figure 27.1. Through his marriage with Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán, he introduced the bloodline of Cortés into our family with an illustrious ancestry.

His grandson also married someone who descended from the Cortés branch, namely Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio.

Buenaventura Desclergues (DC03) was born when his father was already of considerable age. Therefore, we know that Dona Prunera y Ferrer, Bonaventura Desclergues's (I) (DC03) mother, must have been much younger than her husband." We can cite "Desclergue, Bonaventura I de. Notari de la vila (1546) i diputat local, pare de Bonaventura Desclergue, beneficiat de l' església de Sant Miquel, i de Francesc Desclergue. En primeres núpcies es casà amb Isabel Monseny", in the work of Josep Maria Grau i Pujol and Francesc Badia i Batalla[2].

He was born in Montblanc in Spain and died after 1579 in Montblanc. He was a Doncel and was a Notary at Montblanc. His first wife was Isabel Monseny. His second wife was Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán. Some of his notarial documents, written for others, were collected by Rafael Valldecabres Rodrigo[3] As the records show, he is called 'venerable,' 'honorable,' and similar titles.

Bonaventura Desclergue, in his role as a notary and scribe, can be seen in action in Figure 27.50 on page 319, transcribed by the author with the initial help of Dolors Domingo.[4] Within the document of 1535, Desclergue's role is clearly defined as the individual responsible for recording and transcribing the original 1320 document accurately. Bonaventura Desclergue was the notary and scribe appointed by the great lord vicar of the court. With meticulous attention to detail, Desclergue diligently recorded the events unfolding, ensuring that every word was accurately transcribed. His signature, a mark of authority and authenticity, sealed the document, affirming its validity in the eyes of the law. The decree, entrusted to Desclergue's care, held immense significance for the town of Montblanc and its inhabitants. It outlined the transfer of authority and responsibility, safeguarding the rights and privileges of its citizens for generations to come. With the stroke of his pen, Bonaventura Desclergue cemented his place in history as a custodian of justice and a guardian of the law. His role as a notary and scribe was not merely administrative but instrumental in shaping the legal landscape of Montblanc and beyond. The original document from 1320 pertains to a legal or administrative decree issued by Jacobus, the King of Aragon, concerning matters of governance and jurisdiction.

Bartholomeo Joan Coloma, in the document, appears to be another individual involved in the legal or administrative proceedings. Specifically, Coloma is mentioned in the context of holding a position of authority as a public notary in the town of Montblanc within the diocese of Tarragona. Somewhat rephrased, the document reads as follows:

"On the seventeenth day before the Kalends of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand three hundred and twentieth, it was witnessed. The seal of Jacobus, by the grace of God, King of Aragon, Valencia, Sardinia, and Corsica, and Count of Barcelona.

The witnesses are: Eximinus, Archbishop of Tarragona; Philip of Salutiis; William of Angularia; Gerald of Rocabertins; Otto of Mantechateno. The seal of Francis de Bastida, scribe of the aforesaid lord king, who, by his command, caused these to be written, with corrections made in the fourth line where it is written: "quoquomodo", and in the eighth line where it is written: "septimo decimo", and sealed.

The seal of Ambrose Tarrega, doctor of both laws, vicar of the town and vicariate of Montblanc, Diocese of Tarragona, who, with his original duly authenticated, has faithfully and properly executed this translation on behalf of our will, on the part of the truly imperial, catholic, and royal majesty, we equally impart and decree our authority, by the hand of myself, Bonaventura Desclergue, notary and scribe of the court of the said magnificent lord vicar. In whose power the said magnificent lord vicar has made this firm, on Thursday, the fourteenth day of the month of September, in the year of the nativity of our Lord one thousand five hundred and thirty-fifth; in the presence of the honorable witnesses Bernard Mediona, merchant, and Peter Fabrer, tailor, inhabitants of the town of Montblanc. Therefore, I, the said notary and aforementioned scribe, have written these and affixed here my usual notarial sign.

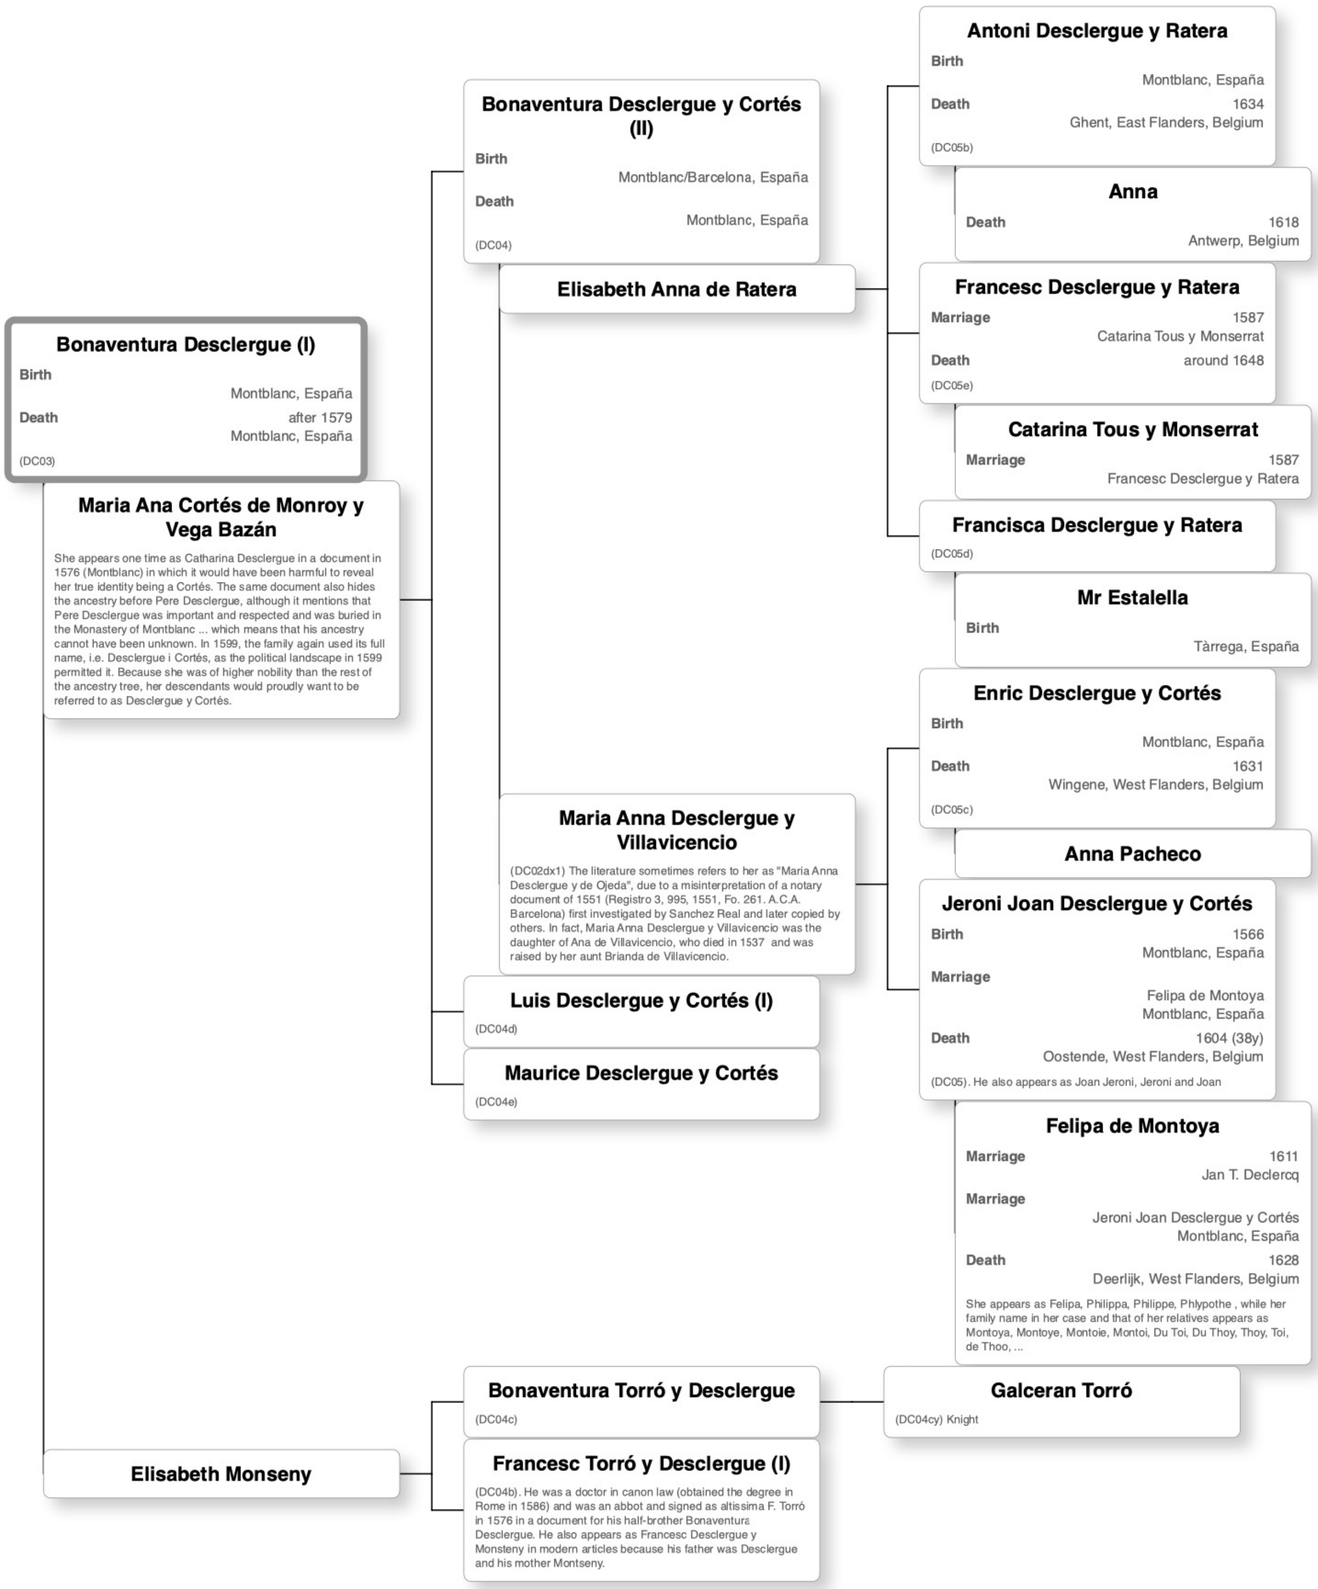
The seal of Bartholomeo Joan Coloma, native and inhabitant, by apostolic and royal authorities, of the public notaries of the town of Montblanc, Diocese of Tarragona; overseeing the documents of the archives of the council hall, in the absence of the discreet Peter Bellissen, by the royal authority as his co-notary, who, with his translation from his original found in the archive of the council hall, is said to pertain, in a certain box where all the privileges granted by the university itself are kept, and there are kept: with the license and command of the honorable Jacobus Pont and Joan Rosich, consuls of the present year, and of the undersigned of the same university and town of Montblanc, together with the honorable Jacobus Madiona, in the absence and request of the honorable Berengar Alos, deputy of the city of Balagari, taken and truly verified with him. Authorized as is apparent above by the magnificent vicar of Montblanc together with the aforesaid witnesses and his co-notary, he was present and the great seal of the said university and town of Montblanc, with red and yellow wax seals attached, was caused to be affixed in testimony of the foregoing, written and

---

[2] Josep Maria Grau i Pujol and Francesc Badia i Batalla, 'Diccionari biogràfic històric de Montblanc (1155-1920), Fundació Martí l' Humà. Tot Conca. Carrer Josa, 6, Montblanc, 2008.

[3] Rafael Valldecabres Rodrigo, 'Dos Còdexs de l' Arxiu de Poblet Sobre Sant Vicent i Quart' .

[4] Dolors Domingo, "Pergamis de Privilegis de la ciutat de Balaguer", El Comtat d'Urgell, Lleida, 1997, p. 64-65.



Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death
after 1579
Montblanc, España
(DC03)
Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.
Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death
Montblanc, España
(DC04)
Elisabeth Anna de Ratera
Antoni Desclergue y Ratera
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death
1634
Ghent, East Flanders, Belgium
(DC05b)
Anna
Death
1618
Antwerp, Belgium
Francesc Desclergue y Ratera
Marriage
1587
Catarina Tous y Monserrat
Death
around 1648
(DC05e)
Catarina Tous y Monserrat
Marriage
1587
Francesc Desclergue y Ratera
Francisca Desclergue y Ratera
(DC05d)
Mr Estalella
Birth
Tàrrega, España
Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.
Enric Desclergue y Cortés
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death
1631
Wingene, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05c)
Anna Pacheco
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Birth
1566
Montblanc, España
Marriage
Felipa de Montoya
Montblanc, España
Death
1604 (38y)
Oostende, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05). He also appears as Joan Jeroni, Jeroni and Joan
Luis Desclergue y Cortés (I)
(DC04d)
Maurice Desclergue y Cortés
(DC04e)
Felipa de Montoya
Marriage
1611
Jan T. Declercq
Marriage
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Montblanc, España
Death
1628
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
She appears as Felipa, Philippa, Philippe, Phlypothe , while her family name in her case and that of her relatives appears as Montoya, Montoye, Montoie, Montoi, Du Toi, Du Thoy, Thoy, Toi, de Thoo, ...
Bonaventura Torró y Desclergue
(DC04c)
Galceran Torró
(DC04cy) Knight
Elisabeth Monseny
Francesc Torró y Desclergue (I)
(DC04b). He was a doctor in canon law (obtained the degree in Rome in 1586) and was an abbot and signed as altissima F. Torró in 1576 in a document for his half-brother Bonaventura Desclergue. He also appears as Francesc Desclergue y Monsteny in modern articles because his father was Desclergue and his mother Montseny.

Figure 27.1: Two descending generations of Don Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03).

sealed on the fourteenth day of the month of September, in the year of the nativity of our Lord one thousand five hundred and thirty-fifth, with the addition in the fourth line of this translation where it reads: "propter et raso et emendato", in the twelfth, in the participation of witnesses where it reads: "Geraldus."

The seal of myself, Joan Muntanyola, by apostolic and royal authorities, public notary of the town of Montblanc, witness to this translation. The seal of Bonaventura Desclergue, of the town of Montblanc, Diocese of Tarragona, by apostolic and royal authorities, public notary, witness to this translation."

Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03) had two sons, Francesc Desclergue (DC04b) and Bonaventura Desclergue (DC04c) (who would be a priest), from his first marriage with Dona Elisabeth Monseny and two other children from his later marriage with Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán from Barcelona, namely Luis Desclergue y Cortés (I) (DC04d) and Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (DC04).

Bonaventura Desclergue's (DC03) children are recognized as personalities by the population or as jurisconsults.

The second wife of Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03), Doña Ana Cortés, was from Barcelona. Indeed, Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03) appears in 1578, frequently residing in Barcelona, and Luis Desclergue (I) (DC04d) was a resident in this capital, which is due to the mother's ancestry there.

On pages 179-180 of URTX índex onomàstic Personatges històrics, we find,

'DESCLERGUE, Bonaventura (noble): VII, 66.'

In particular, from 1545 until 1548, he was a local deputy of Montblanc. On September 18, 1548, he presented the accounts of his administration to the deputies and auditors of the Generalitat, which were approved.[5]

We found Desclergue Bonaventura in 1545 as notary at Montblanc in Josep Torné i Cubells.[6] In the mid-sixteenth century (1546), Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03) appeared in several preserved documents as a notary.

Several annotations are found in the notarial manuals in which he appears as a buyer or investor. He acquired, for instance, land located on the plane of Anguera, tangent to the path of Barbara[7]:

"Ego Gabrieli Vilalta presbiter oriundus loci de Vinaixa in ecclesiam ville Montísalbi beneficiatus presbiter et ex certa scientia per me et meos heredes et successores quoscumque vendo et ex causa vendicionis conceda vobis discreto Bonaventure Desclergue (DC03) notario dicte ville Montisalbi.. troçum terre quod ego ut layca et privata persona habeo possideo in termino dicte ville Montisalbi a

---

[5] Dietaris de la Generalitat de Catalonia. Anys 1539 a 1578, Barcelona, Generalitat de Catalonia, 1994, II, 33.

[6] Josep Torné i Cubells, "Catàleg de Pergamins de l'actual Arxiu del Monestir de Poblet", Item 274.

[7] Manual Notarial 3 504 (1546). Archivo Histórico de Protocolos, Tarragona

Figure 27.2: The author on the beach of Yucatan in 2009. Like Hernán Cortés, most people are highly impressed by the beautiful white beaches and gorgeous blue waters in this world area. The picture was taken at Playa del Carmen, where Hernán Cortés arrived on Yucatan after his stop-over at Isla Cozumel. The beach is 180 km East of Chichen Itza and South of Cancun. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Pedro Cortes D Monroy Coronel General y Procurador En Cortes Del Reino de Chile, Alcalde y Regidor de La Serena en Varias ocasiones, I Señor de Guana y Atelcura

Figure 27.3: The Great Conqueror captain of Chile, Captain Don Pedro Cort es de Monroy, the founder of the most aristocratic family in Chile.

Figure 27.4: Left: The authentic coat of arms of Hernán Cortés belongs to the collection of the Iberoamerican University of Mexico. The appearance of 8 Saint John (San Juan) crosses around the shield that is also used by Aragon, is of very high historical significance. Right: the coat of arms Pedro Cortés de Monroy, Chile.

AQVI ESTUVO
LA HABITACION
DONDE NACIO
HERNAN CORTES
EN 1485

Figure 27.5: Hernán Cortés de Monroy y Pizarro Altamirano, 1st Marquis of the Valley of Oaxaca, was a Spanish soldier who, at the beginning of the 16th century, led the conquest of the Mexica empire o known as the conquest of Mexico, which meant the end of said empire, putting it under the control of the Crown of Castile and giving rise to the creation of the Viceroyalty of New Spain. He was born in the Extremaduran city of Medellín in 1485. He decided to seek his fortune in the New World by traveling to Hispaniola and Cuba, where, for a short time, he was mayor of the second city founded by the Spanish during the third expedition to the mainland, which he partially financed. His enmity with the governor of Cuba, Diego Velázquez de Cuéllar, led to the cancellation of the trip at the last minute, an order that Cortés ignored. He died in Castilleja de la Cuesta, December 2, 1547. A commemorative stone is placed in Medellín, Spain, at the location of his birth.

Martín Cortés y Paz
Knight of the Golden Spur.
Leonor de Monroy y Almarez
Death 1450s
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
Marriage 1431
Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage 1431
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
She was a native of Jerez de Badajoz or Jerez de los Caballeros.
Garcia Martin Cortés de Monroy
Birth 1446
Catalina Pizarro Altamirano
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage
Maria de Vega Bazán
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Maria de Vega Bazán
Birth
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Marriage
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Hernàn Cortés de Monroy
Birth 1485
Medellín, Extremadura, Castilla, Spain
Death 1547 (62y)
Castilleja de la Cuesta, Castilla, Spain
Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán

She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.

Figure 27.6: Relationship between Anna Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazan and Hernán Cortés de Monroy. The relationship through Ana de Villavicencio is shown in Figure 25.35 on page 289, and is described in Chapter 25.1.3.2

Figure 27.7: Left is a portrait of Hernán Cortés. His uncle Alonso Cortés was our ancestor. Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán, the grandmother of Jeroni Desclergue (DC05), was his cousin. We are also related through Ana de Villavicencio, as shown in Figure 25.35 on page 289. In the middle, an image of Quetzal Coatl in the Codex Magliabechiano (16th century) is shown. The God is often depicted with a cross, a sign that the Aztecs must have confused with the cross worn by the Spanish Conquistadors, to begin with, Hernán Cortés. Right are photos, taken by the author in 2002, of the head of Quetzal Coatl at Chichen Itza on a location other than the El Castillo Pyramid; and the Raingod Chac at Chichen Itza. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 27.8: 'Tornado Over Kansas,' 1929 painting by John Steuart Curry (Courtesy of the Muskegon Art Museum, Muskegon, Kansas, USA). The artist John Steuart Curry (1897 - 1946) was an American naturalistic painter who pictured the American people in their struggle for life, pride, happiness, and setbacks. 'Tornado in Kansas' is a typical example of his works and depicts a family searching for safety in their tornado shelter. The twister in the back is what the Aztecs associated with Quetzalcoatl. When the author's father died at the end of June 2015, a week after his funeral, he visited his grave covered with flowers in pots. While he stood there, a small tornado appeared above the grave and laid down all the flowers. Although physics laws can describe the phenomenon, it seemed like a sign from above that his father had reached his destination and was in good hands. Perhaps even more striking is that the Aztec interpretation would have been the Quetzalcoatl deity and its presumed connection to our ancestral cousin Hernán Cortés de Monroy. Life is a mystery, and so is death. Although it took the author another five years to link a tornado to our ancestors, the event must have been the most transparent and meaningful sign ever received. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 27.9: Painting of Hernán Cortés with La Malinche as translator, negotiating with Taxcaltecans (Fresco by Desiderio Hernández Xochitiotzin, in el Palacio de Gobierno at Tlaxcala (photo of 2005, when the author visited Santa Cruz in Tlaxcala and gave a keynote presentation there on the acoustics of Chichen Itza, Yucatan - Public Domain as per Ley Federal de Derechos de Autor article 148, VII). (Declercq de Silva Archive)

3
Cuba
2
1
5
4
c Yucatán
9
8
7
6
1. Santiago de Cuba (18 Nov 1518)
2. Trinidad
3. San Cristobal de la Habana (18 Feb 1519
4. Isla Cosumel (21 Feb 1519)
5. Cabo Cartoche
6. Potochán
7. Villa Rica de la Vera Cruz
8. Tlaxcala
9. Tenochtitlan (8 Nov 1518)
c. Chichen Itzá

Figure 27.10: The journey of Hernàn Cortès.

Long West 98 of Greenw.
GULF OF MEXICO
Plateau of Anahuac
Tenochtitlan
Texcuco
Tlaxcala
Cholula
Puebla de los Angeles
Tepeaca
Jalapa
Cempoalla
Villa Rica de la Vera Cruz
Vera Cruz
Orizaba
Toluca
Cuernavaca
Volcano of Iztaccihuatl
Volcano of Popocatepetl
Volcano of Orizaba
Citlaltepetl
Cofre de Perote
Route of Cortés from Vera Cruz to Mexico, April-November, 1519.
Scale 1:3000000
Miles

Figure 27.11: The road taken by Hernán Cortés from Veracruz via Tlaxcala to Tenochtitlan.

Figure 27.12: Fresco of Tenochtitlan by Diego de Rivera (1886-1957) at the National Palace in Mexico City. La Malinche is depicted on the right-hand side. (the photo was taken in 2005 - public Domain as per Ley Federal de Derechos de Autor article 148, VII) (Declercq de Silva Archive)

la plana de Anguera.. cum camino de Barberano... ".

Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03) was a local deputy and was, as such, quoted by the General Deputation of Catalonia[8]:

"Instrumentum presentacionis quondam litterarum revocatorum et citacionarum emanatorum a domini Deputatis Generalis Cathalonie dat. Barch, xxiii presentis mensis maij sub signat. per Dni. Jacobum Cassador ex in B. Vicar. P. Albanell assesores et vicarium de viso sigillat ac aliis solemnitatibus expeditus sortis per Gasparem Pallas passamanorum cive Tarracone ut procuratorem offertum Angeli Carcassona hon. Bonaventure Desclergue deputato locali ville Monsalbi."

He also bought a walled garden, in which there was a house in ruins, located near the 'portal d' en Tous,' next to the wall and adjacent to the road called 'del Rio' [9]:

Fco. Frexa mercator civi Tarracone.. Margarita uxor Augustini Frexa patris mai noverca mea el Joanna uxor mea.. vendo vobis honor. et discreto Bonaventure Desclergue not.. ortum parietibus circum clausum qui olim erat domus dirrute una cum quodam camara ipsi orto contigua.. proper portale vulgo dictus d' en Thous.. cum via dicti portalis, ex alia cum muro dicte ville ex alia cum vico vulgo dicto de Riu."

He equally appeared as the owner of an orchard near the house of the dye, which should have been located in the suburb of Raval[10]:

...casale sive casa del tint.. ab lo perol, tina y altres aynes utensilies ac dit tint.. affronta ex una parte cum orto vener. Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03) not. ex alía cum vico quo tenditur ad sequiam dicta Parellada et ex alia partibus cum dicta sequia mediante alio vico... ".

The family of Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03) inhabited, in 1549, a house in Calle Mayor (Main Street) in Montblanc. Indeed, the famous Desclergue house on Main Square still had to be constructed.

Another reference to Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03) or his son Bonaventura (II) (DC04), says[11]:

"Ego Bonaventara Dezclergue (DC06) not. ville Montisalbi, agens hec tanquam paser et legittimus, administrator Bonaventure filli mei clerici olim beneficiati benefici sub invocatione Sancti Michaelis in ecclesiam eiusdem invocationis dicte ville Montísalbi et quondam Arnaldus Jover instituto..."

In 1566, we found a reference declaring that Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03) was the heir of his father Berenguer (DC02) and was a notary of Montblanc. He had two marriages; the first marriage was with Isabel Monseny, the daughter of Francesc and Joana,

---

[8] Manual Notarial 3 506 (1548). Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona

[9] Manual Notarial 3 506 (1549). 4 enero. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.

[10] Manual Notarial 3 506 (1549). 2 abril. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.

[11] Manual Notarial 3 506 (1549). 23 ene. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.

CONGRESO INTERNACIONAL DE ACÚSTICA
26-28 DE OCTUBRE 2005, SANTA CRUZ TLAXCALA
foto:imagen_matiz@yahoo.com

Figure 27.13: The author at a congress in Santa Cruz Tlaxcala, October 26-28, 2005. In the picture, Mexican-born Hilda Lucia Estrella Rodriguez is equally seen, the fifth person from the left on the first row; she is Russian-born Leo Lev's wife. Since then, the latter couple has become very good friends of the author and always formed a beacon of light for him during his frequent and long stays in Atlanta in the past decades. They have wise, well-mannered and amiable children. Despite the long distance from Europe, the couple is two of the author's best friends. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

who made a testimony on February 18, 1566[12], and the second marriage was with Anna Cortés de Monroy.

On April 14, 1576, Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03) asked Lluís-Joan de Castellví i Roig, the mayor of Montblanc, to certify his status as a nobleman[13].

There are two other significant references to this Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03). One of them is that in 1577, he maintained a lawsuit with the treasurer and convent of Santes Creus[14].

The death of Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03) occurred after January 29, 1579. This year, we have found him mentioned for the last time in a will related to the goods of his son Francesc Desclergue y Monseny (DC04b), who inherited from his mother[15]. The other is the sale, in 1579, of a house that he had in Montblanc, on the Plaza de San Miguel, for 230 Barcelonese pounds, to Pere Monparler, a merchant from Cambrils; and the sale of some lands, to Juan Llort, a farmer from Rojals, for 120 Barcelonese pounds, and located in the upper garden of the Parellada[16]. The wording of the document, in which he appears as the administrator of his son, indicates that these properties were from the estate of his deceased wife, Dona Elisabeth Monseny.

27.2 Maria Ana Cortes de Monroy y Vega Bazan, her Lineage and Relatives

Maria Ana Cortes de Monroy y Vega Bazan, just like Ana de Villavicencio, exposed in Chapter 25.1.3.2 and blood-relative of Conquistador Hernán Cortés, described in Chapter 27.20, as our ancestor, is vital in understanding an archaeological artifact at the chapel of Deerlijk, as outlined in Chapter 49.4.2.

Maria Ana Cortes de Monroy y Vega Bazan was the wife of Don Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03), described in Chapter 27.1. Her ancestry is shown in Figure 27.35. The ancestors of Maria-Anna Cortés de Monroy include Pacheco, Portocarrero, and Ponce de Leon. Note that the Desclergues are connected to Pacheco, as outlined in Chapter 33.4.2 on page 516, or Chapter 19.15.3 on page 188.

Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán's parents[17] were Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz, described in Chapter 27.6, and Maria de Vega Bazán, described in Chapter 27.3. They married in Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain. She was the wife of Don Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03).

Maria de Vega Bazán was the daughter of Diego de Vega y Sessé and Mayor de Bazán, and she was born in Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain. She married Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz in Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain. She is described in Chapter 27.3. Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz, described in Chapter 27.6, husband of Maria de Vega Bazán, was the son of Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy and Ana Sánchez de Badajoz. Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy and Ana Sánchez de Badajoz married in 1431, and the latter was a native of Jerez de Badajoz or Jerez de los Caballeros. Note that they were ancestors of Ana de Villavicencio, equally our ancestor, described in Chapter 25.1.3.2.

Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) where it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity as a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue. However, it mentions that Pere Desclergue was influential and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc, which implies that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e., Desclergue y Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants

---

[12] Arxiu Comarcal de Tàrrega, Fons Pedrolo, Fons Pedrolo, sign. top. 6

[13] Arxiu Comarcal de Tàrrega, Fons Pedrolo, Fons Pedrolo, sign. top. 52.

[14] Registro 4 812 (1577) Fol. 35 v. A.C.A. Barcelona. Nota facilitada por doña Mercedes Costa

[15] Arxiu Històric de Tarragona, Fons notarial de Montblanc, reg. 3507.

[16] Manual. Notarial 3 507. (1579). 3 febrero. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.

[17] Unlike other investigations in this book which have been a combination of existing literature and own discoveries, we rely, in this chapter, on works published by other genealogists and research done by Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal.

Figure 27.14: Tlaxcala looks a bit like Spain nowadays. If the planes looked similar when Cortés arrived, he just felt at home (2005). Right is the 'Catedral Metropolitana de la Asunción de la Santísima Virgen María a los cielos' , in Mexico City (Tenochtitlan), in 2005. The cathedral was built from 1573 onward and was completed in 1813. It's dedicated to the assumption of Mary, was consecrated in 1656, and is made of Chiluca Stone. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Res fuerat quondam preſtans, & Gloria ſumma
Orbis ſubiectus Ceſaris Imperio,
Hic longe preſtat, cuius nunc Orbis Eous,
Et Nouus, atq; alter panditur Auſpitijs.
yucatan
Puncta de Cuba
La florida
Rio panu
Templum
Capita
Quilibet punctus magnus continet leucas duodecim cũ dimidia, ita φ duo magni puncti continent viginti quinq; leucas, Cõtinet autẽ leuca quatuor Italica miliaria, ita φ omnes puncti qui hic cõſpi

Figure 27.15: In 1524, a map was published in Nuremberg, together with Latin copies of Hernán Cortés's letters to Emperor Charles V. It was the first image shown to the Europeans, of Tenochtitlan under the Habsburg imperial flag. Historians believe that the map was based on the Aztecs' original drawings and, therefore, indicates how they viewed their capital. The plan is oriented with the North at the bottom.

Figure 27.16: Left is the El Castillo pyramid of Chichen Itza when it was re-discovered in modern times. Right is the author, with his daughter Anna-Laura and son Benjamin, at the same location in 2009. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 27.17: These pictures were taken in 2002. Several periodic structures exist at Chichen Itza, acting as a phononic crystal or a meta-material. The author belonged to the pathfinders in research on such materials and, despite his essential focus on nondestructive testing of materials, produced several pioneering papers in this field. Right, we see the astronomical observatory of the Mayans. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

ACOUSTICAL · SOCIETY · OF · AMERICA

Charles E. Schmid
Executive Director

Elaine Moran
Office Manager

Suite 1NO1
2 Huntington Quadrangle
Melville, NY 11747-4502
Tel: 516-576-2360
FAX: 516-576-2377
E-mail: asa@aip.org

30 December 2002

Mr. Nico F. Declercq
Dept. of Mech. Cons. and Production
Ghent Univ.
Sint Pietersnieuwstraat 41
9000 Gent Belgium

Dear Mr. Declercq:

Congratulations, you have been named the winner of the First Prize in the Best Student Paper Award in Physical Acoustics at the First Pan-American/Iberian Meeting on Acoustics.

The award check in the amount of $300.00 is enclosed.

Sincerely,

Elaine Moran

Elaine Moran

Enclosures

Figure 27.18: The letter received from the Acoustical Society of America, announcing that the author had won the first prize. He was still early in his PhD at that time. (Declercq de Silva Archive) would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.

The family Cortés de Monroy is, in modern literature, frequently referred to as Cortés because the conquistador and ruler over Mexico, Hernàn Cortés de Monroy, is typically called Cortés. Historians glorify Hernàn Cortés de Monroy's ancestry or state that little is known. On the other hand, many historians are not very positive in their description of the personal life of Hernàn Cortés de Monroy. In contrast, others try to find a balance and claim that much of the negativity is influenced by propaganda spread by competitors of Cortés during his life and after that. The author has decided to remain neutral and considers that personal decisions made by Cortés are not necessarily representative of his blood relatives and their lineages. Therefore, for genealogical reasons, there is no reason to exclude Hernàn Cortés de Monroy or any of his relatives from this book. A similarity between the author's heraldic shield and that of Hernàn Cortés de Monroy, as shown in Figure 23.3 on page 249, is only a coincidence.

The author crossed paths with Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal, who has studied the ancestry and history of this family and has revealed convincing facts and documentation to show a genealogy of the Cortés de Monroy family that is realistic yet remarkable, as will be outlined below. A lot of what Cortés Rosal discovered was not published earlier and shed light on the importance of this family and their ancestry in Spain's history and that of the New World.

It's equally essential to explain Anna Cortés de Monroy's ancestry[18] to understand archaeological artifacts at the chapel of Deerlijk, as described in Chapter 49.4.2. Her ancestry also assists in understanding genetic links with, among others, the Count of Barcelona and Queen Petronila of Aragon. Anna Cortés de Monroy was a cousin of Hernán Cortés de Monroy, described in Chapter 27.20 and a descendant of an illustrious family of bloodlines of high significance in Spain's history and that of the New World.

The ancestry of Maria Ana Cortes de Monroy y Vega Bazan is illustrious. Among her ancestors are the Count of Barcelona, Don Ramón Berenguer IV, and Queen Petronila of Aragon. The ancestry is partially seen in the literature, partially by fragments from genealogical data discovered by the author, and, in particular, the extensive research done by Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal[19][20][21]. The latter is a Venezuelan-Spanish historian and genealogist who earns all the credit for providing the author with an enormous amount of information about the ancestry of Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega.

Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal is a descendant of Don Alonso Martín Cortés, who was a Notary and Royal Notary of the Archbishopric of Santa Fé de Bogotá, native of Alange in Extremadura, and who passed to the New Kingdom of Granada with the Archbishop Doctor Don Luis Zapata de Cárdenas.

---

[18] Unlike other investigations in this book which have been a combination of existing literature and own discoveries, we rely, in this chapter, on works published by other genealogists and research done by Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal.

[19] Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal created the Santa Fe de Bogotá Genealogy team, led by Fenita Hollman de Villaveces, in Bogotá

[20] Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal is a descendant of Don Enrique de Guzmán, the Count of Niebla of the Ducal House of Medina-Sidonia.

[21] His grandfather is Juan Flórez de Ocariz, a Royal Notary in the Viceroyalty of New Granada in Santa Fe de Bogotá and was a great genealogist. He wrote the excellent work 'Genealogies of the New Kingdom of Granada.'

Figure 27.19: The author 's family on a beach between Cancun and Cozumel in 2009. The author has good memories of Cancun, as shown in Figure 27.18. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 27.20: Greece can be cold and wet, something the author experienced during a visit in 2003. Thessaloniki has exciting archaeology thanks to excavations done for the Metro system. The Epidaurus theater in Greece is shown in the middle. May 26, 2003, just after the author had returned from a visit to Greece, it was his mother's birthday, and he had to rush to Brussels to defend his PhD grant renewal at the Flemish Applied Science Foundation (IWT). Benjamin is seen pretending to be happy for having received a shirt from Greece. As scientists, we can, unfortunately, not take our family everywhere. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 27.21: In July 1997, in Kataragama, Sri Lanka, the author discovered a fascinating phenomenon: clapping hands while crossing the Menik Ganga River causes echoes resembling quacking ducks on the staircases along its shores. This discovery was also featured in the author's 2005 interview with Nature News. Kataragama is a pilgrimage town sacred to Vedda, Hindu, and Buddhists, with a shrine dedicated to Kataragama Deviyo. The author visited during the Poson full moon festival in 1997, traveling by bus from Colombo with his wife. Amidst the festival, he was the sole foreign attendee, cherishing memories of warm sand and elephants strolling nearby. The diverse sacrificial rituals during the Perahera left a lasting impression. The author captured a photo the morning after this memorable experience. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Figure 27.22: The remains of Hernán Cortés on November 28, 1946.

Figure 27.23: Cadiz, 2002, left, and June 16, 2003, right, at the University of Cadiz. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya
Birth
Salamanca, Spain
He was a doctor of law and was at the king's court several times. He was a very aristocratic person.
Catalina de Boil
Birth
Kingdom of Aragon
Juan Rodríguez de las Varillas
Birth
Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Knight of the Order of the Band, and the most important man in the city of Salamanca in his time.
María Fernández de Monroy
Birth
Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Diego Gómez de Almaraz
Birth
Plasencia, Spain
Don Diego Gómez de Almaraz descended, along with his surname family line of Almaraz, from an ancient and noble Christianized Arab family that owned immense territories of land in the region of Cáceres in Extremadura. Note that only along the Almarez line does he descend distantly from an Arab family, several generations before him, not through other branches of his ancestry.
In fact, Al-Marash was the family name that, when the family converted to Christianity, was Spanishized as Almaraz, and that would later also take its territorial possessions as its name. This family, given its wealth and seniority in the region of Cáceres, and after supporting the cause of the Trastamara, raised its social and economic position due to the royal grants received, being able to connect with main Christian families in Extremadura, such as the Altamirano, Hinojosa, Orellana, Carvajal, Pizarro, Tapia and Bote among others.
María Blázquez de Tapia
Birth
Trujillo, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Alonso García Cortés
Birth
Kingdom of Aragon
Marriage
Inés de Paz y Boil
Salamanca, Spain
Knight of the Golden Spur in 1384 by the King of Aragón Pedro IV.
Don Alonso García Cortes (known as Alonso or Alfonso Garcia de Cortes or Garcia Cortes), who went from the Kingdom of Aragon to the kingdom of Castile to serve the causes of the Christian reconquest, married Inés de Paz in the city of Salamanca, daughter of Doctor Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya and Catalina Boil, who was his relative.
Inés de Paz y Boil
Marriage
Alonso García Cortés
Salamanca, Spain
Doña Inés de Paz was the daughter of doctor Don Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya and Doña Catalina de Boil, who had passed to the Kingdom of Castile in the entourage that Doña Leonor de Aragon carried when she married the infante Don Juan de Castilla in the year 1375. Her mother, Catalina de Boil, was a relative of her husband, Alonso García Cortés.
Fernán Rodríguez de Monroy
Birth
Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
The Lord of Monroy.
Isabel de Almaraz
Birth
Almaraz, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Martín Cortés y Paz
Knight of the Golden Spur.
Leonor de Monroy y Almarez
Death
1450s
Cristóbal Sánchez de Badajoz
Knight of Jerez de Badajoz
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
Marriage
1431
Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage
1431
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
She was a native of Jerez de Badajoz or Jerez de los Caballeros.
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage
Maria de Vega Bazán
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain

Figure 27.24: Four ancestral generations of Alonso Martin Cortes de Monroy y Sanchez de Badajoz. The ancestors of Pedro de Paz y Gomez de Anaya can be found in Figure 27.40, the ones of Catalina de Boil in Figure 27.25, the ones of Juan Rodriguez de las Varillas in Figure 27.33, the ones of Maria Fernandez de Monroy in Figure 27.37, and those of Isabel de Almaraz in Figure 27.32. The reader is also referred to Figure 27.42 and Figure 27.45.

Garcia Garcés de Boil
Second Lord of Boil.
Ximena Ferrench de Luna
Ximena Ferrench de Luna was linked with the Kings of Navarra and Aragon. Her ancestor was Bacalla or Bachalla de Luna, an Arab emir who was the Lord of Luna. Bachalla de Luna was the son of Lope Ferrench and his wife Ximena Martínez, daughter of Martín Gómez. Bachalla de Luna is credited with having participated in the reconquest of Luna, after which he would have been named its first lieutenant and, according to what is said in the Chronicle of San Juan de la Peña, having fought alongside his sons Lope Ferrench I of Luna and Gómez I de Luna at the battle of Alcoraz on November 15, 1096.
Ximeno de Urrea
Oria Iñiguez
Pedro de Boil
Lord of Boil.
María Ximénez de Urrea
Guerau de Cervelló
Death
1193
Berenguera de Timor
Garcia de Boil
Lord of Boil.
Toda de Foces
Guillem de Cervelló
Elvira de Artusela
Pedro de Boil y Foces
Ermesenda de Cervellón
Guerau de Boil y Cervellón
Valencia
Several Generations de Boil
Catalina de Boil
Birth
Kingdom of Aragon

Figure 27.25: Ancestral generations of Catalina de Boil. Her position on our ancestry tree is shown in Figure 27.24. The ancestry of Pedro de Boil y Foces is given in Figure 27.39 and that of Ermesenda de Cervellon is shown in Figure 27.27.

Ramon Borrell de Barcelona
Birth 972
Death 1017 (45y)
Count of Girona, Osana and Barcelona
Ermessende de Carcassonne
Berenguer Ramon I of Barcelona
Birth 1005
Death 1035 (30y)
Sancha de Castilla
Ramon Berenguer I of Barcelona
Birth 1023
Death 1076 (53y)
Almodis de la Marche
Birth 1023
Death 1071 (48y)
Countess of Barcelona from 1052 until 1071.
Ramon Berenguer II of Barcelona
Birth 1053
Death 1082 (29y)
Maud de Apulia
Birth 1060
Death 1112 (52y)
Ramón Berenguer III of Barcelona
Birth 1082
Death 1131 (49y)
Douce de Provence
Birth 1090
Death 1127 (37y)
Ramón Berenguer IV of Barcelona
Birth 1131 Barcelona, España
Death 1162 (31y) Borgo San Dalazzo, Italy
Petronila de Aragon
Birth 1136
Death 1173 (37y)
Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza
Marriage 1188 Sancha Nuñez de Lara
He stayed in Salamanca between 1168 and 1181. He had two illegitimate children who were later legitimized by Pope Celestine III (Giacinto Orsini from Rome)

Figure 27.26: Ancestral generations of Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza. His position in our ancestry is shown in Figure 27.33 and Figure 27.28. The reader is also referred to Figure 27.48.

Guerau de Cervelló
Death 1193
Berenguera de Timor
Guillem de Cervelló
Elvira de Artusela
Ermesenda de Cervellón

Figure 27.27: Two ancestral generations of Ermesenda de Cervellon. Her position in our ancestry is shown in Figure 27.25.

Ramon Borrell de Barcelona
Birth 972
Death 1017 (45y)
Count of Girona, Osana and Barcelona
Ermessende de Carcassonne
Berenguer Ramon I of Barcelona
Birth 1005
Death 1035 (30y)
Sancha de Castilla
Ramon Berenguer I of Barcelona
Birth 1023
Death 1076 (53y)
Almodis de la Marche
Birth 1023
Death 1071 (48y)
Countess of Barcelona from 1052 until 1071.
Ramon Berenguer II of Barcelona
Birth 1053
Death 1082 (29y)
Maud de Apulia
Birth 1060
Death 1112 (52y)
Ramón Berenguer III of Barcelona
Birth 1082
Death 1131 (49y)
Douce de Provence
Birth 1090
Death 1127 (37y)
Alfonso VII of Leon
King
Berenguela de Barcelona
Ramón Berenguer IV of Barcelona
Birth 1131 Barcelona, España
Death 1162 (31y) Borgo San Dalazzo, Italy
Petronila de Aragon
Birth 1136
Death 1173 (37y)
Sancho VI de Navarra
Birth 1133 Pamplona, España
Death 1194 (61y)
The Wise. King of Pamplona and Navarra.
Sancha de Castilla
Don Godhino
Alfonso Godinez
Inés Pérez de Tenorio
Inés Godinez
Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza
Marriage 1188 Sancha Nuñez de Lara
He stayed in Salamanca between 1168 and 1181. He had two illegitimate children who were later legitimized by Pope Celestine III (Giacinto Orsini from Rome)
Gil Podavila or Bodavila
Birth France
Death Estella, Navarra, Spain
Knight Templar. Also known as Gil Podavila / Bodavila / Bouteville. His nephews in England were also Knights Templar: Geoffrey Boteville and Oliver Boteville (Geoffroy de Bouteville/Olivier de Bouteville).
He went on to settle in the Court of his second cousin Sancho VI of Navarra the Wise, where he married Doña María Sánchez de Navarra, youngest daughter of his cousin the King Don Sancho VI of Navarre the Wise
Maria Sanchez of Navarra
Princess
Gonzalo Rodríguez de Azagra or Ruiz de Azagra
Gonzalo Rodríguez de Azagra. Royal Ensign 1180 - 1181 of Fernando II of León. Lord tenant in Salamanca in 1179. Master of the Order of the Temple.
Don Pedro Sánchez de Varillas
Lord of Barillas in Navarre.
Urraca Gil
Rodrígo Ruiz de Azagra
Estefanía Pérez de Baztan
Aunt of Gonzalo Ibañez de Bazán.
Sancho Pérez de Varillas
Birth Cerdanya, Spain
Estefanía Rodríguez de Azagra or Ruiz de Azagra
Rodrigo Ruiz de Varillas
Estefania Rodríguez de Varillas

Figure 27.28: Ancestral generations of Estefania Rodriguez de Varillas. Her position in our ancestry is shown in Figure 27.37. The ancestry of Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza is shown in Figure 27.26, while that of Maria Sanchez of Navarra is given in Figure 27.38.

Fernan Perez de Saavedra
Mayor de Ulloa
Pedro de Monroy
Mayor de Saavedra
Pedro Fernández de Monroy
Nuño Freyre de Andrade
Maria de Ulloa
Pedro Fernandez de Monroy
Elvira Núñez de Andrade y Ulloa
Birth 1255
Fernán Pérez de Monroy
Death 1351
Plasencia, Reino de Castile y Leon, España

Figure 27.29: Four ancestral generations of Fernan Perez de Monroy. His location on our ancestry tree is shown in Figure 27.37. The reader is also referred to Figure 27.44.

Ramiro I de Aragón
King
Ermesinda de Bigoire
Sancho Ramírez de Aragón
count
Beatriz
Gastón IV de Bearne
Viscount
Talesa de Aragón
Garcia Aznarez de Boil
García Aznarez I , the Lord tenant of Boil. Descendant of the ancient Counts of Aragón Aznar II Galíndez and Onneca Garcés of Pamplona.
Teresa de Bearne y Aragon
Garcia Garcés de Boil
Second Lord of Boil.

Figure 27.30: Four ancestral generations of Garcia Garces de Boil. His position in our ancestry is shown in Figure 27.39. The reader is also referred to Figure 27.47.

27.2.1 Don Cristóbal Cortés de Monroy

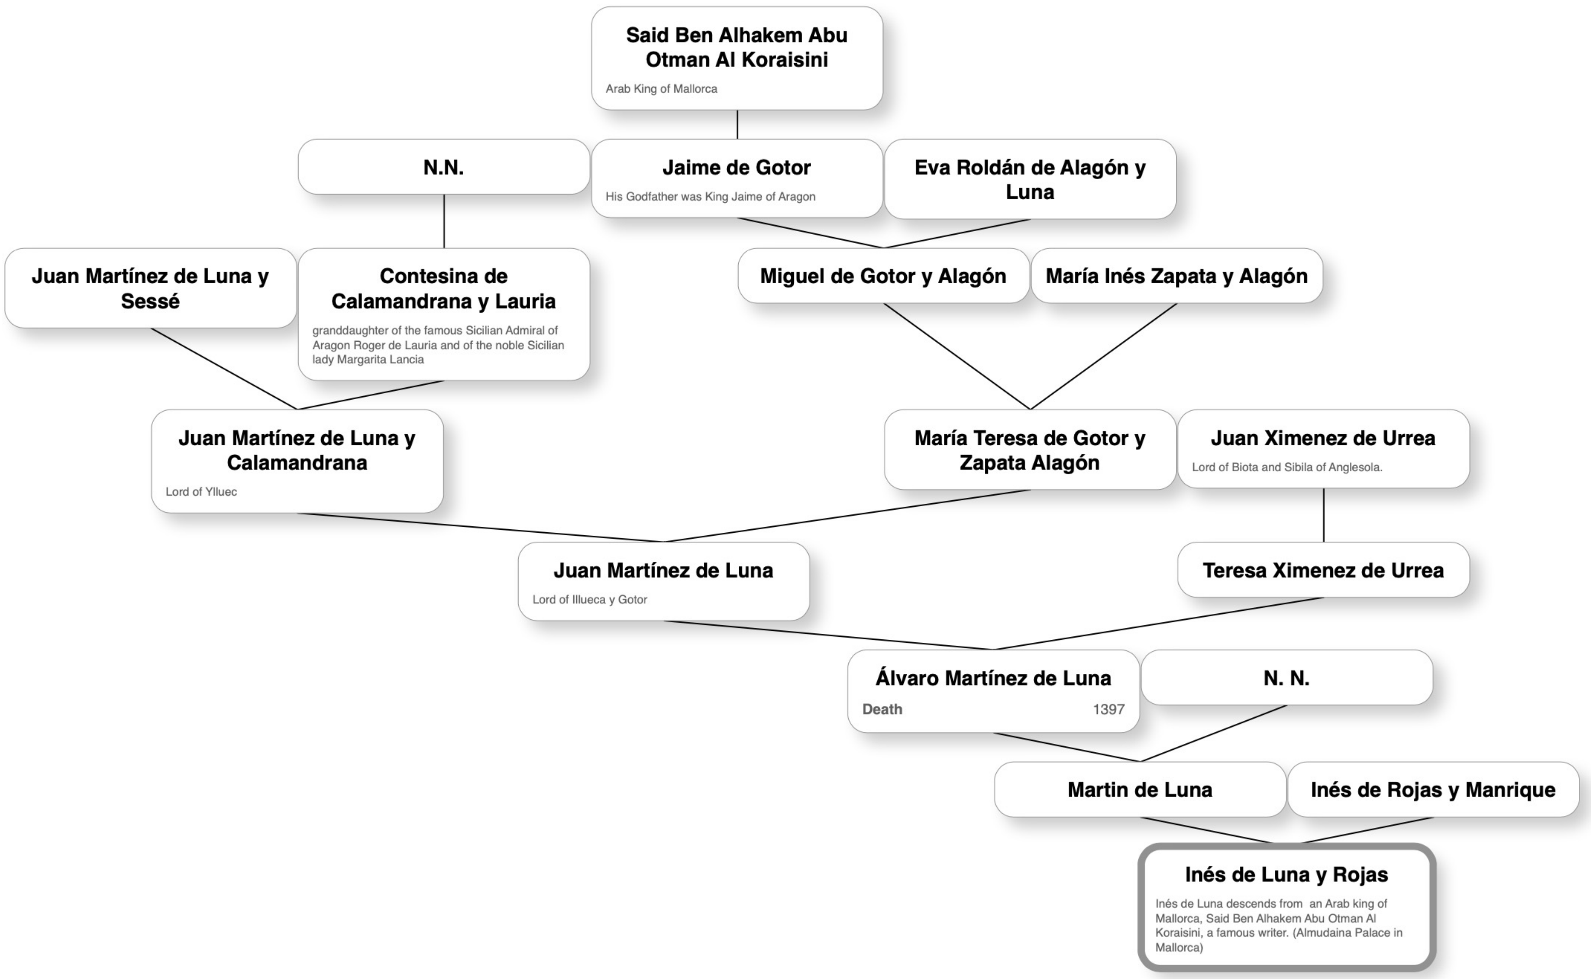
Cortés Rosal revealed the following information:
The brother of Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán was Don Cristóbal Cortés de Monroy or Cristóbal Sánchez Cortés and was a notary in Don Benito and Alange. His son, Alonso Martín Cortés, was Notary of Alange and Notary of Archbishop Luis Zapata de Cárdenas in Santa Fe de Bogotá. The archbishop had taken him to the New Kingdom because his niece was married to a cousin of Alonso Martín Cortés.
Alonso Martín de Cortés, Ecclesiastical Notary of the Archbishopric in the New Kingdom of Granada, had a son who was Regidor of Santa Fe de Bogotá, Don Juan Bautista Cortés, who married a significant woman, Doña Beatriz de Olalla Vasconcelos, granddaughter of the very famous conqueror Captain Don Gómez de Silva Vasconcelos from Caracas in Venezuela.
It is practically certain that Maria Cortes de Monroy and Bonaventura Desclergue (I) met each other at Jerez de la Frontera, where merchants from Aragon and other areas met for trade.

27.3 Maria de Vega Bazan

Her ancestry is shown in Figure 27.36. Maria de Vega Bazan was the mother of Maria Ana Cortes de Monroy y Vega Bazan, described in Chapter 27.2.
Maria de Vega Bazán was born in Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain. She was married to Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz in Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain.
The parents of Maria de Vega Bazán were Diego de Vega y Sessé, Señor del Portazgo de Badajoz, and the son of Diego de Vega Bonifaz and Juana Sessé de Luna, and Mayor de Bazán. The descendants of Diego de Vega y Sessé are shown in Figure 27.43.
Diego de Vega Bonifaz was the son of Lope Fernández de Vega, described in Chapter 27.4, and Luisa Bonifaz. Juana Sessé de Luna was the daughter of Gracián de Sessé y Luna and Inés de Luna y Rojas.
Gracián de Sessé y Luna was Alcaide of the Trujillo fortress and the Lord of San Felices de los Gallegos. He married his cousin Inés de Luna y Rojas, the daughter of Martin de Luna and Inés de Rojas.
Inés de Luna y Rojas, described in Chapter 27.5, descends from an Arab king of Mallorca, Said Ben Alhakem Abu Otman Al Koraisini, a famous writer, who lived at the Almudaina Palace in Mallorca.

27.4 Lope Fernandez de Vega

His ancestry is shown in Figure 27.34.
Lope Fernández de Vega was married to Luisa Bonifaz, and their son was Diego De Vega Bonifaz, described in Chapter 27.3.
Lope Fernández de Vega was the son of Lope Fernández de Vega and Juana de Bazán. The latter was the daughter of Aldonza de Villamayor and García de Bazán. The latter was the son of Juana de Almoravid and Juan González de Bazán. The latter was the son of Aldonza Cornel and Gonzalo Ibáñez de Bazán. The latter was the son of Juan Pérez de Baztan and Toda Ibáñez de Azagra. The latter was the daughter of Teresa Ibáñez de Guevara and Fernando Rodríguez de Azagra, the Lord of Albarracín.



Said Ben Alhakem Abu Otman Al Koraisini
Arab King of Mallorca
N.N.
Jaime de Gotor
His Godfather was King Jaime of Aragon
Eva Roldán de Alagón y Luna
Juan Martínez de Luna y Sessé
Contesina de Calamandrana y Lauria granddaughter of the famous Sicilian Admiral of Aragon Roger de Lauria and of the noble Sicilian lady Margarita Lancia
Miguel de Gotor y Alagón
María Inés Zapata y Alagón
Juan Martínez de Luna y Calamandrana
Lord of Ylluec
María Teresa de Gotor y Zapata Alagón
Juan Ximenez de Urrea
Lord of Biota and Sibila of Anglesola.
Juan Martínez de Luna
Lord of Illueca y Gotor
Teresa Ximenez de Urrea
Álvaro Martínez de Luna
Death 1397
N. N.
Martin de Luna
Inés de Rojas y Manrique
Inés de Luna y Rojas
Inés de Luna descends from an Arab king of Mallorca, Said Ben Alhakem Abu Otman Al Koraisini, a famous writer. (Almudaina Palace in Mallorca)

Figure 27.31: Seven ancestral generations of Ines de Luna y Rojas. Her position in our ancestry is shown in Figure 27.36. The reader is also referred to Figure 27.46.

27.5 Ines de Luna y Rojas

The Luna family belongs to the highest and oldest nobility of Spain. Illustrations are shown in Figure 27.51 on page 319, and Figure 27.49 on page 319.

Ines de Luna y Rojas' ancestry is shown in Figure 27.31. Inés de Luna y Rojas and Gracián de Sessé y Luna were the grandparents of Maria de Vega Bazán, described in Chapter 27.3.

Inés de Luna y Rojas descends from an Arab king of Mallorca, Said Ben Alhakem Abu Otman Al Koraisini, a famous writer. (Almudaina Palace in Mallorca)

She was the daughter of Martin de Luna and Inés de Rojas y Manrique.

Martin de Luna was the son of Álvaro Martínez de Luna, who died in 1397, and who was the son of Juan Martínez de Luna, the Lord of Illueca y Gotor, and Teresa Ximenez de Urrea, the daughter of Juan Ximenez de Urrea, the Lord of Biota and Sibila of Anglesola.

Juan Martínez de Luna, the Lord of Illueca y Gotor, was the son of Juan Martínez de Luna y Calamandrana, the Lord of Ylluec, and María Teresa de Gotor y Zapata Alagón.

Juan Martínez de Luna y Calamandrana was the son of Juan Martínez de Luna y Sessé and Contesina de Calamandrana y Lauria. The latter was the granddaughter of the famous Sicilian Admiral of Aragon Roger de Lauria and the noble Sicilian lady Margarita Lancia. Her family and descendants are shown in Figure 27.46.

María Teresa de Gotor y Zapata Alagón was the daughter of Miguel de Gotor y Alagón and María Inés Zapata y Alagón.

Miguel de Gotor y Alagón was the son of Jaime de Gotor and Eva Roldán de Alagón y Luna.

Jaime de Gotor had King Jaime of Aragon as his Godfather, and he was the son of Said Ben Alhakem Abu Otman Al Koraisini, known as Abu Yahya, the Arab King of Mallorca.

Abu Yahya,[22] the King of Mallorca, was famous for his letters and in addition to being a man famous for his beauty and great physical attractiveness that outshone his subjects when he toured the city. He died in the War of the Conquest of Mallorca.

Abu Yahya, shown in Figure 27.54, Mallorca's last Muslim ruler, died in 1229. He was an ancestor of Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán, Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) grandmother. He is, therefore, also our distant ancestor.

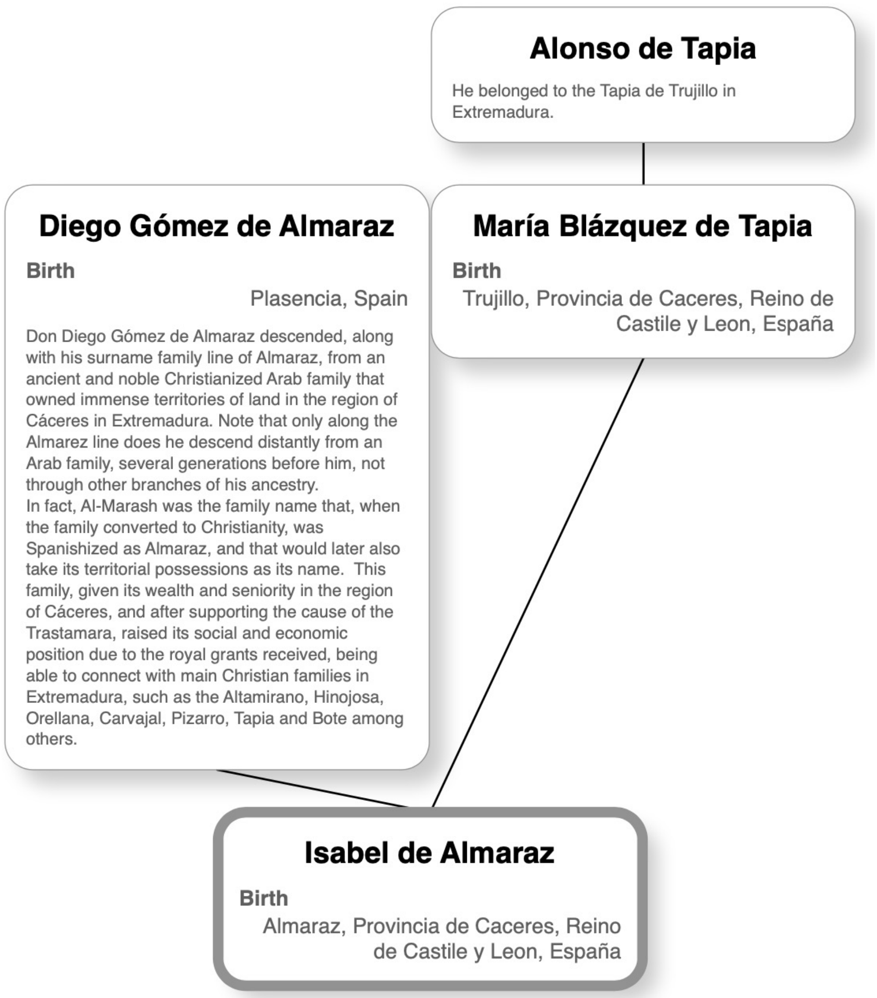
Abu-Yahya, the last Muslim ruler of Mallorca before its conquest by King James I of Aragon in 1229, was born into the powerful Almohad dynasty, which controlled large parts of North Africa and Spain. Abu Yahya's governance of Mallorca was marked by efforts to maintain stability and prosperity amid growing external threats from the Christian Reconquista. As the ruler of Mallorca, Abu Yahya faced significant challenges. The island had been under Muslim rule since its conquest in 902 by Isam al-Jawlani, but the political landscape was shifting by the early 13th century. The Almohad control over the Iberian Peninsula was weakening due to internal strife and increasing pressure from Christian forces seeking to reclaim territory.

In September 1229, James I of Aragon launched a campaign to conquer Mallorca. His forces landed at Santa Ponça and quickly moved to besiege Medina Mayurqa, the island's capital. Abu Yahya organized the defense of the city, but despite his efforts, the well-organized and determined Aragonese army prevailed after several months of siege. Abu Yahya was killed during the conquest, marking the end of Muslim rule on the island and initiating a period of Christian reorganization and repopulation. Contemporary sources, including Christian accounts, often remarked on Abu Yahya's physical beauty and attractiveness, noting that he outshone his subjects when he toured the city. Besides his physical presence, Abu Yahya was also known for his literary contributions, mainly his letters. These writings reflect his administrative skills, diplomatic engagements, and personal reflections. Although specific surviving examples of his writings are scarce, his reputation as a literate and cultured ruler remains part of his legacy.

The fall of Mallorca to James I marked a significant milestone in the Reconquista, ending over three centuries of Muslim rule on the island. Despite the conquest, the influence of Islamic culture remained evident in the architecture, agriculture, and place names

---

[22] Said Ben Alhakem Abu Otman Al Koraisini is also known as Abu Yahya Muhammad ibn Ali ibn Abi Imran al-Tinmalali, and also as Muhammad ibn Ali ibn Mussa, Muhammad ibn Ali ibn Musa o Abu-Yahya ibn al-Hakam ar-Rashid, and is even called, in Christian sources, Abu Iehie or Aboheihe.



Alonso de Tapia
He belonged to the Tapia de Trujillo in Extremadura.
Diego Gómez de Almaraz
Birth
Plasencia, Spain
Don Diego Gómez de Almaraz descended, along with his surname family line of Almaraz, from an ancient and noble Christianized Arab family that owned immense territories of land in the region of Cáceres in Extremadura. Note that only along the Almarez line does he descend distantly from an Arab family, several generations before him, not through other branches of his ancestry.
In fact, Al-Marash was the family name that, when the family converted to Christianity, was Spanishized as Almaraz, and that would later also take its territorial possessions as its name. This family, given its wealth and seniority in the region of Cáceres, and after supporting the cause of the Trastamara, raised its social and economic position due to the royal grants received, being able to connect with main Christian families in Extremadura, such as the Altamirano, Hinojosa, Orellana, Carvajal, Pizarro, Tapia and Bote among others.
María Blázquez de Tapia
Birth
Trujillo, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Isabel de Almaraz
Birth
Almaraz, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España

Figure 27.32: Two ancestral generations of Isabel de Almaraz. Her position in our ancestry is shown in Figure 27.24.

Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza
Marriage
1188
Sancha Nuñez de Lara
He stayed in Salamanca between 1168 and 1181. He had two illegitimate children who were later legitimized by Pope Celestine III (Giacinto Orsini from Rome)
Gil Podavila or Bodavila
Birth
France
Death
Estella, Navarra, Spain
Knight Templar. Also known as Gil Podavila / Bodavila / Bouteville. His nephews in England were also Knights Templar: Geoffrey Boteville and Oliver Boteville (Geoffroy de Bouteville/Olivier de Bouteville).
He went on to settle in the Court of his second cousin Sancho VI of Navarra the Wise, where he married Doña María Sánchez de Navarra, youngest daughter of his cousin the King Don Sancho VI of Navarre the Wise
Maria Sanchez of Navarra
Princess
Gonzalo Rodríguez de Azagra or Ruiz de Azagra
Gonzalo Rodríguez de Azagra. Royal Ensign 1180 - 1181 of Fernando II of León. Lord tenant in Salamanca in 1179. Master of the Order of the Temple.
Don Pedro Sánchez de Varillas
Lord of Barillas in Navarre.
Urraca Gil
Rodrígo Ruiz de Azagra
Estefanía Pérez de Baztan
Aunt of Gonzalo Ibañez de Bazán.
Don Godhino
Sancho Pérez de Varillas
Birth
Cerdanya, Spain
Estefanía Rodríguez de Azagra or Ruiz de Azagra
Alfonso Godinez
Inés Pérez de Tenorio
Rodrigo Ruiz de Varillas
Inés Godinez
Gonzalo Rodríguez de Varillas
Birth
1300
Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Teresa Martínez Nieto
Juan Rodríguez de las Varillas
Birth
Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Knight of the Order of the Band, and the most important man in the city of Salamanca in his time.

Figure 27.33: Five ancestral generations of Juan Rodriguez de las Varillas. His position in our ancestry is shown in Figure 27.24. The ancestors of Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza are given in Figure 27.26, and the ones of Maria Sanchez of Navarra are given in Figure 27.38.

Fernando Rodríguez de Azagra
Lord of Albarracín
Teresa Ibáñez de Guevara
Juan Pérez de Baztan
Toda Ibáñez de Azagra
Gonzalo Ibáñez de Bazán
Aldonza Cornel
Juan González de Bazán
Juana de Almoravid
García de Bazán
Aldonza de Villamayor
Lope Fernández de Vega
Juana de Bazán
Lope Fernández de Vega

Figure 27.34: Six ancestral generations of Lope Fernandez de Vega. His position in our ancestry is given in Figure 27.36.

Martín Cortés y Paz
Knight of the Golden Spur.
Leonor de Monroy y Almarez
Death 1450s
Cristóbal Sánchez de Badajoz
Knight of Jerez de Badajoz
Diego de Vega Bonifaz
Juana Sessé de Luna
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
Marriage 1431
Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage 1431
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
She was a native of Jerez de Badajoz or Jerez de los Caballeros.
Diego de Vega y Sessé
Mayor de Bazán
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage
Maria de Vega Bazán
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Maria de Vega Bazán
Birth
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Marriage
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.

Figure 27.35: Three ancestral generations of Maria Ana Cortes de Monroy y Vega Bazán. The ancestry of Alonso Martin Cortes de Monroy y Sanchez de Badajoz is shown in Figure 27.24, and that of Maria de Vega Bazan in Figure 27.36. The reader is also referred to Figure 27.42 and Figure 27.43.

of Mallorca. Abu Yahya's legacy, though overshadowed by the Christian reconquest, highlights the rich cultural and intellectual history of Muslim Mallorca and its last ruler's efforts to navigate a tumultuous period in the island's history.

Abu Yahya's eldest son, the heir to the Kingdom, aged 16, was beheaded while his father was being tortured.

His second son was taken from the island and taken to Zaragoza, Aragon, and he was baptized Christian as Jaime because King Jaime of Aragon himself sponsored him.

Years later, the King granted him the lordship of Gotor, which is why he is known as Jaime de Gotor, the Arab prince of Mallorca. It is worth nothing that, during that time, our ancestor Raymond Desclergue also appears as an important figure in the conquest of Mallorca.

Gotor is located between Saragoza and Medinaceli, 30 kms from Deza in Soria, and 15 km from Calatayud.

The King arranged for Jaime de Gotor's marriage to the very noble lady of the Kingdom, Eva Roldán de Alagón y Luna.

Their children were Miguel de Gotor y Alagón, who married to María Inés Zapata y Alagón. The latter were the parents of María Teresa de Gotor y Zapata Alagón. The latter married Juan Martínez de Luna y Calamandrana, the Lord of Yllueca and the son of Juan Martínez de Luna y Sessé and Contesina de Calamandrana y Lauria, granddaughter of the famous Sicilian Admiral of Aragon Roger de Lauria and of the noble Sicilian lady Margarita Lancia.

Juan Martínez de Luna y Calamandrana and María Teresa de Gotor y Zapata Alagón were the parents of Pope Benedict XIII (the famous Pope Luna) and Juan Martínez de Luna, the Lord of Illueca y Gotor, who married Teresa de Albornoz. The latter couple were the parents of Álvaro Martínez de Luna, who died in 1397. The latter was the father of Álvaro de Luna, a famous Constable of Castile, a Master of the Order of Santiago in the Kingdom, and Valid of King Juan II of Castile. Álvaro Martínez de Luna was equally the father of Martín de Luna, married to Inés de Rojas y Manrique. The latter were the parents of Inés de Luna, who married to Gracián de Sessé. The latter couple is the one this section focuses on.

Regarding the Calamandrana family, a prominent member of that family was Boniface of Calamandrana, recognized in history as a key figure among the Hospitallers during his day.[23] Although there is less historical information about his early life, his significant achievements during the latter years of the Latin kingdom of Jerusalem and the subsequent transfer of the Hospitallers' headquarters to Cyprus in 1291 are unquestionable.

Boniface's beginnings are shrouded in darkness, with few information available save for his later association with the Hospitaller order. His first appearance as a Hospitaller probably signaled the start of his rise within the institution, showcasing traits that would eventually set him apart as a strong diplomat and leader.

Quickly rising in position, Boniface was suddenly placed in the chaotic political environment of the crusader nations. As the Grand Commander in the East, he skillfully managed the intricate network of alliances and rivalries in the area, refining his diplomatic abilities and forming meaningful relationships that would benefit him in the future.

Boniface had exceptional diplomatic skills while serving as a prominent representative in northern Syria until 1288. He conducted careful negotiations and formed fragile coalitions in the center of Mamluk territory, often facing the possibility of armed conflict. His adeptness in navigating these hazardous waters established his renown as a proficient negotiator and a reliable representative of the Hospitaller order.

Boniface's actual diplomatic skills were shown in his capacity as Grand Commander of the West. Based in Europe, he used his wide network of connections to further the Hospitallers' interests across the continent. Boniface strategically used his influence from Italy to the Iberian Peninsula, solidifying the order's position as a significant participant in geopolitics.

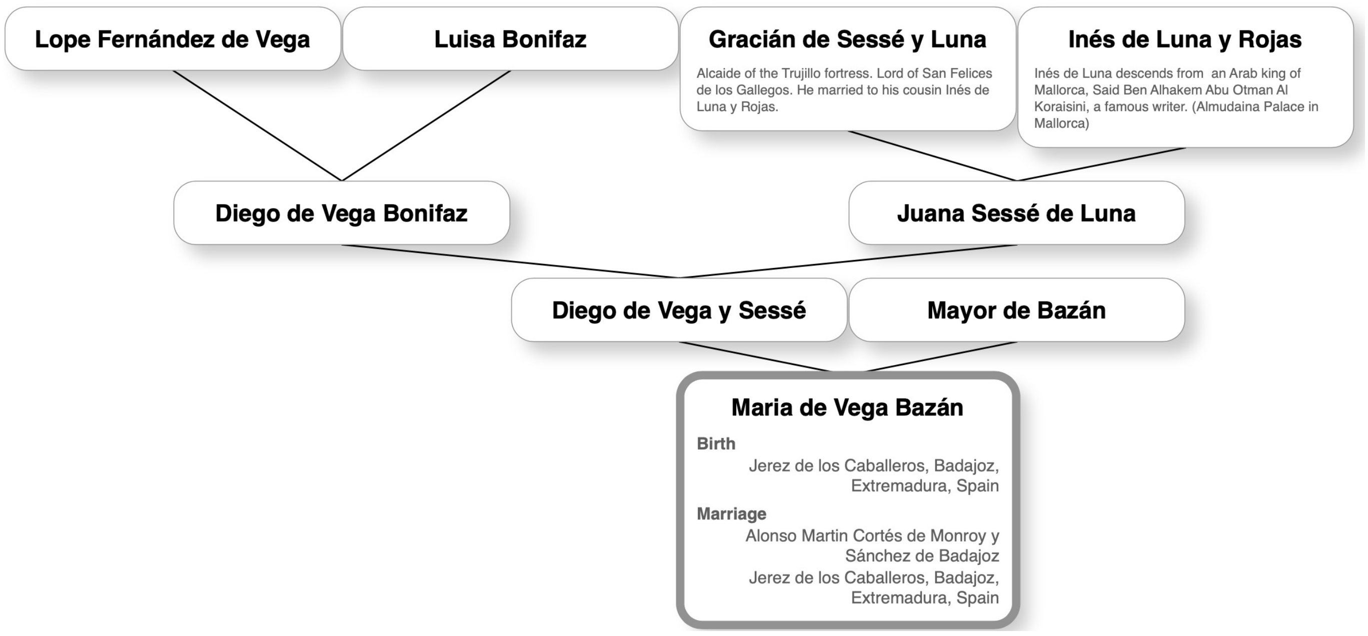
Boniface of Calamandrana exemplified the important Hospitaller traits of piety, diplomacy, and military skill throughout his distinguished career. His abilities and contacts were fully employed, significantly influencing the course of history at a crucial period for the Hospitaller order. Boniface's everlasting impact serves as a monument to the lasting influence of diplomacy amid times of turmoil and unpredictability.

Pope Luna, also known as Pope Benedict XIII, was involved in intrigue, controversy, and rebellion against the established authorities of the Catholic Church during the Western Schism.

Pedro Martínez de Luna y Pérez de Gotor was born in 1328 in Illueca, Spain. He advanced in the church hierarchy and later became

---

[23] Jochen Burgtorf, "The Hospitallers, the Mediterranean and Europe", 1st edition, Routledge, 2007, ISBN 9781315557069



Lope Fernández de Vega
Luisa Bonifaz
Gracián de Sessé y Luna
Alcaide of the Trujillo fortress. Lord of San Felices de los Gallegos. He married to his cousin Inés de Luna y Rojas.
Inés de Luna y Rojas
Inés de Luna descends from an Arab king of Mallorca, Said Ben Alhakem Abu Otman Al Koraisini, a famous writer. (Almudaina Palace in Mallorca)
Diego de Vega Bonifaz
Juana Sessé de Luna
Diego de Vega y Sessé
Mayor de Bazán
Maria de Vega Bazán
Birth
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Marriage
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain

Figure 27.36: Three ancestral generations of Maria de Vega Bazan. Her position in our ancestry is shown in Figure 27.35. The ancestors of Lope Fernandez de Vega are given in Figure 27.34, and the ones of Ines de Luna y Rojas in Figure 27.31. The reader is also referred to Figure 27.43.

Pedro Fernandez de Monroy
Elvira Núñez de Andrade y Ulloa
Birth 1255
Rodrigo Ruiz de Varillas
Inés Godinez
Fernán Pérez de Monroy
Death 1351
Plasencia, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Estefania Rodríguez de Varillas
Fernán Pérez de Monroy
Inés Rodríguez de Varillas
María Fernández de Monroy
Birth
Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España

Figure 27.37: Three ancestral generations of Maria Fernandez de Monroy. Her position in our ancestry is shown in Figure 27.24. The ancestors of Fernan Perez de Monroy are shown in Figure 27.29, while the ones of Estefania Rodriguez de Varillas are given in Figure 27.28.

Cardinal Bishop of Valencia. In 1394, Martínez de Luna was chosen pope by the Avignon papal conclave after the death of Pope Clement VII. He assumed the name Benedict XIII. The papal palace of Avignon is shown in Figure 27.53 on page 320.

His pontificate faced early challenges from rival contenders to the papal throne, leading to the Western Schism. During this split, many contenders competed for leadership in the Catholic Church. Benedict XIII held the pope at Avignon, while Pope Innocent VII and subsequently Pope Gregory XII claimed the papacy in Rome.

Benedict XIII's obstinacy in neither resigning nor engaging in discussions to resolve the split caused significant dissatisfaction within the Catholic Church. Despite attempts by several European rulers and councils to address the problem, Benedict XIII remained unwavering in his assertion of papal authority.

Benedict XIII became known as Papa Luna for excommunicating King Alfonso V of Aragon in 1411. King Alfonso initiated a siege on the papal residence in Peñíscola, Spain, where Benedict XIII was staying. The siege persisted for many years while Benedict XIII adamantly refused to surrender.

Benedict XIII's pontificate ultimately ended in disgrace. The Council of Constance was called in 1417 with the goal of resolving the Western Schism definitively. Benedict XIII was officially labeled a heretic and removed from his position as pope. Although he refused to abdicate, he was essentially ousted from office, and the Council appointed Pope Martin V as the rightful pope.

Benedict XIII persisted in asserting his papal authority until his passing in 1423. However, he was never acknowledged as a legitimate pope by the Catholic Church. His obstinate nature and unwillingness to negotiate led to a significant era of turmoil in the history of the papacy, resulting in a lasting legacy of disunity and conflict within the Church. His biography is a captivating part of ecclesiastical history, leading to his becoming known as Papa Luna, shown in Figure 27.55.

27.6 Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz

He was married to Maria de Vega Bazán Jerez de los Caballeros at Badajoz in Extremadura, Spain. Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz was the father of Maria Ana Cortes de Monroy y Vega Bazan, described in Chapter 27.2.

His ancestry is shown in Figure 27.24.

Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz stems, patrilinearly, as the great-great-great-grandson, from Fernán Pérez de Monroy, described in Chapter 27.18. His parents were Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy and Ana Sánchez de Badajoz, and they married in 1431. Ana Sánchez de Badajoz was a native of Jerez de Badajoz or Jerez de los Caballeros, and her father was Cristóbal Sánchez de Badajoz, a Knight of Jerez de Badajoz.

Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy is mentioned as the uncle of Hernán Cortés, by Bartolomé Bennassar[24]. We can quote,

'(Hernán Cortés de Monroy), nació en el seno de una familia hidalga, de solar conocido. Su padre, (Garcia) Martín Cortés de Monroy, cristiano viejo' , según Las Casas; y su madre, Catalina Pizarro Altamirano, procedían de linajes de buena fama. (Garcia) Martín no sufrió por el apoyo que llevó a su pariente, Alonso Cortés de Monroy (senior), en su rebeldía contra la reina Isabel la Católica.'

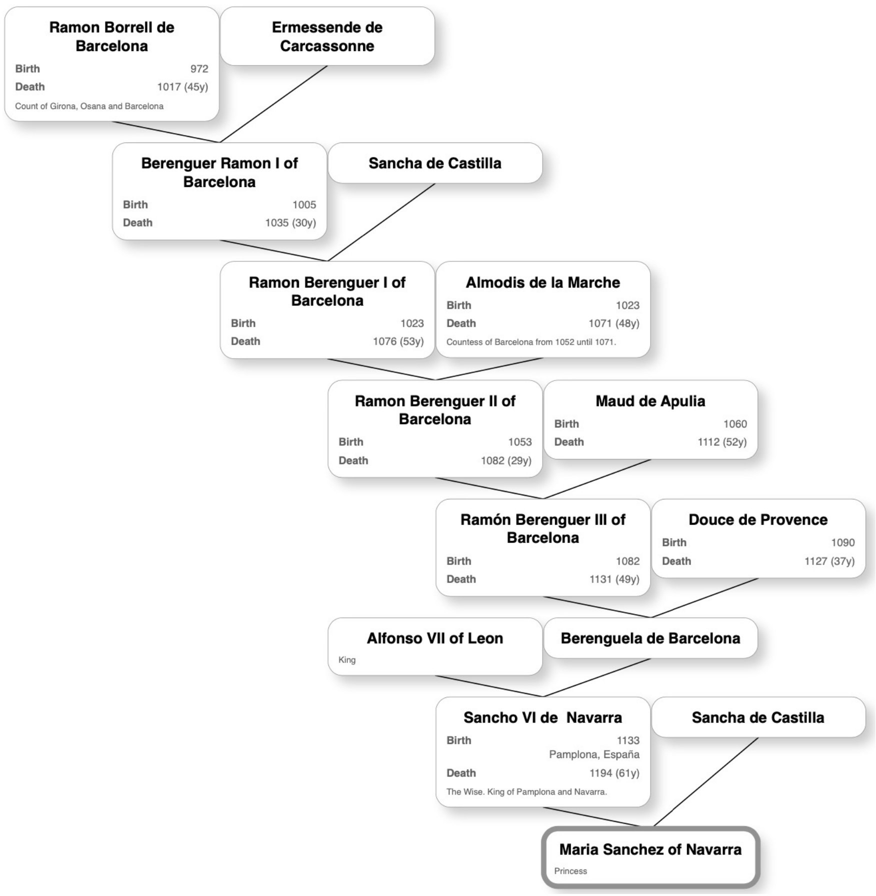
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy married Ana Sánchez de Badajoz in 1431. His parents were Martín Cortés y Paz, a Knight of the Golden Spur, and Leonor de Monroy y Almarez, who died in the 1450s. Alonso Cortés de Monroy, husband of Doña Ana Sánchez de Badajoz was at the court of the II Count of Medellín, Don Juan Portocarrero y Pacheco, son of the I Count of Medellín, Don Rodrigo Portocarrero y Monroy, who in turn was the son of Don Alonso Fernández Portocarrero and Mrs. Leonor de Monroy. The

---

[24] Bartolomé Bennassar, 'Hernán Cortés' , DB-e, Real Academia de la Historia



Ramon Borrell de Barcelona
Birth 972
Death 1017 (45y)
Count of Girona, Osana and Barcelona
Ermessende de Carcassonne
Berenguer Ramon I of Barcelona
Birth 1005
Death 1035 (30y)
Sancha de Castilla
Ramon Berenguer I of Barcelona
Birth 1023
Death 1076 (53y)
Almodis de la Marche
Birth 1023
Death 1071 (48y)
Countess of Barcelona from 1052 until 1071.
Ramon Berenguer II of Barcelona
Birth 1053
Death 1082 (29y)
Maud de Apulia
Birth 1060
Death 1112 (52y)
Ramón Berenguer III of Barcelona
Birth 1082
Death 1131 (49y)
Douce de Provence
Birth 1090
Death 1127 (37y)
Alfonso VII of Leon
King
Berenguela de Barcelona
Sancho VI de Navarra
Birth 1133
Pamplona, España
Death 1194 (61y)
The Wise. King of Pamplona and Navarra.
Sancha de Castilla
Maria Sanchez of Navarra
Princess

Figure 27.38: Ancestral generations of Maria Sanchez of Navarra. Her position in our ancestry is given in Figure 27.33 and Figure 27.28. The reader is also referred to Figure 27.48.

latter belonged to a branch of the Monroy family based in the city of Salamanca. Alonso had rebelled against Isabella I of Castile (Isabel la Catolica). Also, Martin Cortés de Monroy (1449-1527), Hernán's father, was an infantry captain in the military and joined his brother Alonso in this rebellion.

Martín Cortés y Paz was the son of Alonso García Cortés and Inés de Paz y Boil, and the couple married in Salamanca, Spain.

Alonso García Cortés was born in the Kingdom of Aragon and made a Knight of the Golden Spur in 1384 by the King of Aragón Pedro IV. He was very noble. He married, in Salamanca, Doña Inés de Paz y Boil, the daughter of his cousin Doña Catalina de Boil, lady of the princess or infanta Leonor of Aragon who passed in his entourage to Castil, and of Dr. Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya, who was the King's Counselor and as such was in several embassies or missions of the Crown of Castile to the Crown of Aragon. Don Alonso García Cortes,[25] went from the Kingdom of Aragon to the Kingdom of Castile to serve the causes of the Christian reconquest. The Descendants of Alonso García Cortés are shown in Figure 27.42.

Inés de Paz y Boil was the daughter of Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya and Catalina de Boil.

Doña Inés de Paz was the daughter of doctor Don Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya and Doña Catalina de Boil, who had passed to the Kingdom of Castile in the entourage that Doña Leonor de Aragon carried when she married the infante Don Juan de Castilla in the year 1375.

Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya was born in Salamanca, Spain. He was a doctor of law and was at the king's court several times. He was a very aristocratic person and is described in Chapter 27.7.

Catalina de Boil was born in the Kingdom of Aragon, and she is described in Chapter 27.8.

Fernán Rodríguez de Monroy, father of Leonor de Monroy y Almarez, was born in Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España. He was the Lord of Monroy. His parents were Juan Rodríguez de las Varillas and María Fernández de Monroy. Don Fernán Rodríguez de Monroy married[26] Doña Isabel de Almaraz.

Juan Rodríguez de las Varillas was born in Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España. He was a Knight of the Order of the Band and the most important man in the city of Salamanca in his time. His ancestry is described in Chapter 27.13.

María Fernández de Monroy was born in Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España, and she is described in Chapter 27.17.

Isabel de Almaraz, the mother of Leonor de Monroy y Almarez, was born in Almaraz, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España. Her parents were Diego Gómez de Almaraz and María Blázquez de Tapia. Her ancestry is shown in Figure 27.32.

Don Diego Gómez de Almaraz was born in Plasencia, Spain, and he descended, along with his surname family line of Almaraz, from an ancient and noble Christianized Arab family that owned immense territories of land in the region of Cáceres in Extremadura. Note that only along the Almarez line does he descend distantly from an Arab family, several generations before him, not through other branches of his ancestry. Al-Marash was the family name that, when the family converted to Christianity, was Spanishized as Almaraz, and that would later also take its territorial possessions as its name. This family, given its wealth and seniority in the region of Cáceres, and after supporting the cause of the Trastamara, raised its social and economic position due to the royal grants received, being able to connect with main Christian families in Extremadura, such as the Altamirano, Hinojosa, Orellana, Carvajal, Pizarro, Tapia and Bote among others.

María Blázquez de Tapia was born in Trujillo, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España; she was the daughter of Alonso de Tapia, who belonged to the Tapia de Trujillo in Extremadura.

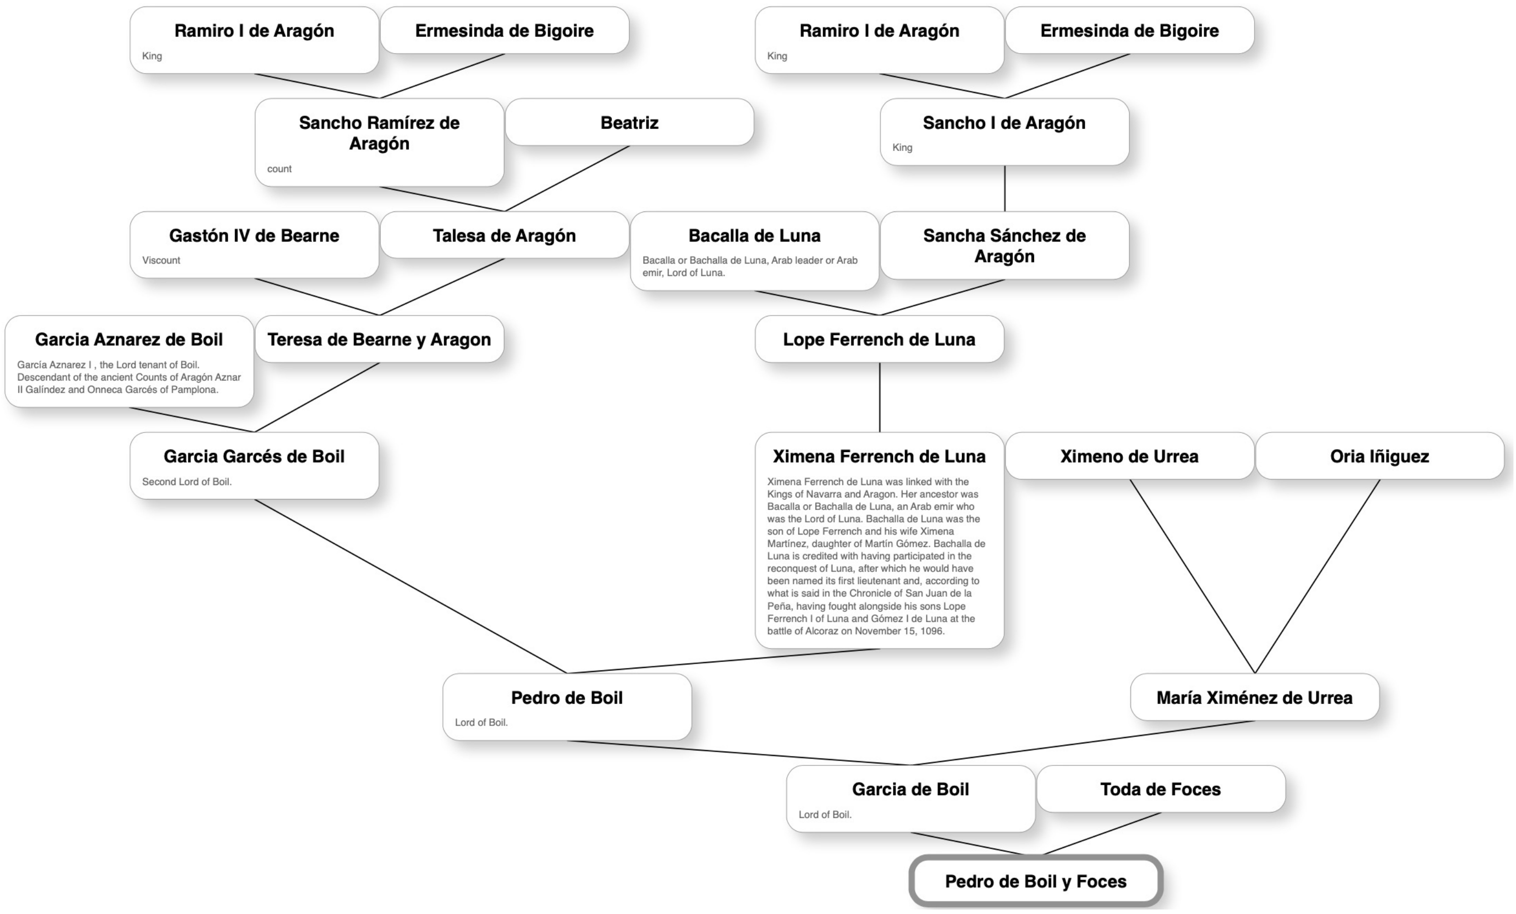
Cortés Rosal articulated the following assertions, elucidating the trajectory underlying his revelations, which, to a fellow genealogist, offer a compelling narrative.

An intriguing observation struck me one day concerning Hernán or Fernán Rodríguez de Monroy, who was colloquially referred to as the "dummy" owing to his notably thick, protruding lips. Notably, Hernán Cortés, the renowned Conqueror of Mexico, also possessed similarly full lips. Historical chronicles depict him as of moderate stature, consistently lean, with fair complexion, hazel eyes, dark blond hair, and a prominent, elongated, aquiline nose. Remarkably, both individuals shared the distinctive feature of full or voluminous lips, indicative of a familial trait. However, the origin of this trait remained enigmatic. My inquiries led me to explore potential Moorish or Jewish ancestry, yet initial investigations yielded no substantive leads. It was not until I meticulously examined the Monroy-Almaraz lineage, particularly scrutinizing the toponym "Almaraz," purportedly denoting their ancestral land, that I uncovered concealed Moorish lineage, obscured by the shadows of the Inquisition. It became evident that many prominent Iberian

---

[25] Alonso or Alfonso Garcia de Cortes or Garcia Cortes.

[26] The marriage occurred through negotiations and hereditary conveniences according to arrangements by Garci González de Herrera, the second husband, and widower of his aunt Doña Estefanía Fernández de Monroy.



Ramiro I de Aragón
King
Ermesinda de Bigoire
Ramiro I de Aragón
King
Ermesinda de Bigoire
Sancho Ramírez de Aragón
count
Beatriz
Sancho I de Aragón
King
Gastón IV de Bearne
Viscount
Talesa de Aragón
Bacalla de Luna
Bacalla or Bachalla de Luna, Arab leader or Arab emir, Lord of Luna.
Sancha Sánchez de Aragón
Garcia Aznarez de Boil
Garcia Aznarez I , the Lord tenant of Boil. Descendant of the ancient Counts of Aragón Aznar II Galíndez and Onneca Garcés of Pamplona.
Teresa de Bearne y Aragon
Lope Ferrench de Luna
Garcia Garcés de Boil
Second Lord of Boil.
Ximena Ferrench de Luna
Ximena Ferrench de Luna was linked with the Kings of Navarra and Aragon. Her ancestor was Bacalla or Bachalla de Luna, an Arab emir who was the Lord of Luna. Bachalla de Luna was the son of Lope Ferrench and his wife Ximena Martínez, daughter of Martín Gómez. Bachalla de Luna is credited with having participated in the reconquest of Luna, after which he would have been named its first lieutenant and, according to what is said in the Chronicle of San Juan de la Peña, having fought alongside his sons Lope Ferrench I of Luna and Gómez I de Luna at the battle of Alcoraz on November 15, 1096.
Ximeno de Urrea
Oria Iñiguez
Pedro de Boil
Lord of Boil.
María Ximénez de Urrea
Garcia de Boil
Lord of Boil.
Toda de Foces
Pedro de Boil y Foces

Figure 27.39: Ancestral generations of Pedro de Boil y Foces. His position in our ancestry is shown in Figure 27.25. The ancestors of Garcia Garces de Boil are shown in Figure 27.30, and the ones of Ximena Ferrench de Luna are given in Figure 27.41.

families, including Spanish, Portuguese, Corsican, Sardinian, Sicilian, and Neapolitan lineages, harbored obscured Moorish or Jewish origins, a legacy shrouded by historical contingencies. Further inquiry unveiled a protracted subterfuge spanning generations within the affluent Almaraz family, descendants of Moorish or Arab lineage from the region, compelled to convert to Christianity. Through this lineage, the distinctive feature of full lips found its ancestral nexus.

Returning to the union of the Monroy-Almaraz clans, a historical narrative unfolds.

At a pivotal juncture in history, the Monroy estate passed into the possession of Doña Estefanía Fernández de Monroy upon her marriage to Mr. García Álvarez de Toledo, the lord of Oropesa. Subsequent tumultuous political shifts, notably the ascendancy of the illegitimate Enrique II of Trastámara over the Monroy-aligned King Pedro I of Castile, precipitated a coercive marriage between Doña Estefanía and Garci González de Herrera, a protege of the new monarch. This union, orchestrated to usurp the Monroy estate, instigated a fierce feud between the Rodríguez de las Varillas and Fernández de Monroy factions against Garci González de Herrera. Eventually, through tenacious legal battles and influential alliances, Fernán Rodríguez de Monroy emerged as the rightful heir, albeit inheriting a significantly diminished estate. As compensation and for strategic interests, Garci González de Herrera orchestrated the marriage between Fernán Rodríguez de las Varillas and Isabel de Almaraz, heiress to a substantial estate rooted in Moorish heritage, cementing his control over the Monroy domain.

A nuanced examination of historical dynamics reveals further layers of intrigue.

Against the backdrop of the Castilian Civil War, wherein Enrique II of Castile, dubbed the "Mercedes" for his promises of largesse to supporters, ascended to power, the Monroy-Almaraz union exemplifies the shifting fortunes amidst political upheaval. Despite stark social standing disparities, the marriage consolidated local influence and curry favor with the Trastámara regime. Notably, the advent of the Trastámara dynasty precipitated the waning influence of the Monroy family, staunch supporters of King Pedro I, ultimately relegating them to the periphery of regional power dynamics. Moreover, a critical reassessment of the purported offspring of the Monroy-Almaraz union unveils discrepancies, suggesting that several children attributed to the lineage were, in fact, offspring of relatives residing in Salamanca and its environs, emblematic of the intricate webs of kinship and legitimacy in medieval Iberia.

Cortés Rosal extends his genealogical analysis.

Within the annals of the Monroy-Almaraz lineage, documented evidence substantiates the existence of four progeny: Alonso de Monroy, heir to the Deleitosa-Belvís domain, espoused to Juana de Sotomayor; Rodrigo de Monroy, inheritor of the Monroy estate, wedded to Mencía de Orellana in 1428; Isabel de Monroy, betrothed to her first cousin Antón de Salamanca (Rodriguez de las Varillas), scion of the Salamanca lineage; and Leonor de Monroy, the youngest, whose marriage to Don Martín Cortés "Senior," a knight of the Order of the Golden Spur from an illustrious Aragonese lineage, signifies inter-familial alliances transcending regional boundaries.

27.7 Pedro de Paz y Gomez de Anaya

Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya was the great-great-grandfather of Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz, described in Chapter 27.6. His ancestry is shown in Figure 27.40.

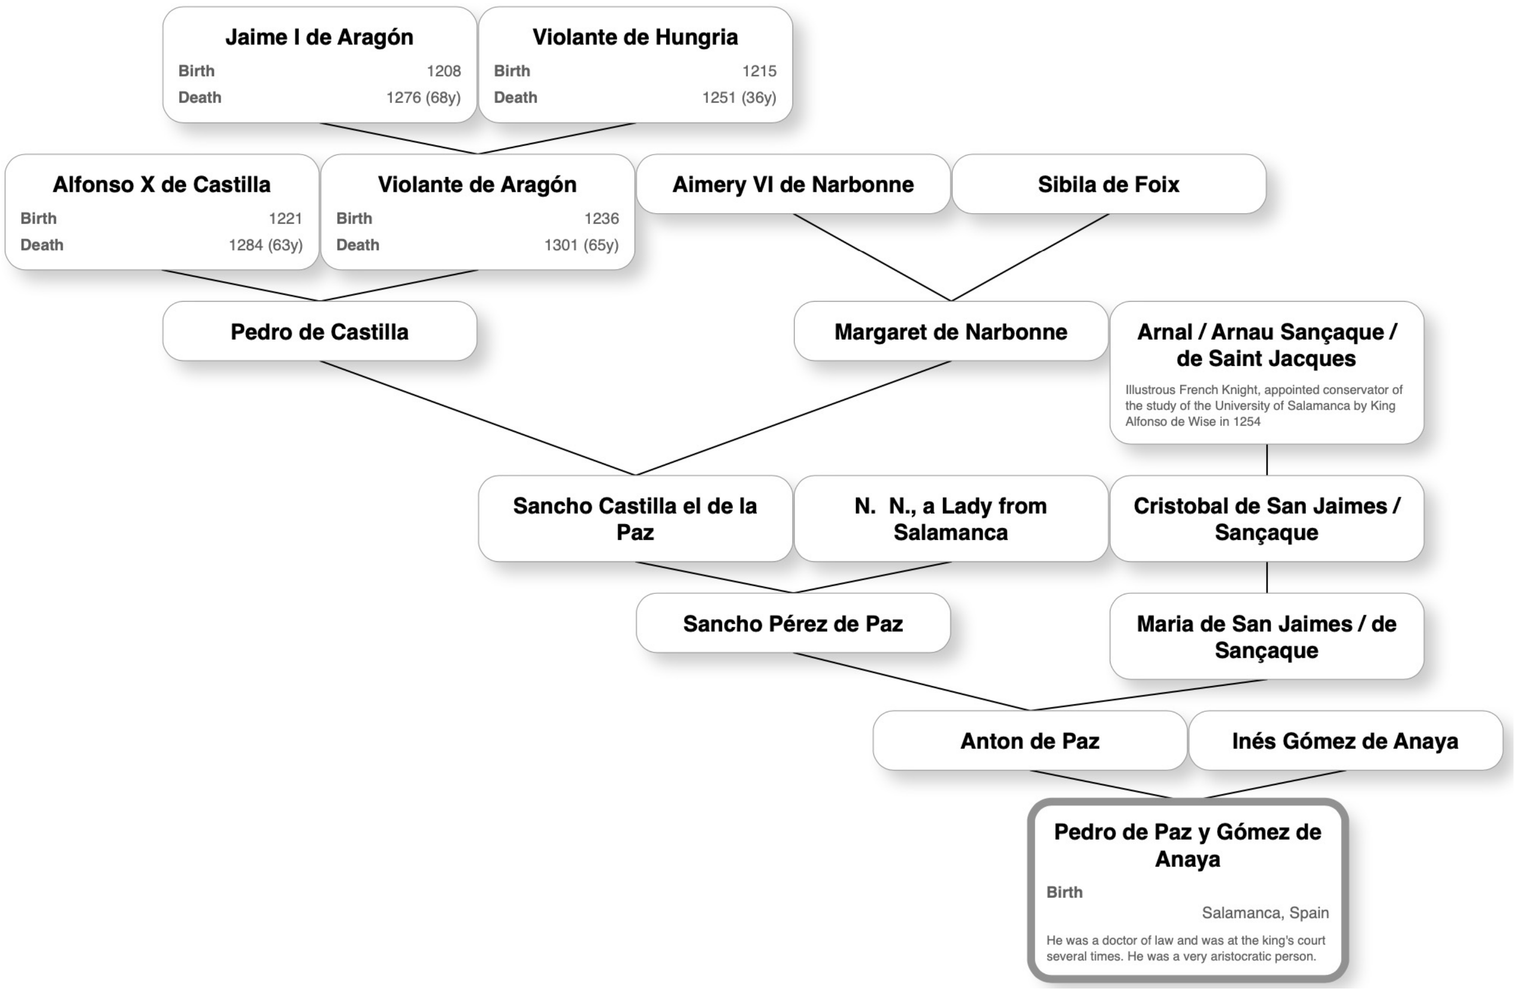
Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya was born in Salamanca, Spain. He was a doctor of law and was at the king's court several times. He was a very aristocratic person. His parents were Anton de Paz, son of Sancho Pérez de Paz and Maria de San Jaimes or de Sençaque, and of Inés Gómez de Anaya.

Sancho Pérez de Paz was the son of Sancho Castilla el de la Paz and a lady from the city of Salamanca.

Sancho Castilla el de la Paz was the son of Pedro of Castile and his wife Margaret of Narbonne, the daughter of Viscount Aimery VI of Narbonne and Sibila de Foix.

Pedro of Castile was the son of Alfonso X of Castile and his wife Violante of Aragon.

Maria de San Jaimes, or de Sençaque, was the daughter of Cristobal de San Jaimes of Sençaque. The latter was the son of Arnal or



Jaime I de Aragón
Birth 1208
Death 1276 (68y)
Violante de Hungria
Birth 1215
Death 1251 (36y)
Alfonso X de Castilla
Birth 1221
Death 1284 (63y)
Violante de Aragón
Birth 1236
Death 1301 (65y)
Aimery VI de Narbonne
Sibila de Foix
Pedro de Castilla
Margaret de Narbonne
Arnal / Arnau Sançaque / de Saint Jacques
Illustrous French Knight, appointed conservator of the study of the University of Salamanca by King Alfonso de Wise in 1254
Sancho Castilla el de la Paz
N. N., a Lady from Salamanca
Cristobal de San Jaimes / Sançaque
Sancho Pérez de Paz
Maria de San Jaimes / de Sançaque
Anton de Paz
Inés Gómez de Anaya
Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya
Birth
Salamanca, Spain
He was a doctor of law and was at the king's court several times. He was a very aristocratic person.

Figure 27.40: Six ancestral generations of Pedro de Paz y Gomez de Anaya. His position in our ancestry is shown in Figure 27.24.

Arnau Sençaque or de Saint Jacques. Arnau de Saint Jacques was an illustrious French Knight appointed conservator of the study of the University of Salamanca by King Alfonso de Wise in 1254.

27.8 Catalina de Boil

Catalina de Boil was the great-great-grandmother of Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz, described in Chapter 27.6. Her ancestry is shown in Figure 27.25. Catalina de Boil, the wife of Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya and the mother of Inés de Paz y Boil was born in the Kingdom of Aragon as the daughter of several generations of de Boil, with paternal ancestor Guerau de Boil y Cervellón from Valencia. The parents of Guerau de Boil y Cervellón from Valencia were Pedro de Boil y Foces and Ermesenda de Cervellón. Pedro de Boil y Foces is described in Chapter 27.9. Ermesenda de Cervellón is described in Chapter 27.12.

27.9 Pedro de Boil y Foces

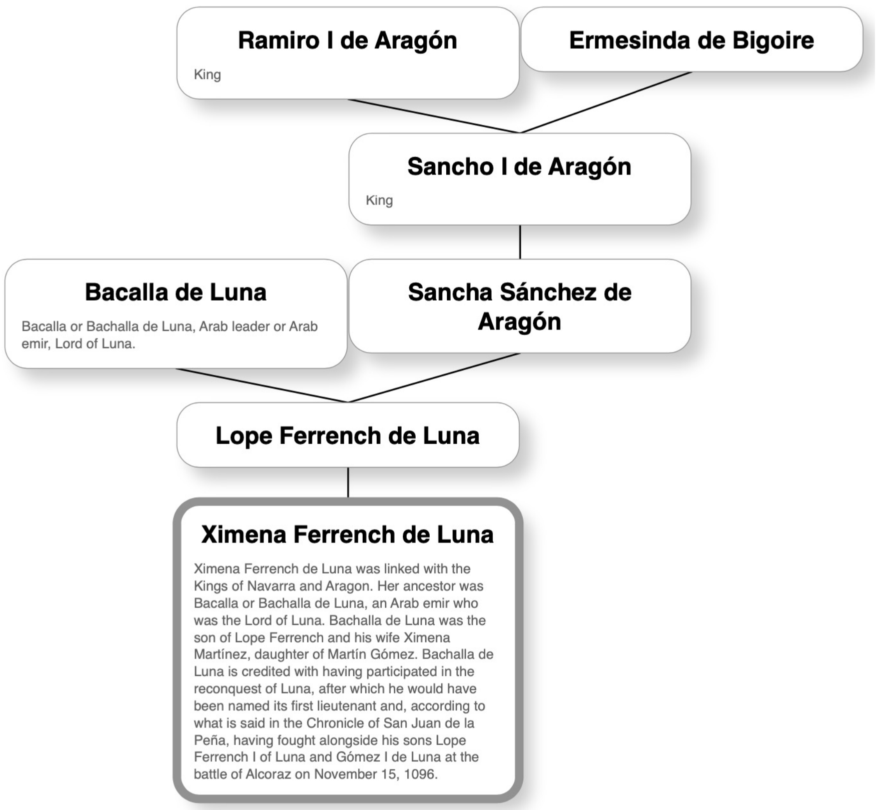
Pedro de Boil y Foces was the great-grandfather of Catalina de Boil, described in Chapter 27.8. His ancestry is shown in Figure 27.39. Pedro de Boil y Foces was the son of the Lord of Boil, Garcia de Boil, and of Toda de Foces.
Garcia de Boil was the son of Pedro de Boil, Lord of Boil, and María Ximénez de Urrea. The latter was the daughter of Ximeno de Urrea and Oria Iñiguez.
Pedro de Boil was the son of the Second Lord of Boil, Garcia Garcés de Boil, and Ximena Ferrench de Luna.
Ximena Ferrench de Luna is described in Chapter 27.10.
Garcia Garcés de Boil is described in Chapter 27.11.

27.10 Ximena Ferrench de Luna

Ximena Ferrench de Luna was the great-grandmother of Pedro de Boil y Foces, described in Chapter 27.9.
Her ancestry is shown in Figure 27.41. Ximena Ferrench de Luna was linked with the Kings of Navarra and Aragon. Her ancestor was Bacalla or Bachalla de Luna, an Arab emir who was the Lord of Luna. Bachalla de Luna was the son of Lope Ferrench and his wife Ximena Martínez, daughter of Martín Gómez. Bachalla de Luna is credited with having participated in the reconquest of Luna, after which he would have been named its first lieutenant and, according to what is said in the Chronicle of San Juan de la Peña, having fought alongside his sons Lope Ferrench I of Luna and Gómez I de Luna at the battle of Alcoraz on November 15, 1096.
Lope Ferrench de Luna was the father of Ximena Ferrench de Luna and the son of Bacalla de Luna and Sancha Sánchez de Aragón. Bacalla or Bachalla de Luna was an Arab leader or Arab emir, the Lord of Luna.
Sancha Sánchez de Aragón was the daughter of King Sancho I de Aragón, the son of King Ramiro I de Aragón and Ermesinda de Bigoire. The descendants of King Ramiro I de Aragón are shown in Figure 27.47.

27.11 Garcia Garces de Boil

Garcia Garcés de Boil was the great-grandfather of Pedro de Boil y Foces, described in Chapter 27.9.
His ancestry is shown in Figure 27.30.
Garcia Garcés de Boil was the second Lord of Boil, and he was the son of Garcia Aznarez de Boil and Teresa de Bearne y Aragon.



Ximena Ferrench de Luna was linked with the Kings of Navarra and Aragon. Her ancestor was Bacalla or Bachalla de Luna, an Arab emir who was the Lord of Luna. Bachalla de Luna was the son of Lope Ferrench and his wife Ximena Martínez, daughter of Martín Gómez. Bachalla de Luna is credited with having participated in the reconquest of Luna, after which he would have been named its first lieutenant and, according to what is said in the Chronicle of San Juan de la Peña, having fought alongside his sons Lope Ferrench I of Luna and Gómez I de Luna at the battle of Alcoraz on November 15, 1096.

Figure 27.41: Four ancestral generations of Ximena Ferrench de Luna. Her position in our ancestry is shown in Figure 27.39. The reader is also referred to Figure 27.47.

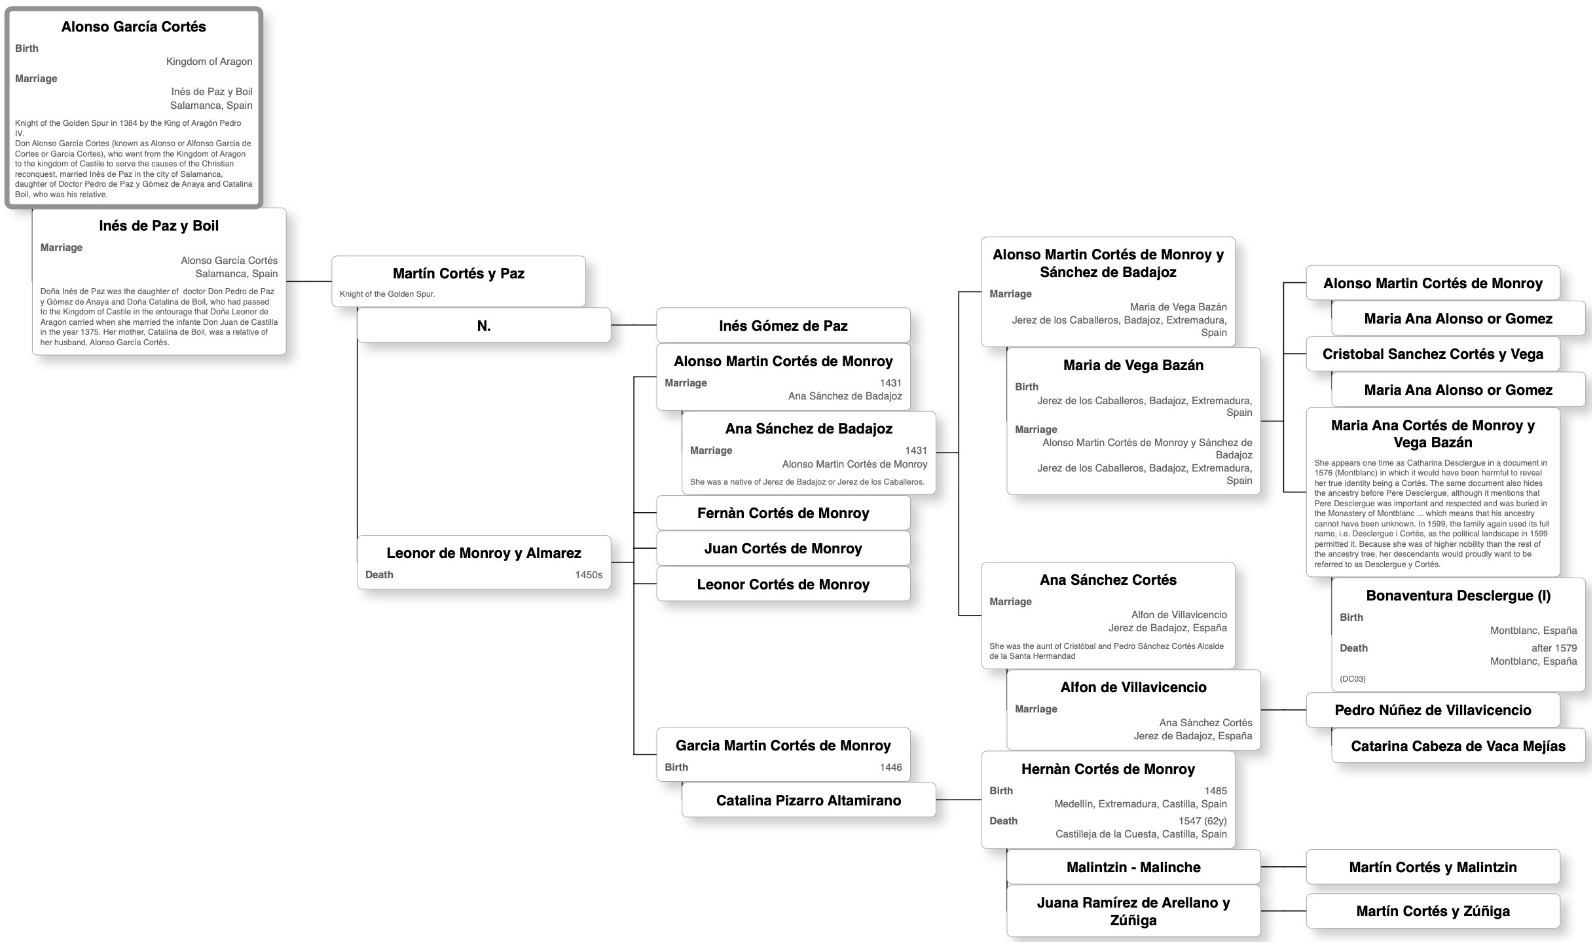
Garcia Aznarez de Boil, or García Aznarez I, was the Lord tenant of Boil, a descendant of the ancient Counts of Aragón Aznar II Galíndez and Onneca Garcés of Pamplona.
Teresa de Bearne y Aragon was the daughter of Viscount Gastón IV de Bearne and Talesa de Aragón.
The latter was the daughter of Count Sancho Ramírez de Aragón and Beatriz.
Count Sancho Ramírez de Aragón was the son of King Ramiro I de Aragón and Ermesinda de Bigoire.

27.12 Ermesenda de Cervellon

Ermesenda de Cervellón was the great-grandmother of Catalina de Boil, described in Chapter 27.8.
Her ancestry is shown in Figure 27.27. Ermesenda de Cervellón was the daughter of Guillem de Cervelló and Elvira de Artusela.
Guillem de Cervelló was the son of Guerau de Cervelló, who died in 1193, and Berenguera de Timor.

27.13 Juan Rodriguez de las Varillas

Juan Rodríguez de las Varillas was the great-great-grandfather of Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz, described in Chapter 27.6. His ancestry is shown in Figure 27.33.
Juan Rodríguez de las Varillas was born in Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España. He was a Knight of the Order of the Band, and the most important man in the city of Salamanca in his time. His parents were Gonzalo Rodríguez de Varillas and Teresa Martínez Nieto.
Gonzalo Rodríguez de Varillas, Master of the Order of the Temple, was born in 1300 in Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España, and he was the son of Rodrigo Ruiz de Varillas and Inés Godinez. The descendants of Gonzalo Rodríguez de Varillas are shown in Figure 27.45.
Inés Godinez was the daughter of Alfonso Godinez and Inés Pérez de Tenorio. Alfonso Godinez was the son of Don Godhino.
Doña Inés Godinez is also of particular interest. She was married to Don Rodrigo Ruíz de Varillas, and their daughter was Doña Estefanía Rodríguez de Varillas, who married Don Fernán Pérez de Monroy.
Cortés Rosal communicated the following.
The Portuguese Knight, Don Godhino, monedeiro de Coimbra, was the Administrator and had ownership of the mint in the city of Coimbra. He was very wealthy, and he went to Castile in response to a tremendous economic offer from King Alfonso X the Wise so that he could put the Kingdom's finances in order. This gentleman, the progenitor of the Godinez family, was the paternal grandfather of Doña Inés Godinez, who married Don Rodrigo Ruíz de Varillas. Don Godhino was a Jewish convert to Christianity. He was an affluent Jew.
Cortés Rosal also explained how natural it was for a Catalan family, Desclergue, to marry someone from the Cortes clan.
The Sánchez de Badajoz family used the entire or split surname, either Sánchez or Badajoz. They and the family of de Vega Bazan had spread through Jerez de los Caballeros, through Écija, through Seville, through the port of Santa María, and Jerez de la Frontera since that entire area became a key point of trade with America, Genoa, Corsica, Sardinia, Sicily, Naples, and Tunisia.
It is essential to point out that Badajoz was crucial as a crossroads between the south and the north and the interior of the Kingdom of Castilla. It had a customs right of 'portazgo.' Many merchants settled between Cádiz, Puerto de Santa María, Jerez de la Frontera, Écija, Carmona, Seville, and Badajoz and its areas of influence such as Jerez de los Caballeros, Talavera la Real, etc. These merchants were Genoese, Venetian, Flemish, Catalan and Basque. Most were connected with wealthy, noble, and old families from those regions. The mentioned right to 'portazgo' of Badajoz is of particular interest, held by the Sessé and then the Vega Bazán. Numerous merchants necessarily had a relationship with the city of Badajoz and its area of influence and, therefore, with the Vega Bazán family.
Jerez de la Frontera was a critical place for exchanging goods with the city of Badajoz and from Badajoz to Salamanca, Galicia, and León. That is why a customs office was established there, as well as the customs rights of the port of Badajoz, which the Sessé and the Vega Sessé held, and then the Vega Bazán. It is not surprising that the family married the Desclergues in that region at some point in time.
Prominent members of the Sánchez de Badajoz clan are Garci Sánchez de Badajoz (born around 1460 and dead about 1526), a Spanish writer and poet, described in 27.13.1, and Diego Sánchez de Badajoz (born in Talavera la Real, Spain and deceased in 1549), a Spanish poet and dramatist of the Renaissance, described in 27.13.2. Cortés Rosal continues his discourse as follows.
Captain Don Pedro Cortés de Monroy, Conqueror of Chile, was the son of Juan Fernández Borregas, a rich wool merchant and



Alonso García Cortés
Birth
Kingdom of Aragon
Marriage
Inés de Paz y Boil
Salamanca, Spain
Inés de Paz y Boil
Marriage
Alonso García Cortés
Salamanca, Spain
Martín Cortés y Paz
N.
Inés Gómez de Paz
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
Marriage
1431
Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage
1431
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
Fernàn Cortés de Monroy
Juan Cortés de Monroy
Leonor Cortés de Monroy
Leonor de Monroy y Almarez
Death
1450s
Garcia Martin Cortés de Monroy
Birth
1446
Catalina Pizarro Altamirano
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage
Maria de Vega Bazán
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Maria de Vega Bazán
Birth
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Marriage
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Ana Sánchez Cortés
Marriage
Alfon de Villavicencio
Jerez de Badajoz, España
Alfon de Villavicencio
Marriage
Ana Sánchez Cortés
Jerez de Badajoz, España
Hernàn Cortés de Monroy
Birth
1485
Medellín, Extremadura, Castilla, Spain
Death
1547 (62y)
Castilleja de la Cuesta, Castilla, Spain
Malintzin - Malinche
Juana Ramírez de Arellano y Zúñiga
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
Maria Ana Alonso or Gomez
Cristobal Sanchez Cortés y Vega
Maria Ana Alonso or Gomez
Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death
after 1579
Montblanc, España
(DC03)
Pedro Núñez de Villavicencio
Catarina Cabeza de Vaca Mejías
Martín Cortés y Malintzin
Martín Cortés y Zúñiga

Knight of the Golden Spur in 1384 by the King of Aragón Pedro IV.
Don Alonso García Cortes (known as Alonso or Alfonso Garcia de Cortes or Garcia Cortes), who went from the Kingdom of Aragon to the kingdom of Castile to serve the causes of the Christian reconquest, married Inés de Paz in the city of Salamanca, daughter of Doctor Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya and Catalina Boil, who was his relative.

Doña Inés de Paz was the daughter of doctor Don Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya and Doña Catalina de Boil, who had passed to the Kingdom of Castile in the entourage that Doña Leonor de Aragon carried when she married the infante Don Juan de Castilla in the year 1375. Her mother, Catalina de Boil, was a relative of her husband, Alonso García Cortés.

Knight of the Golden Spur.

She was a native of Jerez de Badajoz or Jerez de los Caballeros.

She was the aunt of Cristóbal and Pedro Sánchez Cortés Alcalde de la Santa Hermandad

She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.

Figure 27.42: Four descendant generations of Alonso Garcia Cortes and Inés de Paz y Boil. The branch appears in Figure 27.24 and in Figure 27.35.

Diego de Vega y Sessé
Mayor de Bazán
Maria de Vega Bazán
Birth
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Marriage
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage
Maria de Vega Bazán
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
Maria Ana Alonso or Gomez
Cristobal Sanchez Cortés y Vega
Maria Ana Alonso or Gomez
Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death
after 1579
Montblanc, España
(DC03)
Alonso Martin Cortés
Martin Cortés
Birth
Alange, Spain
Death
Santa Fe de Bogotá, Colombia
Catalina Sánchez
Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death
Montblanc, España
(DC04)
Elisabeth Anna de Ratera
Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
Luis Desclergue y Cortés (I)
(DC04d)
Maurice Desclergue y Cortés
(DC04e)

She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.

Notary and Royal Notary of the Archbishopric of Santa Fé de Bogotá, native of Alange in Extremadura. He passed to the New Kingdom of Granada with the Archbishop Doctor Don Luis Zapata de Cárdenas. He had been a Royal Notary of Alange before going to Santa Fé de Bogotá.

He was born in Alange approximately 1530 and died approximately 1590 or earlier. He was Regidor of Alange and Relative of the Holy Office of the Inquisition before moving to live with his brother in Santa Fé de Bogotá in the New Kingdom of Granada.

(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.

Figure 27.43: Three descendant generations of Diego de Vega y Sesse and Mayor de Bazán. The branch appears in Figure 27.35 and in Figure 27.36.

Fernan Perez de Saavedra
Mayor de Ulloa
Mayor de Saavedra
Pedro de Monroy
Pedro Fernández de Saavedra
Conqueror of Cáceres
Pedro Fernández de Monroy
Pedro Fernandez de Monroy
Elvira Núñez de Andrade y Ulloa
Birth
1255
Fernán Pérez de Monroy
Death
1351
Plasencia, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Estefania Rodríguez de Varillas
Nuño Pérez de Monroy

Figure 27.44: Four descendant generations of Fernan Perez de Saavedra and Mayor de Ulloa. The branch appears in Figure 27.29.

Gonzalo Rodríguez de Varillas
Birth 1300 Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Teresa Martínez Nieto
Juan Rodríguez de las Varillas
Birth Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Knight of the Order of the Band, and the most important man in the city of Salamanca in his time.
María Fernández de Monroy
Birth Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Alvar Rodríguez de Monroy
María Suárez de Solís
Catalina Fernández de Monroy
She is the first cousin of her husband Alonso Rodríguez de las Varillas, Alonso Rodríguez de las Varillas
Fernán Rodríguez de Monroy
Birth Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
The Lord of Monroy.
Isabel de Almaraz
Birth Almaraz, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Juana Rodríguez de las Varillas
Pedro Gómez de Porras
Pedro Rodríguez de Monroy
Also known as Pedro Rodríguez de las Varillas.
Aldonza Suárez de Solís
Rodrigo de Salamanca Monroy
Also known as Ruy González de Salamanca, Ruy de Salamanca, Ruy Rodríguez de las Varillas, Ruy Fernández de Monroy, Ruy de Salamanca Monroy, Ruy Monroy de Salamanca, Rodrigo González Rodríguez de las Varillas, González Rodríguez de las Varillas, González Rodríguez de Salamanca. Officially, it was Ruy de Salamanca.
He was the Lord of La Dueña, the Lord of Cortos de Sacedón and the Lord of Segovia de Sacedón.
Catalina de Paz y Boil
Álvaro de Monroy
Dean of Plasencia
Alonso de Monroy
Juana de Sotomayor
Isabel de Monroy y Almaraz
She is also known as Isabel de Monroy y Almaraz.
Leonor de Monroy y Almarez
Death 1450s
Martín Cortés y Paz
Knight of the Golden Spur.
Rodrigo de Monroy
Marriage 1428 Mencía de Orellana
Mencía de Orellana
Marriage 1428 Rodrigo de Monroy
María de Monroy
María de Monroy "la Brava", so called in the city of Salamanca for having avenged the murder of two of her children.
Antón de Salamanca Monroy y Paz
Lord of La Dueña
Isabel de Monroy y Almaraz
She was the first cousin of her husband, Antón de Salamanca.
Leonor de Monroy y Paz
Alonso Fernández Portocarrero y Orozco
Alonso de Monroy y de Sotomayor
Clavero and Master of the Order of Alcántara
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
Marriage 1431 Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage 1431 Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
She was a native of Jerez de Badajoz or Jerez de los Caballeros.
Fernàn Cortés de Monroy
Juan Cortés de Monroy
Leonor Cortés de Monroy
Garcia Martin Cortés de Monroy
Birth 1446
Catalina Pizarro Altamirano
Rodrigo Portocarrero y Monroy
He was the First Count of Medellín.
Beatriz Pacheco

Figure 27.45: Three descendant generations of Gonzalo Rodriguez de Varillas and Teresa Martínez Nieto. The branch appears in Figure 27.24.

N.N.
Contesina de Calamandrana y Lauria granddaughter of the famous Sicilian Admiral of Aragon Roger de Lauria and of the noble Sicilian lady Margarita Lancia
Juan Martínez de Luna y Sessé
Roger de Lauria
Admiral of Aragon
Juan Martínez de Luna y Calamandrana
Lord of Ylluec
María Teresa de Gotor y Zapata Alagón
Juan Martínez de Luna
Lord of Illueca y Gotor
Teresa Ximenez de Urrea
Aldara Ruíz Cabeza de Vaca
Pope Benedict XIII
Papa Luna
Álvaro Martínez de Luna
Death 1397
N. N.

Figure 27.46: The family of Contesina de Calamandrana y Lauria and her descendants with Juan Martínez de Luna y Sessé. The branch appears in Figure 27.31.

Ramiro I de Aragón
King
Ermesinda de Bigoire
Sancho I de Aragón
King
Sancho Ramírez de Aragón
count
Beatriz
Sancha Sánchez de Aragón
Bacalla de Luna
Bacalla or Bachalla de Luna, Arab leader or Arab emir, Lord of Luna.
García Sánchez de Aragón
Lord of Atarés
Teresa Cajal
Talesa de Aragón
Gastón IV de Bearne
Viscount
Lope Ferrench de Luna
Urraca de Atarés
Urraca de Atarés
Lope Ferrench de Luna
Teresa de Bearne y Aragon
Garcia Aznarez de Boil
García Aznarez I , the Lord tenant of Boil. Descendant of the ancient Counts of Aragón Aznar II Galíndez and Onneca Garcés of Pamplona.
Ximena Ferrench de Luna
Ximena Ferrench de Luna was linked with the Kings of Navarra and Aragon. Her ancestor was Bacalla or Bachalla de Luna, an Arab emir who was the Lord of Luna. Bachalla de Luna was the son of Lope Ferrench and his wife Ximena Martínez, daughter of Martín Gómez. Bachalla de Luna is credited with having participated in the reconquest of Luna, after which he would have been named its first lieutenant and, according to what is said in the Chronicle of San Juan de la Peña, having fought alongside his sons Lope Ferrench I of Luna and Gómez I de Luna at the battle of Alcoraz on November 15, 1096.
Garcia Garcés de Boil
Second Lord of Boil.
Garcia Garcés de Boil
Second Lord of Boil.
Ximena Ferrench de Luna
Ximena Ferrench de Luna was linked with the Kings of Navarra and Aragon. Her ancestor was Bacalla or Bachalla de Luna, an Arab emir who was the Lord of Luna. Bachalla de Luna was the son of Lope Ferrench and his wife Ximena Martínez, daughter of Martín Gómez. Bachalla de Luna is credited with having participated in the reconquest of Luna, after which he would have been named its first lieutenant and, according to what is said in the Chronicle of San Juan de la Peña, having fought alongside his sons Lope Ferrench I of Luna and Gómez I de Luna at the battle of Alcoraz on November 15, 1096.

Figure 27.47: Four descendant generations of Ramiro I de Aragon and Ermesinda de Bigoire. Their appearance is also given in Figure 27.41 and Figure 27.30.

Ramón Berenguer III of Barcelona
Birth 1082
Death 1131 (49y)
Douce de Provence
Birth 1090
Death 1127 (37y)
Berenguela de Barcelona
Alfonso VII of Leon
King
Sancho VI de Navarra
Birth 1133
Pamplona, España
Death 1194 (61y)
The Wise. King of Pamplona and Navarra.
Sancha de Castilla
Berenguela Sánchez de Navarra
Queen of England, as she was the wife of King Richard the Lionheart.
Maria Sanchez of Navarra
Princess
Gil Podavila or Bodavila
Birth
France
Death
Estella, Navarra, Spain
Knight Templar. Also known as Gil Podavila / Bodavila / Bouteville. His nephews in England were also Knights Templar: Geoffrey Boteville and Oliver Boteville (Geoffroy de Bouteville/ Olivier de Bouteville).
He went on to settle in the Court of his second cousin Sancho VI of Navarra the Wise, where he married Doña María Sánchez de Navarra, youngest daughter of his cousin the King Don Sancho VI of Navarre the Wise
Urraca Gil
Don Pedro Sánchez de Varillas
Lord of Barillas in Navarre.
Ramón Berenguer IV of Barcelona
Birth 1131
Barcelona, España
Death 1162 (31y)
Borgo San Dalazzo, Italy
Petronila de Aragon
Birth 1136
Death 1173 (37y)
Berenguer of Barcelona
Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza
Marriage 1188
Sancha Nuñez de Lara
He stayed in Salamanca between 1168 and 1181. He had two illegitimate children who were later legitimized by Pope Celestine III (Giacinto Orsini from Rome)
Sancha Nuñez de Lara
Marriage 1188
Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza
Don Pedro Sánchez de Varillas
Lord of Barillas in Navarre.
Urraca Gil
Don Ramón Sánchez
Commander of the Templars in the city of Salamanca.
Nuño Sánchez
Lord of Roussillon
Sancho Pérez de Varillas
Birth
Cerdanya, Spain
Estefanía Rodríguez de Azagra or Ruiz de Azagra
Pedro de Aragon
Alfonso II de Aragon y de Barcelona
Birth 1157
Death 1196 (39y)
Sancha de Castilla
Birth 1154
Death 1208 (54y)
Pedro II de Aragón
Birth 1178
Death 1213 (35y)
Maria de Montpelier
Birth 1180
Death 1213 (33y)
Jaime I de Aragón
Birth 1208
Death 1276 (68y)
Violante de Hungria
Birth 1215
Death 1251 (36y)

Figure 27.48: Four descendant generations of Ramon Berenguer III of Barcelona and Douce de Provence. Their appearance is also given in Figure 27.38 and Figure 27.26.

also owner of large flocks of sheep (descendant of a Jewish-converted family that went to Chile for fear of the Inquisition) and of María Cortés; maternal grandson of Gonzalo Alonso Cortés (sometimes also called Gonzalo García Cortés) and Marina Mateos; maternal - paternal great-grandson of Alonso Cortés de Monroy and Ana Sánchez de Badajoz. He is shown in Figure 27.3.
You can see our family coat of arms in the center, which is the same as that of the Rodríguez de las Varillas and was adopted with permission from the Crown of Aragon by the Cortés de Monroy. Well, that shield, which is esoteric and represents the blood of the Grail, was carried with great pride by the Cortés descendants of Don Martín Cortés and Doña Leonor de Monroy. The general coat of arms belongs to the Monroys, which derives from another significant family in the history of Europe and the Crusades.
Rodrigo Ruiz de Varillas was the son of Sancho Pérez de Varillas and Estefanía Rodríguez de Azagra or Ruiz de Azagra.
Sancho Pérez de Varillas was the son of Don Pedro Sánchez de Varillas and Urraca Gil.
Don Pedro Sánchez de Varillas was the Lord of Barillas in Navarre, and his father was Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza. The latter was married to Sancha Nuñez de Lara in 1188; and he stayed in Salamanca between 1168 and 1181, and he had two illegitimate children who were later legitimized by Pope Celestine III (Giacinto Orsini from Rome). His ancestry is described in Chapter 27.14.
Urraca Gil was the daughter of Gil Podavila or Bodavila and of Maria Sanchez of Navarra, a Princess described in Chapter 27.15.
Gil Podavila or Bodavila was born in France and dead in Estella, Navarra, Spain. He is described in Chapter 27.16.
Estefanía Rodríguez de Azagra or Ruiz de Azagra was the daughter of Rodrígo Ruiz de Azagra and Estefanía Pérez de Baztan, the aunt of Gonzalo Ibañez de Bazán. Rodrígo Ruiz de Azagra was the son of Gonzalo Rodríguez de Azagra or Ruiz de Azagra, Royal Ensign 1180 - 1181 of Fernando II of León, Lord tenant in Salamanca in 1179, and Master of the Order of the Temple.

27.13.1 Garci Sánchez de Badajoz

Garci Sánchez de Badajoz (1460-1526), in Figure 27.56 on page 322, was a notable Spanish poet from the late 15th and early 16th centuries, associated with the lyric poetry movement known as 'lírica cancioneril' and the allegorical-Dantean school. Born in Écija, his family hailed from the lower nobility of Badajoz, but they settled in Seville during the 15th century. His work is prominently featured in the 'Cancionero General' (1511), a significant anthology of Spanish poetry. Additional compositions by him appear in loose sheets ('pliegos sueltos') and the 'Cancionero de romances.'
Fray Jerónimo Román, in his 'República del mundo,' highlights Sánchez de Badajoz as an eminent musician skilled in playing the Spanish vihuela. His life took a dramatic turn when a profound romantic passion led him to lose his sanity.
Sánchez de Badajoz's literary contributions are diverse and often reflect a blend of parody and allegory. One of his notable works, 'Liçiones de Job apropiadas a las pasiones de amor,' is a parody of the biblical Book of Job, which faced scrutiny and expurgation by the Inquisition before it could be published in the 'Cancionero General.' Other significant works include 'Claro escuro,' 'El sueño' (where he envisions his own funeral), and 'El infierno del amor,' an allegorical poem in the style of Dante Alighieri that depicts perpetual suffering through erotic songs of deceased poets.
His romance 'Caminando por mis males' is remarkable for its subjective and morbid sentimentality, which foreshadows elements of Romanticism. Another acclaimed work is 'Lamentaciones de amores,' which was highly praised by the poet Fernando de Herrera.
His contemporaries and later figures highly regarded Sánchez de Badajoz's style and compositions in Spanish literature. Juan de Valdés commended his poetic style in the 'Diálogo de la lengua,' and the famed playwright Lope de Vega extolled his verses in the prologue to his work 'Isidro,' stating, "What equals a redondilla by Garci Sánchez?" His oeuvre includes various genres such as songs, villancicos, and dezires, reflecting his rich and diverse poetic talent. Despite the challenges posed by the Inquisition and the tumultuous personal life that marked his later years, Garci Sánchez de Badajoz remains a significant figure in the landscape of Spanish Renaissance poetry.

Figure 27.49: Fresco at the Convent of the Knights of Calatrava in Alcañiz, Spain, 1325-1347. The importance of the Luna family, appearing in Chapter 27.5, is clear.

Datum in Montealbo, septimo decimo kalendas madii, anno Domini, millesimo trecentesimo vicesimo. Vidit.
Signum Iacobi, Dei gratia. regis Aragonum, Valencie, Sardinie et Corsice ac Comitis Barchinone.
Testes sunt: Eximinus Tarraconensis archiepiscopus, Philipus de Salutiis, Guillelmus de Angularia, Gueraldus de Rocabertins, Othonus de Mantechateno.
Signum Ffrancisci de Bastida predicti domini regis scriptoris, qui de mandato ipsius hec scribi, fecit cum litteris rasis et emendatis, in linea quarta ubi scribitur: "quoquomodo ", et in octava linea ubi scribitur; "septimo decimo ", et clausit.
Signum Ambrosi Tarrega utriusque iunibus doctoris, vicarii ville et vicarie Montisalbi, Tarraconensis diocesis, qui huic translato, bene etfideliter, cum suo originali comprobato de voluntate nostra factis ex parte sane, cesarea, catholice, ac regie magestatis, auctoritatem nostram, impendimus pariter et decretum, manu mei Bonaventure del Clergue, notario et scribe curie dicti magnfici domini vicarii. In cuius posse dictus magnficus dominus dominus vicariis hanc firmam fecit, die iovis, decima quarta, mensis septembris, anno a nativitate Domini, millesimo quincentesimo tricesimo quinto; presentibus pro testibus honorabilis Bernardo Mediona, mercatore et Petro Fabrer, sartore ville Montisalbi habitatoribus. Et ideo ego, dictus notario et scriba predictus hec scripsi et hic meum solitum arus notarii apposui.
Signum Bartholomei Iohannis Coloma. oriundi et habitatoris apostolica et regia auctoritatibus notarii publici ville Montisalbi, diocesis Tarraconensis; regentisque scripturas arquivi aule domus consilii, per absentiam discreti Petri Bellissen, regia autoritate connotarii sui, qui huic translato ab originali suo reperto, in arquivio aule domus consilii pertanere, in quodam calaxio in quo manent omnia privilegia ipse universitatis concessa, et ibi sunt custodia: de licencia et mandato honorabilis Iacobi Pont et Ioannis Rosich consulum anno presenti, et subscripto ipsius universitatis et ville Montisalbi, una cum honorabili Iacobo Madiona, absenti instante et requirente honorabili Berengario Alos, subsindico civitatis Balagarii sumpto et cum eo veraciter comprobato. Autoritzatoque ut supra patet per magnficum domini vicarium Montisalbi una cum predictis testibus et connotatii sui, presentis interfuit sigillumque magnum dicte universitatis et ville Montisalbi, cum corosulis ceridis rubei croceique coloris in cera virmilia appentione, fecit comuniri in testimonium premissores, scripsit cl clausit die quartodecimo, mensis septembris, anno a nativitate Domini, millesimo quingentesimo tricesimo quinto, cum supraposito in linea quarta huius translati ubi legitur: "propter et raso et emendato", in duodecima, in participatione testium ubi Igitur: "Geraldus ".
Signum mei Ioannis Muntanyola, apostolica et regia autoritatibus notarii publici ville Montisalbi, huiusmodi translati testis.
Signum Bonaventura deç Clergue, ville Montisalbi, Tarraconensis diocesis, apostolica et regia auctoritatibus notarii publici, huiusmodi translati testis.

Figure 27.50: The importance of Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03), as a scribe and notary in 1535 is exemplified by this document, in which he is responsible for the proper transcription and translation of a document of 1320, concerning the legal rights of the citizens of Montblanc. The text is transcribed from the 1535 document, with help from Dolors Domingo.[1]

Figure 27.51: Iglesia de Santa Maria in Maluenda, near Calatayud, Spain. The Luna lineage is represented in this church by heraldic shields of several of their families. Right are shields of the Martínez de Luna with a silver crescent and a silver campaign on a field of gules. It is assumed that it refers to Don Pedro Martínez de Luna, "El Papa Luna", since he is accompanied by symbols related to the hierarchy of the Catholic Church. Left are shields of the Ferrench de Luna with a ranverse crescent of gold and sable checkers on a silver field and a checkered campaign of gold and sable. It is almost certain that when this alfarje was built, Queen María de Luna, the wife of Martin I the Humane, who ruled at the beginning of her husband's reign, between 1395 and 1397, was a representative of this lineage.

Figure 27.52: Don Martín Cortés y Zuñiga, the son of Hernàn Cortés de Monroy and Juana Ramírez de Arellano y Zúñiga, described in Chapter 27.20.18.

Figure 27.53: The Papal Palace of Avignon, an architectural marvel of the 14th century, served as the residence of the Popes during the Avignon Papacy (1309-1377). Constructed in phases, the palace reflects a fusion of Gothic and fortified architecture, symbolizing the church's power and influence. The grand halls, chapels, and private apartments are adorned with frescoes by artists such as Matteo Giovanetti. Today, the palace is a UNESCO World Heritage site and a testament to medieval ecclesiastical architecture. It hosts various cultural events, including the renowned Avignon Festival. It offers historians and architects insights into the ecclesiastical and political history of the 14th century, as well as the evolution of Gothic architecture. This photo is the courtesy of Jean-Marc Rosier.

27.13.2 Diego Sánchez de Badajoz

Diego Sánchez de Badajoz, born in Talavera la Real in the late 15th century, emerged as a significant figure in the Spanish Renaissance. He passed away in 1549. Despite limited biographical data, it is believed that he may have graduated with a bachelor's degree from Salamanca, though he served as the parish priest of Talavera la Real from 1533 until his death. Sánchez de Badajoz had strong connections with the Cathedral of Badajoz and the influential Dukes of Feria.

Diego Sánchez de Badajoz, shown in Figure 27.57, is renowned for his poetic and dramatic works, compiled posthumously by his nephew in 'Recopilación en metro.' This collection includes 27 dramatic pieces known as farsas. Some of these works, characterized by allegorical techniques and Eucharistic themes, can be classified as autos sacramentales, as scholar Bruce W. Wardropper noted. His plays often reference religious settings, implying they were performed within church interiors. His poetry predominantly revolves around religious themes, with notable works such as 'Matraca para jugadores,' 'Montería espiritual,' 'Romance de Nuestra Señora,' and 'Danza en que todos los pecados mortales danzan con nuestro padre Adán.'

Sánchez de Badajoz's theater is moralistic and employs the Extremaduran dialect sayagués, introducing picaresque elements devoid of eroticism and bucolic themes. His plays typically feature three to six characters, often allegorical and unnamed, representing general types like the beekeeper, the shepherd, the woman, and the husband. The world depicted in his works retains a medieval outlook with an unchangeable social order. As a moralist rather than a social critic, his plays emphasize established societal norms.

His dramatic works are notable for their tripartite structure, beginning with an introito by a shepherd, followed by the main dramatic body, and concluding with a villancico sung by all characters. Unlike the shepherds in Juan del Encina's works, Sánchez de Badajoz's shepherds are more medieval, serving as commentators on theological themes and adding a comic element. These shepherds introduce the plays, outline their moral and doctrinal purposes, and occasionally incorporate social critique.

Sánchez de Badajoz's contributions to theater are significant. He presented relatable shepherd characters and adeptly handled theological themes. He advanced the allegorical technique seen in autos sacramentales, infusing his works with comedic and satirical elements. Though rooted in a joyful and somewhat naive piety, his Christian ethics firmly supported Christian orthodoxy and a static social structure.

27.14 Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza

Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza was the Great-great-great-grandfather of Juan Rodriguez de las Varillas, described in Chapter 27.13.

His ancestry is shown in Figure 27.26.

Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza married Sancha Nuñez de Lara in 1188. He stayed in Salamanca between 1168 and 1181. He

Figure 27.54: Abu Yahya, the last Muslim ruler of Mallorca, who died in 1229. He was an ancestor of Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán, Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) grandmother. He is, therefore, also our distant ancestor. Renowned for his wisdom, literary accomplishments, and exceptional physical beauty, Abu Yahya was a prominent figure in the island's rich history. His reign marked the end of centuries of Islamic rule, culminating in his death during the conquest of Mallorca by King James I of Aragon. Mallorca was a flourishing center of culture, trade, and agriculture during its Muslim rule. The island, known as Madina Mayurqa, was adorned with lush, verdant gardens, sophisticated irrigation systems, and stunning examples of Islamic architecture. The bustling ports of Palma facilitated trade across the Mediterranean, making Mallorca an essential hub for commerce and cultural exchange. The Muslim rulers promoted arts and sciences, contributing to a rich intellectual environment. This era left a lasting legacy on the island's landscape, language, and cultural practices, elements of which are still evident in Mallorca today.

The language of Mallorca, distinct from the Catalan of mainland Spain, is infused with Arabic-derived words. Many Mallorcians are unaware of how deeply Islamic culture is embedded in their history, from language and architecture to agriculture.

One of the most remarkable sites is the mansion of Alfabia, situated northwest of Palma. This mansion stands on the location of the residence of the last Muslim wali (viceroy) of Mallorca. It blends Islamic and Mediterranean architecture with lush gardens nourished by a spring that has flowed continuously since 1254. The gardens, designed in the Hispano-Arabic tradition, showcase elements like cascading water and intricate water channels.

The discovery of a Muslim family's treasure, buried in a cave and now housed in the Museu de Mallorca, further illustrates this heritage. The treasure includes gold and silver coins and jewelry from the Almohad period, providing tangible links to the island's past. The coins and jewelry, with their inscriptions and designs, highlight the sophisticated culture and enduring legacy of the Muslim community in Mallorca.

Left is an impression made by AI of how Abu Yahya may have looked like (DALL·E 2024-05-27 18.07.07). Right is the Palace of Almudaina in Palma.

Figure 27.55: Pedro Martínez de Luna, more famously known as Antipope Benedict XIII or Pope Luna, was born in Illueca, Aragón, Spain. Elected Pope in Avignon in 1394 during the Western Schism, his papacy was marked by controversy and conflict. Benedict XIII steadfastly refused to abdicate even after being deposed in 1417, a stance that led him to seek refuge in the castle of Peñíscola in Castellón, Comunidad Valenciana. He continued to assert his legitimacy until his death, the exact date of which remains uncertain, though some sources suggest November 29, 1422. Following his death, Benedict XIII's body was interred in the castle at Peñíscola. Later, his remains were moved to his birthplace in Illueca. However, during the War of Spanish Succession, his body was destroyed, with only his skull surviving. This relic is now housed in the Condes de Argillo Palace in Aragón, Spain. Pope Luna's unwavering resolve and the dramatic events surrounding his papacy and posthumous fate underscore his complex and contentious legacy within the history of the Catholic Church.

Cancionero de Garci Sánchez de Badajoz

EDICION PREPARADA POR
JULIA CASTILLO

Garci Sánchez de Badajoz, nacido en Ecija y conocido por haber enloquecido de amor, es uno de los grandes poetas de finales del S. XV y principios del S. XVI, si hemos de creer a Fernando de Herrera, Quevedo, Lope, Gracián...

El Cancionero de Garci Sánchez de Badajoz contiene su obra poética completa -en parte inédita hasta ahora- y un buen número de glosas de autores contemporáneos suyos o algo posteriores, algunos conocidos (como Camoens y Silvestre) y la mayor parte anónimos inéditos, así como las composiciones de su tiempo que él mismo glosó en su largo poema Infierno damor. Esta edición de su obra por lo tanto ha sido concebida como un cancionero de autor del S. XV. Aporta además dos textos inéditos de principios del S. XVI y de sumo interés: Letras y Figuras y la Selva de Epíctetos. Esta última podría ser considerada como un cuaderno de apuntes de un poeta de principios del S. XVI (momento en que se incorporan los metros italianos y otras innovaciones a la poesía castellana).

La presente edición y los estudios que la acompañan han sido realizados por Julia Castillo, premio Adonais de poesía (1974) y licenciada en antropología por la Univ. de Madrid.

BIBLIOTECA DE LA LITERATURA
Y EL PENSAMIENTO HISPANICOS

P.V.P. 300 Ptas.

Figure 27.56: 'Cancionero de Garci Sanchez de Badajoz' was prepared by Julia Castillo and published in 1980.

Figure 27.57: Diego Sánchez de Badajoz was a prominent Spanish poet and dramatist of the Renaissance. He died in 1549.

had two illegitimate children who were later legitimized by Pope Celestine III (Giacinto Orsini from Rome).
Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza's parents were Ramón Berenguer IV of Barcelona, who was born in Barcelona, Spain, in 1131 and died in Borgo San Dalazzo, Italy, in 1162, and Petronila de Aragon. The parents of Ramón Berenguer IV of Barcelona were Ramón Berenguer III of Barcelona and Douce de Provence.

27.15 Maria Sanchez of Navarra

Maria Sanchez of Navarra was the Great-great-great-grandmother of Juan Rodriguez de las Varillas, described in Chapter 27.13.
Her ancestry is shown in Figure 27.38. Maria Sanchez of Navarra was a Princess. She was the daughter of Sancho VI de Navarra and Sancha de Castilla.
Sancho VI de Navarra was born in Pamplona, España in 1133. He was the King of Pamplona and Navarra, also known as The Wise. His parents were King Alfonso VII of Leon and Berenguela de Barcelona.
The latter was the daughter of Ramón Berenguer III of Barcelona and Douce de Provence. The descendants of Ramón Berenguer III of Barcelona are shown in Figure 27.48.

27.16 Gil Podavila or Bodavila

Gil Podavila or Bodavila was the Great-great-great-grandfather of Juan Rodriguez de las Varillas, described in Chapter 27.13.
Gil Podavila, or Bodavila, was born in France and died in Estella, Navarra, Spain. He was a Knight Templar, also known as Gil Podavila or Bodavila or Bouteville. His nephews in England were also Knights Templar, namely Geoffrey Boteville and Oliver Boteville (Geoffroy de Bouteville/Olivier de Bouteville).
He went on to settle in the Court of his second cousin, Sancho VI of Navarra the Wise, where he married Doña María Sánchez de Navarra, the youngest daughter of his cousin, King Don Sancho VI of Navarre the Wise.

27.17 Maria Fernandez de Monroy

Maria Fernandez de Monroy was the granddaughter of Fernán Pérez de Monroy, described in Chapter 27.18.
Her ancestry is shown in Figure 27.37. María Fernández de Monroy was born in Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España. She was the daughter of Fernán Pérez de Monroy and Inés Rodríguez de Varillas.
Fernán Pérez de Monroy was the son of Fernán Pérez de Monroy, described in Chapter 27.18, who died, in 1351, in Plasencia, Reino de Castile y Leon, España, and Estefania Rodríguez de Varillas. The latter is described in Chapter 27.19.

27.18 Fernan Perez de Monroy

Fernan Perez de Monroy was the great-great-great-grandfather of Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz, described in Chapter 27.24.
Fernán Pérez de Monroy died in 1351 in Plasencia, Reino de Castile y Leon, España. He was the son of Pedro Fernandez de Monroy and Elvira Núñez de Andrade y Ulloa. The latter was born in 1255 as the daughter of Nuño Freyre de Andrade and Maria de Ulloa.

His ancestry is shown in Figure 27.29.

Pedro Fernandez de Monroy was the son of Pedro Fernández de Monroy. The latter was the son of Pedro de Monroy and Mayor de Saavedra, the daughter of Fernán Pérez de Saavedra[27] and Mayor de Ulloa. The descendants of Fernan Perez de Saavedra are shown in Figure 27.44. Doña Mayor de Saavedra was a sister of Don Pedro Fernández de Saavedra, the conqueror of Cáceres and its temporary possessor. Pedro de Monroy and Mayor de Saavedra were the first of his Monroy lineage to go to the Kingdom of Léon and settle in the Extremadura.

Fernán Pérez de Monroy had a son with the same name who married his first cousin, Doña Inés Rodríguez de las Varillas.

Don Fernán Pérez de Monroy (junior) and Doña Inés Rodríguez de las Varillas were the parents of Doña María Fernández de Monroy. The latter married her cousin, Don Juan Rodríguez de las Varillas, the son of Gonzalo Rodríguez de las Varillas and Doña Teresa Martínez Nieto.

Concerning the above-mentioned Pedro de Monroy, husband of Mayor de Saavedra.

Cortés Rosal revealed a crucial discovery that he declared as the most important of all the facts he discovered decades before. It is a contestation of what is regularly found in existing history books.

Don Pedro de Monroy, the first person carrying this family name, participated in the first siege of the influential Muslim of Cáceres. He was still a very young man then, and he participated because that was expected of a man of his noble blood. The unsuccessful siege came under the direct orders and personal participation of Savary de Mauleon, a famous military and an Occitan troubadour serving King Alfonso IX of León. The unsuccessful siege was not the end. Don Pedro de Monroy besieged the enclave in 1222, 1223, and 1225 until, finally, in 1229, he was successful. Indeed, in 1229, the siege, undertaken with Pedro Fernández de Saavedra, eventually resulted in a victory by the Christians, and Cáceres was definitively conquered.

Unlike custom in later years, at the time of the conquer of Cáceres, Don Pedro de Monroy did not receive 'fueros'[28] granted by King Alfonso IX of León because a reward by state-property was prohibited. So, Don Pedro de Monroy was not rewarded with lands for his exploits and participation in this triumphal siege of Caceres.

In 1287, however, his grandson, Don Fernán Pérez de Monroy, obtained from the Crown through the Council of Plasencia, in return for the merits and services provided to the Crown by his grandfather Don Pedro de Monroy, some lands located in the Arañuelo countryside, very close to Cáceres, to which he gave his name. Since then, these lands have been known as the lordship of Monroy. From then onward, the Monroy lordship constituted the nucleus of the "mayorazgo" instituted by the family.

Don Pedro de Monroy, the first of the name stated above, married Doña Mayor de Saavedra, the sister of his military partner, Don Pedro Fernández de Saavedra. Doña Mayor de Saavedra and Don Pedro Fernández de Saavedra were children of Don Fernán Pérez de Saavedra and Doña Mayor de Ulloa.

This information is valuable because it explains the origin of the place's name. Indeed, the site was named after the family and not vice versa. Also, keep in mind that Savary de Mauleon's contribution is significant because it indicates involvement from France.

It is also important that Don Pedro de Monroy was the first to carry that name because it means that his father had a different name.

Cortés Rosal presented evidence that Don Pedro de Monroy was the first of his lineage to settle in Extremadura, and he counts among his ancestors noble knights belonging to the Order of the Temple and even some as martyrs of Christianity who died in military campaigns of the Crusades. The templars in the ancestry of Cortés are the reason why Antoni Desclergue (DC06), when he brought polychrome retable panels to Flanders from Spain, ensured that the templar flower would surround them as indications of his fathers used family name, Desclergue y Cortés. The appearance of Jewish conversos in that Cortés ancestry may also explain the closeness between Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) and Carlos Coloma de Saa, whose ancestors were conversos, as known from the literature.

Concerning the brother of Fernan Perez de Monroy, Don Nuño Pérez de Monroy, Cortés Rosal explained that Don Nuño Pérez de Monroy, the son of Don Pedro Fernández de Monroy and Doña Elvira Núñez de Andrade, and brother of our grandfather Don Fernán Pérez de Monroy, husband of Doña Estefanía Rodríguez de las Varillas was a prominent person. He was an indispensable canon in his time, with much power and influence in the Royal Court, which he passed from a very young age. He was Archdeacon of Trujillo in Extremadura and Abbot of Santander. When Queen María de Molina (Queen of Castile, the wife of Sancho IV de Castilla and the mother of King of Castilla Fernando IV) became widowed and became Regent, he who was her Confessor became the "Queen's right hand," and she was her Chancellor and Counselor. He died in the year 1326.

27.19 Estefania Rodriguez de Varillas

Estefania Rodríguez de Varillas was the grandmother of Maria Fernandez de Monroy, described in Chapter 27.17.

Her ancestry is shown in Figure 27.28.

Estefania Rodríguez de Varillas was the daughter of Inés Godinez, described in Chapter 27.13, daughter of Alfonso Godinez, minister of King Sancho IV, and Inés Pérez de Tenorio. The father of Alfonso Godinez was Don Godhino, the coin holder of Coimbra, who passed to Castile at the request of the King of Castile, Alfonso X the Wise.

The father of Estefania Rodríguez de Varillas was Rodrigo Ruiz de Varillas, the son of Sancho Pérez de Varillas and Estefanía Rodríguez de Azagra or Ruiz de Azagra.

Estefanía Rodríguez de Azagra or Ruiz de Azagra was the daughter of Estefanía Pérez de Baztan, the aunt of Gonzalo Ibañez de Bazán and Rodrígo Ruiz de Azagra. The latter was the son of Gonzalo Rodríguez de Azagra or Ruiz de Azagra, who was the Royal Ensign in 1180 and 1181 of Fernando II of León, and who was the Lord tenant in Salamanca in 1179 and a Master of the Order of the Temple.

Sancho Pérez de Varillas, born in Cerdanya, Spain, was the son of Don Pedro Sánchez de Varillas and Urraca Gil.

Don Pedro Sánchez de Varillas was the Lord of Barillas in Navarre and the son of Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza. The latter was married, in 1188, to Sancha Nuñez de Lara, and he stayed in Salamanca between 1168 and 1181. Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza had two illegitimate children who were later legitimized by Pope Celestine III (Giacinto Orsini from Rome).

Urraca Gil was the daughter of Princess Maria Sanchez of Navarra and Gil Podavila or Bodavila. The latter was born in France and died in Estella, Navarra, Spain. Gil Podavila was a Knight Templar, also known as Gil Podavila, Bodavila, or Bouteville. His nephews in England were also Knights Templar, namely Geoffrey Boteville and Oliver Boteville (also known as Geoffroy de Bouteville and Olivier de Bouteville).

Gil Podavila went on to settle in the Court of his second cousin, Sancho VI of Navarra the Wise, where he married Doña María

---

[27] Many genealogists confuse Don Fernán Pérez de Saavedra with Don Pedro Fernández de Saavedra.

[28] fueros are rights and privileges

Sánchez de Navarra, the youngest daughter of his cousin, King Don Sancho VI of Navarre the Wise.

27.20 Hernán Cortés de Monroy, Ana's Cousin and a Conquistador

27.20.1 Introduction

Hernán Cortés de Monroy[29] (also known as Fernando Cortés or Fernan Cortés), conqueror of Mexico, was the son of Garcia Martín Cortés de Monroy, born around 1446, and Catalina Pizarro Atamirano. Garcia Martín Cortés de Monroy was the son of Martin Cortés y Paz and Leonor de Monroy y Almarez.

The brother of Garcia Martin Cortés de Monroy, Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy, was the grandfather of Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán. This is illustrated in Figure 49.91 on page 1021. Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy was Ana de Villavicencio's great-grandfather, the mother of Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio. The latter relationship is illustrated in Figure 49.92 on page 1022 and in Figure 25.35 on page 289.

Hernán Cortés de Monroy was born in Medellin, shown in Figure 27.5 on page 298 in Spanish Extremadura in 1485, and he died on December 2, 1547, in Castileja de la Cuesta in Spain. He was a conquistador. His full name was Hernán Cortés de Monroy Pizarro Altamirano, and he was marqués del Valle de Oaxaca. Hernán Cortés is famous for conquering Mexico from 1519 until 1531. He is controversial for several reasons. Specifically, during his life and the century after his presence in Mexico, he was admired and simultaneously ignored in Spain. The reason is that, despite the treasures he brought back from Mexico, he followed a somewhat independent path by taking too much initiative.

For this reason, his loyalty to the King of Spain, H.M. Emperor Carlos V, and the European feudality was questioned, and he was not trusted. His popularity with a part of the population in Mexico could have allowed him to establish the independent Mexican Kingdom, which resulted in mistrust by the Europeans and, in particular, the Council of the Indies. His family would probably never have used his fame to seek appreciation from the King because of this doubly faced reputation. For this reason, we may assume that the descendants of Anna Cortés de Monroy, wife of Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03) and cousin of Hernán Cortés, would probably never have dared to exploit their connection with Hernán when seeking nobility titles. An implicit influence may, nevertheless, have occurred, and, after all, the family Cortés de Monroy was of high standing. However, the descendants must have known the blood link with Hernán Cortés. Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06), for instance, used Hernán's face as the example in a sculpture, shown in Figure 49.52 on page 1009, depicting his father Jeroni Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) in a chapel in Deerlijk, described in Chapter 49.4.2. In the same chapter, in particular, in Chapter 49.10.2, another panel depicting the Flight from Egypt, shown in Figure 49.76 on page 1014 exposes more references to Hernán Cortés.

27.20.2 Heraldic Shield

The authentic coat of arms of Hernán Cortés is shown in Figure 27.4. The Heraldic Shield of Hernán Cortes contains a blue border with eight San Juan crosses around the middle shield, similar to that of the Kingdom of Aragon.

Hernán Cortés de Monroy, shown in Figure 27.7, a cousin of our ancestor Anna Cortés de Monroy, has been the most successful Conquistador. His connection is exposed in Figure 27.6. His success was the most important trait a person can have; namely, he possessed the ability to rise to the occasion.

In 1506, Hernán Cortés de Monroy left for the New World to conquer Hispaniola (nowadays the Dominican Republic). In 1511, he beat, together with Diego Velázquez, the territory of Cuba. In this period, namely, 1507, our ancestor Galceran Desclergue (II) (DC02dy1), described above, was born. Becoming part of the trade with Cuba and Mexico would have been an essential activity of Galceran.

Hernán Cortés de Monroy 'married' la Malinche, also known as Doña Marina or Malinalli Tenepal. She was born in Coatzacoalcos around 1502 and died in Mexico City around 1529. She played an essential role as a translator. She was the first woman to give birth to Mestice children and is called the mother of Mexico because most Mexicans can be considered mestizo or blended descendants from Aztecs and Spanish. His father was Martin Cortés de Monroy (born in Medellin in 1449 and Conquistador of Peru), and his mother was Catalina Pizarro Altamirano (born in 1450 in Medellin and dead in 1530 in Mexico). Catalina Pizarro Altamirano was a blood relative of Francisco Pizarro, who conquered the Inca empire. The brothers of Martin Cortés de Monroy were Hernán Cortés de Monroy, Juan Cortés (senior) de Monroy and Alonso Cortés de Monroy.

Martin Cortés de Monroy was a hidalgo who held various official positions, including the Attorney General, suggesting that he had a personal fortune. The Monroys are a family of old Catholics from Cantabria in Northern Spain. They took part in the Reconquista of Extremadura and have possessions in their stronghold of Belvís (now Belvís de Monroy) and Salamanca. Several ancestors of Cortés are famous for their military accomplishments.

One of Hernán's uncles, our ancestor, was Alfonso or Alonso Cortés de Monroy. He was the Lieutenant of the mayor of Don Benito, Rodrigo de Portocarrero, and a grandmaster of the Order of Alcántara, one of the mighty Spanish orders of chivalry.

Alonso Cortés de Monroy had a daughter, Anna Cortés de Monroy. She is our ancestor, and she married Don Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03) when she was merely sixteen or seventeen years old.

The couple had two children, namely our ancestor Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04) and Luis Desclergue y Cortés (I) (DC04d). Jeroni Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) and Enric Desclergue y Cortés (DC05c), two sons of Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04) and Maria Anna Desclergue y de Villavicencio, would carry the same name. The two other sons of Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04), along with his later wife, Anna de Ratera, would live as 'Desclergue y Ratera.'

Alonso Cortés de Monroy had three brothers and two sisters: Hernán Cortés de Monroy (senior), Juan Cortés de Monroy (father of Francisco Cortés, active in Mexico in 1518), and Martin Cortés de Monroy (father of the Conquistador Hernán Cortés).

In Part XV, one can also find that we still have some DNA in common with Cortés (7.5 centiMorgans). Connections with Cantabria, where the Monroys originate from, are also apparent.

27.20.3 His Early Life and Arrival in the New World

Describing the life of Hernán Cortés can be done in a contemporary manner or a modern method. One can write entire books about slavery, a phenomenon that the author denounces. However, the facts are that what they are and customs in the 16th century differed from those in our modern world. Therefore, the author describes Hernán as someone who has always been defined in historical literature without condemnation. The latter would indeed be beyond the descriptive scope of this work.

---

[29] Conquistador Don Fernando Cortés, better known as Hernán Cortés, probably never used the surname Monroy, apart from one occasion.

Hernán Cortés was an only child, born in 1485. He said he didn't like his mother very much, whom he described as 'tough and mean,' even though he has always respected her. He was very close to his father, one of the 'Great men of Spain,' proud and arrogant, even in front of the King. Hernán Cortés shared this trait.

At 14, his parents sent him to Salamanca. He was in Salamanca at the home of his aunt Doña Inés Gómez de Paz (half-sister of his father and natural daughter of Don Martín Cortés y Paz), married to the Notary of the city of Salamanca, Don Francisco Núñez de Varela, a descendant of a well-known Jewish-converted family.

Historians write that there have been several reasons for his short stay at the University, such as illness, boredom, a lack of money, and restless youth. Nevertheless, he acquired a fruitful basis in Latin, law, and rhetoric, which would be useful later in life. While a student, he worked as an apprentice notary in Valladolid, where his cousin Anna Cortés de Monroy was born fifty years later in 1553.

Back in Medellín, after quitting the University, Cortés opted for a military career. He hesitated between Italy and the New World. After a few adventures, especially in love, he embarked in 1504 or 1506 for Hispaniola (Santo Domingo). The departure occurred in Sanlúcar de Barrameda, just north of Cadiz, shown in Figure 27.23, on a ship owned by Palos and led by Alonso Quintero. The five convoy ships headed first to La Gomera on the Canary Islands and then to Hispaniola, where the fleet of five boats arrived a few days later than planned due to some setbacks.

Upon arrival on the island, Cortés received land and local inhabitants, 'Indians,' to develop colonization. On his estates, he was relatively successful in his mission.

When he met Nicolás de Ovando, the governor of Hispaniola, the latter granted him the notary office in Azua. In 1509, he had syphilis and could not participate in an expedition to conquer more lands.

In 1511, Cortés accompanied Diego Velázquez de Cuéllar to Cuba, where he participated in the island's conquest. He was appointed the first mayor of Santiago de Cuba and received a large property and many slaves as a reward. At some point, he was imprisoned for conspiring against Velázquez. When he was liberated, Hernán married Velázquez' sister-in-law Catalina Juárez Marcaida. At that time, he noticed that expeditions, which returned from Yucatan and were led by Francisco Hernández de Córdoba (1517) and Juan de Grijalva (1518), reported on distant lands and also brought gold with them.

Cortés decided to sell all his goods to purchase ships and equipment. He agreed with Velázquez, who had recently become the governor of Cuba, to lead an expedition. The official purpose of the journey was to explore and find ways to trade with new lands in the West.

When Velázquez expressed suspicion, and Hernán feared that the expedition would be denounced, the Armada of Cortés quickly left Santiago de Cuba's port on November 18, 1518. The flotilla made stop-overs in places such as Trinidad to gather more provisions. They finally left Cuba on February 10, 1519, with 11 ships, 16 cavalries, 518 infantry, 13 artillerymen with eight small cannons, 32 crossbowmen, 13 arquebusiers, 110 sailors, and 200 Indians and black slaves as auxiliaries to the troops. They also took 32 horses, ten bronze cannons, and four falcons (smaller batteries). The captains of this expedition were Alonso Hernández Puertocarrero, Alonso de Ávila, Diego de Ordás, Francisco de Montejo, Francisco de Morla, Francisco de Saucedo, Juan de Escalante, Juan Velázquez de León, Cristóbal de Olid and Pedro de Alvarado, many of whom were veterans of the Italian Wars.

Famously, the convoy arrived on Cozumel's island (not far from Cancún, shown in Figures 27.2 and 27.19), where they found Gerónimo de Aguilar, a Spanish deacon, who had eight years earlier, survived a shipwreck on the return from Yucatan to Santo Domingo. De Aguilar had been imprisoned by the Mayans but was paid free by a ransom of Hernàn Cortés, and eight years of imprisonment had allowed him to learn Yucatan Mayan and be very useful as a translator. Later, Hernán would also count on 'La Malinche' for translations from Yucatan Mayan to Nahuatl and vice versa.

27.20.4 The Deity Quetzal Coatl

Quetzalcoatl, shown in Figure 27.7, was a God in Mesoamerican culture. The name comes from the Nahuatl language and means 'the Quetzal-feathered-serpent.' It was the literal meaning, as in a metaphorical sense, and it meant 'the wisest of men.' The veneration of the God started in Teotihuacan and then spread all over Mesoamerica. During the Mayan empire's height, the Mayans, Kukulkan, and Gukumatz called the deity, which also means 'feathered serpent.'

Quetzalcoatl is the Aztec God of the wind and also wisdom. The roots of the connection between a current and a serpent are probably linked to hurricanes and tornados, as in Figure 27.8.

To the Aztecs, the God was called Quetzal Coatl; to the Mayans, it was Kukulkan. The large pyramid of Chichen Itza (called El Castillo by the Spanish Conquistadors) was the Mayans' Kukulkan pyramid, devoted to the God Quetzal Coatl and the Rain God Chac.

According to the Florentine Codex, written 50 years after Cortés' discovery and conquering Mexico, the Aztecs expected the Quetzalcoatl deity's return. When Cortés arrived from the East with sailing boats and riding horses on the land, they believed Hernán Cortés de Monroy was the one. Although historians dispute whether this has been a fact and whether the Aztecs honestly expected a return of Quetzalcoatl, it is a legend that has prevailed ever since, primarily in Europe. The Quetzal is shown in Figure 27.7, and the rain God Chac, too. The referred Codex, as well as Cortés letters to H.M. Emperor Charles V, make the following statement about what the Aztec ruler Moctezuma II told Hernán,

'You have graciously come on earth, you have graciously approached your water, your high place of Mexico, you have come down to your mat, your throne, which I have briefly kept for you, I who used to keep it for you.;' and,

'You have graciously arrived, you have known pain, you have known weariness, now come on earth, take your rest, enter into your palace, rest your limbs; may our lords come on earth.'

If this happened, it implied that Moctezuma II believed he had to pass the throne onto Hernán Cortés. After all, who could withstand the arrival of a tornado-type god, such as Quetzal Coatl?

A confederacy of states revolted against the Aztecs, including Tlaxcala, Puebla, and Oaxaca. They were the ones who offered numerous military positions to Cortés to support the conquering of the Aztecs. First, the Spanish took the city of Cholula from its pro-Aztec ruler and then the Aztec capital of Tenochtitlan (Mexico City).

Later, the Tlaxcalteca and city-states on Puebla's Plain would further support Cortés's conquering of Guatemala and the West of Mexico.

27.20.5 His Life in Hispañola

Hernán became a farmer when he arrived in Hispaniola. Simultaneously, he also served as a notary to a town council. He was ill because he missed Diego de Nicuesa and Alonso de Ojeda's expeditions to the American mainland in 1509. In 1511, though, he joined Diego Velázquez to conquer Cuba. In Cuba, Velázquez became governor, and Hernán Cortés became a clerk to the treasurer and constructed the first European house in Santiago, Cuba's capital. He also received land and slaves. Soon, he was elected alcalde (the head) of the town of Santiago. His peers valued Cortés because of his noble behavior, good manners, and educated personality. Therefore, Velasquez appointed him to a new expedition, as Capitan General, to the mainland in 1518. Because Cortés knew such a decision was volatile, he immediately departed so the decision could not be revoked. It took him only one month to gather six ships and 300 men. When Velasquez changed his mind, Cortés was already on his way to Yucatán.

27.20.6 His First Visit of Tenochtitlan (Mexico City)

By the time Cortés left Hispañola for the coast of Yucatán on February 18, 1519, he had gathered more than 500 soldiers, 11 vessels, and 16 horses.

As seen in Figure 27.10, he arrived via the island of Cozumel and the coast of Cancun at the Tabasco River in March 1519. He spent the necessary time to get accustomed to the local population and gathered knowledge about inland Mexico. The local Indians finally accepted him and gave Hernán gifts, including 20 women. One was 'la Malinche,' shown in Figure 27.9. She would become his mistress, his wife, and his interpreter. Some historians claim that they must have married according to the local customs. The couple would have a son, Martin, who would soon be the first mestizo child in Mexico.

At the Tabasco River, Cortés had asked the Indians if there was gold in mainland Mexico. He said that the Iberians had heart disease and that gold was the only remedy to heal them. Upon confirmation, he was determined to go inland and find it.

From the Tabasco River, Cortéz moved on to the place known as Veracruz in modern times. He was exceptionally skilled in organizing his men and forming a significant military force. To avoid mutiny, he sank all of his ships. The only way to go was to march forward and conquer the Aztecs because there was no way back. Marching forward, the nose against the wind is an equally paramount quality in life.

From Veracruz, he undertook a long journey, a tremendous adventure, shown in Figure 27.11, towards Tenochtitlán (nowadays Mexico City), shown in Figure 27.12. As mentioned above, Cortés could count on military support from several tribes who were hostile towards the Aztecs. The coalition delivered him 200000 soldiers.

In particular, the Tlaxcala were very supportive. The modern area of Santa Cruz in Tlaxcala is shown in Figures 27.13 and Figure 27.14. Cortés entered Tenochtitlán on November 8, 1519. He was highly welcomed by the ruler Montezuma II. Hernán and Montezuma got along with each other almost at a spiritual level, likely because of the story related to Quetzalcoatl described above. The initial plan of Cortés was to conquer the Aztecs by converting their leader and, hence, by avoiding a military conflict.

The diplomat Hernán had everything under control and was about to obtain full power in Tenochtitlán when competition arrived in the person of Pánfilo Narváez with military from Cuba. Jealousy was perhaps the reason the other Spanish wanted to seize Cortés' power in Mexico. Hernán, therefore, had to pull back from the city and defeat his competitor while a garrison remained in the town.

When Cortés returned, he found his troops in dire straits. Indeed, under Pedro de Alvarado's command, the Spaniards had killed several chiefs in the city and were besieged by the Aztecs when Cortés returned. The situation was so bad for Cortés and his soldiers that the Spaniards organized a sortie to escape and lost many men.

27.20.7 His Conquista of Tenochtitian (Mexico City)

On July 7, 1520, after a few days of retreat, the Spaniards won a battle against the Aztecs, after which they were able to reorganize and prepare to return to the capital. Meanwhile, in a distant forest, they cut trees and built ships for the siege of Tenochtitlán, shown in Figures 27.15 and 27.14. Starting in December 1520, the sack began corner by corner, street by street, and was completed on August 13, 1521. The fall of the capital equally meant the fall of the Aztec empire. Hernán Cortés became the ruler of an extensive land area from the Caribbean Sea to the ocean on the other side.

Jealousy by Velázquez resulted in political resistance and even attacks by the Spanish regime, mainly through Bishop Juan Rodriguez de Fonseca and the Council of the Indies. He sought support from H.M. Emperor Charles V (Charles Quint) and sent the King several letters, which have all been preserved and in which he has explained his entire endeavor. Had Cortés wanted, given all the support from the local population, he could have established his own independent country of Mexico, which the Council of the Indies feared the most. Nevertheless, he remained faithful to the Spanish King, which was the right thing to do.

27.20.8 His Involvement in Other Conquistas

Hernán Cortés was an explorer and Conquistador to the bone. In 1524, he went to Honduras to explore and conquer the land. However, the endeavor, which took two years, harmed his health heavily. While he was gone, the officials who had to look after his assets heavily misbehaved, which upset the Spanish ditto. Once again, he had to write a letter to H.M. Emperor Carlos V to explain the situation. However, the latter was too occupied with other matters in Europe and the Mediterranean and let the problem be resolved by a commission under Luis Ponce de León. A misfortune then happened that Ponce de Leon died suddenly, and Hernán Cortés was accused of poisoning him. The regime forced him to retire and retreat to his estate. Hernán returned to Spain in 1528 to meet with H.M. the King in Toledo. The latter rewarded him with the title of Marqués del Valle. Hernán Cortés remarried after he arrived in Spain with a lady from a ducal family. After Cortés returned to New Spain in 1530, he noticed the whole land was in anarchy. He decided to retreat to his estates of Cuernavaca, about 50 km south of Mexico City, as the capital Tenochtitlán was then called.

27.20.9 A Devastating End of His Life

The remains of Hernán Cortés have not been lost but embedded in public secrets. They ended up in Mexico. However, it turns out that they have been moved and hidden several times in history for protection against destruction. Indeed, Cortés has been loved and hated. He has been used as a symbol for the Conquista and the victory of the Tlaxcala over the Aztecs. His relationship with la Malinche was equally despised and embraced. We leave it to the reader to investigate where the remains of Cortés are located. We can mention that officially, they are supposed to be found where Cortés first met Montezuma II, where Cortés later built a hospital.

In other words, 'Templo de la Purísima Concepción y de Jesús Nazareno,' in Mexico City.

Hernán Cortes' greatest enigma was his grave. It went missing between the 19th and 20th centuries and fueled one of America's great historical mysteries. Some thought the tomb had been looted, others speculated with extravaganza, and some turned the case into a metaphor for Spain's fate in Mexico. The truth was neither far nor near. But even today, when the Conquistador's tomb is lost into oblivion, it retains its capacity for surprise.

In 1541, Cortes returned to Spain definitively. In the following years, he planned his return to Mexico. However, on December 2, 1547, death surprised him in Castilleja de la Cuesta in the province of Seville. The remains were buried in the Monastery of San Isidoro del Campo in the same region, with an epitaph on the tombstone of his Mexican son Martín Cortes Zúñiga.

In 1566, the family decided to move Cortes's remains back to New Spain to be buried next to one of his daughters in the San Francisco de Texcoco temple. Years later, in 1629, at the death of the last of his male descendants, Pedro Cortes, the Conquistador's remains were buried and taken alongside his sons in the temple of the convent of San Francisco in Mexico City, in a little niche behind the sacristy. In 1716, the temple's reconstruction began, and the remains were moved to the back of the main altar.

In 1794, by orders of the viceroyalty government and fulfilling the testamentary wishes of Cortes, his remains were taken to the church of Jesus of the Nazarene, which is precisely adjoined to the hospital of the same name. Both buildings were constructed for the Conquistador in 1524.

In 1823, after the War of Independence and in the face of the anti-Spanish fury sweeping Mexico, the Mexican minister Lucas Alamán, as detailed by historian Salvador Rueda, devised a plan to prevent the remains of Cortes from falling into the hands of profiteers and being destroyed. He first hid them under a tariff of the Hospital of Jesus, the place where legend considers Cortes and Moctezuma first met, and 13 years later, behind a wall in the adjacent Church of The Immaculate Conception and Jesus of the Nazarene.

The location of the niche was silenced and for years remained a secret until, in 1843, Alaman himself, to prevent his whereabouts from falling into oblivion, deposited a deed of the clandestine burial at the Spanish Embassy. The document, far from seeing the light, received secret treatment. The paper always stayed in diplomatic safety from one century to the next. Hernán Cortes had long since ceased to be authentic and had become a taboo in Mexico, and the excellent relationship with the American country was forgotten, including that of his grave. In 1946, a senior Republican government official in exile, on whom the embassy depended, leaked a document copy. On November 28 of that year, the relics, shown in Figure 27.22 on page 304, were fully identified.

27.20.10 The Author's Meso-American and Hellenistic Research

27.20.11 Description

In the author's professional journey, one significant episode relates to Quetzalcoatl. While pursuing his PhD, he traveled to Mexico in late Fall 2002 to present his groundbreaking work explaining and simulating the backward beam displacement observed when an ultrasound beam diffracts on a corrugated surface. This research, conducted voluntarily alongside his funded work on non-destructive testing of fiber-reinforced composites, earned him the prestigious Best Student Paper Award from the Technical Committee on Physical Acoustics of the Acoustical Society of America, as shown in Figure 27.18. This award, his first international recognition, remains a cherished memory.

During his time in Mexico, the author visited Chichen Itza, depicted in Figure 27.16, where he encountered explanations by various researchers regarding the echo of Quetzalcoatl in response to a handclap in front of the pyramid's massive staircase. Based on Bragg diffraction and geometric models, these explanations suggested that the Mayans intentionally designed the pyramid to produce this sound. However, the author was skeptical, noting the lack of archaeological evidence supporting that the Mayans were aware of or utilized this acoustic phenomenon. Subsequent investigations revealed that the Bragg diffraction assumption was flawed. The author developed a new approach, providing accurate results and a proper explanation for the effect. A similar acoustic phenomenon can also be observed in Kataragama, Sri Lanka, as shown in Figure 27.21.

Despite no archaeological evidence supporting the Mayans' awareness of these acoustic effects, the author was intrigued by how pseudo-science and wishful thinking, even featured in documentaries, often gain popularity. This overwhelming influence of pseudo-science partly motivated the author's shift towards investigating the acoustics at Epidaurus in Greece, illustrated in Figure 27.20. The field of archaeo-acoustics, rife with self-proclaimed experts, often embraces fanciful theories over rigorous scientific inquiry. Journalists frequently amplify these views, similar to conspiracy theories, due to their appeal to the general public.

Despite his colleagues' skepticism in the winter of 2002-2003, the author dedicated several weeks to investigating the pyramid's acoustics. His persistent efforts led to simulations and explanations of the Quetzal echo effect based on physics, mechanics, and acoustics, producing results that closely matched experimental data. Unlike many in archaeo-acoustics, he rejected the notion that the pyramid was constructed as a sound recorder, citing the absence of evidence in Mayan codices, Spanish Conquistador reports, or archaeological findings.

Nevertheless, the acoustic effect exists, and a handclap can produce an echo. The author's numerous interviews on this topic have influenced the design of cheaper and more efficient sound barriers along highways and improved our understanding of sound diffraction, aiding in developing surface acoustic wave devices and phononic crystals for communication and radar purposes. Though the author's research yielded no personal accolades, its societal benefits are undeniable.

In addition to surface acoustic waves, the author developed a model to simulate the raindrop effect on the pyramid, often associated with the rain god Chac. Again, no evidence suggests the Mayans were aware of or utilized this effect. However, the raindrop effect illustrates how phenomena observable at large, audible scales also exist in miniature, ultrasonic scales. Corrugated surfaces can generate Scholte-Stoneley surface ultrasonic waves, which are helpful for non-destructive material testing and underwater communication by submarines in shallow water. The author successfully simulated this effect on air-limestone surfaces, not only at Chichen Itza but also at Teotihuacan.

Although complex, sound diffraction by corrugated structures can be understood using the plane wave expansion principle. Lord Rayleigh initially considered this approach, incorporating mechanical coupling conditions between two media separated by corrugation. Based on the Fourier series and the acoustic wave equation, this principle links periodic structures with diffraction orders through the grating equation, which is also used in optics. Research teams in the 1980s and 1990s exploring these areas encountered phenomena such as Raman-Nath diffraction in acousto-optics. Scholars focused on transforming bulk acoustic waves into surface acoustic waves, noting anomalies like Wood anomalies, which coincide with the generation of Scholte-Stoneley surface acoustic waves. The author's work extended these investigations by explaining backward beam displacement in acoustics, akin to the optical Goos-Hanchen effect. Early experiments observed this effect but couldn't explain it. The author combined inhomogeneous wave theory with plane wave expansion to model and explain the phenomenon, discovering that it resulted from a new type of surface acoustic wave. This research revealed that backward beam displacement, previously seen as an exotic laboratory phenomenon, occurs under various conditions, provided the incident wave is an ultrasonic pulse.

The author's research on periodic structures, such as phononic crystals, has shown their potential in applications ranging from seismic wave deflection to precise electronic filters. The Hellenistic theatre of Epidaurus, known for its exceptional acoustics, drew the author's attention. He proposed that the theatre's acoustic quality results from the corrugated structure of its seat rows, enhancing sound clarity through a filtering effect. This study provided valuable design guidelines for modern outdoor theatres and sports stadiums, significantly influencing contemporary architectural acoustics.

In conclusion, the author's investigations into Meso-American and Hellenistic acoustics have bridged ancient architectural marvels with modern scientific understanding. His work debunks pseudo-scientific claims and contributes to practical applications in sound barrier design, non-destructive testing, and acoustic communication. The fusion of historical inquiry with advanced acoustical physics underscores the enduring relevance of ancient knowledge in addressing contemporary challenges.

27.20.12 The Author's Publications on this Matter

Nico F. Declercq et al., 'A full simulation of the Quetzal echo at the Mayan pyramid of Kukulkan at Chichen Itza in Mexico' , Oral Presentation at 145th Meeting of the Acoustical Society of America, Nashville Convention Center, Nashville, Tennessee, USA, April 28 - May 2 2003. Abstract in Journal of the Acoustical Society of America 113(4), 2189, 2003.

Nico F. Declercq et al., ' A full simulation of the Quetzal echo at the Mayan pyramid of Kukulkan at Chichen Itza in Mexico' , Journal of the Acoustical Society of America 113(4), 2189, 2003.

Nico F. Declercq, et al., 'A theoretical study of special acoustic effects caused by the staircase of the El Castillo pyramid at the Maya ruins of Chichen-Itza in Mexico' , Journal of the Acoustical Society of America 116(6), 3328-3335, 2004 Reported by Nature News December 14 2004; | doi:10.1038/news041213-5.

Nico F. Declercq, et al., 'The extended model to simulate the Quetzal echo at the Mayan pyramid of Kukulkan at Chichen Itza in Mexico' , Proceedings of the Joint congress CFA/DAGA '04 22-25 March 2004 in Strasbourg, France.

Nico F. Declercq, et al., 'The extended model to simulate the Quetzal echo at the Mayan pyramid of Kukulkan at Chichen Itza in Mexico' , oral presentation at CFA/DAGA' 04, 7ème Congrès Français d' Acoustique, Salon Européen de l' Acoustique - 30. Deutsche Jahrestagung für Akustik, Europäische Akustik-Ausstellung, Palais des Congrès et de la Musique, Strasbourg, France 22-25 March 2004.

Nico F. Declercq, et al., 'An acoustic raindrop effect at Chichen Itza in Mexico' , paper 3pAA5, Journal of the Acoustical Society of America 121, 3129 (2007).

Jorge Antonio Cruz Calleja, Nico F. Declercq, 'An acoustic raindrop effect at Chichen Itza in Mexico' , Oral Presentation 3pAA5 at the 153rd Meeting of the Acoustical Society of America, Hilton Salt Lake City Center, Salt Lake City, Utah, 4–June 8 2007, USA. Abstract in Journal of the Acoustical Society of America 121, 3129, 2007.

Jorge Antonio Cruz Calleja, Nico F. Declercq, 'The acoustic raindrop effect at Mexican Pyramids: the architects' homage to the rain god Chac?' , Acta Acustica united with Acustica, 95(5), 849-856, 2009 | reported by New Scientist September 16, 2009, by Linda Geddes 'Mayans 'played' pyramids to make music for rain god' , magazine issue 2726, page 12, 2009. Nico Felicien Declercq, 'On the Fascinating Phenomenon of Diffraction by Periodic Structures' , Acoustics Today 9(1), 8-13, 2013, published by the Acoustical Society of America.

Nico F. Declercq, Cindy S. A. Dekeyser, 'Acoustic diffraction effects at the Hellenistic amphitheater of Epidaurus: seat rows responsible for the marvelous acoustics' , Journal of the Acoustical Society of America 121(4), 2011-2022, 2007.

27.20.13 Articles Published by News Agencies on the Author's Activity, concerning the Quetzal echo at Chichen Itza

Nature News (UK), Mystery of 'chirping' pyramid decoded, Acoustic analysis shows how temple transforms echoes into sounds of nature, December 14 2004; doi:10.1038/news041213-5, by Philip Ball.

USA Today, Maya pyramids pose acoustic riddle, by Dan Vergano, 14/11/2010.

Die Zeit, (Germany) Wissen, Tschirp, tschirp, Wenn die Treppe singt, by Urs Willmann, 05/01/2005.

El Universal (Mexico), El trino de la pirámide de Chichén Itzá, 10/01/2005.

Europe Sun Breaking News (Australia), page visited 18/12/2004.

Caribbean Herald, Breaking Internet News, page visited 18/12/2004.

Gazeta (Poland), rezonans w piramidzie majow, 19/12/2004.

Hirado (Hungary), Tudomány - Megfejtették a csicserg piramis titkát, 15/12/2004.

VTM TV (Belgium), Het Nieuws, Vlaamse Televisie Maatschappij (VTM), 27/01/2005.

La Flecha (Spain), La música de las piedras, El misterio de la pirámide que trina es descodificado, 27/12/2004.

Meridiano Scuola (Italy), Piramidi musicali, 20/12/2004.

My Press (Japan), 'Saezuru' piramiddo no nazo ga kaidoku sa remashita' , 14/12/2004.

Knack (Belgium), Zingende Piramides, 01/02/2005.

Radio 1 (Belgium), De Nieuwe Wereld, Radio 1, Friedle Lesage, Lieten de Maya's hun piramiden sjirpen?, 20/12/2004.

Onnet La Primera del Pais, (Ecuador), El misterio de la pirámide que trina es descodificado, page visited 29/12/2004.

Stern Shortnews (Germany), Das Geheimnis der zwitschernden Pyramide entschlüsselt, 15/12/2004.

Szines Mai Lap (Hungary), Esõ zuhog és madár énekel a piramisban, page visited 21/12/2004.

Ulisse nella rete della scienza (Italy), Casuale l' effetto eco delle piramidi maya, 15/12/2004.

Web Sound Russia, 'Sintezatory drevnikh vremen' page visited 12/01/2005.

WFAEN (USA), World Forum for Acoustic Ecology Newsletter, volume 2(1), Mystery of 'Chirping' Pyramid Decoded, 02/2005.

Wikinews (Germany), Geräusche der Mayapyramiden enträtselt, 14/12/2004.

Archeonet Vlaanderen (Belgium), Zingende piramides, 26/01/2005.

CanTho (Thailand), Bíimt tieng chim keu trong kim t thap, 27/12/2004, by M.THO (Theo Nature).

Kompas News (Indonesia), Misteri Suara Hujan di Piramid Maya, Cetak Berita, 17/12/2004.

Ghent University (Belgium), Persbericht Faculteit Toegepaste Wetenschappen, Universiteit Gent, Het geheim van de tsjilpende Maya-piramide ontrafeld, 16/12/2004.

Omroep Nederland (Netherlands), Noorderlicht, De piramide die tjilp zegt, vogelecho geen toeval, Omroep Nederland, 15/12/2004.

Intellego (Italy), Gli echi della piramide Maya, page visited 06/12/2004.

τηζφσηζ , page visited 12/01/2005.

27.20.14 Articles Published by News Agencies concerning the Author's Work on the Raindrop Effect

USA Today, Dan Vergano, USA TODAY, Posted 11/14/2010 10:30 AM , Maya pyramids pose acoustic riddle. New Scientist (UK), New Scientist September 16 2009 by Linda Geddes 'Mayans 'played' pyramids to make music for rain god' , magazine issue 2726, page 12, 2009.

27.20.15 Articles Published by News Agencies Concerning the Author's Work in Epidaurus

Nature (UK), Nature News, Why the Greeks could hear plays from the back row - An ancient theatre filters out low-frequency background noise, Published online: March 23 2007; | doi:10.1038/news070319-16, by Philip Ball.
Washington Post (USA), Seating in Ancient Greek Theater Found to Help the Acoustics, 09/04/2007.
The Economist (USA), Ancient acoustics, Theatre design - No need to shout, Why the acoustics of ancient Greek theatres are so good, 29/03/2007.
Physics Today (UK), Why the Greeks could hear plays from the back row, 24/03/2007.
Geotimes (USA), Rocks ring true at Epidaurus, by Megan Server, June 2007.
Science Daily (UK), Ancient Greek Amphitheater: Why You Can Hear From Back Row, 06/04/2007.
PhysOrg, (USA), Seats helped ancient greeks hear from back row, 04/04/2007.
De Standaard (Belgium), Griekse Akoestiek, 04/05/2007, by Bruno Tersago.
Knack (Belgium), Belgische wetenschappers onderzoeken akoestiek Griekse theaters, 26/3/2007.
Inclasssables Mathematiques (France), Le secret de l' acoustique du théâtre d' Epidaure, 28/06/2007.
Het Nieuwsblad (Belgium), Geheim akoestiek amfitheaters ontrafeld, by Marc Vergote, 27/03/2007.
Het laatste Nieuws, (Belgium), Vlaamse prof ontrafelt oud akoestisch geheim – Theater van Epidaurus dankt perfect geluid aan trappenstructuur, by Stijn Vanderhaeghe, in 2007.
Gemeenteblad Deerlijk (Belgium), Deerlijkse Prof. Nico Declercq zorgt voor wereldnieuws, in 2007.
De Streekkrant (Belgium), Wetenschappelijk wereldnieuws, Prof. Nico Declercq ontrafelt het geheim van het Griekse amphitheater, in 2007.
Kennislink (Netherlands), Griekse akoestiek verklaard , 27/03/2007.
Physics University Utrecht (Netherlands), Physics University Utrecht, 32 (Netherlands), Griekse akoestiek verklaard , 05/2007.
The Whistle (USA), The Whistle (Georgia Tech, USA), For ancient Greek theater, seating arrangement aided acoustics, 09/04/2007.
Archeonet (Belgium), Belgische wetenschappers onderzoeken akoestiek Griekse theaters, 29/03/2007.

27.20.16 Offspring of Hernán Cortés de Monroy

27.20.17 Martín Cortés el Mestizo, Martín El Viejo

In 1523, Martín Cortés el Mestizo was born in Coyoacán, Mexico, and he passed away in 1595 in Granada. He is the eldest child and the illegitimate offspring of Hernán Cortés and Doña Marina, known as "La Malinche," who served as the conquistador's translator and concubine. Indeed, Martín was born very shortly after the arrival in Coyoacán of Doña Catalina Xuárez, the first wife of Hernán Cortés, who was jealous due to Cortés' love for his illegitimate son Martín.

Martín is called El Mestizo because he is considered one of the earliest Mestizos in New Spain. There is some uncertainty over the particular time and day of his birth. Despite his illicit origin, Martín, son of the Malinche, was Hernán Cortés' only male heir until the birth of his younger brother, Martín Cortés Zuñiga, who was born to Hernán Cortés and his second wife. Martín was Cortés' only male heir since Cortés did not have any children from his first marriage to Catalina Suárez. He spent his childhood in Spain but moved back to the Americas as an adult. Because they were Cortés' heirs, he and his brother were seen as a danger by the Viceroy of New Spain, who suspected them of being involved in a scheme. Martín was taken into custody, subjected to torture, and finally banished to Spain, where he passed away in 1595.

Martín Cortés el Mestizo was born in New Spain, in present-day Mexico City in Mexico, a historic Aztec capital. It is told that both his father, the conqueror Hernán Cortés, and his mother, La Malinche, an enslaved person who served as Cortés's guide, translator, and mistress, selected the name Martín for their son as a way to pay tribute to Hernán's father, Martín Cortés de Monroy, and also to the god of war, Mars. When Martín was just two years old, his mother and father gave him into the care of Juan Altamirano, a cousin of Cortés so they might go on a military expedition to Honduras. Cortés was in charge of the expedition. The following year, in 1524, Cortés brought Doña Marina with him on the Las Hibueras expedition as a language teacher. As soon as the voyage started in Orizaba, Cortés planned to marry her to Juan Jaramillo, with whom Doña Marina had a daughter, Maria. Their dowry consisted of the villages of Oluta and Jáltipan, which were given to them by the conqueror. They also had a Mexico City mansion located on Calle de las Medinas. In the year 1527, La Malinche passed away.

Martín continued to live with Altamirano, according to Hernán's decision. Martín made his way back to Spain with his father when, in 1529, he was six years old.

Martín landed at the port of Palos de la Frontera in May 1528. Martín traveled with Cortés to visit Emperor Charles V in June 1528. Father and son always traveled together. In 1529, Hernán Cortés employed the services of an attorney to petition Pope Clement VII to validate Martín's birth. Since the Pope was an illegitimate child himself, he agreed. However, there were more reasons to decide.

Pope Clement VII sent Cortés two bulls on April 16, 1529, in response to Cortés' gift of "two Indians who were masters of playing the stick with their feet." Martín Cortés el Mestizo, Luis Cortés y de Altamirano, the son he had with the Spanish Antonia or Elvira de Altamirano, and Catalina Pizarro, daughter of Leonor Pizarro, were three of Hernán's bastard offspring whom the Pope legitimized by the first of these bulls. The second bull granted Cortés the patronage of the Hospital de Jess, which he built in Mexico City and to which he gave exceptional care and dedication. The hospital is still standing and operating today. It also authorized him to receive tithes and the first fruits of the land that belonged to him. The crown opposed the latter, prohibiting Cortés from using said exemption).

Shortly after this, Carlos V personally bestowed legitimacy on Martín. In 1531, the Emperor bestowed the father and son with the mercy of the habit of Santiago and made them knights in the order of Calatrava. In 1537, Martín Cortés el Mestizo became a military serving King Philip II of Spain after spending most of his youth at the Royal Court of Spain. On December 2, 1547, Hernán Cortés passed away in Castile. Don Martín Cortés, half-brother of Martín Cortés el Mestizo, Marquis of the Valley of Oaxaca, was his legal son and the primary successor even though he was not the eldest son. After another three years, in 1550, when Martín was twenty-eight years old, he served for a year in the forces of the Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire and spent that year fighting across Europe. In the year 1557, Martín Cortés el Mestizo filed a lawsuit against his brother to reclaim certain mines and enslaved people that his father had promised to give him eight years before he passed away.

After enduring a harrowing trip, Martín Cortés finally arrived at the port of San Francisco de Campeche in September of 1562. At the end of January 1562, Cortés and his two half-brothers, Don Martín and Luis Cortés, set sail for Vera Cruz, a town their father had established almost half a century before. In February, the brothers Cortés arrived at the location their father and La Malinche had formerly called home.

Because of the new encomienda regulations implemented in New Spain in 1566, Hernán Cortés's sons were dispossessed of the properties in America that had belonged to their father.

In March 1566, the brothers Gil and Alonso de Avila celebrated in their home in Mexico City. They invited people from all over the region. This was the scene from the episode often referred to as "The Marquis' Plot." The Cortés brothers had taken on the role of Mexican chieftains and were paying their respects to a man who had been costumed as Hernán Cortés. The Spanish Court in New Spain viewed it as an effort to overthrow the government.

Martín Cortés el Mestizo was taken into custody by guards on July 16, 1566, and found out that his friends, the Avila brothers, and eighteen of his other acquaintances had also been taken prisoner and were being accused of conspiracy. Martín was accused of not exposing his friends, who were plotting an insurrection against His Majesty, and was brought before the magistrate. Alonso de Avila and his brother were both executed by beheading in public in September of 1566.

The new viceroy, the Marquis de Falces, arrived in Vera Cruz on November 15, 1567. He permitted Martín Cortés el Mestizo to leave New Spain and Luis Cortés to serve his sentence in a colony close to Algeria. Both of these decisions were made after the Marquis de Falces took office. Martín Cortés el Mestizo, however, stayed in Mexico while Don Martín Cortés Zuñiga traveled to England to argue his case in front of the monarch there.

Martín Cortés el Mestizo married doña Bernaldina de Porras, who gave him two children:

Dona Ana Cortes; and don Fernando Cortés, judge in Veracruz. The descendants of this branch are still present in Mexico.

27.20.18 Don Martín Cortés Zuñiga

DNA analysis shows a significant relationship with Maltese families. This was shown, for instance, in Figure 73.8 on page 1586 and in Chapter 73.10.4.5.6 on page 1596. It is not clear where this connection comes from. Possible candidates are Enric Desclergue, who may have been in Malta while Carlos Coloma resided there, or Don Martín Cortés, son of Hernán Cortés de Monroy. Perhaps, given the significant connections with Malta, both persons contributed through local offspring.

The half-brother of Martín Cortés el Mestizo, known as Don Martín Cortés Zuñiga, shown in Figure 27.52 on page 320, was born in Cuernavaca, Mexico, in 1532 as the result of the marriage between Hernán Cortés and his second wife, Doña Juana de Zuñiga, who was a member of the Spanish aristocracy. Juana Ramírez de Arellano y Zúñiga was the daughter of Don Carlos Ramírez de Arellano y Enríquez Conde de Aguilar de Inestrillas and Lord of Cameros, and Doña Juana de Zúñiga y Guzmán, lady of the House of the Duke of Béjar por lo Zúñiga, and of the House of Medina Sidonia por lo Guzmán.

In honor of his father, Hernán Cortés likewise gave this son the name Martín, but unlike the other sons, this son was given the prestigious title of Don. Martín became unwell in October when he received the title and was hospitalized. The letters that Hernán Cortés addressed to his cousin Francisco de Nuñez indicate that he suffered from Tuberculosis.

Cortés made his way back to Spain in the spring of 1540, and it was then that the two Martíns crossed paths for the first time. Martín Cortés was honored with the rank of knight in the Order of Santiago in 1541 and went on to represent Charles V at the Battle of Algiers the same year, where he fought heroically and was responsible for establishing a beachhead upon arrival so that the rest of the army could invade the city. Cortés was also present in the Battle of Muhlberg, which took place in Germany in April of 1547.

Don Martín Cortés Zuñiga always remained a close ally of King Felipe II. Martín Cortés would participate in the fight of Saint Quentin on the Somme River in France. It would seem that he was victorious in this conflict since Felipe II afterward elevated him to the post of Thirteen of the Order of Santiago, which is one of the greatest honors that can be bestowed.

In 1565, he had already attained the rank of captain when he sailed to the help of Malta, which was under siege by the Turks. It was possible to successfully thwart a long-awaited plan planned by Suleiman the Magnificent to seize the strategic island and, from there, dominate southern Italy and directly threaten the Pope, thanks to this action, which was directed personally by Felipe II himself, who appointed Garcia de Toledo as general of the sea.

In fact, on March 20, 1565, the most extensive fleet that had ever traversed the Mediterranean Sea was preparing to seize Malta. This fleet consisted of two hundred galleys and fifty thousand troops for the landing. As a sea captain, Garcia de Toledo had flawlessly organized all the defensive resources and assistance. Thus, the Turkish surprise attack was a total failure. When the Spanish fleet, which also included ships from ally nations, came within striking distance of the island, the leader of the Turks promptly gave the order to retire to the island of Cyprus. As a result of his efforts, the Knights of Malta were saved, and large-scale enemy attacks in the western Mediterranean were thwarted.

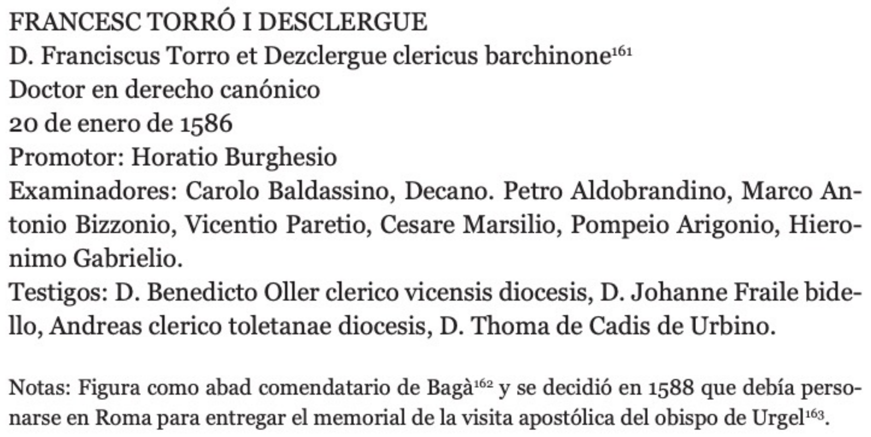
Martín had already achieved the rank of sea captain before departing for Malta. Don Luis de Requeséns, the commander of the Mediterranean fleet, had given him instructions to go, and he had complied.

In 1566, he followed the commands of the Duke of Alba and traveled with the army down the Camino de los Españoles in Lombardy. There, he was tasked with fending off a Huguenot assault that King Henry II of France had instigated.

In 1568, he returned to New Spain, where, along with his half-brother and namesake, he was involuntarily involved in a natural or supposed conspiracy to "seize the land." After exposing the plot, both of them were arrested by order of the Audiencia, which governed after the viceroy Don Luis de Velasco had passed away. It is reported that Don Martín was subjected to torture, which was also carried out at the behest of the Royal Court; nevertheless, because a confession could not be extracted from him, he and his half-brother were exiled from New Spain permanently. It is important to note that despite the Court not having the authority to engage in torture, the equipment known as the rack was used on Martín, and he had to drink a quart of water while it was stretched. When they removed Martín's nightgown, they discovered multiple wound scars on his body. When questioned about what caused them, Don Martín would only say that the wounds had been inflicted "at the service of his majesty."

Once he returned to Spain, he returned to his military life. Both brothers were granted an audience with Felipe II. Then, acting on a command from Don Juan of Austria, he traveled to Flanders to enlist and dispatch five hundred troops, including seasoned soldiers and officers who were impeccably dressed, to Granada to put down a Moorish rebellion there.

In Granada, in December of 1569, only ten days after he had arrived to fight with Don Juan of Austria, he went on an incursion not far from the city. He fell gravely wounded in a canyon. After following the staggered retreat that Cortés had ordered and seeing their captain lying down, his veterans made an uncovered charge to pick him up. Martín Cortés passed away in Granada two days after the battle.



FRANCESC TORRÓ I DESCLERGUE
D. Franciscus Torro et Dezclergue clericus barchinone[161]
Doctor en derecho canónico
20 de enero de 1586
Promotor: Horatio Burghesio
Examinadores: Carolo Baldassino, Decano. Petro Aldobrandino, Marco Antonio Bizzonio, Vicentio Paretio, Cesare Marsilio, Pompeio Arigonio, Hieronimo Gabrielio.
Testigos: D. Benedicto Oller clerico vicensis diocesis, D. Johanne Fraile bidello, Andreas clerico toletanae diocesis, D. Thoma de Cadis de Urbino.

Notas: Figura como abad comendatario de Bagà[162] y se decidió en 1588 que debía personarse en Roma para entregar el memorial de la visita apostólica del obispo de Urgel[163].

Figure 27.58: Citation, page 93, of Rafael Ramis Barceló, 'Doctores Hispanos en Leyes y Cánones pr la Universidad de La Sapienza de Roma (1549-1774)' , Published by Carlos III University of Madrid, 2017. Footnote 161 in the mentioned book refers to 'ASR, reg. 234, Registrum doctorum et decretorum (1585-1587), f. 71r.

BENET OLLER
Mag. D. Benedictus Oller clericus vicensis diocesis[164]
Doctor en ambos derechos
23 de mayo de 1586
Promotor: Horatio Burghesio
Examinadores: Carolo Baldassino, Decano. Petro Aldobrandino, Marco Antonio Bizzonio, Vicentio Paretio, Cesare Marsilio, Pompeio Arigonio, Hieronimo Gabrielio, Cino Campano, Alexandro Litta.
Testigos: D. Francisco Torro et Dezclergue abbate Sacti Lau, Rentio de Bagano urgellensis diocesis et admodum R. D. Melchiore Ocanya archidiacono segobiensis et admodum R. D. Paulino Papi canonico vicensis diocesis.

Notas: Fue canónigo[165], procurador y administrador general de la Pia Almoina de la Catedral de Barcelona.

164 ASR, reg. 234, Registrum doctorum et decretorum (1585-1587), f. 95v.

Figure 27.59: Citation, page 93-94, of Rafael Ramis Barceló, 'Doctores Hispanos en Leyes y Cánones pr la Universidad de La Sapienza de Roma (1549-1774)' , Published by Carlos III University of Madrid, 2017.

27.20.19 Other Offspring of Hernán Cortés

Hernán Cortés married twice, in Cuba with Catalina Suárez Marcaida, who died in Coyoacán in 1522 without issue, and in 1529 to doña Juana Ramírez de Arellano de Zúñiga, daughter of don Carlos Ramírez de Arellano, 2nd Count of Aguilar including:
Don Martín Cortés y Zuñiga, described in Chapter 27.20.18.
Don Luis Cortés y Ramírez de Arellano was born in Texcoco in 1530 and died shortly after birth.
Doña Catalina Cortés de Zúñiga was born in Cuernavaca in 1531 and died shortly after birth.
Don Martín Cortés y Ramírez de Arellano, 2nd Marquess of the Valley of Oaxaca, born in Cuernavaca in 1532, married in Nalda on February 24, 1548, to doña Ana Ramírez de Arellano y Ramírez de Arellano with issue.
Doña María Cortés de Zúñiga, born in Cuernavaca between 1533 and 1536, married to Don Luis de Quiñones y Pimentel, 5th count of Luna.
Doña Catalina Cortés de Zúñiga, born in Cuernavaca between 1533 and 1536, died in Seville after the death of her father.
Doña Juana Cortés de Zúñiga, born in Cuernavaca between 1533 and 1536, married to Don Fernando Enríquez de Ribera y Portocarrero, 2nd Duke of Alcalá de los Gazules, 3rd Marquess of Tarifa and 6th Count of Los Molares.
He also had several natural, illegitimate children, other than Martín Cortés el Mestizo:
Catalina Pizarro, born between 1514 and 1515 in Santiago de Cuba, was the daughter of a Cuban, Leonor Pizarro. Doña Catalina married Juan de Salcedo, a conquistador with whom she has a son, Pedro.
Luis Cortés, born in 1525, son of doña Antonia or Elvira Hermosillo.
Luis Cortés y de Altamirano, the Illegitimate son of Hernán Cortés with the Spanish Antonia or Elvira de Altamirano.
Leonor Cortés Moctezuma, born in 1527 or 1528 in Mexico City, daughter of the Aztec princess Tecuichpotzin (baptized Isabel), born in Tenochtitlan on July 11, 1510, and died on July 9, 1550, eldest daughter of Moctezuma II Xocoyotzin and his wife doña María Miahuaxuchitl; married to Juan de Tolosa, a Basque merchant.
María Cortés de Moctezuma, daughter of an Aztec princess.

27.21 Descendants

The couple's son Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04) is described in the next Chapter 28. The other children are listed here.

27.21.1 Francesc Torró y Desclergue (DC04b)

Francesc de Torro i Desclergue attended the Corts in the year 1626, while earlier, his brother Pere Galcerán de Torró, a native of Balaguer (Lleida), Knight of the Principality of Catalonia, Doctor of Law, attended the Corts in 1599.
Evidence of his existence is seen in Figures 27.58 and 27.59, but also in Figure 25.11 on page 278, and Figure 25.13 on page 278.
He became a Doctor of Canonical Law on January 20, 1586, as evidenced by the citation given in Figure 27.58.
He is also known as Francesc or Francisco Desclergues y Monseny in recent literature, while during his life he was called Francesc Torró y Desclergue. His mother, the wife of Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03), Dona Elisabeth Monseny, was the daughter of Francesc Monseny and Joanne Monsenya.
Francesc Desclergue y Monseny (DC04b) is a son of Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03) and is mentioned in the following annotation[30]:
Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03) domicellus in villae Montisalbi doimiciliatus Tarragonae... pater et legitimus adminitrator Francisci filii (DC04b) mei pauperibus heredis universalis in casu habuit per obitum Bonaventum Desclergue (DC06) q. filii mei filii legitimi Dona Elisabeth quondam uxor mei matris q. heredis seu donatori q. l. Dona Joanne Monsenya qa. uxor F. Monseny qa. parentum suorum.'
In 1549, Francesc Desclergue (DC04b) purchased, to expand and improve his home, a place that was below of his house, to be used as a store[31]:

---

[30] Manual Notarial 3 507 (1579) 29 enero. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.

Figure 27.60: Fragment of the document shown in Figure 28.21 on page 356. It shows how Galceran Torró is blood-related, namely as the son of Bonaventura Torró y Desclergue.

. . . quondam botigam sive sotulum una cum tosculate lapideo sive cup in ea constructo... in vico Maiori subtus domum vestram dicti emptoris et afronta ex duabus partibus videlicet ex una latere et a parte retro cum domo heredes Joannis Fernos et ex altera laterecum dictus domus vestre et a parte ante cum dicto vico Maiori...
He died without leaving descendants after March 1585, when he appeared together with his father and stepmother in the act of sale to Francesc de Vilafranca of the Montblanc[32].

27.21.2 Bonaventura Torró y Desclergue (DC04c)

He is also known as Bonaventura or Buenaventura Desclergues y Monseny in literature. At the same time, during his life, he was called Torró y Desclergue and was the son of Don Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03).
From the work of Josep Maria Grau i Pujol and Francesc Badia i Batalla[33], we can cite:
'Desclergue i Monseny, Bonaventura de. Prevere, fill de Bonaventura I Desclergue. Fou beneficiat de l' església de Sant Miquel (1549).'
His parents dedicated him to the Church's service. On January 23, 1549, he became a priest of San Miguel, instructed by Arnau Jover in the Montblanc church of San Miguel[34].
He died between February 18, 1566, the date of his mother's will, where he was appointed heir in the first place, and January 29, 1579, when his brother Francesc Desclergue y Monseny (DC04b) inherited his maternal estate in place[35].

27.21.3 Galceran Torró, son of Bonaventura Torró y Desclergue (DC04c)

Pere Galcerán de Torró, a native of Balaguer (Lleida), Knight of the Principality of Catalonia, and Doctor of Law, attended the Corts in 1599. Later, in 1626, his brother Francesc de Torro i Desclergue participated at the Corts too.
The existence of Galceran Torró, son of Bonaventura Torró y Desclergue (DC04c), is proven in Figure 27.60. It shows that this branch preferred to use Torró rather than Desclergue, probably to distinguish themselves from the other branches using the same first names.

27.21.4 Luis Desclergue (I) (DC04d) y Cortés, a Mercador

He was a son of Don Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03). From the work of Josep Maria Grau i Pujol and Francesc Badia i Batalla[36] we can cite:
'Desclergue, Lluís de. Veguer de Montblanc (1581).'
He was indeed a son of the second wife of Bonaventura Desclergue (DC03); therefore, his mother was not Monseny but Cortés de Monroy. He was a Squire, domiciled in Barcelona, and was named veguer of the town and veguería of Montblanc. During his life, he established a concord with the consuls of the Villa[37],

---

[31] Manual Notarial 3 506 (1549) 16 abril. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.

[32] Arxiu Històric de Tarragona, RHPM, no. 14, f. 265.

[33] Josep Maria Grau i Pujol and Francesc Badia i Batalla, 'Diccionari biogràfic històric de Montblanc (1155-1920), Fundació Martí l' Humà. Tot Conca. Carrer Josa, 6, Montblanc, 2008.

[34] Arxiu Històric de Tarragona, Fons notarial de Montblanc, reg. 3506, p. 277v.

[35] Arxiu Històric de Tarragona, Fons notarial de Montblanc, reg. 3507, p. 207.

[36] Josep Maria Grau i Pujol and Francesc Badia i Batalla, 'Diccionari biogràfic històric de Montblanc (1155-1920), Fundació Martí l' Humà. Tot Conca. Carrer Josa, 6, Montblanc, 2008.

[37] Manual Notarial. 3 508 (1581) 16 feb. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.

'Ludovicus Desclergue domicellus Barchinone domiciliatus, vicarius ville et vicarie Montisalbi cum hoc presenti publico instrumento perpetuo valituro et confiteos et recognosco vobis hon. March Palau, Joannis Monsaro et Jacobo Rosell consulibus anno prtis... universitatis ville Montisalbi. . . .'

Note that he appears as 'Lluís de Desclergue, 1581' in the list of 'Veguers de Montblanc' , online on 'Vegueria de Montblanc - Viquipèdia, l' enciclopèdia lliure' (consulted on Aug 29, 2018).

During some period of his life he has also resided in Cadiz. He is mentioned by Miguel Royano Cabrera[38]

Cabrera indeed refers to him as a relative of Galceran Desclergue (DC02d). The relationship between the two is described in Chapter 25.1.3, about Galceran (DC02d).

Luis Desclergue (I) (DC04d) y Cortés is also referred to by C. Martínez Shaw[39]. More information is also pointed out by different other authors, such as I. Armenteros Martínez[40], J. M. Bello León[41], J. M. Madurell Marimón[42], and Enrique Otte[43].

---

[38] Miguel Royano Cabrera, 'La comunidad mercantil de la Corona de Aragón afincada en Sevilla durante el reinado de Carlos I - el caso de Galcerán Desclergue' , El legado hispánico: manifestaciones culturales y sus protagonistas / Abel Lobato Fernández (ed. lit.), Esperanza de los Reyes Aguilar (ed. lit.), IRené Pereira García (ed. lit.), Cristina García González (ed. lit.), Vol. 1, 2016, ISBN 978-84-9773-769-2, págs. 415-432.

[39] C. Martínez Shaw, 'Cataluña y el comercio con América. El fin de un debate' , Boletín Americanista , nº 30, 1980, p.234.

[40] I. Armenteros Martínez, 'Cataluña en la era de las navegaciones: la participación Catalana en la primera economía atlántica (c.1470 - 1540)' , Vilassar de Mar, Barcelona, Fundació Ernest Lluch, Lleida, Milenio, 2012, Pp. 149-271.

[41] J. M. Bello León, 'La presencia catalana en Andalucía Occidental a finales de la Edad Media' , Anuario de Estudios Medievales , nº 40/1, enero - junio de 2010, Pp. 115 - 117.

[42] J. M. Madurell Marimón, 'Notas sobre el antiguo comercio de Barcelona con las Islas Canarias y de Santo Domingo' , Anuario de Estudios Atlánticos , n º3, Cabildo Insular de Gran Canaria, Madrid, p. 569-570.

[43] Enrique Otte, 'Los comienzos del comercio catalán con América' , pp. 469 - 480; Seville, XVI century .., pp. 132 - 311. 16 Archivo General de Indias, Justicia, File 733, nº1, p. 58 - 230.

Chapter 28

Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04) and his family

Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04) is a patrilineal ancestor and is the son of son of Don Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03). Of his children, three soldiers went to Flanders, including our ancestor Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05).

It's possible that the complete name of Bonaventura Desclergue (DC04) was Bonaventura Berenguer Desclergue (DC04), given that a Berenguer Desclergue, notari at Montblanc, is on a document of May 2, 1622, in Poblet.[1] Indeed, no other document mentions any Berenguer Desclergue in that era.

28.1 Introduction

Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04) is our last ancestor in Montblanc. Thanks to his sons, the family came to Belgium, and we descended from his son Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), who died in Ostend in 1604. Very likely, Bonaventura constructed the famous home on the Plaza Mayor of Montblanc, or at least renovated it, shown in Figure 28.5, and placed the family's coat of arms, including indications of his three sons who went to Flanders with the Spanish army. The coat of arms is described in Chapter 23.

28.2 Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04)

Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04), as seen in Figure 28.3, was our paternal ancestor. He received a noble title thanks to the achievements of his three military sons, including our ancestors Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05). Figure 28.4, written by Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2), his great-grandson described in Chapter 28.5, gives some insight into his status and family situation.

Don Francisco Desclergue y Ratera (DC05e) described in Chapter 28.3.1, had three captain brothers in Flanders, equally sons of Don Buenaventura Desclergue, Don Gerónimo Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), our ancestor described in Chapter 29, Don Enrique Desclergue y Cortés (DC05c) described in Chapter 33, and Don Antonio Desclergue y Ratera (DC05d) described in Chapter 32.

Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue kept silent in his letter that they did not have the same mother. In several instances, we note that he hides the facts that are not to his advantage. He refers to a will of Don Francisco Desclergue y Ratera (DC05e), recorded by the public notary of Montblanc, Juan Alba, on February 8, 1646. He equally relates to the will of Don Buenaventura Desclergue y Cortés (DC04) and Don Enric Desclergue (DC05c), recorded by the public notary of Montblanc, Gaspar Fernós, on December 19, 1627, in which the sons who were still alive, were the beneficiaries, namely Don Antonio Desclergue y Ratera (DC05d) and Don Francisco Desclergue y Ratera (DC05e). Indeed, Don Gerónimo Desclergue (DC05), our ancestor, had died in 1604, while Don Enric Desclergue (DC05c) would die in 1631 in Wingene (Flanders), and Don Antonio Desclergue (DC05d) would die in Ghent (Flanders) in 1634. It indicates that Enrique (DC05c) visited Montblanc in 1627 and had no descendants at that time.

Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) states that his grandfather Francesc Desclergue y Ratera (DC05e) has received the noble title of 'Don,' not only because of the achievements of his brothers but also because of those of his wife's family. Her name was Catarina Tous y Monserrat.

This title was given in the same document on June 12, 1628, in Madrid. It means that, for instance, Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) was a nobleman of the rank of 'Knight,' as mentioned elsewhere, but that he did not possess the title of 'Don.'

Figure 28.1: The street near the San Miguel church of Montblanc. South, this street led to the Sant Francesc church. The old cemetery of Montblanc, where Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04) and his ancestors must have been buried, was located there. There are no remains anymore of the old cemetery. (source and date unknown)

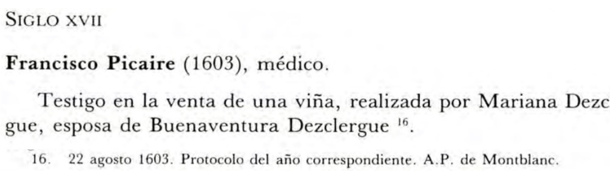
---

[1] Josep Torné i Cubells, "Catàleg de Pergamins de l'actual Arxiu del Monestir de Poblet", Item 368.



SIGLO XVII

Francisco Picaire (1603), médico.

Testigo en la venta de una viña, realizada por Mariana Dezclergue, esposa de Buenaventura Dezclergue [16].

16. 22 agosto 1603. Protocolo del año correspondiente. A.P. de Montblanc.

Figure 28.2: Jeroni Desclergue's (DC05) mother, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio, wife of Bonaventura Desclergue (DC04), sold a vineyard in 1603.

Nevertheless, other documents indicate that he used the title 'Don' and, therefore, he must have received it independently of his brothers.

Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04) was a son of Don Bonaventura Desclergue (I) (DC03) with Doña Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán, who was a cousin[2] of Hernán Cortés de Monroy, the well-known Conquistador.

Simultaneously, Bonaventura (DC04) became a son-in-law of Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d), the famous Mercador described above, through his marriage with Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio (DC02dx1). She was the daughter of Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d) and Ana de Villavicencio. Depending on the occasion, and the interpretation of the registrar, he is therefore sometimes referred to as the son (in law) of Bonaventura and sometimes of Galceran[3].

The Brazo Militar authorized him in the Corts of the Principality of Catalonia in 1599[4].

As a man of law, he served, at the beginning of the seventeenth century, as an ordinary legal advisor to the veguer Llordat.

From the work of Josep Maria Grau i Pujol and Francesc Badia i Batalla[5], we can cite:

'Desclergue, Bonaventura II de. Doctor en drets. Assessor jurídic ordinari del veguer Llordat (1603).'

He was born in Barcelona, Spain, but resided in Montblanc as well. He was a Doncel and died in Montblanc.

He received a noble title on June 24, 1618, primarily because of the achievements of his children, as stated above[6]. Santiago Alberti writes[7]:

'En Bonaventura II ha tingut almenys quatre fills mascles, l' un afincat a Montblanc, advocat, i els altres amb carreres militars molt dures i sacrificades,' so he had four sons.

On pages 179-180 of URTX índex onomàstic Personatges històrics, we find:

'Desclergue, Bonaventura (noble): VII, 66, 67.'

He must have been born a significant time before 1549 because he appears in a statement made by his father in that year. The reference to Bonaventura Desclergue (DC04) says[8]:

'Ego Bonaventara Dezclergue (DC03) not. ville Montisalbi, agens hec tanquam paser et legittimus, administrator Bonaventure (DC04) filli mei clerici olim beneficiati benefici sub invocatione Sancti Michaelis in ecclesiam eiusdem invocationis dicte ville Montísalbi et quondam Arnaldus Jover instituto....'

In the work of Pablo de Sarraga y Sámper[9], we find:

'Bonaventura Desclergues, de Barcelona, Noble 4.899 (1617-18), 279, Madrid, 24-VI-1618 (Garma).'

On March 8, 1585, with the consent of his wife Maria Anna Desclergue (DC02dx1) and son Francesc Desclergue (DC05e), Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (DC04) sold to Francesc de Vilafranca, the rights of the clerk and curia of the veguer (Calle Mayor, Montblanc). This is also found in the work of Josep M. T. Grau i Pujol[10]. He writes that, in the early 1600s, he must have been a wealthy man because, in 1604, he could show the total number of the census of his capital of 327 pounds in the community of Montréal. After four years, he could add two hundred thirds of a count of 300 pounds.

Josep M. T. Grau i Pujol states:

'Unsatisfied with the confirmation of nobility of the Desclergue, made by Charles Quint, i.e. H.M. Emperor Carlos V, to Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d), he underwent a personal nobility privilege, presenting himself as merit the facts of arms of his sons, in particular, Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), Antoni Desclergue (DC05b) and Enric Desclergue (DC05c), which was granted to him on June 12, 1618.'

He made a will at Montblanc on December 19, 1617, and was succeeded by his son Francesc Desclergue (DC05e).

Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (DC04) was the ordinary legal advisor of the Llordat veguer in 1603. Also, at that time, he appears as the owner of a house on Santa Tecla street[11].

28.3 His Marriage with Anna (II) Ratera and Their Children

28.3.1 Don Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) y Ratera

He was the son of Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (DC04) and Anna Ratera.

28.3.1.1 Introduction and source of income

Further in this book, we highlight the descendants of Don Bonaventura Desclergue (II) (DC04) who went to Flanders, namely Enric (DC05c) in Chapter 33, Antoni (DC05b) in Chapter 32, and Jeroni (DC05) (our ancestor) in Chapter 29. Here, we honor Francesc Desclergue (DC05e), the heir and eldest son of Don Bonaventura Desclergue (II) (DC04), and his descendants.

Don Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) y Ratera was the eldest son of Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (DC04) and Elisabeth Anna de Ratera.

Unlike his three brothers Jeroni (DC05), Enric (DC05c), and Antoni (DC05b), he did not go to Belgium in the Spanish Army of

---

[2] First coustin once removed up.

[3] 'Próceres habilitados en las Cortés del Principado de Cataluña .., Volume 2' by Francesc J. Morales Roca, on page 218.

[4] Francisco J. Morales Roca , 'Próceres habilitados en las Cortés del Principado de Cataluña, siglo XVII: 1599-1713, Volume 2' , Ediciones Hidalguia, 1983.

[5] Josep Maria Grau i Pujol and Francesc Badia i Batalla, 'Diccionari biogràfic històric de Montblanc (1155-1920), Fundació Martí l' Humà. Tot Conca. Carrer Josa, 6, Montblanc, 2008.

[6] 'Bonaventura Desclergue, de Barcelona, Noble, 4.899 (1617-18), 279, Madrid, 24-VI-1618 (Garma)' on page 7 of 'Privilegis Nobiliaris Atorgats Pel Comte-Rei FelipeII (1598-1621)' , by Pablo de Sarraga y Samper, published by Societat Catalana de Genealogia, Heraldica, Sigillografia i Vexillologia

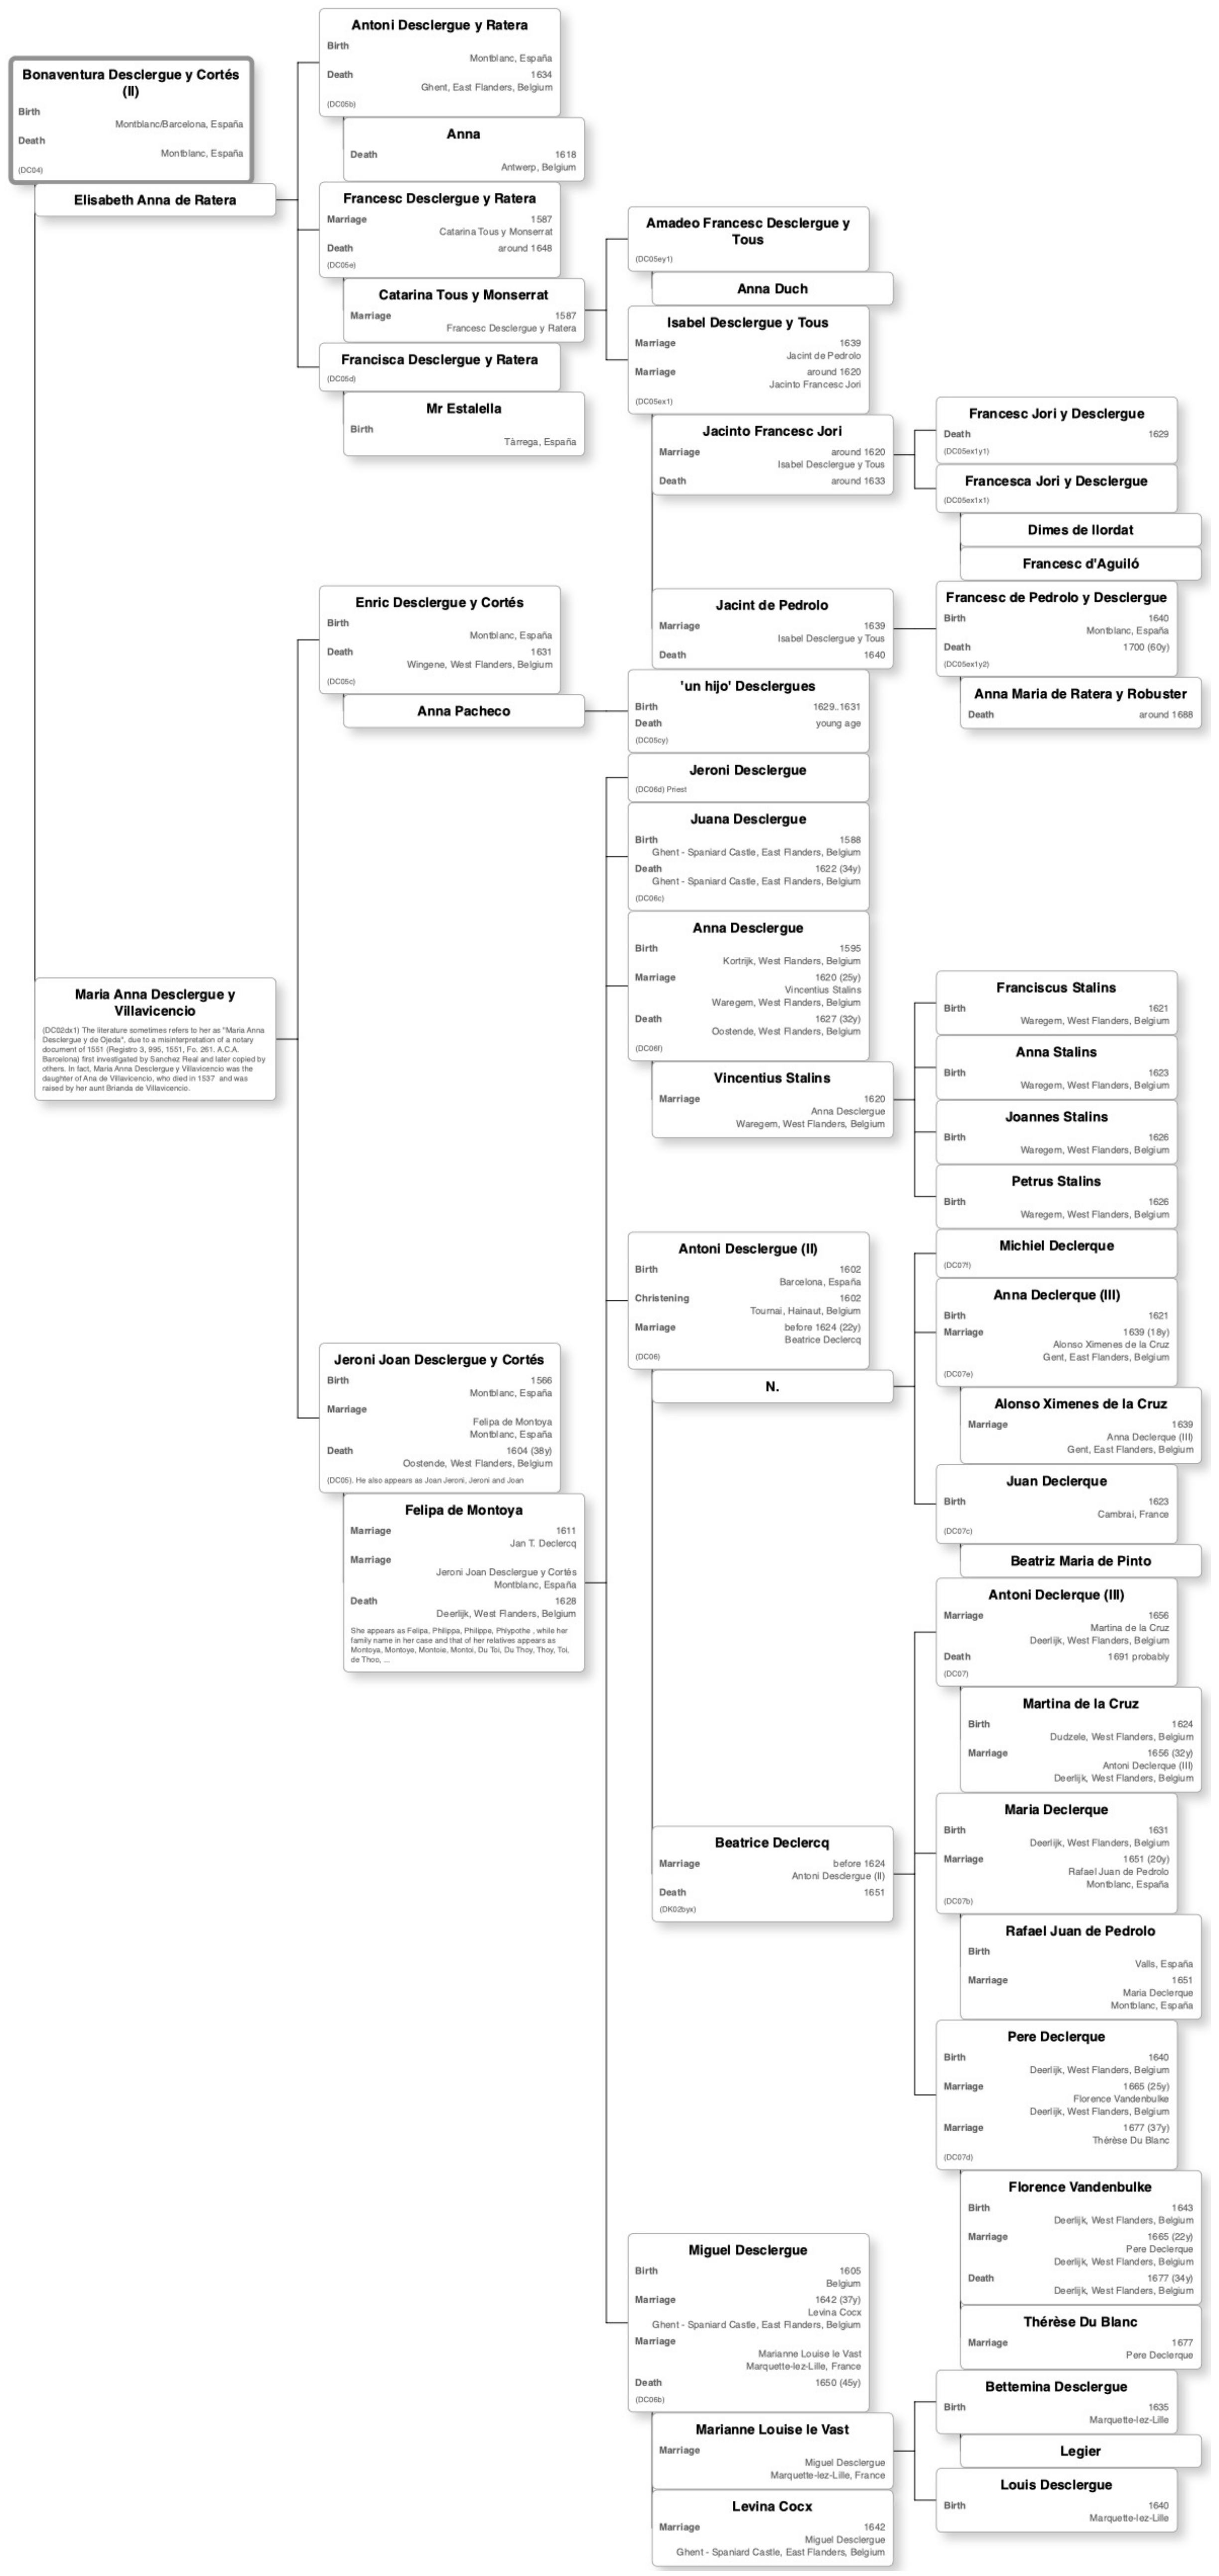
[7] Santiago Alberti, 'Esquema històric del llinatge Pedrolo' , page 49 – 88 of URTX Revista Cultural de l' Urgell, Num 7, 1995.

[8] Manual Notarial 3 506 (1549). 23 ene. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.

[9] Pablo de Sarraga y Sámper, 'Privilegis Nobiliaris Atorgats Pel Comte-Rei FelipeII (1598-1621), Societat Catalona de Genealogia, Heràldica, Sigilografia i Vexillologia, Paratge 7, page 14.

[10] Josep M. T. Grau i Pujol, 'El Castlà de Montblanc, una institució medieval en època moderna'

[11] Manual Notarial. 3 512 (1604). 5 octobre. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.



Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death
Montblanc, España
(DC04)
Elisabeth Anna de Ratera
Antoni Desclergue y Ratera
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death
1634
Ghent, East Flanders, Belgium
(DC05b)
Anna
Death
1618
Antwerp, Belgium
Francesc Desclergue y Ratera
Marriage
1587
Catarina Tous y Monserrat
Death
around 1648
(DC05e)
Catarina Tous y Monserrat
Marriage
1587
Francesc Desclergue y Ratera
Francisca Desclergue y Ratera
(DC05d)
Mr Estalella
Birth
Tàrrega, España
Amadeo Francesc Desclergue y Tous
(DC05ey1)
Anna Duch
Isabel Desclergue y Tous
Marriage
1639
Jacint de Pedrolo
Marriage
around 1620
Jacinto Francesc Jori
(DC05ex1)
Jacinto Francesc Jori
Marriage
around 1620
Isabel Desclergue y Tous
Death
around 1633
Francesc Jori y Desclergue
Death
1629
(DC05ex1y1)
Francesca Jori y Desclergue
(DC05ex1x1)
Dimes de llordat
Francesc d'Aguiló
Jacint de Pedrolo
Marriage
1639
Isabel Desclergue y Tous
Death
1640
Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue
Birth
1640
Montblanc, España
Death
1700 (60y)
(DC05ex1y2)
Anna Maria de Ratera y Robuster
Death
around 1688
Enric Desclergue y Cortés
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death
1631
Wingene, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05c)
Anna Pacheco
'un hijo' Desclergues
Birth
1629..1631
Death
young age
(DC05cy)
Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.
Jeroni Desclergue
(DC06d) Priest
Juana Desclergue
Birth
1588
Ghent - Spaniard Castle, East Flanders, Belgium
Death
1622 (34y)
Ghent - Spaniard Castle, East Flanders, Belgium
(DC06c)
Anna Desclergue
Birth
1595
Kortrijk, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage
1620 (25y)
Vincentius Stalins
Waregem, West Flanders, Belgium
Death
1627 (32y)
Oostende, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC06f)
Vincentius Stalins
Marriage
1620
Anna Desclergue
Waregem, West Flanders, Belgium
Franciscus Stalins
Birth
1621
Waregem, West Flanders, Belgium
Anna Stalins
Birth
1623
Waregem, West Flanders, Belgium
Joannes Stalins
Birth
1626
Waregem, West Flanders, Belgium
Petrus Stalins
Birth
1626
Waregem, West Flanders, Belgium
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Birth
1566
Montblanc, España
Marriage
Felipa de Montoya
Montblanc, España
Death
1604 (38y)
Oostende, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05). He also appears as Joan Jeroni, Jeroni and Joan
Felipa de Montoya
Marriage
1611
Jan T. Declercq
Marriage
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Montblanc, España
Death
1628
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
She appears as Felipa, Philippa, Philippe, Phlypothe , while her family name in her case and that of her relatives appears as Montoya, Montoye, Montoie, Montoi, Du Toi, Du Thoy, Thoy, Toi, de Thoo, ...
Antoni Desclergue (II)
Birth
1602
Barcelona, España
Christening
1602
Tournai, Hainaut, Belgium
Marriage
before 1624 (22y)
Beatrice Declercq
(DC06)
N.
Michiel Declerque
(DC07f)
Anna Declerque (III)
Birth
1621
Marriage
1639 (18y)
Alonso Ximenes de la Cruz
Gent, East Flanders, Belgium
(DC07e)
Alonso Ximenes de la Cruz
Marriage
1639
Anna Declerque (III)
Gent, East Flanders, Belgium
Juan Declerque
Birth
1623
Cambrai, France
(DC07c)
Beatriz Maria de Pinto
Antoni Declerque (III)
Marriage
1656
Martina de la Cruz
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
Death
1691 probably
(DC07)
Martina de la Cruz
Birth
1624
Dudzele, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage
1656 (32y)
Antoni Declerque (III)
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
Beatrice Declercq
Marriage
before 1624
Antoni Desclergue (II)
Death
1651
(DK02byx)
Maria Declerque
Birth
1631
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage
1651 (20y)
Rafael Juan de Pedrolo
Montblanc, España
(DC07b)
Rafael Juan de Pedrolo
Birth
Valls, España
Marriage
1651
Maria Declerque
Montblanc, España
Pere Declerque
Birth
1640
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage
1665 (25y)
Florence Vandenbulke
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage
1677 (37y)
Thérèse Du Blanc
(DC07d)
Florence Vandenbulke
Birth
1643
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage
1665 (22y)
Pere Declerque
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
Death
1677 (34y)
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
Thérèse Du Blanc
Marriage
1677
Pere Declerque
Miguel Desclergue
Birth
1605
Belgium
Marriage
1642 (37y)
Levina Cocx
Ghent - Spaniard Castle, East Flanders, Belgium
Marriage
Marianne Louise le Vast
Marquette-lez-Lille, France
Death
1650 (45y)
(DC06b)
Marianne Louise le Vast
Marriage
Miguel Desclergue
Marquette-lez-Lille, France
Levina Cocx
Marriage
1642
Miguel Desclergue
Ghent - Spaniard Castle, East Flanders, Belgium
Bettemina Desclergue
Birth
1635
Marquette-lez-Lille
Legier
Louis Desclergue
Birth
1640
Marquette-lez-Lille

Figure 28.3: Three descending generations of Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04).

El mismo Don Fran.co Desclergue tuvo tres hermanos capitanes en Flandes, tambien hijos de Don Buenaventura Desclergue, nombrado arriba n. 37. llamados Don Geronymo, Don Enrrique, y Don Antonio Desclergue, consta por el testamento del referido Don Fran.co Desclergue, que otorgó en poder de Juan Alba, Notario publico de la villa de Mont-blanch à los 8. de Febrero 1646. y senyaladamente por el testamento del dicho Don Buenaventura Desclergue, que otorgó en poder de Gaspar Fernòs Notario publico de la mesma villa de Montblanch à los 19. de Deziembre 1627. menos de Don Geronymo, por ser ya en este tiempo muerto en Flandes, como abaxo se dira en la narracion de sus servicios, y en la de Don Enrrique su hermano.

Y por quanto estos tres capitanes, hizieron casi todos sus servicios, antes que su Padre Don Buenaventura Desclergue tubiesse el titulo de Noble, por el privilegio chalendado en el n. 37. Por tanto se nombraran sin el titulo de, Don.

Figure 28.4: This is a fragment of a handwritten '1661 transcript of nobility letter Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue' by Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue, born in 1641, son of Jacint de Pedrolo and Isabel Desclergue y Tous. (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 3 page 11 view 1; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

Flanders but was the heir of the family and remained in Montblanc. During difficult times, he can be considered the conservator of the famous House of Desclergue on the Main Square of Montblanc. As described in Chapter 28.3.3, the house would be inherited by his daughter's son, Pedrolo y Desclergue, who was primarily raised by Francesc Desclergue (DC05e).

A reference of 1604 is shown in 28.8 on page 341.

He is also found in 1646 in Montblanc as a military representative in Figure 28.9 on page 341.

According to Francisco J. Morales Roca[14], he is, indeed, a son of Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (DC04). He was a nobleman and appeared, authorized by the Brazo Militar, in the Corts in 1599, 1626, and 1640.

Francesc Desclergue y Ratera (DC05e) married Catalina Tous y Monserrat. The couple had two children, Amadeo Francesc Desclergue y Tous (DC05ey1) and Isabel Desclergue y Tous (DC05ex1). The latter married first Jacinto Francesc Jori and later Jacint Pedrolo. From the marriage with Jacint de Pedrolo, Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) stemmed. He is described in Chapter 28.5.

In what follows, we focus on Francesc Desclergue's (DC05e) care of his assets, such as the casa Desclergue in Montblanc.

Desclergue also offered loans to his colleague Clemente Estallés to gain money. He also had an additional mill, called Dalt, in the Parellada[15].

The other way to earn money was to obtain benefits from leasing his farmland. Some lease contracts have even been preserved. For instance, he leased to the honorable Jaime Cabesa and his son Juan the piece of land called 'la sort llarga' in 'la partida de la Parellada,' dyad of the Divendres y Disapte, and the piece Magença, in 'la huerta del Dijous,' for four years (from 1633 until 1636), at a rate of 22 pounds per year[16].

Pere Salvany and Jaime Salvany, wool weavers, leased from him the pieces of land close to the San Jordi area, starting from Parellada, dyad of Dijous, for four years, for the amount of 20 pounds per year[17].

To Salvador Capdevila, he leased the land of the Dimecres, located in the Vinyols, for four years and 40 pounds per year[18].

To José Ferigola, master of Seo de Montblanc, he leased the land he owned in 'la huerta del Disapte,' in the Parellada area, where Desclergue had other properties, for four years at a rate of 10 pounds and ten annual salaries (total 42 pounds) payable on the day of the festival of All Saints[19].

To Juan Vidal, 'peraire,' he leased the land called 'lo Quadro' in the Parellada for four years for 7 pounds per year[20].

To Juan Gavaldá, 'peraire,' he leased a piece of land he had in 'la huerta del Disapte,' in the Parellada, for four years for the amount of 5 pounds and ten salaries each year[21].

To Tibau, a farmer, he also rented a land he owned in the Parellada, close to Baix's mill, for 7 pounds a year[22].

While taking care of increasing family assets, Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) tried to improve his patrimony by acquiring estates near or right next to some of his properties. For instance, in 1633, he bought, for 20 pounds, a demolished house and patio of 6 steps wide and 25 long, from the widow of Gaspar Perera (doctor of Medicine of Montblanc), through the intermediary of priest Carlos

---

[14] Francisco J. Morales Roca, 'Próceres habilitados en las Cortés del Principado de Cataluña, siglo XVII: 1599-1713, Volume 2,' Ediciones Hidalguia, 1983.

[15] Manual Notarial. 3 514 (1623) 15 abr. A. H. P. Tarragona.

[16] Manual Notarial. 3 517 (1632) 13 sept. A. H. P. Tarragona.

[17] Manual Notarial. 3 517 (1632) 13 sept. A. H. P. Tarragona.

[18] Manual Notarial. 3 517 (1632) 13 sept. A. H. P. Tarragona.

[19] Manual Notarial. 3 517 (1632) October 10 A. H. P. Tarragona.

[20] Manual Notarial. 3 517 (1632) October 10 A. H. P. Tarragona.

[21] Manual Notarial. 3 517 (1632) October 10 A. H. P. Tarragona.

[22] Manual Notarial. 3 517 (1632) October 10 A. H. P. Tarragona.

Figure 28.5: Left, we see the walls and towers of Montblanc (2018)(Declercq de Silva Archive). In the middle, two old photos show the Main Square of Montblanc with the House of Desclergue 🅮. Right, we have a view of the Casal dels Desclergue from the Church Santa Maria la Mayor, on September 8, 2020 (Courtesy of Maria Teresia Aluja Tarrago).

Jener, along the road to Arrabal, right next to his mill.

On February 8, 1646, Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) made a testament in which he appointed Vicente Requesens, plebian of Montblanc, Pere Forés, rector of Vimbodí and José Ivorra as his legatees. For himself, he arranged to be buried in the side chapel of the Nativity of the Monastery of San Francesc, just outside Montblanc. The tower of the Church of Sant Francesc de Montblanc is shown in Figure 28.10.

In his testament, he remembered his servants Sansón Ribera and Maria, Pere Toralló's widow, bequeathing a portion of his wheat and wine to them.

28.3.1.2 Life and traits as a lawyer

On pages 179-180 of 'URTX índex onomàstic Personatges històrics' , we find:

'Desclergue, Francesc: VII, 66, 67, 68, 69.'

We can also cite:

'Desclergue, Francesc de. Jurista de gran prestigi i personalitat, doctor en drets civil i canònic, assessor del veguer de Montblanc Francesc de Castellví (1627); assessor del batlle de Sarral (1635) i advocat, assessor i procurador del monestir de Poblet durant molts anys (1640). Arribà a ocupar el càrrec de veguer de Montblanc (1624). En testament de 8 de febrer de 1646 disposà ser enterrat a l' església de Sant Francesc de Montblanc,' in the work of Josep Maria Grau i Pujol and Francesc Badia i Batalla[23].

Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) outlived all his brothers in the 17th century. He was a highly active individual who significantly expanded the family's holdings. Demonstrating considerable acumen, he effectively utilized neglected lands for profit. He staunchly defended his property and rights through all available legal avenues and was a highly esteemed figure in his profession.

On August 1, 1587, he married Caterina Tous y Monserrat, daughter of Francesc Tous and Joan Monserrat, of Montblanc, before the notary Joan Toldrà.

He was a Squire and was a Doctor of Laws. He was the advisor to Francesc de Castellví, the veguer of Montblanc.

More precisely, he studied law in Lleida, and soon after his wedding, on August 27, 1587, he obtained a Doctor of Laws degree in the Estudi General. For his education, he was sponsored by the gentleman Francesc de Ratera from Lleida, possibly an uncle or his maternal grandfather.[24]

As a jurist, he soon became a man of prestige and good relations, which allowed him, on February 15, 1595, to be appointed as the legal advisor to the county of Prades and the barony of Entença. On February 6, 1598, the position was reconfirmed when the Duke of Cardona appointed him as the judge for all his territories and, therefore, the said county and barony. The appointment was that the Duke requested the administration of finances, wheat, and other essential matters, such as education in the villages and towns of the county of Prades, be examined by experienced and trustworthy people.

The Brazo Militar authorized him in the Corts of the Principality of Catalonia in 1599. He was summoned by letter dated in Barcelona on May 25.[25]

On January 15, 1600, he was granted powers to take responsibility

'for all registrations, from the Prades County as well as from the baronies of Entenza, to observe, to visit, to recognize and to overlook the inquisitors' processes in the mentioned locations.'

Besides, because of the 'confidence that we have always had,' he was nominated as Prades' county treasurer[26].

We also find him as a notary in a document used in Valentí Gual Vilá's work.[27]

---

[23] Josep Maria Grau i Pujol and Francesc Badia i Batalla, 'Diccionari biogràfic històric de Montblanc (1155-1920), Fundació Martí l' Humà. Tot Conca. Carrer Josa, 6, Montblanc, 2008.

[24] Arxiu Comarcal de Tàrrega, Fons Pedrolo, sign. top. 6.

[25] Arxiu Comarcal de Tàrrega, Fons Pedrolo, Fons Pedrolo, sign. top. 6.

[26] Arxiu Comarcal de Tàrrega, Fons Pedrolo, Fons Pedrolo, sign. top. 52.

[27] Valentí Gual Vilá, 'Poblet i vimbodí. Senyor i vassalls. Una Mostra de conflictivitat al segle XVII' , Aplex de Treballs (Montblanc) 20 (2002), 95-112, Centre d' Estudis de la Conca de Barberà.

Figure 28.6: Remains of watermills (Xiquet and Volta, 'Molins de la vila de Montblanc') outside the town of Montblanc (Courtesy of Joaquim Parés Pubil , 'Ramper'). The functioning of Spanish watermills differs from others in that water streams flow into the building. Then, the hydraulic force is transferred by pouring the water jet on a horizontally spinning rotor, whose vertical shaft is connected to a millstone a few meters higher, on which one can produce the flower. The crane to handle the millstones is also typical for these sophisticated systems. The reader can find more details in Toni Pujol, Jordi Solà, Lino Montoro, Marc Pelegrí, 'Hydraulic performance of an ancient Spanish watermill,' Renewable Energy 35 (2010) 387-396.

On May 15, 1604, he became a member of the military deputy for the Vegueria of Montblanc.[28]

Economically, his status was excellent. In 1607, he bought, for 60 pounds, a fenced garden located in the orchard of Vinyols, the dyad of Dijous, which was bounded on the east by the road that went to the Pontarró and on the south by a ditch.[29]

'... hortum parietibus circum clausum situm in termino dicte ville Mointisalbi, in horta de Vinyols... in diata del Dijous... ad oriente cum itinere.. del Pontarro, a mediodia cum sequia....'

In the work of Salvador J. Rovira i Gomez[30], we find: 'From Jeroni de Armengol and Cardona, the tenth baron of Rocafort, we can only say that on December 12, 1608, he gave to Mn. Gaspar Luna, representative of Montblanc, two-thirds of the capital of 300 pounds of the census that he owed to Lord Francesc de Desclergues of Montblanc.'

He also appears as a legatori in the testament of Jaume Figuerola, as can be found, for instance, in the work of Gener Gonzalvo i Bou.[31]

We also find him as being called, in 1611, 'Sir' or 'Mossèn' Desclergues of Montblanc ('mossèn Desclergue de Montblanc') on page 86 of Vealenti Gual Vilà's work.[32] The title 'Mossèn' is a typical Catalan and Crown of Aragon expression. Indeed, in the work of Fernando Sánchez Miret[33], we find, on page 210,

'afirma, amb raó i a diferència de Coromines, que Don s' useva en persones només de gran categoria - I ndica també com l' aparició de mossén al XIV farà que en es quederà per al baix estament i mossèn per a clergues[34], nobles i cituadans.'

It means that, starting from the 14th century, the title 'Don' was mainly used for the high nobility, while the title Mossèn was more used for Squires, Burgers and even clergy.

In 1614 Francesc Desclergue bought for 1125 pounds a flour mill with two millstones, called the Trullols mill, which was located near the wall. This mill had been owned by doctor Onofre Trullols, whose widow Jerónima (married in a second marriage with Jacobo Fontanilles, a merchant) had given it to his son Francesc Fontanilles, who was the seller:[35]

'..totum illum molendinum farinerium cum duabus molis duabus sequiis, bacia et cum corrali sive horto coram dicto molendino.. dictum lo moli del metje Trullols, situm iuxta menia dicte ville Montisalbi...'

He also participated in the political life of Montblanc, which is why, in 1616, he was entitled to the position of the first jury.[36]

The community of Santes Creus recognized his capacity as a professional in legal affairs. It appointed him as an advisor and ordinary judge of all the monastery's jurisdictions, with an annual 20-pound allowance.[37] It is in such capacity that, in May 1620, he represented the Gaià monastery before the Royal Hearing against the marriage of Baget, who did not want to pay the third that corresponded to the sanctuary for the transfer of the 'Mas de en Plana.' [38]

In 1622 the Desclergue couple loaned 80 pounds to their colleague, Clemente Estallés.[39]

As a lawyer, he was an advisor to the veguer Francesc de Castellví.[40]

In 1624, he bought for 88 pounds from the widow of businessman Andreu, a house with a corral located on the street called Vilanova

---

[28] Arxiu Comarcal de Tàrrega, Fons Pedrolo, Fons Pedrolo, sign. top. 6, f. 25v.

[29] Manual Notarial. 3 512 (1607) November 26 Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.

[30] Salvador J. Rovira i Gomez, 'Notes d' arxiu sobre els Armengol, barons de Rocafort de Queralt' , Cenre d' Estudis de la Conca de Barberà, 110.

[31] Gener Gonzalvo i Bou, 'El Testament de Jaume Figuerola, prohom hospitaler de l' Espluga de Francoli (1608)' , Podall, 2015.

[32] Vealenti Gual Vilà, 'Sobre llibres de cort. les piles, edat moderna.'

[33] Fernando Sánchez Miret, 'Actas del XXIII Congreso Internacional de Lingüística y Filología Románica. Volume II: Sección 3: sintaxis, semántica y pragmática. Part 1' , Walter de Gruyter GmbH & Co KG, 2015.

[34] clergues, here, means clergy

[35] Manual Notarial. 3 510 (1614) 10 abr. A.H.P. Tarragona.

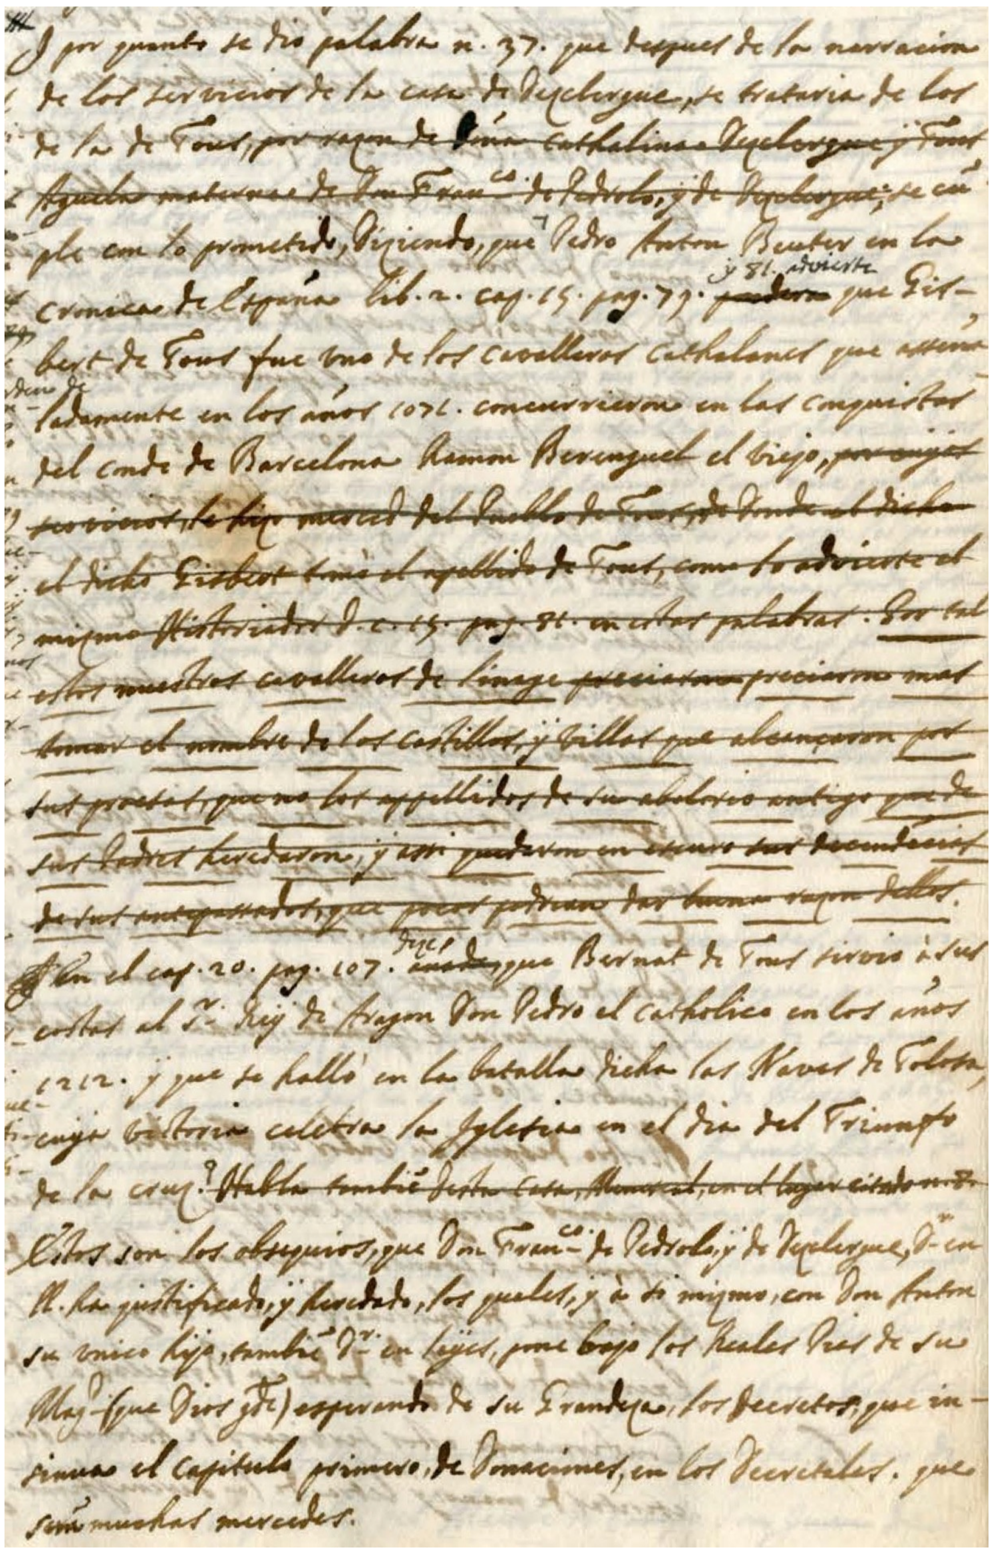
[36] Arxiu Històric de Tarragona, Fons notarial de Montblanc, reg. 3547, s/f.

[37] Arxiu Comarcal de Valls, Fons notarial de Montblanc, reg. 256, p. 193v.

[38] Elisabeth Baldor, El monestir de Santes Creus des del primer abadiat quadriennal a la guerra dels Segadors (1619-1641)(Valls, Consell Comarcal de l' Alt Camp 1999), 72 i 158.

[39] Manual Notarial. 3 514 (1623) 15 abr. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona

[40] Manual Notarial. 3 522 (1622) 3 mayo. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.



Y por quanto se dio palabra n. 37. que despues de la narracion de los servicios de la casa de Desclergue, se trataria de los de la de Tous, por razon de ~~Dña Cathalina Desclergue y Tous~~ ~~Abuela materna de Don Fran.co de Pedrolo, y de Desclergue,~~ se cu-ple con lo prometido, diziendo, que Pedro Anton Beuter en la Cronica de España lib. 2. cap. 15. pag. 77. y 81. advierte ~~[illegible]~~ que Gis-bert de Tous fue uno de los cavalleros Cathalanes que seña-ladamente en los años 1072. concurrieron en las conquistas del conde de Barcelona Ramon Berenguel el viejo, ~~por cuyos~~
~~servicios le hizo merced del Castillo de Tous, de donde el dicho~~
~~el dicho Gisbert tomò el apellido de Tous, como lo advierte el~~
~~mismo Historiador d. c. 15. pag. 81. en estas palabras. Por tal~~
~~estos nuestros cavalleros de linage preciaronse mas~~
~~tomar el nombre de los castillos, y villas que alcançaron por~~
~~sus proezas, que no los appellidos de su abolorio antiguo que de~~
~~sus padres heredaron, y assi quedaron en olvido sus decendencias~~
~~de sus antepassados, que poco podrian dar buena razon dellos.~~
Y en el cap. 20. pag. 107. dize ~~[illegible]~~ que Bernat de Tous sirvio à sus costas al Sr. Rey de Aragon Don Pedro el catholico en los años 1212. y que se hallò en la batalla dicha las Navas de Tolosa, cuya victoria celebra la Yglesia en el dia del Triumpho de la cruz. ~~Habla tambien desta casa Moncada, en el lugar citado n.~~ Estos son los obsequios, que Don Fran.co de Pedrolo, y de Desclergue, D.r en
ll. ha justificado, y heredado, los quales, y à si mismo, con Don Anton su unico hijo, tambien D.r en leyes, pone bajo los Reales Pies de su Mag.d (que Dios gde) esperando de su Grandeza, los decretos, que in-sinua el capitulo primero, de Donaciones, en los Decretales. que son muchas mercedes.

Figure 28.7: This is a fragment of a handwritten '1661 transcript of nobility letter Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue' by Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (born in 1641, son of Jacint de Pedrolo and Isabel Desclergue y Tous). It's a narrative on the traits of the family Tous, which has been a reason, in addition to the military career of the brothers of Francesc Desclergue, to offer him a noble title 'Don' . (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 3 page 15 view 1; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

99*v*// Deputats de la vegaria de [Montblanc]

Mossèn Bernat Guerau de Boxadós.

A xviiii del mes de janer any mil dxvi, per mort del dit mossèn Guerau de Boxadors, fou ensaculat mossèn Bertran de Vilafranca.

A vii del mes de desembre any mil dxxvi, per mort del dit mossèn Bertran de Vilafranca, fonch ensaculat mossèn Luys de Boxadors.

A vi de febrer mdlxxiii, per mort del dit mossèn Luys de Boxadors, fou enseculat concordament mossèn Francesch de Boxadors, carlà de Pontils.

A xv de maig mdciii, per mort del dit mossèn Francesch de Boxadors, fou ensaculat concordament en la forma del nou redrés mossèn Jonot de Guimerà.

A xv de maig mdciiii, per mort de dit Janot de Guimerà, és enseculat concordament conforme lo nou redrés mossèn Francesc Dezclergue.

Figure 28.8: Francesc Desclergue in Montblanc in 1604.[12]

175*r*// Diputats militars de la vegueria de Monblanch

A xv de maig mdcxxxxvi, per mort del dit mossèn Francesch Desclergue, és inseculat concordament mossèn Ramon de Llorach, qui ja estava inseculat en oydor militar per dita vegueria.

Figure 28.9: Francesc Desclergue in Montblanc as military representative in 1646.[13]

Figure 28.10: An aerial photo taken of the tower of the Sant Francesc convent. Right, the tower of Sant Miquel rises, while left, the Church of Santa Maria de Montblanc. Courtesy of Ignasi Baltà and Jaume Vila Vives.

del Mercadal, which is adjacent in the east to the home of Desclergue, in the south to the road that goes from Mercadal street to the Church of San Miguel, in the west to Mercadal Street, and in the north to the house of the said buyer and part with that of the widow Boscha:[41]

'... in vico dicto de Vilanova del Mercadal affrontatur ab oriente cum dicto emprendi a meridie cum vico quo tenditur a dictí vico del Mercadal ad ecclesiam Sancti Michaelis, ab occidente cum vico del Mercadal et a circio partem cum domo dicto empreuis et partem cum domina viuda Boscha...'

He was authorized by the Brazo Militar in the Corts of the Principality of Catalonia in 1626.[42]

We also find him in the work of Jesús Villanueva.[43] He said he had a good friendship with Francesc de Castellví and Peguera, who, on May 3, 1627, made a brotherhood for him to purge a table for the Veguer's office, and while in charge, he was the consultant.[44]

On May 15, 1628, he was tightly empowered by the military branch of la Junta de Braços.[45]

In 1629, he was a lawyer at the monastery of Poblet, and still, in 1640, he took care of some legal affairs of the community. His fees were 25 pounds per year.

As a legal professional, he was a lawyer, advisor, and procurator of the Royal Monastery of Poblet for many years.[46]

In May 1630, he also appeared in documents.[47]

In the 1630s, we also find him acting as an agent of the monastery of Poblet, with an annual salary of 25 pounds.[48]

He knew how to defend his rights, which a couple of speaking episodes can show:

In 1616, Francesc Desclergue demonstrated his capabilities when the Montblanc Council decreed that all grain in the town could only be milled at the local mills. As the owner of two mills, this decision adversely affected his interests. Determined to defend himself, Francesc took the matter to court, especially since the royal attorney also sought contributions from properties previously registered as the King's. This situation impacted him as one of his mills, Trullols, was a royal mill.

In 1629, another dispute arose when Castlà Carles de Calders demanded payments from the Castellani. On September 7, Francesc sought resolution from the veguer, Francesc de Castellví, with the notary Alba present to record the proceedings. Francesc acknowledged the potential rights Calders might have over his property but stated that he lacked the inherited titles to accept the property burdens formally. Consequently, the Castlà decided to consult his lawyer.

Two days later, Francesc faced the royal attorney again, who insisted that the Trullols mill was regal property. Francesc was ordered to pay 79 pounds—41 for the due censuses and 28 for additional costs.

Detailing this episode, on June 12, 1616, the Censejo de Montblanc decreed that all grain should be milled at the town's mills. Francisco Desclergue (DC05e) opposed this decision as it harmed his interests as a mill owner, a right he was entitled to defend. According to Palau and Dulcet, the town argued that they facilitated the collection and milling of wheat, a service not provided by private mills.

This litigation coincided with another issue. The Royal Procurator demanded that all properties formerly belonging to the King be registered and taxed. Montblanc resisted, citing a charter by Enrique de Trastámara, which exempted them from such payments. After extensive investigations, Judge Jerónimo Pujades of Catalonia acquitted them on May 11, 1618. Francesc Desclergue played a pivotal role in opposing the town's milling mandate and the Procurator's claim that his mill, once belonging to Onofre Trullols, was royal property.

In 1629, the royal claim was renewed, this time targeting private individuals. Montblanc required Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) to settle the censuses owed to the town based on his property titles. On September 7, a meeting at the veguer Francesc Castellví's house included participants like Hortensio de Castellvi, Luis Guanter, Francesc Desclergue, and Carlos de Calders y Villafranca, with notary Juan Alba documenting the event. Francesc expressed willingness to acknowledge the censuses but insisted on seeing the property rights documentation before accepting any claims. Lacking his inherited titles from his father, Bonaventura Desclergue (DC04), Francesc was told the Castlà would seek legal counsel from Clemente Estallés, the veguer's adviser.

Francesc maintained connections with Santes Creus until 1631, when Dr. Ciprià Fernós succeeded him in Montblanc, likely on his recommendation. Despite the royal pressure, Francesc used his legal expertise and influence to defend himself. His persistence paid off in 1637 when the courts rejected the royal attorney's claim. In 1640, the courts ruled against the municipality, allowing inhabitants to mill grain at private mills again. Notably, 1640 was also when Antoni Desclergue (DC06), son of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), visited Montblanc, as detailed in Chapter 34.5.11.

---

[41] Manual Notarial. 3 514 (1624) 25 ener. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.

[42] F. J. Morales, Próceres, I:218.

[43] Jesús Villanueva, 'El debat sobre la constitució de l' observança a les corts catalanes de 1626-1632' , Manuscrits, nr 13, Gener 1995, 247-272.

[44] Arxiu Històric de Tarragona, Fons notarial de Montblanc, reg. 3522, p. 290v.

[45] Dietaris, V:234

[46] Manual Notarial. 3 516 (1629) 28 marzo, 17 junio, y 10 agosto. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.

[47] Arxiu Comarcal de Tàrrega, Fons Pedrolo, Fons Pedrolo, Llibre Major, f. 123.; and also Arxiu Històric de Tarragona, Fons notarial de Montblanc, reg. 3517, p. 167; reg. 3520, p. 34.

[48] Arxiu Històric de Tarragona, Fons notarial de Montblanc, reg. 3524, pp. 97v i 104.

In 1632, Gaspar Torrella, a Montblanc resident, sought Francesc's legal services to represent him before the Generalitat. On June 11, 1619, he appeared before the mayor general in this capacity.

As a legal professional, Francesc was procurator of the veguer Gaspar Torroella.[49].

At the end of 1633, he worked for the Duke of Cardona, then Viceroy of Catalonia.

As a lawyer he was also advisor to Sarreal.[50]

When, later, during the War of the Reapers, Montblanc remained in the French camp, Francesc had nothing much to worry about, partly because he was the counsellor of the Count of Savallá. Still, on September 23, 1642, he had to undergo the fury of the soldiers of the Spanish army of the Marquess of Leganés, passing through Montblanc towards the front of Lleida, who sacked and burned the ancestral home, which therefore became uninhabitable.

Being already of considerable age and faced with the warlike circumstances surrounding him, he decided to make a will on February 8, 1646. He declared his grandson and godson, Francesc Jacinto de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2), as his heir.[51] Francesc Jacinto de Pedrolo y Desclergue is described in Chapter 28.5.

Furthermore, Santiago Alberti[52] provides the following information on Francesc Desclergue (DC05e):

'Francesc Desclergue inherited his father's substantial holdings in Montblanc. Among these assets was a magnificent house located on the Plaça Major, considered one of the most desirable locations in the entire city. Additionally, he possessed several parcels of land and a once-profitable mill, although its productivity had declined over time. The year 1626 proved particularly challenging due to a severe water shortage that halved grain production, leading to significant disputes involving all the mills in Montblanc. The city council imposed regulations mandating that milling must be conducted at municipal mills rather than private ones to increase public revenue. This decree was met with widespread opposition from private mill owners and the general population. In a rare show of unity, they collectively filed a lawsuit against the municipality.

Francesc Desclergue, one of the litigants, took on the case as a lawyer and emerged victorious. Testimonies from the lawsuit revealed that professional millers estimated the Desclergue mill owed an annual fee of approximately 90 pounds. While this sum was not crucial to Francesc's overall wealth, it was significant enough to warrant a robust defense. Due to the declining profitability of his mill, Francesc dismissed his 16-member household staff and increasingly focused on his legal profession. His expertise as a jurist ensured he could maintain his livelihood. Furthermore, Francesc's marriage to Caterina de Tous was a strategic alliance, aligning him with a noble and well-connected family.'

'At the end of 1633, Francesc Desclergue provided notable assistance to the royal lieutenant in the Principality, the Duke of Cardona. Despite being exempt from the obligation to billet troops due to his noble and legal status, Desclergue accommodated five soldiers in his home. He asserted that, as a servant of the county of Prades, he could not overlook the necessity of housing these soldiers, even though he was officially exempt from such duties.

This action earned him a favor, sanctioned by the mayor of Montblanc and supported by legal counsel. As a result, Desclergue was appointed as an advisor to the Vicar Cardona and subsequently to his successor, the Count of Santa Coloma, in the ensuing years.'[53]

There are letters addressed to Francesc Desclergue by H.M. King Philip IV (September 7) and the Duke of Cardona (November 5 and December 28). The last one is interested in granting Desclergue the legal advisory of Montblanc for a fair and fixed salary.

Competent and justly reputed, Francesc became the adviser of the same royal lieutenant or Viceroy, the Duke of Cardona. He would also continue under his successor, the Count of Santa Coloma.

Then, in 1639, his only remaining daughter Isabel (DC05ex1) married Jacinto de Pedrolo in Montblanc. Antoni Desclergue (DC06), as described in Chapter 34.5.11, attended the wedding. Unfortunately, his new son-in-law would soon die, and Isabel would be a pregnant widow. Isabel was consequently warmly welcomed to live in Montblanc and have her child there. The child, Francisco de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2), would be raised mainly by Francesc during his youth. The child was baptized on January 30, 1640, and Francesc was the grandfather and served as godfather. Francisca Desclergue (DC05d) y Ratera, described in Chapter 28.3.3, served as the godmother.

In the wake of the War of Separation, Francesc Desclergue does not seem to have had headaches for being the adviser of the last two Spanish lieutenants, who were killed in 1640. His role had indeed not been political. With Montblanc being located on the French side until the end of the new conflict in 1652, Desclergue also appears as an adviser to the count of Savalla, a prominent Frenchman.

Nevertheless, having had three brothers in the Spanish army in Flanders and a nephew, Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06), still active as a military officer at that time, Francesc had other reasons to fear the French besides his personal and professional involvement with the Spanish in the years before.

From the work of Santiago Alberti, we must conclude that in 1640-1652, the Desclergues of Montblanc and the ones in Belgium must have been disconnected. In Chapter 34.9, the reader can find that Antoni Desclergue II (DC06) revisited Montblanc in 1659 and would become godfather to Antoni de Pedrolo, the first-born son of Francisco de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2).

We may also add that Anton Ratera, 'presbiter, Rector et notarii publici ville Spelunce Francolini' (L' Espluga de Francolí, is close to Montblanc) was an acquaintance, if not a friend, of Francesc Desclergue (DC05e). This can be found in the work of Gener Gonzalvo i Bou.[54] It is therefore likely that Ana Ratera was the daughter of this Anton Ratera.

28.3.2 Don Antoni Desclergue y Ratera (DC05b)

He was the son of Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (DC04) and Anna Ratera. He went to Belgium in the Spanish Army of Flanders with his brothers Jeroni and Enric. Chapter 32 is devoted to him.

---

[49] Manual Notarial. 3 517 (1632) mayo. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.

[50] Manual Notarial. 3 519 (1635) 18 nov . Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.

[51] Arxiu Històric de Tarragona, Fons notarial de Montblanc, reg. 3547, s/f.

[52] Santiago Alberti, 'Esquema històric del llinatge Pedrolo' , page 49 – 88 of URTX Revista Cultural de l' Urgell, Num 7, 1995.

[53] Arxiu Comarcal de Tàrrega, Fons Pedrolo, Fons Pedrolo, sign. top. 52.

[54] Gener Gonzalvo i Bou, 'El Testamant de Jaume Figuerola, prohom hospitaler de l' Espluga de Francolí (1608)' , Podall 2015.

28.3.3 Doña Francisca Desclergue (DC05d) y Ratera

She was the daughter of Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04) and Anna (II) Ratera. On pages 179-180 of URTX índex onomàstic Personatges històrics, we find:
'DESCLERGUE, Francesca (—-): VII, 68.'
There is not much known about her. She married a Mr Estalella, from Tarrega, whose father was forced to create a census of 100 pounds with Mn. Pere Aliart, in Tarragona, to pay for the dowry. We also know that she became the godmother of Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2), the son of her niece Isabel de Desclergue (DC05ex1).

28.3.4 Doña Isabel/Elisabeth Desclergue y Tous (DC05ex1) - First Marriage, with Jacinto Francesc Jori

She is the daughter of Don Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) and Catalina Tous y Monserrat. On pages 179-180 of URTX índex onomàstic Personatges històrics, we find:
'Desclergue, Isabel (noble): VII, 60, 65, 66, 68, 69.'
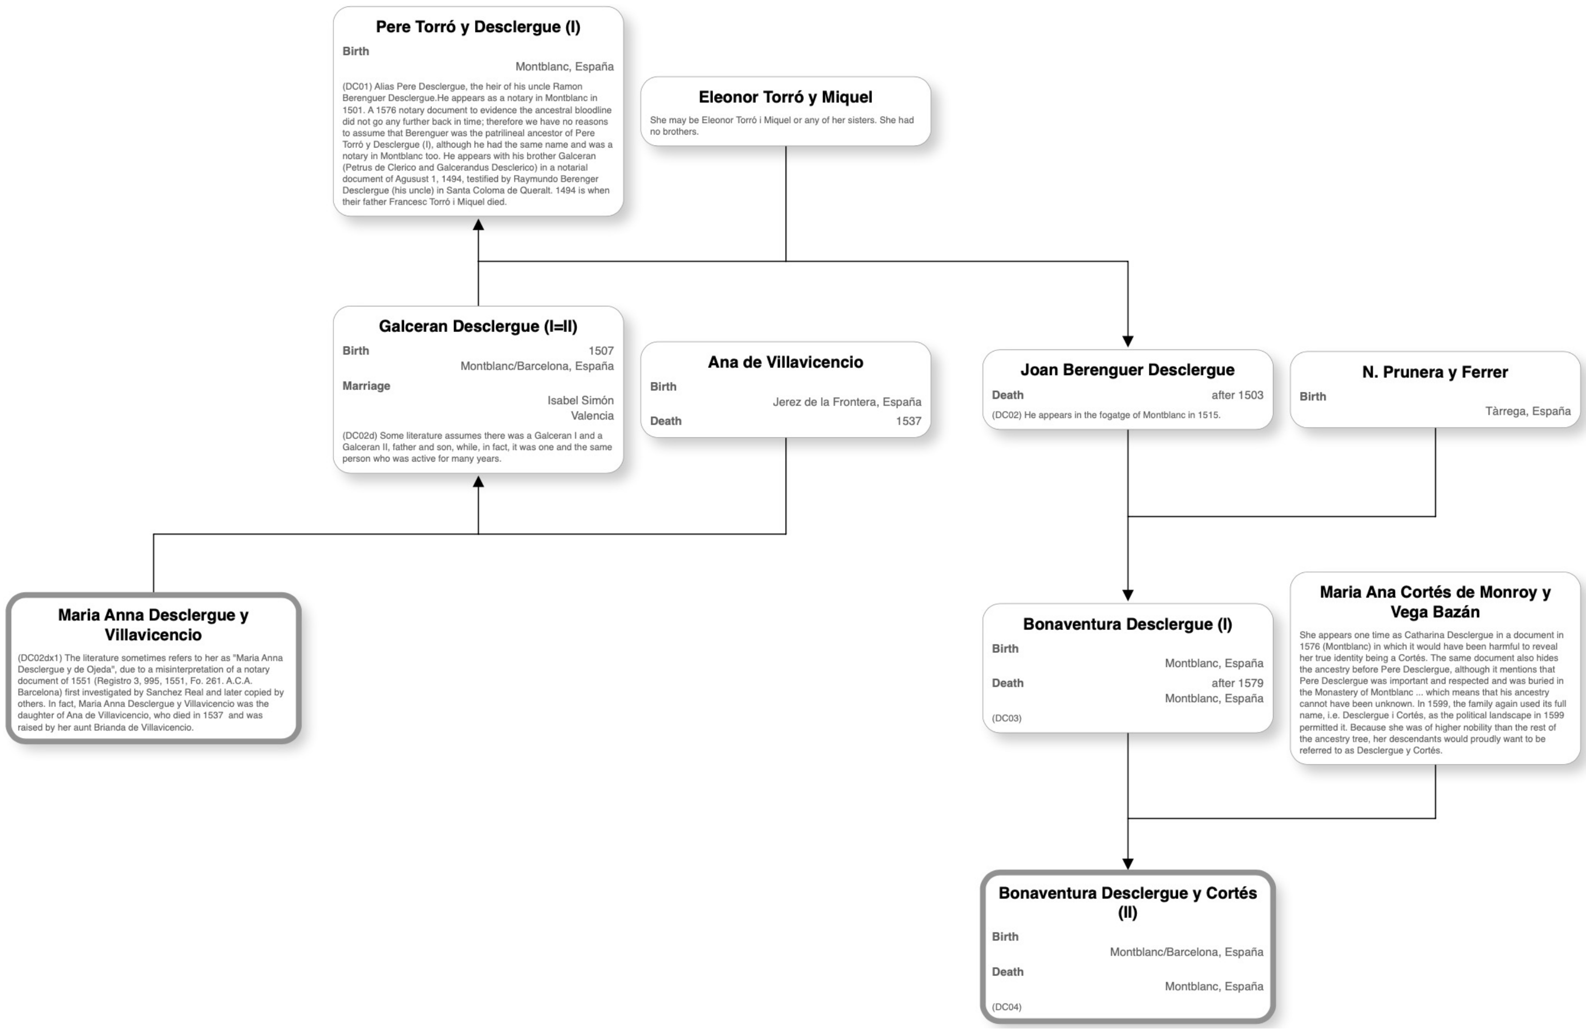
Isabel Desclergue (DC05ex1) married Jacinto Francesc Jori, a Civil and Ecclesiastical Law doctor, around the end of the 1620s. Only one daughter, Francesca Jori y Desclergue (DC05ex1x1), and one son, Francesc Jacint Jori y Desclergue (DC05ex1y1) (who would die young), were born from the Jori-Desclergue couple. Isabel Desclergue (DC05ex1) married a second time to Pedrolo in 1639 (their children had the name Pedrolo y Desclergue), exposed in Chapter 28.3.5.
Francesca Jori y Desclergue (DC05ex1x1), being the daughter of Dr. Jacint Francesc Jori and Isabel Desclergue y Tous (DC05ex1) became the heiress of Jacinto Francesc Jori, after he had made a testament to the notary Joan Lluna, which occurred after his son Francesc Jacint Jori y Desclergue (DC05ex1y1) had died in 1629.[55]
Francesc Jori was Lord of the Pareres and the castle of Bolet in the veguería of Villafranca del Panadés, diocese of Barcelona.[56]
Francesca Jori y Desclergue (DC05ex1x1) would also have been the heiress of her mother, Isabel Desclergue y Tous (DC05ex1), the only descendant of Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) and, therefore, the owner of all the heritage of Desclergue. Still, Elisabet married Jacint Pedrolo in second place, which is why the inheritance of Desclergue was passed to Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue, who died around 1700.
In 1547, some lands were registered down in the 'toçalet d' en Jori ,' in the direction of Lleida road.[57]
Also around this time is a reference to a farmer Francesc Jori and Pere Jori, who reside in Barcelona. He was the son of Matías Jori.[58]
In the notarial manuals are references to Francesc Jori with authorizations to collect debts, and others.[59][60][61]
Francesc Jori died in October of 1629.[62][63]
Being a textile merchant, Jacinto Francesc Jori appeared well-established in Montblanc in 1604.[64] In his store, the personalities of the town were supplied.[65]
Clemente Jori was the nephew of Juan Jori, a merchant, who died in Lleida and made a will before Blas Pons in August in 1631.[66]
Francisca Jori y Desclergue (DC05ex1x1) had an influential position because of her possessions and profession. In 1627, the Jori couple held a benefit under Saint James's patronage in the parish church of Villafranca del Panadés. This benefit, which Jacobo Armengol used, presbyter of Valls, passed to a nephew of Isabel Desclergue (DC05ex1) called José Vicente Jusea, a tonsured cleric, a student of Montblanc.[67]
Shortly after the marriage of Jori-Desclergue (DC05ex1), they bought, in 1632, for 47 pounds, the part of the land that Francesc Grangyo, presbyter, had in the area of Gras, in the direction of Pascuala, and that extended to the Pi Forcat, and that had as limit the lands of Bernardo Fort, at the portal of San Antonio.[68]
Jacinto Francesc Jori lived in the street of Riber or the one of the Regina, since in 1632 when locating to a house, one says, in the street of Riber and that is adjacent, by an arch, to the home of Jacinto Francesc Jori, and in the street of Regina.[69]
There are some citations regarding Jori's professional performance as a Lawyer. The most curious is the one that refers to the proceedings and sentence issued at the request of Pablo Queralt of Cabra in the criminal case against Juan Tapiol and Juan Closet, sentenced to death. He was collecting information for twenty-four days and charged 32 pounds.

28.3.5 Doña Isabel/Elisabeth Desclergue y Tous (DC05ex1) - Second Marriage, with Jacinto Pedrolo

Isabel Desclergue (DC05ex1), the daughter of Don Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) and Catalina Tous y Monserrat, married, a second time, to Jacinto de Pedrolo, a Squire, in 1639.
Gener Gonzalvo y Bou[70] describes an archive that contains a lot of information about Desclergue and, in particular, the family Pedrolo and Pedrolo y Desclergue. On page 172 of his work, he focuses on the Pedrolo family of Montblanc. There, we can find:
'Jacinto de Pedrolo married, in 1639, with Isabel Desclergue (DC05ex1). Soon, her husband Jacint Pedrolo died, and in 1640 was born, already in Montblanc, Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue, in times of great agitations.' It explains why Isabel Desclergue (DC05ex1) decided to reside in Montblanc, close to her family, which means Valls' abandonment and a loss of connection with the Pedrolo family.

---

[55] Manual Notarial 3 523 (1629) 13 nov. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[56] Manual Notarial 3 523 (1628) 12 jul. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[57] Manual Notarial 3 504 (1547) Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[58] Manual Notarial 3 506 (1548) 5 y 27 oct. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[59] Manual Notarial 3 522 (1626) 28 ag. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[60] Manual Notarial 3 523 (1628) 2 abr. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[61] Manual Notarial 3 523 (1629) 1 marzo. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[62] Manual Notarial 3 518 (1629) 30 ag. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona. On this date he was alive...
[63] Manual Notarial 3 523 (1629) 23 oct. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona. On this date, he had already died...
[64] (Manual Notarial 3 511 (1604) Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona
[65] Manual Notarial 3 523 (1630) 9 ener. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[66] Manual Notarial 3 525 (1631) Fol. 122 v. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[67] Manual Notarial 3 517 (1631) September 2 Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[68] Manual Notarial 3 517 (1632) 12 marzo, Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[69] Manual Notarial 3 517 (1632) Fol. 406 v. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[70] Gener Gonzalvo y Bou, 'Fons documentals de Montblanc a l' Arxiu comarcal de Tàrrega'



Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
Eleonor Torró y Miquel
Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Birth
1507
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Marriage
Isabel Simón
Valencia
Ana de Villavicencio
Birth
Jerez de la Frontera, España
Death
1537
Joan Berenguer Desclergue
Death
after 1503
N. Prunera y Ferrer
Birth
Tàrrega, España
Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death
after 1579
Montblanc, España
(DC03)
Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death
Montblanc, España
(DC04)

(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.

She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.

(DC02d) Some literature assumes there was a Galceran I and a Galceran II, father and son, while, in fact, it was one and the same person who was active for many years.

(DC02) He appears in the fogatge of Montblanc in 1515.

(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.

She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.

Figure 28.11: Relationship between Maria Anna Desclergue (DC02dx1) y Villavicencio and Bonaventura Desclergue (II) (DC04) y Cortés

UNIVERSITÉ
DE
LOUVAIN
(1426-1797)
Nº 24

Figure 28.12: Lorenzo de Villavicencio ('Hispanus') appears as a student on October 15, 1557 in the registers of the Catholic University of Leuven.

We find, indeed, that Francesc Jacinto de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) was born from this union in 1640.[71]
Isabel Desclergue (DC05ex1) made a will on December 9, 1641, shortly before her death.
It seems that Jacinto Pedrolo was also a widower since, in 1656, Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) cites Rafael de Pedrolo and Moxo, son of Jacinto de Pedrolo, Squire, and Maria de Pedrolo. This Rafael de Pedrolo would therefore be the stepbrother of Francesc (DC05ex1y2). The relationship is confirmed by the fact that when he made his will, Rafael de Pedrolo ordered that he be buried in the first chapel on the left, in the church of the monastery of San Francesc de Montblanc, precisely where Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) also had arranged his burial spot.
Also, Rafael's testament was 'sagellat ab les armes de Don Francesc Desclergue.' Therefore, it contained, as a notary seal, the arms of Don Francesc Desclergue (DC05e).
The Desclergue-Jori (DC05ex1) families stayed indeed in a good relationship. Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) was negated as procurator by the widow of Jori[72]. Also, Jacinto Francesc Jori received on some occasions amounts owed to his father-in-law,[73] and Francesc Desclergue gave them amounts owed to him.[74]
Evidently, there was a remarkable mutual understanding between the parties involved.

28.4 Marriage with Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio and Children

Maria Anna Desclergue (DC02dx1) y Villavicencio was a daughter of Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d), a second cousin of Bonaventura Desclergue (II) (DC04) y Cortés and Ana de Villavicencio, as shown in Figure 28.11. Because both parents had the same name, the children took their father's full name, Desclergue y Cortés, preserving the illustrious 'Cortés' in their name.
The children born from this marriage were Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) (our ancestor), and Enric Desclergue y Cortés (DC05c).
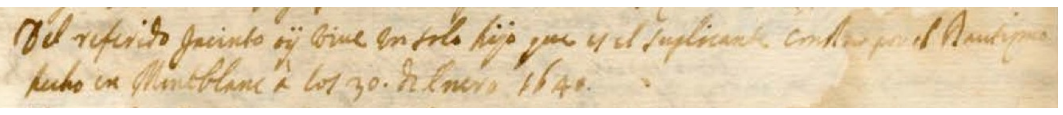
It can also be found that 'Mariana Dezclergue' , was 'esposa de Bonaventura Dezclergue' in the paragraph 'Francesc Picaire (1603), médico. Testigo en la venta de una viña, realizada por Mariana Dezclergue, esposa de Bonaventura Dezclergue, 22 agosto 1603. Protocolo del año correspondiente. A.P. de Montblanc,' in Jose Sanchez Real's book.[75] This 'Mariana' was indeed Maria Ana (DC02dx1), the daughter of Galceran Desclergue (I=II)

---

[71] Testamento de Francesc Desclergue (DC05e). Véase nota 67.
[72] Manual Notarial 3 517 (1632) November 22 Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[73] Manual Notarial 3 518 (1634) 23 ener. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[74] Manual Notarial 3 516 (1629) 21 dic. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[75] Jose Sanchez Real, 'Médicos y cirujanos de Montblanc, Siglos XV-XVIII' , page 159.



Del referido Jacinto oy vive un solo hijo que es el suplicante conforme por el Bautismo hecho en Montblanc a los 30. de Enero 1640.

Figure 28.13: This is a fragment of a handwritten text 'Notes relatives ales gestes militars del llinatge Desclergue' , by Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (born in 1641, son of Jacint de Pedrolo and Isabel Desclergue y Tous). It shows that Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue was the only child of Jacint de Pedrolo and that he was born in 1640, on January 30, in Montblanc. (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 2 page 1 view 1; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

traducidas del Idioma Cathalan: A los 30. del
Mes de Enero 1640. fue bautizado el noble
Don Fran.co Jacinto Joseph Antonio de Pedrolo y
Desclergue hijo legitimo y natural del Capitan
Don Jacinto de Pedrolo y de la noble Doña Isabel de Pedrolo y Desclergues su muger. Del qual Bau-

Figure 28.14: This is a fragment of a handwritten '1659 short description of the Desclerges by Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue' (born in 1641, son of Jacint de Pedrolo and Isabel Desclergue y Tous) (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 4 page 2 view 1; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

(DC02d) and Ana de Villavicencio.
Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio, wife of Bonaventura Desclergue, sold, indeed, a vineyard in 1603, as shown in Figure 28.2 on page 336.
Lorenzo de Villavicencio appears as a student on October 15, 1557, in the registers of the Catholic University of Leuven in Figure 28.12 on page 345. He was related to Ana de Villavicencio.

28.4.1 Don Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortês (DC05)

He was the third son of Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (DC04) and the eldest son of Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio (DC02dx1). Jeroni Desclergue was our ancestor and is described in much detail in Chapter 29. He is also known as Geronimo Desclergues or Geronimo Desclergues y Cortés.

28.4.2 Don Enric Desclergue (DC05c) y Cortês

He was the fourth son of Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (DC04) and the second son of Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio (DC02dx1). He would, just like his brother Jeroni (DC05) and his half-brother Antoni Desclergue y Ratera (DC05b), go to Flanders in the Spanish Army of Flanders. He is also known as Enrique Desclergues and is described in Chapter 33.

28.5 Don Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2)

28.5.1 Introduction

The documents in Figures 28.13 and 28.14 show that Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue was the only child of Isabel Desclergue y Tous (DC05ex1) and Jacint de Pedrolo. He was born at the end of January 1640, a few weeks after his father's death in early January 1640. Jacint de Pedrolo's brother, Francesc Onoffre de Pedrolo (born in Valls in 1606), had an illustrious military career, serving in Italy from 1635 to 1645, becoming a Knight of Montesa in 1646, a Brother of Montesa in 1650, a servant to Luis de Haro, and an Auditor of the Generalitat from 1659 to 1662. His military exploits extended to Flanders. Several documents show that the 'de Pedrolo' family was of very high standing. The complete name of Francesc de Pedrolo was Francesc Jacint Josep Antoni de Pedrolo y Desclergue, as can be read in Figure 28.27 on page 361 and Figure 49.38 on page 1004. Jacint was his father, Francesc Onofre de Pedrolo was his father's brother, Joseph d'Oleina was his father's uncle[77], while Antoni was his mother's cousin, Antoni Desclergue (DC06), Jeroni Desclergue's (DC05) son, who visited Montblanc in 1639-1640. All persons involved in the baptism wrote their initials on artwork that Antoni brought back to Deerlijk after 1640, as shown in Figure 49.37 on page 1003.
Rafael Joan Pedrolo was Jacint de Pedrolo's other son with Maria de Moxó, whom he had married in 1619. Later, Francesc de Pedrolo would name his son Antoni, again after Antoni Desclergue (DC06), in 1659. Francesc de Pedrolo and his son Antoni were both doctors of Law. His importance for the archives merits the respect of genealogists and historians and has been crucial in reconstructing the history of the Desclergues.
Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) was closely influenced by his grandfather, Francesc Desclergue (DC05e), the brother of our ancestor Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), given his father's premature death. Francesc passed the Law faculty at the Concepció College of the University of Lleida. Later, he graduated in Law and obtained a legal adviser position to the lieutenant in Montblanc, under the mayor of Catalonia.
Equally important, Francesc had a good marriage. He married Anna Maria Ratera Riber y Robuster, from a family of Tàrrega with

Joan Bernada Fill del S.or Joan Ber nada y de la senyora Teresa muller de
P. D.r Fran.co de padrola y descleregue

Figure 28.15: Montblanc, Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergues was godfather on the confirmation of Joan Bernada, son of Joan Bernada and his wife Teresa. (Book of confirmations, fol. 15, 'Llibre dels confirmats entregat a esta plebania per los señors consols de la present vila de Montblanch. Comensant als 14 de febre de 1656. En aquest llibre estan al principi tots los que trobaren despres de la crema del any 1642')

---

[77] Joseph d'Oleina was the son of Caterina de Pedrol, auntie of his father Jacint, and Gabriel d'Oleina

Figure 28.16: Montblanc (2018).

Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue
Birth 1640
Montblanc, España
Death 1700 (60y)
(DC05ex1y2)
Anna Maria de Ratera y Robuster
Death around 1688
Antoni de Pedrolo
Birth 1659
Montblanc, España
Marriage 1679 (20y)
Maria Anna de Vos
Blanes, Gerona, España
Marriage 1693 (34y)
Jerònia de Folcràs
(DC05ex1y2y1)
Maria Anna de Vos
Marriage 1679
Antoni de Pedrolo
Blanes, Gerona, España
Jerònia de Folcràs
Birth 1658
Cervera, España
Marriage 1693 (35y)
Antoni de Pedrolo
Death 1708 (50y)
Montblanc, España
Ciril de Pedrolo
(DC05ex1y2y1y1)
Felip de Pedrolo
(DC05ex1y2y1y2)

Figure 28.17: Two descending generations of Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue

an illustrious ancestor, Francesc Robuster (1544-1607), bishop of Elna and Vic. From this marriage, Antoni de Pedrolo y Robuster (DC05ex1y2y1) was born in Montblanc in 1659. Francesc soon established the important Desclergue archive. At the same time, he was influenced by his uncle Francesc Onofre de Pedrolo and also Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06), son of his granduncle Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), who visited Montblanc a couple of times.

Meanwhile, his son Antoni de Pedrolo (DC05ex1y2y1), who had Antoni Desclergue as godfather, studied at the prestigious College of Cordelles in Barcelona in 1670. For the education and upbringing of Francesc, the executors of the testament of Francesc Desclergue and the relatives Dimas de Llordat and Rafael Juan de Pedrolo were entrusted. This ensured Francesc received a comprehensive education and maintained the family's distinguished legacy.

Francesc de Pedrolo studied Laws and to defray the expenses of his studies,

'. . . at expense faciendas pro gradu doctoratus quem habere et tenere I hope . . . ,'

he sold in 1659, to the surgeon Antonio Moles, the land he had inherited from his grandfather, located in the Parellada, in the dyad of the Dimecres. The land was adjacent, in the east, to the upper ditch of the said piece.

About Rafael Juan de Pedrolo, we found the following reference in 'enciclopedia dot cat':

'Pedrolo, originari d' una nissaga cerverina, pertanyia a la branca familiar de Valls, i era fill de Rafael Joan de Pedrolo, cavaller, natural de Valls, i de Maria Desclugues (o Desclergue), dama de Montblanc.' in a description of 'Pau d' àger, comandante de l' orde de Sant Joan de Jerusalem (1659-1662).'

This reference is consistent with Chapter 36.5 and Chapter 36.5, namely that Rafael Juan de Pedrolo of Valls (Tarragona) had married Maria Declerque (DC07b) around 1651, around the time of the siege of Barcelona, when she visited Spain with her father Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06) and her mother, Beatrice Declercq (DK02byx).

In 1663, Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) already appeared in the documents as a doctor in Law and was married to Ana Maria Ratera, daughter of Paula Ratera de Riber.

Ana Maria de Pedrolo y Ratera was a very active woman. She often appeared to be caring for the family's possessions in Montblanc. In 1677, on a trip Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) made to the town, he leased the following properties for four years: the grounds of the Raft, which was a land located on the irrigation canal of the Parellada, half of the piece that Antonio Moles had in the Parellada, a field on the Valls, in the dyad of Dijous, and a part of the land on the edge of Viñals, behind the convent of Sant Francesc.

The Pedrolo family initially resided in Montblanc, and there is a fact that seems to indicate that their purpose was to remain there indefinitely.

His wife, Anna Maria Ratera, must have died around 1688. At this time, Francesc de Pedrolo served as the veguer of the town and veguería of Montblanc. He appointed Simón Gallart, a notary from Barcelona, as his solicitor to render accounts to the Rational Master for the amounts received during his tenure.

Francesc de Pedrolo married Isabel Ana Alba, widow of the notary of Montblanc, Jeronimo Alba, in a second marriage. Both Francesc and Isabel died around 1700. Isabel wrote her testament in 1701.

The son of Francesc de Pedrolo and Ana Maria Ratera was Antoni Pedrolo y Ratera (DC05ex1y2y1), who was born in 1659 and had, as mentioned above, Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06) as godfather. He married Jerònia de Folcr'as in 1693, who died in 1708. They had two children: Ciril de Pedrolo (DC05ex1y2y1y1y1) and Felipede Pedrolo (DC05ex1y2y1y2y2). However, it was his second marriage.

Indeed, Antoni de Pedrolo (DC05ex1y2y1) had first married Maria Anna de Poch or De Vos, as shown in Figure 28.28 on page 361, before he married Jerònia de Folcràs in 1693. This Maria Anna de Poch was the daughter of Joan de Poch (Joannes De Vos), who was born in Harelbeke in Belgium in 1633 as the son of Pere Llorenç de Poch from Barcelona and Isabella Verscheure and who died in Harelbeke in 1708, and of Maria Anna Portea y Roure, his first wife from Blanes, near Barcelona. Joannes de Vos married in a second marriage to Joana Declercgz (DC08b), a union that resulted in the maternal Desclergue branch described in Part X. In his younger years, Joannes de Vos lived in Barcelona, where his father originated.

Joana Declercgz (DC08b) was a daughter of Antoni Declerque (III) (DC07) and Martina Vercruyce (Ximenes de la Cruz) and, therefore, a great-granddaughter of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) and granddaughter of Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06). All this is highlighted in the ancestry descriptions in other chapters, in particular in Chapter 48.4.

We can, for instance, also cite here Jose Sanchez Real, who wrote the following.

'Antonio de Pedrolo. En 1680 ya era doctor en Leyes. En 1683 fue veguer de la villa y veguería de Montblanc. En 1698 fue cónsul. Casó con Maria Ana de Poch y Portea, hija de Juan de Poch, ciudadano honrado de Barcelona en la villa de Blanes. En segundas nupcias se unió con Jerónima de Folcrás hija de Agustín de Folcrás. En 1706 ya había enviudado. Hijo de este matrimonio fue Cirino de Pedrolo y Folcrás.'

Note that Sanchez Real assumes that Maria Ana de Poch had a mother 'Portea,' while a document found on Geneanet® suggests that her mother's name was 'Roure.' One of the two sources likely contains an error, as all other data are consistent. Sanchez Real may also have found other documents supporting his claim. Her full name was indeed Portea y Roure.

This connection means that contact between the Desclergues at Montblanc and the ones in Belgium existed until the end of the 17th century.

It was also in 1679 that Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) received a noble title. As found earlier and in Chapter 28.5, this came after meddling by Antoni Desclergue II (DC06), who came that year from Flanders and would, being a godfather to Antoni (DC05ex1y2y1), son of Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2), later also arrange a marriage between this Antoni and a bride the name Maria Anna de Vos.

It is essential, to begin with, to list important dates related to the 17th century and the life of Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue:

1604: Death in Flanders of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), his granduncle.
1631: Death in Flanders of Enric Desclergue y Cortés (DC05c), his granduncle.
1634: Death in Flanders of Antoni Desclergue (DC05b), his granduncle.
1640: Birth of Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2).
1640–1659 (but ended for Montblanc in 1652): The Reapers' War, the Separation War, the Catalan Revolt, or the Guerra dels Segadors. After the events, Catalunya's territory was divided between Spain and France, and the Pyrenees formed the border.
1641: Significant destruction of Montblanc by troops.
1648 (around): Estimated time of death of his grandfather Francesc Desclergue (DC05e).
1651: Visit to Montblanc and Valls by the family of Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06) and Beatrice Declercq (DK02byx), around the time of the siege of Barcelona.
1652: The big fire of Montblanc.
1656: The first contact of Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue with someone from his father's family.
1659: First diploma in Law.
1659: Marriage with Anna Maria Ratera Riber y Robuster.
1659: Birth of his son Antoni de Pedrolo. It was the year of the Treaty of the Pyrenees between Spain and France. Roussillon and the north of Cerdanya became French and would remain French. Antoni Desclergue II (DC06) visited Montblanc that year again and became godfather to Antoni de Pedrolo. He returned to Belgium in 1660 or 1661.
1669 (after): Diploma as Doctor of Law.
1673: He writes the first document, containing retrieved information about his family.
1679: He receives a noble title when Antoni Desclergue II (DC06) visits Spain after the Peace of Nijmegen. Antoni served as marriage broker for his Godchild Antoni de Pedrolo y Desclergue (born in 1659 at Montblanc as the son of Francesc Jacinto de Pedrolo y Desclergue and Anna Maria de Ratera y Robuster) and Maria Anna de Vos in Blanes, Gerona. See also Chapter 48.4.

Below, one can read notes written by Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue about his ancestors. He kept such information in preparation for attempts to receive a nobility title. In this context, it's understandable that he only mentions achievements and focuses on his ancestors and their siblings, not cousins.

28.5.2 Narrative of His Life

Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) served as the first archivist of the Desclergue family, pivotal in preserving their history in Spain. His contributions are crucial to what is known today about the Desclergue lineage. His grandfather, Francesc Desclergue (DC05e), was part of a generation active in Flanders, Belgium. Despite receiving limited first-hand information from his grandfather, Francesc did gather details from Antoni Desclergue II (DC06).

Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue became aware of the significance of his ancestry and pursued a noble title. This pursuit motivated him to collect data about his forebears, an endeavor made challenging by the aftermath of Montblanc's great fire and the destruction caused by soldiers. Consequently, Francesc had to search through ruins and could not rely on church archives for vital records, making his task monumental.

A detailed account of Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue's life is found in Santiago Alberti's article,[78] which serves as the primary source of information about him. Francesc, the only grandson of Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) and Catalina Tous, was born to Isabel (or Elisabeth) Desclergue y Tous and Jacint de Pedrolo. He was baptized on January 30, 1640, during a visit by Antoni Desclergue II (DC06). At that time, the chapel in Deerlijk had been constructed, as described in Chapter 49.

Francesc's father, Jacint de Pedrolo, died shortly before Francesc's birth, leaving him to be raised by his maternal grandfather, Francesc Desclergue (DC05e), who served as his foster father, godfather, and family chief. The godmother was Francisca Desclergue

---

[78] Santiago Alberti, "Esquema històric del llinatge Pedrolo," URTX Revista Cultural de l'Urgell, No. 7, 1995, pp. 49-88.

(DC05d). Due to the Separation War, Francesc grew up with limited knowledge about his family, influenced primarily by his grandfather. His mother remarried, but Francesc's relationship with his stepfather was strained, leading him to be raised entirely by his grandfather in Montblanc.

The Separation War severely damaged the Desclergue house, and Francesc had to relocate. In 1642, Spanish troops burned several houses in Montblanc, and Francesc was likely not well-informed about his granduncles in Flanders, as they were Spanish soldiers. His knowledge largely came from his later research. The family in Belgium became separated from those in Montblanc during this period. The Spanish soldiers, led by Marquess de Leganés, retreated from Tarragona to Lleida, causing more destruction.

The exact dates of death for Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) and Isabel (or Elisabeth) Desclergue y Tous are unknown. However, it is known that Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) defended Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue's rights in 1646, suggesting an early death might explain the limited knowledge transfer to his grandson. Francesc inherited his grandfather's properties in Montblanc and funded his education.

During the Siege of Barcelona in 1651, Francesc received a visit from his granduncle's son, Antoni Desclergue II (DC06), along with other family members. After the Separation War ended in 1652, Francesc visited his paternal relative, Francesc Onofre, in Madrid in 1656. Antoni Desclergue (DC06) revisited him in 1659.

Francesc studied at the Collegi de la Concepció University of Lleida and married Anna Maria Ratera Riber y Robuster from Tàrrega. They had a son, Antoni Pedrolo, who was baptized on November 20, 1659, with Antoni Desclergue II (DC06) as the godfather. Francesc became a doctor of Law and began an extensive search for his family's roots, relying on documents and information from Antoni Desclergue (DC06), as church records were unavailable. His work aimed to secure a noble title, focusing on recent ancestors and potentially selective in his findings to favor his goals.

In 1673, Francesc authored "Essay of the modern services of the houses of Pedrolo, and Desclergue, Catalan Knights, written for His Majesty," emphasizing recent ancestors. He avoided delving into older ancestors, possibly due to a lack of information or strategic selectivity. The family's name evolved from maternal ancestors, with ancient Desclergue ancestors initially being de Torró and, before them, Du Guesclin and Clergue.

Francesc received a noble title in 1679, coinciding with a visit from Antoni Desclergue II (DC06), who likely influenced this achievement. Santiago Alberti noted instances where Francesc either concealed or emphasized certain information, especially concerning his father's family, which was crucial for his noble aspirations. Francesc declared himself and his son Antoni as the only known male descendants of the Pedrolo y Desclergue family.

Until his death, Francesc continued collecting information on his ancestors, forming the first Desclergue and Pedrolo archive. Contemporary historians still reference his work as a primary source of knowledge about both families. Carlos II granted him noble privileges for himself and his descendants on December 11, 1679. The last known document of Francesc dates to 1685, with his death presumed a few years later. Additional references to Francesc can be found in Jaume FelipeSánchez's work[79], noting his tax exemption as a noble privilege in 1690 alongside notable figures. This highlights Francesc's selective documentation, which focuses on paternal lineage, which is important for nobility.

Francesc was alive in 1699, as evidenced by the document in Figure 28.29.

28.5.3 Descendants : de Pedrolo

To rephrase the situation, referring to Chapter 28.5, and Figure 28.19, we repeat that Don Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) married Catalina Tous y Monserrat. The couple had the following children: Isabel Desclergue y Tous (DC05ex1) and Amadeo Francesc Desclergue y Tous (DC05ey1).

Isabel Desclergue y Tous (DC05ex1) first married Jacinto Francesc Jori. The couple had two children: Francesc Jacint Jori y Desclergue (DC05ex1y1) and Francesca Jori y Desclergue (DC05ex1x1). The latter married Dimes de Llordat first and then Francesc d' Aguiló.

Isabel Desclergue y Tous (DC05ex1) remarried Jacint Pedrolo. The couple had one child: Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2), described in Chapter 28.5.

Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) married Anna Maria de Ratera y Robuster. The couple had one child, Antoni de Pedrolo (DC05ex1y2y1), and two grandchildren, Ciril de Pedrolo (DCo5ex1y2y1y1) and Felipede Pedrolo (DC05ex1y2y1y2). Their grandchildren's mother was Jerònia de Folceras.

28.5.4 Manuscripts Authored by Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2)

Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) authored the following manuscripts:

'Pro nobilibus Francesc et Antonio de Pedrolo, patre et filio, contra Ioannem de Poch, civem honoratum Barcinonae. Referente nobili Iosepho de Pastor & Mora .. in actis Golorons, Tota difficultas in praesentiatum eo sistit, an nobiles Franciscus de Pedrolo & .. gaudeant beneficio deducto ne egeant contra repetitione[m] dotis instatae per Ioannem de Poch . . . ,' authors Francesc de Pedrolo y de Desclergue (DC05ex1y2), Antoni de Pedrolo y Ratera, Josep Pastor and Josep Llopis, Published by Barcin, Ex typ. Iosephi Llopis .., 1686.

'Pro Syndico villae Montisalbi, contra nobil. Domnvm Franciscvm de Pedrolo y Desclergve (DC05ex1y2): referente nob. DD. Iosepho de Balaguer ...,' authors: Francesc de Pedrolo y de Desclergue, Carles Prima.[80]

'Scedula resolutiva o memorial en fet, a favor del batlle, syndich y universitat de Montblanch, contra lo syndich de Royals : a relacio .. Ioan Baptista Roca y Iulià .., not. Ribes,' authors: Cristòfor de Patau y d' Oller, Francesc de Pedrolo y de Desclergue (DC05ex1y2).[81]

'Pro Francesc de Pedrolo et de Dezclergue V.I.D. contra magnificos Linum Foch-ences V.I.D. et Rosam eius consortem,' authors: Francesc de Pedrolo y de Desclergue (DC05ex1y2), Linus Fochences, Rosa Fochences, Jacint Andreu.[82]

---

[79] Jaume FelipeSánchez, "L'actual seu console comarcas de la Conca de Barberà a Montblanc: Palau medieval construït per la família Marçal," Aplec de Treballs (Montblanc), No. 20, 2002, pp. 33-50.

[80] Montblanc. Ajuntament. Síndic., published by [Barcinonae] : [s.n.], [1689 o post.]

[81] Montblanc. Universitat.; Royals. Síndic., published by [S.l.] : [s.n.], [post. a 1675]

[82] Barcinone: Ex typographia Hyacinthi Andreu .., 1673.

28.5.5 Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) is also found in...

Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) is also found in the book 'Médicos y cirujanos de Montblanc, Siglos XV-XVIII, by Jose Sanchez Real,' in the following paragraphs:

'Antonio Moles (1654-1686), médico. En 1659 compró a Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2), bachiller en Leyes, unas tierras en la Parellada, diada del Dimecres (29 noviembre 1656).,'

'Antonio Llort (1663), cirujano. Al limitar unas tierras en la partida deis Vinyols, diada del Dijous, se dice que limita al este con una posesión de Fc° . de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2), al sur con un huerto de Antonio Llort, cirujano, al oeste con la acequia de la Horta y al norte con el camino que va a la balsa de M o n Mirall (3 marzo 1663) ,'

'Pablo Blet (1663-1689), cirujano. Testigo en 1663, también figura como testigo en el nombramiento de un procurador hecho por Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2), en 1664 21 septiembre 1664. Protocolo del año correspondiente. A.P. de Montblanc,'

'Juan Fau (1666-1703), cirujano. En 1666 figura como testigo en la venta de unas tierras que eran de Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) y esposa, que estaban situadas en la parte de Vinyols, diada del Dimecres, y que limitaban: al este con el monasterio de S. Francesc mediado un camino, al sur con el canal que llevaba el agua a la diada del Dimarts y al oeste con una acequia. 10 juni o 1666. Protocolo de Jerónimo Alba (1666) fol. 131. A.P. de Montblanc .'

Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) also appears as

'rector del collegia de la Concepcio,' in the work of Francesc Esteve y Perendreu.[83]

One can also find documents of Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue in the library of Catalonia:

Biblioteca de Catalunya, archive list of 'Fons del baró de Castellet Arxiu Biblioteca de Catalunya Agost 2011' , Pedrolo y Desclergue, Francesc de (Montblanc) documents in years 1684, 1686, 1688 (2 cartes), 1689 (5 cartes), 1690 (6 cartes + 1 document), 1691 (2 cartes + 1 document) and 1693.

28.5.6 Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue's Ancestral Highlights

Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue's narrative, in his quest to obtain a title of nobility, emphasizes the significance of his lineage through the Pedrolo branch and highlights his maternal grandfather, Francesc Desclergue (DC05e), father of Isabel Desclergue y Tous. Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) was the brother of our paternal ancestor, Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05).

For instance, Figure 28.21 illustrates the documentation he prepared regarding his paternal ancestors from the de Pedrolo family. Figure 28.22 indicates that Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) participated in the Corts in 1618, following the tradition of his brother, Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), and their father, Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (DC04), who had attended in 1599.

Moreover, Figure 28.23 contains a transcript of the letter of nobility granted by His Majesty the King to Francesc Desclergue (DC05e), the brother of Jeroni (DC05) and the grandfather of Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue, on September 7, 1634. This year is particularly notable in the life of Antoni Desclergue (DC06) due to the occurrence of a miracle at Deerlijk in Belgium, which subsequently led to the construction of a chapel around 1639, as detailed in Chapter 49.

The chapters 49.5 and 49.2.2 underscore the coincidence of these events, which may have facilitated the acquisition of a handmade retable from Spanish artisans, depicting a scene from Montblanc. It is plausible that the family adhered to the principle of noblesse oblige in their actions and legacy.

28.5.7 His Paternal Uncle, Francesc Onofre de Pedrolo y Desclergue

Francesc Onofre de Pedrolo y Desclergue should not be confused with Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue, as mentioned in Chapter 28.5. Francesc Onofre de Pedrolo y Desclergue was the uncle of the Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue referenced in Chapter 28.5; specifically, he was the brother of Jacint de Pedrolo.

Figure 28.30 on page 362 depicts Francesc Onofre de Pedrolo y Desclergue as a Knight and Alcalde of Montblanc. He was also a Knight of Montesa and served as a Military Auditor in 1659.

Figure 28.31 on page 362 illustrates that by 1679, Francesc Onofre de Pedrolo y Desclergue held the titles of Knight, Alcalde of Montblanc, and Knight of Montesa, and had been granted a nobility title. He participated in the Corts in 1626 and was the son of Rafael Juan de Pedrolo de Montfort, a Knight born in Valls who attended the Corts in 1599 and 1626. Rafael Juan was the son of Gabriel de Pedrolo from Cervera, who had become a Knight in 1571.

Francesc Onofre de Pedrolo y Desclergue was born in 1606. His mother was a member of the Desclergue family, although her specific identity remains unknown.

Further details on the life of Francesc Onofre de Pedrolo y Desclergue are extensively covered in Santiago Alberti's work.[84]

28.5.8 Desclergue Documents in Fons documentals de Montblanc a l' Arxiu comarcal de Tàrrega

For reasons of completeness and future reference, we here list the documents concerning Desclergue, as they appear in the article 'Fons documentals de Montblanc a l' Arxiu comaral de Tàrrega' of Gener Gonzalvo y Bou:

28.5.8.1 Appointments

a) Nomenament d' Antoni de Pedrolo y Desclergue com a procurador d' Antoni Vives, 1687, G., Sig Top. 43.

28.5.8.2 Judicial Documentation of the Patrimony

a) Reclamació de pagament d' uns censals contra Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue, 1687, G, Sig. Top. 43.

---

[83] Francesc Esteve y Perendreu, 'Mestrescoles i rectors de l 'Estudi General de Lleida (1597-1717)' , published by Editions de la University de Lleida, Lleida, 2007, ISBN 978-84-8409-454-8, pages 235-236.

[84] Santiago Alberti, 'Esquema històric del llinatge Pedrolo,' pages 49-88 of URTX Revista Cultural de l'Urgell, Num 7, 1995.

28.5.8.3 Personal and Family Documentation - Family History

a) «Libro de familia comprehensivo de las Casas de Pedrolo y Desclergue, y parte de las de Folcràs y Perelló», ss. XVII-XIX, V.
b) Mèrits de Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue, cavaller de l' orde de Montesa, 1659, G, Sig. Top. 52.
c) Epítom dels serveis de Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue, s.d., G., Sig. Top. 52.
d)Notes sobre la noblesa de Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue, s.d., G, Sig. Top. 52.

28.5.8.4 Personal and family Documentation - Inheritance Documentation a)Testaments de Pedrolo y Desclergue, 1523-1771, G, Sig. Top. 2.

28.5.8.5 Personal and Family Documentation - Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue

a) Nomenament de Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue com a jutge de la taula de la vila de Montblanc, 1680, G, Sig. Top. 52.
b) Privilegi de veguer de Montblanc a favor de Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue, 1687, G, Sig. Top. 52.

28.5.8.6 Desclergue Family - General Documentation of Assets

a) Nota sobre la documentació del mas Solé, 1633, G, Sig. Top. 43.

28.5.8.7 Desclergue Family - Transfer of Ownership

a) Compra i venda d' unes cases a Montblanc, 1598-1780, G, Sig. Top. 6.
b) Venda de dues peces de terra del terme de Montblanc, feta per Marianna Tous i Francesc Desclergue, a favor de Pere Moix, 1600, G, Sig. Top. 36.
c) Venda d' uns olivers del terme de Montblanc, feta per Francesc Desclergue i Caterina, la seva muller, a favor de Joan Tous i Magdalena, la seva muller, 1605, G, Sig. Top. 36.
d) Compra i venda dels masos Solé i Oller, de Rojals, 1615-1739, G, Sig. Top. 6.
e) Venda del mas Porcell, 1633, G., Sig. Top. 43.
f) Establiment de Bonaventura Desclergue d' una casa de Barcelona, a favor de Miguel Pinyol, 1710, G., Sig. Top. 6.
f) Venda de Ciril de Pedrolo a Josep Cabeça, de diverses peces de terra dins el terme de Montblanc, 1718, G, Sig. Top. 6.

28.5.8.8 Desclergue Family - Accounting

a) Llibre Major de Francesc Desclergue, s. XVI-XVII, V, Sig. Top. 6.
b) Llibre de Rebuts de la casa Desclergue, 1627-1773, V, Sig Top. 7.
c) Memòria de Francesc Desclergue sobre diversos pagaments, 1630, G, Sig Top. 36.
d) Apoca a favor de Francesc Desclergue, feta per les pubilles Jorís, 1640, G, Sig. Top. 36.

28.5.8.9 Desclergue Family - Equity - Debt

a) Creacions de censals i apoques, 1591-1780, G, Sig. Top. 7 1.3.2 Documentació judicial - Fragment d' una causa de la família Desclergue, 1597, G, Sig. Top. 36.
b) Causa entre l' Hospital de Montblanc i Francesc Desclergue sobre un censal que afectava al molí de Benaprès, 1624-1625, G., Sig. Top. 6.
c) Fragment de la causa entre Jaume Tost i Francesc Desclergue, 1629, G., Sig. Top. 43.
d) Plet dels jutges de la taula de la vila de Montblanc, 1645, G, Sig. Top. 52.
e) Causa entre Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue i Isidre Hospital, 1680- 1684, G., Sig. Top. 36.
f) Causa entre Francesc i Antoni Pedrolo y Desclergue, i Joan de Poch, sobre la restitució d' un dot, 1684-1688, G., Sig. Top. 6.
g) Causa entre Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue i Joan Rovira, 1697, G, Sig. Top. 36.
h) Causa entre Pedrolo i Damià Solanes sobre uns censals que afectaven els molins de Montblanc, 1711-1732, G., Sig. Top. 6.
I)Articulacions sobre la venda a Francesc Jacint Jorís, espòs d' Isabel Desclergue, del lloc de Pareres i el terme i castell de Bolet [s. XVII], G, Sig. Top. 36.
j) Plica de testimonis en la causa contra els curadors de les pubilles Jorís, 1634, G., Sig. Top. 36.
k) Citació judicial a Felicià Vives sobre l' herència de Maria Vives, esposa d' Antoni de Pedrolo, 1698, G., Sig. Top. 36.
l) Concòrdia entre Caterina Tous, muller de Francesc Desclergue, i Marianna i Elisabet Tous, germanes, 1600, G., Sig. Top. 36.

28.5.8.10 Desclergue Family - Correspondence

a) Trasllat d' una lletra del rei Pere III sobre els fets d' armes dels Desclergue, 1383, G, Sig. Top. 52.
b) Despatx reial a favor de Francesc Desclergue, 1634, G., Sig. Top. 52.

28.5.8.11 Desclergue Family - Family History

a) Arbre genealògic del llinatge Desclergue i del seu entroncament amb els Pedrolo, s.d., G, Sig Top. 52.
b) Mèrits del llinatge Desclergue, 1576, G, Sig. Top. 52.
c) Notes relatives a les gestes militars del llinatge Desclergue, s.d., G, Sig Top. 52.
d) Notes de Francesc Desclergue relatives al llinatge Desclergue, s.d., G, Sig. Top. 52.

28.5.8.12 Desclergue Family - Inheritance Documentation

a) Capítols matrimonials entre Jacint Francesc Jorí i Isabel Desclergue, 1627, G, Sig. Top. 43.

28.5.8.13 Desclergue Family - School and Academic Documentation

a) Privilegi de doctorat de Francesc Desclergue, 1587, G, Sig. Top. 52 1.3.4.4 Documentació personal.

28.5.8.14 Desclergue Family - Francesc Desclergue

a) Nomenament, per part dels ducs de Cardona, de jutges comptadors a favor de Francesc Desclergue i Miguel Joan Forner, 1598, G, Sig. Top. 52.
b) Rúbrica dels privilegis concedits pels ducs de Cardona a favor del Dr. Francesc Desclergue, s. XVII, G, Sig. Top. 52.
c) Comissió del duc de Cardona a favor del Dr. Francesc Desclergue, 1600, G, Sig. Top. 52.
d) Possessió de les terres dels ducs de Cardona per part de Francesc Desclergue, 1608-1609, G., Sig. Top. 52.

28.5.8.15 Desclergue Family - Bonaventura Desclergue

a) Privilegi de noblesa atorgat a Bonaventura Desclergue, 1618, G, Sig. Top. 52.
b) Rebuts per l' expedició del privilegi de noblesa de Bonaventura Desclergue, 1618, G, SIg. Top. 38.

28.5.8.16 Desclergue Family - Other documentation

a) Notícia de la venda dels castells i termes de Concabella i Grassa, a Gaspar d' Omós i Arnau Marçal, 1428, G, Sig. Top. 36.
b) Venda d' una peça de terra del terme de Tàrrega, feta pels esposos Francesc i Elisabet Jover, a favor de Joan i Tomassa Avisanda, 1583, G, Sig. Top. 36.
c) Notes sobre els béns rebuts per Paula de Ratera, per part de Tecla, la seva mare, 1635, G., Sig. Top. 36.
d) Notes extretes de llibres d' Antoni Moles, cirurgià, 1659-1674, G., Sig. Top. 36.
e) Memòria del governador de les baronies d' Entença sobre el lloc de Capçanes, s.d., G, Sig. Top. 36.

28.5.9 Antoni de Pedrolo (DC05ex1y2y1)

Antoni de Pedrolo (DC05ex1y2y1) was the son of Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) and Anna Maria de Ratera y Robuster. He was married twice. The reader may also check Chapter 48.4 about Joannes de Vos to situate the current section and use Figures 28.24 and 28.25 for guidance. He married first Maria Anna De Vos in 1679, who died in 1684. Later, he married Jerònia de Flocràs in 1693, was born in Cervera in 1658, and died in Montblanc in 1708. Maria Anna De Vos was the daughter of Joannes De Vos (born in Harelbeke in 1633 and dead in Harelbeke in 1708) and Maria Anna Portea y Roure. Joannes De Vos married, in a second marriage, i.e., after Maria Anna Portea died, to Joana Declercgz (DC08b). This marriage in 1685 came after meddling by Antoni Desclergue II (DC06). He would name one of his daughters after his deceased wife, Maria Anna de Vos (DC08bx3), born in 1693 at Harelbeke. Interestingly, in 1686, father and son Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) and Antoni de Pedrolo (DC05ex1y2y1) went to court, as studied by Gener Gonzalvo y Bou[85]. The document describes how father and son claim a dowry back from Joan de Poch or Joannes De Vos. In Latin, the document[86] states:
'Pro nobilibus Francesc et Antonio de Pedrolo, patre et filio, contra Ioannem de Poch, civem honoratum Barcinonae. Referente nobili Iosepho de Pastor & Mora .. in actis Golorons, Tota difficultas in praesentiatum eo sistit, an nobiles Franciscus de Pedrolo & .. gaudeant beneficio deducto ne egeant contra repetitione[m] dotis instatae per Ioannem de Poch ...'
In English, it says
'The nobles Francesc and Antoni de Pedrolo, father and son, against Joannes de Poch, an honored inhabitant of Barcelona. Regarding the nobles Josephus de Pastor and Mora in the case of Goloron and all the accompanying difficulties that that case involved, the nobles Francesc and Antoni de Pedrolo enjoy the benefit of not having to pay the demand for dowry requested by Joan de Poch.'
Therefore, we conclude that Maria Anna De Vos had died and that her widower claimed an ending of the payment of his dowry to his father-in-law. This decision must have been influenced by the fact that Joannes De Vos had married in 1685 in Harelbeke, in a second marriage to Joana Declercgz (DC08b), and would probably not return to Spain.
Although Joana Declercgz (DC08b) was a blood relative of father and son Francesc Jacinto de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) and Antoni de Pedrolo (DC05ex1y2y1), they probably wanted to keep their money and marry again, instead of seeing it disappear in Flanders.

28.5.10 Amadeo Francesc Desclergue y Tous (DC05ey1)

We can cite Josep Maria Grau i Pujol and Francesc Badia i Batalla[87]:
'Desclergue i Tous, Amadeu de. Doctor en dret per la Universitat de Lleida 1624), i veguer de Montblanc. Fill de Francesc Desclergue i de Caterina Tous.'
He was a brother of Isabel de Desclergue (DC05ex1) and son of Don Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) and Catalina Tous y Monserrat. Amadeo Desclergue (DC05ey1) was already in 1624 a Doctor in Law and bore the title of Squire[88].
He was Veguer of Montblanc. For this reason, he had to appoint a solicitor in Barcelona to act as his agent before the Master

---

[85] '1.3.1.2 Transferència de propietat' in 'Fons Documentals de Montblanc; a l' arxiu comarcal de Tàrrega' , the document 'Causa entre Francesc i Antoni Pedrolo y Desclergue, i Joan Poch, sobre la restitució d' un dot,' 1684-1688, G., Sig. Top. 6'

[86] Francesc de Pedrolo i de Desclergue (DC05ex1y2), Antoni de Pedrolo i Ratera, Josep Pastor and Josep Llopis, Published by Barcin, Ex typ. Iosephi Llopis .., 1686.

[87] Josep Maria Grau i Pujol and Francesc Badia i Batalla, 'Diccionari biogràfic històric de Montblanc (1155-1920), Fundació Martí l' Humà. Tot Conca. Carrer Josa, 6, Montblanc, 2008.

[88] Manual Notarial. 3 514 (1624) 7 marzo. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.

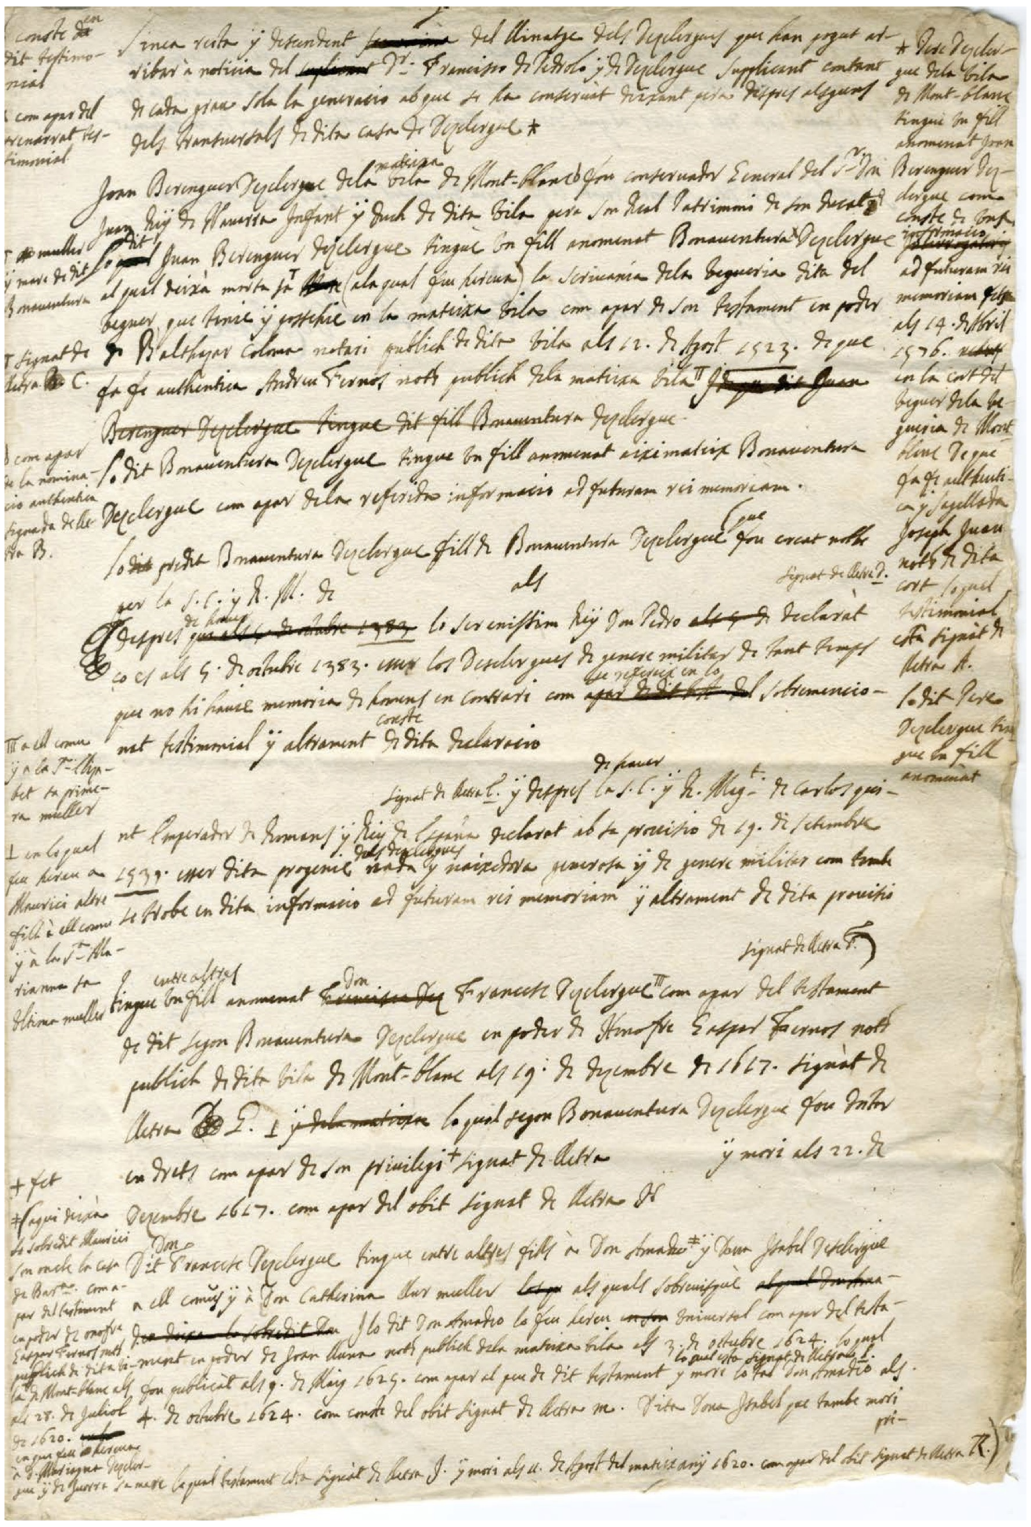
Rational, Lieutenant, and other authorities.[89]
Amadeo Francesc Desclergue (DC05ey1) would marry Isabel Ana Duch of Montblanc. They had no children.
His choice of liaison in Barcelona confirms his blood relationship with the Barcelona branch of the family. Indeed, the chosen one was Jerónimo Desclergue (DC02dy2), a resident of Barcelona and also, like him, a Squire. This Desclergue of Barcelona belonged to the branch of the same Desclergue family described in this book. Jerónimo Desclergue (DC02dy2) would die in 1633.
Amadeo Francesc Desclergue (DC05ey1) had already died in 1633 and formed the end of the Montblanc branch of Desclergue,[90] while the Desclergue line has continued in Flanders through Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), his son Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06) and subsequent bloodline until the present.

28.6 Earlier Connection with the de Pedrolo Family

In the literature, reference is made to another Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue who must, given his name, have been the son of a Desclergue and a Pedrolo. He should be distinct from the two persons carrying the same name in the Montblanc branch. We also don't know if this Pedrolo was related to the Pedrolo who married our branch. It likely concerns a Barcelona branch of the Desclergues. Given the known details about the military career of this Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue, he must have been born before 1620. In 1653, he married a certain Sabina Pedrolo from Barcelona at Montesa in Valencia.
The references[91] read as follows:
Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue was in the 'Companyó del comanador d´Onda (12-III-1657)' and was 'Capità d´Infanteria quan se li realitzen les informacions (1644); batlle de Montblanc (MOLAS, 1996, p. 211),' his wife was Sabina Pedrolo from Barcelona.

---

[89] Manual Notarial. 3 514 (1624) 27 sept. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[90] Manual Notarial. 3 518 (1633) 9 nov. Archivo Histórico Provincial (A.H.P.) Tarragona.
[91] 'El 16-VII-1653 se li donà llicència per a casar-se amb Sabina Pedrolo, de Barcelona. L´expedient en AHN, OOMM, casaments, Montesa, nº 153.'



Linea recta y descendent ~~[illegible]~~ del llinatge dels Desclergues que han pogut arribar a noticia del ~~[illegible]~~ Dr. Francisco de Pedrolo y de Desclergue Supplicant contant de cada grau sols la generacio ab que se ha conservat dexant pera despres alguns dels transversals de dita casa de Desclergue.*

Joan Berenguer Desclergue dela mateixa vila de Mont-blanch fou conservador General del Sr. Don Juan Rey de Navarra Infant y Duch de dita vila pera son Real Patrimoni de son ducat

Lo dit Juan Berenguer Desclergue tingue un fill anomenat Bonaventura Desclergue al qual deixa morta sa [illegible] (ala qual fou hereua) la Scrivania dela Veguería dita del Veguer que tenie y possehie en la mateixa vila com apar de son testament en poder de Balthasar Colom notari publich de dita vila als 12. de Abril 1523. de que fa fe authentica Andreu Ferrós nott publich dela mateixa vila ~~[illegible] dit Juan Berenguer Desclergue tingue dit fill Bonaventura Desclergue~~

Lo dit Bonaventura Desclergue tingue un fill anomenat eiximateix Bonaventura Desclergue com apar dela referida informacio ad futuram rei memoriam.

Lo ~~dit~~ predit Bonaventura Desclergue fill de Bonaventura Desclergue que fou creat nott per la S.C. y R. M. de signat de lletra D.

Despres ~~[illegible] de octubre 1383~~ de haver lo Serenissim Rey Don Pedro ~~als 4~~ als de declarat co es als 9. de octubre 1383. esser los Desclergues de genere militari de tant temps que no hi havie memoria de homens en contrari com ~~apar [illegible]~~ se refereix en lo del testimoniat testimonial y altrament consta de dita declaracio signat de lletra C. y despres de haver la S.C. y R. Magt. de Carlos quint Emperador de Romans y Rey de Espanya declarat ab sa provisio de 19. de setembre 1539. esser dita progenie dels Desclergues nada y naixedora generosa y de genere militari com tambe se trobe en dita informacio ad futuram rei memoriam y altrament de dita provisio signat de lletra F.

Lo entre altres tingue un fill anomenat ~~[illegible]~~ Don Francesch Desclergue com apar del testament de dit segon Bonaventura Desclergue en poder de Honofre Gaspar Ferrós nott publich de dita vila de Mont-blanc als 19. de dezembre de 1617. signat de lletra [illegible] E. 1 y ~~[illegible]~~ lo qual segon Bonaventura Desclergue fou doctor en drets com apar de son privilegi signat de lletra y mori als 22. de dezembre 1617. com apar del obit signat de lletra H.

Lo dit Don Francesch Desclergue tingue entre altres fills a Don Amador‡ y Dona Isabel Desclergue a ell comuns y a Dona Catherina sa muller ~~[illegible]~~ als quals sobrevisque ~~[illegible]~~ ~~[illegible]~~ y lo dit Don Amador lo feu hereu ~~[illegible]~~ universal com apar del testament en poder de Joan Llauro nott publich dela mateixa vila als 3. de ottubre 1624. lo qual fou publicat als 9. de Maig 1625. com apar al peu de dit testament lo qual esta signat de lletra L. y mori lo dit Don Amador als 4. de octubre 1624. com consta del obit signat de lletra M. Dita Dona Isabel que tambe mori pri-

y mori als 11. de Abril del mateix any 1620. com apar del obit signat de lletra R.

consta en dit testimonial

com apar del renovat testimonial

[illegible] muller y mare de dit Bonaventura signat de lletra C.

com apar de la nominacio authentica signada de lletra B.

a ell comu y a la Sra. Elisabet sa primera muller lo qual fou hereu a Maurici altre fill a ell comu y a la Sra. Marianna sa ultima muller

+ fet

‡ lo qual dexa lo sobredit Maurici son oncle la casa de Barta. com apar del testament en poder de Onofre Gaspar Ferrós nott publich de dita vila de Mont-blanc als 28. de juliol de 1620. ~~[illegible]~~ en que fou hereua a Sra. Marianna Desclergue y de Guerra sa mare lo qual testament esta signat de lletra J.

* Desde Desclergue dela vila de Mont-blanc tingue un fill anomenat Joan Berenguer Desclergue com consta de la ~~[illegible]~~ informacio ad futuram rei memoriam feta als 14. de Abril 1576. ~~[illegible]~~ en la cort del veguer dela veguería de Montblanc de que fa fe authentica y segellada Joseph Juan nott de dita cort lo qual testimonial esta signat de lletra A.

Lo dit Pere Desclergue tingue un fill anomenat

Figure 28.18: This is a fragment of a handwritten text 'De algun transversals de la casa Desclergue' , by Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (born in 1641, son of Jacint de Pedrolo and Isabel Desclergue y Tous) It shows what he knew at the time of these notes, about his ancestry tree without paying attention to side branches. (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 1 page 2; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

Francesc Desclergue y Ratera
Marriage 1587 Catarina Tous y Monserrat
Death around 1648
(DC05e)
Catarina Tous y Monserrat
Marriage 1587 Francesc Desclergue y Ratera
Amadeo Francesc Desclergue y Tous
(DC05ey1)
Anna Duch
Isabel Desclergue y Tous
Marriage 1639 Jacint de Pedrolo
Marriage around 1620 Jacinto Francesc Jori
(DC05ex1)
Jacinto Francesc Jori
Marriage around 1620 Isabel Desclergue y Tous
Death around 1633
Francesc Jori y Desclergue
Death 1629
(DC05ex1y1)
Francesca Jori y Desclergue
(DC05ex1x1)
Dimes de llordat
Francesc d'Aguiló
Jacint de Pedrolo
Marriage 1639 Isabel Desclergue y Tous
Death 1640
Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue
Birth 1640 Montblanc, España
Death 1700 (60y)
(DC05ex1y2)
Anna Maria de Ratera y Robuster
Death around 1688
Antoni de Pedrolo
Birth 1659 Montblanc, España
Marriage 1679 (20y) Maria Anna de Vos Blanes, Gerona, España
Marriage 1693 (34y) Jerònia de Folcràs
(DC05ex1y2y1)
Maria Anna de Vos
Marriage 1679 Antoni de Pedrolo Blanes, Gerona, España
Jerònia de Folcràs
Birth 1658 Cervera, España
Marriage 1693 (35y) Antoni de Pedrolo
Death 1708 (50y) Montblanc, España

Figure 28.19: Three descending generations of Francesc Desclergue y Ratera (DC05e).

TRACTATVS
DE
BRACHIO MILITARI,
ET PRISTINA NOBILITATE
GOTHOLANORUM,
PRIVILEGIJS, EXEMPTIONIBUS, AC PRÆRROGATIVIS, quibus potiuntur, Oraculis, aut Deciſionibus, Sacri Senatus Cathaloniæ illuſtratus, ac Prudentum reſponſis, ſeu Votis à præſtantiſſimis Juriſperitis, in Domibus Deputationis, & Civitatis Barcinonæ editis; Nec non eruditionibus, ex diſſertiſſimis Doctoribus Theoricis, Practicis, Humaniſtis, ac Hiſtoricis habitis.

AVCTORE

ANTONIO DE VILAPLANA
DOMICELLO, BARCINONÆ, ET ILERDÆ
Domiciliato, ac U. J.D.

BARCINONÆ:
SUMPTIBUS Ioſephi Moya Bibliopola, ANNO M. DC. LXXXIIIJ.

APPROBATIO NOBILIS FRANCISCI
de Pedrolo, & Dezclergue.

Ex commiſsione admodum Illuſtris, ac Reverendi D.D. Olegarij de Monſerrat meritiſsimi Cancellarij huiuſce Principatus Cathaloniæ, revolvi Librum inſcriptum, De Brachio Militari, & Nobilitate Gotholana, Authore Magnifico Antonio de Vilaplana Domicello, ac V. I. D. ubi diſcutit, quod controvertitur non ſemel, quis nobilis dici poſsit: Et tametſi plura ſint, quæ hominem reddant nobilem, ut virtus præcipuè, qua de re ubertim apud Tiraquel. Tractat. de Nobilitate, cap. 4. evenit tamen aliquando, ut Statuto, vel ex conſuetudine, nobili aliquid concedatur, nec explicatur quis nobilis, quis vilis, & deploratæ conditionis cenſeatur; quare in eam ſententiam crebriùs itum eſt, hoc eſſe in Iudicis arbitrio poſitum, ut refert ipſe Tiraquel. in d. Tract. cap. 0. num. 10, qui tamen num. 12. inquit, Iudicem arbitrari debere eum nobilem, qui nobilis, vel iure communi, vel ſtatuto, vel conſuetudine patriæ nobilis creditur. Hanc ſiquidem noviſsimam Tiraquelli doctrinam exornat, atque illuſtrat maximo cum ſplendore ipſe noſtras Antonius de Vilaplana in iſto ſecundo ſui ingenij partu, nec non perſpicuum reddit, quis in præſenti Provincia verus nobilis cenſeatur. Opus neceſſarium, vtile, atque perfectum; nihil à Fidei nitore, & morum candore alienum continens, nec Regalijs Domini noſtri Regis aliquod præiudicium inferens. Sic cenſeo, & quod typis mandari poteſt, ac debet. Barcinone die 10. Iulij 1681.

Doctor Don Franciſcus de Pedrolo, & Dezclergue.

15. Iulij 1681.

Imprimatur.

Monſerrat Cancellarius.

LE-

Figure 28.20: July 12, 1681, Doctor Francesc De Pedrolo y Desclergue received his noble title. It can be found in 'Tractatus de brachio militari et pristina nobilitate gotholanorum: privilegis, exemptionibus, ac praertogrativis' , by Antonio de Vilaplana, domincello Barcinonae et Liierdae, printed by Josephus Moya, 1684. His information letter of 1661 is shown in Chapter 79.

toda alabança y premio
Amigant par.
1. decis. 39. 37.
n. 40. pag. 837.

Esta Dama Doña Isabel Desclergue, y Tous, muger de Jacinto Pedrolo, fue hija de Don Francisco Desclergue ~~hijo por lo contiguiente, Abuelo materno de Francisco Pedrolo, y Desclergue, como se puede ver en la certificacion del Bautismo chalendado en el numero antecedente, en el qual fue su Padrino~~), y de Doña Catalina Tous su muger, todos tres naturales de la billa de Mont-blanch, como la misma Doña Isabel lo dize en su testamento, que otorgó en poder de Juan Albo, Notario publico de la referida Villa de Mont-blanch à los 9. de Setiembre 1641. y nieta de ~~Don~~ Buenaventura Desclergue, ~~al qual le hizo merced su Mag.d del titulo~~ de Noble, con ~~su~~ privilegio dado en Madrid à los 12. de Junio 1628. Con que en primer lugar, se trataria de la casa de Desclergue, y despues de la de Tous, por aver sido de tres servicios ~~[illegible]~~ ~~que fue de la de Pedrolo~~ el susodicho Francisco Pedrolo, y Desclergue; de suerte que por ellos, y por los suyos propios, le favorecio ~~a este cavallero~~ su Mag.d (de Don Carlos 2. que Dios gde) con semejante titulo de Noble, consta del privilegio despachado en Madrid à los 11. de Deziembre 1679.+ Despues de ~~cavallero~~ este Pedrolo quedar escrito en el Braço Militar de Cathaluña, como cava-ooo como consta de un testimonial que à instancia del dicho postrero Buenaventura Desclergue se substanció à los 14. de Abril 1576. en la curia del veguer de Montblanch Juan Roig y de Castellvi de que hizo fee Joseph Joan notario pub. de dicha Villa y escrivano de dicha la misma curia

7(tio de Galceran Torro Donzel en Pegueras domiciliado conste que una sentencia ~~publicada~~ hecha y promulgada por el ~~[illegible]~~ Conceller Jayme de Agullana ~~[illegible]~~ en Barçana à los 29. de Mayo 1507. de cuyo caballero Galceran Torro haze mencion Pegueras in Prac. civi. lib. 6. n. 3. Cancer p. 3. c. 16. n. 15. cum seq. Depues tambien Don Christophoro de Potau in Prac. Jur. n. 345. y hijo de otro Buenaventura Desclergue, y nieto de Berenguer Desclergue ooo el qual Berenguer fue por el S.r Rey Don Juan nombrado Contrerolador General de su Real Patrimonio en el Ducado de Montblanch

+ y registrado en la Cancilleria de Cathaluña ~~en poder de Balthasar [illegible] [illegible] legitimamente~~ y ~~de [illegible]~~ por Bernardo Pujol lugartz. en el officio de Prot.s in Privilegiorum primo fol. 173.

Figure 28.21: This is a fragment of a handwritten '1661 transcript of nobility letter Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue' by Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (born in 1641, son of Jacint de Pedrolo and Isabel Desclergue y Tous). It highlights the immediate ancestors of Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue. (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 3 page 9 view 1; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

38.

⊕ antes que por su Padre
~~gozasse del titulo de~~
~~Noble~~ Don Buena-ventura Desclergue
gozasse del titulo de noble recibio Don [illegible]
orden de Su Mag.d Dado en Barz.na a los 25
de Mayo 1599. del tenor siguiente

Con que, passando a tratar de los servicios hechos a Su Mag.
de Don Fran.co de Pedrolo y Desclergue por los de la linea maternal ~~deste cavallero~~, se pondera, que el supradicho
Don Francisco Desclergue, su Aguelo materno, ⊕ antes ~~que por su~~
~~Padre Don Buenaventura Desclergue gozasse del titulo de Noble~~
~~(del qual se le hizo merced a los 17 de Junio 1618. como se ha~~ ~~dicho en el numero antecedente, y consta del privilegio)~~ entró como cavallero en cortes, esto es, en las mismas, que Rafael Juan Pedrolo, primero deste nombre, su Aguelo paterno, fue congregado tambien como cavallero, que se celebraron en Barcelona en el año de 1599. segun lo escrito arriba n. 10. como es de ver en el libro de las constituciones deste año. Y no ay duda, que los cavalleros, para entrar en cortes, deven enseñar el serlo, de otra suerte, no son admitidos. Assi lo advierte Don Luis de Peguera, oydor de la R.l Aud.a de Cathaluña, en el libro de la Practica de celebrar corts generals, par. 1. cap. 16.
~~[illegible]~~
n. 7. pag. 53. ? De donde se sigue lo que escrive el Dotor Anton de Vilaplana, de Brachio Militari, cap. 6. n. 13. de que la Nobleza de la Familia, se prueva, si en el libro de los Nobles, se halla descrita. Y lo exorna, con muy bue-y el suplemento +
del Registro del Braço militar nas doctrinas ~~[illegible]~~ esta escrito en el libro ~~de los~~ deste Principado de propria mano Fol. 276. y assi antes de impetrar el titulo de Noble del qual se hablo X

? Y ya en el num. 8. dize lo mismo de los nobles

+Don Fran.co de Pedrolo
y Desclergue como tal cavallero

X en el n. antecedente

Figure 28.22: This is a fragment of a handwritten '1661 transcript of nobility letter Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue' by Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (born in 1641, son of Jacint de Pedrolo and Isabel Desclergue y Tous). It shows that Francesc Desclergue (DC05e), Jeroni Desclergue's (DC05) brother and Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue's grandfather joined the corts of 1618. (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 3 page 10 view 1; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

Al Noble, y amado nuestro, Don Fran.co Desclergue

El Rey

Noble, y amado nuestro. Haviendo entendido vos, por el Duque de Segorve, y Cardona, mi Lugartiniente, y Capitan General, en essos Principado, y condados, la ocasion de su partida à Perpiñan, y la que ay de assistirle en aquellas fronteras, para defensa de essa tierra, y servicio mio; muy cierto estoy, que correspondiendo à vuestra sangre, y obligaciones, lo mostrareis en esto (como os encargo) en que demas dello me porneys en mucho para mirar por lo que os tocare, y assi quise, que lo entendiessedes por carta mia. Datt. en Madrid à 7. de setiembre 1634.

Yo el Rey

V.t Vico Regens.
V.t Magarola Regens.
V.t Bayetola Regens.

V.t Bitemes Regens.
V.t Laurentius de Villanueva Secretarius.

Figure 28.23: This is a fragment of a handwritten '1661 transcript of nobility letter Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue' by Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (born in 1641, son of Jacint de Pedrolo and Isabel Desclergue y Tous). It is a transcript of the nobility letter addressed to Francesc Desclergue (DC05e), Jeroni Desclergue's (DC05) brother and Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue's grandfather. (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 3 page 10 view 2; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family).

Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death
Montblanc, España
(DC04)
Elisabeth Anna de Ratera
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Birth 1566
Montblanc, España
Marriage
Felipa de Montoya
Montblanc, España
Death 1604 (38y)
Oostende, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05). He also appears as Joan Jeroni, Jeroni and Joan
Felipa de Montoya
Marriage 1611
Jan T. Declercq
Marriage
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Montblanc, España
Death 1628
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
She appears as Felipa, Philippa, Philippe, Phlypothe , while her family name in her case and that of her relatives appears as Montoya, Montoye, Montoie, Montoi, Du Toi, Du Thoy, Thoy, Toi, de Thoo, ...
Francesc Desclergue y Ratera
Marriage 1587
Catarina Tous y Monserrat
Death around 1648
(DC05e)
Catarina Tous y Monserrat
Marriage 1587
Francesc Desclergue y Ratera
Antoni Desclergue (II)
Birth 1602
Barcelona, España
Christening 1602
Tournai, Hainaut, Belgium
Marriage before 1624 (22y)
Beatrice Declercq
(DC06)
Beatrice Declercq
Marriage before 1624
Antoni Desclergue (II)
Death 1651
(DK02byx)
Isabel Desclergue y Tous
Marriage 1639
Jacint de Pedrolo
Marriage around 1620
Jacinto Francesc Jori
(DC05ex1)
Jacint de Pedrolo
Marriage 1639
Isabel Desclergue y Tous
Death 1640
Antoni Declerque (III)
Marriage 1656
Martina de la Cruz
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1691 probably
(DC07)
Martina de la Cruz
Birth 1624
Dudzele, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1656 (32y)
Antoni Declerque (III)
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue
Birth 1640
Montblanc, España
Death 1700 (60y)
(DC05ex1y2)
Anna Maria de Ratera y Robuster
Death around 1688
Joannes de Vos
Birth 1633
Harelbeke, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1685 (52y)
Joana Catharina Declercgz
Harelbeke, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1708 (75y)
Harelbeke, West Flanders, Belgium
Maria Anna Roure
Joana Catharina Declercgz
Birth 1657
Deerlijk, West Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1676 (19y)
Juan Garcia
Ghent - Spaniard Castle, East Flanders, Belgium
Marriage 1685 (28y)
Joannes de Vos
Harelbeke, West Flanders, Belgium
Death 1708 (51y)
Harelbeke, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC08b)
Antoni de Pedrolo
Birth 1659
Montblanc, España
Marriage 1679 (20y)
Maria Anna de Vos
Blanes, Gerona, España
Marriage 1693 (34y)
Jerònia de Folcràs
(DC05ex1y2y1)
Maria Anna de Vos
Marriage 1679
Antoni de Pedrolo
Blanes, Gerona, España

Figure 28.24: Antoni de Pedrolo was a distant relative of his first wife Maria Anna de Vos. How he relates to her is shown in this ancestry relationship chart. Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06), Maria Anna's great-grandfather, was a cousin of Isabel Desclergue y Tous, Antoni de Pedrolo's grandmother. Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06) was also Antoni de Pedrolo's godfather.

Antoni de Pedrolo
Birth 1659
Montblanc, España
Marriage 1679 (20y)
Maria Anna de Vos
Blanes, Gerona, España
Marriage 1693 (34y)
Jerònia de Folcràs
(DC05ex1y2y1)
Maria Anna de Vos
Marriage 1679
Antoni de Pedrolo
Blanes, Gerona, España
Jerònia de Folcràs
Birth 1658
Cervera, España
Marriage 1693 (35y)
Antoni de Pedrolo
Death 1708 (50y)
Montblanc, España
Ciril de Pedrolo
(DC05ex1y2y1y1)
Felip de Pedrolo
(DC05ex1y2y1y2)

Figure 28.25: The two marriages of Antoni de Pedrolo.

Joan Berenguer Desclergue
Death
after 1503
N. Prunera y Ferrer
Birth
Tàrrega, España
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage
Maria de Vega Bazán
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Maria de Vega Bazán
Birth
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Marriage
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death
after 1579
Montblanc, España
(DC03)
Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death
Montblanc, España
(DC04)
Elisabeth Anna de Ratera
Francesc Desclergue y Ratera
Marriage
1587
Catarina Tous y Monserrat
Death
around 1648
(DC05e)
Catarina Tous y Monserrat
Marriage
1587
Francesc Desclergue y Ratera
Amadeo Francesc Desclergue y Tous
(DC05ey1)

(DC02) He appears in the fogatge of Montblanc in 1515.

She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.

Figure 28.26: The ancestry of Amadeo Amadeo Francesc Desclergue y Tous (DC05ey1). His grandfather Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (DC04) is our paternal ancestor.

5

[illegible] de la [illegible] de [illegible], se feren [illegible] en que [illegible] S. Mag.t [illegible] fora nobles als cavallers que [illegible] a dita [illegible] Jacinto de Pedrolo caballer fill de Rafel Joan de Pedrolo (assentat en les corts del any 1599 com [illegible] en lo llibre de les Constitucions de dit any) y pare del d.r Fran.co de Pedrolo anat à Salses per Capita de Infanteria Espanyola ahont mori com consta de la certificacio del Sargento [illegible] de [illegible]

Se seguex evidentment de que al dit D.r Fran.co de Pedrolo son fill li competex lo sobredit Privilegi de noble, y ab eixa conformitat li posaren en lo baltisme que fonch à 30 de Janer de 1640 Don Fran.co Jacinto Joseph Antoni de Pedrolo si be no ha usat de dit titol de Don per no haver trobat [illegible] lo tal Privilegi y volentlo fer traurer ha demanat à Fran.co Castanyes [illegible] official del Archiu Real de Cathalunya que averiguàs si era veritat lo que se ha dit informat de les Crides Reals y li ha respost afirmativament anyadint [illegible] en observança com [illegible] [illegible] Vellar y altres [illegible] de les noticies que dit Castanyes troba en lo Archiu Real acerca de les tals crides entrega una Nota al mateix D.r Pedrolo del thenor seguent

Real orde à 4 de Juny 1637. Crides del Virrey à 13 dels mateixos mes y any. Carta Real à 18 de octubre 1639. Dos crides resultants de dita carta la primera de les quals publicada als 27 de dit mes de Octubre y any 1639 y la postrera al 2 de Novembre del mateix any 1639.

Figure 28.27: This document describes the events in 1637, 1639 and 1640 connected to the noble title of Francesc De Pedrolo after the death of his father Jacinth, and also shows the complete name of the child and his baptism on January 30 in 1640, in the presence of Antoni Desclergue (DC06). The document is also shown in Figure 49.38 on page 1004 (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell De Pedrolo document 1640; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

S.r Don Antoni de Padrola y Desclergue

A catorse de Agost de 1679 havent primer obtinguda llicencia del S.r Bisbe de Gerona emanada de sa curia als vuyt de dit mes y any en la Vila de Blanes del mateix bisbat en presencia de mi Francesc Poch y Alemany pre y beneficiat de la Iglesia Parroquial de dita vila [illegible] in solidum dita llicencia, foran esposats lo S.r Don Antoni de Padrola y Des-

275 1680

Padrola y de Vetera

clergue jove en la Ciutat de Barcelona domiciliat fill legitim y natural del S.r Don Francisco de Padrola y Desclergue tambe en dita Ciutat de Bar.na domiciliat y de la S.ra Dona Maria Anna muller de aquell tots vivint de una part ab la S.ra Dona Maria Anna de Poch y Roure donzella filla legitima y natural del S.r Joan de Poch Ciutedà Honrat de Bar.na en dita Vila domiciliat y de la S.ra Maria Anna muller sua tots vivint de altre part testimonis foran lo R.t Joan Roure pre, lo R.t Gaspar Roig pre y lo R.t Esteve Roure pre tots beneficiats de la sobre dita Igla Parroquial de Blanes [illegible]

171

Figure 28.28: The marriage of Antoni de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2y1) in Blanes, Gerona, Spain on August 14, 1679, with Maria Anna de Vos (de Poch y Roure). The bride was the daughter of Joannes de Vos (Joan de Poch), born in Harelbeke in 1633 of a Barcelonese father, and Maria Anna Roure.

Jhs

Lo die 21 dels corrents Nre Sr fou ser-vit millorar de vida despres de onse deis de malaltia de segona pigota a ma neta Maria Antonia Jover y de Pedrolo, la qual se enterrà lo endemà en lo Convent de St Franch en la
Capella de Nra Casa, y perço dono a Vm esta noticia perque tambe las participe a sas Germanas y Cuñadas y juntament los aimeno lo cost de dit enterro, y aixi mateix la rebuda de 10 ll. 18 ll. y 11 ll. 14 d. per las rahons en dita rebuda expressadas, ab la con-fiansa que las 18 ll. 11 ll. 14 d. y set reals que faltaren a las vint lliuras entregarà
Vm al de esta donador quies Franco
Castello notari ames del cost de dit enterro que es 8 ll. 3 s. 10. conforme Vm veurà en lo compte del cost de dit enterro. Dea-ms as Monblanch y Abril als 24 de 1699.

De Vm ser q.s.m.b.
Don Franco de Pedrolo y Desclergue

Sr Bonaventura Jover
y Clusa

Figure 28.29: Letter from Francesc de Pedrolo i Desclergue to Bonaventura Jover i Clusa, with the notification of the death of his granddaughter Mª Antonia Jover i Pedrolo.[76]

Francisco Onofre de Pedrolo y Desclergues.
Caballero, Batlle de Montblanch, Caballero de Montesa.
Oidor Militar.
1659.

Figure 28.30: Francesc Onofre de Pedrolo y Desclergue in Francisco José Morales Roca, "Próceres habilitados en las Cortes del Principado de Cataluña, siglo XVII (1599-1713)", Ediciones Hidalguia, 1983, p. 299.

Pedrolo

Rafael Juan de Pedrolo y de Montfort.
Caballero, natural de Valls.
Cortes 1599 y 1626.
Es hijo de Gabriel de Pedrolo, de Cervera, elevado a la dignidad de Caballero el 6-II-1571.

Francisco Onofre de Pedrolo y Desclergues.
Caballero, Batlle de Montblanch, Caballero de Montesa.
Elevado a la dignidad de Noble el 11-XII-1679.
Cortes 1626.
Es hijo del anterior.

Figure 28.31: Francesc Onofre de Pedrolo y Desclergue in Francisco José Morales Roca, "Próceres habilitados en las Cortes del Principado de Cataluña, siglo XVII (1599-1713)", Ediciones Hidalguia, 1983, p. 28.

VOLUME II

Part VIII

The Desclergues in Habsburg Belgium

Chapter 29

Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) & Felipa de Montoya

29.1 Jeroni's complete Name

The complete name of Jeroni Desclergue (DC05) was Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés. The term 'Desclergue' was his paternal ancestry, while the phrase 'Cortés' was the ancestry of his grandmother, something he must have been very proud of. Jeroni was his first name, and he used Joan as a second name to distinguish himself clearly from his cousin, who carried the same name. Indeed, there were two Jeroni Desclergues at that time, and both can be found attending the Corts in Barcelona. In the Corts document, our Jeroni is called Jeroni Desclergue y Cortés, while the other is called Jeroni Desclergue. There is no doubt that each used a second name to refer to their respective forefathers from which they descended, namely Joan Desclergue, described in Chapter 26.0.1, or Galceran Desclergue, described in Chapter 25.1.3. Therefore, the complete name of the other Jeroni was Jeroni Galceran Desclergue (DC02dy2), described in Chapter 25.1.3.3.

It means his children could have referred to their father as 'Jeroni,' 'Jeroni Joan,' or 'Joan.'

This conclusion is the result of advice given by an expert on Spanish genealogy, Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal,[1][2] who also wrote a foreword to the second edition of this book.

Cortés Rosal reached the following conclusion:

He most certainly used a second name to call himself, thus marking the difference with his relative. In this case Joan used 'Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés'. It reminds me of the case of a Catalan man from 600 years ago called Pere Soler, who added Joan to establish a difference with a distant contemporary cousin. Therefore, he was named Pere Joan Soler. Obviously, your forefather wore the 'Joan' of his grandfather Joan Berenguer Desclergue.

Furthermore, Jeroni Joan Desclergue (DC05) served as the godfather of Jeronimus Joannes Declercq (DK04h), the presbyter at Loos, who was the son of Jan Declercq and Isabeau Braye. Jeronimus Joannes Declercq (DK04h) is shown in Figure 34.245 on page 606, Figure 34.249 on page 608 and is described in Chapter 34.13.7, Chapter 34.13.7.2, and Chapter 34.13.8.10.

29.2 Introduction

Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) is our patrilineal ancestor who arrived in Flanders, shown in Figure 29.1, from Spain and was married to Felipa de Montoya. Their son, Antoni Desclergue (DC06), is our forefather. Jeroni was likely born in Montblanc, Spain, in 1566. His parents were Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés and Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio. However, after his mother's death, he was raised by his stepmother, Elisabeth Anna de Ratera.

The reader may be interested in consulting Figure 28.4 on page 338. We shall show fragments from the Desclergue and de Pedrolo family archives as an introduction and as appropriate.

The fragment in Figure 29.2 says that Jeroni Desclergue belongs to the mother's side of Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue and that he was a brother of Francesc Desclergue (DC05e) and a son of Bonaventura Desclergue (DC04). He was one of the Knights who served in the corts of the year 1599, as found in the books of the constitution, shown in Figure 29.99, on page 415, 29.101, on page 416.

Jeroni Desclergue has assisted the King in Catalonia and Flanders, where he served as the captain of Spanish infantry and took part in the Siege of Ostend, where a mine blast killed him after 20 years of service in the army. Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) found this information in a statement by Archduke Albert, shown in Figure 29.2, written in Brussels on January 10, 1606.

The fragment in Figure 29.3 shows that Jeroni (DC05) and his two brothers Antoni (DC05b) and Enric (DC05c) were designated as 'Don,' not just 'Mossen,' and is consistent with the noble titles they have received.

Don Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), our ancestor from a Montblanc family, who arrived in Flanders in Belgium, was a Catalan soldier from Spain. His son Antoni (DC06), born in Barcelona but raised in Flanders, was equally a Catalan military and is described in Chapter 34. As described in Part VI and Part VII, and, in particular, Chapter refIII.10.e, they descend from Bertrand Du Guesclin[3] and Desclergues. The family inherited the name Desclergues from Pere Torró y Desclergue's uncle, Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, a notary.

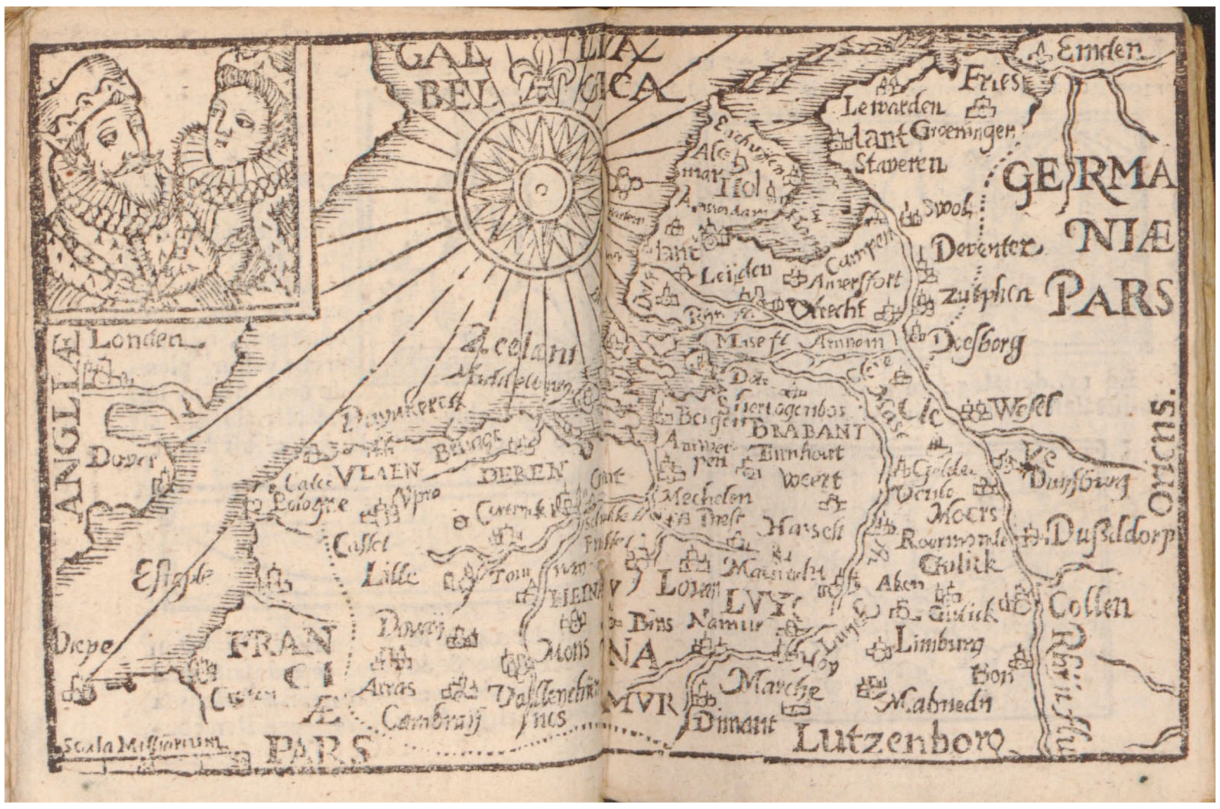
Jeroni Joan's parents were blood-related and had Regal, Conquistador, and Mercador blood. His mother, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio, was a daughter of Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d), described in Chapter 25.1.3. The latter was the son of a Mercador, Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d), described in Chapter 25.1.3, who has been involved with trade with the territories conquered by his relative Conquistador Hernán Cortés de Monroy in Mexico, Cuba and Hispaniola.

---

[1] Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal is a Venezuelan-Spanish historian and genealogist who earns all the credit for providing the author with the enormous amount of information about the ancestry of Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega. During an exchange with Jairo Eduardo Cortés Rosal, he elucidated the requisite skills and methodologies used by historians and genealogists when delving into the investigation of ancestral lineages, namely those delineated throughout the chapters of this literary work, particularly the ancestry of Hernán Cortés. The author made the deliberate choice to communicate Cortés Rosal's thoughts and ideas to the reader, as they possess a motivational quality that may resonate with those who have an inclination towards this particular field of study or those who want to gain insight into the complexities involved in researching one's lineage within a historical framework.

[2] Cortés Rosal created the Santa Fe de Bogotá Genealogy team, led by Fenita Hollman de Villaveces, in Bogotá. He is a descendant of Don Enrique de Guzmán, the Count of Niebla of the Ducal House of Medina-Sidonia. His grandfather is Juan Flórez de Ocariz, a Royal Notary in the Viceroyalty of New Granada in Santa Fe de Bogotá and was a great genealogist. He wrote the excellent work 'Genealogies of the New Kingdom of Granada.

[3] We have shown that Bertrand Du Guesclin descended from Hakim, who was, in fact, a Desclergue.



GAL BEL
LIA GICA
Emden
Fries
Lewarden
Hol lant
Groeningen
Staveren
GERMA NIÆ PARS
Zwol
Deventer
Zutphen
Doesborg
Campen
Amersfort
Leiden
Utrecht
Arnhem
Zeelant
ANGLIA
Londen
Dover
Cales
Bologne
VLAENDEREN
Brugge
Ipre
Cassel
Lille
BRABANT
Antwerpen
Mechelen
Brussel
Loven
Hassel
Weert
Maestricht
Roermond
Venlo
Moers
Wesel
Duisburg
Dusseldorp
Gulick
Aken
Limburg
Collen
Rhenus fluv.
Oriens.
HENA
Doway
Arras
Cambray
Mons
Vallenchines
Tournai
NAMUR
Namur
Dinant
Marche
LUYC
Lutzenborg
Diepe
Estaples
FRANCIÆ PARS
Scala Milliarium

Figure 29.1: A map of the Netherlands that Jeroni Desclergue should have had in his mind when he came to Flanders. Although it was defacto split into a Spanish-ruled part and an independent area, the Spanish still saw it as one Spanish area, partially disturbed by rebels. In particular, Holland is found safely behind a water barrier, while along the Leie and Schelde Rivers, one can discover Ghent, Kortrijk, Tournai, and Cambrai.

No menos sirvieron à V. Mag.d los Desclergues esto es los dela linea Maternal del suplicante pues su Aguelo Fran.co y vn hermano deste llamado Geronymo y el bizaguelo llamado Buenaventura Desclergues fueron tambien de los cavalleros que sirvieron en las sobredichas cortes del año 1599. como se ve en el referido libro de las constituciones.

No solo sirvio dicho Geronymo Desclergue à su Mag.d en Cathaluña sino tambien en Flandes siendo capitan de Infanteria española hasta que arremetiendo vn puesto sobre Ostende murio bolado de vnas minas haviendo servido 20. años. como parece por vna escritura de su A. Ser.ma el Cardenal Alberto Archiduque hecha en Bruselas à 10. de Enero 1606.

Figure 29.2: This is a fragment of a handwritten text 'Notes relatives ales gestes militars del llinatge Desclergue' , by Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (born in 1641, son of Jacint de Pedrolo and Isabel Desclergue y Tous). (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 2 page 2 view 1; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

servicio de V. Mag.d Don Geronimo, Don Enrique y Don Antonio Desclergue sus Tios Maternos; y que Berenguer

Figure 29.3: This is a fragment of a handwritten '1659 short description of the Desclerges by Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue' (born in 1641, son of Jacint de Pedrolo and Isabel Desclergue y Tous). (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 4 page 3 view 1; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

Figure 29.4: From left to right, we show images of Saint Hieronymus. First, a citation is shown from 'Van Patinir tot Ribera, de Heilige Hiëronymus in woord en beeld' , by 'Het Gulden Cabinet' , 2014, page 14. It's a picture of a figurine in polychrome oak, of Saint Hieronymus, made in the 16th century in Brabant. The figure is located at 'Museum M,' Leuven inventory code C/372, and the citation shows that Saint Jeroni was often depicted with a little lion. The depicted Sant Jeroni initially held a stick in his left hand, which can still be seen in his hand's posture. He has the script in his left hand. Then, we look inside the cavern in Jerusalem, where Saint Jeroni spent 18 years of his life, around 388 AD, and translated the Old Testament into Latin. The carving depicts him holding the bible close to his heart. Consequently, an image of Saint Jeroni in Rome and Sant Agostino in Campo Marzio depicts a lion holding the bible close to his heart. Finally, we show Saint Jerome and the Lion, Liberale da Verona (1441-1529). The picture shows how Saint Jerome removes a thorn from a lion's leg, similar to Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), who died to remove the thorn (Protestant held Ostend) from the Leo Belgicus in 1604.

Figure 29.5: San Jeronimo y San Agustin, by Alonso Sánchez Coello, 1531/1532 - 1588, shown at the chapel of San Lorenzo de El Escorial, 2022. (Declercq de Silva Archive)

LE MEMORABLE SIEGE
D'OSTENDE,
DECRIT,
ET DIVISE' EN DOVZE LIVRES,
PAR
CHRISTOPHLE DE BONOVRS,
DV CONSEIL DE GVERRE,
& Capitaine entretenu de ſa Majeſté.

HIS NITITVR ORBIS.

A BRVXELLES,
Acheué d'Imprimer chez Iean de Meerbeeck. 1628.
Auec grace & Priuilege.

Figure 29.6: Front page of a book about the Siege of Ostend, published in 1628. Jeroni Desclergue's (DC05) death at Ostend in 1604 is described in this book on page 585.

Le Maiſtre de camp Anthunez s'etant fort auancé vers la neuue fortification des Aſſiegez, auoit fait cauer vne Mine, a la quelle il donna ouuerture par le feu, au commencement de Septembre. Elle joua ſi a propos qu'vn Lieutenant Anglois de l'Ennemy nôme Epinethon; vn Sergent, & enuiron quarante Soldatz, y demeurerent ſuffoquez. Lôuuerture veue, vn Capitaine Eſpagnol, nommé Don Ieronimo da Cleriges s'auanca promtement auec ſa compagnee pour ſe fortifier ſur la breſche, ſuiuant l'ordre du Maiſtre de camp: Mais il n'y fut ſi tôt, que l'Aſſiegé, en faiſant voller vne autre, y enſeuelit tous vifz, Capitaine, Enſeigne, Sergent, & Soldatz.

Figure 29.7: Page 585 of the book shown in Figure 29.6. 'Le Maistre de camp Antuñes s' étant fort avancé vers la neuve fortification des Assiégés, avoir fait caver une mine, à laquelle il donna ouverture par le feu, au commencement de Septembre. Elle joua si à propos, qu' un Lieutenant Anglais de l' ennemi nommé Benethon, un Sergent, et environ quarante Soldats, y demeureront suffoqués. L' ouverture vue, un Capitaine Espagnol, nommé Don Ieronimo de Cleriges s' avance promptement avec sa compagnie pour le fortifier sur la brèche, suivant l' ordre de Maistre de camp: Mais il n' y fut si tôt, que l' Assiégé, en faisant voler une autre, y ensevelit tous vifs, Capitaine, Enseigne, Sergent, et Soldats.' Antuñes resided at Tournai, where Jeroni Desclergue resided too. His endorsement can be found in 29.93 and 29.94 on page 413.

Señor 1

Fran.co de Pedrolo y de Desclergue Cavallero Cathalan como consta del privilegio despachado à sus
Progenitores à los 6. de Febrero 1572. dize que
Rafael Juan de Pedrolo su Aguelo paterno fue uno de los Cavalleros que sirvieron à V. Mag.d en las cortes que se celebraron en Barz.na en los años de 1599. en las quales tambien fueron habilitados sus visaguelo y Aguelo maternos Buena-ventura y Fran.co Desclergue con un hermano deste llamado Geronymo el qual y otros dos her-manos suyos Enrrique y Antonio Desclergues sirvieron à V. Mag.d siendo capitanes de In-fanteria Española en Flandes adonde mu-rio el Geronymo al cabo de veinte años de servicios en el Sitio de Ostende à los 4. de setiembre 1604. bolado de una mina con la mitad de su compañia y de alli el Cap.n En-rrique su hermano salio mal herido en la cabeça, y con las tripas fuera de su barriga de que estuvo al cabo de su vida à cuya casa de Desclergue aunque se le otorgo el privi-legio de Don y nobleza à los 12. de Junio de 1608. toda via no pudo lograrse por falta de

Figure 29.8: This is a fragment of a handwritten '1659 short description of the Desclerges by Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue' (born in 1641, son of Jacint de Pedrolo and Isabel Desclergue y Tous). (Source: Arxiu Comarcal Urgell Desclergues document 4 page 1; Courtesy of Arxiu Comarcal Urgell and the de Pedrolo family)

Said Ben Alhakem Abu Otman Al Koraisini
Arab King of Mallorca
Jaime de Gotor
His Godfather was King Jaime of Aragon
Eva Roldán de Alagón y Luna
Miguel de Gotor y Alagón
María Inés Zapata y Alagón
María Teresa de Gotor y Zapata Alagón
Juan Martínez de Luna y Calamandrana
Lord of Illueca
Juan Martínez de Luna
Lord of Illueca y Gotor
Teresa Ximenez de Urrea
Álvaro Martínez de Luna
Death 1397
N. N.
Martín de Luna
Inés de Rojas y Manrique
Inés de Luna y Rojas
Gracián de Sessé y Luna
Juana Sessé de Luna
Diego de Vega Bonifaz
Diego de Vega y Sessé
Mayor de Bazán
María de Vega Bazán
Alonso Martín Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz
María Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
María Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Birth 1566 Montblanc, España
Marriage Felipa de Montoya Montblanc, España
Death 1604 (38y) Oostende, West Flanders, Belgium
Ramón Berenguer III of Barcelona
Birth 1082
Death 1131 (49y)
Douce de Provence
Birth 1090
Death 1127 (37y)
Ramón Berenguer IV of Barcelona
Birth 1131 Barcelona, España
Death 1162 (31y) Borgo San Dalmazzo, Italy
Petronila de Aragon
Birth 1136
Death 1173 (37y)
Don Sancho de Cerdanya y Provenza
Marriage 1168 Sancha Nuñez de Lara
Don Pedro Sánchez de Varillas
Lord of Barillas in Navarra
Urraca Gil
Sancho Pérez de Varillas
Birth Cerdanya, Spain
Estefanía Rodríguez de Azagra or Ruiz de Azagra
Rodrigo Ruiz de Varillas
Inés Godínez
Gonzalo Rodríguez de Varillas
Birth 1300 Monroy, Provincia de Caceres, Reino de Castile y Leon, España
Teresa Martínez Nieto
Juan Rodríguez de las Varillas
María Fernández de Monroy
Fernán Rodríguez de Monroy
The Lord of Monroy
Isabel de Almaraz
Leonor de Monroy y Almarez
Death 1450s
Martín Cortés y Paz
Knight of the Golden Spur
Alonso Martín Cortés de Monroy
Marriage 1431 Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage 1431 Alonso Martín Cortés de Monroy
She was a native of Jerez de Badajoz or Jerez de los Caballeros.
Alonso Martín Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage María de Vega Bazán Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
María de Vega Bazán
Birth Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Marriage Alonso Martín Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
María Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Birth Montblanc, España
Death after 1579 Montblanc, España
(DC03)
Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death Montblanc, España
(DC04)
María Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
Ramiro I de Aragón
King
Ermesinda de Bigoire
Sancho I de Aragón
King
Sancha Sánchez de Aragón
Bacalla de Luna
Lope Ferrench de Luna
Ximena Ferrench de Luna
Garcia Garcés de Boil
Second Lord of Boil
Pedro de Boil
Lord of Boil
María Ximénez de Urrea
Garcia de Boil
Lord of Boil
Toda de Foces
Pedro de Boil y Foces
Ermesenda de Cervellón
Pedro de Boil y Cervellón
Valencia
Several Generations de Boil
Catalina de Boil
Birth Kingdom of Aragon
Pedro de Paz y Gómez de Anaya
Birth Salamanca, Spain
He was a doctor of law and was at the king's court several times. He was a very aristocratic person.
Inés de Paz y Boil
Marriage Alonso García Cortés Salamanca, Spain
Alonso García Cortés
Birth Kingdom of Aragon
Marriage Inés de Paz y Boil Salamanca, Spain
Martín Cortés y Paz
Knight of the Golden Spur
Leonor de Monroy y Almarez
Death 1450s

Figure 29.9: Jeroni Jona Desclergue y Cortés, our forefather, descended from royalty through more than one bloodline.

Jeroni Joan's father, described in Chapter 28, was a son of Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán, a cousin of Hernán Cortés de Monroy (Medellin 1485 - Castileja de la Cuesta 1547). Jeroni was blood-related to Cortes along two lines, shown in Figure 49.91 on page 1021 and in Figure 49.92 on page 1022.

Jeroni Desclergue was also related to Royalty in Spain, as shown in Figure 29.9 on page 371.

When the author visited Rome for the first time in September 2001 and made his first oral presentation at an International Congress (ICA2001), the first church he visited was the Basilica of Santa Maria Maggiore. Coincidentally, this is the church where the remains of Saint Hieronymus rest. A figurine of the Saint is shown in Figures 29.4 and 29.5. The relics are located under the altar. The cave depicted in Figure 29.4, where Saint Hieronymus resided in Jerusalem for eighteen years to compose his Latin translation of the Old Testament, is adjacent to the Church of the Nativity. The carving depicted in the grotto shows Saint Jeroni holding the bible close to the heart. For instance, Saint Jerome, made by Artus II Quellinus the Younger 1625-1700, a Flemish sculptor, equally carries the script close to the core. Another figurine, in Rome, is shown in Figure 29.4.

Jeroni Joan Desclergue (DC05) was born in 1566 (most likely) and was named after Saint Hieronymus or Eusebius Sophronius Hieronymus, who lived from around 347 until September 30 in 420. Possibly, Jeroni Joan was born on September 30. Saint Jeroni was inspired by Saint Anthony's works (through 'de vita Antonii'). The association of Saint Jeroni with a miniature lion comes from the 'Legenda Aurea.' Saint Jeroni removes a thorn from a lion's leg, shown in Figure 29.4, after which the lion accompanies Jeroni like a pet.

In September 1604, Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) initiated the Spanish final success in reconquering Ostend by assaulting Sandhill, where a mine killed him. This event was highly symbolic to the Spanish, as Ostend was considered a thorn in the leg of the Leo Belgicus. Antoni Desclergue (DC06), son of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), must have associated his father's name with Saint Jeroni and his father's death in Ostend with the lion myth of Jeroni. The mentioned events related to Jeroni Desclergue and Antoni Desclergue are described in Chapter 29.5.28, Chapter 29.9, Chapter 29.11 and Chapter 34.

Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) was married to Felipa de Montoya. Jeroni arrived in Flanders in the year 1587 at the age of 21 and reached Kortrijk in December 1589 with Carlos II Coloma y de Saa.

Before he settled in the area of Kortrijk, he resided with his wife at the Spaniard Castle of Ghent. There, his first child, likely in 1588, Juana Desclergue (DC06c), described in Chapter 29.9.1, was born. She would later marry a Spanish military and died, unfortunately, in 1622 in Ghent.

The passage which describes the death of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) is shown in Figure 29.7 on page 370. It concerns 'Le Memorable Siege D' Ostende, Décrit, et Divisé en Douze Livres par Christophle de Bonours, du Conseil de Guerre, & Capitaine entretenu de sa Majesté, à Bruxelles, Achevé d' Inprimer chez Jean de Meerbeeck, 1628.' , Livre douzième (front page shown in Figure 29.6), page 585 (1604). The text in Figure 29.7 translates as follows.

'The Camp Master Antuñes' (who resided at Tournai, just like Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05))', having advanced enormously towards the new fortification of the Besieged, caved a mine, which he opened with fire at the beginning of September. The endeavor was so successful that an enemy English Lieutenant named Benetton, a Sergeant, and about forty Soldiers were buried alive when the blast opened it. A Spanish captain named Don Ieronimo de Cleriges' (Don Jeronimo Juan Desclergue of Don Jeroni Joan Desclergue (DC05) 'had seen the opening and advanced promptly with his company to fortify it on the breach, thereby followed the order of the Camp Master. However, he reached the breach so soon that the Besieged ignited another explosion, which buried all men alive, namely the Captain, the Ensign, the Sergeant, and all Soldiers.'

The document given in Figure 29.8 shows that Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) and his brothers were knighted and received the title 'Don' in 1628. In Jeroni's case, this was posthumus but must have been the reason why his son Antoni Desclergue (DC06), our ancestor, was referred to in the literature as a Catalan knight, as seen in Chapter 34. The posthumous use of the title is confirmed by the reference, shown in Figure 29.7, of Christophe de Bonours, published in the same year, 1628.

From the Urgell archives, the fragment in Figure 29.8 identifies Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue (DC05ex1y2) as a Catalan knight. It refers to noble titles received by his paternal ancestors in 1572 and the participation in the Corts by Rafael Juan de Pedrolo in 1599. It also refers to his maternal ancestors, Francesc Desclergue (DC05e), his grandfather, and Bonaventura Desclergue (DC04), his great-grandfather. It then states that:

'Francesc (DC05e) had three military brothers, Enric (DC05c), Antoni (DC05b), and 'the illustrious' Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05). The latter was a captain of His Majesty in Flanders in the Spanish infantry. Jeroni (DC05) died on September 4, 1604, in Ostend after 20 years of service. He was killed by a mine that had exploded and destroyed his company. Enric had been severely wounded during the event but survived. The brothers received the noble title 'Don' on June 22, 1628.'

29.3 His Roots in Montblanc

Interesting preliminary information can be found in Figures 29.10, 29.11, 29.12, 29.13, 29.14 and 29.15. Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) or Gerónimo Desclergues was a son of Don Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II) (DC04) and Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio. In Montblanc, in 1566, he was born in his father's town, or Barcelona. Nevertheless, he has resided frequently in Barcelona during his youth and early career.

His mother's name[4] was Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio (DC02dx1), daughter of Galceran Desclergue (I=II) (DC02d), a second cousin of Jeroni 's father, Don Bonaventura Desclergue (II) (DC04). Indeed, both descended from Pere de Torró y Desclergue (DC01).

Due to his familial connections and frequent visits to Barcelona, Jeroni was often considered Barcelonese, especially after he resided there while holding a prominent position in the service of the King, as described in Chapter 29.5.26.

The mother of Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was Ana de Villavicencio, the daughter of Pedro Núñez de Villavicencio and Catarina Cabeza de Vaca Mejias.

Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio, Jeroni's mother, was the second wife of his father, Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (DC04). Bonaventura's first wife had been Elisabeth Anna de Ratera, and she had given birth to Jeroni Joan Desclergue's elder siblings, Francesc Desclergue y Ratera (DC05e) (the heir of Bonaventura (DC04)), Antoni Desclergue y Ratera (DC05b), and Francisca Desclergue y Ratera (DC05d).

Jeroni Joan's full sibling was Enric Desclergue y Cortés (DC05c).

Consequently, the family consisted of 4 brothers (Jeroni, Antoni, Enric, and Francesc) and one sister (Francisca) and, after the death of Elisabeth Anna de Ratera, consisted of the two parents, Bonaventura and Maria Anna. The family heir was the eldest son, Francesc Desclergue y Ratera (DC05e), described in Chapter 28.3.1.

---

[4] The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.

Figure 29.10: Citation, page 71 of Santiago Alberti, 'Esquema històric del llinatge Pedrolo' , page 49 – 88 of URTX Revista Cultural de l' Urgell, Num 7, 1995.

The reference shown in Figure 29.15, was also found in 'Nobles del Principado de Cataluña,' [5] where we found
'Desclergues y de Cortés, Gerónimo. Doncell de Barcelona y oriundo de Montblanc (Barcelona, 13-VII -1599).'

Don Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés went to Flanders in the year 1587, five years after the death of Fernando Álvarez de Toledo y Pimentel, 3rd Duke of Alba, and 14 years after he governed the Netherlands. His arrival was actually during the governance of Alexander Farnese, Duke of Parma. His appearance was with the company commanded by the Catalan Lluís de Queralt (this family is mentioned in Chapter 29.4).

Later, he joined the company of Diego de Durango from the Tercio of Luis de Villar.[6] He was active in Holland, Flanders, and the North of France. He was wounded in Cambrai and still supported the capture of Amiens and its temporary defense.

Don Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés was granted the privilege of Noble of the Principality of Catalonia on July 13, 1599. This recognition of his status was further solidified when the Brazo Militar authorized him in the Corts of the Principality of Catalonia in the same year. These noble privileges were a testament to his standing and influence in the region.

29.4 The Impact from the de Queralt Family

Santa Coloma de Queralt must be studied in the framework of the Templars. For this description, we first refer to to 'Les ordres religieux militaires dans le Midi (XIIe-XIVe siècle), Cahier de Fanjeaux, Collection d'Histoire religieuse du Languedoc au Moyen Âge, 41..' Further, we will discuss how the Queralt family played a role in the early military career of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05).

Practically all of the Catalan Templar families settled at strategic locations along the traditional routes. Barberà is near the ancient Via Aurelia, which ran between Tarragona and Lerida. Gardeny is on the path that connects Catalonia and Aragon. Miravet and Asco are on the Ebro River communication route between the Mediterranean coast and the peninsula's interior (Tortosa-Zaragoza). Asco and Tortosa are on the path that connects Catalonia and Valencia.

Horta is at a crossroads of transhumance routes near the Ebro; Puigreig is on one of the roadways along the Rio Llobregat, which descended from the Pyrenees to Barcelona.

29.4.1 The Horta Commandery (Tarragona)

Santa Maria dels Angels d'Hortad'Horta de Joan is another sanctuary located at a crossroads in the south of Catalonia, through which, legally, a transhumance path connected the lowlands of the Levant coast (Sant Mateu, Castellon) to Aragon. Horta fell wholly under the control of the Temple. The sanctuary and the citadel served as the Commandery's capital and were situated at the base of an ancient monastic mountain. The sanctuary of Santa Maria dels Angels consists of an abbey and structures constructed between the 11th and 17th centuries. It is an excellent example of a single-nave church with a timber roof supported by diaphragm arches dating back to the Templar era. The apse is semicircular.

Horta had a sanatorium for pilgrims and travelers with a sanctuary dedicated to Saint James in the thirteenth century.

29.4.2 The Commandery of Gardeny (Lerida)

Throughout the Middle Ages, Lerida was a significant stop on the route to Santiago, where Catalan paths from the Pyrenees and the coast converged.[7] The pilgrims who disembarked in Tarragona or Barcelona and those who, coming from the Pyrenees, arrived

---

[5] F. Xavier Ricomà Vendrell and Salvador-J. Rovira i Gòmez, 'Nobles del Principado de Cataluña' , in 'Institut d' estudis Tarraconenses Ramon Berenguer IV, Secció de biografia i bibliografia publicació num 9' .

[6] Esquema Històric del llinatge Pedrolo, per Santiago Alberti, page 67.

[7] M. Delcor, 'Les verges romàniques de la Cerdanya i el Conflent en la Història de l'Art,' Barcelona, 1970, 73-75. The text discusses the pilgrims who traveled to Santiago de Compostela, Pilar, or Montserrat along the route that began in the Aude and Têt valleys, crossed Cerdanya, and followed the

Figure 29.11: Citation, page 80 of 'La baixa noblesa de la Conca de Barberà a l' edat moderna' , written by Salvador J. Rovira i Gómez.

Francesc Torró y Miquel
Death 1494
(DT04) Royal Secretary

Clementa Desclergue

Joan Torró y Miquel
(DT04b) He appears as a notary in Barcelona in 1444 and he only had daughters. He was involved in the administration of the Temple and the Hospital General de Santa Creu de Barcelona.

N. Hostalric

Don de Ferrer

Martín Cortés y Paz
Knight of the Golden Spur.

Leonor de Monroy y Almarez
Death 1450s

Cristóbal Sánchez de Badajoz
Knight of Jerez de Badajoz

Diego de Vega Bonifaz

Juana Sessé de Luna

Pere Torró
(DT03) He was a notary

Eulalia Miquel

Berenguer Desclergue
He was a scriptor in Santa Coloma de Queralt in 1417.
He was a man of the law and in 1439 he held the position of local deputy of Montblanc and its ward, which he resigned on January 26, 1440.
He must have been well connected with the courtly circles, since, on October 5, 1451 and from Tudela, the infant Joan, Duke of Montblanc, appointed him general curator of the Duchy of Montblanc.
He was a notary at Santa Coloma de Queralt from 1467 until 1483, together with his son, Ramon Berenguer Desclergue, who was a notary at the same location from 1471 until 1477.

Pere Torró
(DT03) He was a notary

Eulalia Miquel

Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
Marriage 1431
Ana Sánchez de Badajoz

Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage 1431
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
She was a native of Jerez de Badajoz or Jerez de los Caballeros.

Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.

Eleonor Torró y Miquel
She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.

Juan Prunera

Catalina de Ferrer

Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
Marriage 1431
Ana Sánchez de Badajoz

Ana Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage 1431
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy
She was a native of Jerez de Badajoz or Jerez de los Caballeros.

Diego de Vega y Sessé

Mayor de Bazán

Francesc Torró y Miquel
Death 1494
(DT04) Royal Secretary

Clementa Desclergue

Joan Torró y Miquel
(DT04b) He appears as a notary in Barcelona in 1444 and he only had daughters. He was involved in the administration of the Temple and the Hospital General de Santa Creu de Barcelona.

N. Hostalric

Alfon de Villavicencio
Marriage
Ana Sánchez Cortés
Jerez de Badajoz, España

Ana Sánchez Cortés
Marriage
Alfon de Villavicencio
Jerez de Badajoz, España
She was the aunt of Cristóbal and Pedro Sánchez Cortés Alcalde de la Santa Hermandad

Joan Berenguer Desclergue
Death after 1503
(DC02) He appears in the fogatge of Montblanc in 1515.

N. Prunera y Ferrer
Birth
Tàrrega, España

Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz
Marriage
Maria de Vega Bazán
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain

Maria de Vega Bazán
Birth
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain
Marriage
Alonso Martin Cortés de Monroy y Sánchez de Badajoz
Jerez de los Caballeros, Badajoz, Extremadura, Spain

Pere Torró y Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
(DC01) Alias Pere Desclergue, the heir of his uncle Ramon Berenguer Desclergue.He appears as a notary in Montblanc in 1501. A 1576 notary document to evidence the ancestral bloodline did not go any further back in time; therefore we have no reasons to assume that Berenguer was the patrilineal ancestor of Pere Torró y Desclergue (I), although he had the same name and was a notary in Montblanc too. He appears with his brother Galceran (Petrus de Clerico and Galcerandus Desclerico) in a notarial document of Agusust 1, 1494, testified by Raymundo Berenger Desclergue (his uncle) in Santa Coloma de Queralt. 1494 is when their father Francesc Torró i Miquel died.

Eleonor Torró y Miquel
She may be Eleonor Torró i Miquel or any of her sisters. She had no brothers.

Pedro Núñez de Villavicencio

Catarina Cabeza de Vaca Mejías

Bonaventura Desclergue (I)
Birth
Montblanc, España
Death after 1579
Montblanc, España
(DC03)

Maria Ana Cortés de Monroy y Vega Bazán
She appears one time as Catharina Desclergue in a document in 1576 (Montblanc) in which it would have been harmful to reveal her true identity being a Cortés. The same document also hides the ancestry before Pere Desclergue, although it mentions that Pere Desclergue was important and respected and was buried in the Monastery of Montblanc ... which means that his ancestry cannot have been unknown. In 1599, the family again used its full name, i.e. Desclergue i Cortés, as the political landscape in 1599 permitted it. Because she was of higher nobility than the rest of the ancestry tree, her descendants would proudly want to be referred to as Desclergue y Cortés.

Galceran Desclergue (I=II)
Birth 1507
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Marriage
Isabel Simón
Valencia
(DC02d) Some literature assumes there was a Galceran I and a Galceran II, father and son, while, in fact, it was one and the same person who was active for many years.

Ana de Villavicencio
Birth
Jerez de la Frontera, España
Death 1537

Bonaventura Desclergue y Cortés (II)
Birth
Montblanc/Barcelona, España
Death
Montblanc, España
(DC04)

Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio
(DC02dx1) The literature sometimes refers to her as "Maria Anna Desclergue y de Ojeda", due to a misinterpretation of a notary document of 1551 (Registro 3, 995, 1551, Fo. 261. A.C.A. Barcelona) first investigated by Sanchez Real and later copied by others. In fact, Maria Anna Desclergue y Villavicencio was the daughter of Ana de Villavicencio, who died in 1537 and was raised by her aunt Brianda de Villavicencio.

Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés
Birth 1566
Montblanc, España
Marriage
Felipa de Montoya
Montblanc, España
Death 1604 (38y)
Oostende, West Flanders, Belgium
(DC05). He also appears as Joan Jeroni, Jeroni and Joan

Figure 29.12: Five ascending generations of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05)

PRIVILEGIOS NOBILIARIOS OTORGADOS POR EL REY DON FELIPE III...

Desclergues y de Cortes, don Gerónimo. Doncell de Barcelona y oriundo de Montblanch. Barcelona, 13-7-1599.

Figure 29.13: When we look at 'Revista Hidalguía número 178-179. Año 1983' , we find that this exciting work presents an entire list of persons who have received a noble title by H.M. King Felipe II. One example is cited here as a facsimile, namely that of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés.

Desclergues

Gerónimo Desclergues y Cortés.
Caballero, natural de Barcelona y oriundo de Montblanch
Cortes 1599.

Figure 29.14: Citation from Francisco J. Morales Roca, 'Próceres habilitados en las Cortes del Principado de Cataluña, siglo XVII: 1599 - 1713, Volume 2' . (Note: This particular reference must be considered with care because it mentions family bonds between the Desclergues which are not correct and were refuted in other works)

Desclergues y de Cortes, Gerónimo. Doncell de Barcelona y oriundo de Montblanc (Barcelona, 13-VII-1599).

Figure 29.15: Citation from page 26 of Bibliografia Historica Tarraconese VIII, Edicio a cura de F.Xavier Ricomà Vendrell i Salvador-J. Rovira i Gómez, Institut d' estudis Tarraconenses Ramon Berenguer IV, Seccio de biografia I bibliografia, publicacio numero 9.

Figure 29.16: The tomb of the Lords of Queralt is in the Santa Maria de Bell-Lloch church. The tomb exposes, among many other symbols, the Templar Flowers that Antoni Desclergue (DC06) also chose as ornaments on the artwork he brought from Montblanc to Deerlijk in 1640, as described in Chapter 49.3.2 on page 985 and shown in Figure 49.33 on page 1001. Similar flowers and more classical Templar Crosses can be found in Figure 29.17 on page 375.

Figure 29.17: The Castle of Santa Coloma de Queralt in Santa Coloma de Queralt, Conca de Barberà, Tarragona. A heraldic detail is depicted in the main room (Photography Joan Fuguet. The image was taken from Joan Fuguet Sans and Carme Plaza Arqué[a]

from Gironde or Ripoll, arrived in Lerida after visiting Montserrat, Santes Creus, or Poblet, and from there continued to Zaragoza by way of Los Monegros. [8]

---

[a] Joan Fuguet Sans y Carme Plaza Arqué, "El linaje catalán Queralt-Timor y su relación con la Orden del Temple (siglos XII-XIV)," Medievalista [En línea], 30 | 2021, Publicado el 01 julio 2021, consultado el 22 julio 2021.

On a hill near the city, close to the Segre and the road to Zaragoza and Huesca, the Temple established the Commandery of Gardeny, one of the most significant Catalan lands. Documents demonstrate that Gardeny had a hospital for pilgrims and that a statue of the Virgin Mary (Saint Mary of Gardeny) was venerated in the convent sanctuary, which pilgrims visited with devotion.

Guerau de Caceola, canon of the cathedral of Lerida, bequeathed a hospital and properties in the city of Segre via his will in 1216.[9] Curiously, one of the clauses stipulated that the assets would transfer to the Holy Trinity (Hospital of the Holy Redeemer of Teruel) if the Templars violated their obligation to care for the impoverished and the ill.[10]

Another charter mentions the 'hostel' the Templars possessed next to their convent in Gardeny, near the road leading to Zaragoza. A letter written by King James II of Aragon to the Archbishop of Tarragona in 1314 provides evidence of the number of pilgrims attracted by the Virgin of Gardeny. The king informed the prelate that the many faithful pilgrims who had previously visited Santa Maria de Gardeny no longer did so due to the immoral lifestyle of Berenguer de Bellvis, who lived there with a concubine. [11]

29.4.3 The Barberà Commandery (Tarragona)

The first donations received by the Temple in Catalonia were the fortresses of Granyena and Barberà, situated at the limits of the first Catalan march. These two gifts were made possible by the generosity of the counts of Barcelona and Urgell. They were imitated by the nobles who settled on these lands: the Queralt-Timor, the Montargull, the Cervera, and the Aguilo. The territory of the house of Barberà (located at the head of the commarca to which it gave its name, the Conca de Barberà) was historically a passageway with its key communication routes.[12]

Santa Coloma de Queralt has a Marian sanctuary named Santa Maria de Bell-lloc, whose history is intertwined with the Temple of Barberà and its hospital and devotion.

Santa Coloma was briefly a Templar possession at the beginning of the 13th century due to a mortgage operation conducted by the local landowners, the Queralt-Timor. This noble family of the region supported the Templars, and some of its members joined the order.[13] Arnau de Timor, Dalmau de Timor, and Pere de Queralt, three siblings of this family, held significant positions in the second part of the twelfth century.[14]

The third, whose exploits earned him the appellation 'heart of oak,' joined the order in 1257. He was successively governor of Monzón, Miravet, and Gardeny and lieutenant of the provincial master. He participated in the subjugation of Murcia alongside King James I.

Santa Maria de Bell-lloc, located at a crossroads, was constructed by the lords of Queralt during the first half of the 13th century as their family pantheon. Pere, 'heart of oak,' was the first individual to be interred there.

Although there is no direct evidence of the church's affiliation with the Temple, it seems reasonable to assume that a prominent member of the order would not select a foreign burial site. As Philippe Josserand did for Villasirga (Palencia), we can establish a relationship between a Templar sanctuary and the local aristocracy, strengthened by its allegiance to the Temple.[15]

Another argument supports the relationship between the sanctuary and the Templars: it was administered by a community of donats placed under the authority of the lord of Queralt, a Templar at the time, as evidenced by documents from the middle of the 13th century.[16]

Initially, the chapel, which was later altered, had a rectangular layout with a flat chevet. It retains two rib-vaulted chambers on the interior, but the facade is the most significant feature. This wall's portal is a flamboyant archivolt with three arches supported by capitals and columns. The outer arches are decorated with oriental-inspired tracery, while the inner archivolt features heraldic and symbolic motifs. The Virgin is incorporated into the Annunciation and the Epiphany images on the tympanum. Three scenes on the frieze are particularly captivating: the first depicts a brother in prayer, the second a friar spreading his garment over a prostrate figure, and the third a warrior grappling with a lion. The first two have been interpreted as a 'symbol of the prayer obligations and protection of pilgrims proper to military orders.'[17] Similarly, the third, which appears in other portions of the church, depicts a heroic deed performed by Father 'heart of oak.'[18]

This scene, at the origin of Queralt's shield (a roaring lion), can likely be interpreted in less romantic terms and linked to the primary function of the Knights Templar: fighting the infidel.[19]

Due to its location at a crossroads, Bell-lloc was a suitable location for a Marian sanctuary. In this form of the pilgrimage site, a statue of the Virgin Mary was venerated. We are unaware of its fate.

29.4.4 The Recruitment of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05)

The Tercio de Queralt was a military unit of the army of Felipe II of Spain, levied in Barcelona in the year 1587 by the Catalan nobleman Don Luis de Queralt y de Icart. The Queralt family is described in Chapter 29.4. It was dissolved in Flanders at the end

---

Segre to Lerida.

[8] Fernandez, 'Cataluña y el camino'

[9] Miret, 'Les cases,' 59

[10] King Alfonso the Chaste founded the Hospital of the Holy Redeemer of Teruel in 1188 as the home of the Holy Trinity. See, for instance, Miret, 'Les cases,' 59.

[11] H. Prutz, 'Entwicklung und Untergang des Templerordens,' Berlin, 1888, 316, doc. 9. In that article, Berenguer de Bellvis is described as the last commander of the templars of Monzón.

[12] J. F. Cabestany Fort, 'Vías de communicación medievales en la cuenca del río Francolí (Tarragona),' in XV Congreso Nacional de Arquelogía, Lugo 1977, Zaragoza, 1979, 1203-1211. Also in J. F. Cabestany Fort, 'La marca de l'Alt Gaià : el castell de Queralt (segles XIII-XII),' in XV Congreso Nacional de Arquelogía, Lugo 1977, Zaragoza, 1979, 1203-1211. Also in Discurs de recepció de Joan-F. Cabestany i Fort com a membre numerari de la Secció Històrico-Arqueològica, llegit el dia 25 de maig de 2000, Institut d'Estudis Catalans, Barcelona, 2000.

[13] Fuguet, L'arquitectura, 228-235.

[14] Forey, The Templars, 421-422.

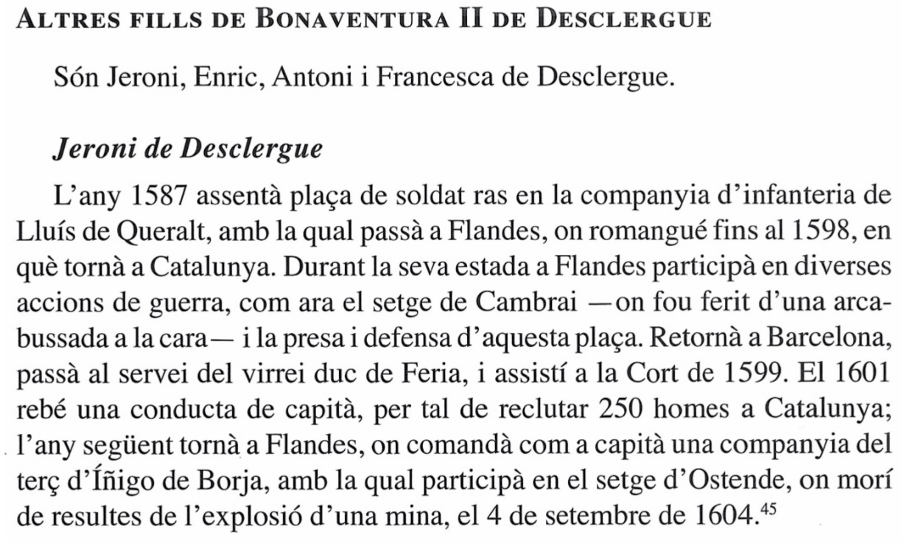
[15] Josserand, le Temple et le culte marial, 323.

[16] Fuguet, L'arquitectura, 228-223.

[17] Cid, La iglesia, 43.

[18] This interpretation is found in the panegyric that Father Conill dedicated in the 17th century to the Queralt family : M. Conill, Heroica vida y exemplares virtudes del Venerable Doctor D. Francisco de Queralt, Cervera, 1736.

[19] The only animal that the rule permitted the Templars to pursue was the lion (article 47). This animal represented the evil (Islam) that needed to be fought. Therefore, this interpretation is more plausible than Father Conill's (heroic-romantic) interpretation. Furthermore, the lion is frequently depicted as a symbol of evil in Templar iconography (even in the frescoes of the Templar church in San Bevignate, Perugia). See, for instance, M. Roncetti, M. Scarpellini, F. Tommasi, 'Templari e Ospitalieri in Italia. La chiesa di San Bevignate a Perugia,' Quaderni Storici del Commune di Perugia, 4, Milan, 1987, 129. See also, G. Gurci, 'La pittura dei templari,' Milan, 2000, 46-47.



Altres fills de Bonaventura II de Desclergue

Són Jeroni, Enric, Antoni i Francesca de Desclergue.

Jeroni de Desclergue

L'any 1587 assentà plaça de soldat ras en la companyia d'infanteria de Lluís de Queralt, amb la qual passà a Flandes, on romangué fins al 1598, en què tornà a Catalunya. Durant la seva estada a Flandes participà en diverses accions de guerra, com ara el setge de Cambrai —on fou ferit d'una arcabussada a la cara— i la presa i defensa d'aquesta plaça. Retornà a Barcelona, passà al servei del virrei duc de Feria, i assistí a la Cort de 1599. El 1601 rebé una conducta de capità, per tal de reclutar 250 homes a Catalunya; l'any següent tornà a Flandes, on comandà com a capità una companyia del terç d'Íñigo de Borja, amb la qual participà en el setge d'Ostende, on morí de resultes de l'explosió d'una mina, el 4 de setembre de 1604.[45] of 1588, incorporating its companies into other Tercios.

Figure 29.18: Citation of the middle paragraph of page 83, of the book 'La baixa noblesa de la Conca de Barberà a l' edat moderna' , written by Salvador J. Rovira i Gómez. The image shows what he wrote about Jeroni Desclergue. The book is a fascinating description of several noble families and their ancestries. The Desclergues are covered in the cited book from page 75 until page 86.

The Tercio was formed on the occasion of the preparation of the invasion of England by Felipe II, who formed the most significant number of Catalan companies to fight in Flanders under the command of Luis de Requesens y Zúñiga.

Alejandro Farnese, who would command the invasion, basically wanted Spanish troops for the campaign. The troops consisted of noblemen and bandits who were pardoned if they joined the armed forces.

A few of these Catalan troops formed the Tercio de don Luis de Queralt and the already existing Tercio de la Diputación de Catalunya and Tercio de la Ciudad de Barcelona.

Luis de Queralt recruited a Tercio of Catalans in 1587. The levy was in Barcelona, but volunteers from all over Catalonia appeared, some of whom were prestigious citizens. They reached Flanders via Italy. As described in Chapter 8.10, the Spanish Road at that time went from Genoa to Milan, Turin, Aiguebelle, Albertville, Annecy, Arinthod, Besançon, Baume-les-Dames, Epinal, Nancy, Metz, Thionville, Luxemburg, Namur, and Brussels.

Of the 18 companies that were created, historians know of 11 captains of the Tercio: Pau Bordoll, Felip Sacosta, Francesc de Cardona, Jeroni Descatllar, Diego Martínez de Guerra, Francesc de Marimon, Francesc Miralles, Bernat de Pinos, Guillermo Ramon de Pons, Rafael Terrades, and Luis de Queralt himself.

The intention was to recruit 2600 troops, which was not reached.

The Catalan soldiers were sometimes called Walloons locally because their languages sounded somewhat similar, unlike Castilian. Other Spanish soldiers sometimes called them 'Papagayo' because they sometimes mispronounced Castilian words.

The Tercio de Queralt, together with recruits from the old Tercio of Zamora (or Bobadilla), embarked in Tarragona on October 7, 1587, bound for Lombardy and Milan, to reach Flanders on December 7, 1587, through the Spanish Road, described in Chapter 8.10, in a journey that took almost two months.

Upon their arrival, around 17 or 18 companies and about 1900 soldiers were lodged in Warneton ('Guarneton') (near Ypres and Lille). Initially, they stayed with the old Tercio of Zamora, but this Tercio would later move elsewhere.

29.5 The Career of Jeroni Desclergue 1587-1604

29.5.1 Introduction

In the context of the lives of the children of Jeroni Desclergue, it is essential to explore the socio-political and religious landscape of Flanders through the example of the village of Deerlijk. The period preceding Jeroni's arrival in Flanders is marked by the era of Religious Troubles, effectively a civil war between supporters of the Spanish crown, typically Catholics, and those who opposed Spanish rule and Catholicism, known as Protestants or Calvinists.

We can read very interesting information in Filip Benoit, 'Protestantse Burgemeester in Deerlijk'[21]; and also in Filip Benoit, 'Deerlijk volgens het Twintigste Penningkohier van 1572[22]; and equally in Th. Sevens, 'Handvesten rakende de Wederdoopers en de Calvinisten der XVI-de eeuw in de voormalige kastelein van Kortrijk'[23]. Yet another reference is Filip Benoit, 'Deerlijk op het einde van de 16de eeuw'[24].

On May 19, 1581, Pieter Braet, the bailiff of Deerlijk, was convicted for his Calvinist beliefs. Kortrijk had been under Calvinist rule, orchestrated from Ghent, from February 12, 1578, until February 27, 1580. During this period, Braet supported the Calvinists and was subsequently convicted after the region was liberated from Calvinist control by the 'Malcontenten.'

However, the turmoil persisted in 1580, with Catholic and Protestant armies plundering villages like Harelbeke, Deerlijk, and Waregem. Frightened villagers sought refuge in nearby towns, such as Kortrijk, but urban areas were plagued by disease and hunger, leading to many deaths.

Many Calvinist supporters fled north to the Calvinist Netherlands, with most not returning even during periods of truce between the Dutch States and the Spanish Netherlands.

For Deerlijk, 1586 is mainly remembered as a year of starvation. Post-1586, relative calm returned, but the countryside remained vulnerable to plunder by filibusters and buccaneers, especially from Ostend and Sluis, as previous conflicts had depopulated West Flanders. Farming slowly reestablished, and new family names appeared in records, indicating an influx of immigrants from Wal-

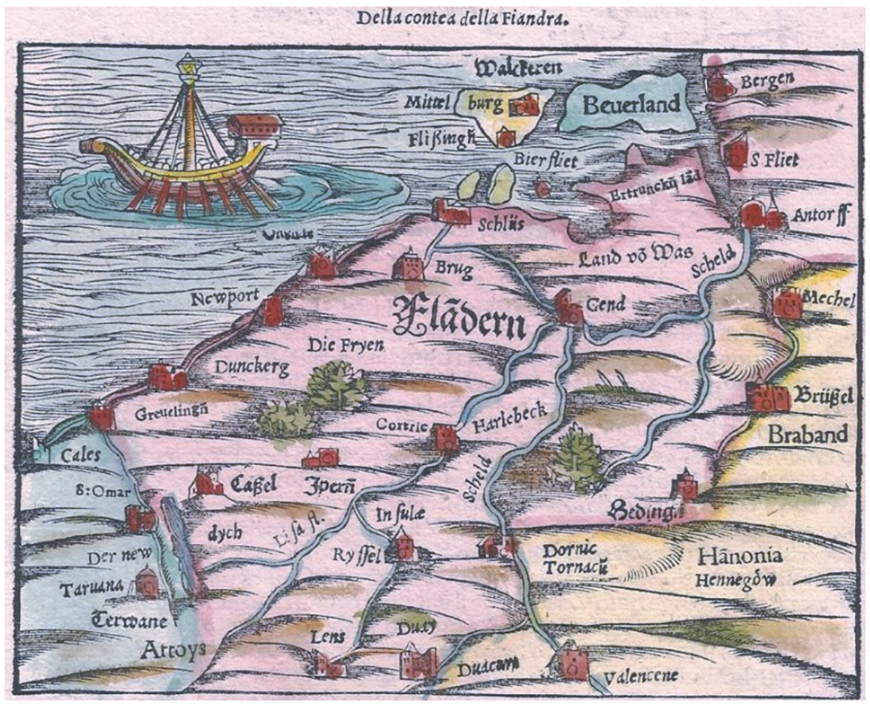
---

[21] Derlike, 11de jaargang, nr 3, 1989

[22] Derlike XI, 1, 1988

[23] Handelingen Geschied- en Oudheidkundige Kring Kortrijk (1921), Rijksarchief Kortrijk, Fonds de Plotho, nr. 548.

[24] Derlike, 13de jaargang, nr 2, 1990.



Della contea della Fiandra.
Walcheren
Mittel burg
Beuerland
Bergen
Flißingh
Bierflict
S Fliet
Schlüs
Antorff
Brug
Land võ Was Scheld
Newport
Flãdern
Gend
Mechel
Die Fryen
Dunckerg
Brüßel
Greuelingẽ
Braband
Cortric
Harlebeck
Cales
S.Omar
Caßel
Iperñ
Scheld
Beding dych
In sulæ
Ryſſel
Dornic
Tornack
Hãnonia
Hennegöw
Der new Taruana
Terwane
Artoys
Lens
Duay
Ducam
Valencene

Figure 29.19: 1580, Flanders or Della Gallia in 'Cosmographia' of Sebastian Münster. This simplified representation of Flanders on which Kortrijk (Cortric), Harelbeke (Harlebeck), Calais (Cales), Ostend (Ostende), Arras (Artoys), Bruges (Brug), Sluis (Schlüs), Ghent (Gend), Tournai (Dornic / Tornack), Middelberug (Mittel burg) and Valenciennes (Valencene), to name a few, are depicted, must have been imprinted in Jeroni's visual imagination of the place he was going to after he left Spain.

Duynkercke
De groote moere
Uuerne
Dixmude
Maldegem Velt
camp Velt
Wynoxberge
Rousselare
Tielt
Gandavũ Gendt
Poperinge
Cassel
Iperen
Meenene
Cortrycke
Oudenarde
Belle Meessene
Armentiers

Figure 29.20: 1600, a map of Flanders by Pieter van der Keere on which several places of interest are visible such as Ghent in the east. Following the Leie River, we can also retrieve Deerlijk, Harelbeke, Kortrijk, Menin. In the West, we can see Ypres, Langemarck and many other sites.

Figure 29.21: Close up of a painting by Peter Snayers (1573-1647), dating from 1601-1615, of the Siege of Ostend. The original painting is from the Friedenstein Castle collection, inventory number SG 716. The work offers an impression of how the Spanish military in command looked.

lonia and other regions of the Spanish Netherlands. Notable new family names in Deerlijk included 'de Bare,' 'Vienne,' 'del Mote,' 'Cottenije,' 'Mahieu,' 'Morthier,' 'de le Cluse,' and others, as documented by E. Ducatteeuw and M. Debrouwere.[25] Additionally, names like 'Du Can,' 'De Cotegnie,' 'Outliers,' and 'Sermont' became common, with estimates suggesting that 40% of Deerlijk's family names were newcomers from the South of the Spanish Netherlands.

Despite this influx, some families in Deerlijk have roots tracing back to the 15th century, as observed by Filip Benoit.[26] Names such as Christiaens, van Wijnsberghe, Vander Cruyssen, and de Muynck may descend from these original inhabitants. Other names that gained popularity before the religious struggles included Vanden Berghe, De Backere, de Meestere, and de Leersnijder. Modern Deerlijk, however, features prevalent names like Vanden Broucke, Bossuyt, Vervaecke, Desmet, De Jaeger, and Vanden Bogaerde, which were less common in the 1600s.

The economic landscape of Deerlijk before the religious conflicts was dominated by wealthy families such as Marie Hameiden (possibly transformed into Ameye), and families like Vander Cruuse, van Windsberge, van Dale, van House, and Variseele.

The impact of the religious conflict on Deerlijk was significant, driven by the influence of powerful figures like Willem de Kettule, Lord of Assche, and his associates François de Hembyse and Philip van der Gracht, who were instrumental in establishing the Calvinist republic in Ghent and had properties in Deerlijk. The inhabitants were likely compelled to support the Calvinist cause when Kortrijk was occupied in the spring of 1578, although most likely remained Catholic, as was common in rural areas.

The repopulation of the area commenced after the Catholics recaptured Antwerp in 1585. Jeroni Joan Desclergue (DC05) arrived in Flanders in 1587 amid relative stabilization. The population began to return to the countryside, resuming agricultural activities. By the 1590s, a semblance of normalcy had returned, although the devastation of the previous decade meant that farming took time to reestablish.

Many immigrants from the southern Spanish Netherlands contributed to this repopulation, driven by the nobles' need for agricultural production and rental income. In 1586, the year before Jeroni's arrival, the region suffered from a wolf plague, poor harvests, and high prices for consumables, with food production in Deerlijk estimated to have fallen to 10% of pre-conflict levels. Robbery gangs ravaged the area, and survival was the primary concern for the roughly 300 inhabitants of Deerlijk. The plague also struck the region, notably from 1579 to 1583 and 1597 to 1599.

As André Woestijn notes,[27] from 1584, Spanish troops increased in number in preparation for an invasion of England with the Spanish Armada, planned for 1588.

Around 19 Spanish companies, mostly cavalry, passed through Harelbeke, utilizing its bridge over the Leie River, the only one between Kortrijk and Deinze, making it a strategic point for military and robbers.

In general, military presence was unwelcome in cities, except for protection purposes. Post-16th-century religious troubles, soldiers were primarily housed in barracks outside cities, with only a few privileged military personnel residing within city walls, often purchasing properties nearby.

Jeroni Desclergue's property acquisition in Deerlijk, likely in the late 1590s, and detailed in Chapter 29.12, aligns with this trend. His property was part of the Overacker Manor, a strategic base for the military due to its extensive holdings in Harelbeke, Deerlijk, Vichte, and surrounding areas. Jeroni, a military figure documented in sources like Santiago Alberti's 'Esquema històric del llinatge Pedrolo'[28] and Antonio Carnero's 'Historias de las guerras civiles di Flandes' (1625), served in Flanders from 1587-1598 and 1601-1604, participating in significant military engagements. He was injured at the Siege of Cambrai but continued to contribute to military efforts despite his wounds.

Jeroni's departure from Montblanc in 1586 or 1587 brought him to Flanders during the aftermath of the Duke of Alba's terror and the Dutch Revolt, a period marked by severe reprisals and widespread displacement.

By 1586, the Eighty Years' War had transitioned into a more structured conflict between the Protestant Dutch States and the Catholic Spanish Netherlands. Jeroni initially operated in eastern regions like Geldern before moving to West Flanders, preparing for the planned but unrealized Spanish Armada invasion of England. He eventually settled into a relatively stable routine, participating in summer military campaigns and spending winters at his base in Kortrijk.

29.5.2 The Influence of Carlos Coloma and Luis del Villar

Jeroni Desclergue's wife, Felipa de Montoya, was related to Carlos Coloma de Saa, as described in Chapter 29.10.11.

It is relevant to check the document in Figure 29.113 on page 420, dating from 1546, by a relative of Carlos Coloma, notary Bartomeu Joan Coloma of Montblanc. The document refers to Joan Berenguer Desclergue (DC02), the great-grandfather of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), described in Chapter 26.0.1.

The citation shown in Figures 29.24 and 29.25 comes from Luis del Villar, Maestro de Campo, and highlights the most critical military achievements of Jeroni Desclergue until 1598. It was preserved in the handwriting of Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue and kept in Urgell's archives.

It says that Captain Diego de Durango, of the Tercio de Maestre de Campo Luis del Villar, made some honorable remarks about Jeroni Desclergue in his certification made in Brussels on January 14, 1598:

'Don Gerónimo Desclergue served his Majesty in Flanders and France from 1587 to 1598. In particular, he has always been fearless and courageous in the relief of Gelderen in the Eastern Provinces ('Frisa'), which the Spanish captured in 1587. He was a front military in the tercio of Maestro de Campo Manuel de Vega and played an essential role in the Siege of Koevoorden ('Coborde'). He also played a significant role in helping at Alphe ('Alpe') and in Land van Was ('Pays de Vas'), where the enemy had penetrated the country and slaughtered many of the inhabitants. He also contributed to the capture of the castle of Westerlo ('Betarlo'), Turnhout ('Tornaute'). He equally took part in France's invasion, particularly the relief of La Ferté-Milon ('Fertimilon') and the town of La Capelle ('Capela'). He was one of the pikes at the forefront of the assault. Furthermore, he has also been in Laon ('Lan') and Harelbeke ('Xarbilcke'). During the attack on Doullens ('Dorlans'), he was one of the pikes. In Cambrai ('Cambray'), Jeroni had an essential position in defense of the town because of the great importance that consistently emerged from his person; during the defense, he was wounded by an arcabucoso in the face. He participated equally in the action in Calais ('Cales'). The day Captain Diego de Durango attacked occupied Oudenburg (Alenbruc or 'Alburgo'), Jeroni Desclergue joined him, attacked the citadel like a fearless soldier, and took responsibility at every stage in the assault. Jeroni Desclergue was also in the Siege of Ardres ('Arda') and Hulst ('Hulte'). When the Spaniards won at Amiens 'Miens,' Jeroni was one of the militaries who entered the town with Diego de

---

[25] E. Ducatteeuw and M. Debrouwere in "Bevernaars en Desselgemnaars in de 16de eeuw" (De Gaverstreke VII, 1979)

[26] Filip Benoit, in "De bevolking van Deerlijk anno 1440" (Derlike, 12de jaargang, nr 1, 1989)

[27] André Woestijn in "Harelbeke in de Spaanse tijd, 1585-1713" (De Roede van Harelbeke, De Leiegouw, nr 14, 1994)

[28] Santiago Alberti, "Esquema històric del llinatge Pedrolo", (URTX Revista Cultural de l'Urgell, Num 7, 1995)

Durango, and he fought with great courage to further defend the city. Diego de Durango describes how he observed Jeroni Desclergue fighting the enemy.'

He concluded that

'he guarantees to his Majesty that he has always thought very highly of Jeroni Desclergue.'

Don Carlos II Coloma y de Saa, knight of Santiago and 1st Marquess of Espinar (born in Alicante in 1567 – died in Madrid in 1637), was a distinguished Spanish military commander, diplomat, and author, also known for his translation of Tacitus. Coloma was a contemporary of Jeroni Desclergue and descended from Jewish conversos. Although some biographers suggest that he was born on February 9, 1566, this date lacks definitive evidence, as the only document providing his birth date, the Condal file, states '1567.'

Carlos Coloma was the son of Juan de Coloma y Cardona, 1st Count of Elda and Viceroy of Sardinia, and Isabel de Saa. Juan de Coloma y Cardona, born around 1522 in Elda, Valencia, passed away in 1568. The Coloma family's roots trace back to France, but they had settled in Catalonia for centuries. The lineage begins with Don Pere de Coloma and his wife, Doña Maria de Cardona. Pere, an esquire of Gaston, Count of Carcassonne, left France for Catalonia, adopting the surname Coloma from the French 'Colombe.'

Carlos Coloma had an elder brother, Alfonso Coloma (1555-1606), who served as the bishop of Barcelona. Some of Carlos Coloma's descendants resided in Perpignan, still part of Catalonia. The Coloma family established significant branches outside of Spain, particularly in Flanders. Members of the Flemish branch, which emerged during the Farnese era, eventually settled in Bornem, Ghent, Brussels, and Mechelen. They held important positions within the society of the Austrian Empire, though this branch has since become extinct.

Coloma's life and legacy are emblematic of the intricate interplay of political, military, and cultural forces in early modern Europe. His contributions as a military leader, diplomat, and scholar underscore the multifaceted roles played by Spanish nobility during this period.

When describing the military career of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), it is impossible to ignore Carlos II Coloma y de Saa, who served with Jeroni in Flanders. Jeroni's son Antoni Desclergue (II) (DC06) would also operate under Coloma, as found in the literature and further in this book. Besides, Jeroni's brother Antoni Desclergue (I) (DC05b) and therefore most likely also Enric Desclergue (DC05c) equally served with Coloma.

From 1631 until his return to Spain in 1634, Coloma acted even as commander-in-chief of the Army of Flanders and governor of Cambrai.

Carlos Coloma married Marguerite de Gavere-Liedekercke, the daughter of Antoon van Liedekerke and Louise de la Barre, establishing solid regional connections to the area where Jeroni Desclergue and his descendants would eventually settle in Flanders, specifically around Kortrijk, Harelbeke, Hulste, and Deerlijk. The town of Gavere, for instance, is relatively close to Deerlijk, about a five-hour walk to the East.

Marguerite van Liedekercke was the daughter of Antoine van Liedekercke de Gavere, Count of Bailleul, and Louise de La Barre, Dame of Mouscron. Mouscron is also near Deerlijk, which is an approximately three-hour walk to the southwest. Antoine van Liedekercke de Gavere (born in 1533) was the son of Filips van Gavere, Lord of Nieuwkerke, and Maria van der Gracht. Maria van der Gracht (1494-1562) was the daughter of Diederik van der Gracht, Lord of Kortrijk, and Elisabeth van Gistel. Kortrijk is very close to Deerlijk, about a two-hour walk to the west, and records indicate Jeroni's presence in Kortrijk through church documents.

Carlos Coloma began his military career in 1581, campaigning first in Portugal and Sicily. In 1588, he went to Flanders as a regular soldier on the Armada. The year before, Jeroni Desclergue had traveled along the Spanish road, as described in Chapter 8.10, in the tercio of Luis de Queralt. Coloma played a vital role in the Siege of Doullens in 1595, where Jeroni was also present, just before the Siege of Cambrai that same year. Later, in 1617, when Jeroni had already been dead for thirteen years, Carlos Coloma became the governor of Cambrai, further advancing in the military ranks until his return to Spain in 1634. During this period, Jeroni's son Antoni (DC06) became an army officer. He served under the command of Carlos Coloma until he temporarily returned to Spain just before 1640, only to return to Flanders soon after.

Where applicable, the careers of Jeroni (DC05) and his son Antoni (DC06) will include references to Carlos Coloma. For further details, refer to the works of Miguel Angel Guill Ortega,[29] J. F. A. F. de Azevedo Coutinho y Bernal,[30] and Carlos Coloma.[31]

Luis del Villar has been less fortunate than Carlos Coloma. We found several sources about his faith in 1600. Maurice de Nassau (Mauritz van Nassau) wrote in a letter on July 2, 1600, that,

'during a fight in Ostend, his forces had killed many Spanish militaries and captured prominent figures, such as the sergeant admiral d' Aragon Francisco Hurtado de Mendoza (Granada 1546 - Madrid 1623), maestro de campo Don Luis de Villar y Capena, while the count de Busquoy and colonel la Bourlotte were killed.'

The letter was addressed to Count Willem-Louis de Nassau and is found in the book 'Archives ou correspondance de la maison d' Orange-Nassau,' 1835.

Note that Francisco Hurtado de Mendoza, shown in Figure 29.23, was a grandchild of Luis Hurtado de Mendoza y Pacheco, son of Francisco Pacheco and Catalina de Mendoza y Zuñiga. His mother's father was Iñigo López de Mendoza.

We expand further on the role of Carlos Coloma in Chapter 34.5.15. Connections between Desclergue and Pacheco are shown in Chapter 27.2 on page 301, or Chapter 33.4.2 on page 516, or Chapter 19.15.3 on page 188.

29.5.3 The Capture of Geldern 1587

The reference in Figures 29.26 and 29.27 states that:

'Don Gerónimo Desclergues began to serve His Majesty by leaving Spain for Flanders in 1587 in the Spanish infantry company of Don Luis de Queralt. The Duke of Parma designated 8 escudos as a monthly payment on top of his ordinary salary. He kept this salary until H. R. H. the Archduque added another 2 escudos to his salary from November 2, 1596, onwards. It promoted his excellent achievements at the village of Hulst ('Hust'). He continued his military career until December 22, 1597, when he temporarily left the Spanish infantry of Captain Diego de Durango. His leave is certified by a document made in Brussels on December 22, 1597, by the army's accountant Antonio Carnero.'

We assume that most probably Jeroni Desclergue arrived in the Netherlands along the Spanish road, described in Chapter 8.10, the year before Carlos Coloma would come on the Armada.

---

[29] Miguel Angel Guill Ortega, Carlos Coloma, 1566-1637, 'Espada y pluma de los tercios,' Madrid, Editorial Club Universitario, 2007

[30] J. F. A. F. de Azevedo Coutinho y Bernal, Généalogie de la Famille de Coloma, 1777

[31] Carlos Coloma, De las guerras de los Estados Baxos, desde el año de M.D.LXXXVIII. hasta el de M.D.XC.IX, Cambrai, Jean de la Rivière, 1622, with later editions in Antwerp (1624 and 1635) and Barcelona (1627)

Geldern's (Germany) capture, shown in Figure 29.28, was the first and perhaps the most effortless achievement in Jeroni's career. Indeed, with the tercio of Luis del Villar,[32] the city was taken on July 4, 1587. The Spanish army, led by Haultepenne, bribed Artistoteles Patton, who was in charge of the town, and he allowed the Spanish troops to capture the city after a short fight. Jeroni's involvement in this event is shown in Captain Diego de Durango's testimony in Chapter 29.5.2.

29.5.4 The Invasion of England with the Spanish Armada 1588

The first recorded encounter between Carlos Coloma and Jeroni Desclergue occurred during the preparations for the Spanish Armada's invasion of England in 1588. In the spring of that year, Spanish troops in Flanders were strategically positioned near the coast in anticipation of the invasion, as depicted in Figure 29.29. Among the arrivals to the Flemish coast was Carlos Coloma. Historical records indicate that the planned invasion could not proceed due to the destruction of the Armada by the English fleet. Consequently, Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) and others found themselves in a state of inactivity, awaiting further orders near the Belgian coast, where Desclergue and Coloma eventually joined the same Tercio.

In June 1588, the Spanish forces were organized into several Tercios, including the Tercio de Bobadilla, the Tercio of Sicily, and the Tercio of Lombardy. These were joined by the Irish regiment under Colonel Guillermo Estanley and the German regiment led by Italian Colonel Ferrante Gonzaga di Bozzolo. Alongside other Walloon, Italian, and Burgundian Tercios, as well as additional German regiments, these units comprised the landing force of the Great Armada intended for the invasion of England. The troops moved to Dunkirk for embarkation, with their assembly point referred to in Spanish literature as 'Bomel' or 'Bomen,' possibly identified as Woumen. They marched to Diksmuide, Veurne, and Dunkirk from this location to prepare for embarkation.

The troops initially embarked on August 9, 1588, but disembarked upon receiving news of adverse weather conditions. They attempted to embark again on August 12 but disembarked once more upon learning of the Armada's defeat. During these intermittent embarkation efforts, their land residence was noted as 'Umen,' likely Uxem.

With the failed embarkation onto the Armada, the invasion mission was ultimately abandoned, and the troops were redistributed across the region. The Tercios were assigned new missions. The Tercio de Queralt, along with the veteran Tercio of Sicily under Diego Enríquez de Castañeda y Manrique and the German regiment of Ferrante Gonzaga, proceeded to Duffel (referred to by the Spanish as Mantas, a term also associated with Duffle, as in Duffle coats). They arrived in Antwerp on Thursday, August 15, 1588. This period saw a significant reorganization of the Tercios in Flanders. Specifically, the Catalan troops under Luis de Queralt, which included Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), were restructured and integrated into other Tercios, reflecting the broader strategic adjustments necessitated by the failed invasion attempt.

We refer to a specific passage in the book of Carlos Coloma, on page 28, shown in Figure 29.29. The passage reads as follows:

'A few days before the departure of the Duke of Bergas, the veteran general Juan Bautista de Tassis reformed the Tercio he had brought from Catalonia of Luis de Queralt (except for the Company of Don Pedro Pacheco), which was added to the old Tercios of Don Diego de la Guerra, of Don Juan Manrique, of Gabriel Dorti, or that of Don Francisco. The other companies' men were divided by equal parts, in the remaining three Tercios, so that each Tercio would count 1200 soldiers.'

29.5.5 the Siege of Bergen op Zoom 1588

After a summer of inactivity, the Siege of Bergen op Zoom marked Jeroni Desclergue's first significant military engagement. The Siege, illustrated in Figure 29.30, commenced on September 23, 1588, and concluded on November 13 of the same year.

The Spanish forces were commanded by Alexander Farnese, the Duke of Parma. At the same time, the States of the Netherlands' troops were led by Maurits of Nassau, with key commanders Thomas Morgan and Peregrine Bertie.

Under the leadership of Peter Ernst I von Mansfeld (depicted in Figure 29.23 on page 393), Spanish soldiers, including Jeroni Desclergue (DC05), initially attempted to capture the island of Tholen. This strategic location was crucial as it lay on the supply route to Bergen op Zoom. However, the Spanish forces failed, suffering heavy casualties and many soldiers drowning. The assault on Tholen ceased on September 17, and the Spanish redirected their focus, along with the Tercio of Bobadilla, to Bergen op Zoom. The city was defended by 5000 English and Dutch troops, alongside 3000 inhabitants. As the Spanish troops encircled the town and the Dutch realized the inadequacy of the city walls, the Dutch launched several sorties to repel the Spanish and prevent them from breaching the defenses. A significant attack on the city, led by Sancho de Leyva (Maestre de campo), Juan de Mendoza, and Alonso de Idiaquez, was thwarted by bad weather and an advanced warning to the Dutch, forcing the Spanish to abandon their assault.

Ultimately, on November 13, 1588, Scottish and Dutch forces relieved the city under Maurits of Nassau's command. The Spanish troops retreated southward, fortifying the cities of Roosendaal, Kalmthout, and Hoogstraten. The modern border between Belgium and the Netherlands traces this historical front line.

The Queralt Tercio was present at the Siege of Bergen op Zoom but did not engage in the actual battle, sparing them from the heavy casualties other units suffered.

Following the Siege, under the orders of Don Juan Bautista de Tassis and Wachtendonk, the Tercio de Queralt was restructured to bolster the depleted Tercios, specifically those of Bobadilla (then commanded by Manuel de Vega Cabeza de Vaca), the veteran troops from Lombardy (commanded by Sancho Martínez de Leyva), and the old Tercio from Sicily (led by Diego Enríquez de Castañeda y Manrique). This reorganization was necessary due to the inexperience of the Catalan recruits compared to the seasoned soldiers of the older Tercios, a common practice in military strategy to integrate and improve the combat effectiveness of less experienced troops.

Manuel de Vega Cabeza de Vaca, a distant cousin of Jeroni Desclergue (DC05), played a notable role during this period. He later testified in 1598, as detailed in Chapter 29.5.25 and depicted in Figures 29.93 on page 413 and 29.94 on page 414.

29.5.6 The Attempt to sack Ostend in Spring 1589

On April 7, 1589, the Spanish companies, including Carlos Coloma and Jeroni Desclergue (DC05), attempted to capture Ostend from the rebel forces. Ostend would later become the site of Jeroni's death in 1604 during a successful city Siege. However, the 1589 attempt to seize Ostend failed. During the subsequent withdrawal from Oudenburg, Carlos Coloma sustained an accidental hand injury from a bullet.

This event is significant in understanding the military careers of both Coloma and Desclergue, illustrating the persistent yet often perilous efforts of Spanish forces to reclaim strategic locations from the rebels.

---

[32] Colección de documentos inéditos para la historia de España, por M. Fernandez Navarrete, 1842

The incident also foreshadows the prolonged conflict and eventual fall of Ostend, a crucial episode in the Eighty Years' War.

29.5.7 The Siege of Heusden, Heel and Bommelerwaard, 1589

The Siege of Heusden, located in present-day North Brabant, lasted from the summer until October 1589. During this period, the Duque of Parma, Alexander Farnese, was ill, leaving Karel von Mansfeld[33] in command of the siege operations. Although the Siege was initially successful, it was ultimately abandoned due to a mutiny among the soldiers, who had not received their salaries. In October, the remaining Spanish forces were outnumbered by the troops of Maurits of Nassau and were compelled to withdraw from the city.

The Siege of Heusden is believed to have been an attempt by Alexander Farnese to avenge his earlier defeat at Bergen op Zoom, severely damaging his reputation. This context is depicted in Figure 29.23 on page 393. During this period, the Spanish Netherlands was experiencing an economic crisis, which led many inhabitants to flee to the Northern Dutch States. This exodus exacerbated the financial difficulties of the Spanish administration, making it challenging to pay the soldiers' salaries.

Heusden was not the sole location of military engagement for Jeroni Desclergue and Carlos Coloma during this period. Concurrently with the Siege, there were mutinies in Bommelerwaard and Heel. On September 8, 1589, they were dispatched to Heel to quell the insurrection, and on October 13, 1589, they moved to Bommelerwaard to address the unrest there.

29.5.8 The Arrival in Harelbeke and Kortrijk, December 1589

In Montblanc, Tarragona, Catalonia, and possibly across Aragon, a class of fabric was produced in imitation of the fine textiles of Kortrijk in Belgium, known as Contray (also referred to as Cortray, Courtray, or Kortrijk). This fabric, first mentioned in Catalan in 1479, was used to make dresses, bodies, coats, hoses, and cloaks. The term also appears in Valencian. An inventory from 1609, detailed by Joan Yeguas Gassó in Anglesola, approximately 40 km from Montblanc, included references to this fabric.[34] This indicates the familiarity of the region with Kortrijk, known to the Spanish as 'Cortray', and its products, further evidenced by connections with Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05).

The arrival of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) in Harelbeke exemplifies the necessity of combining local records with international testimonies to provide a comprehensive historical account. Local historians typically consult town accounts, council reports, and church records, but the presence of a self-sustained and well-behaved army often leaves minimal traces in these documents. This narrative places the arrival of the Spanish in Harelbeke in December 1589 within the context of Belgian local history, Spanish sources from Montblanc, and Carlos Coloma's writings. Notably, André Wostijn's chapter on 'De oorlogen' in 'Harelbeke in de Spaanse tijd, 1585-1713,' published in De roede van Harelbeke – de Leiegouw, provides key insights.

On February 28, 1580, Kortrijk was recaptured by Walloon troops under Lieutenant Antoon d'Alennes. The Spanish leveraged this to restore their power in the Netherlands, with Alexander Farnese initiating a reconquest campaign. Farnese established a bridge over the Leie River in Harelbeke, positioning artillery and troops, and implemented strategies to disrupt Calvinist supplies. Despite Kortrijk's fall in 1580, soldiers continued to traverse villages in search of provisions. The Spanish progressively captured Deinze, Oudenaarde (1582), Bruges, Ypres, Ghent (1584), and Antwerp (1585), regaining the Southern Netherlands except for Sluis and Ostend, which remained under freebooter control.

The Calvinist-Catholic conflict irrevocably separated the northern and southern Netherlands post-1585. In 1585, freebooters from Sluis raided the Kortrijk castellany. By early 1586, Kortrijk established its own militia, which proved ineffective. From 1588, freebooters targeted villages along the Leie River, including Harelbeke, a strategic bridge location.

Following the 1588 defeat of the Spanish Armada, retreating Spanish soldiers inundated the Kortrijk castellany, with large numbers passing through Harelbeke in August and September 1588.

A handwritten account from 1661 by Francesc de Pedrolo y Desclergue details that Jeroni Desclergue, with the Spanish army, occupied Harelbeke. Carlos Coloma's report corroborates this, detailing the Spanish arrival in Kortrijk on December 5, 1598. Desclergue and Coloma had traversed the Leie River, encountering picturesque villages like Afsnee, Sint Martens Latem, Deinze, Machelen, and Wielsbeke, finally reaching Harelbeke and Menin. The area around Kortrijk, vital militarily, allowed strategic access to southern territories and Ghent.

The Spanish forces, including Desclergue and Coloma, maintained the area's security, preventing major attacks until the next century's French invasions. However, freebooters continued to exploit the Spaniards' absences. Desclergue participated in the 1590 attacks on Noordam and Oudenburg. In September 1590, Harelbeke and Ingelmunster were raided by Ostend freebooters, disrupting local life. From 1592 to 1597, Harelbeke faced continued assaults, leading to local security measures, including a 1595 weapons inspection of all fit men.

Ph. Despriet's work indicates that Deerlijk's church tower was refurbished around this time, reaching a height of 47.26 meters.[35]

The initial description of Desclergue's arrival can be found in Coloma's book, detailing their December 1589 lodging in Kortrijk's castellany, encompassing Kortrijk, Harelbeke, Deerlijk, Tielt, and Wingene. This region, crucial for Spanish defense against France, remained stable and favorable to Spanish rule, protected by the Leie River and Gaverbeek Creek.

Miguel Ángel Guill Ortega's work on Carlos Coloma provides further context for the December 1589 arrival. As winter approached, the Spanish Tercios were assigned lodgings, with Desclergue and Coloma's unit stationed around Kortrijk and Menin, preparing for engagements in France. The Malcontents, discontented local inhabitants, governed Menin, which had experienced shifts in control between the Dutch States, Scottish troops, and Spanish forces.

In early 1590, a mutiny among Spanish troops in Kortrijk, including Desclergue and Coloma's company, demanded overdue wages. Negotiations by Alexander Farnese eventually quelled the rebellion. The Walloon Tercios moved to the French border, while Spanish troops, including Desclergue's unit, remained in Flanders under new command. Coloma's writings describe the Spanish military's frustration over unpaid salaries, leading to mutiny. Cardinal Bentivoglio's book also references this period. By May 1590, many soldiers departed Kortrijk, some traveling to Paris or Brabant for further operations. Baptismal records from Kortrijk during this period indicate the presence of Spanish soldiers and families, with some explicitly noting Hispanic origins.

This detailed analysis underscores the complex interplay of local and international factors influencing the arrival and presence of Spanish forces in Harelbeke and Kortrijk in 1589, reflecting broader historical dynamics during the Eighty Years' War.

---

[33] Karel von Mansfeld should not be confused with Peter Ernst von Mansfeld.

[34] Joan Yeguas Gassó, "Cinc mules de llaurar, un mapamundi i un diamant fi. inventari de la casa de Mateu Pocurull al palau d'Anglesola (1609)."

[35] Ph. Despriet, 'De Zuidwestvlaamse parochiekerken, een duizendjarige geschiedenis,' Kortrijk, 1982, p. 97

29.5.9 Culinary Waffle Traditions in Kortrijk involving Our Family and Antoon Van Dyck

When considering Belgium as a travel destination, many tourists are familiar with its iconic Brussels waffles, with some also indulging in Liège waffles. The origins of Brussels waffles trace back to those of waffles and wafers in Kortrijk, a tradition steeped in historical significance. It is fascinating to note that Jeroni Joan Desclergue (DC05) and his family partook in these Kortrijk waffles while in Flanders. Historical accounts suggest that in 1631, Antoon Van Dyck, a renowned painter, was crafting his masterpiece "The Descent from the Cross," and received a shipment of Kortrijk wafers. The painting would later adorn the walls of the Church of Our Lady in Kortrijk, underscoring the cultural importance of these culinary delights. The roots of Kortrijk waffles and wafers stretch even further back than 1631, as is well documented.

The narrative also intertwines with Hr Haemius, a native of Lille, who led an educational institution in Kortrijk for many years until he died in 1535. His contributions to cultural exchange included sending Latin poetry to the abbot of the Augustinians van Evershem at Stavele, accompanied by wafers highlighting the long-standing tradition of waffle-making in Kortrijk. He affectionately termed these wafers "Flower cookies," crafted from the finest flour.

The certainty that Jeroni Joan Desclergue's family also enjoyed these cookies stems from their familial ties with the Declercq-Braye family of Kortrijk. Indeed, it was the Venerable Lord Rogier Braye, a canon and pastor at Our Lady in Kortrijk, who dispatched the waffles to the illustrious painter Antoon van Dyck (1599-1641) in 1631, thereby enriching our understanding of the cultural and social exchanges of that era. This underscores the deep historical depth and richness of Kortrijk's waffle and wafer-making tradition.

The author expresses a profound sense of satisfaction upon uncovering this information, reflecting on a cherished familial tradition. His father, Maurice Declercq, engaged in the widespread practice observed in numerous households of preparing exceptionally flavorful waffles, mentioned in Chapter 46.2.9, on two significant dates: November 11 and New Year's Day. This personal connection to the waffle-making tradition adds a layer of familial and historical pride to the narrative, inviting the audience to share this sense of heritage.

29.5.10 Attack on the Fortress of Noordam 1590 near Zevenbergen

In 1590, Karel van Mansfeld's armed forces took the Meuse River to storm the Noordam fortress near Zevenbergen, shown in Figure 29.54. The fort withstood the attack successfully.

From then onwards, the army focused on Nijmegen, which was vulnerable to a counterattack by the Dutch forces.

29.5.11 The Attack on Occupied Oudenburg 1590

Oudenburg used to be 'Alenbruc' and was called 'Alburgo' by the Spaniards. There used to be an abbey in Oudenburg, not far from Ostend, but it was destroyed after the monks' departure. After the iconoclast in 1566, the church was devastated, and Oudenburg had lost its political and economic importance. The Spaniards built a fort on the site of the abbey in 1585. This fort formed part of a Spanish fortress belt along the Ieperleet River. Nowadays, this river has been replaced by a canal. The Spaniards also built the fortress of Plassendale at that time.

This strategically chosen location was necessary, as the Calvinists occupied nearby Ostend. A citadel at Oudenburg offered sufficient protection for the Spaniards, even when the occupiers of Ostend inundated the area, which they regularly did. When the Siege of Ostend started, Oudenburg became less critical, and the monastery was rebuilt later.

It was in 1590 that the Calvinists of Ostend occupied and even partly destroyed Oudenburg.

In the recapture of the fortress by Captain Diego de Durango, Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) was involved. Durango later testified that Jeroni took tremendous responsibility for each attack and behaved *like a brave and fearless soldier.*The testimony is given in Chapter 29.5.2.

We cannot exclude the possibility that he recaptured the citadel of Plassendale. The Spanish probably remembered both as 'Alburgo.' Remains of that fortress can still be found on the archaeological site, and there is even still a house called 'Spaans Tolhuis' next to it, shown in Figure 29.55, that one used around that time to access the fortress.

Traces of troops at Desselgem, near Harelbeke and Deerlijk, in the period December 11-17, 1590, can be found in the archives of Kortrijk[36]

29.5.12 The Relief of la Ferté-Milon in 1591

In the 16th century, in the troubled context of the wars of religion, the inhabitants of La Ferté-Milon in France sought a protector against the 'brigands,' i.e., 'freebooters' as were also found in Flanders. In 1589, they had placed themselves under the protection of the Viscount Antoine de Saint-Chamand, one of the fellows of the Duke of Guise, the leader of the League. The latter was a political party of Catholics hostile to the new French King of Protestant origin, Henri IV, and religion-wise friendly with the Spanish in Flanders. As a result, the city, held by the Leaguers, became a hotbed of resistance to the new royal power.

In 1591, the Duke of Épernon, on behalf of the King, attempted the first Siege to take the city. He failed, thanks to the support of the Spanish military, such as Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), shown in Chapter 29.5.2.

In 1594, however, the Duke of Epernon made another attempt, soon joined by the King himself. This time, the French forces were triumphant. They opened a breach in the defensive wall, and the city soon turned indefensible.

King Henri IV decided to negotiate and succeeded in obtaining the place's surrender by renouncing any prosecution against Saint-Chamand. He even offered a large sum of money.

After negotiation with Saint-Chammand, the city's defender, the latter withdrew on January 7, 1594.

The King, master of the town, ordered dismantling the fortress later that year. In forty-eight days, Captain La Ruine carried out the order of destruction. Everything was completed on December 25, 1594, and the castle took its modern look of a ruin, shown in Figure 29.56.

1594 was a phenomenal year in France, as will be described further.

---

[36] Gemeente Kortrijk, 'Oud Stadsarchief Kortrijk' (OSAK), Document A0516-109095-107868-DUT-11688: Trial between the baron of Billij, governor and high bailiff of the city and bailiff of Kortrijk, plaintiff, and Geert (also Goris) Schuutkins, from Sittard, Gelderland, imprisoned defendant, before the mayor and aldermen of Kortrijk in a banquet. Subject: murder of the thief of Christiaen Ketele, bailiff of Desselgem, and attempted rape of his wife. The defendant was a Captain Lanchaer's company soldier who stayed in Desselgem from 11 to 17 December 1590. 1591.1 cover

29.5.13 The Liberation of the Westerlo Castle in 1591

From 1592 to 1594, a significant historical figure was Peter Ernst I von Mansfeld, rather than Karel von Mansfeld, who had been discussed earlier. Peter Ernst I von Mansfeld, depicted in Figure 29.23 on page 393, was of German origin and served as the governor of the Spanish Netherlands from 1592 until 1594, at which point Archduke Ernest of Austria succeeded him. Born in 1517, Mansfeld died on May 25, 1604, not living to witness Spain's victory in Ostend.

In 1583, Mansfeld's troops captured the castle of Westerlo, an event depicted in Figure 29.58 and the castle itself shown in Figure 29.57. This capture was notable as Mansfeld's forces succeeded by draining the lake surrounding the castle, allowing them access to the occupying forces. This event is regarded as one of the most famous episodes involving the castle during the Eighty Years' War. However, in 1591, Dutch forces briefly reoccupied the castle and had to be liberated once again, though this episode is less well-known. The liberation involved Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05). His account of the events, recorded in Brussels on January 14, 1598, is detailed in Chapter 29.5.2. In this account, Captain Diego de Durango of the Tercio de Maestre de Campo Luis del Villar made honorable remarks about Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05).

The 1591 liberation is further substantiated by a citation in a 1725 book, shown in Figure 29.59, which corroborates the event. This citation aligns with the archives of the Pedrolo and Desclergue families, which refer to Westerlo as 'Betarlo,' confirming the occurrence of the liberation.

29.5.14 The Defence of Nijmegen in 1591

In 1591, from 17 until October 21, the army of Nassau attacked Nijmegen, as shown in Figure 29.60. Maurice of Nassau is shown in Figure 29.105.

The battle was complicated because, on the one hand, there was the city of Nijmegen. On the other hand, the fortress 'Schans Knodsenburg' was located on the opposite side of the Waal River, which could either be used to defend the city or attack it.

Knodsenburg was Spanish until 1581, then became Dutch and was retaken by the Spanish and later by the Dutch.

The Spanish were attacking Knodsenburg, while the Dutch attacked the city of Nijmegen.

It was a complicated situation. Many Spanish troops, including Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), had to leave the city to safeguard Alexander Farnese, who had been visiting Nijmegen and needed an escape route.

Later, on October 20, the remaining Spanish and Nijmegen inhabitants surrendered to the Dutch forces. The foremost reason why Nijmegen had been weakly defended was that many Spanish troops had been sent to France instead to combat the Huguenots.

29.5.15 The Defense of Steenwijk (1592)

Church certificates, shown in Figures 29.61, 29.62, 29.63, 29.64, 29.65, 29.66, and 29.67 still indicate Spanish military presence at Kortrijk. Note that the Esteva family can also be found in Church certificates at the Parish of San Felipe de Castilla in Antwerp at that time.

It is vital to consider mobility along the Leie River and the Schelde River to understand the link between the Montoya family, the de la Cruz family, the Orosco family, and the Desclergue family. The rivers connect Antwerp, Ghent, and Kortrijk, and the lesser military hubs such as Menin and Harelbeke.

Francisco Verdugo had requested Peter Ernst I von Mansfeld,[37] to send more troops to Steenwijk because he feared it was in imminent danger of being attacked by the Dutch forces.

Antonio Coquel was in charge of protecting the city. If extra troops have indeed been sent, then very probably Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) was amongst them. Otherwise, it would be safe to assume that he was somewhere in Brabant at that time and was not sent to Steenwijk. We do not know for sure.

Nassau's Dutch forces and Vere attacked the city and sieged it from May 28 until July 5, 1592. The Dutch outnumbered the Spanish by 6000 against 1000. The loss of Steenwijk, shown in Figure 29.68, was rather dramatic for the Spanish because they lost access to the Zuiderzee.

Because Steenwijk had been taken rather quickly, the Dutch forces marched to Coevorden that same year, defended by Frederik van den Bergh. The city was sacked immediately, on September 2, 1592, while support by the troops of Francisco Verdugo and Cristóbal de Mondragón reached it too late.

29.5.16 The Siege of Coevorden in 1593-1594

Early in September of 1592, Verdugo could not avoid Coevorden being taken by Dutch forces. In return, he besieged the town until May 6, 1594, when Maurtis and Willem Lodewijk relieved it, as seen in Figure 29.69.

Their armed forces originated in Zwolle. Coevorden withstood the Spanish Siege for so long because it had been adequately supplied, and the Spanish were hindered by sickness.

In his account of the events, made in Brussels on January 14, 1598, shown in Chapter 29.5.2, Captain Diego de Durango of the Tercio de Maestre de Campo Luis del Villar, made some honorable remarks about Jeroni Desclergue 's contribution to the Spanish Siege of the Dutch-occupied town.

The blockade, however, was unsuccessful, and Coevorden would never turn to the Spanish again. The city was essential for access to Groningen, which was made impossible by the Dutch taking this spot.

Not so far from Groningen, a beautiful fort was constructed by William of Orange in 1593, Fort Bourtange, and depicted in Figure 29.112 on page 420.

29.5.17 The capture of La Capelle and the Loss of Laon in 1594

The period from 1592 to 1594 was marked by significant events in France, culminating in the dramatic capture of La Capelle and the loss of Laon in 1594. In 1593, Mansfeld invaded France with 14000 soldiers, besieging Noyon and advancing as far as Paris with Spanish troops. Following the death of Farnese, Mansfeld assumed interim command, tasked with protecting the States of the League from threats posed by Henri de Navarra, later King Henri IV of France. The Duke of Feria represented King Philip II before this assembly. In contrast, Cardinal Legate Filippo Sega, the Bishop of Plaisance, and Cardinal Nicolas de Pellevé, the Archbishop of Reims, represented the Pope.

Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) was not part of Mansfeld's initial mission due to his service in Coevorden. However, in 1594, he participated in Mansfeld's campaign in France with approximately 9000 soldiers. In 1592, while Desclergue y Cortés was active in Steenwijk, Mansfeld invaded France to support the Catholic League. The Catholic towns, such as Soissons, typically welcomed the invading army warmly. This reception is documented in M. Ivan Cloulas's work, shown in Figure 29.70, 'Un témoignage espagnol sur la League: Los Tres libros de la guerra de Francia de Damián de Armenta y Córdoba (1596).'[38]

---

[37] Peter Ernst I von Mansfeld must not be confused with Karel von Mansfeld

King Henri IV of France, shown in Figure 29.105, a Protestant, faced opposition from the Catholic League, which included Catholics from France and the Spanish. In 1594, as the League began to lose ground, King Henri IV expelled the Spanish from Paris, as seen in Figure 29.71. Henri IV, born in Pau, Navarra (now France) in 1553, died in Paris in 1610. He was King of Navarra (as Henri III) from 1572 to 1610 and King of France from 1589 to 1610, the first French monarch of the House of Bourbon. Baptized as a Catholic, Henri IV converted to Protestantism alongside his mother, Joanna of Albret, Queen of Navarre. He inherited the throne of Navarra in 1572 and was involved in the Huguenot Wars, narrowly escaping an assassination attempt during the St. Bartholomew's Day Massacre. He later led Protestant troops against the royal army and, despite being a prominent Huguenot, ascended the French throne in 1589 after the death of his childless cousin, Henry III. Henri IV renounced his Calvinist faith to accept the throne, resulting in a four-year conflict with the Catholic League before gaining acceptance.

Under Mansfeld's command, Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) did not participate in the campaign in Paris. Instead, he played a crucial role in capturing La Capelle, South of Maubeuge, on May 9, 1594, in collaboration with the Catholic League. Setbacks followed this victory; on May 15, the French under King Henri IV captured Guise. On May 16, the King besieged Laon, shown in Figures 29.74, 29.73 and 29.72, where Charles Mayenne, also known as Charles de Lorraine, was confined. Despite a valiant defense by Mansfeld and 6000 men, including Desclergue y Cortés, the overwhelming force of 20000 French soldiers led to Laon's fall after a two-month siege.

The Spanish capture of La Capelle in May 1594, shown in Figure 29.75, achieved after a one-month siege, underscores Desclergue y Cortés's significant contribution, as evidenced by the document referenced in Chapter 29.5.2. Laon, a city of historical importance known for its ties to the Knights Templar, was familiar territory to Desclergue y Cortés and his ancestors, adding a personal dimension to the military campaigns of this period.

Laon was an important city known by Jeroni and his ancestors through its historical bonds with the Knights Templar, as seen in Figure 29.74.

29.5.18 The Capture of Hoei (Huy) in Spring of 1595

Troops of Charles de Héraugière, on behalf of the Dutch States, had taken the city of Hoei on February 6, 1595, as shown in Figure 29.76. The Spanish army, led by Fuentes, launched, under La Motte's command, a successful assault on the city, which resulted in a victory on March 20.

The location of Hoei was vital as it offered a nexus for the Dutch between their forces in the North and the French troops in the South. While they were in the city, the Dutch soldiers raped the girls and women and plundered and destroyed churches. They had also killed inhabitants who were not willing to give money. The city could have become Spanish in 1595, but H.M. King Felipe II decided to return the town to the diocese and convert to neutral catholic territory again. Note that Fuentes, despite his name, was not Spanish and should not be confused with Pedro Enríquez de Toledo, the Count of Fuentes, a statesman and high commander of the Spanish army.

Indeed, Fuentes was active in Hoei as Paul-Bernard de Fontaines (1566 Lorraine - May 19, 1643, Rocroi), also known as Comtefontaine, Conde Fontana, or Fuentes; he was commander of the Spanish infantry.

He is also described in Chapter 32 and Chapter 33 on Antoni Desclergue (DC05b) and Enric Desclergue (DC05c), the brothers of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05) and Fuentes was Vogt of Bruges and governor of Damme. He is probably the reason why the brothers of Jeroni Joan Desclergue y Cortés (DC05), namely Antoni Desclergue (DC05b) and Enric Desclergue (DC05c), would spend time in Damme after 1604. Infantry commander Paul-Bernard de Fontaines had old roots in Spain (a dozen generations back in time), which is probably why he never resisted being called Fuentes.

29.5.19 The Siege of Le Catelet, Doullens, and Cambrai - Summer of 1595

The heroism of Jeroni Joan Desclergue (DC05) in the successes at Le Catelet, Doullens, and Cambrai has been outlined in the eulogy in Chapter 29.5.2, by Diego de Durango.

The Siege of Le Catelet occurred between 20 and 26 June of 1595, as part of the Franco-Spanish War (1595-1598), which in the Netherlands is just considered a paragraph in the long Eighty Years War. The Spanish were commanded by the Spanish Netherlands' new Governor-General, Don Pedro Henríquez de Acevedo, Conde de Fuentes, shown in Figure 29.23 on page 393.

A few days later, the Count of Fuentes and his forces continued the invasion and took La Capelle. On July 14, they arrived at Doullens and laid Siege to the city.

The Siege of Doullens, shown in Figure 29.77, occurred from July 14 until July 31, 1595. On July 24, the combined forces of Henri de La Tour d' Auvergne, the Duke of Bouillon, André de Brancas, Amiral de Villars, and François d'Orléans-Longueville tried to relieve the city. Still, they were severely defeated by the Spanish forces of Don Pedro Henríquez de Acevedo, Count of Fuentes, and Don Carlos Coloma.

Villars was imprisoned and executed, and the Duke of Bouillon escaped to Amiens with the rest of the French army. On July 31, the Spanish troops stormed Doullens. It is told that the Spaniards killed everybody in the city, military and civilians alike, shouting 'Recordad Ham' in retaliation for the massacre against the Spanish garrison of Ham (on the Somme River) by the French and Protestant soldiers under the orders of Bouillon, on June 20, 1595. We can refer to the works of Wernham[39], Horne[40], Demarsy[41], Knecht[42], de La Croix and de Castries[43], Elliott[44], and Duerloo[45].

Pedro Henriquez d' Azevedo y Alvarez de Toledo, also known as the Count of Fuentes de Valdepero (1525 in Zamora, Spain – July 22, 1610, in Milan, Italy), was a Spanish general and statesman who was one of those people who made decisions which harmed the

---

[38] Mélanges de la Casa de Velázquez, tome 2, pp. 129-161, 1966)

[39] R. B. Wernham, 'The Return of the Armadas: The Last Years of the Elizabethan War against Spain 1595-1603,' Oxford University Press, 1994.

[40] Alistair Horne, 'Seven Ages of Paris: Portrait of a City,' Pan Books, 2003.

[41] Arthur Demarsy, 'La prise de Doullens par les Espagnols en 1595,' Paris,1867.

[42] Robert J. Knecht, 'The French Wars of Religion 1559–1598. Seminar Studies in History (2nd ed.)' , Longman, New York 1996.

[43] René de La Croix and Duc de Castries, 'The Lives of the Kings & Queens of France' , Alfred A. Knopf, New York, 1979.

[44] John H. Elliott, 'Europa en la época de Felipe II, 1559-1598,' Barcelona, Editorial Crítica, 2001.

[45] Luc Duerloo, 'Dynasty and Piety: Archduke Albert (1598-1621) and Habsburg Political Culture in an Age of Religious Wars' , MPG Books Group, UK.

Spanish reputation and was grist to the mill of the propaganda of Nassau. He should not be confused with the above and well-known 'Fuentes,' i.e., Paul-Bernard de Fontaines (1566, Lorraine - May 19, 1643, Rocroi). The latter is also known as Comtefontaine, Conde Fontana, or Fuentes, a Spanish infantry commander during the Eighty Years War and would become 'Vogt' of Bruges and governor of Damme.

